Publishers' note

Escoffier died before the first edition of Larousse Gastronomique was published in 1938; the great 'king of cooks and the cook of kings' wrote his preface after reading the first draft of the manuscript. Philéas Gilbert later saw the complete work and added a supplementary preface.

The history of the table of a nation is a reflection of the civilization of that nation. To show the changes in the order and serving of meals from century to century, to describe and comment on the progress of the French cuisine, is to paint a picture of the many stages through which a nation has evolved since the distant times when, as a weak tribe, men lived in dark caves, eating wild roots, raw fish and the still pulsating flesh of animals killed with the spear.

It is this history that is the subject of Larousse Gastronomique, in which Prosper Montagné has outlined in some thousand pages all the improvements brought to the culinary art from prehistoric times to the present day. Presented in the form of a dictionary, it sums up all that has been achieved by the science of alimentation, and everything in it has been minutely studied and described.

Those who make a profession of gastronomy will find in this book matter for comparison between what used to be the art of good eating and what it is today. Housewives will be particularly interested in the evolution of the table through the ages, its refinements modified in each epoch—to a certain extent by the exigencies of reigning fashions. Professional cooks, both men and women, will be able to draw inspiration from the principles of a culinary technique founded on the universally recognized knowledge and authority of the author. The text of the book and the recipes are enlivened by attractive anecdotes and legendary tales.

While waiting to read them in print, I went through the innumerable manuscript pages of this encyclopedia and I am still under the spell cast by this work. How could it have been completed so rapidly? For the author had only one collaborator, albeit an eminent one, who was entrusted with all scientific and medical subjects, and the material was prepared in less than three years.

Larousse Gastronomique is a model of exactitude and precision in all that concerns the etymology of certain words, the definition of culinary terms, the origin of foods in everyday use and the many recipes for each given dish.

Numerous descriptive photographs illustrate certain subjects, and there are some very attractive reproductions of antique engravings. Magnificent colour plates show finished dishes with their appropriate garnishes.

Such a work would have been incomplete, and the authors were well aware of this, had not considerable space been reserved for the riches of our famous French vineyards. The greatest of these, classified, are shown together in explicit tables.

Finally, the biographies of certain maîtres de cuisine and some gastronomes of great renown are for ever immortalized in these pages, and a culinary and gastronomical bibliography mentions a great number of works, some of which are perhaps unknown to the bibliophiles.

All those who make a cult of good eating and good drinking will find that Prosper Montagné's Larousse Gastronomique is indeed a work that they will consult with interest and one that will have a prominent place in their library. And this will be the author's merited and just reward, which I heartily applaud.

Auguste Escoffier

In his preface, Escoffier outlined the opinion he formed after having read the first draft of the Larousse Gastronomique. This manuscript was later considerably revised and completed. Being in a more favourable position than he, it was on the study of these final pages that my judgment was based; it conforms with that of Escoffier and is all the better founded because I have been able to see for myself what he predicted.

Escoffier and I, old friends of Prosper Montagné, realized that he had undertaken a formidable task, one of which only the authors of culinary works can understand the importance, but knowing his capacity for work and his inflexible willpower, his extensive erudition and his professional knowledge, which puts him in the first place among great cooks of our time, we were certain that he would bring it to a successful conclusion.

As Escoffier wrote, it is to all those who have anything to do with food or who are interested in the history of the cuisine and the table, that this book is addressed. It is—dare I say it—the apotheosis of the professional work of Prosper Montagné.

Larousse Gastronomique must become—and it already is—a vade-mecum for everyone, a reliable counsellor ready to be consulted at any moment and on no matter what subject connected with the alimentary sciences and the arts of the table.

Like Escoffier, I wish heartily that such a magnificent and persevering effort may find its reward in the welcome of those for whom it was conceived, a welcome which it deserves from any point of view.

Preface

In his preface to the first edition of Larousse Gastronomique Escoffier wrote:

'The history of a nation's table is a reflection of the civilisation of that nation. To show the changes in the order and serving of meals from century to century, to describe and comment on the progress of the French cuisine, is to paint a picture of the many stages through which a nation has evolved since the distant times when, as a weak tribe, men lived in dark caves, eating wild roots, raw fish and the still pulsating flesh of animals killed with the spear.

'It is this history that is the subject of Larousse Gastronomique, in which Prosper Montagné has outlined in some thousand pages all the improvements brought to the culinary art from pre-historic times to the present day. Presented in the form of a dictionary, it sums up all that has been achieved by the science of alimentation, and everything in it has been minutely studied and described.

'Those who make a profession of gastronomy will find in this book matter for comparison between what used to be the art of good eating and what it is today. Housewives will be particularly interested in the evolution of the table through the ages, its refinements modified in each epoch – to a certain extent by the exigencies of reigning fashions. Professional cooks, both men and women, will be able to draw inspiration from the principles of a culinary technique founded on the universally recognised knowledge and authority of the author. The rest of the book and the recipes are enlivened by attractive anecdotes and legendary tales.'

The work of Prosper Montagné (and of Dr. Gottschalk, who helped him notably with the historical, scientific and medical material) is an historic work which it is proper to revive today, adding new gastronomic treats while retaining its style and balance. Indeed, if the history of cooking, which is inseparable from the domestic history of the people, hasn't changed and if the great recipes remain the same despite the tremendous simplification of modern cooking, on the other hand dietetics is a new science which has rediscovered – in order to endorse them – the broad outlines of ancient practice, somewhat forgotten since the beginning of this century. It is essential to incorporate into this work the lessons learnt from a combination of ancient wisdom and modern research.

Legislation, as well, has modified the basic nutrition of twentieth-century man, and if the gourmet can still, with justification, reject certain forms of progress, he must nevertheless take note of them. Moreover, taking his pleasures of the table where he can find them, he has to recognise, for instance, that deep freezing or freeze-drying (words which were unknown to Prosper Montagné and his contemporaries) offer to the appetite as well as to the greed of man many satisfying solutions.

The laws pertaining to wine and vines have considerably altered the wine scene in France. Chefs in general are little interested in wine, and this is doubtless why hitherto Larousse Gastronomique has neglected the cellar. My friends and I have made a better selection from French wines and those from other countries, bearing in mind the latest rules and regulations.

Jean Desmur, who may deserve the title 'Pic de La Mirandole de la gastronomie', took upon himself the duty of recounting the details of domestic history and gastronomical folklore, and because one must be up to date with what one loves, we list the food and wine associations which have multiplied since the last war.

All this rounds out the original work without either changing the direction or the balance. This is at least our profound wish.

It remains for me to introduce and thank the contributors of this new edition:

Table of Comparative Measures

Note

Published for use throughout the world, this edition of LAROUSSE GASTRONOMIQUE contains American and British equivalents as well as original French measurements in all recipes. Occasionally what appears to be a discrepancy in conversion may occur. In fact this results from proportionate alteration of quantities throughout that recipe in order to avoid awkward fractions in measurements.

The cups and tablespoons quoted, together with the French measures, in this book are American Standard, which are slightly smaller in capacity than British Standard cups and spoons. The American and Canadian Standard  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint measuring cup has a capacity of 8 fluid ounces; the British Standard Imperial  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint measuring cup has a capacity of 10 fluid ounces. The American and Canadian Standard measuring tablespoon measures  $\frac{3}{4}$  fluid ounce; the British Standard tablespoon measures 1 fluid ounce. 3 teaspoons are equal to 1 tablespoon. All measurements refer to LEVEL spoons and cups.

ABAISSÉ – A term used in French pastry-making to describe a piece (or sheet) of rolled-out pastry. It is also used to describe a layer of sponge cake or biscuit.

An abaisse of pastry

ABAT-FAIM (Hunger-killer) – A substantial dish served early in the meal.

ABATTE (Beater) – A popular corruption of the French word battre (to beat). An abatte is a rather thick, broad, double-edged knife used for flattening meat.

ABEL-MUSK. AMBRETTE – An aromatic plant grown in Martinique, the seeds of which have a very strong, musty smell. In India these seeds are mixed with coffee to give it a special aroma, and to heighten its stimulating properties.

Ambrette is also the name of an ambergris-scented variety of pear.

ABLUTIONS, TABLE. ABLUTIONS DE TABLE – The custom of passing bowls of water to guests at table, to rinse their fingers at the end of a meal, or after eating certain dishes with the fingers, goes back to earliest antiquity. It was a common practice with the ancient Egyptians, the Greeks and the Romans, who not only washed their hands before the meal but also between the courses.

'This practice, common to all ancient people, is explained by the fact that in those days food was taken with the fingers. A servant poured the contents of a vessel (usually scented water) over the fingers of the guest. In other circumstances, hands were simply washed in a basin.' (Vie privée des anciens, by Louis Nicolas Menard)

Recipe for finger-bowl water. RECETTE POUR UNE EAU D'ABLUTION – 'Boil a handful of sage in water. Pour off the resulting liquid and cool until tepid. Camomile or marjoram may be substituted for the sage or, better still, a handful of rosemary boiled with the skin of an orange. Bay leaves are also good.' (le Ménagier de Paris, fourteenth century)

ABOMASUM. CAILLETTE – Fourth stomach of the ruminants. Dried caillette (solid rennet) or its extract, liquid rennet (obtained by infusion) is used in the cheese-making industry for coagulating milk.

Caillette is also the name given in the Ardèche and La Drôme to a large sausage stuffed with a mixture of minced pig's liver and chard leaves.

ABONDANCE – Wine diluted with water.

This word ironically describes the drink which in days gone by used to be served in schools or colleges, where wine was scarce and water abundant. The term is used, deprecatingly, of watered-down wine.

ABROTONITE – Herb-flavoured wine. The ancients used to macerate a sort of mugwort called abrotanum in this wine to enhance its flavour.

ABSINTH. ABSINTHE – Liqueur made by macerating and distilling the leaves of wormwood (Artemisia absinthium) then adding other aromatic plants (fennel, Chinese anise, hyssop, etc.).

Absinth (colloquially known as la verte) was the apéritif in vogue before the 1914 war.

Absinth wine. VIN D'ABSINTHE – Wine spiced by infusion of wormwood leaves.

b. Inflorescence
c. Flower

ABSORPTION

ABSORPTION (Whimsical gastronomy) – This was the meal offered in bygone times to the senior students of l'École polytechnique by the new arrivals. 'Enough is absorbed there to justify the name of the ceremony.' (Lorédan Larchey)

ABSTINENCE – Days of abstinence are those on which one should abstain from eating meat, although one is not obliged to fast. Meat abstinence does not prevent one from living a perfectly normal life. In fact, the total exclusion of certain foods and condiments is indispensable in a number of dietary regimes. A few days' fasting is also prescribed for those who have over-indulged at table.

ABUTILON – There are more than sixty varieties of this plant scattered throughout the world. An edible species known as Abutilon esculentum grows in Brazil. The Brazilians call it benças de deos and cook its flowers with meat.

In Europe, abutilon is cultivated as a garden plant for the beauty of its flowers, but only rarely for use as food. In some countries, particularly in Asia and in the West Indies, its leaves are cooked and eaten in the manner of sorrel or spinach. In India the natives are very fond of the species known as Abutilon indicum.

ACACIA – Acacia blossoms are used for making fritters and a home-made liqueur.

Acacia blossom fritters – See FRITTERS.

Acacia liqueur or ratafia – See LIQUEUR.

ACANTHUS (Brank-ursine). ACANTHE – This most decorative plant is commonly found in southern France where its elegant, denticulated leaves are eaten, when young, as a salad. It has emollient qualities.

ACARNE – Name given to the European fish commonly known as sea bream.

ACAVUS. ACAVE – A variety of snail common in French vineyards and gardens.

ACCOLADE, IN – A manner of arranging pieces of the same nature – meat, poultry, fish – back to back on one dish. This method of presentation was much in vogue in the olden days.

Chickens served en accolade

ACELINE – French name for a European fish a little resembling the perch. Its flesh is quite good and it is prepared like perch (q.v.).

ACETABULUM. ACÉTABULE – The ancient Romans used the word acetabulum to describe the vessel that held the vinegar. It was also used as a measure in medicine.

ACETIC ACID. ACÉTIQUE – The acid which forms the basis of vinegar. It is used in cooking sugar in confectionery.

ACETIFICATION. ACÉTIFICATION – The chemical reaction caused by a yeast (Mycoderma aceti). Aided by various industrial processes (see VINEGAR), it transforms wine alcohol (or other alcoholic liquid) into acetic acid.

ACETIMETER. ACÉTIMÈTRE – Instrument for assessing the degree of concentration of vinegar.

ACETO-DOLCE ('Sour-sweet') – An Italian commercial product consisting of a mixture of vegetables and fruit, first pickled in vinegar, then preserved in a syrup of Muscat grape must, honey and mustard. It is usually served as an hors-d'œuvre.

ACETOMEL. ACÉTOMEL – Sour-sweet syrup made of honey and vinegar used in the preservation of fruit. Quinces, pears and grapes thus preserved take the name of aceto-dolce, i.e. sour-sweet fruit.

ACETONE. ACÉTONE – A colourless, inflammable liquid with an acrid burning taste and a quince-like smell. Acetone appears in the body when the process of decomposition of fatty matter is deficient and particularly when the diet is lacking in carbohydrates (sugar). This frequently arises in severe cases of diabetes and starvation.

ACHAR. ACHARD – This word, derived from the Persian word atchar, describes a strongly spiced pickle (usually saffron-coloured) made from fruit, or vegetables, or very young, tender buds of palm cabbage (palmetto) or bamboo sprouts. It is highly regarded throughout the Indian Archipelago, in Mauritius, and Réunion Island.

Lemon achar (Creole cookery). ACHARS DE CITRONS – Choose thin-skinned lemons and quarter them. Extract the juice, discard the pips, and macerate the lemons in layers of kitchen salt.

Remove the lemons from the salt and soak them in cold water for 24 hours, changing the water several times. Boil in fresh water until the lemons become soft. Strain off the water. Dry the lemons and put them to marinate in the following sauce:

Pound a large onion, a pimento, and a large piece of ginger to a fine paste in a mortar. (Ginger, as well as allspice, Bourbon saffron and Indian curry powder can be bought in delicatessen shops.) Add vinegar and a teaspoon of Bourbon saffron. Blend with sufficient best quality olive oil to ensure that the lemons, when packed into jars, will be completely covered.

Palmetto achar (Creole cookery). ACHARS DE PALMISTES – Palmettos (palm cabbage) can be bought in delicatessen shops. Remove carefully from the can, discard the oil in which they were packed, and dress with good quality olive oil.

Vegetable achar (Creole cookery). ACHARS DE LÉGUMES – Remove the seeds and pulp from 1 or 2 cucumbers, and the insides from 2 large pimentos. Cut cucumbers, pimentos, and several carrots and French beans into thin strips about 4 cm. (1½ inches) long. Mix with florets of cauliflower and roughly chopped cabbage leaves.

Macerate these vegetables for 36 hours. Drain thoroughly, dry, and season with sauce described in the recipe for Lemon achar above.

To preserve the achar, spoon into glass preserving jars, cover completely with good quality olive oil, and seal the jars hermetically.

ACHILLEA (Milfoil). ACHILLÉE – Plant, of which one species, Achillea ptarmica, which grows in woods, is edible. Its tender young leaves are added to salads.

ACID. ACIDE – A chemical hydrogen compound recognisable by its property of causing litmus solution to turn red.

The acids most commonly used in cooking are vinegar, lemon juice and verjuice.

ACIDIFIERS (Edible). ACIDIFIANTS – Foods that build up an excess of acid in the system, leading to acidification of the body fluids.

Acid-tasting fruits are not necessarily acidifiers; nor do the latter necessarily possess an acid taste; lemons, for example, are not acidifiers.

Meat, game, sea fish, offal, cereals, flour, pasta and bread are powerful acidifiers; ham, freshwater fish, eggs, butter, fats, chocolate, asparagus, hop shoots, Brussels sprouts, artichokes, onions, chestnuts, peanuts, walnuts, hazelnuts and almonds less seriously so.

ACIDIFY. ACIDIFIER – To add acid (lemon juice, vinegar or verjuice) to a culinary preparation.

ACIDITY. ACIDITÉ – Acid taste. It exists naturally in certain vegetables and fruit and disappears or diminishes as a result of a 'blanching' operation (see BLANCHING).

Nowadays, the acidity of a liquid is measured in pH units; these range from zero, for pure acid (such as hydrochloric acid), to 7, which indicates a completely neutral substance. The scale continues above 7 to indicate degrees of alkalinity (opposite of acidity).

The acidity scale shows the degree of acidity of certain foods.

ACIDULATE. ACIDULER – To render a dish slightly acid, sour or piquant by the addition of lemon, vinegar, etc.

ACIDULATED. ACIDULÉ – Term which is only used to describe mineral waters charged with carbonic acid.

ACON – An implement used by French mussel farmers to gather the mussels from the mussel beds in the cove of Aiguillon, near La Rochelle.

The use of this tool dates back to antiquity. It is mentioned in Charlemagne's Capitulaires.

ACORN. GLAND – Fruit of the oak tree. Some types are edible and were eaten by certain Asian peoples before they discovered cereals. In some countries, such as Spain, acorns are eaten raw or roasted. Acorn flour (which unlike chicory has costive properties) is used as a substitute for coffee. For this purpose the roasted acorns of the ballota oak are most commonly used.

ACORN BARNACLE. BALANE – A small shellfish with a conical irregular shell which is found in all seas, attached to rocks. It is also commonly called acorn shell and turban shell. Its flesh is quite delicate and is prepared like crab (q.v.).

Acorn barnacles stuck to a piece of shell

ACQUETTE – An old, spirituous and very aromatic liquor, much prized in Italy and throughout the south of France. Its appearance resembles that of Danziger Goldwasser (Danzig eau de vie). There are two varieties: silver acquette (in Italian aqua bianca), and gold acquette (aqua d'oro).

Silver acquette is made as follows:

Ceylon cinnamon	225 g. (8 oz.)
Cloves	25 g. (1 oz.)
Nutmeg	25 g. (1 oz.)
85° alcohol	20 litres (4½ gallons, 5½ gallons)

Steep these various ingredients in the alcohol for 24 hours, then distil without rectifying; you will obtain 20 litres (4½ gallons, 5½ gallons) liqueur. Dissolve 25 kg. (55 lb.) sugar in 11 litres (2½ gallons, 3 gallons) water and add the syrup obtained as a result of the distillation. Leave to rest for the time required, filter and put a crushed silver leaf into each bottle.

To prepare gold acquette take:

Ceylon cinnamon	225 g. (8 oz.)
Cloves	15 g. (½ oz.)
Angelica roots	75 g. (3 oz.)
Daucus of Crete	75 g. (3 oz.)
Fresh lemon (peel of)	40 g. (1½ oz.)
85° alcohol	20 litres (4½ gallons, 5½ gallons)

Proceed as for preparing silver acquette, with just one difference, that you put a crushed gold leaf into each bottle.

ACRIDOPHAGE – One who feeds on locusts. This food may seem extraordinary to the epicures of Europe, but it is quite acceptable to African gastronomes. It appears that the taste of locusts resembles, if somewhat remotely, that of raw shrimps.

ACROAMA – A Greek word, adopted by the Romans, meaning 'that to which one listens', further extended to mean 'that to which one pays attention'.

To better entertain their guests, the patricians made a habit of summoning musicians, poets, actors (who enacted, at times, very licentious scenes), men and women dancers, jugglers, acrobats, tumblers, dwarfs and even gladiators and savage beasts to perform while the meal was in progress.

To the Romans this word acroama meant not only these various types of entertainment, but also the performers themselves.

The custom of the acroama continued through the centuries but was renamed entremets ('between courses'). These entremets had nothing in common with what today describes a course of vegetables or a sweet course served towards the end of a meal. Acroama, and the 'spectacular entremets' that succeeded it, were enacted all through the meal.

ACTINIA (Sea anemone). ACTINIE – Although actiniae are urticating (stinging) animals, they are used as food in certain localities. The inhabitants of southern coasts of France relish a species of actinia which they call rastègne and maintain that their taste resembles that of crabs.

Actiniae have to be thoroughly beaten before cooking to tenderise them. They can then be fried, made into fritters, omelettes, etc.

ADOC – Name sometimes given to sour milk.

ADULTERATION. FALSIFICATION – A deliberate lowering of the quality of foodstuffs for the purpose of illicit gain.

ÆGINETIA. ÆGINETIE – The type genus of this plant, Æginetia indica, is indigenous to the East Indies. The natives of the coast of Malabar call it tsiem-cumulu and blend it with nutmeg and sugar to form an excellent masticatory (chewing-gum) used for strengthening the teeth and combating bad breath.

AEGIS OF RHODES. AEGIS DE RHODES – One of the seven great masters of ancient Greek cuisine (third century B.C.). He excelled in the art of cooking fish.

AFFINAGE – Word used in the French cheese industry to describe the process of ripening or maturing cheese in temperature-controlled cellars.

AFFRIANDER – French culinary term which means to tempt; to attract by the pleasant appearance of a dish.

AFTER-TASTE. ARRIÈRE-GOÛT – Taste that returns to the mouth after ingestion of certain foods and beverages.

AGAMI (Trumpeter) – A bird of the wader family of which the Guiana agami is typical. Its flesh has appreciable merit. The agami is used in cookery mainly in South America, boiled in consommé or braised with rice.

Its flesh has a pleasant flavour but is rather dry, although less so in the domesticated bird.

Agami à la chilienne – Choose as tender an agami as possible. Pluck, draw, singe and clean it. Prepare a garnish of rice cooked in fat stock with pimentos. Bard it and put to braise in a braising pan with the usual accompaniments of vegetables and spices, and some dry white wine.

Separately, braise in veal jelly stock 12 medium-sized onions stuffed with a salpicon (q.v.) of sweet pimentos blended with a few tablespoons of reduced velouté (q.v.). Prepare also 450 g. (1 lb.) Okra in tomato sauce (see OKRA).

As soon as the agami is cooked, remove from the braising pan. Glaze it in the oven.

Strain the pan juices, remove excess fat and reduce to the desired consistency.

Place the agami on a serving dish surrounded by the garnishes. Coat with the sauce.

AGAPE (Love feast) – This was the name of the meal which the early Christians held together in church, in memory of the Last Supper. The Council of Carthage abolished the agapes in A.D. 397 in order to put an end to the calumnies of which they were the object.

The meals held by the early Christians in the catacombs in memory of the martyrs were also called agapes.

This word nowadays is used to define an important family meal.

AGAR-AGAR (Bengal isinglass) – A product obtained from various seaweeds, known also as Japanese moss, Ceylon moss.

Agar-agar is collected in the form of thin, crinkly, whitish, transparent strips. It swells slightly in cold water and considerably so in boiling water, in which it finally dissolves. A fairly stiff jelly can be obtained from it, which is used in bacteriology.

Its neutral taste makes it suitable for use in cooking and confectionery, and for making jellies.

It is by regurgitating seaweed of this type that the salangane (Chinese swallow) builds its nest, so much prized by the Chinese under the name of 'bird's nest', for which factory-made agar-agar is often passed-off in the West.

Agar-agar always contains the carapaces of diatoms (microscopic unicellular algae) easily identifiable under the microscope. This factor makes possible the rapid detection of any fraudulent use of the product.

AGARIC – A family of fungi with a compact cap and radiating gills, that grows profusely in damp and shaded places, and is also found in fields, on tree trunks, in caves and on decayed wood. There are about 2000 known species of agarics and quite a large number of them are edible. The poisonous species are chiefly found among the genus called Amanita.

Among the edible agarics are the following:

Edible agaric or cultivated mushrooms, grown in the quarries around Paris – the classic type of mushroom. This is often described under the term champignon without any other qualification.

A type of agaric which has very distinctive ridges on the underside of the cap

Royal agaric, agaric odorain or St. George's agaric and the cultivated agaric are also found in the Paris region.

Among the poisonous species are Amanita phalloides (death cap) and Amanita verna (gill) (see MUSHROOMS).

To prepare edible agarics, sauté in a shallow pan in oil or butter; dress with herbs, Cream sauce (see SAUCE), à la provençale, à la bordelaise (see GARNISHES). They can also be used as a garnish for a large number of dishes.

AGATHON – Poet, born in Athens, and not in Samos, as certain authors maintain.

His sumptuous repasts gave rise to a great deal of jesting on the part of Aristophanes and other dramatists. Some people claim that Plato's Banquet was composed at his table.

AGAVE – A genus of South American plants belonging to the family Agavaceae – a native of Mexico. In Cuba and Mexico its pulp is fermented to make an alcoholic beverage called pulque.

AGNOLOTTI. Agnolotti à la piémontaise (Italian cookery) – Prepare a noodle paste in the following manner: put 450 g. (1 lb., 4 cups) flour in a circle or 'fountain' on a table. In the middle of this circle put 4 egg yolks, 20 g. (a generous tablespoon) butter, a pinch of salt and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) water.

Knead for 10 minutes but avoid giving too much body to the paste. Allow to rest for 10 minutes.

Roll out the paste with a rolling-pin as thinly as possible. Place walnut-sized pieces of forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT, Beef forcemeat) along it in a horizontal line, spacing them 5 cm. (2 inches) from the edge of the paste and 5 cm. (2 inches) from each other.

Fold the overlapping edge of the paste over this row of agnolotti. Press down around each heap of forcemeat, to make the paste stick well. Cut out the agnolotti with a crescent-shaped, fluted-edged pastry-cutter, thus obtaining little turnovers.

Poach them in boiling water for 10 minutes, allowing 2 teaspoons salt per litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) water. Drain, and place in a dish.

Make a sauce from the braised beef left over from the forcemeat. Serve this and grated Parmesan cheese with the agnolotti.

AGONE D'ISTRIA (Smaris graerlis). AGON – In Italy it is known under the name of sardina and indeed it has much the same flavour and is similar in size to the sardine. All the recipes given for sardines (q.v.) can be applied to it. Like sardines, agone can be salted.

AGORANOME – Inspector of markets in ancient Greece. He controlled the price of produce and was responsible for the implementation of the laws relating to its markets. The agoranome of the Greeks corresponds to the aedile of the Romans.

AGOU – Agou or negroes' sago resembles small-grain millet. This grain is of brownish-grey colour with a yellow spot where it joins the stem. It is cooked like rice. Flour made from it is used to make cakes and porridge.

AGOUTI – Rodent the size of a hare found in Brazil (where it is called cotia), Guiana, the Dominican Republic, and generally throughout the West Indies. The agouti can live in Europe if it is protected from the cold.

The flesh is good to eat, even though the flavour is rather strong. It is prepared like sucking pig (see PORK, Piglet).

AGRAS – Agras is an Algerian iced beverage; to be more precise, a granité. Its main ingredients are almonds and verjuice.

Ingredients. 150 g. (5 oz., 1 cup) sweet almonds, 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) verjuice,  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) water and 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) brown or granulated sugar.

Method of preparation. Blanch the almonds after having scalded them with boiling water. Pound them in a mortar as finely as possible, moistening them with a little of the water. When they form a paste, dilute with the rest of the water and verjuice and strain through a napkin, then put under a press to extract all the liquid.  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) white vinegar combined with 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) water may be substituted for the verjuice and water.

Sweeten the liquid with the brown sugar, or, if this is not available, granulated sugar, and strain through a napkin once again, but this time without pressing.

Stand this mixture in an ice bucket, surrounded by a mixture of crushed ice and sea salt (coarse salt), allowing 10 per cent of salt, and leave to chill. Loosen the parts which get stuck to the sides of the ice bucket about every 15 minutes. When the whole mixture acquires a granulated texture, serve it in sherbet glasses, adding half a coffeespoon of kirsch to each glass.

AGUAXIMA – A species of Brazilian pepper not very different from ordinary pepper.

AGUNCATE. AGUNCATÉ – A fruit grown in Peru, called palta in Lima. It is shaped like a calabash (gourd), is green in colour and has a varnished appearance. Its skin comes away from the flesh easily when the fruit is ripe. This flesh, somewhat insipid, is eaten with salt. It has something in common with the flesh of avocado pear (q.v.).

AIGRE DE CÈDRE (French name for Citrus medica) – Fruit of a citron tree cultivated in Provence, around Grasse and Nice, also at San Remo and near Genoa in Italy. It makes a very refreshing summer drink.

AIGUILLETTE – An aiguillette means a thin slice cut lengthways on the breast of poultry and winged game.

Strictly speaking, the word should only be used to describe thin slices of fowl, but it is often used when referring to thin slices of meat, e.g., 'cut a fillet of beef into aiguillettes'. Aiguillette is also used to describe the top rump (see BEEF).

Agouti

AILLADE – Definition used in the south of France, which applies, according to the district (Languedoc or Provence) to preparations which differ somewhat but are all garlic based.

Firstly, aillade sauce, a sort of garlic vinaigrette (q.v.), sometimes including shallots, chives and other garnishes.

AÏOLI

Aillade sauce is served with cold meat and fish, with potatoes and, generally, with all dishes served à la vinaigrette.

Secondly, bread à l'aillade, a slice of toasted bread, thoroughly rubbed with garlic and sprinkled with olive oil. This provençal aillade is the equivalent of the Languedocian chapon (garlic-rubbed bread).

Certain authors also mention other regional preparations known under the name of aillade. Among these are:

Aillade albigeoise which is nothing more than an aioli (q.v.).

Aillade à la toulousaine which is also an aioli with blanched and pounded walnuts added.

All these preparations are very appetising but something of an acquired taste, garlic being their outstanding characteristic. They are excellent for seasoning salads.

AÏOLI or ALLOLI – Peel 4 large cloves of garlic, and pound to a fine paste in a mortar with 1 egg yolk. Season with a pinch of salt, and continue to pound, adding 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) olive oil little by little, as for mayonnaise. Stir this mixture vigorously. When finished, it should have the appearance of a thick smooth mayonnaise.

Aioli is served mainly with boiled fish, hot or cold, but can also be served with cold meat, or used as a seasoning for salads and cooked vegetables.

Garnished aioli. AÏOLI GARNI – This dish, very popular in Provence, is composed of a variety of ingredients, such as boiled cod, snails cooked in salt water, fennel, onions stuck with cloves, boiled carrots, french beans, artichokes cooked in salt water, unskinned potatoes, hard-boiled eggs, etc. Small octopi, boiled in salted water with herbs, are sometimes added. All these are arranged on a large dish and served with aioli.

The preparation of this dish, says J. B. Reboul, one of the maîtres de la cuisine provençale, demands a great deal of artistic arrangement. Not all the ingredients which we have enumerated, however, are absolutely essential. There is no set rule on this point. One should proceed according to one's tastes and the means at one's disposal.

Aioli à la grecque – A kind of vinaigrette sauce which is prepared as follows: combine pounded walnuts, almonds and hazelnuts with fresh breadcrumbs sieved and soaked in milk, and pounded garlic. Blend with oil, vinegar and lemon juice. Serve with fried and boiled fish.

AISSY – Name given to the (soured) whey left over from the scalding of milk used in the production of Gruyère. This whey is used to make cheeses of an inferior quality called serai. The aisy is stored in barrels and added to daily as more whey becomes available.

ALARIA – A genus of seaweed of which five species are found in the seas of northern Europe.

One variety, known as badderlocks in Scotland and murlins in Ireland, flourishes along the Atlantic coast of the British Isles. It is eaten in Scotland, in Ireland, and in the Faroe Islands. Only the slightly sweet central cartilaginous vein is consumed.

ALBACORE (Yellowfin tuna) – A large species of tunny (tuna) fish. This is also the Portuguese word for the swordfish (q.v.).

ALBARELLE – A genus of edible fungi which grows on chestnut trees and white poplars.

ALBATROSS. ALBATROS – Sea bird with very tough flesh. That of the young bird is eaten, nevertheless, and is prepared like Wild duck (see DUCK).

ALBIGEOISE – Garnish for large and small cuts of meat. It consists of stuffed tomatoes and potato croquettes.

Albatross

ALBUFÉRA (D') – Definition applying to various kinds of dishes chiefly characterised by the sauce which goes with them.

The term d'Albuféra was probably first used either by Carême or by his successor Plumery, so the recipe for Duckling à la d'Albuféra is almost certainly the authentic one. It differs slightly from the modern version.

Marshal Suchet was made Duke of Albuféra in 1812 after the victories of Oropéza, Murviedro and Valencia in Spain. The lake of Albuféra is near Valencia. (See DUCK, CHICKEN.)

ALBUMEN – A constituent of seeds containing food reserves for the plant in germination. Albumen is sometimes farinaceous, as in cereals such as maize, barley, corn and rye; sometimes oily or fleshy as in coconut palm and in black poppy. In certain palms it acquires the hardness of ivory.

The albumen contained in coconuts is in the form of an outer layer surrounding the inner cavity that contains the liquid commonly known as coconut milk.

Section of a grain of corn showing the albumen

Many types of grain are used for their albumen in domestic economy, in medicine and in the arts. Thus cereals provide us with flour; the coffee shrub with an alkaloid known as caffeine; the black poppy with poppyseed oil, used almost universally as a food. The seeds of certain species of water-lilies, very pleasant to the palate, are much used in China and Vietnam as food. The kernels of a species of pine that grows in Provence and Italy contain an oily, delicately flavoured albumen, which makes them much valued in confectionery, particularly in the manufacture of sugared pine nuts. Several species of palm tree provide both edible oil and oil for lighting. Linseed oil comes from the seeds of flax.

A species of dwarf palm, found in Peru, produces a large fruit which the natives call cana or cabezo de negro. When the fruit is green, the albumen of its seeds is a pleasant-tasting liquid which, when fermented, yields a wine that is much appreciated by the Peruvians. The fruit, when ripe, becomes very hard and can be put to the same uses as ivory; in fact it is exported under the name of raw ivory or vegetable ivory. When burned, the product obtained compares favourably with ivory black, which is obtained from elephants' teeth and tusks.

ALBUMIN. ALBUMINE – Viscous whitish matter with a slightly salty taste. An example is white of egg, which contains albumin up to 59 per cent of its total weight (see EGGS).

Albumin is also found in blood serum, in milk and in plants, particularly in the seeds of dried vegetables. It is for this reason that the water in which peas, beans and lentils are cooked becomes viscous when cooled. Albumin is soluble in water in its raw state but coagulates at a temperature of 78–80°C. (172–176°F.) and then becomes insoluble.

Albumin in the form of a thin yellowish transparent sediment can be obtained by evaporating the white of egg at a temperature of about 50°C. (122°F.).

Albumin is used in the confectionery industry as a substitute for white of egg in the manufacture of certain kinds of whisked pastes such as marshmallow, liquorice, Montélimar nougat and various meringue products.

It is also used as an egg substitute in the manufacture of cheap biscuits and almond paste. Before use it has to be dissolved in about seven times its weight of cold water.

Albumin in the form of beaten whites of egg is used in the clearing of wine.

ALBUMINOIDS. ALBUMINOÏDES – Substances possessing properties akin to those of albumin (coagulable by heat), also called nitrogenous, quaternary or proteinic substances. They exist in all living organisms, whether animal or vegetable.

Chemical analysis reveals the same four basic elements: carbon, hydrogen, oxygen and nitrogen associated in varying quantities with other elements.

Albuminoids constitute one of the essential elements of our diet. Of all the substances we generally eat, the only ones lacking in albuminoids are those which have undergone an industrial purifying process such as oil and sugar.

In dietetics, an increased ration of albuminoids is occasionally prescribed (in cases of malnutrition, etc.) but more frequently the amount of albuminoids in the diet is reduced when, for example, the kidneys fail to eliminate waste products or the liver is unable to transform them.

Without going to the extent of reproducing specialist tables of analyses, it is possible to divide albuminoid or nitrogenous food into four categories:

Very poor in albumins (less than 1 per cent): green vegetables, pulpy fruit, potatoes, rice, cream, butter, honey, sugar, oils.

Poor (up to 6 per cent): spinach, artichokes, green cabbages, Brussels sprouts, chestnuts, green peas, cocoa, chocolate.

Rich (6 to 12 per cent): bread, flours, cereals, noodles, eggs.

Very rich (12 to 30 per cent): walnuts, almonds, hazelnuts, various meats, fish, dried beans, dried peas, lentils, beans, chick peas, cheeses.

ALBUNDIGAS (Mexican cookery) – The origin of albundigas appears to be Spanish or Mexican. In Mexico it is almost a national dish.

Combine 450 g. (1 lb.) finely chopped fillet of beef and 100 g. (4 oz.) fairly coarsely chopped fat bacon. Season with salt and pepper. Add a little crushed garlic and a teaspoon of chopped parsley, and bind with an egg. Shape into thickish cakes. Fry in clarified butter. Put into an ovenproof dish and cover with tomato sauce. Cook in the oven for 20 minutes. Serve with Rice à la créole (see RICE).

Albundigas can also be made from a mixture of veal and pork.

The Mexicans also have a soup called by this name:

Ingredients. For 3 litres (5½ pints, 6½ pints) light stock or water, take 225 g. (8 oz.) fillet of pork, veal or beef, 5 medium-sized onions, a clove of garlic, 4 green pimentos, 3 peeled and deseeded tomatoes, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) wheat flour, the same amount of sieved breadcrumbs, ½ teaspoon coriander or thyme, or, better still, marjoram, which has a more delicate flavour, 1 egg and 1 tablespoon salt.

Method. Slice the onions and pimentos and brown them in butter. Add slightly crushed garlic. Sprinkle with flour, stir, allow to brown lightly, and add the meat (which has been minced), breadcrumbs, and seasoning. Add the egg and blend well. Moisten with a little of the stock or boiling water, and leave to simmer for a quarter of an hour.

Put this forcemeat mixture, while still hot, into a pastry forcing-bag fitted with a ring. Hold the bag over a saucepan of boiling stock and squeeze; cut off small slices of the sausage as it comes out of the bag. Simmer these quenelles in the boiling stock leaving the lid off the pan.

Chop the tomatoes, soften them in butter, and add them to the soup just before it is served.

Alcarazza

ALCARRAZA (Water cooler). ALCARAZAS – The French have borrowed this word from the Spanish, who in turn borrowed it from the Arabic alkourraz (pitcher). In Egypt, the alcarraza is called bardak; this has become the French bardague and balasse. Bardak is a Turkish word probably stemming from the Arabic root bara, meaning to cool, and from which is derived barrada (meaning, like alcarraza, a vessel for cooling liquids) and the Spanish word albarrada.

These porous, unglazed jugs of various shapes are filled with water and hung in the shade in a draught. The water oozes through the pores of the jug and evaporates. The hotter the outside temperature and the drier the air, the quicker the evaporation. The heat necessary for evaporation is extracted from the liquid inside the jug, which is thus cooled.

ALCAZAR (Pâtisserie) – Line a sponge tin with lining paste (see DOUGH). Prick the bottom and spread with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) apricot jam. Fill three-quarters of the tin with the following mixture:

Ingredients. 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) icing sugar, 4 egg whites, 60 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) ground almonds, 60 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) flour, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) melted butter, kirsch.

Method of preparation. Beat the sugar and the egg whites over gentle heat to obtain a firm meringue, then add ground almonds, flour and, finally, melted butter mixed with half a wine glass of kirsch. Spread on a buttered and floured baking sheet. Bake in the oven at 180°C. (350°F., Gas Mark 4) for 50 to 60 minutes and turn out onto a wire tray.

Fit a cloth piping-bag with a fluted pipe, and fill with uncooked almond paste in the proportion of 450 g. (1 lb.) to 450 g. (1 lb.) (see ALMOND, Almond paste I). Pipe a lattice-work over the pastry, then pipe a border. Place in a hot oven to colour the almond paste. Cover with thick apricot jam and put half a pistachio nut in the centre of each lozenge.

As an alternative to an almond paste border use apricot jam sprinkled with chopped roasted almonds.

ALCOHOL

ALCOHOL. ALCOOL – Liquid obtained by distilling fermented liquors.

In chemistry, all organic substances composed of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen, capable of being combined into an acid to form an ether, are defined as alcohol. We shall deal only with ethyl alcohol or wine alcohol, also called wine spirit. It is the principal product of the fermentation of sweet liquids formed by the double decomposition of glucose under the action of yeast. This microscopic vegetable cell reproduces itself by splitting glucose into carbonic acid and alcohol and a few palatable and sweet-smelling by-products. (See BEER, WINE.)

Microscopic cells inducing alcoholic fermentation

Alcohol is produced by fermenting natural sweet juices (grapes, apples, sugar cane, beetroot, etc.) or amyloide musts, which have been subjected to preliminary fermentation which transforms the starch into glucose. Wort of cereals (beer), potatoes, etc. are used.

The distillation of these musts and worts produces spirits (q.v.); the concentration and rectification of these spirits produces industrial alcohols.

Absolute 100 per cent alcohol is a laboratory product; it is a caustic liquid, which boils at 78.3°C. Because of its high water absorption potentiality it must be treated with great caution.

Officinal (medicinal) 95° alcohol is a colourless, mobile, non-residual liquid, volatile, with a pleasant odour and a burning taste; it boils at 79.9°C. It can be mixed with water in all proportions, with contraction (that is to say, the total volume of the mixture is lower than that of the components) and with emission of heat.

85° alcohol is commonly called 'three-six' (trois-six) because three parts of this alcohol, mixed with an equal quantity of pure water, produce six parts of ordinary eau-de-vie.

Alcohol possesses antiseptic properties; it is a diffusible stimulant which has numerous uses in therapeutics.

In its chemical composition alcohol approaches sugars (1 molecule of glucose is split, by fermentation, into 2 molecules of alcohol). It possesses definite but moderate alimentary properties, because it decomposes too quickly in the organism, and the energy released can only be used to a small degree, mainly because it becomes a toxic substance when taken in large doses (see ALCOHOLISM).

ALCOHOLISM. ALCOOLISME – Intoxication produced by the abuse of liquids containing alcohol. There are three distinct forms:

1. Inebriety – Occurring when alcohol reaches a certain degree, variable with individuals, manifesting itself in the following manner: First degree: Sensation of well-being, stimulation of the intellectual faculties and the imagination, slight swelling of the face; Second degree: Mental incoherence, diminution of muscular strength, lack of movement co-ordination, congestion of the face, overpowering drowsiness; Third degree: Loss of mobility, sensitiveness and will.

2. Acute intoxication – Early symptoms the same as in inebriety, but the period of excitation is very short, resulting quickly in somnolence, which can develop into a coma and even death through cerebral or pulmonary congestion.

3. Chronic alcoholism – Repeated abuse of alcoholic liquids produces lesions of the stomach (gastritis), of the liver (cirrhosis), of the kidneys (nephritis), and of the nervous system (delirium, neuritis).

ALE – English beer, lightly hopped and slightly bitter. It is used in cooking for making various cheese dishes, notably for Welsh rarebit (q.v.).

Ale is obtained by rapid fermentation and acquires strength on maturing; fermented small beer, on the other hand, has only a short life. Stout and porter are brewed from roasted grain; ale is made from grain in its natural state.

It used to be a tradition in wealthy English families to celebrate the birth of a son by filling one or more barrels of ale, specially brewed for the occasion. The barrels were hermetically sealed and not opened until the son and heir reached his majority. On this memorable day – called the 'coming of age' – friends, tenants and servants were invited to a great repast, which concluded with the passing round of the splendid twenty-one-year-old ale.

Ale posset – Heat 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) ale with a little sugar, a pinch of powdered ginger and grated nutmeg. Boil 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) unskimmed milk and mix it, while still boiling, with the ale.

Toast and ale – An English beverage which used to be served in winter, after the dinner, at the same time as the cheese.

Method. Bring 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) old ale, to which a coffeespoon of ginger has been added, to the boil. Pour it, whilst almost boiling, into a jug with a metal lid containing a thick slice of bread toasted on both sides. Leave the ale to stand for a short time before serving.

ALECTRYON – A large tree of which the best-known species is found in New Zealand.

Its red berries, much prized for their pleasant acid flavour, are used in the manufacture of refreshing beverages. An excellent oil is extracted from its seeds (and exported).

ALEMBIC. ALAMBIC – Apparatus used for distilling. It comprises a cucurbit, or tinned copper boiler, with or without a bain-marie, surmounted by a cap with a serpentine, i.e., a tin, or tinned copper, spiral coil leading from it.

Old-fashioned alembic

The liquid to be distilled is put directly into the boiler (in the case of a naked-flame alembic), or on top of the hain-marie that forms part of it. The alembic is then heated. The action of the heat releases alcoholic vapours. These pass into the serpentine (which is cooled by flowing water), and condense. The traditional Charente method was to heat the alembics directly over wood fires. The first liquid obtained, le brouillis – murk – had to be redistilled by passing it through the alembic once more.

A number of improvements have been incorporated in the old-fashioned alembic to enable alcohol to be obtained at the first attempt, and to ensure continuous feeding of the apparatus.

Traditionalists insist, however, that these improvements have only increased the 'boiler taste' and yield inferior results.

In industry, more complicated apparatus, such as distilling towers with rectifiers, etc., are used.

ALGAE. ALGUE – Plants which live in water. The nutritive value of algae is indubitable, and has generally been more conclusively proved than that of fungi. During the 1914 war, these plants were used as fodder for horses.

Recent research has confirmed the dietetic value of algae. As far as feeding human beings is concerned, it seems that certain small primitive tribes in the extreme North use algae as emergency nourishment when food is scarce. Several varieties of algae are eaten in Scotland.

Algae are highly esteemed in the Far East and are used as a basis for a large number of widely marketed foodstuffs. It is from certain laminaria species (sea tangle) that the Japanese prepare kombu, or kombus, for there are several seaweed-based dishes so called.

The algae are soaked in vinegar for hours until thoroughly saturated, and dried in the open air. The skin of the leaves is then shredded off, using a sharp knife, and the white underlying pulp scraped. This pulp is then dried and crushed into a powder, or cut into small geometrical shapes according to requirements. A condiment, rather like anchovy essence, and very popular with the Japanese, is made from fragments of this same pulp, boiled in soy sauce.

The central part of these algae is cooked with fish, vegetables and soups to enhance their flavour. A beverage made from pulverised kombu is drunk like tea. Kombu is added to stews and used as a condiment for rice. It is often cut into pieces and dried by a fire, and either consumed thus, or after soaking it for a few moments in boiling water.

The Japanese eat another variety of algae, one which they cultivate artificially. After being washed, these are dried in the sun, lightly roasted, crumbled into small pieces, and used to flavour soups and sauces.

Another algae product often used in Japan is kantus, a sort of glue or gelatine in the form of white, shiny, half-transparent shavings or flakes. Kantus is used like tapioca for preparing jellies, soups and sauces.

Algae in dietetics – Dieticians have great faith in the nutritional value of algae. And, in fact, man has long included certain varieties of algae in his diet.

It was the Japanese who were the first to recognise the dietetic value of algae and to exploit them systematically. Red algae of the porphyry genus are cultivated in the bays of Tokyo and Hiroshima. Thousands of algae beds have sprung up on the edge of the ocean, 1 to 2 m. (1 to 2 yards) below the surface. Cultivation presents no particular problem and the harvest continues right through the year.

The Japanese consume algae in a wide variety of ways: in soups, in salads, in the preparation of various dishes. The algae are often sliced thinly, hardened over a fierce heat, and chopped. This makes them easier to use. Various species of laminaria are used as a base in the manufacture of kombu, which is then used as a vegetable for soup or mixed with rice seasoned with soy sauce. Other species, kanten for example, are used in pâtisserie and confectionery.

But algae are not simply a culinary expedient, and interest in them is not confined to Far Eastern countries; in the opinion of the experts, they constitute a valuable food resource for the future.

It is in this way that chlorella, microscopic freshwater algae which, under favourable conditions, reproduce themselves with astonishing rapidity, may one day save our planet from famine. E. and A. Naegele have good reason to write: 'Experimental feeding of laboratory animals has proved beyond any doubt the food and energy value of chlorellae. It is apparent that chlorellae are rich in proteinic, lipid and vitaminised substances, and that accelerated cultivation will provide man with an important nutritional supplement. It is not a question of replacing traditional cultivation with that of algae, but the latter may come in useful in the exploitation of solar energy in arid or semi-arid zones.'

This means that the underprivileged peoples of the globe could receive their quota of vitamins and trace elements which at present they entirely lack.

ALGERIA. ALGÉRIE – Algeria is an essentially agricultural country, especially in the Tell region where cereal cultivation predominates. Pasture lands extend to the high plains, while the mountains and land unsuitable for agriculture are covered with forest. It is a country, therefore, of considerable resources. In ancient times it was one of Rome's granaries.

Algeria has every form of cereal: wheat, barley, oats, maize, millet, etc. Wheat is especially valued for the manufacture of pasta and semolina products, since it produces a pasta which, while swelling in the process of cooking, does not lose its shape.

The Algerian vineyards, work of the French colonists, are situated mainly around Oran and Algiers. They are gradually diminishing in number. The wines of Mascara, Mostaganem and Médéa are among the best known. Since the time of the French administration they have been classified V.D.Q.S. (q.v.). They are generally of high alcohol content and have good keeping qualities, which make them the providence of wine dealers who specialise in blending. Early dessert grapes are exported in June.

Plums, greengages and almonds are other equally early fruits. Then there are the specifically Algerian fruits such as oranges, tangerines, dates and figs. The last two are dried and exported in considerable quantities. A large proportion of the oranges and tangerines are used locally in the manufacture of liqueurs.

Vegetable farming produces excellent quality potatoes, beans, artichokes, tomatoes, peas, carrots, melons, water-melons and aubergines (eggplants). Olives are cultivated in the littoral regions and in a few higher regions – up to 900 m. (over 3000 feet) in altitude. Refineries situated on the spot produce a very good quality oil, easy-flowing, fruity, golden.

The coasts furnish all the fish and crustaceans of the Mediterranean, as well as fruits de mer very similar to those found on the coast of Provence.

Large herds of livestock feed on the pasture lands of the interior. There are about ten times as many sheep as cattle, which explains why there are so many more recipes for mutton than for beef. Indigenous Algerian animals, such as camels and gazelles, appear on the menu more as a gastronomical curiosity than anything else, and are treated in an exceptional manner.

Algerian cooking is not so very different from that of

ALGERIA

Tunisia and Morocco. All three come under the heading of Arab cuisine.

Spices abound: absinth, verbená, basil, citron, gum resin, mint, sesame, pimentos, etc. Dishes are flavoured with ras el-hanout, a blend of twenty-seven different spices inseparably linked with the feast of Aïd-el-Kébir.

Arab cuisine or 'tent cookery'. CUISINE ARABE – This type of food is simple and healthy; the milk, oil, semolina, rice, dates, vegetables, pasta products, condiments and meats which go into its composition are all excellent and produce easily digestible dishes.

The method of slaughter used by the Arabs, consisting of severing the neck, the windpipe and the two jugular veins, without lifting the knife off until severance is complete, is particularly to be recommended.

The Arabs eat only the flesh of animals; the blood is forbidden. The Koran lays down which foods the Arabs are permitted to eat. This includes aquatic animals, all the poultry and all birds, except birds of prey – day or nocturnal – all livestock animals, camels, oxen, sheep, etc., with the exception of pig and wild boar.

The lawgiver advises his faithful: 'Do not eat in a crouching or huddled position, as this position inclines one to eat too much, but sit at the table in such a manner as to appear always ready to get up.'

Arabs generally drink only once, after a meal, when a communal vessel (guerba), containing spring water or milk, makes the round of those participating in the meal.

The person drinking should not breathe into the bowl containing the liquid; he must remove it from his lips before beginning to breathe again. Then he may resume drinking. A cup of coffee and a pipe of tobacco always conclude the meal of the true Arab.

Coffee, a Moslem beverage, is the inseparable companion of tobacco (they constitute the two great pleasures of the Arab). It is very rich in tonic substances and therefore very beneficial in a country where the summer temperature varies between 25°C. and 50°C. (77°F. and 122°F.).

The tea hour is a ritual. There is mint tea, absinth and sage tea laced with marjoram, basil and ambergris (an aromatic infusion served with ambergris balls mounted in silver is the ultimate refinement).

Arabs drink no wine; the Koran forbids it.

One of the authors of the commentaries to the Koran, Sidi Dylaeddine, thinks, however, that the Prophet simply wanted to forbid excessive wine drinking, and that wine is permitted provided one does not get drunk.

Another, going one better, said: 'Eat and drink, but without excess, for God loves not him who commits excess.'

Arab gastronomic customs – 'When the food is served,' says El Syauté, 'help yourself from around the edge of the dish, leaving the middle, as the blessing of heaven will descend upon it.'

The laws of hospitality are rigorously observed by the Moslems. If a stranger, be he well or poorly dressed, appears at the entrance to a tent, or at the door of a house, and asks for hospitality, the master of the household immediately answers: 'Be welcome,' and bids him enter, indicating a place on the carpet or mat which covers the floor. Immediately, the visit is treated as a festive occasion and the guest is offered a cup of coffee or tea and whatever there is ready to eat.

Hospitality is the duty of every good Moslem.

When a Moslem family offers you some messelmen or some sebaas-el aarroussa (cakes in the form of tapering fingers or biscuits shaped like small hands) it is a sign that you are welcome.

The pattern of the hand seen on the cakes, on the tents, on the walls, windows and doors of Moslem houses, is a symbol of power and has an historical significance.

Moses, having changed his rod into a serpent, showed his hand to Pharaoh, as if to bear witness to his power. The faithful thus adopted the symbol of the hand of Moses as a protection from the evil eye.

A very rigid period of fasting, the Ramadan, is prescribed for all Moslems during all daylight hours of the entire month of Ramadan, which is the ninth month of the Mohammedan year.

The word Ramadan comes from a verb meaning to rain, because it washes away the sins of the flesh and cleanses the heart of its impurities.

The period of fasting was laid down by Mohammed, during the second year of the Hegira, to sanctify by religious observance the memory of what happened to the first man when he ate the forbidden fruit. Adam, banished from the Garden of Eden, cried bitterly, but his repentance was not accepted by God until thirty days after his fall, when his body had been cleansed of the impurities with which his disobedience had tainted him, and posterity was thus condemned to a consecutive fast of thirty days a year.

During the month of Ramadan the Moslems must abstain from food, drink and tobacco from sunrise to sunset.

In North Africa, where Islam is the predominating religion, a burst of artillery fire announces to the faithful that Ramadan has commenced. During the ensuing thirty days a single cannon shot fired each evening at sunset signals the end of fasting for that day.

Ramadan ends with pantagruelian feasts, called Aïd-el-Kébir, which somewhat resemble the Christian Christmas dinner. Moslems who cannot celebrate this feast at home gather together in Moorish cafés.

Culinary specialties of North Africa –

Aâssida. Flour boiled in water, then mixed with butter.

Bascoutou. Spanish loaf made of egg yolks, flour and orange blossoms.

Bissar. Dried beans cooked in water and oil until they form a sort of jelly; eaten hot or cold.

Bouzellouf. Sheep's head singed on a brisk fire to remove all hairs; boiled, then seasoned with oil, vinegar, salt, pepper and garlic.

Breyes beylicales. Little squares of cooked semolina mixed with pistachio nuts, walnuts and almonds.

Brik. Eggs in puff pastry fried in oil.

Cacao. Little reddish-brown lozenges made from sugar, pistachio nuts, almonds and lemon essence.

Chechkuka. A dish made of sweet or strong peppers, tomatoes, baby marrows (zucchini) or aubergines (egg-plants), cut in pieces and fried in olive oil with garlic and onion, the whole either mixed with beaten eggs, or not, and cooked for a few minutes on a slow fire.

Cherba-bel-frik. Green corn soup.

Djendjelem. A whitish, soft paste, made of sugar, ginger, starch and a pinch of pepper. It is bought ready-made.

Dolma. Highly seasoned mixture of rice, chopped meat and onions wrapped in cabbage leaves, covered with water and cooked in a casserole with fire below and above. Similar to Turkish dolma.

Douara. Boiled pluck and tripe seasoned with cumin and spices.

Guizada. A kind of scalloped little cookie made from semolina and eggs, baked in the oven.

Homse. Little balls of paste fried and coated with honey.

Kabab. Mutton cut into squares, braised in butter, seasoned with salt and pepper and served liberally garnished with sliced onions and parsley.

Kefta. Chopped and spiced mutton, shaped into rissoles and grilled over a wood fire.

Khali. Dried mutton cooked in oil and fat and thus preserved.

Liani. Lamb stew with chick peas, seasoned with wild parsley.

Makrouda. Pastry lozenges stuffed with dates.

M'darbel. Mixture of fried baby marrows (zucchini) and little pieces of beef fried in oil seasoned with hot pimento and a dash of vinegar.

Mekechter. Chicken fricassée with chick peas.

Merga. Strongly spiced stock made of mutton or chicken, or both, which the Arabs drink only when it is very cold or in cases of illness.

M'habia. Cake made from milk, semolina, pistachio nuts, walnuts and pine nuts.

M'hamsa. Soup with pasta and tomatoes.

Mokh. Sheep's brain and tongue, seasoned with garlic, cayenne pepper and wild parsley.

Osbane. Force meat made from chopped sheep's pluck and meat, mixed with rice, seasoned with red pepper and spices. Used for stuffing sheep's intestines.

Rim-bel-terfass. A stew made of gazelle meat and Saharan truffles (Saharan dish).

Sferia. Mixture of chopped mutton and onions seasoned with salt, pepper and cumin. These are shaped into little balls, dipped in egg and fried in butter.

Tadjin helou. Very delicate stew made of mutton or beef, vegetables in season, prunes or raisins and a few quinces. This is covered with pie pastry and cooked in the oven.

Terbia-bel-hebar. Macédoine of vegetables served with a roast bustard (little bustard or field duck).

Tleili. Macaroni garnished with chopped meat and baked eggs.

Tomina. Coarse semolina cooked in an earthenware casserole and plunged into butter and boiling honey.

Yubbo. Cake made from honey, olive oil, rose petals, flour and dandelions.

Other specialities include lagni, much-valued palm milk; leben, which is nothing but whey; and kéfir made from cow's, goat's or sheep's milk; chreyba, rahatloucoum, sahleb, rogagues, messelman, makroutes, stuffed dates, etc.

And when we add to this list tadjins (in its several forms), méchoui and couscous with its various accompaniments (see COUSCOUS) and the delicacies of Tunisian and Israeli cuisine, we realise that African regional cookery need not fear comparison with more sophisticated metropolitan cuisine.

ALGÉRIENNE (À L') – This is the name of a garnish, applicable principally to meat. It consists of small tomatoes braised in oil accompanied by sweet potato croquettes, or sweet potatoes cooked in butter.

ALICA – A sort of porridge of which the Romans were very fond. It was prepared with spelt (hard or durum wheat, what today is known as German wheat) mixed with a sort of clay (creta) found between Pozzuoli and Naples on the hill of Leucogee (Pliny). A drink was also made from Alica.

It is said that Augustus paid a rent of 20,000 sesterces to the Neapolitans for the exclusive right to this clay. (Creta in Latin means both 'clay' and 'chalk'.)

ALICANTE WINE. ALICANTE (VIN D') – A very well-known dessert wine from the Spanish province of Alicante. This is also the name given in the midi of France to a variety of red grape (known, too, as Grenache).

ALICUTT (Languedoc cookery) – Ragoût of giblets (principally turkey gizzards and wings) prepared as described in the recipe for Turkey giblets bonne-femme (see GIBLETS).

This ragoût is a country dish called alicot in dialect. The etymological root is retained in all its various forms: ali, wings; cuit, cooked.

ALIMENT – Derived from the Latin word alere: to nourish, to cause to grow. The Celtic root alt means nourishment. The word 'aliment' indicates an object, while the word 'nourishment' indicates an action, although the latter is often employed as a synonym of 'aliment'.

Any substance which upon entering the body is capable of supplying it with materials for growth or repair and with fuel for its energy requirements is an aliment.

Simple aliments are those that the organism consumes and absorbs without first submitting them to modification; water, which is of considerable alimentary importance (see WATER), and sea salt are about the only substances in this category.

To study the aliments we must begin by selecting the genuinely alible elements of each one and proceed to examine them individually. Today we consider as elementary aliments, ternary substances (that is substances of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen). These ternary substances are always associated with other mineral elements, namely the carbohydrates, fats and quaternary substances (also called nitrogenous substances because nitrogen combines with the carbon, hydrogen and oxygen). Quaternary substances are proteids or proteins (formerly called albuminoids). To these three broad classes of aliments (simple, ternary and quaternary) we must add mineral substances and vitamins.

Carbohydrates are represented by the starches and sugars. Apart from small quantities present in some animal tissues, these are all of vegetable origin. The action of the digestive ferments transforms them into glucose which is absorbed by the blood, then condensed by the liver into glycogen or animal starch. This is broken down little by little to meet the body's requirements. The final stage of this decomposition yields water and carbonic acid. In certain illnesses the process of decomposition is arrested and intermediary products form (acids) which remain in the blood. When the quantity of glucose circulating in the blood reaches too high a level as a result of inadequate transformation, part of it is eliminated in the urine (which normally does not contain any). Such is the case in diabetes.

The body can transform carbohydrates into fats. These two aliments are therefore to an extent interchangeable.

The fats or fatty bodies are esters: compounds of glycerine and fatty acids. Alimentary fatty bodies are present in both the animal and vegetable kingdoms. The digestive ferments decompose the fats, which then reconstitute themselves to form organic fats. The fat is then laid down in the tissues and especially in the cellular tissue, and is utilised by the body according to its needs. When the fat thus laid in reserve is not used in sufficient quantity by the body, it accumulates in the organs and tissues and results in obesity.

Fats may be partially replaced in the diet by carbohydrates, but these are not absolute equivalents and the diet of an adult must contain a minimum of 70 g. (2½ oz.) fats daily. This amount may be decreased in summer but it must never fall below 40 g. (1½ oz.) per day, of which 25 g. (1 oz.) should be animal fat.

Although fat forms a normal part of certain organs, and although carbohydrates, too, are constitutive elements of certain tissues, the principal function of these two elements is to provide energy. It is thanks to them that the body is capable of physical exertion and of maintaining its temperature. They are considered, therefore, mainly as combustives, or as respiratory aliments, since it is through the oxygen in the air that this combustion is effected.

Theoretically, fats decompose into carbonic acid and water (like the carbohydrates); but in certain illnesses this decomposition stops at one of several intermediate stages and the resulting excess of fatty acids found in the blood constitutes one of the factors of acidosis.

The albuminoids (proteinic or quaternary substances) contain carbon, hydrogen, oxygen as their principal elements, and a fourth - nitrogen. Their chemical composition is extremely complex (see ALBUMINOIDS). Under the influence of digestive elements they are subjected to a series of modifications which terminate in the production of albumins; these are used in the constitution of our tissues.

The organism uses the albuminoids partly as energy factors, but principally to aid growth and in the reparation of our tissues.

Unlike carbohydrates and fats, albuminoids do not undergo total decomposition; in eight cases out of ten this stops at the urea stage, the remainder being eliminated in the form of various nitrogenous substances, some of which have still not been determined.

Deficiencies of the liver (the great transformer of nitrogenous substances) or of the kidneys (the great eliminators of the same) cause proteins, or their products of disintegration, to accumulate in the blood and a serious disorder called azotemia results (of which uraemia is a modification). In other instances, the urine is found to contain substances it ought not to contain such as aminic acids or even albumins (albuminuria).

The albuminoid group also comprises closely related substances known as proteidae which are albumins combined with a carbohydrate to form a paranucleine (paranucleo-proteides).

Finally, classed as 'albuminoids' are non-proteic nitrogenous substances like gelatine, keratin, etc.

Minerals, too, are indispensable elements of our alimentation. Sodium chloride (sea salt) is the only mineral used alone in its natural state; the others occur as elements of various compounds (probably the only form in which they are assimilable) combined with the albuminoids, carbohydrates and fats of our natural foods.

We know the approximate needs of the organism as regards certain chemical substances that are eliminated daily in ponderable quantities. The excreta, for example, remove from the body each day on average 7 g. soda, 4.75 g. potassium, 1.25 g. calcium, 1.63 g. phosphorus, 0.5 g. magnesia, 0.05 g. iron, 0.05 g. sulphur, as well as a small quantity of chloride and traces of manganese, bromine, iodine, silica and fluorine. Other elements enter into alimentation in imponderable quantity, which does not mean to say that their rôle is insignificant; in fact there is a probability that we may find among these imponderables an explanation for the part vitamins play in the diet. For example, recent research has revealed that vitamins act as coenzymes (or codiastases) and are therefore involved in the degradation or resynthesis of the various nutriments.

Remineralisation experiments have been carried out with animals. That is to say, the principal minerals have been removed from their alimentation and replaced by complex mineral mixtures. These experiments invariably failed when chemically pure salts were used; positive results were obtained using less-well-purified salts, which shows the important rôle impurities (i.e., the imponderable traces of certain elements) play in the diet.

Most of the chemists who have analysed the aliments have determined their total mineralisation by reducing them to the form of ash. This calls for complicated calculations and gives far from accurate results when the final figure is applied to fresh foods, such as those we consume daily. This is explained not only by the diversity of the methods employed, but also (in the animal) by the differences arising from the race, feeding and cuts considered; in the vegetable, the variety, the soil in which it has been cultivated, the fertiliser used, the part analysed.

M. R. Berg has calculated the figures for cabbages in the accompanying table.

	CABBAGES GATHERED
	in March	in December
Oxide of potassium	0.5067	0.6748
Oxide of sodium	0.0330	0.0640
Oxide of lime	0.1730	0.1596
Oxide of iron	0.2216	0.2870
Phosphoric anhydride	0.5833	0.0287
Sulphuric anhydride	0.5833	0.2569
Chlorine	0.6550	0.4445
Per cent of fresh substances

Figures vary according to whether analysis is made of the exterior leaves, the interior leaves or the buds of the vegetable. Basic elements predominate in the exterior, whereas the interior leaves and, in particular, the buds, are distinctly acid.

Cooking procedures modify the ratio and proportion of mineral salts primarily by dissolving the alkaline elements, so that if a piece of beef in which the acid elements predominate is boiled an alkaline stock can be obtained.

The effect of cooking is even more marked with vegetables. Blanching (prerequisite in the manufacture of tinned food) reduces the mineral content of vegetables and destroys the basic minerals. Prolonged boiling has an even more damaging effect. The effects of other methods of cooking are less drastic since the juices released by the vegetable are usually consumed with it.

TOTAL MINERAL LOSS DURING COOKING IN:

	Water per cent	Oil per cent	Fat per cent	Butter per cent
Carrots	49.95	30.59	20.91	19.65
Potatoes	66.74	31.33	52.38	42.85
Onions	66.67	47.25	60	53.44

LOSS OF POTASSIUM SALTS

Carrots	52.05	23.97	14.38	22.60
Potatoes	57.61	20.46	11.51	11.97
Onions	66.67	13.33	19.16	26.67

Some experiments have shown how the total loss of minerals and potassium salts varies according to different cooking procedures.

Artificial aliments - Natural foods that have been prepared industrially are not included under this heading (they will be dealt with later). Here we are referring to aliments that have been chemically treated in order to make them more digestible or more easily assimilated: there are many of them. Among the nitrogenous substances are purified albumins, legumin, albumoses and peptones. All these products can be prescribed therapeutically but their prolonged use inevitably leads to disorders; they have never succeeded in supplementing natural foods in the adult diet. As far as children are concerned, modified artificial foods are those most frequently used, dextrined and malted flours, etc.

Chemical aliments – We must not forget that even if albuminoids, carbohydrates and fatty bodies are elements of our alimentation, they are not aliments. Aliments have a traditional form and are borrowed (apart from a few minerals) from the animal or vegetable kingdoms; the three elements listed are merely constituents of aliments (along with a few indigestible substances such as cellulose). The presence of cellulose besides providing bulk has been proved after exhaustive research to be indispensable in the accomplishment of digestive phenomena.

Complete aliment – An aliment that contains, or is reputed to contain, the various alimentary substances in the right proportions. Milk is the only practically complete food (as far as babies are concerned) and even it is deficient in Vitamin C.

Economy aliments – Some of the substances we occasionally describe in this way have, like cocoa and chocolate, real food value; others, such as tea, coffee, coca-cola, only act through the nervous excitation they provoke.

It is arguable whether or not the ingestion of these substances can increase the energy output of a diet, but they can, under certain conditions, calm or falsely appease, the sensation of hunger and impart a feeling of well-being.

Nutritive value of certain elements – Bearing in mind the importance of the various elements in the normal diet (albumins, carbohydrates, fats, etc.) an aliment will be more nourishing the more fatty bodies it contains, for these are richest, volume for volume, in calories.

The mutual substitution tables of various groups of aliments (see below) give some indication of the relative values of certain aliments of animal and vegetable origin. We have to thank Mme. Lucie Randoin, MM. Legallie, Causerets and G. Duchêne for them.

Meat, milk, butter and bread have been taken as basic elements in these substitution tables. The compilers have then calculated the quantities of other aliments (closely related in nutritive value) required to replace a given weight of each of these basic elements.

In establishing these quantities, they have naturally taken into account that the aliments mentioned in each group are not of precisely the same composition and may even differ profoundly on certain points. We can nevertheless see the advantage of comparing aliments which, practically speaking, are interchangeable. If the alimentation is sufficiently varied the organism can only benefit from their different nutritional values.

Volume of aliments – Nothing is more variable than the capacity of that elastic organ the stomach; although 1200 cm.<sup>3</sup> is the recognised average capacity, this may fall to 600 cm.<sup>3</sup> or rise to 2000 cm.<sup>3</sup> according to the individual.

We must not forget that ingested liquids leave the stomach very rapidly and enter only minimally into calculations involving the volume of aliments.

Classification of the aliments – Any attempt to draw up a set of guiding principles for sensible eating must be based upon quite a simple classification of the aliments.

There is little to choose between the various classifications suggested by nutritionists, but like Mme. Randoin we prefer the following:

1. Milk and its derivatives (with the exception of butter).
2. Various meats and fish, eggs.
3. Fatty substances.
4. Starchy foods (flour, bread, noodles, rice, dried vegetables, potatoes) and sweetened foods (dried fruit, sugar, jam, chocolate, etc.).
5. Fresh vegetables and fruit:
  - (a) eaten raw (crudités)
  - (b) eaten cooked.

6. Beverages:
  - (a) water
  - (b) fruit juices
  - (c) alcoholic drinks
  - (d) aromatic drinks.

Weight of aliments – Normally the stomach is more sensitive to the weight of aliments than to their volume. The weight of the total diet (beverages excluded) ranges from 1500 to 1800 g. for a man, a little less for a woman; the weight becomes excessive above 2500 g.

The average weight of a meal must not exceed 800 to 1000 g. for a man and 600 to 800 g. for a woman. Generally a feeling of satiety occurs before these limits are reached.

MUTUAL SUBSTITUTION OF ANIMAL FOODS

100 G. MEAT (net weight) can be replaced as a source of protein by:

- 100 g. offal or variety meats
- 100 g. fish (net weight)
- 2½ eggs
- ½ litre milk or the equivalent in milk derivatives (see table below)

MUTUAL SUBSTITUTION OF DAIRY FOODS

½ LITRE MILK can be replaced by:

- 120 g. unsweetened concentrated milk
- 80 g. sweetened concentrated milk
- 30 g. powdered milk
- 125 g. curdled milk (cream cheese)
- 2 small cartons yoghurt (about 250 g.)
- 4 petits suisses (about 120 g.)
- 1 demi-sel (about 60 g.)
- 40–50 g. fermented soft cheese (Brie, Camembert, Coulommiers, Livarot, Munster, etc.)
- 30–40 g. fermented hard cheeses (Gruyère, Dutch cheese, Saint-Paulin, Cantal, etc.)
- 60 g. Gruyère cream cheese
- 25 g. goat cheese

MUTUAL SUBSTITUTION OF FARINACEOUS FOODS

100 G. BREAD can be replaced as a source of calories by:

- 70 g. cereal flour
- 70 g. rusks or dry sponge fingers
- 50 g. biscuits
- 80 g. gingerbread
- 70 g. porridge oats
- 70 g. pasta or noodles
- 70 g. rice
- 75 g. dried vegetables (haricot beans, lentils, peas, etc.)
- 350 g. potatoes (gross weight)
- 150 g. chestnuts (gross weight)
- 90 g. dried fruit (dates, figs, prunes, etc.)

MUTUAL SUBSTITUTION OF FATTY SUBSTANCES

100 G. BUTTER can be replaced as a source of lipids by:

- 100 g. animal fat (lard, mutton fat, etc.)
- 85 g. oil
- 100 g. margarine
- 120 g. unsmoked bacon

Consistency of the aliments – The consistency of foods is of far greater importance (as regards their digestion) than their volume or weight. As a rule, whatever their initial consistency, aliments ought to reach the stomach reduced to a sulp (or pap) through mastication and insalivation (for the gastric musculature is too feeble in the human species to break down large fragments; the latter lie too long in the stomach and can cause dyspepsia). The bad habit of not chewing food properly, of swallowing too quickly (tachyphagia) has the worst possible effects.

X-ray examination reveals, for example, that a hard-boiled egg, considered to be one of the most indigestible of foods, leaves the stomach just as quickly as a soft-boiled egg if it is grated finely (or chewed very thoroughly) to give it a similar consistency.

We must not conclude from this that the ideal way of ingesting food is in the form of a purée; on the contrary, puréed foods are a last resort, to have recourse to in cases of infection of the mouth and teeth, or as a temporary measure in some forms of dyspepsia, or in the early stages of convalescence. The importance of mastication, insalivation, and digestion cannot be over emphasised; a diet consisting solely of puréed foods would not stimulate the stomach muscles sufficiently and could cause gastric atony; it could also lead to dental caries owing to the enforced idleness imposed on the teeth. So one must encourage the culinary habit of adding some hard substances (fried croûtons, for example) to foods presented in puréed form.

Temperature of the aliments – Hot foods are more stimulating than cold and man always looks for such stimulation in his food, for unlike other animal species he is not content simply to have his hunger appeased.

Only extreme temperatures are harmful to the organism. If food is too hot it can cause burns to the mouth, the tongue, and the œsophagus, especially when hot liquids are gulped down. The latter can also cause irritation to the stomach which may even develop into gastritis.

Foods which are too cold induce constriction of the capillary blood vessels of the stomach, causing subsequent dilatation. The side effects are even worse than those produced by foods which are too hot.

The nature and consistency of the aliments have a strong bearing on how their temperature is withstood; one can, if need be, sip broth or coffee at 60°C. (140°F.); porridge taken at the same temperature would have serious effects. The particular moment at which these foods are quickly swallowed is also significant; an iced substance taken on an empty stomach can be harmful, whereas the effect of an ice cream taken immediately after a meal and received by an already full stomach would not be nearly so serious.

Too swift a transition from hot to cold, for example, a hot food followed immediately by an iced drink, is extremely harmful to the enamel of the teeth.

Soups rapidly become cold in the plate, so they are usually served very hot; it is hardly possible to drink a clear soup heated above 60°C. (140°F.) – even above 58°C. (136°F.). Most people wait until it cools to 37° to 45°C (99° to 103°F.) to taste the flavour.

Thick soups, porridges, vegetable purées must not be drunk above 38° to 42°C. (100° to 107°F.).

Roast meat is usually served between 40° and 45°C. (104° and 113°F.). Its temperature must not fall below 40°C. (104°F.) otherwise the fat begins to congeal (this is especially true of roast mutton). This is why plates are heated (particularly meat plates).

Hot bread of 38°C. (100°F.) and above is much more indigestible than cold bread; this depends less on the temperature itself than on the physical condition of the crumb. It is a widespread belief, however, that slow digestion of cold foods is beneficial. Ninon de Lenclos attributes his sprightly old age to having all his life eaten cold food.

Psychological effects of the aliments – For its curiosity value, here, according to a learned Swedish doctor, are the effects produced on man by the different foods he eats:

- By eating beef (especially roast beef) for months on end, one is certain to acquire self-confidence and audacity . . .
- Mutton makes one melancholy . . .
- Pork makes one pessimistic. Could it be that pork butchers only see the black side of things?
- Duck flesh makes man bad-tempered . . .
- For wit and beauty eggs are supreme . . .
- Walnuts, hazelnuts, almonds, dried figs develop the mind . . .
- Tomatoes, oranges and lemons considerably improve the quality of the voice . . .
- Finally, doughy English-type bread slows the mental processes; light-textured bread assures a buoyant morale. Rye bread and buckwheat pancake make one melancholy . . .

ALIMENTATION – Alimentation varies according to age, climate, profession, and state of health.

Alimentation must be adequate. It must provide (with a small excess) the wherewithal for growth (in the young person), for the repair and upkeep of the tissues and organs, and for the expenditure of energy.

To determine the energy value of an aliment or diet, we employ as a measure the calorie (q.v.), going on the principle that all forms of energy can be transformed into heat.

Various methods are used to determine the requirements of the human body. One way is by calculating the average from the global alimentation of a population. Another method is by analysing the ingesta (aliments and oxygen consumed), and the excreta (excretions, secretions, carbonic acid exhaled) and the quantity of heat discharged.

Modern dieticians are agreed that the normal alimentation for an adult of average weight (65 kg. or 143 lb.) in repose or engaged in only light duties must correspond to 2350 calories, that is approximately 36 calories for every kg. of weight (2.2 lb.). Previously a much higher calorie intake was considered necessary.

We usually allow that:

1 g. albuminoids gives out	4.44 calories
1 g. carbohydrates gives out	4.23 calories
1 g. fat gives out	9.40 calories

The figures of the physiologist M. Atwater are slightly lower because he incorporated losses and waste products in them. His table reads as follows:

Albuminoids	3.68 calories per g.
Carbohydrates	3.00 calories per g.
Fats	8.65 calories per g.

He also distinguished between substances of animal origin (best utilised) and substances of vegetable origin. To obtain 100 calories one must consume, according to him:

Animal proteins	23.50 g.
Vegetable proteins	28.19 g.
Amyloide substances	25.00 g.
Animal fats	11.18 g.
Vegetable fats	11.97 g.

We must not lose sight of the fact that these figures are merely averages, and while of great interest in alimentary studies of collectivities they lose their precision when reduced to the level of individuals.

The food requirements of the child are (in proportion to its weight) slightly higher than those of an adult since it must satisfy its growing needs. Those of the aged are less because of the reduced expenditure of energy. Food requirements increase with the lowering of exterior temperatures and with the work done.

The daily diet must be balanced. It must contain a minimum amount of albuminoids and fats, and enough carbohydrates to ensure that the two preceding elements are thoroughly utilised.

The normal diet must comprise:

- 80 g. albuminoids
- 70 g. fats
- 350 g. carbohydrates

The proportion of fats in an infant's diet must be higher in relation to carbohydrates.

The daily diet must be varied. The impossibility of measuring the imponderables of alimentation (very minute mineral substances and vitamins) obliges us to procure our alimentary elements from a wide variety of nutrients (something, in fact, that man has always done instinctively).

It is probable that the disorders arising from following too uniform a diet are caused by the absence or deficiency of these imponderables.

The daily diet must be pleasant. Although it is possible to feed like animals simply upon what nature provides (as members of certain sects do) man has always tried to increase the savouriness of his food by adding palatable condiments and by applying heat. The culinary art, which is derived from these two operations, has the effect of adding to the psychological need and satisfaction of taking nourishment, a gustative, olfactory satisfaction, and in so doing has exerted an influence on the development of the human species.

Natural alimentation – Without either denigrating culinary qualities or betraying gastronomic traditions, dieticians encourage us to use natural foods in the composition of menus.

This means that we ought not to consume food products that have been subjected to any form of chemical adulteration. Mme. Randoin defined the problem perfectly when she wrote: 'Nourishing ourselves is a serious business upon which much, good and bad, depends. It is incumbent, therefore, upon each one of us to realise that we make or break our health by a judicious or injudicious choice of the elements that constitute our daily diet.'

The fact remains that every individual case is different, and that although we have a few general lines to go on, there are no truly standard régimes in alimentation.

Besides using natural products wherever possible, the best one can do is to follow the precepts of quantity, of preparation, and of cooking methods laid down by the dieticians.

Forced feeding – The introduction of aliments directly into the stomach.

Artificial feeding – Alimentary substances can be made to penetrate the organism by channels other than the gastric one. These procedures are confined to the medical domain.

ALKALESCEMENTS (Food). ALCALINISANTS (Aliments) – Foods that contain an excess of basic elements (lime, soda, potassium, magnesium).

Milk and blood are the only alkalescents of animal origin. On the other hand, most foods of vegetable origin are alkalescents with the exception of cereals, cereal products and a number of vegetables of which we consume the flowers (artichoke) or buds (asparagus, Brussels sprouts). All acid-tasting fruit such as lemons, redcurrants, etc., are alkalescents.

Celery, Jerusalem artichokes, turnips, carrots, beetroot, cucumber, cabbage, dandelions, endive, lettuce, tomatoes, spinach, oranges, tangerines and lemons are very strong alkalescents; other fruits, milk, potatoes and cauliflower, less so.

ALKALI VOLATILE. ALCALI VOLATIL – Commonly known as liquid ammonia. It is a colourless liquid, lighter than water, with an extremely strong pungent odour reminiscent of urine. Its fumes can be asphyxiating. It is used in confectionery as a solvent for cochineal carmines.

ALKALOIDS. ALCALOÏDES – Substances of vegetable origin that have a powerful effect on the organism, even when absorbed in minute quantities. (The stimulants in coffee, tea and chocolate are alkaloids.)

ALKERMES. ALKERMÈS – An old-fashioned red cordial, once very popular, produced by distilling a sweetened infusion of nutmeg, cinnamon, bay leaf and cloves. Its colour is derived from kermes, hence its name.

ALLARIA (Jack-by-the-hedge). ALLIAIRE – This plant has a very pronounced garlic flavour, and can be used as a condiment for salads.

ALLEMANDE SAUCE – The name given to a classic white sauce made by adding egg yolks and cream to a velouté (q.v.).

A more modern version of the recipe for this sauce (one of the best in the French culinary repertoire) is given in the section devoted to sauces.

Despite its name, this sauce is not of German origin. According to Carême it is so called because of its light colour, and to distinguish it from espagnole sauce, which is dark. (The latter does not seem to have originated in Spain, either.)

In the French culinary repertoire, there is an enormous number of designations borrowed from other countries, most of them describing dishes of entirely French origin. Modern authors also refer to the allemande as Sauce parisienne (see SAUCE).

Carême's recipe – Carême begins by giving the recipe for Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), then describes the preparation of allemande sauce as follows:

'Pour half the velouté into a saucepan. Add an equal quantity of good chicken consommé, to which has been added a few mushrooms (stalks and peel), and as much salt as can be held on the point of a knife.

Place the sauce over a brisk heat and stir with a wooden spoon until it comes to the boil. Draw it away from the flame, cover, and leave to simmer for about an hour. Skim off the fat and replace on a high flame, stirring with the wooden spoon to prevent it sticking to the bottom of the pan. When perfectly cooked, the sauce should coat the surface of a spoon quite thickly; and when poured, it should be of the same consistency as redcurrant jelly.

Remove the saucepan from the heat and prepare a liaison using 4 egg yolks mixed with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cream. Pass this through a sieve, adding a piece of best butter the size of an egg, cut into small pieces. Pour the liaison, little by little, into the velouté, stirring carefully with the wooden spoon to make sure that it is blended in smoothly. When it is all perfectly incorporated, replace the sauce on a moderate heat and continue stirring.

As soon as a few bubbles start to rise, remove from the heat and add as much grated nutmeg as can be held on the point of a knife. When well blended, pass through a sieve.'

ALLIGATOR – A species of American crocodile commonly called cayman.

The alligator has already become a part of the gastronomic world. Not only is its rather too musky flesh eaten by the natives who capture it, but slices of alligator are occasionally served in London and Paris.

The most valued parts of the reptile are the feet or flippers, since the alligator, although less aquatic than most crocodiles, also lives in water. These flippers are prepared à l'américaine, à l'indienne or in any similar manner. (See TURTLE.)

ALLSPICE

ALLSPICE. TOUTE ÉPICE – Common name for the myrtle seed (Jamaica pepper) and for cultivated nigella (fennel flower).

ALLUMETTES – Strips of puff pastry variously garnished and baked in the oven.

Little cakes made of puff pastry and filled or garnished with various mixtures are also called allumettes.

Allumettes (hot hors-d'œuvre) – Roll out a strip of puff pastry to a thickness of  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) and about 7 to 8 cm. (3 inches) wide. Cover the surface with Fish forcemeat, or any other suggested mixture (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS). Cut into rectangles, place on a baking tray, and bake in the oven at 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6) for about 15 minutes.

Allumettes à la périgourdine – Coat the puff pastry with a purée of chicken livers (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) mixed with finely chopped truffles. Bake in the oven.

Allumettes à la reine – Coat the puff pastry with a very fine mixture of minced breast of chicken and truffles, blended with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Bake in the oven.

Allumettes à la toscane – Sprinkle the sheet of puff pastry with grated Parmesan. Cut into strips and bake in the oven.

Ox palate allumettes. ALLUMETTES DE PALAIS DE BŒUF – 'Remove the skin from 2 ox palates previously cooked in water. Cut into strips the size of matchsticks and marinate in lemon juice or vinegar seasoned with a little salt, sprigs of parsley, and whole spring onions. When they are thoroughly macerated drain them, and dip them in a batter made as follows:

'Place 2 good handfuls of flour, 1 tablespoon fine oil, and a little finely ground salt, into a basin. Dilute this gradually with beer until the batter reaches the consistency of thick cream. Dip the palate strips into it and fry until golden brown. Serve as hot as possible.' (La Cuisine bourgeoise, 1769, Paris)

Allumettes (cakes)

Allumettes (cakes) – These sweet pastry cakes are said to have been created a century ago by a Swiss pastry-cook who lived in Dinard (Ille-et-Vilaine). M. Lacam, who wrote a history of pastry-making, describes the invention as follows: 'One day Planta, the above-mentioned pastry-cook, had some icing left over and did not know what to do with it. Having softened it, he added a pinch of flour to it in order to prevent the sugar from running in the heat of the oven, and spread it on a sheet of puff pastry. This he cut into little sticks and baked in the oven.'

Thus allumettes, a sort of dry petit four which are now so popular, were invented.

Method. Roll out some puff pastry to the thickness of 4 mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) and cut it into strips 8 cm. (3 inches) wide. Spread a thin layer of Royal icing (see ICING) on these strips, cut them into pieces 2 to 3 cm. (1 inch) wide, and bake in the oven at 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6) for 12 minutes.

ALMOND. AMANDE – Kernel of a stone fruit, particularly of the almond tree. There are two varieties, sweet almond and bitter almond. They come mostly from North Africa, Provence, Italy and Languedoc, and from California, U.S.A.

More than half their weight is oil. There are two varieties of this; one is used principally in perfumery, the other in pharmaceuticals, in the manufacture of soothing emulsions. The almond tree is mentioned in Genesis, and almonds were among the fruit offered to Joseph (see ALMOND, Country almond).

Almond

Aboukir almonds (confectionery). AMANDES D'ABOUKIR – Petits fours, made of kirsch-flavoured, green-coloured almond paste, shaped in the form of an almond, and stuffed with a blanched almond. Aboukirs are coated with gum, or iced with sugar cooked to hard crack stage (see SUGAR).

Almond and puff pastry gâteau. GÂTEAU FEUILLETÉ AUX AMANDES – This gâteau is known under the name of Pithiviers (q.v.).

Almond butter. BEURRE D'AMANDES – Pound 150 g. (5 oz., 1 cup) freshly blanched almonds in a mortar until they are reduced to a paste, adding a few drops of cold water to prevent them from turning into oil. Pound in 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) fresh butter. Pass through a very fine sieve.

This butter is used for flavouring certain sauces and cream soups; it is also used in the preparation of cold hors d'œuvre.

Ingredients. 225 g. (8 oz., 2 cups) sieved flour, 225 g. (8 oz., 2 cups) ground almonds, 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) castor (fine) sugar, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 4 eggs, half a liqueur glass of rum.

Method. Sieve the flour onto the table. Make a well in the centre and add the almonds, the sugar and the well-softened butter. Break the eggs into these ingredients and pour in the rum. To prevent burning, mix the paste without kneading it (if too firm, add an egg yolk).

Roll the paste into long sausages on the lightly floured table. Cut them into small pieces and roll these into balls.

Space the balls out on buttered trays (use two). Coat each ball twice with beaten egg and score with the blade of a wet knife. Bake for 20 minutes in a slow oven.

Almond cookies (lemon-flavoured). PAINS ANGLAIS AU CITRON – Pound 225 g. (8 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds finely with 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) castor (fine) sugar and 2 whole eggs.

Sieve 225 g. (8 oz., 2 cups) flour onto the table. Make a well in the centre and place the pounded mixture in it. Add 175 g. (6 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) butter and the grated rind of 1 lemon (or orange). Knead well together.

Divide the paste into walnut-sized pieces. Sprinkle the table lightly with flour and form these into little cigars, pointed at each end. Place them on a buttered baking sheet, brush with beaten egg and score in the centre. Bake in a hot oven for 8 to 10 minutes.

Almond cream. CRÈME D'AMANDES – Prepare  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) crème pâtissière in the usual manner, cool it and add to it 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{3}$  cups) freshly blanched almonds pounded to a smooth paste with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar and 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter. This cream is used for filling sweet dishes. For crème pâtissière see CREAMS, French pastry cream.

Almond loaf. PAIN COMPLET – A cake made of almond paste shaped like a loaf.

Almond milk. LAIT D'AMANDES – The codex gives the following recipe for almond milk:

Ingredients. 50 g. (2 oz., scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) blanched sweet almonds, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) white sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) distilled water.

Method. Place the almonds, sugar and water in a marble mortar and pound to a very smooth paste. Press through a fine sieve.

Almond nougat. NOUGAT AUX AMANDES – Dry 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched, chopped almonds in the oven. Place them in a copper bowl in which 400 g. (14 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sugar, flavoured with a squeeze of lemon juice, has been boiled to a pale caramel. Stir this mixture with a spatula.

While the mixture is still hot, pour it into variously shaped greased moulds. Alternatively, the nougat may be spread thinly on an oiled marble slab and cut into different shapes.

Nougat prepared in this way may be shaped into bowls, baskets, clogs and other objects.

Almond paste I. PÂTE D'AMANDES – Crush 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) blanched almonds and place them in a mortar with the selected flavouring (vanilla sugar or liqueur). Cook 900 g. (2 lb., 4 cups) sugar to hard crack stage (see SUGAR). Add this gradually to the almonds, pounding vigorously until well mixed.

Almond paste II. PÂTE D'AMANDES – Ingredients. 475 g. (17 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sweet almonds, 25 g. (1 oz., 3 tablespoons) bitter almonds, 5 g. (1 teaspoon) gum arabic, 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) icing sugar, 1 egg white, juice of 1 lemon.

Method. Pound the almonds with the lemon juice and pass through a fine strainer. Put into a copper pan with the icing sugar and egg white. Dry this mixture gently over heat, stirring all the time. Add the gum arabic dissolved in a little water.

To be perfect this paste must not be sticky. It is used as an abaisse (q.v.) in various sweet dishes and petits fours.

Almond praline. PRALIN AUX AMANDES – Melt 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) castor (fine) sugar slowly in a copper pan. Cook it until it reaches the degree of light caramel, 160°C. (320°F.). Add to this sugar 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) raw unblanched well-dried almonds.

Tip all this mixture onto an oiled marble slab. Allow to cool. Pound the mixture in a mortar. Pass it through a fine sieve. Keep this dry almond powder in tins with well-fitting lids.

Almond tartlets. TARTELETTES AMANDINES – The recipe for these very delicate tartlets was set to rhyme by Edmond Rostand in Cyrano de Bergerac. The recipe itself is attributed to Ragueneau, the famous seventeenth-century pastry-cook.

Here it is in verse:

Comment on fait les tartelettes amandines

Battez, pour qu'ils soient mousseux,

Quelques œufs;

Incorporez à leur mousse

Un jus de cédrat choisi;

Versez-y

Un bon lait d'amande douce;

Mettez de la pâte à flan

Dans le flan

De moules à tartelette;

D'un doigt preste abricotez

Les côtés;

Versez goutte à gouttelette

Voire mousse en ces puits, puis

Que ces puits

Passent au four, et, blondines,

Sortent en gais troupelets,

Tartelettes amandines.

Beat your eggs, the yolk and white

Very light;

Mingle with their creamy fluff

Drops of lime juice, cool and green;

Then pour in Milk of almonds, just enough.

Dainty patty pans, embraced

In puff-paste –

Have these ready within reach;

With your thumb and finger, pinch

Half an inch

Up around the edge of each –

Into these, a score or more,

Slowly pour

All your store of custard; so

Take them, bake them golden-brown –

Now sit down! . . .

Bitter almonds. AMANDES AMÈRES – Bitter almonds owe their bitterness to the relatively high amount of prussic acid they contain. They should therefore be used in moderation.

These almonds are employed in pâtisserie for flavouring icings and fillings; and in confectionery. They are not used as dessert fruit.

The oil obtained from them is poisonous.

Blanched almonds. AMANDES MONDÉES – Dried almonds from which the skin has been removed. Proceed in the following manner. Put the almonds into a sieve; plunge into a saucepan of boiling water and immediately draw the saucepan to the side of the stove.

Drain the almonds, a few at a time, and skin them as soon as you see that the skin comes off when pressed with the fingers. Drop them into cold water, drain and pat dry. If they are to be kept, scatter on a sieve or fine grill and dry thoroughly in a slow oven. Store in a tin or jar with a well-fitting lid. Keep in a dry place.

Chopped almonds. AMANDES HACHÉES – These are blanched almonds roughly or finely chopped depending upon how they are to be employed.

Coloured almonds. AMANDES COLORÉES – Various coloured shredded and ground almonds are used for colouring nougat and for sprinkling on iced petits fours, cakes, biscuits (cookies) and sweet dishes.

ALMONDS, EARTH

Flavouring appropriate to the colour may be added: thus pink may be scented with raspberry essence; mauve flavoured with essence of violets.

Country almond (Indian almond tree). BADAMIER – This tree, which is also called catappa, grows generally in Asia. The fruit is an almond, of pleasant taste, from which an oil somewhat similar to olive oil is extracted.

Another species of country almond produces resinous and aromatic matter, a kind of gum benzoin, which is used in confectionery.

Diced almonds. AMANDES EN DÉS – Blanched, halved almonds cut into large or small dice as required. They are used for sweet dishes and in pâtisserie.

Raw almonds. AMANDES BRUTES – This is the name given in pâtisserie and confectionery to almonds which have simply been taken out of their hard shells but are left unskinned.

The hard-shelled Provençal almonds are the most sought after for pâtisserie. But medium-sized almonds grown in the plains are also in great demand. These often contain quite a high proportion of bitter almonds and are the ones preferred for making almond paste.

The broad and fleshy béarde almonds comprise a smaller percentage of bitter almonds and are generally shredded or ground and used for sprinkling on petits fours, biscuits and sweet dishes.

Tournefort almonds are irregular in shape and very small. Because of their excellent flavour, they are much in demand for the confection of almond paste.

Roasted almonds. AMANDES GRILLÉES – Shred the almonds and dry them in the oven until they turn pale golden.

Salted almonds. AMANDES SALÉES – Toast sweet blanched almonds in the oven until their colour changes to pale yellow, turning once. Sprinkle with a pinch of saffron, red pepper and ginger then fry in butter until golden brown. Drain on a cloth and cool. Finally, coat the almonds with a clear solution of gum arabic and sprinkle with fine salt.

Shredded almonds. AMANDES EFFILÉES – These are used a great deal in pâtisserie and in confectionery. Shredded and roasted almonds are used for coating and garnishing sweet dishes; shredded, unroasted (white) almonds are used for coating petits fours, and in the confection of cooked nougat, Montélimar nougat, petits fours, meringues, almond slices, etc.

There are several very efficient implements for shredding almonds, although the operation can be performed equally well by hand. The almonds should be cut lengthwise and each one shredded into twelve to fifteen pieces. This should be done immediately after blanching and before the almonds are dried. After shredding they should be laid on a metal sheet and dried in a very slow oven or in a warming cupboard. During the drying process they should be turned three times a day. Store in hermetically sealed tins.

Sugared almonds. DRAGÉES – Almonds coated with hard sugar. Sugared almonds (not, strictly speaking, exactly as we know them today, but nevertheless coated with sugar or honey) have a long history. It is said that around the year 177 B.C. a patrician Roman family, the illustrious Fabius family, had the habit of distributing sugared almonds to the populace as a token of rejoicing on the occasion of a birth or marriage in the family. So it is evident that the custom of presenting sugared almonds at the celebration of a birth goes back a very long way.

It is difficult to make sugared almonds at home, and hardly necessary, considering the excellent sugared almonds manufactured commercially. Some are made from windfall almonds; others with hazelnuts or pistachios; others again filled with a few drops of liqueur, chocolate, almond or filbert paste, etc. Verdun sugared almonds are particularly esteemed.

Sweet almonds. AMANDES DOUCES – Sweet almonds are in great demand for pâtisserie and confectionery; all Spanish and Italian almonds are sweet.

Green sweet almonds are greatly esteemed as dessert fruit and are consumed in great quantities. They are less oily and for that reason easier to digest than dry almonds.

Whole almonds. AMANDES ENTÈRES – When a recipe in pâtisserie and confectionery calls for a certain amount of whole almonds, this means blanched almonds and not raw almonds, which are always referred to as raw, meaning with the thin brown skin left on.

ALMONDS, EARTH. AMANDES DE TERRE – These are cyperus tubers, which grow in marshy ground in countries with hot and temperate climates.

These almond-shaped tubers are brown outside, very white inside and extremely starchy. They can either be eaten raw (like hazelnuts) or cooked (like chestnuts). A kind of flour is made from them.

ALOCASIA – Plant indigenous to the Indies of which there are about fifteen known species. The most important of these, a native of Ceylon, has spread throughout most of the Indian subcontinent. There its voluminous roots serve as a food, but only after a prolonged period of cooking.

ALOE. ALOËS – A genus of plants belonging to the family Liliaceae. From the leaves of this plant a purgative gum resin is extracted. Certain species found in Vietnam produce an edible starch.

ALPHEUS. ALPHÉE – A kind of shellfish with a slightly compressed body resembling that of the crayfish. Some species are found in all French coastal waters; others are peculiar to the Mediterranean. Some varieties are confined to the seas of Asia, Australia and America.

Although inferior in quality to the spiny lobster, this shellfish is quite highly esteemed. All methods of preparation given for lobster are applicable to it.

ALSACE – The Alsatian larder is well stocked with numerous and excellent foods. Alsace has a long tradition of good fare so it is not surprising that its gastronomic repertoire is a lengthy one, full of succulent dishes.

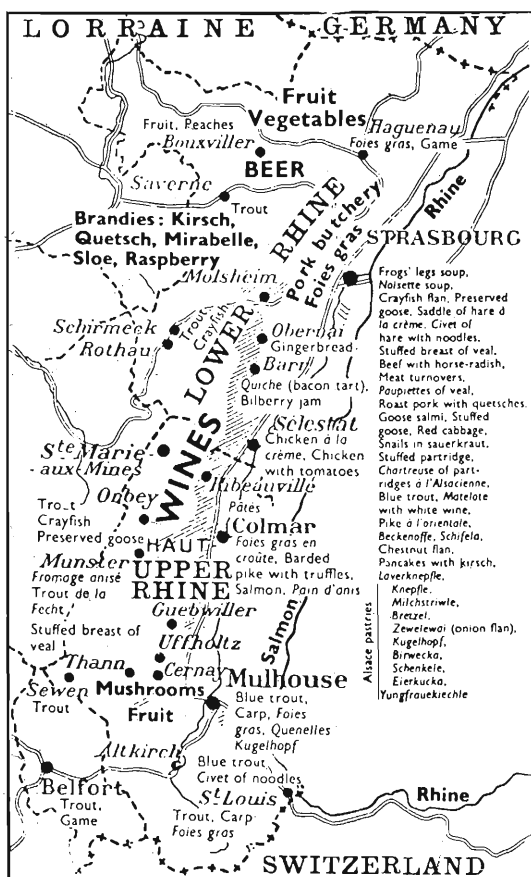

From Strasbourg and Colmar come that source of unending delight to gourmands, the magnificent terrines and pâtés de foies gras truffés, which rival in their delicacy even those of the south-west of France (see PÂTÉS, TERRINES).

The most delectable charcuteries in France are also found in Alsace, and thanks to the quality of the pork shoulder, smoked bacon, saveloy and sausages, the choucroute prepared à la mode strasbourgeoise is more delicious than any others.

But choucroute and foies gras truffés, excellent though they be, are not the only specialties.

Meat in this region is of good quality. Pork is particularly tasty. Seigneur cochon ('the noble pig') holds a place of high honour in Alsace. The Benedictine monks were the first to recognise the advantages of pig breeding.

'The Benedictine monks, who were the first to keep fish ponds, thus laying the basis of pisciculture, were also the first to recognise the advantages of pig breeding,' writes Paul Bouillard in an essay on the cookery of Alsace. In fact, the region produces firm-textured, delicately flavoured, admirable pork. The Strasbourg pork butchers, masters of their art, transform it into a number of preparations which are not only enjoyed by the gourmets of Alsace but in all the best Paris restaurants.

Gastronomic map of Alsace

Alsatian geese are famous for the delicacy of their flesh. It is from these specially fattened geese that the magnificent liver is obtained which the maitres de cuisine in Alsace transform so skilfully into the celebrated pâtés and terrines.

The vegetables of Alsace look good and taste good. And the orchards of Alsace produce delectable fruit of which some, such as quetsches (Alsace plums) and mirabelle plums, are not only delicious to eat fresh but are also used to make noted eaux-de-vie (see SPIRITS). The list would not be complete without mentioning the cherries and the raspberries, which are distilled to make well-known liqueurs. The freshwater fish are renowned, too. Who does not know the succulence of the Rhine salmon, the river trout, the crayfish from the streams of the Vosges; the eels, tench and bream from which delicious matelotes au vin d'Alsace are prepared?

With such raw materials – and we have by no means mentioned all of them – the maitres de cuisine and cordon bleu chefs of Alsace cannot help but cook well. In fact the Alsace meal is a perfect epicurean symphony.

Besides the magnificent choucroute de Strasbourg and pâté de foie gras aux truffes the following are the principal dishes of Alsace, dishes truly representative of the region's superb cuisine:

Culinary specialities – Alsatian potée: matelote of fish de l'Ill; crayfish 'cardinalised in Alsatian wine'; stuffed carp à l'alsacienne; crayfish flan; stuffed breast of veal; hot meat pâté; onion flan or zewelewai; civet of hare with noodles; saddle of hare à la crème; beckenoffe, a kind of estouffade made with mutton, pork and potatoes, which must be cooked in a baker's oven to justify its name; fat geese à l'alsacienne; the schifela, i.e., shoulder of pork with pickled turnips; ham cooked in pastry; fricassée of chicken à l'alsacienne; salmis of goose; turkey with chestnuts; calf's liver fritters; chartreuse of partridges; kalerei, a kind of pork brawn; Strasbourg black puddings, saveloys and sausages; stuffed sucking pig 'à la peau de goret'; red cabbage with chestnuts; potatoes à l'alsacienne; kohl rabi à la crème.

Alsatian charcuterie (pork butchery produce):

1. Little Strasbourg sausages (knackwurst); 2. Savelys; 3. Thann sausage; 4. Metwurst; 5. Black pudding with tongue; 6. Ham sausage (Schinkenwurst); 7. Schwartenmagen; 8. Bierwurst; 9. Veal roll; 10. Schwartzwurst; 11. Strasbourg sausage; 12. Mulhouse sausage; 13. Lyon type sausage made in Strasbourg; 14. Leberwurst; 15. Tongue roll with truffles; 16. Veal roll with foie gras

ALSACIENNE (À L')

noodles à l'alsacienne; knepfle, a kind of fritter; milchstriwle; breitzel; schenkele; beignets de carnaval (carnival fritters); various types of Alsatian tarts; kougloff or kugelhopf; Jewish kouguel; bilberry flan; kaffeekrantz, etc.

Wines – To accompany all these good things, Alsace produces, in addition to a delicious beer, some rare and exceptional wines, which are mostly white.

The decree of 3 October 1962 created the appellation 'Alsace' or 'vin d'Alsace'. This appellation can include the variety of grape. In fact, Alsace wine does not usually bear the name of the locality from which it comes, but of the variety of grape used in its production.

Cépages nobles. Sylvaner. A fresh, fruity wine, best drunk young. Excellent accompaniment for sauerkraut and charcuterie.

Muscat. A wine with a distinct aromatic flavour that is generally served as an apéritif or dessert wine.

Pinot gris (or 'Alsace Tokay'): Quite a full-bodied wine with a delicate bouquet.

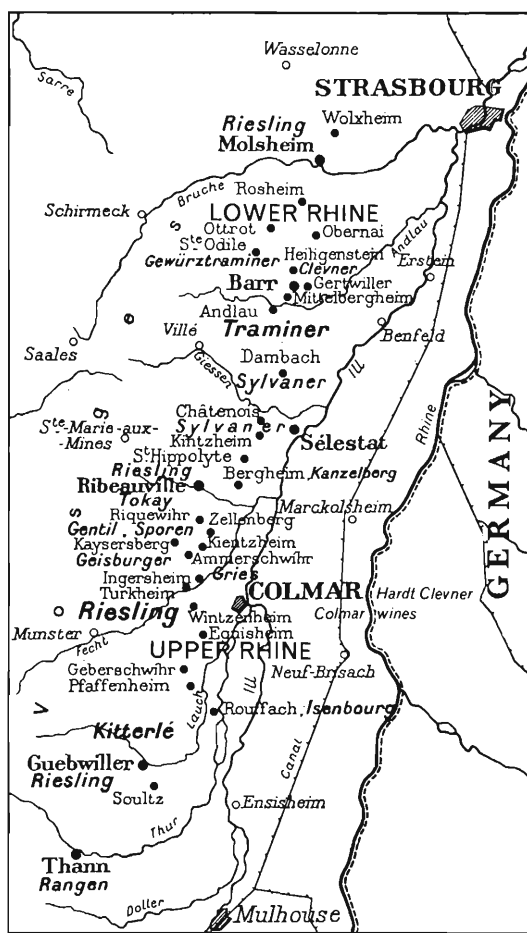

Pinot blanc (or Clevner): A fresh, rather sharp wine, often used for blending.

Gewürztraminer and Traminer. The wine from this grape is very fruity, with a distinctive flavour, and is often drunk well matured.

Riesling. A dry, very elegant wine, full of vigour. Perfect for fish, shellfish and seafood. It also goes well with sauerkraut.

Vines in Alsace (French Government Tourist Office)

Wine map of Alsace

Cépages courants. Chasselas and Knipperlé. Carafe wines. The wine resulting from the blending of cépages nobles and cépages courants is called Zwicker. Edelzwicker is the name given to a blend of cépages nobles.

Red wines and Rosés. The red wines are made from the black Pinot grape, rosé from the grey Pinot grape. Production is poor compared to that of white wine. The name of the locality often accompanies that of the grape. Among the best known are Ammerschwihr, Barr, Eguisheim, Kaysersberg, Kientzheim, Mittelwihr, Ribeauvillé, Riquewihr.

ALSACIENNE (À L') – Definition applying to an enormous number of preparations. The predominating ingredients of dishes thus prepared are sauerkraut, ham and Strasbourg sausage.

ALUM. ALUN – A double sulphate of aluminium and potassium or ammonium; an astringent-tasting salt.

Alum was once used in confectionery to set the colour of crystallised fruits, and in pâtisserie to prevent egg whites from curdling while being whisked. This is now forbidden by law.

ALUMINITE – A kind of alumina-based fireproof porcelain. All porcelains, in fact, are based on alumina silicates, but aluminite has a higher content of alumina (oxide of aluminium) and is consequently much tougher than other porcelains and possesses a far greater resistance to heat.

Aluminite kitchen utensils:

1. Gratin dish; 2. Saucepan; 3. Coffee filter; 4. Sauté pan; 5. Vegetable steamer; 6. Snail dish; 7. Plate; 8. Ramekin; 9. Shell; 10. Soufflé dish

ALUMINIUM – Ductile, resistant metal that looks like silver, its principal characteristic being its extreme lightness.

The numerous properties of aluminium have led to its use in the manufacture of kitchen utensils: saucepans, marmites, stewpans, etc. Conclusive experiments were previously carried out to determine the action various liquids used in the preparation of food had on aluminium.

It has been proved that there is little or no reaction with red or white wine, brandy, pure alcohol, coffee or tea poured in hot, beer, 5 per cent solution of tartaric, acetic, citric, lactic or phenic acids, 3 per cent solution of butyric acid, 0.2 per cent solution of salicylic acid. Nitric acid, on the other hand, attacks the metal vigorously.

AMANITA. AMANITE – A genus of fungi of the agaric group. There are numerous species of amanitae, some edible, others dangerous and even deadly. It is, therefore, very important to learn to recognise them. (See MUSHROOMS.)

AMARANTH. AMARANTE – This plant is cultivated in France mainly for the beauty of its flowers. In Italy, however, the tender leaves of one variety of amaranth are eaten, prepared rather like spinach.

AMBERGRIS. AMBRE GRIS – An intestinal concretion of the sperm whale found floating on the surface of Far Eastern seas. It is a wax-like substance, dotted with yellow and black spots, and possessing a strong and pleasant smell. Used in ancient pharmacopoeia as an antispasmodic, it was also credited with aphrodisiac and restorative properties. Brillat-

Savarin, in a positively ecstatic outpouring, sings the praises of the restorative powers of ambergris chocolate.

This product, which was formerly used in confectionery and in cookery, is today used as a fixative in perfumery.

In Méditation VI Brillat-Savarin refers to ambergris chocolate as the 'chocolate of the afflicted': 'I know that Marshal Richelieu, of glorious memory, constantly chewed ambergris lozenges; as for myself, when I get one of those days when the weight of age makes itself felt, or when one's mind is sluggish, I add a knob of ambergris the size of a bean, pounded with sugar, to a strong cup of chocolate, and I always find my condition improves marvellously. The burden of life becomes lighter, thoughts flow with ease, and I do not suffer from insomnia, which would have been the invariable result of a cup of coffee taken for the same purpose.'

Brillat-Savarin also highly praises the power of ambergris in his Magistères Restaurants.

AMBIGU (Cold collation) – Trévoux Dictionary gives the following definition: 'A mixed collation at which meat and fruit are served together in such a manner as to make one wonder whether it is a simple collation or a supper.'

In other dictionaries the same definition, or nearly the same, is given with the proviso that the dishes served at this kind of meal must be cold.

In his Dictionnaire universel de cuisine, Joseph Favre says that the word ambigu is applicable to a meal which is taken between luncheon and dinner, or between dinner and luncheon, and at which all the dishes, the sweets and the dessert, are served at the same time.

This name should apply specifically to an evening meal, or supper served between midnight and two o'clock in the morning, in the course of a soirée (evening party).

AMBROSIA. AMBROSIE – A kind of tea made from the ambrosier, a bush with sweet-smelling flowers and leaves. It is said to have restorative powers, especially for stomachic complaints.

AMÉLÉON – A French word used in Normandy for a particular kind of cider.

AMERICA – Wines and cuisine. (See WINES, INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.)

AMÉRICAIN (À L') – Name given to various methods of preparing meat, fish, eggs, vegetables. Among these preparations the best-known is Lobster à l'américaine (see LOBSTER).

AMERICAN PARTRIDGE. COLIN – Bird of the partridge family, a little larger than quail, very common in America.

The colin lout, also called American quail (bob-white, Virginian colin) is highly esteemed in the United States, and is now established in England. (For its culinary preparation, see QUAIL, PARTRIDGE.)

AMIENS – This town in Picardy is famous, gastronomically speaking, for its duck pie, its andouillettes and its macaroons.

AMIRAL (À L') – Name given to fish dishes. The characteristic feature of these dishes is their garnish, composed of fried mussels and oysters, crayfish tails and truffles, to which peeled mushrooms are added. The sauce is a Normandy sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER).

AMMAPERDRIX – A variety of the European partridge found in Algeria, Egypt, Israel, India and Persia. It only differs from the red-legged partridge in its size (it is smaller) and in the absence of a tarsal spur. The ammaperdrix likes hiding in rocky places and, like the French partridge, feeds on plants resembling thyme and wild thyme. They are sometimes found wandering about the fields on the Mediterranean coast of France. All methods of preparation given for partridge (q.v.) can be applied to this bird.

AMMOCOETE. AMMOCÈTE – A fish resembling the lamprey, found in the mouth of the Seine.

The methods of preparation given for eel (q.v.) and lamprey (q.v.) are applicable to this fish.

AMMONIA. AMMONIAC – A gaseous compound of nitrogen and hydrogen possessing strong alkaline and caustic properties. This gas affects the breathing and causes sneezing, watering of the eyes, and coughing. It is easily soluble in water, and then constitutes liquid ammonia or volatile alkali (the aqueous solution of ammonia). A few drops of it are recommended in cases of inebriety to induce vomiting.

AMMONIA, CARBONATE OF. AMMONIAQUE, CARBONATE D' – A salt that decomposes under the action of heat into ammonia and carbonic acid (both gaseous) without leaving any residue. It is used in certain preparations under the names of baking powder or Alsatian yeast to render non-fermented dough spongy and porous. The gases, in escaping, occupy a greater volume than the grains of flour, and form vacuoles in the dough. These then disappear completely if the heat of the oven is sufficiently strong.

AMOMUM. AMOME – Perennial herb of the ginger family found in Asia and Africa. The species known under the scientific name of Amomum cardamon produces capsular fruit often called cardamom, which are used as a substitute for real cardamom.

Considerable quantities of amomum are exported from Siam, Singapore and Saigon. In France the seeds are variously known as grains of paradise, Malaguetta pepper, Guinea grains, and are occasionally used as a substitute for pepper.

AMOU – Béarnaise cheese consumed from October to May.

AMOURETTES – Culinary name for the spinal marrow of oxen and calves. Calves' amourettes, very delicate in flavour, are used as a filling for patties, hot timbales, pies, vol-au-vent, etc.

Amourettes can also be prepared as an independent dish, made into croquettes, and various fried dishes, etc.

Most of the recipes given for calves' and lambs' brains – which amourettes rather resemble – can be applied to them.

No matter how amourettes are prepared, they should first be boiled in court-bouillon (q.v.) in the same way as calves' and lambs' brains (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS).

AMPHICLES – Celebrated cook of ancient Greece. More than any of his colleagues of that distant epoch, Amphicles deserves to be rescued from oblivion. He alone recognised all that was barbarous and foolishly ostentatious in the culinary methods of his time, and in his teachings, and in practice, he devoted himself to the task of bringing to them a saner logic. 'Amphicles liked to prepare nature's products simply. He had a hare cooked on a spit and served underdone with nothing but a sprinkling of coriander and fennel. He maintained that a sucking pig should simply be boiled and placed on a bed of sage. He wrapped larks in vine leaves and red mullet in fig leaves and cooked them among the cinders. No-one knew better than he how to harmonise a piece of flesh and an aromatic. No-one disapproved more than he did of the practice of disguising the flavour of a meat or vegetable. This friend of Theotime even used spices sparingly in his sauces. Where his predecessors indiscriminately mixed the most ill-assorted condiments together, where his emulators, whimsical to excess, lavished twenty ingredients on a single dish, Amphicles confined himself to two or three.'

Our reason for dwelling on this ancient maitre de cuisine is simply to remind more modern practitioners of the art that culinary merit does not necessarily lie in the extravagance of the trimmings.

AMPHITRYON (Host) – Authors of gastronomical books (such as Brillat-Savarin, Grimod de la Reynière, Berchoux, Monselet and Chavette) and most dictionaries define the word as 'the one with whom we dine'. According to Molière:

'The real Amphitryon
Is mine host with whom I dine.'

All the gastronomical writers have laid down precepts on the relationships of hosts and guests. The most famous of these works is the Manuel des amphitryons by Grimod de la Reynière.

In more recent times Auguste Michel has devoted a whole book full of useful hints to 'the man who receives at his table' concerning his rôle of host, entitled Manuel des amphitryons au debut du XX<sup>e</sup> siècle.

Strictly speaking, the word amphitryon only means host, and applies, and should only apply, to the person who entertains someone at his table.

We find it difficult to imagine what a host was like in ancient times. One of the most celebrated amphitryons, historical or legendary, was Lucullus. He can be taken as a model of amphitryons, for he offered his guests truly magnificent feasts.

Terracotta amphorae for storing oil or wine

Historians have given us accounts of the lavishness of Maecenas' table; he, too, is described as a great master of the art of entertaining. Heliogabalus was another renowned for the extraordinary luxury of his table. Then there were the three men of the name Apicius in ancient Rome (see APICIUS).

Let us not forget Assurbanipal, even though he belongs to legend rather than to history. He was one of the most ostentatious of the Assyrian kings – none other than the legendary Sardanapalus.

Belshazzar, too, must have been an amphitryon on a grand scale, because even today, when describing a truly magnificent banquet, we still say that it was 'a veritable Belshazzar's feast'.

'For a rich man,' writes Grimod de la Reynière, 'the best rôle in the world is that of host.'

Berchoux, for his part, says:

*'S'il est un rôle noble et bien digne d'envie,
C'est celui d'un mortel qui fait en sa maison,
Les honneurs de sa table en digne amphitryon.'*

'If there is a noble rôle, a truly enviable one,
It is that of a mortal who in his house does
The honours of his table like a true amphitryon.'

Barras, Cambacérès and Talleyrand were distinguished amphitryons. Napoleon said of Cambacérès: 'If you wish to eat really well, go and visit my arch-chancellor.' Other tables were renowned for the quality of their food, although some, like that of Princess Mathilde, for their mediocrity. The disappearance of great wealth, the servant problem, the habit of entertaining in restaurants, have pushed amphitryonism to the background. But there are still houses where great pains are taken to ensure the bonheur gourmand of the guests.

AMPHORA. AMPHORE – A terracotta vase used in ancient times for measuring liquids. The capacity of the Italic amphora, that of the Romans, was 25·89 litres. An amphora kept in the Capitol served as a standard measure. The Attic amphora, that of the Greeks, was a third larger. Amphorae were used to store oil, wine, olives and raisins.

The amphora was sessilis or non sessilis according to whether it stood upright on its base or terminated in a rounded point. In the latter case it was placed in a hole in the ground or on a specially constructed pierced shelf.

AMYGDALINE – Chemical name for the substance that makes the oil of bitter almonds noxious. Amygdalin is the term applied to all substances, cakes or sweets, that contain almonds.

ANAEMIA. ANÉMIE – Anaemia is characterised by a diminution of the red corpuscles of the blood. Persons suffering from anaemia are said to be anaemic.

Diet for anaemics – Iron being the principal medicine for anaemic conditions, dieticians introduce as many iron-rich foods into the diet as possible. These are yolk of egg, meat, pig's blood, etc. (animal origin); green cabbage, spinach, chicory, oats, lentils, white haricot beans, carrots, etc. (vegetable origin); also red wine. It is naturally advisable, before following such a diet, to take into account the condition of the digestive organs, since they are usually deficient. This is the reason why, for example, pig's blood, although rich in iron, can rarely be used. This diet has recently been modified following research carried out by an American scholar, Dr. Whipple, who has proved both experimentally and in practice that calf's liver is the food that best assures the regeneration of the blood; kidneys, hearts and meat also react well, but less effectively. The efficacy of preparations based on dehydrated stomach, usually prescribed in pharmaceutical form, has also been recognised.

Whipple's diet consists of a daily ration of 150–250 g. (5–9 oz.) calf's liver eaten for breakfast or lunch, a little meat, fresh vegetables chosen from those rich in iron, fruit (peaches, apples, etc.). Bread, starch products, eggs and sugar are restricted; oils and fats are forbidden apart from a little fresh butter; skimmed milk is generally allowed. The liver has preferably to be eaten raw, especially for grave forms of pernicious anaemia.

There are various recipes for the preparation of raw or cooked liver.

Raw liver. Slice the liver, then mince it. The resulting pulp should be free from all stringy tissues.

Serve it in sandwiches, or mixed with preserves, or with warm beef tea to form a purée.

There is even a recipe for liver cocktail. Pound about 100 g. (4 oz.) lightly cooked liver. Place on lettuce leaves, and season with salt and pepper. Add a slice of raw tomato, chopped parsley and a little mustard. Prepare  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup tomato sauce,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup lemon juice, 2 coffeespoons Worcestershire sauce,  $\frac{1}{2}$  coffeespoon finely chopped shallots, salt and pepper.

ANAGNOST

Mix 1 part of minced or grated liver to  $2\frac{1}{2}$  parts of this mixture, shake and chill.

Calf's liver au gratin. Blanch and dice 450 g. (1 lb.) calf's liver, and place it on a buttered plate. Cover with bread-crumbs, white sauce and pulped tomatoes. Season with salt and pepper and brown in the oven. A little ham and chopped parsley may be added.

Liver balls. Blanch and pound 450 g. (1 lb.) liver with 2 rashers of fat bacon. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cream, 1 chopped onion, 2 eggs (or the yolks only), and stale or fresh breadcrumbs until of a consistency to form into rather large balls. Bake these in the oven.

Liver cream. Mix  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup pounded liver with 1 egg, well beaten, and season with salt and pepper. Thin with milk, pour into a bain-marie, and place in the oven until set.

Raw liver vinaigrette. Cut raw liver into small pieces and season with vinegar, onion, parsley and chervil.

ANAGNOST. ANAGNOSTE – Name given by the Romans to the slave whose job it was to read during meals.

The custom dates from the time of the Emperor Claudius, although nowadays it hardly exists, except in some nunneries and monasteries.

Not so long ago, however, there was an anagnoste in each of the French educational establishments run by the Church. He was considered a privileged person. His meals were served to him after his companions had left the table, and he was usually given a wider choice and more copious portions of food. The post was much sought after by the pupils.

ANALECT. ANALECTE – Name given to the slave whose duty it was to collect the remains of a Roman meal. History does not relate what happened to these left-overs; they were probably neatened into acceptable portions, artistically arranged, and sold in special markets. (See ARLEQUINS.)

ANALEPTIC. ANALEPTIQUE – Whatever builds up and restores exhausted forces. Term applied to light foods which are easy to digest and which quickly produce a sensation of well-being. Full-bodied wines, beef tea, meat jellies, tapioca and chocolate are all analeptics.

ANALYSIS. ANALYSE – Scientific term for the separation of the whole into its component parts. The various constituents of food have often been scientifically analysed.

ANAPHYLAXIS. ANAPHYLAXIE – Word created by Professor C. Richet to define the curious phenomenon discovered by him: that certain poisons increase rather than diminish the sensitiveness of an organism to their action.

A minimal dose of poison given to a non-sensitised animal has no serious effects, while alarming effects are produced in an animal that has previously been given a non-fatal dose of the same poison.

This is especially true after internal injections. It also explains the disorders that occur after the ingestion of certain foods.

Food anaphylaxis – Some people, following the ingestion of certain foods such as bread, eggs, milk, honey, chocolate, etc., are subject either to skin eruptions, often of the nettle-rash kind, or to a respiratory disorder akin to asthma, or to severe headaches.

The desensitisation treatment is a delicate one and belongs entirely to the realm of medicine.

ANCHOVY. ANCHOIS – Small sea fish, 15 cm. (6 inches) long. Its back is a beautiful green colour which later turns a dark greenish blue, then almost black, all of which helps the buyer to determine its freshness. It can be distinguished from the sardine by its projecting snout, and large mouth, which stretches almost to the gills.

Preparation of anchovies (after a drawing by J Houel)

The anchovy has long been appreciated as a food. It is mentioned in the works of Elien and Aristotle, and its viscera are used in the making of garum (q.v.), which the Greeks and Romans called 'the most precious sauce'.

Anchovies have a very delicate flavour when fresh, but can only be eaten fresh in the countries where they are caught. When fried they are much tastier than gudgeon or smelt. The best anchovies come from the Mediterranean coast from Nice to Catalonia, and are very large in that region.

Anchovy fillets, prepared at home or industrially, are used in many dishes, hot and cold; in pizza, for example.

Method of preparation. Cut the head off and clean out the inside. Wipe the fish without pressing too hard, as the flesh is very delicate.

Perhaps the best and most popular method of cooking fresh anchovies is frying them in olive oil. When they are large, all the recipes given for cooking fresh sardines (q.v.) can be applied to anchovies.

Anchovy is mostly prepared in brine, and is found in this form in all the markets of Europe. It can also be preserved in oil, or pickled.

Anchovies à la silésienne. ANCHOIS À LA SILÉSIEUNNE – Fillet 6 fresh anchovies and leave them to soak for half-an-hour in white wine.

Soak the soft roes of 2 salted herring in water, and rub them through a fine sieve. Add 2 teaspoons finely chopped shallot mixed with chopped parsley. Thin down this purée with the white wine in which the anchovies were soaked.

Spread the mixture in an hors-d'œuvre dish, and arrange the anchovy fillets on it in a criss-cross pattern. Surround the fillets with a border of mixed salad composed of boiled potatoes and tart apples, cut into small dice and well seasoned. Garnish with sprigs of parsley and thin slices of lemon and beetroot. Just before serving, sprinkle with olive oil.

Anchovy canapés. CANAPÉS AUX ANCHOIS – Cut anchovy fillets in small pieces and arrange them on long slices of bread which have had the crusts removed and been spread with a light coating of Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER). Chop (separately) the yolks and whites of hard-boiled eggs, and some parsley; arrange little heaps of these between the pieces of anchovy. Garnish with curly parsley.

Anchovy

Anchovy canapés

Anchovy fillets. FILETS D'ANCHOIS – Desalt the anchovies and trim them (that is, remove bones and skin). Wipe these fillets with a cloth and cut into 2 or 3 strips lengthwise. (Canned fillets may be used.)

Arrange the fillet strips decoratively in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Garnish with yolks and whites of hard-boiled eggs, chopped separately, and chopped parsley and capers. Sprinkle the fillets with a few tablespoons of olive oil.

The arrangement of anchovy fillets in porcelain, cut-glass or silver hors-d'œuvre dishes lends itself to a variety of artistic expression. Slices of lemon, quartered lettuce hearts, small gherkins cut in various shapes, beetroot cut in rounds or crescents, etc., can also be added to the ingredients mentioned above.

Anchovy fillets à la suédoise. FILETS D'ANCHOIS À LA SUÉDOISE – Arrange the anchovy fillets, prepared in the usual manner, on a foundation of salad composed of tart red apples and cooked beetroot, cut in small dice, seasoned with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper.

Surround this salad with a garnish of little bunches of parsley, yolks and whites of hard-boiled eggs, and cooked truffles, all chopped separately and arranged in individual groups. Sprinkle with a few tablespoons of oil.

Anchovy toast. TOASTS AUX ANCHOIS – Garnish lightly toasted pieces of bread with fillets of anchovies. Sprinkle them with breadcrumbs which have been fried in butter, and brown in the oven for a few minutes.

Fried anchovies. ANCHOIS FRITS – Clean and prepare fresh anchovies. Dip them in milk, drain them, and roll them in flour, keeping the fish separate as far as possible.

Fry them in very hot fat. Drain, and sprinkle with fine, dry salt. Pile them on a heated plate and garnish with fried parsley and lemon quarters.

Medallions of anchovy à la niçoise. MEDAILLONS D'ANCHOIS À LA NIÇOISE – Spread slices of crustless bread with butter that has been mixed with thick tomato purée. Put a slice of hard-boiled egg on each slice, and a rolled fillet of anchovy on the egg.

Garnish these medallions with stoned black olives, and sprinkle with a little chopped parsley. Arrange them on a paper doyley, and add a further garnish of curly parsley.

Portuguese anchovy fillets. FILETS D'ANCHOIS PORTUGAISE – Prepare desalted anchovies in fillets, and cut them into thin strips. Canned fillets may be used.

Prepare a fondue of tomatoes (see TOMATO), cooked lightly in oil, and put it in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Arrange the fillets in a criss-cross pattern on top of the fondue. Decorate with capers, chopped parsley, slices of peeled lemon, and sprinkle with a few tablespoons of olive oil.

Preserved anchovies. CONSERVE D'ANCHOIS – This must be made with freshly caught anchovies. Remove the heads, the gall-bladders and intestines by pressing with the thumb. Put the anchovies in layers into a small barrel with salt mixed with red ochre or powdered brick; the proportions are 6 kg. (12 lb.) salt to 500 g. (1 lb.) powdered brick. The layers of anchovies should be 6 cm. (2½ inches) thick, each layer separated from the next by a 2-cm. (¾-inch) layer of the mixed salt and brick dust.

When the barrel is full, put on the lid, which must have a hole pierced in the middle. Pour a concentrated solution of sea salt on the anchovies through this hole. Leave the barrel in the sun, with a brick over the hole in the lid. The heat of the sun produces fermentation which preserves the fish and ensures their keeping quality, and the brick over the hole prevents the brine from evaporating.

When the degree of fermentation is considered sufficient, remove the brick and put a cork in the hole in the lid.

Anchovies preserved in brine can be used as hors-d'œuvre and for other preparations.

Rolled anchovies à la Talleyrand. PAUPIETTES D'ANCHOIS À LA TALLEYRAND – Trim and flatten the fillets. Stuff them with a purée made of pickled tunny (tuna fish) mixed with finely chopped truffles and bound with a tablespoon of mayonnaise.

Arrange the stuffed and rolled anchovies on thick slices of hard-boiled egg. Put them on an hors-d'œuvre dish and surround them with a chiffonade (q.v.) of finely shredded lettuce. Decorate with slices of lemon and beetroot, and sprinkle with olive oil.

Rolled anchovies à la tartare. PAUPIETTES D'ANCHOIS À LA TARTARE – Trim and flatten anchovy fillets. Stuff them with a purée of grated horseradish which has been kneaded with butter. Put the rolled anchovies on rather thick slices of cooked beetroot (cut with fluted cutters) and arrange them on an hors-d'œuvre dish. Decorate with chopped hard-boiled eggs and capers, and sprinkle with olive oil.

Rolled anchovies with hard-boiled eggs. PAUPIETTES D'ANCHOIS AUX OEUFS DURS – Trim the anchovy fillets and shape them into rolls (canned or bottled anchovies may be used).

Arrange them in an hors-d'œuvre dish, decorate with chopped hard-boiled eggs, parsley and capers, and sprinkle with olive oil.

Soused anchovies. ANCHOIS MARINÉS – Clean 450 g. (1 lb.) fresh anchovies. Lay them on a plate, sprinkle with salt, and leave to sousé for 2 hours.

Dry the anchovies, and fry them in smoking hot oil just long enough to stiffen them. Drain, put them into an earthenware dish, and cover with a marinade prepared in the following manner:

Heat the oil in which the anchovies were cooked (adding 5 or 6 tablespoons of fresh oil). Fry a finely sliced medium-sized onion and a sliced carrot in the oil. Add 3 unpeeled cloves of garlic, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) vinegar, and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) water. Season with fine salt, and add a sprig of thyme, 3 sprigs parsley,  $\frac{1}{2}$  bay leaf and  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon crushed peppercorns.

Boil for 10 minutes. Pour the mixture, still boiling, on the anchovies. Leave to sousé for 24 hours.

Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish garnished with slices of lemon.

ANCHOYADE (Provençal cookery) – A preparation based on anchovy paste. Pound the anchovies in a mortar, add olive oil and a few drops of vinegar. Spread this paste on slices of home-made bread, and sprinkle with finely chopped onion, chopped hard-boiled egg, and a little olive oil. Brown in the oven.

Anchoyade à la niçoise – Add chopped shallot and parsley to anchovy paste, moisten with olive oil, and spread this mixture on slices of toast, or bread fried in oil until golden brown. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs mixed with chopped parsley and garlic, and then with olive oil. Brown in the oven.

ANCIENNE (À L') – Name given to preparations treated according to the precepts of the old school. These dishes were usually mixed garnishes, and braised beef slowly simmered for a long time. The most characteristic type is Rump of beef à l'ancienne (see BEEF).

The term also applies to dishes such as pastry shells baked blind (empty) and filled with ragoûts of cocks' combs and kidneys, or quenelles of truffles and mushrooms. (For Chicken à l'ancienne mode see CHICKEN, and for Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads à l'ancienne see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

The term à l'ancienne also applies to blanquettes (q.v.) and fricassées (q.v.) of lamb, veal and chicken treated in a special way.

ANDALOUSE (À L') – Name given to different preparations characterised mainly by tomatoes, sweet pimentos and sometimes chipolata sausages, aubergines and rice pilaf. (See EGGS, Eggs à l'andalouse; CHICKEN, Chicken à l'andalouse.)

ANDOUILLE – A large pig intestine filled with strips of chitterlings and stomach of the same animal. These popular sausages are generally served cold, as an hors-d'œuvre. (See PORK.)

Large smoked andouilles such as those of Vire and Guéméné are sold ready-cooked, and should be served thinly sliced.

Vire and Guéméné andouille (Larousse)

ANDOUILLETES (Chitterlings) – Andouillettes are prepared like andouilles, but smaller intestines are used. There are many varieties, differing for the most part in the spices used in their composition. Some are made à la ficelle (old method); the tripe is cut lengthwise into strips. Others are stuffed with diced or minced tripe.

One of the most exclusive of gastronomic societies, comprising only five branches, is the Association amicale des amateurs d'authentiques andouillettes (A.A.A.A.A.) – 'Society of lovers of authentic andouillettes'. A diploma from this society is much sought after. Its members have opportunities to discuss at length the comparative merits of the andouillettes of Troyes, Arras, Cambrai, Paris, Fleurie in Beaujolais, Aubagne, Lourdes, etc.

Andouillettes, like andouilles, are sold ready poached and cooled. All that needs to be done is to slit the skin and grill them gently.

It is a mistake to serve fried vegetables with andouillettes. The A.A.A.A.A. has experimented with creamed potatoes, fried onions, raw red cabbage, creamed celery, lentils, red beans, vegetables au gratin, stewed apples, etc., but total agreement has been reached on only one point: andouillettes require a good strong mustard.

Andouillettes à la lyonnaise – Slit the andouillettes and cook them in lard or butter. When two-thirds done, add a finely chopped onion previously lightly cooked in lard or butter. Simmer until done. When ready to serve, add a tablespoon of chopped parsley and a tablespoon of vinegar.

ANDROPOGON (Vlue grass) – A genus of plant of the Gramineae family. Numerous species of it are known, one of which is the sugar cane. Several of the plants are used for infusion, like tea.

ANECDOTES (Historic, gastronomic and culinary) – A convalescent Pompey was advised by his physician that his recovery would be hastened by following a diet of thrushes. When his servants returned with the news that it was impossible to find any in the height of summer except at the home of Lucullus, the invalid turned to his physician and remarked, 'What's this? Does Pompey's survival depend upon the fact that Lucullus is a glutton?' (Les Classiques de la table)

Le duc de Duras, seeing Descartes tucking into a good meal one day, remarked jestingly, 'What ho! Do philosophers have a use for such delicacies?'

'Why not?' retorted Descartes. 'Do you imagine that Nature produced the good things of the earth simply for the ignorant?' (Panckoucke)

It is well known that Mme. de Maintenon was extremely poor at the time of her first marriage. One evening while she was entertaining some people at supper and had no roast to offer, her lackey, a witty fellow of some spirit, sidled up to his mistress, who was entertaining the company with her charmingly witty conversation, and whispered, 'Madame, one more story, and no one will notice that you have no roast for supper.' (La Beaumelle)

The food was very bad at Mme. d'Aligre's house and much discussed. 'Really,' remarked M. de Lauraguais, 'if one did not eat one's own bread as well as one's neighbour's, here one would die of hunger.' (Grimm, Correspondance)

One day Admiral Russel invited the officers and crews of his fleet to drink punch with him. He had a marble basin specially constructed for the occasion in the middle of a magnificent garden, into which he ordered to be poured six hundred bottles of Cognac (brandy), six hundred bottles of rum, twelve hundred bottles of Malaga, four tons of boiling water, the juice of two thousand six hundred lemons, six hundred pounds of the best Lisbon sugar and two hundred grated nutmegs. A young man representing Hebe rowed round the basin in a small mahogany boat, filling the cups of more than six thousand drinkers seated in an amphitheatre of benches round the basin. (Ivrogiana)

Heliogabalus used to entertain his parasites to meals of grass, and was wont to cover his table with embroidered or tapestry tablecloths upon which were worked all the dishes that ought to have appeared at the different courses. At other times he tantalised their gaze with paintings of various foods, seemingly offering them everything they could wish for, yet leaving them ravenously hungry. (Lampride)

M. le président B. gave a regular weekly dinner; splendid table, fine wines, cuisine worthy of an archbishop, and wit worthy of a member of l'Académie française 'of the forty-first chair'. An old and faithful servant was put in charge of the cellar, and was also commissioned to offer the various wines to the guests. He acquitted himself of this task with a discreet and dignified air, though intonations of an amorous tabby-cat crept into his voice each time he announced the name and the patent of nobility of these great wines – the glory of France. He announced with particular fervour a certain vin de fond. When he said 'Vin de fond' he gave the impression that he was rolling it around in his mouth, so that even the least enthusiastic of the gourmets allowed his glass to be filled. However, this wine, so brilliantly presented, gave little pleasure to those who tasted it. As a rule they pulled wry faces while drinking vin de fond.

'Tell me, what is this vin de fond?' Mme. la présidente B. asked her sommelier one day. 'Is there much of it in the cellar?'

'Madame,' replied the servant with an air of mystery, 'there is enough to last for ever.'

'Ah!' said Mme. de B., still looking perplexed.

'It is quite simple,' continued the sommelier. 'I make it myself from the dregs of the bottles. It is quite good enough for people who are prepared to drink without knowing what they are drinking and who cannot tell the difference between a Clos-Vougeot and a Bordeaux-Lafite.'

From that day onwards the vin de fond disappeared from the table of M. le président B. (J. Richard, l'Epoque)

The man with the most voracious appetite in history was the Emperor Maximin, successor of Alexander Severus (Marcus Aurelius). He went to the extent of consuming (at an ordinary meal) forty pounds of meat and an amphora of wine; that is to say, according to some, twenty-eight French pints; according to others, thirty-six. (Encyclopédie méthodique)

Note. A pint in Paris was 0.93 of a litre.

The landlord of a village inn had the honour of serving George II with an egg on an occasion that he broke his journey there, and asked one guinea in payment.

His Majesty smilingly remarked:

'It seems eggs are rather scarce hereabouts.'

'Oh no, sire,' replied the innkeeper, 'not the eggs – the kings.'

Oh, happy and unhappy cooks! A most factious and detestable race, according to Hegesender.

The Athenian government gave the freedom of the city to a certain Cherips because his father had invented an excellent truffled ragoût.

Anthony, well pleased with a dinner, presented a town to his cook.

President Henault made the following remark about Mme. du Deffand's cook whose cuisine was far too unrefined and uninspired for a gastronome of his calibre: 'The difference between her and la Brinvilliers is in their intention.'

By skillful grafting a gardener from Montreuil succeeded in propagating a most exquisite variety of peach. He desired to present the fruit in homage to Louis XVIII, but before exposing himself to a test upon which his reputation so much depended, he decided to visit M.P.R. The latter, stretched out in his armchair, legs crossed and hands clasped, prepared himself in gentle contemplation to deliver the important verdict that was expected of him. The gardener requested a plate with a silver knife. He cut the precious peach in quarters, speared one of these with the point of the knife and gravely pushed it into M.P.R.'s mouth, saying, 'Taste the juice!' His eyes closed, M.P.R. tasted the juice without uttering a word. The gardener observed him, his eyes clouded with anxiety. After an interval of two or three minutes, those of his mentor opened. 'Good, very good, my friend,' were the only words he had time to utter. Immediately, the second quarter was advanced like the first, and the gardener, in a firmer, more confident tone, commanded, 'Taste the flesh'. There followed the same silence, the same gravity on the part of the learned gourmet. This time the movement of his mouth was more pronounced, for he was chewing. At last he nodded his head. 'Ah, very good, very good!' You are going to think that the superiority of the peach had been judged and that no more remained to be said? Not at all! The third slice followed in its turn. 'Savour the aroma!' continued the gardener. The aroma was found to be worthy of the juice and the flesh. Whereupon the gardener drew himself up to his full height to present the last quarter. His face, slightly flushed, glowed with pride and satisfaction: 'Taste the whole!' His triumph was complete. M.P.R. tasted it, and came towards him moist-eyed and smiling. He grasped his hand effusively. 'Ah, my friend, it is perfect! I offer you my heartfelt compliments.'

Fontenelle dined each night at one of a number of elegant houses, a fact that caused Piron to remark upon seeing the doyen of the Académie passing his window one day accompanied by his retinue: 'That is the first time I have seen M. de Fontenelle leave home without intending to dine out!'

Artaxerxes, king of Persia, having been defeated in battle, was constrained to eat dried figs and barley bread during the retreat. He found this rough fare excellent. 'O ye gods,' he exclaimed, 'what pleasure I have denied myself up to now by being over-fastidious in my tastes!'

Montmaur was eating one day with a large, noisy company of coughing and singing friends. 'Hey there, gentlemen!' he called out, 'A little silence, pray, else how are we to know what we are eating.' (Menagiana)

Marshal Albert immediately felt ill if wild boar or sucking pig appeared on the table.

Erasmus had only to smell fish to become feverish.

When anyone placed apples near Duchesne, secretary to François I, blood poured from his nose.

According to Furetière, in the chapter devoted to large appetites:

'I have seen one man eat a loin of veal, a capon, a brace of woodcock and a mountain of bread without any help.'

'The ballet dancer Aglais, who lived two hundred or so years before Christ, was so greedy that for supper she would eat ten pounds of meat, and a dozen loaves of bread, and drink the equivalent of six pints of wine.'

'The Emperor Claudius Albinus one day ate for lunch five hundred figs, a hundred peaches, ten melons, a hundred beccaficchi, forty-eight oysters and many grapes.'

'The athlete Milon of Crotonia ate a whole ox after having carried it for a considerable length of time on his shoulders.

'The Emperor Maximin became so fat through over-eating that he used his wife's bracelets as rings.

'An actor by the name of Phagon ate, in the presence of the Emperor Aurelius: a wild boar, a sheep, a hundred round loaves of bread, and a sucking pig. He washed it down with twenty-four measures of wine.' (Les Classiques de la table)

A FEW GOURMANDS. QUELQUES GOURMANDS –

Louis XIII – He was excellent at preparing eggs and did so in a variety of ways: perdus, poached in black butter, hard-boiled and chopped up with bacon (one of his inventions), etc. He also larded loins of beef magnificently, using his own vermeil larding needle.

Mme. de Maintenon – She was adept at preparing dainty dishes for the king (still of good appetite despite his advancing years). Her particular speciality was dressed cutlets seasoned with parsley, which she wrapped in buttered paper and grilled. In other words cutlets en papillote.

Mme. de Conti – She invented the method of preparing loin of mutton that bears her name, while Mme. de Sévigné had a talent for preparing waffles.

Louis XV – He loved to make his own coffee, and invented an omelette of asparagus tips for Mme. du Barry.

Louis XVI – Like his grandfather, Louis XIV, he had the sort of appetite nothing could upset; the very evening before the opening of his trial he ate six cutlets, a chicken and several eggs.

Balzac (Honoré de) – Even if he did not always eat his fill (because he happened to be working) Balzac had by nature an astonishing capacity of absorption. And the menu he ordered for himself alone at Very's one day was not exceptional:

Hors-d'œuvre
Eight dozen Ostend oysters
Twelve pré-salé mutton cutlets au naturel
A duckling with turnips
A brace of roast partridges
A Normandy sole Sweet Fruit
Coffee and liqueurs

Whereupon he slept for two hours, drank some coffee and worked the whole night until seven or eight o'clock in the morning.

Victor Hugo – The great poet was a real guzzler, especially late in life: he not only ate a cutlet, but the bone as well, crunching it loudly between his powerful jaws. Sometimes, to amuse his grandchildren after a meal, he would have all the left-overs brought in: ragoût, fish, vegetables and dessert. These he put with seasoning into a large salad bowl and ate, sharing the dish with the enraptured children. He called the concoction 'daubs'.

Lamartine – A thin man who only liked ice cream.

Stendhal – A fat man with a penchant for macaroni.

Théophile Gautier – A delicate palate who did not allow himself to be deceived. It was he who, at the Russian court, observed to the chef that his almond gâteau (which everyone else adored) was nothing more nor less than pounded macaroons.

Zola – He had a fondness for shellfish although he called them 'filth'.

Renan – Invited one day to a house where the hostess desired that each guest in turn should contribute to the conversation, Renan persistently tried to intervene during the course of the meal. At last the mistress of the house turned to him and said, 'Now, Master Renan, it's your turn.'

'Oh Madame,' said Renan, 'all I wanted was a second helping of peas.'

ANETHOLE. ANÉTHOL – Compound of a hydro-carbon (resembling oil of turpentine) and a certain crystallisable substance possessing a strong anise-like odour.

The essences of anise, fennel, Chinese anise and tarragon are mainly formed of anethole.

It is used for flavouring sweets, sweet dishes, and various liqueurs.

ANETHUM. ANETH – See FENNEL.

ANGEL CAKE – See CAKE.

ANGEL FISH (Squatina squatina). ANGE DE MER – A kind of dog fish, with a large, flattened body; the pectoral and ventral fins seeming to continue the lateral line of the body in all its thickness. The tail is big and rounded, while the back is covered with a rough brownish-green skin marked with small whitish and grey spots. The belly is whitish. Angel fish is the intermediary type between the family of sharks and that of ray and skates. On the French coasts, where it abounds, the fishermen call this fish angelot or angel.

The flesh of the angel fish is quite delicate and recalls that of the ray. All methods of preparation given for the latter are applicable to angel fish.

ANGELICA. ANGÉLIQUE – A genus of plants of the family Umbelliferae, of which the prototype is generally known under the common name of angelica, angelic herb. It is a large perennial herb usually grown as a biennial. In appearance it closely resembles cow parsley.

Angelica archangelica grows wild in the Alps, in the Pyrenees and in northern Europe. It has long been valued as a stomachic, carminative and anti-spasmodic stimulant. Today it is cultivated mostly for the sake of its roots and stalks.

The fresh stalks, candied in sugar, make a pleasant preserve called Niort angelica, or Nevers angelica, or Château-briand angelica. It is used by confectioners and wine and spirit merchants.

The roots, which come principally from Bohemia, are wrinkled, grey outside and white inside. They are deceptive to the palate: sweet at first, producing an acrid and bitter after-taste.

The roots also contain a volatile oil, angelicine, angelic acid, tannin, malic acid, pectic acid, the malates, etc. They possess very strong digestive and anti-dyspeptic properties. It is for this reason that they are used in the production of meliss cordials and other liqueurs such as chartreuse, vespetro, gin and English bitters.

Angelica liqueur. LIQUEUR ANGÉLIQUE – Put 1 kg. (2½ lb.) angelica stalks, cut into small pieces, and 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) brandy, in a bottling jar. Macerate for a month. See that the jar is hermetically sealed. Expose it to the sun whenever possible.

Add from 600 to 800 g. (1½ to 1¾ lb.) lump sugar dissolved in very little water. Press the whole through a silk or fine muslin sieve. Leave to stand for a few hours, then filter the liqueur through soft paper.

Decant into bottles, cork and seal.

Candied angelica. ANGÉLIQUE CONFITE – Cut the angelica stalks into 15- to 20-cm. (6- to 8-inch) pieces and soak in cold water.

Plunge them into a pan of boiling water until the pulp begins to give slightly when pressed with the fingers. Cool under a cold tap, drain and peel, taking care to remove all stringy parts.

Macerate in a syrup of 1 cup sugar to 1 cup water for 24 hours.

Drain. Boil the syrup to 102°C. (215°F.) and pour it over the pieces of angelica.

Repeat this operation three days running. On the fourth day cook the syrup to small pearl, i.e. 105°C. (221°F.). Put angelica into this syrup and bring it to the boil several times.

Remove the pan from the fire and let it stand.

Drain the pieces of angelica on a sieve. Lay them on a marble slab, sprinkle with fine sugar and put them to dry in a very slow oven. Store in tins.

Niort angelica à la sybarite. ANGÉLIQUE DE NIORT À LA SYBARITE – Have ready a dozen or so best quality butter brioches (kept hot), a fruit dish filled with sticks of candied angelica, a bottle of angelica cream, a carafe of iced water, a packet of Egyptian cigarettes.

Light a cigarette, sip a mouthful of iced water, crunch a piece of Niort angelica with a piping hot bite of brioche, sip, breathe and savour a few drops of angelica liqueur, and then repeat the whole process.

If, according to Austin de Croze, to whom we owe this recipe, the room is sprayed with a fresh, light perfume (verbena or southernwood) one can have an idea of the blessed joys of sybaritism.

ANGELS ON HORSEBACK (English cookery). ANGES À CHEVAL – This hot hors-d'œuvre is prepared in the following manner. Take plump oysters out of their shells, drain their liquor and remove their beards, and wrap each one in a very thin rasher of bacon. Thread them on little metal skewers, season with salt and pepper, and grill. Arrange on fingers of toast.

Just before serving, sprinkle with breadcrumbs which have been fried in butter.

ANGLAISE – In cookery, the term anglaise is applied to a mixture composed of eggs, oil (½ teaspoon per egg), salt and pepper.

Various ingredients which have to be dipped in breadcrumbs are first coated with this mixture, and are said to be 'à l'anglaise'. They are then sautéed in butter or oil, or deep-fried.

ANGLAISE (À L') – Name given to various preparations usually cooked in water (see MUTTON, Leg of mutton) or in white stock (see CHICKEN, English boiled chicken).

This term also applies to the following fish: fish poached in court-bouillon (q.v.); fish grilled or fried in breadcrumbs; vegetables, mainly potatoes, boiled in water or steamed (see POTATOES, Potatoes à l'anglaise).

Grilled fish à l'anglaise. POISSONS GRILLÉS À L'ANGLAISE – This method can be applied to all fish. The large fish are cut into slices or steaks, the small ones are cooked whole, after having a few slits cut in them. The fish, whole or sliced, is coated with oil or melted butter and seasoned with salt and pepper before being put under a grill. It must be cooked on a low flame.

When fish with a delicate flesh is being grilled, such as whiting, fresh sliced cod, etc., it should be dusted with flour and sprinkled with melted butter or oil before putting it under the grill.

Grilled fish à l'anglaise is served simply with melted butter or Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER) and (optionally) potatoes, either steamed or boiled.

ANGLAISE (Custard) – Various flavoured custard made of yolks of egg, sugar and milk (see CREAM, Custard cream).

ANGLER (U.S. ANGLERFISH). LOTTE DE MER, BAUDROIE – This fish is extremely ugly. Its foreparts are very broad while its hind-quarters are exceedingly narrow. Its head, which is enormous, is very flat and spiky. Along its back it has three very mobile filaments. The first and largest ends in a sort of flail, shaped like a spearhead, which can lash out in all directions. It is believed that the angler uses this as bait to attract its prey.

The skin of the angler is olive brown along the back and grey on the belly. It is flabby and sticky and entirely without scales. Instead it is covered with bony filaments similar to the spikes on its head.

The angler is used mainly as an ingredient of bouillabaisse (q.v.) and other fish soups, but it can be cooked in the same way as cod or other large sea fish.

In whatever manner it is prepared, angler should be rather highly seasoned, since it is a somewhat tasteless fish. In the U.S.A. the anglerfish, while plentiful, is not widely marketed. White fish fillets or steaks can be used in the following recipes.

Angler à l'anglaise. LOTTE DE MER À L'ANGLAISE – Fillet a medium-sized raw angler, and trim the fillets. Flatten them and season with salt and pepper. Dip them in egg and breadcrumbs and fry them in butter, browning on both sides. Serve on a long dish, covering the fish with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER).

Boiled angler with various sauces. LOTTE DE MER BOUILLIE – Skin the angler and cut it into thick steaks. Cook in a court-bouillon (q.v.) as for Boiled cod (see COD). Serve with any sauce suitable for boiled fish.

Cold angler pâté. PÂTÉ FROID DE LOTTE DE MER – Proceed as for Cold eel pie (see EEL).

Fillets of angler braised in white wine. FILETS DE LOTTE DE MER BRAISÉS AU VIN BLANC – Trim and flatten the fillets. Season with salt and pepper. Lay them in a buttered baking tin and moisten with Fish fumet (see FUMET) with white wine. Cook in a moderate oven.

Drain the fillets. Serve on a long dish with a white wine sauce made from the cooking stock (see SAUCE, White sauces).

Fried angler. LOTTE DE MER FRITE – Cut the fillets of angler into strips. Dip them in milk, flour lightly, and deep-fry in boiling fat.

Drain and season. Serve on a napkin, garnished with fried parsley and lemon.

Hot angler pâté. PÂTÉ CHAUD DE LOTTE DE MER – This pie is made from fillets of angler, with pike or whiting stuffing, in the same way as Hot eel pie (see EEL).

Matelot of angler. MATELOTE DE LOTTE DE MER – Cut the fillets of angler into squares. Cook them en matelote in white or red wine, as for Eel en matelote (see EEL).

ANGLET – Town situated 4 km. (2½ miles) from Bayonne, near the sea. A famous white wine is produced here, dry and heady, which is called Vin de sable.

Rock salt also comes from Anglet.

Gastronomic map of Angoumois, Aunis and Saintonge

ANGOULÊME – A town in the Charente where famous brandies are distilled. A noted partridge pâté is made at Angoulême.

ANGOUMOIS – This area is situated between Poitou and Périgord, Limousin and Saintonge. Such a neighbourhood could not help but turn the inhabitants into gastronomes, considering the excellence of its food products.

Ground and feathered game abound in Angoumois. Freshwater fish of all kinds are to be found in its rivers; the Touvre, which flows past Angoulême, is still, as Clement Marot said, 'paved with trout, edged with eels and crayfish,' and these delicious fish and shellfish are made into mouth-watering matelotes.

Various species of mushrooms are gathered in Angoumois. In the quarries around Angoulême cultivated mushrooms are grown; the delicacy of their flavour rivals the famous mushrooms cultivated in the quarries around Paris.

Cattle bred in this region produce excellent beef. First-class poultry is raised there, Barbezieux chickens being particularly esteemed.

Culinary specialities – Friture charentaise composed of various small fish; cagouilles, stuffed or in ragoût. (By cagouilles we mean snails. The inhabitants of Charente are so fond of them that they, themselves, are nicknamed cagouillards.)

Tourtière (raised pie containing chicken and salsify); jugged hare, to which is added redcurrant jelly; preserved duck, which is served with potatoes sautéed in goose fat, or with cèpes sautés à la bordelaise; gigorit or lamb's pluck; stuffed cabbage called farée; a selection of various pâtés such as pâté de foie gras truffé of Barbezieux and Angoulême, partridge pâté of Ruffec, lark pâtés of Exideuil. Sausages, saveloys, black puddings, chitterlings and other charcuterie are all excellent.

Among the sweet dishes and cakes there are marvels, a kind of fritter; cheesecake made of Ruffec cheese; chocolate tartlets flavoured with brandy.

Wines – The wines of the Angoumois region are mediocre and are rarely drunk outside the province. They are excellent for distilling purposes, however. Charente cognac is made from these wines (see COGNAC).

ANGREC – A group of plants; some of the best known of which grow in Réunion Island and Madagascar, others on the Cape of Good Hope and on the west coast of Africa. The most important species is the Angraecum fragrans; its leaves furnish the Jaham, or tea of Réunion Island, which is widely used in the same way as China tea.

ANIMELLES – This is a culinary term for the testicles of male animals, in particular those of rams. In the past, animelles were very much in vogue in France, Spain and Italy. For recipes see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Animelles.

ANISEED (Sweet cumin). ANTS VERT – Plants with ovoid seeds, slightly contracted at the top, with a ribbed surface and short stiff greyish-green hairs.

Aniseed
a. Fruit
b. Flower

The seeds sold in the shops must be cleansed of the soil which often sticks to them. Parsley seed, with the hairs removed, is sometimes fraudulently sold as pâtisserie aniseed. Aniseed is used in confectionery and distilling.

Aniseed cookies (Alsatian pastry). PAINS À L'ANIS – Mix 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine castor sugar and 12 eggs in a copper basin. Beat the mixture with a whisk as for an ordinary sponge cake.

When the mixture is well whisked, add 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 200 g. (7 oz., scant 2 cups) cornflour and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) aniseed (in grains). Mix well.

Drop tablespoons of the mixture onto a wetted baking sheet. Place in a warm place to dry. When the cookies begin to rise slightly, bake in a cool oven.

Aniseed-flavoured sugar. SUCRE ANISÉ – Aniseed-flavoured sugar is used for several preparations. The proportion of aniseed varies. When it is intended for the preparation of aniseed cake, 25 g. (1 oz., 3 tablespoons) aniseed are added to 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) castor sugar. If, on the other hand, it is to be used to flavour sponge cakes, biscuits, custards or creams, the proportion of aniseed can go up to 100 grams (4 oz.,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) per 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sugar.

Method. Pick over the aniseed carefully and rub on a fine sieve to remove the stalks. Dry in a slow oven for 12 hours. Pound with lump sugar, and sift through a fine sieve to obtain a very fine powder. Pound whatever remains in the sieve until the whole has been sifted.

Keep this sugar in a hermetically sealed jar or tin, and store in a dry place.

Aniseed-flavoured sugar is a more satisfactory flavouring agent than aniseed essence, which is rather strong and inclined to have more of an aniseed smell than flavour.

ANISETTE – Aniseed-based liqueur. The best aniseed liqueur in France is made in Bordeaux. Dutch anisettes are also held in high repute.

(For the preparation of the liqueur see LIQUEURS, Anise or anisettes liqueur.)

ANJOU – Land of sweetness and harmony where the cuisine and wines match its natural beauty.

Henry Coutant, a great gastronome and a native of Anjou, wrote: 'Its cuisine is as mellow as its skies, harmonious as its horizons. Did not one of Anjou's wittiest sons and a great gourmet, the humourist Curmionsky, say that Anjou is to gastronomy what Racine is to literature?' And Coutant went on:

'As to its wines, they are like the humour of its inhabitants:

Gastronomic map of Anjou

light and sparkling, of incomparable taste, but at times also malicious and treacherous towards those who have no idea how to face up to their caprices with adequate preparation. Admirable wines, however, which merit one of the first places among the great wines of France.'

Anjou cattle, bred for food, give meat of excellent quality. The Maine region cattle are famous for the quality of their meat, and so are the Cholet cattle.

Anjou pork is of the greatest delicacy, and various locally made charcuterie – rillettes, potted pork mince, andouilles, sausages, black (U.S. blood) puddings – are admirable 'bacchic spurs', as Rabelais called them, just the thing to make one appreciate the fragrant wines of the Anjou vineyards.

Anjou chickens are tender and plump, and make excellent fricassées.

'The fish which the Loire so generously offers us between Saumur and Champtoceaux is more delicate than anywhere else,' declares an Anjou gourmand.

Its pike are among the finest; its shad, its tench and its bream know no rivals. For pike and shad, the cooks of Anjou have passed on from generation to generation the recipe for a succulent sauce, beurre blanc (white butter), the creamy taste of which is a fragrant delight. Tench and bream, particularly bream, are cooked chiefly with a sorrel stuffing which makes a savoury foundation for their flesh.

The Loire salmon are famous; they are considered the best of all French river salmon.

Poultry is excellent in Anjou. The whole world knows of capon de la flèche and chicken du Mans. First-class game is also found here.

Anjou vegetable produce is superb. The green cabbages of this region, the piochous, as they are called, are well known and are made into those fricassées which delight the lovers of country dishes.

The Anjou orchards produce excellent fruit; pears, dessert and cider apples, plums and strawberries. 'We must pay homage to the fruits of Anjou, which form a vegetable aristocracy of this province of France,' said gastronome Henry Coutant.

Anjou cheeses are renowned. The famous Angers crémets (soft fresh cream cheeses) should really be classed among the sweet courses rather than the cheeses. These crémets, which are generally eaten with sugar, can also be sprinkled with salt and flavoured with chives.

The Loire near Saumur (French Government Tourist Office)

With food of such quality available the master cooks and cordons bleus of Anjou are naturally noted for their cuisine.

Culinary specialities – Saumur rillettes; rillons (greaves); potted pork mince; white puddings and other charcuterie made from the fine pork of the region.

Bouillette, a kind of matelote of various fishes, principally eels; stuffed shad; bream in butter; pike or shad au beurre blanc (white butter); matelotes of freshwater fish; perch with prunes; fish stews; eel pâté.

Rump of veal à l'angevine; pig's fry; gogue; fricassée of chicken; partridge à la mancelle; chouée (boiled green cabbage sprinkled with butter); fricassée of green cabbage; fricassée of cauliflower; green salads with walnut oil.

Well-known cheeses include the Saumur chouzé; caillebotte à la chardonnette, and the Saumur and Angers crémets.

Other famous dishes are bijane or 'magpie soup' (similar to the Saintonge broth) – bread crumbled into sweetened red wine; roast meat with hot wine; millière (maize meal and rice porridge); fouée (a sort of flat girdle cake made of bread dough, spread with butter); fouace (flat cakes baked in the hearth). Rabelais speaks of 'fouaciers of Lerné (or Lernay), of Maine-et-Loire,' which shows how long these cakes have been known. There are also guillaret or échaudé; Angers aniseed biscuits; prune pie. The fouace and the guillaret are not delicate pastries; in the past they used to be sold in the markets and at fairs in western France. Their main quality was to provoke thirst.

A vineyard on the bank of the Loire at Huillé

Wines – The Anjou wines include those of the Angers and Saumur regions (which have a right to the appellations 'Anjou' and 'Saumur').

White wines. These are made from the Chénin grape.

Saumur. Very dry white wines with a strong bouquet. They stand up very well to the fermenting process of the méthode champenoise to give very pleasant semi-sparkling and sparkling wines. The grapes are grown on the banks of the Loire and on those of its tributary, the Thouet. Brézé, Parnay and Montsoreau are three of the principal vineyards.

Coteaux de la Loire. Fine, elegant white wines with a strong bouquet are produced here; these get dryer every year. The best-known vineyards are those of Epiré, Savennières (which has a right to a special appellation), la Roche-aux-Moines and la Coulée de Serrant, both on the right bank.

La Coulée de Serrant is a walled vineyard that was presented by Louis XI to his chamberlain Perthuis de Brie along with a château which has since disappeared.

It was at la Roche-aux-Moines, on 27 July 1214, that John Lackland was defeated by Louis XI, son of Philippe Auguste. The vineyard, planted by the monks of Saint-Nicolas of Angers, dates back to the eleventh century A.D.

Coteaux du Layon. Liqueur-like aromatic white wines made from over-ripe grapes ('la pourriture noble' or 'noble rot', Botrytis cinerea).

The great liqueur-like Anjou wines are at their best in the Bonnezeaux and Quarts-de-Chaume appellations. The Coteaux de l'Aubance are also worth mentioning – excellent white wines from the banks of the River Aubance.

Red wines. The red wines of Anjou and Saumur come from the Cabernet grape. The best known of them (and for good reason) is Saumur-Champigny with its exquisite strawberry bouquet and deep ruby colour. It was Curnonsky's favourite wine.

Rosé wines. The rosés of Anjou and Saumur, velvety or dry, are well known and much in demand. They are made

Map of the principal vineyards in Anjou

Bottles and a glass for Anjou wine from the Gamay, Côt and Groslot grapes. The Cabernet rosé is (as its name indicates) produced exclusively from the Cabernet grape.

The Angevin poet Marc Leclerc has put it all into verse:

*Voici les vins du Layon,
Beaulieu, Rablay, Tourcé, Faye,
Doux coum' le miel au rayon,
Chauds coum' le soleil qui raye,
Voilà la Coulée d' Serrant,
Saint-Barthélemy, Savennières,
Qui tiennent ben aussi leu rang
Avec ceuss d' La Possonnière,
Ceux de Saumur et d'alentour,
Varrains ou Saint-Cyr-en-Bourg,
Montsoreau, Parnay, Dampierre,
Et leu si plaisant goût d' pierre,
L' champigny qu'à la couleur
Et la senteur des framboèses
Et l'on n' sait quel est l' meilleur
Vin de tuffeau ou vin d'ardoèse.*

Here are the wines of Layon,
Beaulieu, Rablay, Tourcé, Faye,
Sweet as honey in the comb,
Glowing like the sun's ray,
There is the Coulée de Serrant,
Saint-Barthélemy, Savennières,
That are every bit as good
As those of La Possonnière
Of Saumur and its neighbours
Varrains or Saint-Cyr-en-Bourg,
Montsoreau, Parnay, Dampierre,
And the raspberry-scented Champigny
The colour of rubies
Laced with the tang of the soil
Chalk or slate
Who can say which is best.

Good quality marc brandies (distilled from the husks of grapes after the wine has been made) and some highly esteemed liqueurs such as Guignolet d'Angers are also produced in this region.

Finally, there is Segré cider, which is excellent.

ANNA POTATOES

Casserole for Anna potatoes

ANNA POTATOES. POMMES DE TERRE ANNA – A method of preparing potatoes cut in thin round slices, cooked in butter in a special utensil or a covered terrine. (See POTATOES.)

ANNETTE POTATOES. POMMES DE TERRE ANNETTE – Prepared like Anna potatoes, but the potatoes should be shredded into fine julienne strips (q.v.). (See POTATOES.)

ANNONA. ANONE – The annona or custard apple is the fruit of a family of trees (Annonaceae) native to tropical America but cultivated in southern California and tropical Asia. The cherimoya (Annona cherimolia), one of the most popular varieties, resembles a globe artichoke in both colour and shape, with the difference that its skin is shiny. It has cream coloured flesh, less white than that of the sour sop (Annona muricata), which is larger and more acid in flavour. The sweet sop (Annona squamosa), which some people say is the true custard apple, is particularly popular in the West Indies and has a sweet, custard-like flavour and a strong scent. Annonas are only eaten raw.

ANON – This fish, one of the varieties of haddock, abounds in vast numbers in the English Channel. Its flesh is very white, and layered.

The fishing season for it is mainly January and February. In the U.S.A. hake and cusk (usually sold in fillets) are very similar to this fish.

For cookery purposes it is treated as whiting (q.v.).

ANTHRACITE – Coal remarkable for its great purity; one of the fuels which is used, in preference to others, for heating and cooking.

ANTIDOTE. CONTRE-POISON – Substance capable of neutralising the toxic properties of another substance, by forming with it an insoluble non-toxic combination.

ANTISEPSIS. ANTISEPSIE – Method which aims at the prevention of putrefaction or infection by use of chemical substances. The salting and smoking of meat actually constitutes an application of antiseptic treatment. The use of vinegar in marinades, and of salt or alcohol for preserving fruit, also achieves this purpose. With exceptions, the use of antiseptics as preservatives for food substances is generally condemned. The practice can be dangerous, except in the hands of qualified food chemists, who use, when required, selected substances which are strictly controlled by appropriate laws.

ANTISEPTICS. ANTISEPTIQUES – Substances which counteract putrefaction, fermentation and infection. (See PRESERVATION.)

ANVERSOISE (À L') – Method of preparing large and small pieces of meat, calves' sweetbreads and eggs. These are garnished with hop stalks in butter or cream and potatoes fried in butter.

AOUDZÉ – Name given in Ethiopia to a strongly spiced sauce which is made of pimento, ginger, cloves and an aromatic plant somewhat similar to thyme, known as zégakelie.

The Ethiopians serve this sauce with a dish which they call brondo, of which they are very fond.

APÉRITIF – The old pharmacopoeia recognised major bitters (roots of parsley, fennel, asparagus and butcher's broom) and minor bitters (roots of maidenhair fern, couch-grass, thistle, rest-harrow and strawberry-plant). The term as used today only applies to stimulants of appetite.

Apéritifs served in cafés are drinks of a greater or lesser degree of bitterness, variously flavoured, which are drunk neat or diluted with water. They generally have a strong alcoholic content, because the essences of which they are composed are not soluble except in strong alcohol (which is why they go cloudy when mixed with water) and this alcohol content to a great extent nullifies the beneficial action of the bitters.

But, through sheer force of habit (or perhaps through imagination), some people think that they have no appetite unless they have their daily apéritif (or apéritifs). It is this fact which has led to the coining of the phrase that if an apéritif can open the appetite, it does so with a skeleton key. Be this as it may, the apéritif was, and still is, a traditional rite in certain circles.

La Partie de Plaisir, an engraving by de Moitte after a painting by Lancret

The traditional apéritif 'rite' is tending to disappear. Those who used to look upon it as an occasion to meet their friends or simply as a form of relaxation are beginning to substitute for this 'agreeable faux pas of the palate' perhaps a fruit juice, or a glass of mineral water, or – better still – simply a glass of wine.

Doctor Romain, who calls himself an 'independent gastronome', has selected what he considers to be the best apéritifs and lists them in the following order:

1. The best vintage brut Champagne, served well chilled and sparkling with tiny bubbles.
2. The still Champagne Blanc de Blancs.
3. A glass of genuine old sherry; or, better still, an authentic Châteauneuf-du-Pape yellow wine from the Jura.
4. An 'Aligoté' white Burgundy (Aligoté is the name of the grape) blended with a little fine Cassis. 'Kir,' as this mixture is called, is a misnomer, since it was already being drunk in Burgundy in 1912, long before the Alsatian Canon Kir held office as deputy mayor of Dijon.
5. A good quality Scotch whisky served neat or with a splash of soda.
6. Certain authentic Italian vermouths, alone, or with ice, or with chilled sparkling mineral water.
7. One of a small number of good dry French vermouths such as Noilly, drunk neat, or with sparkling mineral water – or (wait for it!) blended with Cassis. Even the ancient (but reborn!) Savoyard Chambéry vermouths are recommended.
8. As a last resort, during the long hot summer days (especially if you happen to live in the south of France) a splendid light 'pastis' simply because its tart aniseed flavour refreshes the palate without spoiling the appetite.

APHORISMS AND AXIOMS. APHORISMES ET AXIOMES – Short pithy maxims, expressing rules and precepts of gastronomy, hygiene and everything pertaining to the table, the most celebrated of which are those of Brillat-Savarin, given by this master of gastronomic sciences as a preface to Physiologie du goût. Here they are:

1. The universe is nothing except for life, and everything that lives has to feed itself.
2. Animals feed; man eats; only a man of wit knows how to eat.
3. The destiny of nations depends on their manner of eating.
4. Tell me what you eat, and I shall tell you what you are.
5. The Creator, by making man eat to live, invites him to do so with appetite and rewards him with pleasure.
6. Gourmandism is an act of judgement, by which we prefer things which have a pleasant taste to those which lack this quality.
7. The pleasures of the table belong to all ages, to all conditions, to all countries and to every day; they can be associated with all the other pleasures and remain the longest to console us for the loss of the rest.
8. The table is the only place where one is never bored during the first hour.
9. The discovery of a new dish does more for the happiness of mankind than the discovery of a star.
10. Those who give themselves indigestion or get drunk, do not know how to eat or drink.
11. The correct order of foods is starting with the heaviest and ending with the lightest.
12. The correct order of beverages is starting with the most temperate and ending with the most heady.
13. To claim that wines should not be changed is a heresy; the palate becomes saturated and after the third glass the best of wines arouses nothing but an obscure sensation.

14. A dessert without cheese is like a beautiful woman with one eye.

15. One can learn to cook, but a restaurateur is born.

16. The most indispensable quality of a cook is punctuality; it should also be that of a guest.

17. To wait too long for a late-comer is to show a lack of consideration for all those present.

18. He who receives his friends and gives no personal attention to the meal which is being prepared for them, is not worthy of having friends.

19. The mistress of the house must always make sure that her coffee is excellent, and the master of the house that his wines are choice.

20. To invite someone is to take charge of his happiness during the time he spends under your roof.

Some of Brillat-Savarin's aphorisms, notably the one which claims that 'One can learn to cook, but a restaurateur is born' are rather disputable!

There are many other gastronomic aphorisms. We quote some which are attributed to the actor Des Essarts, who, according to a contemporary author, had an appetite proportionate to his corpulence (Des Essarts was very fat) and was as much a gastronome as a man of wit – qualities which often go together.

Some people claim that he was the precursor of Brillat-Savarin. A good dinner would put him into good spirits. He would eloquently analyse the qualities of each dish and create amusingly bizarre combinations of words:

'Good cookery is the food of a clear conscience.'

'Let the leg of mutton be awaited as the first lovers' meeting, mortified as a liar caught in the act, golden as a young German girl, and bloody as a Carib.'

'Take advantage of the gracious condescension of the elegant calf's kidney, multiply its metamorphoses; you can, without giving it offence, call it the chameleon of cuisine.'

'Make of an egg an amiable intermediary which comes between the various parts of food to bring about difficult reconciliations.'

'Mutton is to lamb what a millionaire uncle is to his poverty-stricken nephew.'

'A vine-leaf wrapped round a partridge brings out its quality, just as the barrel of Diogenes brought forth the qualities of the great thinker.'

'Never forget that the pheasant must be awaited like the pension of a man of letters who has never written epistles to the ministers or madrigals to their mistresses.'

Des Essarts, born at Langres in 1740, was one of the best actors of the Comédie-Française. He died suddenly in 1793, on hearing of the arrest of one of his best friends.

The poets and prose writers of the past have also formulated gastronomic aphorisms and axioms.

Horace, who set great store by the cleanliness of the table, and above all insisted that one should be able to see one's reflection mirrored in the plates and glasses, wrote as follows:

'The stomach heaves when one receives from a valet a goblet bearing the greasy imprint of his sauce-stained fingers, and when one sees at the bottom the filthy dregs collected there.'

Plutarch makes this statement – which he attributes to Aemilius Paulus, the conqueror of Persia: 'The same intelligence is required to marshal an army in battle as to order a good dinner. The first must be as formidable as possible, the second as pleasant as possible, to the participants.'

In these words Plutarch gives a valuable lesson to all would-be gastronomes, to those who frequently compose menus which would give no pleasure to a true gastronome.

Rabelais categorically declares that only 'candle-lit' dinners and suppers are pleasing. He goes on to say: 'There is no good cheer except at night when the lanterns are in place with their gentle flickering lights.'

Nearer to our own time, other writers and gastronomes have formulated many aphorisms which may be taken as sound gastronomical rules.

Thus Carême gives the following advice to ministers and diplomats: 'The culinary art follows diplomacy, and every prime minister should pay it tribute.'

Talleyrand knew this only too well. He used to advise French ambassadors at the courts of foreign sovereigns to rely more on their casseroles than on their secretaries.

Carême also says: 'To preside over a political chamber, or to hold a post in an embassy, is to take a course in gastronomy.'

Another of Carême's aphorisms stresses how very important is the part played by cookery: 'When there is no more cookery in the world there will be no more letters, no quick and lofty intelligence, no pleasant easy relationships, no more social unity.' (Pâtissier pittoresque)

Saint-Beuve is responsible for this aphorism: 'Intellectual men who quickly wolf down whatever nourishment is necessary for their bodies with a kind of disdain, may be very rational and have a lofty intelligence, but they are not men of taste.'

Monselet, who was a gastronome and extremely witty, formulated many aphorisms in his writings. This one shows the social importance of good dinners:

*'Tout se fait en dînant dans le siècle où nous sommes
Et c'est par des dîners qu'on gouverne les hommes.'*

'Everything is done at dinner in the century in which we live, and it is by dinners that men are governed.'

Monselet also wrote:

'Gastronomy is the joy of every condition and every age. It adds beauty to wit.'

'A gourmet is a being pleasing to Heaven.'

'All passions, rationalised and controlled, become an art. Gastronomy, more than any other passion, is sensitive to reasoning and direction.'

'Ponder well on this point: the pleasant hours of our life are all connected, by a more or less intangible link, with some memory of the table.'

'There are many flowers which serve only to produce essences, of which one could have made savoury dishes.'

And in his Lettres à Emilie he gives the following advice to all women: 'Enchant, stay beautiful and gracious; but to do this, eat well. Bring the same consideration to the preparation of your food as you devote to your appearance. Let your dinner be a poem, like your dress.'

Lucien Tendret, the great-nephew of Brillat-Savarin, created a few gastronomical aphorisms in his book La Table au pays de Brillat-Savarin. They are, no doubt, less famous than those of the author of Physiologie du goût, but a few of them deserve to be quoted here:

'Cuisine is both an art and a science. It is an art when it strives to bring about the realisation of the true and the beautiful, called le bon (the good) in the order of culinary ideas. As a science, it is analogous to chemistry, physics and natural history. Its axioms are called aphorisms, its theorems recipes, and its philosophy gastronomy.'

'The beautiful and the good are identical, but the fleeting impressions created by the work of a cook or a musician disperse even as they are being experienced. Raphael's painting The Transfiguration is immortal, but Carême's Ragoût de truffes à la parisienne lasts only while it is being eaten, just as roses last as long as their fragrance can be enjoyed.'

'The cook is no less than an artist, and even if he may not be on the level of Polygnotus and Phidias, he has his part and his place in civilisation as a whole.'

'Skilful and refined cookery has always made its appearance during the most glorious epochs in history.'

'Vatel is not less famous than his master, the conqueror of Rocroi, and if glory is nothing but smoke, then Antonin Carême has made as much of it as Napoleon.'

'To give life to beauty, the painter uses a whole range of colours, the musician of sounds, the cook of tastes – and it is indeed remarkable that there are seven colours, seven musical notes and seven tastes.'

Lucien Tendret also made the following remarks illustrating the importance of good cuisine in diplomatic affairs:

'Political issues are decided at table. Talleyrand often owed his successes to the skilful creations of Antonin Carême.'

'At the time of the Congress of Vienna, the ambassador (Talleyrand), taking leave of Louis XVIII, said to him: "Please believe me, your Majesty, I need saucepans more than written questions."'

'Monsieur Guizot assures us that while he was ambassador in London, his cook was more useful to him politically than his secretaries.'

He also gave the following advice, in the form of axioms, to his hosts and guests:

'To order and conduct a dinner is given only to fine gastronomes, of delicate and cultivated tastes. A skilful host is as rare as a good cook.'

'One only dines well at the homes of true gastronomes who feel all the nuances. The least puffiness spoils the loveliest of faces, and attention to detail creates perfection.'

'With money, anyone can offer succulent dishes and famous wines, but courtesy and kindness cannot be bought.'

'To make people who have no appetite eat, to make the wit of those who have it sparkle, to enable those who lack these qualities to find them – this is the supreme science of a gastronome-host.'

'The gourmets, if they are not seated comfortably and have no elbow room, count both the wines and the food for nothing.'

And to sum up his philosophy Lucien Tendret says:

'French conversation was born in the salons of the eighteenth century. From the dining-rooms of the Regent, from those of President Hénault, Baron Holbach and Mme. Geoffrin, there emerged a society, certainly sceptical and impious, but permeated with suave urbanity and that ingenious and enlightened courtesy which has since spread throughout Europe, and has become one of the salient characteristics of modern civilisation.'

Jean Richepin makes a practical point in his poem, À Table:

*Est-on dix, y compris la famille, on se serre!
Mais pas trop cependant, et sans être à l'étroit
Il faut qu'on ait de l'air aux coudes, et le droit
De faire en bavardant, si l'on veut, de grands gestes;
Grignotés de profil, les mets sont indigestes.*

'We are ten, with the family; sit closer together!
But not too closely: we don't want to be cramped,
We must have elbow room, and be able
To talk and make gestures, if we feel so inclined; Sitting sideways and picking at food is courting indigestion.'

To return to Lucien Tendret, he has something to say to reassure people who think they are doing wrong in giving themselves up to the pleasures of the table:

'The casuists have classed gluttony as one of the seven deadly sins, but if it is not tainted by the vice of drinking to inebriation or eating to excess, it deserves to be ranked with the theological virtues.' And –

'Those who have a profound indifference to the pleasures of the table are generally gloomy, charmless and unamiable.'

Apothegms. APOPTHEGMES GOURMANDS – The aphorisms of Brillat-Savarin are known throughout the world. Much less known are the gastronomical apothegms which the author of Physiologie du goût has set forth on the philosophy of the table:

Cookery. 'Cooking is one of the oldest arts, and one which has rendered us the most important service in civil life.'

'The science which feeds men is worth at least as much as the one which teaches how to kill them.'

'Once fire was discovered, the instinct for improvement made men bring food to it, in the first place to dry it, and afterwards to put on the fire to cook.'

'Cookery made great progress when fire-resisting vessels in bronze or clay appeared.'

'Meals, in the sense in which we understand the word, began with the second age of the human species.'

'In the state of society in which we now find ourselves, it is difficult to imagine a nation which lived solely on bread and vegetables.'

Gourmandism and Gourmands. 'Gourmandism is an ardent, rational and habitual preference for things which flatter the taste.'

'From whatever point of view you look at gourmandism, it deserves nothing but praise and encouragement.'

'Gourmandism is one of the main links uniting society.'

'If there are gastronomes by predestination, then there are also some by circumstance.'

Taste. 'Taste is simple in its action, that is to say, it cannot react to two flavours at once.'

'Man's palate, by the delicacy of its texture and of the various membranes that surround it, gives sufficient proof of the sublimity of functions for which it was intended.'

Appetite and digestion. 'Appetite proclaims itself by a slight sensation of languor in the stomach, and a feeling of tiredness.'

'Digestion is an absolutely mechanical function, and the digestive organs can be thought of as a mill equipped with sieves.'

'To understand digestion as a whole, it must be linked with food and its consequences.'

'Digestion, of all the bodily functions, is the one which exercises the greatest influence on the mental state of an individual.'

'Some people are in a bad temper while digestion is in progress; it is therefore not the time either to suggest projects or to ask favours of them.'

'Theory and experience both prove that the quality and quantity of food have a powerful influence on work.'

'A badly nourished man cannot adequately cope with the effort of continuous work for any length of time.'

Obesity and Thinness. 'Obesity is never found among the savages or among the classes of society where the people have to work to eat, and where they only eat to live.'

'Thinness is not a great drawback for men, but it is a dreadful misfortune for women.'

Foods. 'By foods one means substances which, introduced into the stomach, can be assimilated by digestion, and restore the energy lost by the human body.'

'We were not satisfied with the qualities nature gave to poultry; art stepped in, and under the pretext of improving fowls, made martyrs of them.'

'Poultry is for cookery what canvas is for painting, and the cap of Fortunatus for charlatans. It is served to us boiled, roast, hot or cold, whole or in portions, with or without sauce, and always with equal success.'

'Three lands of ancient France contest the honour of producing the best poultry: Caux, Le Mans and Bresse.'

'Turkey is undoubtedly one of the best gifts that the New World has made to the Old.'

'Game provides the delights of our table; it is healthy, rich, savoury food, excellent in taste and easy to digest, especially when young.'

'Under the direction of an able chef, game goes through many skilful modifications and transformations, and provides most of the full-flavoured dishes which constitute superlative cuisine.'

'The taste of a Périgord partridge is not the same as that of a Sologne partridge.'

'If the garden warbler were the size of a pheasant, it would most certainly cost as much as an acre of land.'

'The quail is the sweetest and the nicest of game birds. It is an act of ignorance to serve it in any way except roasted.'

'A woodcock is in its full glory only when roasted actually before the eyes of the hunter; above all, the hunter who shot it.'

'In the hands of an able cook, fish can become an inexhaustable source of delight.'

'The smelt is the garden warbler of the water; the same smallness, the same high flavour, the same superiority.'

APHTONITUS – One of the seven great chefs of Ancient Greece. He invented the pudding.

APICIUS – There were three Romans by the name of Apicius. All three were famous, not for their genius, their virtues, or their great qualities, but for their gluttony and achievements in the gastronomical art.

The first lived under Sulla, the second under Augustus and Tiberius, and the third under Trajan. It is the second Apicius who is the most famous, and it is of him that Seneca, Pliny, Juvenal and Martial have spoken so much. Athenaeus says that he spent immense sums to satisfy his gluttony and that he invented several kinds of cakes which bear his name. Seneca, who was his contemporary, tells us that he ran a sort of school of 'good fare'. He adds that Apicius, having got into heavy debt, was at last forced to examine the state of his affairs, and that, seeing he had only 250,000 Roman pounds left (some authors say forty million sesterces, about an income of £80,000), he poisoned himself, fearing that such a sum would not be enough for him to live on.

Pliny often speaks of the ragoûts which Apicius invented, and calls them nepotum omnium altissimum gurgis.

The third Apicius lived under Trajan. Having invented a secret method of preserving oysters, he managed to deliver some very fresh ones to the Emperor, who was busy fighting the Parthians at the time.

The name Apicius was not only given to cakes but to several kind of sauces.

There exists, under the name of Coelius Apicius, a treatise De re culinaria, printed for the first time in Milan (1498); the critics do not think, however, that it was written by any of the three men named Apicius. Martin Lister produced a magnificent edition of this book entitled De obsonus et condimentis, sive de arte coquinaria (London 1705), of which 125 copies were printed.

However, the first edition, which is undated, seems to be older than the Milan edition. It was printed in Venice by Bernardus de Vitalibus, and comprises forty quarto pages, the first thirty-two of which constitute Apicius's book.

But the latest edition, a remarkable summary of the Dix livres de cuisine d'Apicius is that of Bertrand Guégan (published by René Bonnel, Paris, 1933).

To return to Marcus Gavius Apicius, it is interesting to note some of his discoveries. To improve sows' livers, he fattened them with dried figs, gave them honeyed wine to drink, then suddenly slaughtered them without warning. When camel was on the menu he only had the most delicate part served up – the heel.

Did Imperial Rome have her gastronomes in the strictest sense of this word, and were the illustrious personages, whose prowess at table has been described in history or legend, real connoisseurs of culinary matters? On this point Carême, who made a profound study of the history of ancient Rome, says that Roman cookery was 'fundamentally barbaric'.

What the historians tell us of the three men named Apicius leads us to agree with Carême. The Roman table was certainly sumptuous and magnificent, in the spectacular sense, but it was not at all refined.

Rome, at the time of the Apicius family, governed the whole world, at any rate the world as it was then known. She dictated her laws to distant provinces. From these subjugated provinces she received great quantities of various food products. Gallia Narbonensis sent her pork. Africa and Asia sent delectable foods which the Roman cooks, trained by the Greeks, prepared in lavish manner.

APONOGETONACEAE. APONOGETONS – Flowering rush family, represented by one genus, Aponogeton. Their leaves float on the surface of the water, rather like waterlilies.

The Aponogeton distachyus is widely cultivated in the temperate parts of Europe. For some years now it has become completely naturalised at Montpellier, where its young shoots are eaten and called Cape asparagus. The common names for this plant are Cape pond weed and water hawthorn.

APOPHORETA – Name given by the ancient Romans to the gifts which the host made to his guests for members of their families. These gifts were often of great value. They were mostly precious dishes or vases which had been used at the feast. Sometimes the slaves who served at table were also presented to the guests.

APOTHECA. APOTHÉCA – Roman name of a room, situated under the roof of a house, so arranged that the smoke of various fireplaces passed through it, with the sole purpose of boiling down the famous Caecubum wine to the desired syrupy consistency.

This wine took at least fifteen years to mature.

APPAREIL – In French culinary terminology this word is used to describe mixed preparations that go into the making of dishes. For example, the following terms are used: appareil à soufflé (soufflé mixture); appareil à biscuit (sponge mixture); appareil à crème renversée (custard mixture), etc.

APPELLATIONS D'ORIGINE – According to French legislation the label of a controlled wine must bear an appellation d'origine; that is to say the name of the viticultural area to which it belongs.

Appellations d'origine are divided into two categories: appellation d'origine contrôlée (A.O.C.) and vins délimités de qualité supérieure (V.D.Q.S.). The first and superior group consists of wines belonging to the viticultural areas that produce wines of great quality and individuality, following traditional methods. The latter is a secondary group of controlled wines belonging to viticultural areas that have earned a reputation for their general quality while not producing wines of such individual characteristics as those of the first group.

Nicolas Appert

APPERT – It is impossible to explain how so many people (including the authors of the first edition of this dictionary) committed the error of naming François Appert in this context, when it ought to be Nicolas – at least according to a short report in l'Encyclopédie universelle du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle (1858 edition, published eighteen years after the death of Charles-Nicolas Appert).

His biography is so vague that we prefer to repeat what the canners themselves have to say about him.

About a hundred and sixty years ago, the Frenchman Nicolas Appert discovered how to preserve food products by the action of heat.

The only document that has been found relating to Appert's civil state is his death certificate, although we do know that he was born in Châlons, in the Marne, in 1750. Whether it was Châlons-sur-Marne or Châlons-sur-Vesle remains a mystery.

His father was a wine merchant in the Champagne region, and Nicolas began work with him, corking bottles.

Then he moved on to learn the culinary art as a cook at the court of Christian IV. He also worked in several brasseries and private households. Finally when he was about thirty years old (about 1780) he set up as a confectioner in rue des Lombards, Paris.

Appert became deeply interested in the preparation of food products. He soon realised the inadequacy and disadvantages of contemporary methods of preservation, and set himself the task of investigating new ones.

In 1810, in order to bring his invention to the notice of the public, Appert published le Livre de tous les ménages ou l'Art de conserver pendant plusieurs années toutes les substances animales et végétales ('The Manual for Every Household or the Art of Preserving all Varieties of Animal and Vegetable Substances for Several Years').

He wrote: 'My method is not a vain theory; it is the fruit of late nights, much deep thinking and research, and innumerable experiments.'

Most probably Appert intuitively recognised the destructive action of heat on the 'ferments' that alter animal and vegetable substances. He realised that if it were possible to destroy or attenuate the effect of these 'ferments' by heating them sufficiently, and afterwards succeed in preventing other 'ferments' from being introduced into the substance, the conservation of the latter would be prolonged, if not indefinitely, at least for a very long period. Although this discovery was not based upon scientific theory, Appert managed through empirical (rule-of-thumb) methods to perfect a system of food preservation which in principle is little different from that employed in manufacturing processes today.

Encouraged by official approval, Appert gave up his confectionery business and occupied himself exclusively with experiments; these at length proved the validity of his theories.

In 1794 he settled in Ivry-sur-Seine. In 1804, with the help of some financial backing, he acquired a piece of land of 4 hectares (10 acres) at Massy in Seine-et-Oise, and built a factory. This he equipped with what to us would seem rather primitive machinery. He employed about fifty workers.

Scientific controversies arose over Appert's discovery, and it was not until Pasteur arrived on the scene that a satisfactory explanation was reached.

Massy was destroyed by the Allies in 1814.

Although old and practically penniless, Appert did not give up. In 1817 he settled in rue Cassette, in Paris, and managed to obtain premises in rue Moreau from the government. There he resumed the application of his manufacturing processes on a large scale.

The last years of his life, like his early years, are something of a mystery. He died in extreme poverty on 1 June 1840. In 1852, Chevallier-Appert took up where the other had left off.

He was Appert's successor and he perfected Appert's ideas. He had the idea of putting canned foods in the autoclave (q.v.), which up to then had been used for entirely different purposes. He raised the temperature to a high level. Since it was necessary to know the temperature inside the autoclave during the operation in order to preserve the quality of the canned foods, Chevallier-Appert devised a pressure gauge as well.

APPETENCE. APPÉTENCE – A feeling which brings desire for food; this is the first stage for appetite.

APPÉTIT – Common name for chives in French. (See CHIVES.)

APPETITE. APPÉTIT – Psychologists define under the term natural appetite the tendencies which instinctively cause us to satisfy the needs of the body.

In physiology appetite is defined as something rather different from hunger. Hunger in reality is nothing more than the need to eat, whereas appetite is the lure of pleasure which one experiences whilst eating, brought about by a particular condition of the organism.

The sensation of hunger, which develops at regular meal-times in civilised people, sometimes disappears if it is not satisfied at the usual hour. The appetite is stimulated by the sight and smell of food; bitter substances frequently awaken lost appetite by releasing digestive secretions.

In certain psychic and mental cases, appetite can degenerate into a craving for offensive and non-edible substances.

The opposite of appetite is anorexia, which means distaste for food.

APPIGRET – An old French word which Rabelais used to define gravy, juice, seasoning.

APPLE. POMME – Apples are the fruit of a tree belonging to the family Rosaceae.

The numerous varieties of apples are divided into cooking and eating apples.

The best dessert apples among the American varieties are: Golden Delicious, golden yellow in colour, truncated in shape, with a delicate juice, very tasty flesh, eaten between October and April; Red Delicious, Starking Delicious and Richared, truncated in shape, in varying shades of dark red, keeping well until March. Among the varieties of French origin are: Reine des reinettes, early variety, yellow streaked with russet; Reinette du Canada, rough-skinned, yellowish-green with brown spots, mid-season variety keeps well if it has been grown at a high altitude; Reinette du Mans and Reinette Clochard, late varieties both cultivated in the Loire valley.

Calville, in particular Calville Blanc, irregular in shape with more or less prominent sides and pronounced 'shoulders', is gradually disappearing, but still has some adherents on account of its very delicate flavour. These different varieties of apples keep the market well supplied from September to April or May. French production is important both quantitatively and qualitatively, and is complemented by apples imported from Italy and Holland. During the season France exports her excess (the golden varieties especially) to Germany and Great Britain. Imports are also received from the southern hemisphere in April, May and June, when stocks of French apples are exhausted.

The apple, like the grape, is one of our choicest dessert fruits. It is rich in assimilable minerals – calcium, copper, iron, magnesium and potassium – and contains Vitamins B and C, and tannin. Apples are used in the preparation of numerous sweet dishes, preserves, etc., and in the manufacture of pastries and apple sugar in confectionery. They are also pressed and used in the alembic to give cider, from which is derived Calvados.

Baked apples in pastry or douillon normand. RABOTTES DE POMMES OU DOUILLON NORMAND – Choose big sound baking apples and core them, to remove the central part containing the pips. Make a circular incision round the middle, to prevent their bursting. Fill the middle, hollowed out by the corer, with butter kneaded with sugar (and with a pinch of cinnamon, if desired).

Baked apples in pastry

Enclose each apple in a piece of Lining paste (see DOUGH), rolled out not too thick. Put a little circlet of paste (cut out with a fluted-edged cutter) on top of each apple. Brush with beaten egg and score the outside of the apples lightly with a knife.

Bake in a moderate oven from 25 to 30 minutes. Serve piping hot.

Note. The apples can be peeled before being put into pastry. They can also be cooked first as for Apples bonne femme (see below). In that case the baking will only take 15 minutes. Lining paste can be replaced by left-over pieces of puff pastry.

Apples bonne femme. POMMES BONNE FEMME – Make a light circular incision round the middle of some baking apples, and core them.

Put them in a buttered ovenproof dish. Fill the middle of each apple with a little butter mixed with fine castor sugar. Pour a few tablespoons of water into the dish, bake gently in the oven and serve in the same dish.

Apples Bourdaloue. POMMES BOURDALOUE – Poach apples, whole, halved or quartered, in syrup, as described in the recipe for Apricots Bourdaloue (see APRICOT).

Apple butter, marmalade – See JAM, Apple jelly; MARMALADE, Apple marmalade.

Buttered apples. POMMES AU BEURRE – Peel and core some baking apples and parboil for 2 minutes in boiling water with a dash of lemon juice added to it. Drain the apples, put them in a buttered ovenproof dish, sprinkle with fine sugar, moisten with a few tablespoons of water (or light syrup) and cook gently in the oven.

Serve each apple on a round croûton of bread which has been fried in butter. Dilute the pan juices with a few tablespoons of water, add a little butter and pour over the apples.

Apples au chambertin. POMMES AU CHAMBERTIN – Peel and core several apples. Poach them in sweetened Chambertin wine, allowing 300 g. sugar per litre (6 oz. per pint, 1½ cups per quart) of wine. Leave the apples to cool in this syrup. Arrange in a fruit dish or a timbale. Boil down the syrup by half, leave until cold, then pour over the apples.

Apple charlotte – See CHARLOTTE.

Apple compote – See COMPOTE.

Apples Condé. POMMES CONDÉ – Prepare as described in the recipe for Apricots Condé (see APRICOT).

Apples à la crème au kirsch. POMMES À LA CRÈME AU KIRSCH – Peel, core and cook the apples in a vanilla-flavoured syrup. Leave to cool in the syrup. Drain, dry and arrange them individually in glass goblets (or on a fruit dish). At the last moment top with half-whipped fresh cream, sweetened with sugar and flavoured with kirsch.

Note. Apples, prepared as described above, can be topped with cream flavoured with various liqueurs, such as anisette, bénédictine, cassis, chartreuse, raspberry liqueur, rum, etc.

Crêpes stuffed with apples (apple pancakes). CRÊPES FOURRÉES AUX POMMES – Prepare the crêpes (q.v.) in the usual manner and coat them with concentrated Apple sauce (see below).

Roll the pancakes or fold them in four. Put them on a baking sheet, sprinkle with icing sugar and glaze quickly in the oven. Serve on a folded napkin.

Note. Stuffed crêpes are usually called pannequets in French.

Apple croûte. CROÛTE AUX POMMES – Poach halved or quartered apples in vanilla-flavoured syrup, and prepare as described in the recipe for Apricot croûte (see APRICOT).

Apples Figaro. POMMES FIGARO – Philéas Gilbert gives the following recipe: 'Scald 650 g. (1½ lb.) chestnuts, remove the shells and the inner grey skin, put them into a pan with a vanilla bean and enough milk (previously boiled) to cover them completely. Simmer gently for 45 to 50 minutes.

'Core and peel 10 medium-sized apples. Cook them in a light syrup, strongly flavoured with vanilla; it is enough for the pulp just to be softened.

'Shred about 15 almonds and roast them until they go slightly yellow (not brown). Add to them 50 g. (2 oz., 3 tablespoons) coarsely crumbled marrons glacés.

'Make a cream with 150 g. (5 oz., ¾ cup) castor sugar, 4 egg yolks, 1½ tablespoons (2 tablespoons) flour and 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) vanilla-flavoured, boiled milk. After boiling this cream for 1 minute, remove from the heat and incorporate 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Do not allow to boil again. Rub the chestnuts through a sieve, put this purée into a sauté pan, and add 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) castor sugar and 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) cream. Stir on the fire for 2 minutes, and spread on a dish.

'Place the well-drained apples on this chestnut purée, pour the cream over them, and sprinkle with the almond and chestnut mixture.'

Apples flambé au kirsch (or other liqueurs). POMMES FLAMBÉES AU KIRSCH – There are two ways of preparing this dish.

1. Core cooking apples, peel them and poach in a light, vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain them, put into a silver timbale or an ovenproof china or glass dish. Sprinkle with kirsch, heat, and set alight just before serving.

2. Put the peeled and cored apples into a buttered dish. Sprinkle with sugar and melted butter, and bake slowly in the oven.

Transfer the apples to a silver timbale or an ovenproof china or glass dish, sprinkle with kirsch, and set alight just before serving.

Note. Apple flambé can also be set alight with brandy, raspberry eau-de-vie, Calvados, quetsche, rum, or any other liqueur with a high-degree alcohol content.

Apple flan – See TART, FLAN.

Apple fritters – See FRITTERS, Dessert (sweet) fritters.

Apples glacé à l'impératrice. POMMES GLACÉES À L'IMPÉRATRICE – Using dessert apples, poached in syrup and well drained, prepare as described in the recipe for Peaches à l'impératrice (see PEACHES).

Apple gratiné. POMMES GRATINÉES – Peel tart apples, cut into quarters, and cook in vanilla-flavoured syrup, keeping them fairly firm. Drain and dry.

Arrange in an ovenproof dish on a layer of apple sauce prepared as for a charlotte (see CHARLOTTE, Apple charlotte). Scatter some crushed macaroons on top, sprinkle with a little melted butter, and brown the top in a slow oven.

Note. For this dish apples can also be cut into quarters and cooked in butter, instead of being poached in syrup.

Apple jelly – See JAMS AND JELLIES.

Apple mousse à la Chantilly. MOUSSE AUX POMMES À LA CHANTILLY – Prepare a very fine, thick, vanilla-flavoured Apple sauce (see below). Cool the sauce and whisk it on ice, adding to it a few tablespoons fresh thick cream, making sure that the mixture does not lose its consistency. Pour into glass goblets or a fruit dish, piling it up in a dome.

Top with vanilla-flavoured whipped cream, whisked stiff.

Apple omelette à la normande. OMELETTE FOURRÉE AUX POMMES DITE À LA NORMANDE – Make the omelette in the usual manner, using eggs sweetened with sugar. Just before folding, fill the omelette with concentrated Apple sauce (see below) or with tart apples, peeled, diced, cooked in butter and sugar, and mixed with a little apple sauce, or with thick fresh cream.

APPLE-CORER

Arrange the omelette on a long dish. Sprinkle with sugar and glaze with a glazing iron or with a salamander.

Apple pectin. JUS DE POMMES – This juice, which has a strongly viscous consistency, is used for preparing Apple jelly (see JAMS AND JELLIES).

It is also used for preparing many other jellies made of fruit with too high a water content; without such an addition these jellies would not have the desired consistency, and would run the risk of fermenting.

Added in the right proportions, apple juice does not alter the flavour of other fruit.

To obtain about 2½ litres (4½ pints, 5½ pints) apple juice, cut 36 sound apples in quarters, without peeling or coring them, as both the peel and the pips provide a great deal of mucilaginous matter. Put them in a copper pan with 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) water. Seal the pan closely (hermetically, if possible) and cook on sustained heat (not too brisk) until the apple quarters become soft enough to 'give' easily when pressed with a finger.

Pour the fruit into a muslin cloth fixed over a bowl and leave for some time; the juice will drip through. Do not press the fruit itself in order to hurry the process. The juice can be used as indicated in various recipes.

The residue, i.e., the apple pulp left behind, can be used for preparing Apple sauce (see below) or paste, and for various sweet flans, loaves and soufflés.

Apple pie – See PIE.

Apple pudding – See PUDDING.

Apples with rice. POMMES GRATINÉES AU RIZ – Prepare 125 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) rice as for Dessert rice (see RICE). Put it into an ovenproof dish in layers, alternating with 225 g. (8 oz.) apples, sliced and cooked in butter. Smooth the surface of the top rice layer, and cover with 10 apple quarters, cooked in butter. Sprinkle with crushed macaroons and a tablespoon of melted butter, and brown the top. Serve in the same dish, with kirsch-flavoured Apricot sauce (see SAUCE), served separately.

Apples with rice and meringue. POMMES MERINGUÉES AU RIZ – Poach apple quarters in vanilla-flavoured syrup, or cook them in butter. Proceed as described for Apricots with rice and meringue (see APRICOT).

Apple ring à la normande. BORDURE DE POMMES À LA NORMANDE – Peel, core and halve the apples, and cook them in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Leave to cool in the syrup, then drain on a flat sieve until they are dry.

Prepare a crème moulée (see CUSTARD, Vanilla custard), flavouring with 1 to 2 tablespoons Calvados (applejack), and cook it in a bain-marie (q.v.) in a plain ring mould. When it is cold, turn out the mould onto a dish. Fill the middle with the dry apple halves, piling them up into a dome. Decorate with firmly whipped cream piped through a forcing-bag with a fluted nozzle. Serve with Calvados-flavoured Apricot sauce (see SAUCE).

Apple ring Brillat-Savarin. BORDURE DE POMMES BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Fill a savarin (q.v.), steeped in syrup and flavoured with rum, with stewed apples which have been mixed with rum-flavoured confectioner's custard (see CREAMS, French pastry cream).

Poach apple halves in vanilla-flavoured syrup, drain well, and coat with reduced apricot pulp. Place these on top of the savarin and decorate with halves of fresh walnuts, crystallised cherries and lozenges of angelica. Serve with rum-flavoured custard.

Apple rissoles. RISSOLES DE POMMES – Roll out a piece of Puff pastry (see DOUGH) and cut into little circles 8 to 10 cm. (3 to 4 inches) in diameter. Put a tablespoon of highly concentrated Apple sauce (see below), flavoured with kirsch (or any other liqueur), in the middle of each circle. Fold the pastry to enclose the filling completely, and seal the edges, moistening them with water.

Just before serving, fry in smoking-hot deep fat. Drain the rissoles and arrange them on folded napkins. Serve kirsch-flavoured Apricot sauce separately (see SAUCE).

Apple (or other fruit) rissoles can also be prepared using lining paste, or ordinary brioche dough, and can be made in various shapes.

Apple sauce. MARMELADE DE POMMES – Cook quartered apples in a little water until soft. Pass through a strainer. Add a pinch of salt and enough sugar to sweeten. Boil down until thick. A squeeze of lemon juice improves the flavour.

Apple soufflé. SOUFFLÉ AUX POMMES – Prepare as described in the recipe for fruit soufflés, using apple pulp and cream. (See SOUFFLÉS, Sweet soufflés.)

APPLE-CORER. VIDE-POMMES – Tube-shaped implement for taking the cores out of apples.

APPRÊT – In French cookery this word means a finished culinary preparation.

APRICOT. ABRICOT – Fruit of the apricot tree, brought from Armenia into Italy but not widely known in Europe until the fifteenth century.

The musk apricot, justly famous for its succulent flesh, is found in the south of France, Algeria and Spain.

In Auvergne, another much prized variety of apricot is cultivated for the high quality of jam which is produced from it.

Among the best varieties of apricot is clingstone, a species of apricot with white flesh which adheres to the stone. It has a somewhat tart flavour. Peach apricot, a choice fruit, is much sought after for the delicacy of its flesh; it is fragrant, juicy and sweet.

Apricots are one of the fruits most used in pâtisserie. They are used in a number of preparations, including sweet courses and confectionery. They also make excellent tarts, as well as delicious compotes and jellies.

Compotes can be made from green preserved apricots, which should be peeled before being bottled.

Apricots à l'ancienne. ABRICOTS À L'ANCIENNE – Halve large apricots, remove the stones, and poach in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Arrange on a layer of sponge cake soaked in rum and coated with a layer of apple sauce. Sprinkle with chopped almonds, sugar and a little melted butter. Put in the oven to set. Serve with apricot jam diluted in a little water, strained and laced with rum.

Apricot barquettes – See BARQUETTES.

Apricot bombe. BOMBE ABRICOTINE – Line a mould with chocolate ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES), flavoured with apricot brandy or apricot purée.

Apricot bouchées. BOUCHÉES À L'ABRICOT – These cakes can be made with either Genoese or sponge batter, and are filled and coated with apricot jam.

Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar, 8 whole eggs, 200 g. (7 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 200 g. (7 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup plus 2 tablespoons) best butter, a small glass of kirsch or rum.

Method. Beat the sugar and the eggs in a copper bowl on a low heat, or over hot water. When the mixture becomes pale, light and frothy, blend in carefully the sieved flour and the melted butter (to which the chosen flavouring has been added).

Pour the mixture into shallow round moulds (cake or muffin tins) filling up to three-quarters. Cook for about 20 minutes in a slow oven. Turn out and allow to cool. When quite cold, cut each bouchée in half with a thin sharp knife, to avoid crumbling the sponge. Spread with kirsch-flavoured apricot jam, then sandwich the bouchées together again. Brush with concentrated apricot jam and coat the sides all round with chopped roasted almonds. Decorate the tops with half a glacé cherry.

Apricots Bourdaloue I. ABRICOTS BOURDALOUE – Cook 16 apricot halves in a light vanilla-flavoured syrup. Remove, drain and arrange in a shallow ovenproof dish two-thirds filled with semolina cooked in milk and bound with 2 egg yolks (see SEMOLINA, English semolina pudding).

Cover the apricots with a light layer of semolina, sprinkle with the crumbs of 2 crushed macaroons and a teaspoon of fine powdered sugar. Put in a very hot oven for a few minutes to glaze the top.

Serve with an apricot and kirsch sauce (apricot jam thinned down with the syrup in which the apricots were cooked, strained and laced with a tablespoon of kirsch).

Apricots Bourdaloue II. ABRICOTS BOURDALOUE – Cook apricots lightly in syrup, halve them, and place on a layer of Frangipane cream (see FRANGIPANE) in an ovenproof dish or on a flan shell.

Sprinkle with crushed macaroons and melted butter, and glaze in the oven. Serve with an apricot and kirsch sauce as above.

Candied or crystallised apricots (apricot confits). ABRICOTS CONFITS – Choose very firm white apricots, of uniform size. Make a light incision at the opposite end to the stalk.

Put them, a few at a time, in a copper pan full of cold water, so that they are completely covered. Place the pan over a low flame. As soon as the apricots rise to the surface, take them out of the water with a perforated spoon and feel them to see if they are thoroughly softened; this is the blanching operation.

Soak the apricots for 12 hours in cold water, which should be changed every 2 hours.

Prepare the following syrup: 1 cup sugar to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups water, boiled to  $18^\circ$  by a syrup gauge (see SUGAR). Pour this boiling syrup over the drained apricots, which have been put back in the copper pan. Bring to the boil over a high flame.

Decant the apricots and syrup into an earthenware bowl and leave overnight.

Next day, drain the apricots and boil the syrup (it should not be above  $12^\circ$  on the syrup gauge). Add  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup sugar, and bring up to  $18^\circ$  on the syrup gauge. When it is boiling, add the apricots, bring again to the boil, and return to the earthenware bowl. (This operation is called 'giving a dressing'.) Continue to give a dressing in this manner every other day. When boiling, bring the syrup up by  $6^\circ$  each time. Add sugar and boil down when there is too much syrup, which must, however, completely cover the fruit each time.

When it comes up to  $30^\circ$  (average syrup density) – that is, after the third dressing – do not bring it up by more than  $4^\circ$ , and give the dressings only every 3 days. Proceed in this manner until the syrup reaches  $36^\circ$  (moderately thick).

Stone the apricots by inserting a copper needle at the stalk end and pushing the stone towards the incision made at the beginning of the operation. Some of the apricots may not look as good as the rest, perhaps by being slightly damaged during the stoning process. Cut these into small pieces and stuff them into the rest of the apricots to keep them in a round shape. Lay them in an earthenware bowl.

Bring the syrup to the boil, check the degree ( $36^\circ$ ), and pour it, still boiling, over the apricots. Leave to cool. Spoon the apricots and syrup into jars and cover with greaseproof paper, as you would jam. Keep the jars in a cool, dry place.

Candied apricots or apricot confits in brandy. ABRICOTS CONFITS À L'EAU-DE-VIE – Choose very small, firm apricots of uniform size. Blanch them as described in the recipe for candied apricots above. Soak them in cold water for an hour, drain, and put them in syrup, which should be brought up to  $25^\circ$  (see SUGAR). Leave them in the syrup at this degree for 4 days, then drain, and put them into preserving jars. Fill with the following mixture:

Syrup in which the fruit was candied, 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart).

Neutral alcohol, tasteless, of  $90^\circ$ , 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart).

Add a piece of vanilla pod, or 1 teaspoon vanilla essence or 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum or kirsch per 2 litres ( $3\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous 2 quarts) liquid. Mix well. When the jars have been filled, seal them with their special tops, or with cork lids.

Keep in a cool place, protected both from heat and humidity. At the end of one month the fruit will be ready for use.

Caramel apricots in brandy (petit fours). ABRICOTS (À L'EAU-DE-VIE) AU CARAMEL – Drain the preserved apricots as described in the recipe for Crystallised apricots (see below). Roll them in powdered gum arabic, then dip them, one by one, in sugar cooked to crack stage (see SUGAR).

Space them carefully on a slightly oiled marble slab, and when they are quite dry, put them into fluted paper cases.

Apricot charlotte – See CHARLOTTE, Fruit charlottes.

Colbert apricots. ABRICOTS COLBERT – Halve the apricots, remove the stones, and poach the fruit in a light syrup (flavoured with vanilla, if desired). Simmer gently from 8 to 10 minutes, depending on the ripeness of the fruit. Cool.

To serve, arrange the apricots in a fruit dish; add a few drops of kirsch to the syrup and pour it over the fruit.

For this compote the halved apricots can be peeled. To make the operation easier, dip the apricot halves for a few seconds into boiling water. Flavour the compote by adding to it a few of the kernels which have been extracted from the apricot stones, and blanched.

Apricot compote – See COMPOTE.

Apricots Conde (old recipe). ABRICOTS CONDÉ – Cook halved apricots in syrup. Drain, arrange on a savarin (q.v.) and top with apricot syrup flavoured with kirsch.

APRICOT

Garnish the middle of the savarin with a mixture of 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) cornmeal or maize flour cooked in a double boiler with scant litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 4 cups) scalded, sweetened, vanilla-flavoured milk, until thick. Dilute the mixture with cream. Make little cork-shaped croquettes from the corn meal or maize flour mixture, and place them round the savarin.

Apricots Condé I. ABRICOTS CONDÉ – Fill three-quarters of a shallow fireproof dish with Dessert rice (see RICE). Cook apricot halves in syrup, drain, and arrange them on the rice. Decorate with glacé cherries and angelica cut into lozenges. Heat thoroughly in the oven, and serve with Apricot and kirsch sauce (see SAUCE).

Apricots Condé (Scarnati)

Apricots Condé II. ABRICOTS CONDÉ – Arrange the apricot halves on a ring of Dessert rice (see RICE). Stud the apricots with halved, blanched almonds, and decorate with glacé cherries and lozenges of angelica. Heat through in the oven and serve with Apricot and kirsch sauce (see SAUCE).

Apricot coupe – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Apricot croûte. CROÛTE AUX ABRICOTS – Arrange a dozen or so slices of savarin in a circle on a dish, as described in the recipe for Fruit croûtes (see CROÛTES) replacing the pineapple slices by a layer of apricot jam spread evenly on the savarin slices.

Cook halved apricots in syrup, drain them, and lay them on the savarin slices. Decorate with crystallised fruit. Heat in the oven and serve with Apricot and kirsch sauce or Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Crystallised apricots in brandy (petits fours). ABRICOTS (À L'EAU-DE-VIE) CRISTALLISÉS – Use apricots which have been preserved in brandy (see Candied apricots in brandy). Lay the apricots on a flat sieve and drain for 2 hours. Melt a little gum arabic in water. Put the apricots in a bowl and pour the gum arabic over them, a little at a time, gently shaking the bowl until all the apricots are coated.

Remove them, one at a time, with cooking tongs, and roll them in crystallised sugar. Leave for an hour on a wire cake sieve, and when they are quite dry arrange them in paper cases.

Apricots à la diable. ABRICOTS À LA DIABLE – Spread the flat sides of 8 large macaroons with a layer of apricot jam flavoured with kirsch. Place them on a fireproof dish in a circle.

Cook the same number of apricots in syrup, drain, halve them, and place 2 halves on each macaroon. Spread over them a few teaspoons of Praline custard cream (see CREAMS). Sprinkle the apricots with fine sugar and glaze in a very hot oven.

When ready to serve, add to the dish a few tablespoons of apricot sauce laced with kirsch.

Apricots flambé in kirsch. ABRICOTS FLAMBÉS AU KIRSCH – Cook apricots in syrup, drain, halve them, and put 2 or 3 halves into individual fireproof dishes. Add to each dish 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) of the syrup in which the apricots were cooked, blended with some cornflour or arrowroot. Heat to boiling point.

When ready to serve, pour into each dish a teaspoon of kirsch and set it alight.

Apricot flan – See TART.

Apricot fritters – See FRITTERS.

Apricot ice cream – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Apricots à l'impératrice I. ABRICOTS À L'IMPÉRATRICE – Three-quarters fill a dessert dish with Rice à l'impératrice (see RICE). Set in a cold place, on ice, if possible. Cook a dozen apricots in a sugar syrup flavoured with vanilla, drain well, halve the apricots, and arrange them in a circle on the rice. Top them with a coating of redcurrant jelly (see JAMS AND JELLIES, Currant jelly). Decorate with cherries and lozenges of angelica. Keep on ice until ready to serve, then put the dish on a larger one covered with a napkin, and surround with crushed ice.

Apricots à l'impératrice II

Apricots à l'impératrice II. ABRICOTS À L'IMPÉRATRICE – Prepare Rice à l'impératrice (see RICE) in a charlotte mould. Turn it out into a shallow fruit bowl and arrange on it a circle of halved apricots, cooked in 'syrup and drained. Decorate with glacé cherries and lozenges of angelica. This method of presentation may be applied to all fruit desserts à l'impératrice.

The rice can also be served in a savarin mould, turned out onto a dish, the centre filled with cooked, drained half apricots.

Apricot jam – See JAMS AND JELLIES.

Apricot omelette. OMELETTE AUX ABRICOTS – See EGG, Omelette: Jam and fruit omelette.

Apricot oreillons. OREILLONS D'ABRICOTS – Halved apricots are called Apricot oreillons. They are bottled in water or a sugar syrup.

Apricot pudding. POUDING AUX ABRICOTS – See PUDDING, Fruit pudding.

Apricot omelette

Apricot sauce – See SAUCE, Dessert sauces.

Apricot soufflé – See SOUFFLÉS, Sweet soufflés.

Apricots preserved in syrup. CONSERVE D'ABRICOTS AU SIROP – The procedure is exactly the same as for Compote of apricots in syrup (see COMPOTE, Preserved fruit in compote).

Apricots preserved au naturel. CONSERVE D'ABRICOTS AU NATUREL – Pack the apricots into preserving jars without adding either water or sugar. Screw on the lids and sterilise for 15 to 20 minutes at 90°C. (194°F.).

Apricots with rice. ABRICOTS AU RIZ – Cook 1 cup rice in 2 cups sweetened milk which has been flavoured with vanilla. Place in a fruit dish. Cook halved apricots in a sugar syrup, stone them, and arrange on the bed of rice. Add a few tablespoons of apricot sauce, if desired. Serve hot or cold.

Apricots with rice and meringue. ABRICOTS MERINGUÉS AU RIZ – Cook 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) rice as for Dessert rice (see RICE) and arrange it in a thick layer on an ovenproof dish. Cook a dozen or so apricots in a sugar syrup flavoured with vanilla, halve and stone them. Arrange the halves in a circle on the rice. Cover with meringue (q.v.), smoothing the surface. Decorate with meringue piped round the edge.

Sprinkle with icing sugar and bake in a moderate oven, raising the temperature to very hot at the last moment to make the meringue golden brown. When baked, decorate the piped edge further with a little apricot and redcurrant jelly, alternating the colours. This dessert is usually served hot, but it can also be served cold.

Pineapple, bananas, cherries, peaches, pears and apples can be prepared in the same manner. The fruit should previously be poached in vanilla-flavoured syrup or stewed in butter; it can be used whole, halved, in slices, or diced.

Apricot tarts and tartlets – See TART, TARTLET.

APRICOTING. ABRICOTER – This is the term used in pâtisserie to define the operation which consists in covering a cake or sweet with a thin layer of apricot jam which has been boiled down to a thick consistency, flavoured with liqueur, and passed through a fine strainer.

Apron

APRON – A small fish, with a rounded, elongated body covered with very rough scales. Its head is flattened, the snout protrudes above its mouth, its dorsal fins are placed at a distance from each other, its gill slits are large.

Only two species of apron are known, one which is found in the Danube, and the common apron, which abounds in the Rhône and all its tributaries.

The apron rarely exceeds 18 cm. (7 inches) in length. The upper part of its body is yellowish brown streaked with darkish bands or stripes, which extend obliquely down its sides. Its belly is a greyish white, its fins are yellow spotted with grey. Its flesh is very succulent and resembles that of perch, and it is much appreciated by gastronomes. For culinary preparation see PERCH.

ARAB COOKERY – See ALGERIA.

ARAPEDE – French name for a univalve shellfish commonly found in Provence. It is prepared in the same way as cockles.

ARBOIS – A small town in the Jura (Franche-Comté) which has given its name to highly esteemed white, red and rosé wines. (See FRANCHE-COMTÉ.)

ARBOLADE – Once a most popular dessert. Here is La Varenne's recipe for it: 'Melt a little butter in a pan and add yolks of egg, pear juice, sugar and a pinch of salt. Cook together, then sweeten with flower water. Colour a pale green and serve.'

ARBUTUS BERRY. ARBOUSE – Fruit of the cane apple, a shrub which is found in profusion in the southern parts of North America, Mexico, southern Europe and the Canary Islands.

This shrub, which is grown in some parts of southern France, mainly in the Languedoc, is also known as strawberry tree. It owes this name to the shape and colour of its fruit, which resembles the strawberry but has neither its scent nor its melting flesh.

Italy, Spain and Algeria are the main suppliers of wine and spirits distilled from the arbutus berry.

Besides wine and spirits, the fruit of this berry also yields a liqueur called crème d'arboise, which has the reputation of being helpful to digestion.

The berries are very fleshy when ripe; they are sweet, and have a faintly acid after-taste. They are reputed to be astringent and diuretic.

ARCA – A bivalve mollusc commonly known as arch. Its shells, which are of rather a dark colour, are found on all the coasts of France.

This mollusc is eaten raw or prepared in the same way as mussels.

ARCACHON – This town, situated on the southern shores of the Bassin d'Arcachon (an inlet of the Bay of Biscay), is dear to the heart of gastronomes and lovers of oysters, for Arcachon is famous for its magnificent oyster beds (and for its *grave*tes in particular).

ARCANETTE – Name given in Lorraine to a species of small local teal. It differs from an ordinary teal and from garganey in that it does not migrate, and is found in its native land all the year round. Its flight is short but swift. Arcanette shooting is like duck shooting, the two species being of similar behaviour.

The flesh of this species of teal is excellent and much appreciated by gastronomes. In taste it can be compared with that of wild duck. For culinary preparation see DUCK.

ARCH – See ARCA.

ARCHANGELICA. ARCHANGÉLIQUE – See ANGELICA.

ARCHESTRATUS – Greek poet of about 350 B.C., who was a very great gastronome, it is said. He was the author of a work in verse, Gastronomy, of which only a few short fragments have survived.

Archestratus was born, it is believed, in Athens, although some say in Gela, an ancient town in southern Sicily; and he lived for a long time in Syracuse. He was chiefly renowned for the numerous voyages he made to collect notes on culinary methods and the eating habits of different nations.

Archestratus is sometimes referred to as a cook. From the writings of authors of the time it is apparent that he was more of a gastronome and an able writer, not a cookery technician. He can be described as the Brillat-Savarin of his time.

The most reliable data we have concerning this poet-gastronome comes from Deipnosophistai or Specialists in Dining by Athenaeus, a work translated into French from the Latin text by Michel de Marolles in 1680. There we find all that pertains to gastronomy, food production, cookery and ceremonial banquets.

Here is what Barthélemy, inspired by Athenaeus, says of Archestratus:

'This author was a friend of one of Pericles' sons. He crossed many lands and seas to find out for himself what was the best they had to offer. In his voyages he did not study the customs and manners of peoples, which it is useless to study since it is impossible to change them, but went into the places where the delights of the table were manufactured, and had no dealings except with people who catered for these pleasures. His poem is a shining treasure, and does not contain a single verse which is not a plea for gastronomy.'

ARCHIDUC (À L') – A term applying to a great number of preparations. Dishes à l'archiduc are usually seasoned with paprika and blended with cream. (See EGGS; CHICKEN, Chicken sauté Archduke.)

ARCHIL (Orchil, Dyer's moss). ORSEILLE – Purplish-red paste made from lichen, used as colouring matter. It is mainly used for tinting pickled tongue – langue à l'écarlate.

ARDENNAISE (À L') – A term applying mostly to dishes of small birds cooked in a cocotte with juniper berries. (See THRUSH.)

The same name also applies to a method of preparing crayfish (q.v.).

ARDOISE (Slate) – Slang name given to the bills for meals taken in cheap restaurants; in days gone by, these bills were written on a slate.

ARENGA (Sugar palm) – A genus of palm tree. Its trunk contains abundant pith, which produces a large quantity of starchy matter, obtained by making an incision on the trunk, from which sago (q.v.) is prepared.

From the clusters, which develop all the year round between the lower leaves, there is a flow of sweet sap which, by simple evaporation, furnishes a kind of sugar of a brownish colour, and, by a process of fermentation, a palm wine.

In England and in some parts of France, where imported sago is to be had, fruit of the sugar palm, gathered green, is candied, and is much valued as a stomach remedy.

ARGENTEUIL – Asparagus cultivated in the Argenteuil region, in Seine-et-Oise, enjoys a world-wide reputation.

Nowadays, Argenteuil exports its 'cuttings' and spreads the renown of its asparagus with the help of the 'Confraternity of the Argenteuil asparagus'. (See ASPARAGUS.)

Argenteuil wine once rivalled that of Suresnes. A few casks of it are still produced annually.

ARGUS PHEASANT – Bird thus called because of the great number of 'eyes' on its magnificent plumage. It bears some resemblance to the peacock, and is found in Java and Sumatra.

The flesh of argus pheasant is very delicate. All the methods of preparation given for pheasant (q.v.) are also applicable to argus pheasant.

ARIÈGE – The Ariège département of France, situated on the Spanish frontier between Haute-Garonne in the west and Pyrénées-Orientales in the east, is chiefly famous for the mineral waters of the thermal springs at the spas of Ax and Aulus.

Among Ariège culinary specialities there are many good dishes; above all, those rich in fat meat.

Excellent Confits d'oie (see CONFIT) are made in this region. The Ariège geese have a very fine flesh. Ariège pork is also of high quality, and is made into good charcuterie; Ariège hams and sausages are famous. (See LANGUEDOC.)

ARIÈGEOISE (À L') – Name given to various dishes almost all of which include the following ingredients as garnish: green cabbage and pickled pork, and sometimes kidney beans. (See CHICKEN, Stuffed chicken à l'ariégeoise; MUTTON, Stuffed breast of mutton à l'ariégeoise.)

ARLEQUIN (Harlequin) – The arlequin is (or rather was, for it is almost a thing of the past) an assortment of scraps of food, bought from bottle washers or washers-up in restaurants.

The scraps were made to look palatable and sold to people of small means, who could, for a few sous, have the illusion of eating a good meal.

These bits and pieces were also called bijoux – jewels.

Privat d'Anglemont says: 'Arlequin is so called because these dishes are composed of bits and pieces, thrown together in a haphazard fashion, just like the parti-coloured tights of the citizen of Bergamo. A bucket of pieces costs 3 francs; there you can find everything, from truffled chicken and game to beef and cabbage.'

ARLES – Many famous gastronomic products originate in this city and its neighbourhood, situated in the south of France.

Chief among them is the celebrated saucisson d'Arles (Arles sausage), but the region also produces excellent oil. (See PROVENCE.)

ARLÉSIENNE (À L') – The name applies to dishes some of which have a garnish of aubergines fried in oil, sautéed tomatoes, and onion rings dredged in flour and fried.

Another garnish consists of whole small tomatoes peeled and cooked in butter, and very tender pickled endive hearts fried in oil.

Yet another garnish consists of small tomatoes stuffed with pilaf and browned on top, large olives stuffed with chicken forcemeat, and new potatoes.

ARMADILLO. TATOU – Small toothless mammal covered with scales, found in South America. It is about the size of a guinea-pig, but more highly esteemed as meat.

ARMAGNAC – Region in the old province of Gascony, now almost entirely included in the département of Gers. The Armagnac brandies are famous. Armagnac (which is even shaped like a vine leaf) is divided into three zones: lower Armagnac, upper Armagnac, and Ténarèze. (See SPIRITS.)

ARMORICAINE – Armorica (older Aremorica) was the ancient name for a region in north-west France comprising the coast of Gaul, between the Seine and Loire rivers.

Armoricaine nowadays is the name given to a very choice variety of oysters (q.v.).

ARMORICAINE (À L') – Corruption by certain authors of the name of dishes called à l'américaine, particularly lobster. As a result of this corruption, the dish, so typically Provençal, has been placed under the patronage of legendary Armorica.

AROMA. AROME – Gastronomically speaking, this word describes the characteristic fragrance of various dishes. The word aroma is stronger than either odour or smell. The word parfume, on the other hand, is more specifically reserved for essences and other non-edible substances. It is right and proper that gastronomic literature should have a terminology of its own. We say, the aroma of this consommé, the aroma of this fumet (q.v.), the aroma of this coffee.

AROMATIC PLANTS. PLANTES AROMATIQUES – A great number of aromatic plants, with either a bland or pungent aroma, are used as flavourings in cookery.

The following are among the herbs most commonly used in the kitchen: parsley, chervil, tarragon, rosemary, thyme, bay leaf, wild thyme, sage, savoury; and the following are the most common aromatics: garlic, shallots, spring onions, chives and onions.

AROMATICS. AROMATES – Taken in its general sense, this word describes all substances which give out an odour of varying degrees of sweetness. The greatest number of aromatics is provided by plants of hot countries, notably Arabia. We are only concerned here with aromatics used in cookery, pâtisserie and confectionery.

Without indulging in the excesses of ancient practice, when scents like rose water and benzoin were used on every possible occasion, present-day cookery has at its disposal a great number of aromatics. The following are among those most widely used as condiments: dill, betel pepper, cinnamon, cloves, coriander, bay leaf, mace, mustard, nutmeg, pepper and thyme. Next come the aromatics used mostly for flavouring food: ambergris, anise, star anise, basil, cumin, fennel, juniper, ginger, horseradish, rosemary, sage, etc.

Some aromatic plants are frequently used fresh, for instance: chervil, tarragon, parsley, etc. The essence extracted from the peel of oranges, lemons and tangerines is also used. Pâtisserie and confectionery, in addition to the aromatics mentioned, also use vanilla, tea, chocolate and coffee.

Garlic, spring onions, shallots and onions are dealt with under separate entries in their alphabetical order, as well as the aromatic roots of carrot, celery and parsnip, which are really more vegetables than aromatics.

(French Government Tourist Office)

Medical opinion concerning the use of aromatics in cookery varies. Some doctors denounce it, others tolerate it, and yet others insist upon it. Formerly the use of aromatics and strong seasoning was abused. Modern cookery has, in large measure, done away with these excesses.

Aromatherapia (treatment for maladies by the use of plants) is now being successfully practised, often simply incorporated in the daily diet. (See SEASONING, CONDIMENTS.)

AROMATISE. AROMATISER – To impart some aroma to a culinary preparation or a pastry. Pastries are also aromatised with liqueurs.

ARPENTEUR – Common French name for plover.

ARQUEBUSE – An old liqueur made of various aromatic plants.

Eau d'arquebuse – Also known under the name of eau d'arquebusade. This beverage is obtained by infusion or maceration of vulnerary plants (kidney vetch, lady's finger, wound-wort).

ARRACACHA or ARRACACIA – Plant, native of Columbia, which grows in the Andes and in North America.

Its roots, which are farinaceous, produce a flour which is eaten in its country of origin. The roots can also be cooked like yams and sweet potatoes (q.v.).

The starch which is extracted from the roots of the arracacha is similar to arrowroot.

ARRACK. ARACK – Name given to a spirit distilled from fermented rice. Arrack is also distilled either from sugar and coconut milk left to ferment, or from the juice which seeps through incisions made on the coconut palm. In Réunion Island, in Madagascar and in most parts of the South African sub-continent, where sugar cane is cultivated, the name of arrack is also given to a spirit distilled from fermented cane juice (sugar cane juice squeezed out under a press).

ARROWROOT – Name given to starchy extracts obtained from the roots of various plants of the tropical regions.

There is a legend that this name originated because the Indians considered the sap obtained from the roots capable of healing wounds caused by arrows. Hence the name in English, 'arrow-root'. The fact is, however, that arrowroot takes its name from the American Indian word for flour-root, araruta.

The chief of these starches is the West Indian arrowroot (Maranta arundinacea), thus called because the plant from which the flour is produced originated in the West Indies. The English introduced it into India and it is also called West Indian salep.

The plant also grows in Madagascar.

Arrowroot is eminently edible and is imported into Europe in great quantities. This very delicate starch is used in thickening soups and gravies, as well as in the preparation of blancmanges, milk puddings and numerous sweet dishes.

Easily digestible, arrowroot is especially valued as a food for young children, invalids and the aged.

Arrowroot liaison. LIAISON À L'ARROWROOT – Pour into 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) boiling veal (or other) stock, 1 tablespoon arrowroot, well blended with a little cold stock or water. Mix, bring to the boil and strain.

Arrowroot porridge. BOUILLIE À L'ARROWROOT – Mix 3 tablespoons (¾ cup) arrowroot with 3 tablespoons (¾ cup) cold milk taken from 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups). Bring the remainder of the milk to the boil, adding either 1 teaspoon salt or 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) sugar. Pour some of the hot milk onto the arrowroot, then return to the pan and cook gently from 8 to 10 minutes, stirring from time to time. Stock can be used instead of milk.

Arrowroot pudding. POUDING À L'ARROWROOT – See PUDDING, Semolina pudding.

ARSENIC – An element which is normally present in minute quantities in the tissues of the human body (thyroid gland, thymus gland, mammary gland, head and body hair). Certain vegetables (kohlrabi, turnips, certain cereals), sea fish, sea salt, milk and egg yolk contain small quantities of it, sufficient for the requirements of the organism.

ARTAGNAN (À LA D') – Name of a garnish composed of cèpes prepared à la béarnaise (see SAUCE), little stuffed tomatoes and cork-shaped potato croquettes.

This garnish is served with large or small pieces of meat and with poultry.

ARTICHOKE. ARTICHAUT – Vegetable derived from the cardoon, vastly improved by scientific methods.

This plant has been cultivated in France since the beginning of the sixteenth century and is mentioned by Rabelais. It originated in Sicily, and was brought to France by Catherine de Medici, who ate so many of them that she 'cuyda crever' ('almost burst'). (Journal of P. de l'Estoile)

The principal regions of French production are in the west (Brittany and Anjou); the south-east (Provence and the Hyères region); the Garonne valley; the Paris region; and Roussillon. The most sought after are the large green artichokes of Laon, the camus of Brittany, the violet artichoke of Provence, the green (or 'white') variety of the same region, and the large macau.

The green and the violet Provençal artichokes are also cultivated in North Africa and exported to France at the beginning of the season. The bulk of French production takes place in the months of May and June.

The artichoke is a health-giving food, and lends itself to numerous delicious dishes. When it is young, and therefore very tender, it is eaten raw, à la croque-au-sel which means with 'nought but a grain of salt', à la poivrade, and à la vinaigrette (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE).

Artichoke hearts, cooked and chilled, make one of the best garnishes for cold dishes. They can be stuffed with various ingredients. They are also served as an hors-d'œuvre. (See also JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE.)

WHOLE ARTICHOKE. ARTICHAUTS ENTIERS

Artichokes barigoule. ARTICHAUTS BARIGOULE – Prepare the artichokes as described in Whole boiled artichokes below.

Fill the insides with a duxelles (q.v.) mixture, adding to it a quarter of its volume in finely shredded fat bacon, the same amount of chopped lean ham, and some chopped parsley.

Surround the artichokes with rashers or strips of fat bacon, and braise them as described in the recipe for Large braised artichokes stuffed au gras (see below). Finish as described in that recipe.

Note. A variant of this recipe consists of cooking the stuffed artichokes in oil with a little white wine.

In home cookery, in the absence of Demi-glaze (see SAUCE), the braising liquor can be thickened with Kneaded butter (see BUTTER).

Whole boiled artichokes. ARTICHAUTS ENTIERS BOUILLIS – Cut off the stalks, pull off the hard outer leaves and trim them. Shorten them evenly, cutting off the tops to two-thirds of their height. Wash, tie with string round the largest circumference, and put them, bases downwards, into a saucepan of boiling salted water.

Cook, keeping the water boiling, until done; the time depends on the size and freshness of the artichokes. Drain, dry on a cloth, remove the string. Serve as indicated in the recipe chosen.

The artichokes must not be overcooked. To ensure this, test the bottom of the vegetable, which should 'give' under very light pressure when cooked sufficiently. If the artichokes are to be served cold, put them in cold water as soon as they are cooked.

Boiled artichokes with various cold sauces. ARTICHAUTS BOUILLIS – Boil, cool and serve with one of the following sauces: Mayonnaise, Mustard, Tartare, Vinaigrette (see SAUCE).

To serve artichokes cold, cook them, scoop out the choke, and remove the leaves which surround it. Replace them in the cavity left by the removal of the choke. Season these leaves with a pinch of chopped chervil and parsley.

Boiled artichokes with various hot sauces. ARTICHAUTS BOUILLIS – Boil as described in the recipe for Whole boiled artichokes, and serve with one of the following sauces: White, Butter, Cream, Hollandaise, Mousseline (see SAUCE).

Large braised artichokes stuffed au gras (with meat). GROS ARTICHAUTS BRAISÉS FARCIS AU GRAS – Pare and trim the artichokes. Blanch for 5 minutes in boiling salted water. Plunge into cold water or leave under a running tap to cool; drain and remove the choke.

Season, stuff as desired, wrap them in a thin rasher, or slice, of fat bacon, and tie with string. Melt some butter in a sauté pan, put in finely shredded bacon, onions and carrots, and place the artichokes on this foundation. Season and add a bouquet garni (q.v.).

Simmer in butter and a small quantity of white wine until the liquor is almost completely boiled down; then add a few tablespoons of veal stock and cook in a moderate oven 180°C. (350°F., Gas Mark 4), with the lid on the pan for 55 to 60 minutes. Baste frequently during cooking.

Drain the artichokes, remove string and bacon, and place the artichokes on a dish. Strain the liquor in which they were cooked and skim off surplus fat. Strain again, add Demi-glaze (see SAUCE), veal stock or any other sauce, according to the recipe. Boil down the liquor and pour over the artichokes.

Large braised artichokes stuffed au maigre (without meat). GROS ARTICHAUX BRAISÉS FARCIS AU MAIGRE – Proceed as described above, leaving out the bacon and replacing veal stock by vegetable stock.

Small braised artichokes. PETITS ARTICHAUX BRAISÉS – These are served as a garnish and as a vegetable. Choose very young small artichokes; pare them, trim off the stalks evenly and rub the bottoms with lemon; blanch in boiling water to which has been added salt and vinegar. Dip in cold water to cool, and drain. Place them, bases downwards, in a buttered sauté pan, or heavy frying pan, on a foundation of vegetables, as described in the recipe for Large braised artichokes. Cook over a low heat with the lid on for about 10 minutes, and finish cooking as described above.

Drain the artichokes, and use as indicated. Strain the braising liquor, reduce, skim off surplus fat, and pour this sauce over the artichokes.

Note. Small braised artichokes can also be prepared au maigre (without meat) by following the instructions given for large braised artichokes au maigre.

One can put the artichokes into a buttered sauté pan without blanching, provided one works quickly enough to prevent their going black.

Artichokes Clamart. ARTICHAUX CLAMART – Choose 12 very small young artichokes; trim them and put them in a sauté pan, or heavy frying pan, with plenty of butter.

Add 225 g. (8 oz., 2 cups) shelled fresh garden peas and 2 shredded lettuce hearts. Season with salt and sugar. Moisten with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) water. Cook with the lid on, simmering gently. At the last moment, add a tablespoon of fresh butter.

This vegetable, being delicate and fragile, can be prepared in a bi-metal or aluminium sauté pan, or in an earthenware or enamelware cocotte, and served in the same dish (to avoid damage when transferring the artichokes to a dish for table).

Artichokes Crécy. ARTICHAUX CRÉCY – Proceed as described in the preceding recipe, replacing peas and lettuce by an equal quantity of young peeled carrots.

Artichokes à la diable or Carciofo à l'Inferno (Italian cookery). ARTICHAUX À LA DIABLE – Lightly trim the tips of very tender, medium-sized artichokes. Remove the choke, blanch and drain. Fill the artichokes with a mixture of breadcrumbs, chopped garlic, capers and parsley, and season with salt and pepper.

Put into a sauté pan with oil, packing them in closely. Sprinkle generously with olive oil and season again. Cook in the oven, uncovered, basting frequently. When cooked, the artichokes should be crisp at the tips.

Arrange on a dish and sprinkle with the oil in which they were cooked.

Dried artichokes. CONSERVE D'ARTICHAUX SÉCHÉS – Trim the artichokes and blanch them for 5 minutes in water to which lemon juice has been added.

Drain them, and put to dry on trays in the sun, or in a slow oven. (They can also be threaded on a string and dried in the open air.)

For this method of preserving artichokes, the blanching water must not be salted, otherwise saline particles would impregnate the artichokes, drawing humidity and thereby preventing desiccation.

Fried artichokes – See below Artichoke hearts fried in batter.

Artichoke fritters. BEIGNETS D'ARTICHAUX – These can be served as hors-d'œuvre or as a vegetable. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Fritters.)

Artichokes à la lyonnaise. ARTICHAUX À LA LYONNAISE –

Proceed as described in the recipe for Artichokes barigoule, replacing the duxelles mixture by sausage meat with a quarter of its weight of chopped, lightly fried onion and chopped parsley added to it.

Artichokes à la ménagère. ARTICHAUX À LA MÉNAGÈRE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Artichokes barigoule, replacing the duxelles mixture by chopped boiled beef mixed with finely shredded fresh bacon and chopped parsley.

Artichokes mirepoix. ARTICHAUX MIREPOIX – Put 12 small artichokes, prepared as described in the recipe for Artichokes Clamart, into a sauté pan on a foundation of 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint, scant cup) Vegetable mirepoix (see MIREPOIX), mixed with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) lean ham cut into tiny dice.

Simmer for 5 minutes over a low flame, keeping the pan uncovered. Moisten with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine. Simmer for 5 minutes, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) veal stock, cover with a lid and simmer for 35 minutes.

Serve in a vegetable dish. Pour the mirepoix over the artichokes, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Pickled artichokes. CONSERVE D'ARTICHAUX – Trim freshly gathered artichokes. Put them, whole or in quarters, in water to which lemon juice has been added. Blanch them in salted water, allowing 10 per cent of salt. Allow 10 minutes for whole artichokes and 5 minutes for quarters. Drain and refresh in cold water.

Drain them again, put into cans, and pour in the following pickling brine:

For 20 litres (4 gallons, 5 gallons) water, 1 kg. (2 lb.) well-refined salt and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) lemon juice.

Weight of cans	Cooking time with 110° C. (230° F.) pressure steriliser	Cooking time in a bain-marie or canning kettle
500 g. (1 lb.)	30 minutes	1 hour
1 kg. (2½ lb.)	40 minutes	1½ hours
2 kg. (4½ lb.)	60 minutes	2 hours

Pickled artichokes à la grecque. CONSERVE D'ARTICHAUX À LA GRECQUE – This is a pickle for which only small artichokes are used. Large artichokes have to be cut into quarters, which changes the aspect of this hors-d'œuvre.

Method. Pare and trim 100 small artichokes of the same size. As they are trimmed, plunge them into the following previously prepared mixture:

5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts) water; 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) olive oil; 1½ tablespoons coriander; 1 teaspoon peppercorns; 1½ tablespoons salt; a large bouquet garni composed of thyme, bay leaf, fennel and a stalk of celery; and the juice of 10 lemons strained through a muslin bag. Bring the artichokes to the boil and continue boiling for 8 to 10 minutes.

For a smaller quantity (20 artichoke hearts or quarters), see Artichokes à la grecque (HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre). Cook for 8 to 10 minutes.

Transfer them, with their liquor, to a large earthenware crock and allow to cool. Put into 1- or ½-litre (2- or 1-lb.) cans. Fill with the liquor to within the width of a finger from the top. Seal hermetically.

Place in a boiler, and boil 20 minutes for the ½-litre (1-lb.) cans and 30 minutes for the 1-litre (2-lb.) cans.

Artichokes à la poivrade – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE.

Purée of artichokes for garnish. PURÉE D'ARTICHAUX – Half-cook artichoke hearts in a white vegetable court-bouillon (q.v.), and simmer in butter. Rub through a fine sieve. Heat the purée and add butter or cream, as directed in the recipe. If required, thicken its consistency by adding an equal amount of potato purée.

Preparing artichoke hearts (Scarnati)

Purée of artichokes soubisée for garnishes. PURÉE D'ARTICHAUTS SOUBISÉE – Proceed as described in the preceding recipe. Add to the artichoke purée one third of its volume of Onion soubisée (see PURÉE).

Artichoke salad – See SALAD, Mixed salads.

Artichoke soufflé – See SOUFFLÉS, Soufflé of various vegetables.

Artichoke stalks. MOELLE D'ARTICHAUT – Peel the stalks of large artichokes, taking care to remove all the woody casing. Cut them into sticks 5 cm. (2 inches) long. Blanch in salt water flavoured with lemon.

When they are blanched, artichoke stalks can be prepared in various ways; simmered in butter or cream in a covered pan; in fritots (q.v.); à la grecque (q.v.); curried; with gravy.

ARTICHOKE HEARTS. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS – Artichoke hearts prepared as described below can be served as a vegetable or as a garnish. When sliced and blended with a sauce, white or brown, they should be served in a vegetable dish, in a gratin dish, or in a croustade (q.v.), timbale, or vol-au-vent cases. For preparation of the hearts see Artichoke hearts in court-bouillon below.

Artichoke hearts à l'allemande. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS À L'ALLEMANDE – Blanch the artichokes lightly and stew in butter. Transfer into a vegetable dish and cover with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

If the artichoke hearts are too big, cut them into slices.

Artichoke hearts à la béchamel. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA BÉCHAMEL – Proceed as above, using Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Artichoke hearts cooked in butter – FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS ÉTUVÉS AU BEURRE – Pare and trim the artichokes as described in the next recipe. Rub them with lemon, and blanch for 10 minutes in boiling salt water to which a few drops of lemon juice have been added.

Drain, put the artichokes in a well-buttered sauté pan, season, sprinkle with melted butter, and cook with the lid on the pan for 18 to 25 minutes, according to their size. Use as indicated in the recipe chosen.

Artichoke hearts in court-bouillon. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS AU BLANC – Strip off the outside leaves on medium-sized artichokes. Trim them as evenly as possible, leaving only the fleshy middle part. Remove the choke, trim the hearts and rub them with lemon. Put into cold water as each one is trimmed.

Cook the hearts in boiling white vegetable court-bouillon (q.v.). They can be blanched or cooked until soft, according to the final dish chosen. Drain well.

Artichoke hearts à la crème. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA CRÈME – Proceed as above. As soon as the artichoke hearts are cooked, pour boiling cream over them. Simmer down by half. Transfer the artichoke hearts to a vegetable dish. Add butter to the sauce, strain it, and pour over the artichokes.

A prepared cream sauce can also be used for pouring over the hearts (see SAUCE, Cream sauce).

Artichoke hearts fines herbes. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS FINES HERBES – Blanch lightly, slice, and fry in butter in a shallow pan. Transfer to a vegetable dish, and sprinkle with chopped chervil and parsley.

If the artichokes are very young and tender, slice them raw and fry in butter before sprinkling with the chervil and parsley.

Artichoke hearts fried in batter. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS EN FRITOT – Blanch the artichoke hearts, slice them, and marinate in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and fines herbes (q.v.). When required, dip them in batter and deep-fry.

Drain, season with fine salt, arrange them in a heap on a folded napkin, and garnish with fried parsley.

Garnished artichoke hearts. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS GARNIS – Artichoke hearts used principally as a garnish for hot and cold dishes can be filled with various mixtures. Here are the main ingredients which can be added to them: for hot dishes, the artichoke hearts, cooked in white vegetable court-bouillon (q.v.) and simmered in butter, are filled at the last moment with vegetables or other ingredients, but are not put in the oven to brown the tops as recommended for stuffed artichoke hearts.

Artichoke hearts intended as a garnish for cold dishes are cooked in this court-bouillon, drained, dried, and filled with various vegetables which have been set in a jelly. Or they can be seasoned with vinaigrette, mayonnaise or other salpicons (q.v.).

Artichoke hearts can also be covered with aspic jelly or Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE).

Filled artichoke hearts as garnish for cold dishes – Fill the hearts with various butters which have been pounded with any of the following: caviar, shrimps, crayfish and other shellfish, hard-boiled eggs, fish and shellfish purées, various salpicons, etc.

Filled artichoke hearts as garnish for hot dishes – Anversoise: hop shoots in cream; argenteuil: purée of white asparagus; bretonne: purée of kidney beans; Compoint: purée of green asparagus; Conti: lentil purée; écossaise: brunoise (q.v.) of carrots, celery, French beans and onions; macédoine of vegetables in butter; princess: asparagus tips and diced truffles; Saint-Germain: purée of fresh garden peas; thick sauces such as béarnaise, Choron, Henri IV, paloise; Vichy: carrots à la Vichy. (For sauces see SAUCE.)

Artichoke hearts à la hollandaise. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA HOLLANDAISE – Cook in Court-bouillon IV (see COURT-BOUILLON), drain, put in a vegetable dish and cover with Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Artichoke hearts Mornay. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS MORNAY – Simmer in butter in a covered pan. Put in a fireproof dish which has been coated with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Cover the artichoke hearts with the same sauce, sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and melted butter, and brown the top.

Pickled artichoke hearts. CONSERVE DE FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS – Choose small, tender artichokes. Trim them with a special peeler or by hand and put them as they are trimmed into water with lemon juice added. Blanch them for 5 minutes in salted water (8 per cent solution). Drain, and refresh in cold water.

Drain again, put into cans, and pour over the same pickling brine as for Pickled artichokes (see above).

Artichoke hearts stuffed à la cévenole. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS FARCIS À LA CÉVENOLE – Blanch the artichoke hearts, drain, and simmer in butter. Garnish with a Chestnut purée flavoured with Onion soubise (see PURÉE). Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and melted butter, and brown the top.

Artichoke hearts stuffed à la chalonnaise. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS FARCIS À LA CHALONNAISE – As above, with Salpicon à la chalonnaise (see SALPICON).

Artichoke hearts stuffed à la duxelles. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS FARCIS À LA DUXELLES – As above, with very thick duxelles (q.v.).

Artichoke hearts stuffed à la florentine. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS FARCIS À LA FLORENTINE – Simmer the artichoke hearts in butter, and fill them with spinach that has also been simmered in butter. Pour Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) over the artichokes, sprinkle with grated cheese, and brown the top.

Artichoke hearts stuffed à la lyonnaise. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS FARCIS À LA LYONNAISE – As above. Stuff the artichokes with sausage meat and chopped onion which have been lightly fried in butter.

Artichoke hearts stuffed à la niçoise. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS FARCIS À LA NIÇOISE – Blanch the artichoke hearts, fry them in oil, and fill with Tomato fondue (see TOMATO). Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter, and brown the top.

Artichoke hearts stuffed Piémontaise. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS PIÉMONTAISE – Simmer in butter in a covered pan.

Fill with Risotto à la Piémontaise (see RICE), sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese, and brown the top.

Artichoke hearts stuffed Soubise. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS FARCIS SOUBISE – As above, with a thick Onion soubise (see PURÉE).

ARTICHOKE QUARTERS. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS – Pare and trim medium-sized artichokes and cut them into quarters. Trim them carefully, rub with lemon, and blanch for 6 minutes in boiling water to which salt and lemon juice have been added. Cool under a cold running tap and drain until quite dry.

In addition to the specific recipes given in this section, most of those given for small artichokes, and some of those given for artichoke hearts, can be applied to artichoke quarters.

Artichoke quarters in butter. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS AU BEURRE – Blanch quarters of 6 artichokes and put them in a well-buttered heavy pan. Season, and moisten with 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) water. Sprinkle with a tablespoon of melted butter, bring to the boil, cover with a lid and simmer gently for 30 to 35 minutes. Serve in a vegetable dish, pouring the juices from the pan over the artichokes.

Artichoke quarters aux fines herbes. – QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS AUX FINES HERBES – Prepare as in the recipe for Artichoke quarters in butter. Put in a vegetable dish. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) white wine, and boil down. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) thickened veal stock and boil for a few moments. Strain this sauce, and add to it 1 tablespoon melted butter, a few drops of lemon juice and 1 tablespoon chopped fines herbes (q.v.). Pour the sauce over the artichoke quarters.

Note. This recipe can also be prepared au maigre (without stock). Proceed as described in the recipe for artichoke quarters in butter, but finish off with lemon juice and chopped fines herbes.

Artichoke quarters fried in batter. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS EN FRITOT – Trim, blanch and marinate artichoke quarters. Proceed as described in the recipe for Artichoke hearts fried in batter.

Artichoke quarters à la grecque. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA GRECQUE – Trim artichoke quarters, and proceed as described in the recipe for Pickled artichokes à la grecque. These are served as cold hors-d'œuvre.

Artichoke quarters à l'italienne. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS À L'ITALIENNE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Artichoke quarters aux fines herbes. Finish off with Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Artichoke quarters au jus. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS AU JUS – Proceed as described in the recipe for Artichoke quarters aux fines herbes, but omit the herbs.

Artichoke quarters à la lyonnaise. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA LYONNAISE – Proceed as described for Artichoke quarters aux fines herbes. Finish off with Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Artichoke quarters à la moelle. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA MOELLE – Cook the artichoke quarters as described for those au jus. Finish off with Marrow sauce (see SAUCE), and garnish with thin slices of bone-marrow which have been poached and drained.

Artichoke quarters à la portugaise. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA PORTUGAISE – Simmer the quarters in 4 tablespoons (½ cup) oil, together with 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) chopped onions. Add 2 peeled and pounded tomatoes, and a little grated garlic and chopped parsley. Cook in an uncovered pan, simmering gently. Serve in a vegetable dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

ARTICHOKE, WINTER. ARTICHAUT D'HIVER – Another name for Jerusalem artichoke (q.v.).

ARTOCARPUS. ARTOCARPE – See BREADFRUIT TREE.

ARTOIS AND BOULONNAIS – The principal food resources of this ancient province of France come from the sea.

Boulogne is the most important fishing port in France, with the best supply of herring and mackerel. Whole convoys of lorries carrying mackerel, herring, gurnet (gurnard) and other fish leave this seaport every day with supplies of fish for all parts of France.

The climate of this region, rather variable, is damp and not suitable for fruit growing, so not much fruit is found there, except cider apples. Cider, together with beer, is the main beverage of the region.

Artois market gardens produce very good vegetables. Those from around Saint-Omar are particularly fine. Good quality beef and mutton are produced in Artois; but poultry and game are only of average quality.

Rivers and ponds abound in fish of all kinds. Magnificent salmon is found in the estuaries of the small coastal rivers, and, in the Canche, trout with flesh of great delicacy.

Culinary specialities – These are not very numerous. Almost all of them are based on seafood – fish and shellfish. The principal specialities of the region are: andouilles (q.v.) d'Arras and various charcuterie such as saucisses de campagne (country sausages); black (blood) puddings; Valenciennes longue.

Beer soup and leek soup, the latter very popular in Artois and in Flanders; hotch-potch, a dish of Flemish origin and woodcock pâté of Montreuil-sur-Mer – excellent dishes which are not often made nowadays; wild rabbit with prunes or raisins, a speciality of Valenciennes; goose à la flamande; jellied eel; the caudière de Berck, a kind of matelote similar to the chaudrée of Aunis.

But Boulogne is, above all, the town of herring and mackerel – this can be traced back to the ninth century. The herring industry – herring dried, smoked, pickled or sold ready for serving – has assumed enormous proportions.

Canned mackerel also come from Boulogne, and are often eaten as hors-d'œuvre.

Among the pastries and confectionery products of the region are the Arras hearts and caramels, the Lille délices, the Cambrai bêtises, and the Berck chiques.

ARUM MACULATUM – This plant is also known under the names of lords and ladies, cuckoo-pint, calf's foot and wake-robin. In French it is known as chou-poivre (pepper-cabbage) because of the acridity of its leaves and roots. In the U.S.A. it is sometimes called wild ginger for the same reason.

The roots are much valued by the Arabs, who cook them on hot cinders.

ASAFOETIDA – Resinous gum of a species of oriental palm. In spite of its offensive smell, some people in the East and Far East use it as a condiment. The Romans added it to many dishes under the name of sylphium or silphion.

Gastronomic map of Artois and Boulonnais

ASBESTOS. AMIANTE – Fibrous mineral substance which is found in eruptive rocks. Asbestos fibres are sufficiently flexible to be plaited and woven. The principal characteristic of asbestos is its incombustibility; a piece of asbestic material put into a blazing fire will not burn.

The properties of asbestos are exploited nowadays for the interiors of kitchen stoves. Asbestos, being a bad conductor, does not absorb heat. Unlike metal, it reflects by radiation, and the maximum of heat is obtained with the minimum of fuel, which results in a considerable saving of expense.

ASCALAPHUS – He was Pluto's cook and the guardian of Proserpine, according to legend. This position of confidence brought him misfortune, for he incurred the enmity of Ceres. Jupiter had agreed to return Proserpine to Ceres, her mother, on condition that the girl had eaten nothing during her sojourn in the infernal regions. Ascalaphus revealed that Proserpine had eaten six grains of pomegranate while she was there, and Ceres turned him into an owl because of this indiscreet revelation. Minerva, to console him in his misfortune, took him under her protection.

ASH. FRÊNE – The young shoots of this tree can be eaten in a salad. The seeds are sometimes preserved.

ASHDRINK. FRÉNETTE – An economical drink which is said to be health-giving. Its basis is ash leaves, and the recipe is as follows:

Boil 75 g. (3 oz., 3 cups) ash leaves and 55 g. (1½ oz.) roasted chicory in 3 litres (5¼ pints, 6½ pints) water. In another vessel dissolve 2½ kg. (5½ lb.) sugar and 40 g. (1½ oz.) citric acid in 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) water.

Mix the two liquids, leave to cool; then add 25 g. (1 oz.) yeast dissolved in water. Pour the whole into a barrel. Add enough water to make 50 litres (11 gallons, 14 gallons) and leave to ferment for 12 days.

Bottle the liquid, corking the bottles tightly, and store in a cool place.

The drink is a kind of lemonade with a certain amount of alcoholic content.

ASHES. CENDRES – Residue after combustion. Various foods are cooked in the ashes of a wood fire, notably chestnuts, potatoes and truffles.

ASIALIA. ASIALIE – A deficiency of saliva. It occurs in certain diseases and in certain nervous conditions.

ASITIA. ASITIE – Forced abstinence. Loss of desire for food.

ASPARAGUS. ASPERGE – A genus of Liliaceae, containing more than a hundred species, found in temperate and warm regions of Europe and America.

Asparagus grows wild in meadows and bushy places, especially in sandy soil, over a great part of France, as well as on sandy coasts on the Atlantic and the Mediterranean sides.

In France, asparagus came into vogue during the reign of Louis XIV, thanks to Quintinie, who was the first to grow asparagus for Le Roi Soleil. He was able to supply the royal kitchen with asparagus all the year round.

Asparagus officinalis (common asparagus), has been widely cultivated since time immemorial as a garden vegetable. Its young sprouts, or shoots, are eaten either whole or just the tips, i.e., the terminal buds. In Spain, young shoots of a certain species, which have long, sharp thorns on the stems, are also eaten.

A great number of asparagus varieties exist, but for cooking purposes these fall into several main types: French asparagus, of which the best known and most delicious is Argenteuil asparagus; Italian asparagus or purple Genoa asparagus; white Belgian asparagus; white German asparagus. There is also green asparagus, which is sub-divided into two types: small, used for garnishes and known as asparagus tips, and large, which is prepared like Argenteuil asparagus.

Early asparagus can be found in France from February onwards, and is usually sold at high prices.

Method of preparation. This is simple. Scrape, or better still, peel the asparagus, wash and tie into medium-sized bundles, and cook in a fairly full pan of boiling salted water; allow 1½ teaspoons salt per litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water. When it is cooked, drain the asparagus thoroughly and arrange on a dish covered with a napkin, or on a special asparagus dish which is equipped with a flat strainer.

The cooking period varies from 18 to 20 minutes, depending on the size and nature of the asparagus. It should not be overcooked, as this renders it watery and tasteless.

Note. At the end of the season asparagus becomes a little bitter, and should be put into fresh water for a short time after it has been cooked. Drain thoroughly.

Hot or cold asparagus is served with various sauces. When it is to be served cold, it should be left under a running tap to cool.

Lauris asparagus, Argenteuil asparagus

Generally speaking, allow about 600 g. (1¼ lb.) asparagus per person, served with sauce (see SAUCE).

Canned asparagus. CONSERVE D'ASPERGES – This should not be attempted except with freshly gathered asparagus.

Scrape off the skin and dry carefully, but do not wash the asparagus. Cut off the ends evenly so as to have them all the same length, and tie into small bundles, choosing stalks of the same thickness to ensure even cooking.

Special boilers for asparagus can be obtained for preserving; these are equipped with devices for controlling the movement of the boiling basket provided. Fill the boiler, according to the instructions given, with water to which 8 per cent salt has been added, and bring to the boil. Put the asparagus bundles into the basket, standing them up and not packing them too closely. Lower the basket into the boiler so that the asparagus bundles are immersed up to one-third of their length and boil for 3 minutes.

Disengage the basket and drop it down lower into the boiler, so that two-thirds of the asparagus tips are immersed, and boil for another 3 minutes.

Remove the basket and plunge it into a tub of cold running water, taking care that the jets of water cannot damage the asparagus tips. Leave in this water for about an hour. Drain with great care.

ASPARAGUS

Put the asparagus into cans or preserving jars, placing some with heads up and others with heads down. Cover with water which has been salted in the proportion of 300 g. (11 oz.  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) refined salt to 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) water.

Canned green asparagus tips. CONSERVE DE POINTES D'ASPERGES VERTES – Divide the asparagus stalks into three parts: the base, the middle and the tips.

First put the bases (the toughest parts) into a saucepan of salted boiling water and boil them for 2 minutes. Add the middle sections and boil for another 2 minutes. Add the tips and boil for a third 2 minutes. Drain very carefully.

Put them into cans or preserving jars and cover with the same brine as in the preceding recipe.

Cream of asparagus soup – See SOUP, Cream soups.

Asparagus heaped in a croustade à la Carême. BUISSON D'ASPERGES EN CROUSTADE À LA CARÊME – Cook the tips of thick white asparagus in salted water, keeping them a little underdone. Drain and dry on a napkin. Coat each one in aspic mayonnaise. Chill thoroughly in a refrigerator.

Arrange in a low flan shell, made of pie pastry and baked blind, and half-filled with a salad of green asparagus tips and truffles, seasoned with oil and lemon juice.

Asparagus heaped in a croustade à la Carême

Asparagus à la flamande. ASPERGES À LA FLAMANDE – Serve hot, with melted butter. Halves of hot, hard-boiled eggs are served separately. The guests mash the eggs on their plates and mix them with the melted butter.

Asparagus fried in batter. FRITOT D'ASPERGES – Cook the tips of large white or green asparagus in salted boiling water for 5 minutes. Drain, dry, and marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice or vinegar, salt and pepper. When nearly ready to serve, dip the asparagus tips into a light batter and fry in smoking-hot deep fat. Drain, dry, season with fine salt, and arrange in a heap on a napkin.

Asparagus à la Fontanelle. ASPERGES À LA FONTANELLE – Boil the asparagus in salted water and drain. Serve with melted butter.

Soft-boiled eggs are served with this dish, the guests dipping the asparagus in the melted butter and then in the egg.

Asparagus au gratin

Asparagus au gratin. ASPERGES AU GRATIN – Cook in salted water and drain thoroughly. Arrange the asparagus in tiers in a fireproof dish.

Pour Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) over the tips only. Cover the rest of the asparagus with greaseproof paper. Sprinkle the sauce with grated Parmesan cheese and melted butter, and brown the tips. Remove the paper before serving.

Asparagus à la milanaise. ASPERGES À LA MILANAISE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Asparagus au gratin, but omit the Mornay sauce.

Asparagus à la Mornay. ASPERGES À LA MORNAY – Another name for Asparagus au gratin.

Asparagus with noisette butter. ASPERGES AU BEURRE NOISETTE – Cook the asparagus by the usual method. Serve Noisette butter (see BUTTER) separately.

Alternatively, arrange cooked and well-drained asparagus in a dish, and keep it warm in the oven. Just before serving, sprinkle it with sizzling noisette butter.

Asparagus à la polonaise. ASPERGES À LA POLONAISE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Asparagus au gratin. Cover the tips with chopped yolks of hard-boiled eggs and parsley.

When ready to serve, pour on sizzling Noisette butter (see BUTTER) in which freshly grated white breadcrumbs have been fried until light golden brown.

Alternatively, arrange the asparagus on a serving dish and serve the butter and breadcrumbs separately.

Asparagus soufflé. See SOUFFLÉS, Soufflé of various vegetables.

Asparagus tips for garnishes. POINTES D'ASPERGES – Scrape, if necessary, and cut the tips into 5-cm. (2-inch) lengths; tie into bundles. Cook as described in the recipe for Green asparagus tips. (see below).

If this garnish is used for hot dishes, the asparagus tips should be added at the very last moment; cook them first in water, drain, and dress with melted butter or cream.

Asparagus makes an excellent garnish for eggs which have been scrambled, lightly boiled, au plat, poached or in an omelette. Also for some fish dishes, and for meat served in small portions – cutlets, escalopes, noisettes, small filets, tournedos, etc., for calves' sweetbreads, and for fowls and chickens.

When asparagus tips are intended for garnishing or for cold salads, they must be dipped in cold water as soon as they are cooked, and well drained. Season with vinaigrette, or mayonnaise, or bind with meat jelly.

Asparagus tips with cream. POINTES D'ASPERGES À LA CRÈME – Cook asparagus tips and add a few tablespoons of fresh double cream which has previously been scalded. Blend in lightly and season. Arrange in a vegetable dish with tips uppermost.

Asparagus tips in butter. POINTES D'ASPERGES AU BEURRE – Remove the tips from a bundle of asparagus; scrape and dice the rest. Cook the diced pieces, drain well, and dry in a pan over heat. Add small pieces of butter in the proportion of 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter to 250 g. (9 oz.) asparagus, and stir gently. Heap into a dish, and garnish with the tips, which have been lightly cooked in salted water.

Green asparagus tips. POINTES D'ASPERGES VERTES – Cut off the tough stalks, keeping the tender parts of green asparagus. Tie these into bundles of 8 to 10 shoots. Cut the lower part of these bundles into dice, keeping the actual tips tied together.

Cook the diced asparagus in boiling salted water for 4 minutes, then add the bundles of tips. Boil briskly, with the saucepan uncovered, for 7 or 8 minutes. Drain the bundles and the diced asparagus. Dip in cold water and cool. Proceed as indicated in the chosen recipe.

Purée of green asparagus. PURÉE D'ASPERGES VERTES – Cook asparagus tips in fast-boiling, salted water, drain, and rub through a fine sieve. Heat the purée, and add butter and cream.

This purée is used as a garnish.

White asparagus with fried bread. CROÛTE GRATINÉE AUX ASPERGES BLANCHES – Blanch 500 g. (1 lb.) of white asparagus tips in salted water for 8 minutes, drain, and simmer in butter until cooked. Cut decrusted bread into slices 10 cm. (4 inches) long and 6 cm. (2½ inches) wide, and fry in butter. Put 7 or 8 asparagus tips on each slice of fried bread, sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese, pour on the butter in which the asparagus was cooked, and brown the top lightly.

White asparagus with melted butter. ASPERGES BLANCHES AU BEURRE FONDU – Cook the asparagus in salted water, drain and serve, piping hot, with warm melted butter. The butter should be melted over a gentle heat and seasoned with salt, pepper and a dash of lemon juice.

Purée of white asparagus. PURÉE D'ASPERGES BLANCHES – Blanch 500 g. (1 lb.) white asparagus tips for 8 minutes, drain, and simmer lightly in butter. Season with salt and pepper.

Moisten with 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for 15 minutes. Rub through a fine sieve. Heat the purée and add butter.

This purée is used as a garnish for poached or lightly boiled eggs, for small pieces of meat, for chicken, for filling patties and tartlets.

White asparagus salad. SALADE D'ASPERGES BLANCHES – Cook the asparagus tips in salted water. Drain, dip in cold water, drain again and dry in a napkin.

Arrange in a salad bowl or an hors-d'œuvre dish. Pour on well-whisked vinaigrette, or a mixture of oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper. This must be well whisked, so that the sauce covers the asparagus in a layer. Serve chilled.

White asparagus with cold sauces. ASPERGES BLANCHES AVEC SAUCES FROIDES – Cook the asparagus and drain. Arrange on a dish and serve with one of the following sauces: Mayonnaise, Mustard, Tartare, Vinaigrette (see SAUCE).

White asparagus with hot sauces. ASPERGES BLANCHES AVEC SAUCES CHAUDES – Cook the asparagus in salted water and drain. Serve separately one of the following sauces: Butter, Bâtarde, Chantilly, Cream, Hollandaise, Maltaise, Mousseuse, Noisette (see SAUCE).

ASPERULA. ASPÉRULE – Plant which is both useful and pleasant. It is also called sweet woodruff, mugwort, sweet grass and quinsy wort. Its white flowers are used as an infusion, and for distilling liqueurs.

In some northern countries it is also used for flavouring sausages.

ASPIC – Term which applies to a way of arranging cold dishes. It consists of putting slices or fillets of chicken, game, various meats, fish, vegetables, fruit, etc., into moulded jelly.

Many authors believe that this name comes from the serpent called asp, 'whose icy coldness recalls that of the jelly', but it is more probably derived from the Greek word aspis, which means buckler or shield. It was, in fact, in this form that the first moulds were made; others were made in the shape of a coiled snake, doubtless to justify the name 'aspic'.

Whatever its origin, the word aspic is applied to very different preparations: foie gras in aspic, chicken in aspic, partridge in aspic, lobster in aspic, fillets of sole in aspic.

For methods of aspic preparations of meat, chicken, game, shellfish and fish, see the following entries in their alphabetical order: CHICKEN, LOBSTER, PHEASANT, SHRIMP, SOLE.

Sweet dishes made of fruit and set in jelly moulds are also called aspics. The word aspic is used, too, for the actual jelly.

In his book devoted to cold entrées, Carême describes the method of preparing aspic jelly as follows:

'Clean and singe 2 chickens, wash them thoroughly, truss them, and place in a small marmite (q.v.) with a round of veal, other veal trimmings and a little ham. Add 6 bones and blanched calves' feet, fill the marmite with water, and leave to cook on a hot stove, but away from the flame. A much lighter aspic, easy to clarify, is obtained by this process. Skim thoroughly, and add half a bay leaf, a little thyme and basil, a bunch of parsley and spring onions, 2 carrots and 2 onions. Keep the jelly simmering gently for 4 hours.

'Whisk 4 egg whites with a glass of white wine or Madeira, and the same amount of veal stock if you wish to give it some colour; if not, omit the stock. Add to the jelly, place on a high flame, and whisk until the mixture is boiling. Turn heat to very low. Taste, in case a little salt is needed.

Cover the pan and leave to simmer for about 2 minutes, when the mixture should be clear.

Rinse a napkin in water, wring out well, and tie the corners to an upturned chair. Strain the aspic through the napkin.'

Carême also describes how aspic should be coloured: 'One of the principal presentations of cold dishes consists of these clarified, transparent jellies of 2 colours only – one should be white and the other of a good strong colour.'

Arrangement of aspic, after Carême

Aspic moulds

He tells how the great Laguipière achieved perfect colourings for his jellies: 'Melt granulated sugar and, without moistening it, let it colour little by little on red-hot cinders, which should take about a quarter of an hour. When it becomes amber-red caramel, moisten with half a glass of water and place the pan over a hotter flame. After several minutes of boiling it becomes a clear amber-red, totally unlike the bitter caramel which is allowed to get black on a high flame and which is commonly called "monkey's blood."'

The modern method of the clarifying process is given under the entry entitled JELLIES, and in the one below.

Clarification of aspic jelly – To clarify 5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts) jelly stock, add 3 egg whites and 500 g. (1 lb.) lean minced beef. Add a tablespoon of tarragon and a tablespoon of chervil, roughly chopped. Whisk lightly. Heat the stock a little until it is tepid, skimming off all the fat: this is important. Bring to the boil, whisking all the time. Lower the heat and simmer gently for 35 minutes.

Rinse a napkin in water, wring out thoroughly, and strain the aspic through the napkin.

Aspic jelly can be flavoured with various dessert wines: Frontignan, port, sherry, Marsala, Madeira, Malvasia (Malvoisie). These wines, which are only added to the jelly when it is tepid, are used in the proportion of 1 dl. per litre (3 tablespoons per pint) of jelly in the case of dessert wines, and 2 dl. in the case of Champagne, Sauternes, Alsatian, or other white wines.

Instructions for making various aspic jellies will be found under JELLIES, Meat jellies.

Aspics in moulds – Aspics are set in plain moulds, charlotte-type moulds or moulds with a hole in the middle.

Coat the mould with a thin layer of jelly, as indicated in the recipes. Decorate by pressing into the jelly small pieces of truffle, cooked lean ham or tongue, and white of hard-boiled egg for meat, chicken or game aspics. For fish or shellfish aspics use pieces of truffle, white of hard-boiled egg, the coral of shellfish or slivers of smoked salmon.

Aspic croûtons. CROÛTONS DE GELÉE – Aspics cut into shapes – triangles, rectangles, crescents, etc. The jelly must be clear and solid.

When a number of croûtons have to be made, pour the jelly into a large baking dish to set. When it is quite firm, turn out onto a damp cloth which has been stretched and fastened to a table. Cut up with a knife if the croûtons are rectilinear in shape, or with a pastry-cutter if they are round.

The technical term croûtonner de gelée means to surround some cold food with croûtons of jelly cut into shapes.

Aspic of freshwater crayfish tails. ASPIC DE QUEUES D'ÉCREVISSES – Cook the crayfish à la mirepoix (see MIREPOIX). Shell the tails and arrange them in a plain round mould which has been coated with jelly. Fill the mould either with a Crayfish mousse (see CRAYFISH) or a Russian salad (see SALAD). Chill on ice.

Aspic of fish. ASPIC DE POISSONS – This can be made with fish of various kinds, cut in filets, slices or medallions. Fill the middle of the aspic dish with a fish mousse appropriate to the particular recipe; with Russian salad; or with any mixture normally used for cold dishes.

Aspic of foie gras I. ASPIC DE FOIE GRAS – Coat a plain mould with jelly and fill it with uniform slices of foie gras, garnished with large slivers of truffles. Fill the mould with half-set jelly. Leave on ice to set. Serve on a plate or in a glass dish.

Aspic of foie gras II. ASPIC DE FOIE GRAS – Coat a mould with port-flavoured jelly (or jelly flavoured with any other heavy wine). Fill with truffles cut into neat round slices, round pieces of ham or pickled tongue, and, if desired, the whites of hard-boiled eggs cut in rings.

Fill the mould with jelly. Chill on ice or in the refrigerator. To serve, turn the aspic onto a flat dish, or onto slices of buttered bread. If served on a dish, decorate with chopped jelly and jelly triangles.

This aspic can also be made by filling the mould with slices of foie gras cut out with a shell-shaped scoop.

Lobster in aspic (Battendier. Phot. Larousse)

Sole in aspic (Battendier. Phot. Larousse)

Chicken in aspic (Robert Carrier)

Aspic of frogs' legs à l'ancienne. ASPIC DE GRENOUILLES À L'ANCIENNE – Poach trimmed frogs' legs in white wine flavoured with a sprig of thyme and a bay leaf. Leave to cool in the liquor.

Drain, dry, and coat half of them completely with a white Chaud-froid sauce based on meatless stock, and the other half with a Chaud-froid sauce coloured with crayfish butter (see SAUCE, Compound sauces).

Lay the frogs' legs on a wire tray, one by one, and leave them to get quite cold. Decorate with truffles cut in thin slices. Coat with aspic jelly.

Arrange the frogs' legs round the sides of a mould which has been coated with jelly, alternating them with peeled crayfish tails. Fill the middle of the mould with a Parisian salad (see SALAD), dressed with mayonnaise which has been thickened with gelatine. Pour a thin layer of aspic jelly over the whole, and chill on ice.

To serve, turn out onto a dish and decorate with a border of jelly croûtons (q.v.).

Little chicken aspics

Aspic of poultry and feathered game. ASPIC DE VOLAILLES – Coat slices of chicken or game with white or brown Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) and put them in a mould which has been coated with aspic jelly. Fill the mould with either a chicken or game mousse, or with some other mixture used for cold dishes.

Aspic of shrimps or other shellfish. ASPIC DE CREVETTES – Coat an aspic mould with clear fish jelly. Decorate the sides with peeled shrimp tails and small pieces of truffle. Fill the middle of the mould with a cold shrimp mousse mixed with shrimp tails and truffles cut into large dice. Fill the mould with jelly, and leave on ice to set.

Crayfish aspics can be prepared in the same way, using trimmed crayfish tails and crayfish mousse. Spiny lobster or lobster aspics are made by using slices of one or other of these shellfish, together with the appropriate mousse.

ASSIETTE – See PLATE.

Assiette anglaise – Assortment of cold meats arranged on a plate or a dish.

The assortment usually consists of York ham, salt beef, tongue, rib of beef or roast beef. Mortadella, galantine, etc., are sometimes added to it.

The meat is garnished with chopped jelly, cress and gherkins. The assiette anglaise is served chiefly at lunch.

The term assiettes assorties describes various preparations served as hors-d'œuvre, though hors-d'œuvre are usually served nowadays in special hors-d'œuvre dishes.

Plate of cold meats (Larousse)

Assiettes volantes – This term describes a selection of several items of food on one plate, in the manner of an hors-d'œuvre, particularly various kinds of salty foods cut in thin slices.

Assiettes garnies – At the beginning of the nineteenth century, this term also applied to a dish.

Carême says: 'Lunch consisted of six assiettes on which veal cutlets, fish, chicken, game, a side-dish of vegetables, and soft-boiled eggs were served.'

ASTI – Italian town situated 40 km. (about 25 miles) from Turin. It is the ancient Asta Colonia or Asta Pompeia of the Romans, and is famous for its sparkling wine, made from Moscato grapes, called Asti Spumante (see WINE).

ASTRAGAL (Milk vetch). ASTRAGALE – Many varieties of astragal grow in Asia; it is also found in the temperate regions of the Lebanon. One variety of milk vetch produces gum tragacanth, which is used in confectionery and pastry-making.

Astragal

a. Astragalus of Crete b. Liquorice vetch c. Fruit

Another variety produces fruit in the form of pods, which, before the seeds contained in them are formed, resemble worms. In the past these pods used to be added to salads (to mystify the guests!). Astragalus pods are also pickled in vinegar, like capers.

There is yet another variety of astragalus, the seeds of which, when ripe, are used in cookery.

ASTRINGENT – Binding, contracting. The vegetable astringents owe their properties to tannin. Among them are cutch, bark of oak, quinquina, leaves of walnut tree, arbutus tree and bramble, lemon juice, quinces, etc.

ASTRODERME – Sea fish of an unusual appearance, yellowish pink on the back and sides with black round spots, alternating with silvery spots on the belly. Young astrodermes have purplish-blue bodies and silvery bellies. This fish, called fei d'America by Nice fishermen, is well known along the whole of the Mediterranean coast of France (Côte d'Azur).

It is chiefly used as an ingredient for bouillabaise.

ATHENAEUS – Greek writer, born in Naucratis, in Egypt, in the reign of Marcus Aurelius. He was still alive in the reign of Alexander Severus, about the year A.D. 228.

Only one of his works has survived, entitled Deipnosophistai or Specialists in Dining, which is a gem of erudition, giving much information on ancient history which we would otherwise lack.

In Specialists in Dining, there are several passages relating to flowers and fruit and their various uses, both practical and pleasurable.

ATHÉNIENNE (À L') – Name applying to various dishes which are usually flavoured with lightly fried onion, and garnished with aubergines, tomatoes and sweet pimentos.

Athérine

ATHÉRINE – Little fish, with a long, spindle-shaped body, covered with rounded scales at the posterior end. The sides have a silvery stripe, the head is flattened on the top, the upper jaw is shorter than the lower, and the teeth are very small.

Two species of this fish are known on the coasts of France, where they are called prêtre and faux éperlan.

Common names in English are silverside and sand-smelt, and the fishermen take enormous catches. Other species are found in the estuaries and Mediterranean coast lakes.

In the U.S.A., smelts correspond to this fish. Its flesh is delicate in flavour. Athérines are usually fried in deep fat, but all recipes suitable for small bass can be applied to this fish.

ÂTRE (Hearth stone) – This word is no longer used today, except to describe the central part of the baker's or pastry-cook's oven.

In the past, when a great number of dishes were cooked in the fireplace, the part where the fire was actually burning was called the âtre (hearth). It was in the hearth that stews and other preparations which take a long time were slowly cooked, surrounded by hot coals.

All these dishes are today cooked in ovens heated by gas, electricity, coal or oil. Quite a few gastronomes protest against these methods of cooking, maintaining that dishes cannot taste so good prepared in this way as when cooked by the old methods.

Experience shows that there is nothing in the claim. When well-made utensils are used (and kitchen utensils have today reached a high point of perfection), food can be cooked successfully, whatever the product and whatever the method.

ATRIPLEX – Herbaceous plant of the same family as spinach and the goosefoot genus Chenopodium.

The atriplex is commonly known as garden orach; it is cultivated and grown all over France. It is prepared like spinach. (See ORACH.)

Antique attelets (Collection of Dr Gotschalk. Phot. Larousse)

ATTELET – This word comes from the Latin hasta, meaning staff or rod, and in the past was spelt hatelet. It is often used, incorrectly, to describe little metal skewers on which various pieces of meat, sheep's kidneys, lambs' sweetbreads, larks, etc., are threaded.

To be precise, an attelet is a little utensil in the shape of a pin or skewer, but with an ornamental top. These, with truffles, cocks' combs, crayfish and other items of food threaded on them, are used solely for decorating hot or cold dishes served in the grand style.

For arranging these grand entrées, Carême advocated the use of a great number of attelets. In modern cookery practice this decoration has been practically abandoned. Modern cooks disdain, as a rule, the use of any decoration which is not actually edible.

It is probable that the attelets decorating Carême's entrées and removes were, in fact, edible and the effects obtained were certainly beautiful.

ATTENDU

ATTENDU – French culinary term applied to a dish or beverage the consumption of which is intentionally postponed in order to improve it. Thus a pheasant should be attendu, that is, kept hung, before being cooked and eaten.

ATTEREAU (Skewer) – In his Dictionnaire de cuisine et d'économie (Paris 1836), Burnet, one-time steward of the royal household, gives the following definition of attereau: 'Name which keepers of eating-houses attribute to a kind of ragoût made of fillet of veal, cut in very thin slices. They are studded with lardoons and cooked in a pie dish with a little stock poured over them.'

Carême, however, in his works published before Burnet's dictionary, describes a method of preparation of attereaux which indicates that this dish is in no way a ragoût. In modern cookery, attereau describes both the metal skewer on which various ingredients are threaded, and the dish itself. This is usually served as an hors-d'œuvre, but can also be served as a small entrée if supplemented by a garnish.

Attereaux differ from brochettes in being dipped in a sauce to give them a firm coating, rolled in breadcrumbs, and usually deep-fried.

The ingredients which make up the attereaux can be cooked on wooden skewers, and then transferred to silver attelets. The attereaux can also be served without the skewers on which they were cooked.

Sweet courses can be prepared en attereau, the method being the same as that given for savoury attereaux.

Attereaux à la chalonaise – Thread the attereaux with cocks' combs and kidneys cooked in a white court-bouillon (q.v.), and drained. Add mushrooms and truffles.

Dip the attereaux in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE). Roll them in breadcrumbs and fry in smoking hot deep fat. Drain, season with fine salt, and arrange on a napkin or paper doyley, garnished with fried parsley.

Attereaux à la duchesse (dessert) – Prepare a mixture of crème frite (see CUSTARD, Fried custard) to which have been added 2 crushed macaroons and 1 tablespoon crystallised fruit, cut in very small dice and steeped in rum. When firm, thread slices of this mixture on the attereau. Roll in very fine breadcrumbs and deep-fry in smoking hot fat.

Attereaux à l'écoissaise – Make up the attereaux using pieces of Pickled ox tongue (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS), mushrooms, and rather thick slices of truffles. Finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux à la maraîchère – Use pieces of turnip-rooted celery (celeriac) previously simmered in butter; mushrooms, and pieces of cooked ham for the attereaux. Finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux à la niçoise – Make up the attereaux with large stoned olives stuffed with a purée of anchovies, mushrooms, and pieces of pickled tunny. Dip them in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE), with a tablespoon of concentrated tomato purée, and add chopped tarragon. Finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux à la normande – Make up the attereaux by threading on plump mussels cooked à la marinière, drained, and stuffed with finely pounded fish forcemeat. Add mushrooms cut in round slices. Finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux à la piémontaise – Make up the attereaux with slices of polenta (q.v.) cooked in butter, and thick slices of truffles. Dip them in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry in sizzling fat.

Attereaux à la Saint-Hubert – Make up the attereaux by threading on slices of pheasant, grouse, or any other winged game. Add sliced mushrooms and pieces of cooked lean ham. Dip the attereaux in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) to which has been added concentrated game stock reduced to a fumet (q.v.). Finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux au parmesan (Parma style) – Cook semolina (q.v.) in butter, and when firm, thread slices on the attereaux. Add slices of Gruyère cheese.

Dip the attereaux in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry.

Attereaux of calves' sweetbreads Villeroi. ATTEREAUX DE RIS DE VEAU VILLEROI – Braise uniform pieces of calves' sweetbreads in a white court-bouillon (q.v.) and thread them on the attereaux. Finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux of chicken livers à la mirepoix. ATTEREAUX DE FOIES DE VOLAILLE À LA MIREPOIX – Fry chicken livers in butter, drain and cool. Thread them on the attereaux, together with pieces of lean cooked ham, and sliced mushrooms. Coat the attereaux with a fondue (q.v.) of root vegetables cut into very small pieces, roll in breadcrumbs, and finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux of lambs' brains Villeroi. ATTEREAUX DE CERVELE D'AGNEAU VILLEROI – Cut up lambs' brains and cook them in a white court-bouillon (q.v.). Cool and drain, and season with salt, pepper, oil, a few drops of lemon juice, and a little chopped parsley. Thread on the attereaux, and finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux of calves' brains are prepared in the same manner.

Attereaux of lambs' sweetbreads Villeroi

Attereaux of lambs' sweetbreads Villeroi. ATTEREAUX DE RIS D'AGNEAU VILLEROI – Braise lambs' sweetbreads in a white court-bouillon (q.v.) and thread them on the attereaux. Finish off as described in the recipe for Attereaux à la chalonaise.

Attereaux à la Villeroi can, in addition to the basic element, also contain mushrooms cooked in white mushroom court-bouillon and cut in slices.

Attereaux of ox palate. ATTEREAUX DE PALAIS DE BOEUF – Cut the ox palate (cooked as described under OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Ox palate), into round slices. Put them on attereaux with alternate rows of fried mushroom heads and slivers of truffles. Coat in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) and allow to cool. Dip them in egg and breadcrumbs and roll into cylindrical shape.

Deep-fry in sizzling fat and arrange on a napkin garnished with fried parsley. Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Attereaux of oysters Monselet. ATTEREAUX D'HUÎTRES MONSELET – Poach and drain oysters. Thread them on attereaux, together with cooked mushrooms cut in slices, and thick slices of truffles. Finish as described in the recipe for Attereaux of brains, using Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock boiled down to a fumet (q.v.).

Attereaux of pineapple (dessert). ATTEREAUX D'ANANAS – Thread pieces of pineapple on the attereaux. Dip them in a crème frite (see CUSTARD, Fried custard) and breadcrumbs. Fry in smoking hot deep fat, drain, and sprinkle with fine sugar.

Serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) laced with kirsch.

Attereaux of salmon – See SALMON.

Attereaux Pompadour (dessert) – Make up the attereaux by threading on slices of stale brioche, alternating with halved apricots which have been cooked in syrup and drained. Dip them in a crème frite (see CUSTARD, Fried custard) flavoured with kirsch. Roll in breadcrumbs and fry in smoking hot fat. Drain, and sprinkle with sugar.

Attereaux Victoria (dessert) – Thread slices of plum pudding on the attereaux, alternating them with slices of cooking apples which have been steeped in rum. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in smoking hot fat. Drain, and dredge with fine sugar.

AUBENAS – Small town in the Ardèche département, where truffles are found. These, though they may not rival the flavour of Périgord truffles, are nevertheless excellent.

Marrons glacés are much-prized preserves which are made at Aubenas.

AUBERGINE or EGGPLANT – Fruit of a plant originating in India, known also in France under the names of melongena and morelle. It has been cultivated in France since the beginning of the seventeenth century. In the U.S.A. it is called eggplant.

There are many varieties of this plant. The most used in cookery is the long purple, which is used as a vegetable and as a garnish. Among other edible varieties are: the Barbantane aubergine; the round purple aubergine, the giant New York aubergine, and the round Valencia aubergine.

Methods of preparation. There are many recipes for cooking aubergines, and the initial preparation varies greatly. When this vegetable is to be stewed, baked in the oven or fried, it must be steeped in salt for 30 minutes to make its excess water ooze out. The aubergines are then thoroughly dried and cooked as indicated in the recipes.

Various uses. Aubergines, cut in dice and fried in butter or oil, can be used as a garnish for the following: eggs (sur le plat, scrambled, poached, fried, or cooked in an omelette); fish meunière; lamb or mutton chops, cutlets or noisettes; tournedos; and chicken fried or en cocotte (see CHICKEN).

Sliced in half lengthways, fried or grilled, aubergines can be used in the arrangement of poached eggs, or filets of fish. Peeled, cut in thick slices and fried or grilled, they can be used as a foundation for escalopes, noisettes, tournedos and other small pieces of meat.

Aubergines à la crème – Peel 2 firm aubergines. Cut them in round slices  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick, and steep in salt for 30 minutes. Dry, and simmer in butter in a sauté pan or heavy frying pan.

Just before serving, add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Stir, taking care not to damage the aubergines. Arrange in a vegetable dish.

Dilute the pan juice with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) cream. Boil down by half, remove from the heat, and add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fresh butter. Strain and pour over the aubergines.

Fried aubergines. AUBERGINES FRITES – Cut the aubergines in thin slices, dredge with flour, and plunge into a deep pan of sizzling oil. Drain, season with fine salt, and arrange on a napkin.

Aubergines intended for deep-frying can also be cut into thick square pieces, or cut fan-wise.

Aubergines au gratin – Cut the aubergines lengthwise in half. Make a few shallow incisions and leave in a dish, sprinkling thickly with salt. Dry, then fry in sizzling hot oil. Drain, and with a spoon carefully scoop out the pulp without damaging the outside skin. Chop the pulp, and add to it an equal quantity of duxelles (q.v.) mixture and a tablespoon of chopped parsley.

Fill the aubergine skins with this mixture, and put them into a buttered or oiled fireproof dish. Sprinkle with finely grated breadcrumbs, fresh or toasted, add melted butter or a few drops of oil, and brown the top.

When cooked, pipe a border of Demi-glace (see SAUCE) around the aubergines.

Aubergines au gratin à la catalane – Halve aubergines, scoop out the pulp, chop it, and mix it with 1 hard-boiled egg chopped up finely. Add a tablespoon of chopped onion which has been lightly fried in oil, a tablespoon of finely grated breadcrumbs, some chopped parsley and garlic. Finish cooking as above.

Aubergines au gratin à l'italienne – Halve aubergines, as above, and mix the chopped pulp with an equal quantity of risotto and a little chopped parsley and garlic. Finish cooking as above.

Aubergines au gratin à la languedocienne – Method as above, filling the aubergine halves with sausage meat. Finish cooking as above.

Aubergines Imam Baaldi (Robert Carrier)

Aubergines au gratin à la portugaise – Method as above. Fill the aubergine halves with their chopped pulp to which has been added an equal quantity of chopped tomatoes lightly fried in butter, chopped onion, parsley and garlic. Finish cooking as above.

Aubergines au gratin à la reine – Method as above. Fill the aubergine halves with their chopped pulp mixed with an equal quantity of salpicon (q.v.) of chicken bound with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Finish cooking as above.

Aubergines au gratin à la toulousaine – Peel the aubergines, cut into thick slices, across or lengthways, and leave in a dish sprinkled with salt. Dry, and toss in a pan of hot oil.

Arrange in layers in a fireproof dish in rows, alternating with an equal quantity of tomatoes cut in half and also tossed in oil.

Sprinkle generously with freshly grated breadcrumbs mixed with chopped garlic and parsley. Pour on a little oil and brown in the oven.

This dish is sometimes called aubergines à la languedocienne.

Aubergines au gratin à la turque – Fill aubergine halves with their chopped pulp mixed with an equal quantity of braised chopped mutton, and rice cooked in water (taking these ingredients in equal proportions). Add chopped garlic and parsley, and a small pinch of cayenne. Brown the top. When cooked, pipe a border of tomato sauce round the aubergines.

Aubergines in gravy. AUBERGINES AU JUS – Proceed as described in the recipe given for Aubergines à la crème, but substitute thickened veal stock.

Aubergines à la grecque (hors-d'œuvre) – Peel 2 large aubergines; cut them in dice or thick square pieces. Throw them, a few at a time, into a court-bouillon prepared as described in the recipe for Artichokes à la grecque (see ARTICHOKE). Bring to a full boil, and cook for 12 to 15 minutes. Transfer into a terrine with the liquor, and serve as an hors-d'œuvre.

Grilled aubergines. AUBERGINES GRILLÉES – Peel the aubergines, cut them into thick slices, and leave to stand in a dish well sprinkled with salt. Dry them, brush with oil, and grill on a gentle heat.

For serving as a vegetable, arrange the aubergines in a crown shape on a dish, and dab with a few tablespoons of Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER).

Aubergines Imam Baaldi (Turkish cookery) – 'Take good sound aubergines, slit them along their entire length without peeling, and scoop out some of the pulp. Prepare a stuffing composed of aubergine pulp, tomatoes, onions and currants. Fry this mixture in oil, and fill the aubergines with it. Put them into an earthenware dish and pour in sufficient oil to cover them completely. Add a little thyme and a bay leaf. Cook for 3 hours on low heat until the aubergines are quite soft. Leave to cool.

'This dish should be served very cold. If possible, prepare it the day before it is required, to allow the aubergines to be well saturated in the oil.'

Imam Baaldi in Turkish means 'the priest has fainted'. The legend goes that when aubergines prepared in this way were offered to a certain imam (priest), he was so moved by the fragrant odour of the dish that he fainted from sheer gastronomical joy.

Aubergine purée (garnish). PURÉE D'AUBERGINES – Peel the aubergines, cut them in slices, and leave in a dish with salt. Dry them, and cook in a covered casserole with a little butter and salt. Rub through a sieve. Heat this purée, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter, and serve.

A few tablespoons of thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) added to the aubergines before rubbing them through the sieve will give the purée a more substantial consistency, and will make it whiter.

Aubergine salad. SALADE D'AUBERGINES – Peel the aubergines, cut into thin slices, and leave to stand in a dish with salt. Dry, season à la vinaigrette (see SAUCE, Cold Sauces), and add chopped chervil and tarragon.

Note. This salad can also be prepared with aubergines which have been cooked in salted water, drained and dried.

Sautéed aubergines. AUBERGINES SAUTÉES – Peel the aubergines and cut them into 4-cm. (1½-inch) square pieces. Leave to stand in a dish with salt. Dry, dredge with flour, and sauté the pieces in oil, butter or other fat over brisk heat.

Serve sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Aubergine soufflés. AUBERGINES SOUFFLÉES – Prepare the aubergines as described in the recipe for Aubergines au gratin. Rub the scooped-out pulp through a sieve. Add an equal quantity of thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Bind with yolks of egg and season with salt, pepper and a little grated nutmeg. At the last moment fold in whites of egg whisked to a stiff froth.

Fill the aubergine skins with the mixture, put them into a fireproof dish, and cook in a moderate oven for 8 to 10 minutes. Serve at once.

Aubergine soufflés à la hongroise. AUBERGINES SOUFFLÉES À LA HONGROISE – Proceed as above, adding 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion lightly fried in butter, and seasoned with paprika.

Aubergine soufflés au parmesan. AUBERGINES SOUFFLÉES AU PARMESAN – As above, adding 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) grated Parmesan cheese to the filling.

AUDE – This département is formed of the lower part of Languedoc, a region where good cookery has always been held in respect. Among the specialities (which will be found in their alphabetical order) is the well-known cassoulet. There are two kinds in Aude – the cassoulet of Castelnaudary and the cassoulet of Carcassonne. Another is the cassoulet of Toulouse.

According to reliable historians, white beans, introduced by the Arabs, were cultivated in Gallia Narbonensis long before beans were brought from America. The Arabs taught the inhabitants to prepare a mutton ragoût with white beans which is the ancestor of the present-day cassoulet. (See CASSOULET for further details of this dish, of which the region is understandably proud.)

Wines – Aude has a large production of vins ordinaires and vins d'appellation d'origine. (See LANGUEDOC.)

AUDIGER – Head of the household to la comtesse de Soissons, and later to Colbert. Audiger is the author of a book published in 1692 of which the translated title is The Well-Ordered Residence and the Art of Governing a Nobleman's House and Other Gentlemen's Town and Country Residences, and the Duties of Senior Staff and Domestics in General. In it he describes the composition of a lord's 'household'.

Travelling in Italy in 1660, he came across petits pois growing in January. He filled a crate with them and presented it to the French court, who marvelled at the sight of such an early vegetable. That was how petits pois became so fashionable, and why even today every effort is made to produce them as early as possible.

AUK. ALQUE – Sea birds of the Alcidae family. The little auk measures 38 cm. (16 inches) when fully grown. Its wings are equipped for flying, which enables the bird to escape from the pursuit of fishermen hunting it.

Although originating in Arctic regions, it is frequently to be seen in autumn and winter on the coasts of England, Scotland, Belgium and France. It migrates as far as Spain, Portugal, Italy and Algeria. Not infrequently it breeds on the French ocean coasts. The Icelanders call it alka (aalga) or klumba. The flesh and fat of these birds are greatly valued by fishermen, who snare them among the rocks where they nest.

AUNIS AND SAINTONGE – The region of Aunis has fertile, well-cultivated lands, where crops of cereals, vegetables and fruit of the first quality are grown. Animals raised for food produce meat of excellent quality, including some very good lamb; and from the neighbouring sea and lakes of the region come fish and shellfish acceptable to gastronomes.

Among the specialities are the oysters of Marennes, La Tremblade, and Château d'Oléron; they are white, or stained with the fine green weed from the fattening ponds, and are considered the best in the world. The Portuguese oysters which are bred here have a specially delicate flavour. Other shellfish include mussels and clams of Cléron and La Rochelle, cockles which are found in the Marennes fattening ponds, prawns (salicoques) which are locally called chevrettes, and shrimps, which are called boucs.

La Rochelle, after Boulogne, is the greatest fishing port in France, and among fish found in the region are hake, coalfish (U.S. pollock), and sole, which are sold immediately after being caught. Fresh sardines, known as Royan sardines, enjoy a wide reputation, and there are also grey mullet (called meuils locally) and brill (U.S. sea perch). In the Charente and Sèvre Niortaise and their tributaries there are eels which are delicious stewed or en matelote.

Fruit and vegetables are particularly good. The garden peas are sweet and tender; it is this variety that is canned at Bordeaux and La Roche-sur-Yon.

Broad beans from Marennes and the island of Oléron are considered the best in the world. Kidney beans and red beans (mogettes) are excellent.

Orchard and vegetable garden produce include Saintonge brugnons (nectarines); the apples of Saint-Porchaire (reinettes grises and clochard) which are exported to England; white Chasselas grapes; mushrooms such as cèpes and oyster mushrooms; Saintonge oranges; brunettes; pleurote du panicot.

The game of this region is of excellent quality. The finest butter, which can compare with the best Normandy butter, is made in Aunis.

Culinary specialities – Mouclade (mussels à la crème); mussel soup; roast mussels (cooked on cinders); oysters with sausages; razor-fish soup (solen); razor-fish stuffed with breadcrumbs which have been mixed with chopped garlic and parsley and browned on top; scallops aux fines herbes; ragoût of lavagnons; small cuttlefish fried in deep fat; deep-fried crameou (crabs that have shed their shells); hake soup (made with the fish head); chaudrée (fish soup rather like the Breton cotriade); roast eel; fried eels du Mignon.

Special meat and poultry dishes include chicken fricassée with onions and potatoes; Aunis civet, which is made of pig's fry; a salmi of sea birds; various charcuterie; rillettes (potted pork); pâtés and terrines; black and white puddings. Other special dishes of this region include roast garlic, cooked on hot cinders, which is eaten with butter; curds à la chardonnette; jonchée (a kind of cream cheese made with ewe's or goat's milk); various fouaces (scones) and coireaux (made of maize flour); la fouée (oil seed cake); gâteau d'Assemblée; Easter gâteau; Taillebourg brioches; grape jelly; Pons rusks; Frangipane tart.

Wines – Saintonge produces mediocre table wines, most of which are used for distilling purposes (see COGNAC).

The vineyard proprietors of this region make a liqueur wine for themselves and their friends, white or sometimes red, locally called pineau. It is made by pouring local brandy on the must during fermentation, which is thus arrested, preserving all the fruit.

AURILLAC – Town in the Auvergne region, which is the centre of the production of Cantal cheese.

AURIOL – Name for mackerel in Marseille.

AUROCHS – Wild ox, ox of the plains. This animal, which in the past used to be found in the forests of temperate Europe, is now only found, and in very small numbers, in Lithuania, in the Carpathians and in the Caucasus.

The meat of aurochs is prepared as ordinary beef.

AUORE (À L') – Name applied principally to a sauce, the recipe for which is given in the section on sauces; and to all the dishes cooked with this sauce.

This name is also given to a dish of stuffed hard-boiled eggs (see EGGS, Aurora eggs).

The name also applies to a cheese made in Normandy.

AUSTRALIA. AUSTRALIE – Australian vineyards and wines (see WINE).

AUSTRIA. AUTRICHE – Austrian wine and cuisine (see WINE, INTERNATIONAL COOKERY).

Papin marmite or autoclave (Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers. Phot. J Boyer)

AUTOCLAVE (Pressure cooker) – High-pressure steam vessel. A sort of boiler, with very strong walls, which can be closed hermetically. It is provided with a safety valve, and is capable of raising the temperature of the water above boiling point.

No living bacteria can survive the temperature of 120°C. (248°F.) in a liquid medium over a certain period of time. Thus the autoclave is used in the canning industry to sterilise food products contained in hermetically sealed cans. (See PRESERVATION OF FOOD.)

This instrument was invented by Denis Papin, and the original Papin marmite has become popular once again in the form of the pressure cooker, which, by bringing food to a temperature often reaching 140°C. (284°F.), makes it possible to cook in a very short time dishes which would take much longer cooked by the ordinary method.

The results, though acceptable in a good many cases, are, however, far from being as good as those obtained by the traditional methods. The decomposition of certain foods, meat in particular, is taken much further than in ordinary cooking. Furthermore, vitamins can be entirely destroyed.

AUTO-INTOXICATION, DIGESTIVE – This form of intoxication, due to healthy foods ingested in excessive quantity and subjected to bacterial putrefaction in the intestines, should not be confused with alimentary intoxication due to ingestion of toxic foods or foods which have gone bad.

AUTRICHIENNE (À L') – This expression is applied to various preparations characterised, as in the case of those called à la hongroise, by being seasoned with paprika, or Hungarian pepper, and sometimes by the addition of onion, lightly fried, of fennel or sour cream.

Auvergne
(French Government Tourist Office)

AUVERGNE – There is a belief that the cookery of this region consists entirely of cabbage soup or potée, made of fresh and salt pork.

In fact, potée is not a specifically Auvergnat dish. Each region of France, including the Ile de France, has its potée. There is the Bourguignonne potée, a wonderful dish; the Alsatian potée which, too, is succulent, as is that of Cantal; the Languedoc potée, which is very savoury, and the Parisian potée, which figures daily on the bills of fare of the capital's restaurants. There are, besides, many other potées in France, recipes for which will be found in their alphabetical order, under SOUP. All of them are made of fresh or salt pork as a basic element, with cabbage, carrots, onions, leeks and potatoes completing the dish.

Auvergne and Velay (for these two charmingly picturesque regions are inseparable) are rural areas offering gastronomes wholesome, unpretentious country cooking 'with a straightforward, honest flavour' (to quote Curnonsky).

Besides the cabbage soup, there are peasant soups like mourtayrol, the great Auvergnat pot-au-feu (beef, ham, chicken, saffron); cousinat (chestnut soup); and the cheese soup of Cantal.

Excellent vegetables are grown in Auvergne. The orchards

Pewter sugar dredger, ewer and porringer from old Auvergne of Limagne produce choice dessert fruit (apricots, peaches, apples, pears, cherries) and also supply the important crystallised fruit industry of Clermont-Ferrand. Auvergne walnuts and chestnuts are well known.

In the mountainous pasture lands, oxen are raised which give meat of excellent flavour. Mutton is greatly valued, particularly that from sheep raised in Vassivière and Chaudesaigues.

The pork of Auvergne is known for the delicacy of its flesh. This is made into many kinds of charcuterie which can be found in the shops of Paris and other big cities.

The poultry of the region may not have the quality of that raised at Bresse, but it is nevertheless good, as is the game of Auvergne, both ground and winged.

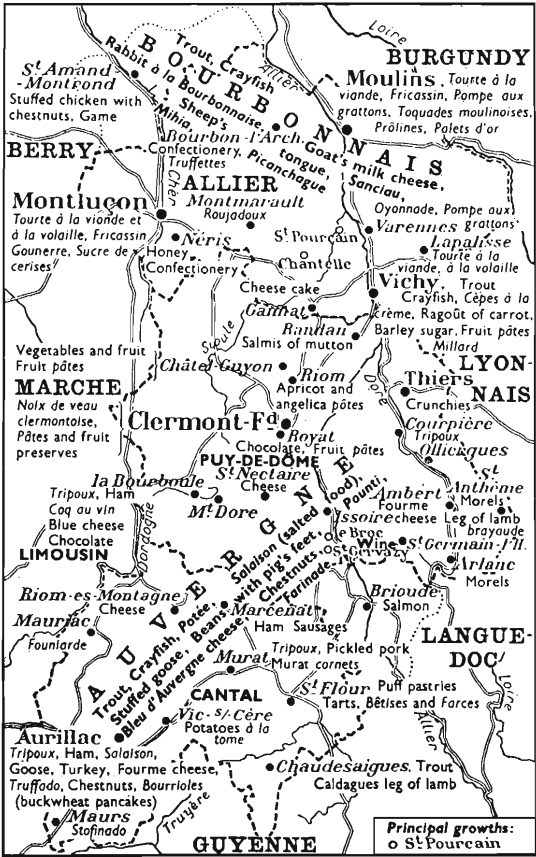

The freshwater fish is excellent. Carp, perch, tench, pike and eels abound in the rivers and lakes, and provide ingredients for succulent matelotes. The trout found in the Massiac, Aurillac, Murols and Marsenac rivers are delicious prepared au bleu or à la meunière. The flesh of Brioude salmon is comparable with that of Loire salmon.

In the spring, succulent mushrooms, particularly morels, are gathered in the woods and forests of Auvergne.

Culinary specialties – The culinary specialties of this region are not very numerous. There is the succulent potée, which is made of salt pork as a basic ingredient, with cabbage, carrots, turnips, onions, leeks and potatoes as accompaniments, and with garlic as a local touch. The soupe au farci is a kind of rustic pot-au-feu, in which a cabbage stuffed with sausage meat and flavoured with chopped garlic and parsley is cooked.

The charcuterie are delicious: hams; large and small country sausages; black puddings (blood sausage); greaves (cracklings); and fricandeau (q.v.), made of a kind of pork pâté cooked in a thin piece of salt pork.

Among local specialties are tourte à la viande, a pie made in a shallow dish, lined with puff pastry and filled with pork and veal forcemeat; omelette brayaude, an omelette made of beaten egg mixed with diced potatoes and diced lean ham which, before it is turned over in the frying pan, is filled with grated cheese and thick cream; fricands de Saint-Flour, which are like those found in the Parisian shops selling charcuterie; leg of lamb brayaude, which is studded with garlic, braised with the usual vegetables and aromatics in white wine, and served with red beans, with onions, and sometimes with braised cabbage; truffade, potatoes cooked in a shallow pan with lean rashers of bacon, flavoured with garlic, and – added at the last minute – fresh diced Tomme cheese; potatoes with bacon; Murat pickled pork; coq au vin, a dish for which one of the inns at the top of the Puy-de-Dôme is well known; the tripoux of Saint-Flour.

Gastronomic map of Auvergne

Among the fish dishes, Ussel jellied eel is notable, and among the game dishes, Brioude thrush cutlets. The pasta products of Clermont-Ferrand are excellent. Sweet dishes and confectionery include flagnarde; millards de cerise; Clermont-Ferrand angelica; Thiers crunchies; Riom échaudé; Murat cornets; Saint-Flour bêtises and farces; Aurillac chestnut tart and buckwheat pancakes.

Cheeses of Auvergne include the famous Cantal cheese; the Bleu d'Auvergne, the small Riommois cheeses; goat's milk cheese.

Wines – The vineyards of this region do not produce any great red or white wines, but some very good table wines. The wines of Auvergne are classed among the V.D.Q.S. They are the appellations Côtes d'Auvergne and Vins d'Auvergne, from the Gamay and white and black Pinot grapes. Chanturgue is the best known of the local vineyards.

AUVERGNAT – Variety of vine, native of Auvergne and cultivated in the country around Orléans. It is best known because of the poet Boileau, and does indeed produce wine which, as he says, is heady and of a strong colour. As far back as the days of Louis XIV, inn-keepers were in the habit of mixing it with lighter and less-coloured wines, such as the lignage, to obtain pale or rosé wines, which were sold under the name of Ermitage, and which are now known under different names.

AVICE – French pastry-cook, contemporary of Antonin Carême. In his books, Carême speaks of him with great respect and gives him first place among the pastry-cooks of that brilliant epoch.

AVINER – French word meaning to season, or impregnate a new wine cask to make it lose the taste of wood.

To season a vat also means to press the grapes as the vat is being filled.

Avocado pear

AVOCADO PEAR. AVOCAT – The fruit of the avocado tree, native of tropical and sub-tropical America.

The kernel, in the middle of the pulp, is about the size of a walnut. The flesh of the avocado is much prized by the Americans. It is thick, buttery, spreads like butter, and is nutty in taste.

The avocado pear is slightly acid. It is eaten au naturel or seasoned with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) or stuffed with crab salad.

For some years now chefs have been testing their ingenuity in the creation of new recipes for this fruit (avocado soup, creamed avocados, avocados as dessert, etc.). The best variety of avocado pear comes from Brazil.

Avocet

AVOCET. AVOCETTE – A genus of wading birds. It is found in countries with cold or temperate climates, particularly along the coasts of Europe and America.

The flesh of the avocet, although quite delicate, savours of the food it lives on, which consists almost entirely of fresh fish, worms and aquatic insects.

The European avocet is about the size of a pigeon, and is recognisable by its pied plumage. Avocet shooting is practised in Poitou.

All the culinary methods given for teal (q.v.) can be applied to avocet.

AY – Village in Champagne, cradle of Champagne wine (which was famous even before it became a sparkling wine). Leon X, Charles Quint, Henry VIII and François I had officers permanently stationed at Ay to look after the precious vineyard and ensure that the court had regular supplies of the wine. Henri IV willingly accepted the title of 'Sire of Ay'.

AYAPANA – Plant originating in South America. Its leaves, exuding a pleasant aroma, are used as infusions, aperients and soporifics.

The infusion is made in the same way as tea, but as the smell of the ayapana is very strong, 12 or 13 leaves are enough for a six-cup teapot.

Ayapana blends perfectly with egg yolks, and with cream.

AZAROLE – Fruit of the Neapolitan medlar; common name of a shrub known as Crataegus azarolus which is of the same species as hawthorn. It is also called épine d'Espagne in France. This shrub is similar to a service tree.

The Neapolitan medlar is indigenous to the whole of the Mediterranean area, and it is also cultivated in the Paris region. The medlar berry is oval, reddish or yellowish in colour, acid and slightly sweet in taste. It is used for compotes, confectionery and a much-prized liqueur.

In Provence, in Italy and in Spain, as well as throughout the whole of Algeria, it is used for jam, which is a very popular preserve.

AZI or AZY – French term for rennet, which is made from whey to which a certain amount of vinegar is added.

AZYMOUS (Bread). AZYME – Etymologically, the word azymous means unleavened.

The Jews had two ways of making their unleavened bread; either by previously grilling the flour, or by using ordinary flour kneaded with warm water and salted, allowing  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons of salt per 450 g. (1 lb.) flour. The paste was rolled out to a thickness of 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) and placed on a metal sheet. The rolled-out pastry was then pricked and baked in a slow oven.

Unleavened bread made from grilled oatmeal flour is prepared in the same manner.

Azarole

BABA – Cake made of leavened dough, mixed with raisins and steeped in kirsch or rum after cooking.

The invention of this cake is said to be due to King Stanislas Leczinski. Some authors state that the royal gastronome did not invent the baba we know, but found a new way of eating a kugelhopf, which had been made in Lemberg (Lvov) since 1609. He sprinkled the cake with rum and set it alight as one does a plum pudding.

The kugelhopf, done in this way, had a great success at the court of Lorraine, where it was served accompanied by a sweetened and spiced Malaga wine. King Stanislas was an avid reader of the Thousand and One Nights, and named his favourite sweet after one of its heroes, Ali Baba.

The cake was introduced in Paris at the beginning of the nineteenth century by a pastry-cook, Sthorer, who had seen it in Lunéville, where the court of Poland was transferred. He made it a speciality of his establishment in rue Montorgueil, and called it simply 'baba'. Sthorer made the babas in advance, moistening them with a brush dipped in wine just before selling them. Later, the process was to immerse them in rum-flavoured syrup.

In the 1840s, a cake of similar nature, called fribourg, was made at Bordeaux. At the same time a Parisian maitre pâtissier, omitting raisins from the dough, gave the cake another shape, and steeping it in a syrup of his own creation, produced the brillat-savarin, which later became savarin.

Says Lacam: 'He gave to his friend Bourbonneux, with whom he worked at Chiboust's, the idea of using the same dough baked in a hexagonal mould, and creating a cake which was called gorenflot, after one of the heroes of la Dame de Montsoreau.'

Baba

Recipe used by the pastry-cooks for babas:

Sift 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) flour into a large wooden bowl, make a well in the middle, put into this well 1½ teaspoons salt and 20 g. (¾ oz., 1 cake) yeast which has been dissolved in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) warm milk. Add 7 whole eggs, and work the paste with the hands to mix well. Distribute 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) butter, which has been softened, in small pieces over the paste. Cover, and keep the paste in a warm place until the yeast has risen to double its original size.

Add 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) fine sugar, and knead the paste well so that it absorbs the butter. Add 50 g. (2 oz., scant ½ cup) currants and 50 g. (2 oz., scant ½ cup) golden sultanas.

Rum babas and mould (Larousse)

Mix well. Put the paste into well-buttered baba moulds, filling up to one-third of their height.

Bake in a hot oven and allow to cool before turning the babas out of the moulds. Sprinkle with rum or kirsch.

Syrup for babas. SIROP À BABA – Add 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) rum to 1½ litres (2½ pints, 3¼ pints) syrup cooked to 104°C. (219°F.). A small quantity of coriander is sometimes used to flavour the syrup.

BABIROUSSA – This mammal, allied to the wild boar, differs from the latter in the curious development of the canines. Its general appearance and squat shape give it a certain similarity to the rhinoceros. Like the latter, it lives in the swampy forests of the Malay Archipelago, and is fairly easily tamed. Its flesh, which is prepared in the same way as that of wild boar (q.v.), is much prized.

BACCHANALIA. BACCHANALES – Festivals celebrated in honour of Bacchus. These festivals began in Egypt, spread to Phoenicia, and then to Greece and Italy.

BACCHANTE – Priestess, votary of Bacchus.

Bacchus on a barrel

(Larousse)

BACCHUS – Roman god of wine, the Dionysus of the Greeks. He was born, according to legend, in Thebes in Boeotia. Jupiter was his father. Semele, his mother, was one of the daughters of Cadmus and Hermione.

When Semele lay dead (struck down by the fiery bolts of her lover), Bacchus, too, would have perished had not Jupiter made Vulcan draw out the young fruit of love from Semele's body, lying at his feet. Macris, the daughter of Aristaeus, received the child into her arms and Sabazius put him in the god's thigh to complete the nine months of his gestation.

His three aunts, Inno, Agave and Antonöe nursed the child in his early years, and cared for him with maternal devotion. From the hands of the Nymphs, Bacchus passed into those of the Muses, and Silenus. The Muses initiated him into the knowledge of harmony and dance; Silenus taught him viniculture and the making of wine.

The nature of his birth makes Bacchus a hero rather than a god; but he is the love-child of a god and a mortal, and we cannot deny his divinity in the pagan sense of the word. He is the lord of wine, as Ceres was the goddess of corn-bearing and agriculture. The ancients thought that they were the sacred couple presiding over the solid and the liquid, which sustain and animate life.

BACON. LARD MAIGRE FUMÉ – Once used to mean pork in general, particularly salt pork.

'A big hog (bacon) had been killed,' we read in Segretain Moine's medieval tale. And in the fable of Cockayne we read:

*Si pais si a non Coquaigne
Qui plus i dort, plus i gaigne.
De bars, de saumons et d'aloses
Sont toutes les maisons encloses;
Si chevron i sont d'esturgeon;
Les couvertures de bacons
Et les lates sont de saucisses.*

In this land, the land of Cockayne,
The more one sleeps, the more one would gain by it.
With bass, salmon and shad
All the houses are enclosed;
Their rafters are made of sturgeon;
The roof of bacon
And the slates are sausages.

BACONIQUE – Adjective once applied in France to meals which consisted exclusively of pork, fresh or salt, prepared in various ways.

Badian anise

BADIAN ANISE. BADIANE – Fruit of a tree of the same name tasting of anise. It is better known under the name of star anise, and is also called Chinese anise. It is used as a carminative in the form of an infusion (50 to 60 g. per litre, 2 to 2½ oz. per scant quart, generous quart) and in the preparation of certain liqueurs. Its taste is more pungent than that of green anise, and the essence to which this fruit owes its aroma is toxic if taken in heavy doses. Cases of poisoning as a result of taking too strong an infusion have been known.

In India, China and Japan, this plant is burnt to scent the houses; it is eaten after a meal to freshen the mouth, and it is also mixed with tea and liqueurs.

Badian anise, which was brought into Europe by an English sailor at the end of the sixteenth century, is used in the manufacture of Bordeaux anissette. The seeds of badian anise are used in confectionery and pastry-making. In some northern countries it is used for flavouring bread.

BAGRATION – The name of a Russian general who fought against Napoleon. It is given to various dishes: Bagrationsoup, Bagrationsalad (see SOUP, SALAD).

BAIN-DE-PIED (Footbath) – Colloquial French for an excess of liquid, principally coffee, if it overflows and spills from the cup into the saucer.

A Roman baker, after a Pompeii fresco

Bain-marie

BAIN-MARIE – In cookery and confectionery, this is a vessel half-filled with hot water, in which sauces and other delicate dishes can be kept hot until required.

Cooking in a bain-marie – Certain dishes, such as scrambled eggs, butter sauces, custard creams, mousses, meat and fish loaves, which may turn 'oily' or disintegrate if they are cooked on direct heat, can be cooked in their own utensils, which are lowered into the hot water. In U.S.A. a utensil called the double-boiler is used for this purpose.

In France, the name bain-marie is also applied to a utensil for sterilising babies' bottles.

BAISER – In some regions of France, this is the name given to two small meringues joined together with thick cream or other sweet mixture.

BAJET – A species of oyster commonly found on the coast of west Africa. The shell is flat, round, and thicker than that of ordinary oysters. The flesh is edible but not very delicate.

BAKERY. BOULANGERIE – Shop where bread baked by the baker himself is sold.

The first bakers in Italy were those the Romans brought from Greece, following their campaign against Philip, Hannibal's ally. Later, together with the freed slaves, bakers formed an organisation which enjoyed considerable privileges.

In France, the bakers' corporation was a confraternity, or religious society, under the name of tallemeliers. Their statutes can be traced back to the time of Saint Louis, and the oldest complete set of regulations in existence is that preserved for us by Estienne Boileau at the beginning of the Registres des métiers (Register of Trades), collected about 1260.

The first clause decrees: 'No-one can become a tallemelier in the suburbs of Paris who does not buy the right to trade from the King'.

One of their privileges was the buying and reselling of pigs without paying for this right, because they needed pigs to eat the bran which was not yet, in those days, separated from the flour. To become a master baker, and to have the right to practise his trade, a baker had to serve a four-year apprenticeship, and to buy the master's certificate from the king or from the king's pantler. From the time he received this, a right of inspection was established. Bread of insufficient weight was confiscated and distributed to the poor, penalties for the violation of the law being left to the discretion of the head of the community.

Appeals were brought before the grand pantler, whose judgement was final. The penalty was simple: a fine of 6 deniers (pennies) for any violation of the law.

Ancient bakers' arms

Philip the Fair, who introduced reforms into this legislation, decreed that the fines should be discretionary and proportionate to the offence. He appointed the Provost of Paris to be the bakers' judge, and, at the same time, considerably reduced their privileges. The trade of bakery was to be free; he forbade the buying of grain in the markets for resale, and permitted private persons to buy in the same way as wholesale merchants.

In 1366, Charles V ordered that the bakers, both in Paris and outside, should bring their bread to the market on market days. They must all make bread of the same flour and content, the same weight, and sell it at the same price; and they should make two sizes of loaf, one which cost 4 deniers and one which cost 2 deniers, the price being determined by the weight.

In 1372, the king decided that the price of bread in Paris should be fixed in accordance with the varying price of grain. When grain cost 8 sous, white bread or pain de chailli costing 2 deniers a loaf should weigh 25½ oz. when baked. The bourgeois loaf at the same price should weigh 37½ oz. when baked. Inferior quality pain de brode, costing 1 denier, should weigh 36 oz. baked.

At the beginning of the fourteenth century Charles VI decreed:

'That the bakers may not buy or cause to be bought either grain or flour on the Paris markets if the market has not been open at least one hour.

'That no baker can at the same time be a miller or a measurer of grain.

'That the bakers may not buy grain except through the intermediary of a sworn-in measurer.'

In the reign of Charles VI, the rigours of an interminable war, the scarcity and high prices of cereals, the sale of bread against uncertain payment and other causes forced many of the bakers to give up their trade and to destroy their ovens. A written decree was issued in 1415 ordering them to rebuild the ovens without delay, on pain of banishment.

Further regulations were issued from time to time. In 1439, Charles VII introduced new measures, one being that the price of bread should be posted up in the markets. In addition, 'The bakers shall not buy grain before noon.' The bourgeois classes were baking their own bread, and this regulation aimed at preventing the bakers from bulk buying, and maintaining their monopoly.

There were other decrees. All guilds, including the bakers', were to have their own banners and insignia. In 1569, a curious regulation laid down what bakers were to wear: shirt, drawers without trunk hose, a cap. They were forbidden to go out, except on Sundays and official closing days, forbidden 'to gather together', to set up monopolies, or to wear daggers, swords or other weapons.

The seventeenth century marks a milestone in the history of the Paris bakery trade. There were improvements in manufacture, permission to sell flour without bran, a regulation forbidding the use of brewer's yeast, and the new pain mollet (bread roll) process.

The Chapter of the Cathedral of Notre-Dame baked bread which was called pain de chapitre, which had a vogue before it was superseded by the favourite bread of Queen Marie de Medici: a salted bread prepared with brewer's yeast and called pain à la reine. Then came bread known as pains à la Montauron, which was kneaded with milk. Pain de Gentilly was made with butter. Besides pain mollet, there was pain blême (pale bread) and pain à la citrouille (pumpkin loaves), made by the bakers of small loaves.

Richelieu did away with many out-of-date measures and introduced bold reforms, legislation which is in force to this day. He laid down:

'Grain merchants shall not make their purchases except outside the ten-league (40-km., 25-mile) limit around Paris. Bakers of small loaves and pastry-cooks shall not buy grain before 11 o'clock in summer and noon in winter; large-loaf bakers shall not buy grain before 2 o'clock, to enable the needs of the bourgeois to be supplied first. Bakers shall put their distinctive trade-mark on their loaves, and keep scales and weights in their shops, on pain of being deprived of licence or even more severe punishment.'

They were likewise forbidden to store away unsold bread: they had to dispose of it at a reduced price if still unsold within three days of baking.

In 1650, sifted flour began to make its appearance, and enabled a great quantity to be transported at a time, bran no longer being part of the flour. From that time onwards bakers were not allowed to raise pigs. In 1666, in the reign of Louis XIV, a curious case was recorded by Fournier, Molière et le procès du pain mollet (Molière and the bread roll), in the Revue Française. (A man called Poquelin, a relative of Molière, was involved in the case, which concerned a claim that brewers' yeast had caused illness). The verdict declared that the use of brewer's yeast in bread was detrimental to health, and was therefore forbidden.

By the beginning of the eighteenth century the number of bread markets had risen to 15, to which between 500 and 600 bakers came from the city and the outlying suburbs; a further 1,000 came from Gonesse, Corbeil and Saint-Germain-en-Laye. They traded in the main markets, but there were many bakers who plied their trade without holding master bakers' certificates. These unauthorised bakers lived around the Temple, Saint-Jean-de-Latran, Saint-Denis, la Châtre and Quinze-Vingts. They enjoyed the same rights in the city as the people from outside, except for the master bakers, who had all the privileges conferred by the licence.

Louis XIV abolished the jurisdiction of the royal pantler. Artisans and suburban merchants were now on the same footing as those of the town, and newly qualified master bakers were enabled to practise on the same conditions as their established colleagues by paying the same taxes. The principal aim of this concession was no doubt due to the fact that after several years of great poverty among the people, the Treasury was depleted, and the State was able to increase taxation by imposing it on suburban bakers as well as on those in the city.

There followed additional laws compelling each baker to bring a certain quantity of bread to market (Abbé Jaubert, Dictionnaire Universel des Arts et Métiers, 1773) – a great hardship, as they had to get rid of all the bread after a certain hour, and so must sell any surplus very cheaply.

At this period, the latter part of the eighteenth century, apprenticeship lasted five years, followed by four years working for the bakers' guild. At the end of the nine years the apprentice, unless he was the master baker's son, had to present his chef-d'œuvre, and on paying for a certificate, might at last practise as a master baker. Thus matters continued until the French Revolution, but even after 1789 the breadmaking industry remained under strict control. It was only in 1863 that it became free.

Baker's assistant. MITRON – The term comes from the paper head-dress or mitre which bakers wore at work.

Bakery equipment – This changed very slowly. Kneading was done by hand for many centuries in a huge wooden trough, longer than it was wide, which stood on four legs. It had a flat cover called the tour. Modern bakeries have mechanical metal kneading machines.

The ovens remained as they are shown in Diderot's Encyclopédie from the days of the Romans until the nineteenth century: a block of masonry with the actual baking-oven inside, square in shape, the inside edges rounded off, surmounted by a dome called the chapelle. The walls were at least 50 cm. (20 inches) thick and the oven was heated by wood. Coal, burnt in a special fireplace below the opening of the oven, replaced wood; then came gas, oil heating, and electricity. Today, pipes containing a liquid which is first heated in a coal-fired chamber circulate round the oven; a system that has the advantage of being clean, uniform and economical.

In France, breadmaking is still mainly carried on in small-scale establishments, producing a few hundred kg. of bread a day, but the trend is towards mass production in large factories, with skilled technical organisation and highly developed mechanisation.

The work involved in transforming flour into bread is described under the entry BREAD.

BALACHAN – Seasoning much used in Siam. In Tonkin it is known as nukemum. It is made of small shrimps, pounded with salt into thick brine, which is dried in the sun. Balachan, it is said, stimulates the appetite and fortifies the stomach.

BALAIN or BALEINE – Name of a restaurant-keeper who ran le Rocher de Cancale in rue Montorgueil. Grimod de la Reynière, who gave parties at this restaurant, spoke very highly of him. Carême considered him to be a second-rate caterer. (See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.)

BALANUS – Fruit of the balanite, a shrub indigenous to upper Egypt. It is about the size of a hazelnut, and when pressed yields an oil used in the perfumery industry. When fresh and very ripe, the fruit is edible and known as the desert date; its flavour is enhanced if served along with other foods.

BALAOU – French name for a small fish, similar to the sardine, which abounds in Martinique. Its flesh is delicate and easily digestible.

All methods of cooking sardines can be applied to balaou.

BALLOTTINE – Galantine normally served as a hot entrée; it can also be served cold. The ballotine is made of a piece of meat, fowl, game or fish which is boned, stuffed, and rolled into the shape of a bundle. The term ballottine should strictly apply only to meat, boned and rolled, but not stuffed. It is, however, also applied to dishes which are actually galantines.

Ballottine of lamb à la boulangère. BALLOTTINE D'AGNEAU À LA BOULANGÈRE – Prepare like Shoulder of lamb à la boulangère (see LAMB).

Ballottine of lamb à la bourgeoise. BALLOTTINE D'AGNEAU À LA BOURGEOISE – Prepare like Ballottine of lamb à la bonne femme (see below), replacing the garnish indicated in that recipe by garnish à la bourgeoise (see GARNISHES) which should be cooked with the meat.

Ballottine of lamb braised à la bonne femme. BALLOTTINE D'AGNEAU BRAISÉE À LA BONNE FEMME – Stuff a boned shoulder of lamb with sausage meat mixed with chopped onion which has been lightly fried in butter or lard, and chopped parsley.

Roll the shoulder into a ballotine, tie with string, and brown in the oven. Put into an earthenware cocotte (deep dish). Slice and fry 12 medium-sized onions in butter, together with about 100 g. (4 oz.) lean bacon which has been blanched and diced. Moisten with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) dry white wine which has been boiled down a little. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and enough thickened meat stock just to cover the ballotine. Bring to the boil.

Cover the cocotte and put it in a hot oven for 45 minutes. Add 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) potato balls and cook at a lower heat for 35 minutes. Drain the ballotine, remove string, put back in the cocotte, and serve.

Ballottine of lamb, braised, with various garnishes. BALLOTTINE D'AGNEAU BRAISÉE – Prepare the ballotine and braise it in a deep earthenware dish, as described in the preceding recipe, but without adding bacon, potatoes or onions.

When the ballotine is cooked, drain, and remove string. Arrange on a serving dish, surround with a garnish, or serve the garnish separately. Boil down the braising liquor, remove the surplus fat, strain, and pour it over the ballotine.

Garnishes which are suitable for this dish (see GARNISHES) are as follows: bouquetière, bretonne, bruxelloise, chipolata, flamande, jardinière, macédoine, milanaise, nivernaise. The dish may be served with noodles, rice, pilaf, risotto, also with fresh vegetables dressed with butter or cream, braised or glazed vegetables, and potatoes prepared in various ways.

Ballottine of lamb, cold, with various garnishes. BALLOTTINE D'AGNEAU FROIDE – When the ballotine is quite cold, pour over it a little liquid aspic jelly, and leave until set. Arrange on a serving dish, or on a decrusted buttered crouton. Garnish, and decorate with chopped jelly.

All the garnishes recommended for cold meat and poultry are suitable for cold ballotine.

Ballottine of lamb in jelly. BALLOTTINE D'AGNEAU À LA GELÉE – Stuff a boned and flattened shoulder of lamb with Galantine forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) composed of pickled tongue, ham and truffles. Roll, wrap in a piece of muslin, and tie with string. Cook in jelly stock as described in the recipe for galantine (q.v.).

Drain the ballotine, unwrap, and tie it up again tightly in a cloth, securing each end with string and tying it also in the middle. Cool under a press. Unwrap the ballotine and glaze it with cold aspic jelly made from the stock in which it was cooked, clarified and reinforced with gelatine, if necessary.

Arrange on a serving dish and garnish with chopped jelly.

Ballottine of lamb in jelly

Ballottine of mutton. BALLOTTINE DE MOUTON – Proceed as described for Ballottine of lamb.

Ballottine of pork, braised, with various garnishes. BALLOTTINE DE PORC BRAISÉE – Bone a shoulder of pork and prepare as Ballottine of lamb. When the ballotine is braised, drain, remove string, glaze with jelly, and serve with one of the garnishes normally used for meat (see GARNISHES). Boil down the braising liquor, remove fat, strain, and pour over the ballotine.

Ballottine of pork in jelly. BALLOTTINE DE PORC À LA GELÉE – Bone a shoulder of pork and prepare as Ballottine of lamb in jelly. Garnish and serve as described in the recipe for Ballottine of lamb.

Ballottine of veal. BALLOTTINE DE VEAU – Take a boned shoulder or a thin slice of chump end of loin (U.S. sirloin steak or cutlet), and proceed as described in the recipe for Ballottine of lamb.

Ballottine of veal, either hot or cold, can be served with one of the garnishes recommended for meat (see GARNISHES).

Ballottine of chicken with dark sauce, served with various garnishes. BALLOTTINE DE POULARDE À BRUN – Bone a medium-sized fowl (see GALANTINE). Stuff it with a quenelle of finely pounded Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT).

Boil the ballotine in a cloth which has been previously soaked in hot water and wrung out, and tie it with string. Cook in a braising pan with just enough chicken stock to cover the fowl. Bring to the boil, put on the lid, and simmer for 50 minutes.

Drain the ballotine and keep it hot for 10 minutes in the oven, to ensure that the forcemeat settles properly. Remove fat from the braising liquor, strain through muslin, and boil down by two-thirds. Blend with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) thickened veal stock, and strain through a fine sieve.

Unwrap the ballotine and glaze it in the oven, basting with the thickened gravy. Arrange on a dish, surround with garnish, and pour over it a few tablespoons of the gravy; serve the rest of the gravy in a sauceboat.

The following garnishes are recommended: noodles, celery, mushrooms or chipolata, bouquetière, Demidoff, espagnole, Godard, milanaise, niçoise, orientale, périgourdine, piémontaise, portugaise, Rossini, and with all other garnishes recommended for chicken or fowl served in small pieces with a dark sauce.

Ballottine of chicken, with light sauce, served with various garnishes. BALLOTTINE DE POULARDE À BLANC – Prepare and cook the ballotine as described above, and glaze it lightly.

BALM

Arrange on a fried croûton, or on a foundation of rice or semolina. Surround with a garnish and serve with Velouté or Suprême sauce (see SAUCE), using the liquor in which the ballotine was cooked.

Recommended garnishes: celery, mushrooms, noodles, rice, Albuféra, anversoise, banquière, Chivry, demi-deuil, ivoire, princesse, régence, Toulouse, and, generally, with garnishes recommended for poultry prepared with light sauce.

Small ballotines of chicken. PETITES BALLOTTINES DE VOLAILLE – Ballotines made of chickens' legs, when the wings and breast are used for some other dish.

The legs are boned and stuffed as described in the first recipe for Ballotine of chicken. They are braised à brun or à blanc, and garnished and served as described in the directions for Ballotine of chicken.

Sometimes this dish is given the shape of a ham knuckle, in which case it is served under the name of Jambonneaux de volaille.

Ballotine of chicken in jelly (chaud-froid) I. BALLOTTINE DE POULARDE À LA GELÉE (EN CHAUD-FROID) – Prepare and cook as described in preceding recipes. Finish as indicated in one of the recipes for cold chicken – Chicken mayonnaise, Néva, parisienne (see CHICKEN).

Ballotine of chicken in jelly II. BALLOTTINE DE POULET À LA GELÉE – Prepare and cook the ballotine as described in preceding recipes. Unwrap, and allow to cool in its liquor, which has been strained and the fat removed.

Arrange the chicken on a serving dish, glaze, and decorate with jelly made from the stock in which it was cooked.

Ballotine of glazed chicken (chaud-froid). BALLOTTINE DE POULET GLACÉE (EN CHAUD-FROID) – Cook the ballotine as described in preceding recipes, chill, and prepare as in the recipe for Chaud-froid of chicken (see CHICKEN).

Ballottines of various poultry. BALLOTTINES DE VOLAILLES DIVERSES – Proceed with ducks, turkeys, pigeons or guinea-fowl as described in the recipe for Ballotine of chicken. Forcemeat for stuffing ducks or guinea-fowl can be mixed with one-third of its volume of foie gras, and chopped truffles.

These ballotines are served hot or cold, with garnishes recommended for chicken.

BALM. BAUME – Name applied to various aromatic plants of the mint type.

BAMBOCHER – Slang term in French meaning 'to live it up'. The word comes from the nickname of a Dutch painter, Pierre van Laer, called 'Le Bamboche', who specialised in depicting rustic scenes (bambochades).

BAMBOO. BAMBOU – Arborescent reeds (a genus of woody-stemmed grasses) grown in tropical countries. Its young shoots are edible, and are pickled in vinegar and sold canned, as a luxury product. The shoots, which are spiky, are eaten raw in China, Indo-China, India, Japan etc.

The Japanese pickle tender bamboo shoots in saké vinegar (saké is a spirit distilled from rice). In the Sunda Isles, bamboo stems are pickled in palm vinegar.

The pith of various species of bamboo is very sweet, and a kind of spirit oozes from it. The fruit of the bamboo is the size of a pear, and is formed of a great number of edible seeds resembling ripe ears of maize or Indian corn. Young bamboo shoots are covered with fine but sharp hairs, which must be removed before cooking, otherwise perforation of the intestines may result.

BAMBOO MUSHROOM. CHAMPIGNON DE BAMBOU – A mushroom much valued in Chinese cuisine. It is available in Europe only in its dried form.

BANANA. BANANE – Fruit of the banana tree, which grows in tropical regions. About 30 species of it are known.

In the Hindu religion there is a legend in which the banana was the fruit forbidden to Adam and Eve in the terrestrial paradise, which, according to the legend, was on the island of Ceylon, where the parents of the human race covered their nakedness with banana leaves. This explains the names of Adam's fig-tree and Paradise banana, which the Indians have given to two species of banana tree.

The dietetic qualities of the banana are undisputed. It provides 100 calories per 100 g. (250 calories per 100 g. in its dried form) and a sufficient quantity of all the mineral salts necessary for the body's maintenance.

It is rich in starch, which is transformed into extremely energising sugar when the fruit is fully ripe. It also contains a wide variety of vitamins: A, B, B<sub>1</sub>, B<sub>2</sub>, B<sub>12</sub>, D and E.

When ripe, the banana is full of nourishing constituents. It contains 74 per cent water and 22 per cent carbohydrates. These carbohydrates are only assimilable when the fruit is fully ripe; in green bananas it remains a non-assimilable starch.

Bananas destined for export are harvested when they are still green, at a stage when their flesh is white and without flavour. They have to be transported in conditions of a steady temperature of 12.5° to 13°C. (54.5° to 55.5°F.) in ships specially equipped for this purpose. They are shipped in complete stems of from 15 to 40 kg. (33 to 88 lb.) wrapped in special paper or polythene bags, or in 'hands' of from 8 to 12 bananas packed in cartons or crates.

On arrival, the bananas (which should be at the same stage of maturity as they were at the port of embarkation) are ripened either in converted cellars heated to a temperature of from 16.5° to 20°C. (61.5° to 68°F.) with a humidity value of 90 per cent to 95 per cent, or in specially equipped dépôts. The ripening period is carried out according to requirements, and varies from 3 to 8 days.

When bananas are to be eaten raw, preference should be given to those which are a uniform golden-yellow colour, or lightly spotted.

There are some two hundred species of bananas in cultivation throughout the world. Of these, three varieties are commonly found on the French market: sinensis and pojo, similar to each other, both slightly curved, with fragrant, tasty flesh, and gros-Michel, larger, straighter, less fragile (and therefore more resistant to handling) but less fragrant.

Ripening place for bananas (Pomona)

Sinensis and poyo come from Martinique, Guadeloupe, the Ivory Coast and the Canaries. The gros-Michel is grown in Central America, South America and Cameroun. The latter is gradually being replaced by poyo.

In France, the gros-Michel of Cameroun is marketed principally in the east of the country, the poyo of the Ivory Coast and Canary bananas in the south, Antilles bananas in the Paris region and the west.

Curved banana from the Canaries and straight banana from America

Bananas are sometimes dried in their country of origin and exported in this form. Their calorific value then rises to about 285 calories per 100 g. – twice that of meat. The banana can also be reduced to 'flour'. It takes this form in a number of industrial preparations, usually flavoured with cocoa.

A stem of bananas may consist of as many as 200, and weighs from 35 to 40 kg. (77 to 88 lb.).

Baked bananas. BANANES AU FOUR – Bake the bananas in the oven without peeling them. Serve with melted butter and fine sugar. Serve with a red fruit jelly, if desired.

Bananas Beauharnais. BANANES BEAUHARNAIS – Put 6 peeled bananas into a buttered fireproof dish. Dust with fine sugar, sprinkle with 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) white rum, and heat on the stove. Cook in the oven for 5 minutes. Pour thick cream over them, sprinkle with crushed macaroons and a little melted butter, and glaze in a hot oven. Serve in the same dish.

Bananas Bourdaloue. BANANES BOURDALOUE – Peel and poach the bananas in syrup, and proceed as described in the recipe for Apricots bourdaloue (see APRICOTS).

Bananas in butter. BANANES AU BEURRE – Peel bananas, put them in a buttered fireproof dish, and sprinkle with sugar. Cook slowly in the oven (180°C., 350°F., Gas Mark 4) for 20 to 30 minutes.

Banana compote – See COMPOTE.

Bananas Condé. BANANES CONDÉ – Peel and poach the bananas and proceed as described in the recipe for Apricots Condé (see APRICOT).

Bananas à la créole

Bananas à la créole. BANANES GRATINÉES À LA CRÉOLE – Choose firm bananas and cut them lengthwise. Remove the fruit and soak the skins for 2 minutes in boiling water. Drain, and dip them in cold water to cool.

Cut the banana halves into slices, and steep them in sugar and rum for 30 minutes. Partly fill the banana skins with Dessert rice (see RICE) mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of crystallised fruit, and flavoured with rum. Arrange the banana slices on top, put the fruit on a baking tray, sprinkle with melted butter and finely ground macaroons, and brown in a hot oven.

Serve with rum-flavoured Apricot sauce (see SAUCE).

Banana croûtes à la Bauvilliers. CROÛTES AUX BANANES À LA BAUVILLIERS – Cut a stale brioche into a dozen rectangular slices 6 cm. (2½ inches) long and a little wider than a banana. Put the slices on a baking tray, sprinkle with fine sugar, and glaze in the oven.

Peel 6 bananas and halve lengthways. Put them on a buttered baking tray, sprinkle with fine sugar and cook in the oven for 5 minutes. Arrange the bananas, alternating with slices of brioche, in a circle in a fireproof dish. Fill the centre with semolina cooked with milk, sugar and vanilla, and bound with egg yolks (see SEMOLINA. English semolina pudding). Mix with a salpicon (q.v.) of preserved fruit steeped in maraschino.

Sprinkle the whole dish with finely crushed macaroons and melted butter, and brown in the oven. Before serving, surround with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with maraschino.

Banana croûtes à la malthaise. CROÛTES AUX BANANES À LA MALTHAISE – Prepare as described in the recipe for Banana croûtes à la Bauvilliers, replacing semolina by thick French pastry cream (see CREAMS), flavoured with grated orange peel.

Decorate the circle of bananas with candied orange peel and halved almonds.

Bananas flambé. BANANES FLAMBÉES – Peel bananas and cook them in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain, and put into a timbale or a shallow ovenproof dish. Sprinkle with liqueur, and set alight when serving.

Banana flan or tart à la crème. FLAN DE BANANES À LA CRÈME – Peel bananas and halve them lengthways. Put them in a buttered dish, sprinkle with fine sugar, and cook in the oven. Arrange them in a flan made of short pastry, and fill with French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Sprinkle with crushed macaroons, and brown in the oven.

Fried bananas (garnish for meat). BANANES FRITES – Peel and halve the bananas lengthways. Marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Dip the halves in a light batter and fry, when required.

As a dessert or sweet course, these are the same as Banana fritters (see below).

Banana fritters. BEIGNETS DE BANANES – Halve the bananas lengthways and steep them for an hour in rum or kirsch and sugar. When required, dip them in batter and deep-fry in sizzling fat. Drain, dry, and sprinkle with fine sugar before serving.

Batter. Make a smooth thick paste with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) flour and warm water. Add a tablespoon olive oil, and leave to stand for 2 to 3 hours, stirring from time to time.

Just before using, fold 2 stiffly whisked egg whites into the batter.

Banana mousse glacé – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES, Fruit mousse.

Banana soufflé. SOUFFLÉ AUX BANANES – Blend a tablespoon flour and a small pinch of salt into a smooth paste with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk which has been boiled with 35 g. (2 tablespoons, 3 tablespoons) sugar and allowed to cool. Add half a vanilla bean (or  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon vanilla essence) and stir well. Bring slowly to just under the boil, stirring all the time; remove from the heat. The texture should be that of thick cream.

Rub the pulp of 4 bananas through a fine sieve, mix with 2 egg yolks and a heaped tablespoon butter, and add this mixture to the cream in the saucepan. Add the stiffly whisked egg whites.

Butter a soufflé dish, sprinkle with fine sugar, and pour in the mixture. Bake in a slow oven (160°C., 325°F., Gas Mark 3) for 12 to 15 minutes.

BANDOL – Charming fishing port in the département of Var which has given its name to excellent white, red and rosé wines produced in the locality. (See PROVENCE.)

BANGI – Small tree which grows in the Philippines. It is lactescent and produces a pleasant, green coloured fruit, the size of an orange.

BANILLES – Long, tapering small pods which have some similarity to the vanilla bean. They contain a fragrant, sugary juice which is often used instead of vanilla in the manufacture of chocolate.

BANQUET – The word possibly comes from banc (bench). It may have been on benches that the first Christians sat as they celebrated their agapes in the catacombs.

Whatever the origin of the word, banquet signifies a sumptuous meal given to a large number of guests on festal or ceremonial occasions. Or it is given to bring together people of the same literary or artistic tastes, or religious or political ideas, or of the same social status, profession, or ethnic origin, and so on.

The mystic character of a banquet is to be found in pre-history. In the origins of all human activity there was magic, the need of man to make the mysterious forces of nature favourable to him. On the walls of the Trois Frères caves in Ariège, there is a primitive painting of a sorcerer in ceremonial robes, performing a sacred dance in the middle of an immense herd of cattle; apparently some kind of incantation to make the tribe's hunting successful.

When a slaughtered animal lay on the ground, it was divided into two parts, the first for the benevolent deities, the other for the tribe, clan or family. In this way men got used to meeting together, to divide amongst themselves the chosen parts of the animal. They continued to do this on the occasion of the two great events of their lives, birth and death. These were the first banquets.

When large gatherings at table became possible, the era of banquets began. The most magnificent were those that took place in the fertile fields of the orient, especially rich in spices and flavourings.

The banquets of the Egyptians – The Egyptians were very careful in their cooking, because they believed that illnesses were caused by the wrong choice and cooking of food. Contrary to the customs of most Eastern countries, the women took charge of the organisation of banquets in Egypt, directing the service and presiding at table. The guests were ushered into an ante-room on their arrival, where they washed their hands and feet. They then disported themselves in various games before the feast.

At the entrance to the banquet hall, servants crowned them with wreaths of flowers. The first drinks were served, prayers were said, and the meal began. The guests sat on the floor, and the various dishes were placed near them, in baskets. Young musicians provided music on the harp, lyre and tambourine; sometimes there were performances by acrobats and mimes.

Herodotus, Athanaeus and Plutarch have recorded that in order to stimulate the guests to enjoy earthly pleasures to the full, a coffin was sometimes brought in at the end of the meal, with an imitation skeleton in it, so that they should appreciate more highly the good things of life, especially those of the table.

The banquets of the Assyrians and the Chaldeans – Strabo tells us that the epitaph inscribed on the tomb of Sardanapalus reads: 'Sardanapalus, the son of Anacyndara, had the towns of Anchiale and Tarsus built in a day. Passer-by, eat, drink and be merry, for nothing else matters!'

Fresco showing a meal in

The Assyrians celebrated the victories of their armies with banquets. In an Assyrian bas-relief, we can see the king reclining on a sumptuous couch, the queen sitting at his feet, the table richly decked, slaves playing on stringed instruments. The vessels on the table have no feet; they were designed to be quaffed in one copious draught.

Maspéro, in his Lectures Historiques, gives a description of one of these banquets ordered by Ashur-bani-pal, the king under whom Nineveh reached the height of its power:

'The doors of the palace remained open to all comers for seven days. Multi-coloured draperies hung on the walls, transforming the courtyards into immense banqueting halls. People crowded into them from morning till night, stretching out on couches and ordering whatever they liked. Women and children, as well as men, were admitted to this largesse. Nor were soldiers, whose duties prevented them leaving the barracks, forgotten; the king sent food and drink to those who could not come.'

In Babylon, there were orchards and gardens capable of supplying the town with food during a long siege. The sumptuousness of the banquets there equalled those of the Assyrians.

The banquets of the Hebrews – The Hebrews were nomads for a long period, having come out of Chaldea to occupy the land of Canaan. Prosperity and peace on the banks of the Jordan enabled them to partake of the pleasures of the table. At first they were simple pleasures, but when luxury and refinement were introduced their banquets became very elaborate. At the time of the kings they sat down to table, but later adopted the habit of reclining on couches to eat. They perfumed their wine with essences, and when guests arrived for a banquet, holy water and perfume was poured over them, they were crowned with flowers, and took their places according to their rank.

Music was made 'with the harp, the tabret and pipe.' Women were not at first admitted to the feasts, but they were accepted in time, and were handsomely entertained, the Sabeans from the desert putting bracelets on their wrists and crowns on their heads.

The banquets of the Persians – Athenaeus says: 'One thousand animals are slaughtered daily for the king's table; horses, camels, oxen, asses, deer and most of the smaller animals. Many birds are also consumed, such as Arabian ostriches, geese and cocks.'

The Book of Esther describes a banquet given by Ahasuerus, when Queen Vashti's fall from favour was proclaimed after she had refused to appear, at the king's orders. This magnificent banquet, served in the palace gardens, lasted seven days. The couches were of silver and gold, and an abundance of wine was poured into gold cups.

The banquets of the Greeks – City Feasts were organised by the ancient Greeks on social or religious occasions. In addition to these banquets for special occasions, citizens were required to eat a sacred meal together every day, within the prytaneum, in the presence of the sacred fire and the protecting gods. The Greeks believed that if this custom was missed by a single day, they would lose the favour of their gods.

In Athens, men were selected by lot to attend the meal, and were severely punished if they refused to perform this duty. Those who sat at the sacred table wore white robes and crowns of flowers. They were called parasites, then a sacred title, but later destined to become a term of contempt. The parasites had disappeared by the time of Demosthenes, but the prytanes were still required to eat together in the prytaneum.

Women were never invited to a Greek banquet. The guests took their shoes off before entering the banqueting hall, rested on couches for a time, washed, and invoked the gods of home and country before sitting down to the feast. Young girls played upon the harp and lute, and there were dancing girls.

The banquets of the Romans – The splendours of Imperial Rome were reflected in their banquets. The Romans often sacrificed the dishes themselves to presentation and ostentation. At one meal Heliogabalus served to his guests 600 ostrich brains, peas with grains of gold, lentils with precious stones, and other dishes with pearls and amber.

The room where the Romans took their meals was called the triclinium; it was the custom to put only three couches round a table. Each guest brought his own napkin. On arrival, the guests changed into white robes and sandals, and took their places at table according to their status. After invoking the Penates, Lares and Jupiter, they began the feast, eating with their fingers.

A Roman banquet

The first course was the hors-d'œuvre, served with a light wine. The second was the coena, which was the main course, after which sacrifices were made to the Lares amid silence. The third course was the dessert, fresh or dried fruit or fruit baked in pastries, but there was sometimes a more solid course instead of dessert. In a menu found in the ruins of Pompeii, this course included sows' udders, wild boar's head, fricassée of wild duck, and a cream made of flour and Vienne cakes.

Musicians, poets and dancers appeared at important banquets, and sometimes there were gladiator fights, acrobats and clowns.

There are many accounts of the grandiose luxury of the barbaric feasts given by the Romans. Petronius gives us some idea of what they were like in this extract from a description of one of these, Trimalchio's feast:

'On a tray of relishes stood a small bronze ass, carrying twin baskets, one containing green and the other black olives. Salvers, moulded like bridges, contained dormice, seasoned with honey and poppy seeds. There were sizzling sausages on a silver gridiron, with Syrian plums and pomegranate seeds placed beneath it... A basket was placed before us containing a hen, wings spread out as if she were hatching. We broke the egg, which was made of light pastry looking exactly like the shell... and found in it a plump beccafico (garden warbler), deliciously spiced, hidden inside the yolk.

Crystal flagons, carefully sealed, were brought in. Around the neck of each bottle hung a label: Falernian opimian wine 100 years old.'

The long account goes on to list the fantastic manner in which dishes were served; a tray with the twelve signs of the zodiac reproduced on it in a circle, on which the chef had placed dishes analogous to the particular constellation – a piece of beef over Taurus (the Bull), kidneys and testicles over Cancer (the Crab), the uterus of a sow over Virgo (the Virgin), a hare over Sagittarius (the Archer), two mullets over Pisces (the Fish), and so on. An enormous wild boar was served on a platter, with little pastry sucking pigs pressing on the teats... A slave gave the boar a stab in the belly and out flew a cloud of thrushes, trying to escape. Bird catchers caught them with fowlers' rods, and offered them to the guests.

The banquets of the Gauls (100 B.C.) – The food of the early Gauls consisted mainly of fresh or salted pork, the animals they raised in the forests, and milk. Their meals together were long, served by young people. A brazier with spits and cauldrons was placed near the tables, and food was cooked in them.

The guests sat on bundles of straw round low tables. Great quantities of meat, boiled, roasted on the spit or grilled, with a little bread, constituted the meal.

Posidonius, the Greek stoic philosopher, has left a description of the meal:

'The food is served in a clean way: on silver or copper dishes in rich houses, on earthenware or wooden ones in the homes of the poor. Each man takes a whole joint and bites; should the piece be too tough or too big, he cuts it with a small knife, the scabbard of which is attached to his sword. A single drinking vessel of earthenware or metal is handed round by slaves and makes many rounds, but one drinks little at a time.'

The Gauls drank various wines from the horns of wild oxen, ornamented with gold or silver rings; and sometimes from the skulls of their enemies killed in battle, or of their own dead parents, whose memory they thus wished to honour, out of filial piety.

The wines of Bezier and Vienna, and Italian and Greek wines, were seen on the tables of the rich. They were taken in small quantities, and diluted with water. The poor drank beer, and hydromel – herb and spice-flavoured honey, diluted with water.

Fish was eaten in areas near the sea, and mainly grilled, seasoned with salt and cumin and sprinkled with vinegar.

On special occasions, the guests sat at a round table, a prominent place being given to the most distinguished or the most valiant. There was a custom that the legs of the animals served should be allotted to the bravest. This was a source of quarrels, and often a fight to the death.

The banquets of the Gallo-Romans – The wealthy Gallo-Romans adopted Latin customs, and their banquets were modelled on the Roman, though they discarded the custom of reclining on couches.

De la Bédolère, in his Moeurs et vie privée des Français, describes the banquets of the Gallo-Romans; here are extracts:

'Some Gauls, disdaining the indolence of the Romans, use benches, stools and other wooden seats covered with a carpet instead of couches... The guests put on special robes and sandals and take their places around the table... Slaves bring in a great quantity of meat, roast or boiled, which is carved with great skill and dexterity by servants. The meal starts with a tasting of mulsum or medum, mulled wine mixed with honey... A salver is placed in the centre of the table and various dishes are put on it one after the other: fresh eggs, quarters of beef, mutton, pork, goat, all seasoned with yolks of egg, black pepper, brine, cumin, salt...'

As a dessert, the guests are served with hot or cold tarts, honey cakes, soft cheese, grilled escargots, medlars, chestnuts, figs, Gaul peaches and grapes. At the end of the meal hot mulsum is brought in once again, and slaves distribute toothpicks made of feathers, wood and silver.'

The banquets of the Franks – Caius Sollius Apollinaris Sidonius states that one could find in the banquets of the Franks 'the elegance of Greece, the abundance of Gaul, the dispatch of Italy, the pomp of public ceremonial allied to the fastidiousness of a private table, of the order befitting a king's palace.'

Writers of the period mention silver tables, gold and silver utensils, tablecloths fashioned from fresh roses. The Franks were very hospitable, and had a strict code of table manners. Wine was passed round the table and the guests drank from the same cup. Lamps were considered to desecrate the table at a banquet; the room was lit by torches held aloft by slaves.

French banquets from the Middle Ages to the fifteenth century – The beginning of a banquet was announced by the sound of a horn, a privilege reserved for the highest personages in the kingdom. Guests washed their hands with perfumed water before sitting down, and after each course; forks had not been invented; food was eaten with fingers.

Meal served to Grandgousier, Gargantua's father, from an old edition of the works of Rabelais

Goblets and tankards were placed on a side table, and filled by pages who brought them to the guests. This manner of serving wine during meals survived until the end of the eighteenth century. In royal courts, the dishes were tasted by a special servant, or touched with a talisman, to assure the royal personages that the food was not poisoned. The menus were exotic, and included roast peacocks with gilded bills and claws, swans and pheasants dressed in their plumage, calves and pigs ornately presented. The dessert, of fruit and creams, was followed by dried fruit preserves, pastry and hippocras (spiced wine).

French banquets of the sixteenth century – The great banquets given during this century show a love of opulence; richly wrought and engraved gold and silver dinner plate,

Faïence and Nevers porcelain, Venetian glass. Forks and long-handled spoons had come into use, and cooking had become more refined. Belon, in his Traité des Oyseaux writes of 'a thousand little disguises of flesh, made into soups, fricassées, hashes, salads.' After roast and boiled joints and game, there were cold desserts 'such as fruits, milk products, sweetmeats, cakes, cheese, chestnuts, Capendy apples, a salad of lemons or pomegranates.'

French banquets of the seventeenth century – In the reign of Louis XIII, there was less display at banquets and more emphasis on harmony and simplicity. Under Louis XIV, however, there were usually four substantial dishes – roast meat, poultry and game as well as tureens of soup. These were followed by melons, various salads in bowls 'or in little plates to make serving them easier,' comments Nicolas de Bonnefons (Délices de la campagne), and goes on to describe what he considers to be an ideal banquet for a company of thirty people. Among other dishes there should be a potage de la Reine, made of minced partridge or pheasant, in the first course; roast venison haunches baked in pastry in the second; woodcock, turkeys, chickens and whole lambs in the third; snipe, thrushes, larks and 'all sorts of small fried things' in the fourth; whole salmon, trout, carp, pike, with fricassées of turtle in the fifth; and three finishing courses which would include blanchmanges, fruit, almonds and green walnuts, preserves in syrup, or dried marzipans and sugar almonds.

French banquets of the eighteenth century – Great pomp accompanied banquets in the reign of Louis XV. On the occasion of the anointing of the king in 1772, a royal banquet was held in the archiepiscopal palace at Rheims.

After gorgeous processions headed by musicians playing oboes, trumpets and flutes, the king was led to a table on a dais and joined by high officers of state.

The company comprised the noblest in the land, but ladies and princelings were not seated with the gentlemen, and had to wait until the king had retired. According to the old document from which the above descriptions are taken: 'During this sumptuous banquet the Duchess of Lorraine, who, from her tribune, could see all the succulent dishes filing past without being able to touch them, quietly nibbled biscuits, with which she was fortunately provided. . . . After the dinner, the Archbishop of Rheims said grace – the Duchess of Lorraine by this time had reached her reserves of dried plums – and the king was re-conducted to his apartments in the same order and with the same ceremony with which he had been ushered in.'

Madame Vigée-Lebrun's Greek supper. Among legendary eighteenth century meals was a supper given by the artist, Vigée-Lebrun. In her memoirs she describes 'the most brilliant supper I ever gave,' which was, in fact, a miniature banquet. Her brother was reading a book of travels to her one afternoon while she was resting, and came to a passage describing a Greek dinner and the manner of preparing several sauces. Madame Lebrun immediately decided to have certain of these sauces for a supper party she was giving that evening and summoned her cook, ordering that Greek sauces should be served with chickens and eels on the evening's menu.

A friend who had a collection of Greek urns and vases lent her several of his best pieces, and the room was decorated in classical style.

Two guests, Monsieur Vaudreuil and Monsieur Boutin, were not able to come until ten o'clock, but the other guests arrived soon after half-past nine. Madame Lebrun dressed the women in Grecian fashion from draperies she had in her studio workroom, and found cloaks and other picturesque garments for the men.

While they waited for the two late guests, her brother recited several odes of Anacreon, and when the others arrived, they found the company singing Gluck's chorus from Le Dieu de Paphos et de Cnide, with M. de Cubières accompanying them on a lyre which he had improvised from a guitar.

'In all my life I have never seen two faces more astonished than those of Monsieur de Vaudreuil and his companion,' continues Madame Lebrun in her recital of the event. 'They were astounded and charmed.'

At supper, dishes were served with the Greek sauces, as well as a sweet made from honey and currants. They drank a bottle of old Cyprus wine which had been a present to the artist. 'That was all the excess,' she remarks.

Rumour quickly ran round Versailles about this famous supper. It was said to have cost 20,000 francs. In Rome the whispered figure was raised to 40,000 francs, in Vienna to 60,000 francs, in Petersburg to 80,000. In fact, it cost Madame Lebrun, according to her memoirs, 15 francs.

French banquets in the nineteenth century – The beginning of this century saw the publication of Brillat-Savarin's la Physiologie du goût, in which he established the rules of

Banquet given by the Duke of Alba to celebrate the birth of the Prince of Asturias in 1707

Banquet given in honour of Louis XVI and Queen Marie Antoinette on the occasion of the birth of the Dauphin in 1785 (engraving on metal, Louvre)

Dinner given on 7 March 1806 by the Paris print dealers to their fellow dealer Le Confrère. The legend on the print bears the following inscription: 'They beg him to accept this light sketch as a token of their esteem and friendship. May he remember them sometimes in his retirement and for a long time enjoy the happiness he deserves for his kindness of heart and probity' dining harmoniously. For a great gala dinner he laid down:

'That the dining-room be luxuriously lit, the cloth be of the utmost cleanliness, and the temperature from 13 to 16 degrees by the Réaumur thermometer (61° to 66°F.).

'That the men be witty without pretensions and the women charming without being too coquettish.

'That the choice of dishes be exquisite but restrained in number, and the wines of the first quality, each the best of its kind.

'That the order for the former should be from the most substantial to the lightest, and for the latter from the lightest to those with the greatest bouquet.

'That the speed of eating should be moderate, dinner being the last affair of the day; and that the guests behave like travellers who aim to arrive at the same destination together.

'That the coffee be scalding hot, and the liqueurs specially chosen by the master of the house.'

He added rules for the guests' entertainment after dinner:

'That the salon be sufficiently spacious to organise a game of cards for those who cannot do without, and to leave enough room to enable the rest to enjoy conversation.

'That the guests be held by the pleasure of the company, and stirred by the hope that the evening will not pass without some further entertainment.'

In the same epoch, the gastronome Grimod de la Reynière also established a Charte de bon manger. In his Manuel des amphitryons are decreed laws governing banquets. He himself gave grand dinners, some of them eccentric; he once sent out invitations for a dinner in the form of obituary notices, bidding his guests 'attend the funeral and obsequies of a big feed.'

Fashionable restaurants. During the nineteenth century, there was a vogue for magnificent banquets in certain restaurants. At one such dinner, given at Rocher de Cancale by a certain English Lord W., Marennes oysters, a ham roasted on a spit, grouse brought specially from Scotland, salads, special sweet dishes and several kinds of cheese, figure on the menu. The wine was Clos-Vougeot, and the company did not depart until three o'clock in the morning.

Banquets under the Second Empire – There was a number of magnificent gastronomic galas, and in the sections headed COOKING and MENUS, examples are given of what these state dinners were like.

The coronation dinner of Charles X at Reims

Banquet held in la Galerie des Machines in Paris, 5 November 1905

Later banquets – Things were quite different in the later banquets and at the celebrated ‘mayors’ banquet’ (22 September 1900), 22,295 guests of the President of the Republic, attired in frock coats and crush hats, were served with an identical menu:

*Hors-d'œuvre
Filet de boeuf en Bellevue
Pains de canetons de Rouen
Poularde de Bresse rôtie
Ballottine de faisans Saint-Hubert
Salade Potel
Glace succès Condé Desserts*

Never before had such a large number of guests sat down together at a single meal, recounts M. Christian Guy in his Histoire de la cuisine française; this was successfully achieved by the excellent organisation of Maison Potel et Chabot.

It is interesting to note that the menus of official banquets never mention the cheeses served. This may have been because cheese formed part of the dessert and so needed no special mention.

BANQUIÈRE (À LA) – Garnish used for chicken, calves’ sweetbreads, vol-au-vent. It is made of quenelles, mushrooms, thin slivers of truffles and banquière sauce. (See GARNISHES.)

BANTAM – A variety of Java chickens, named after the town where they originated. These birds have a very delicate flesh, and are prepared in the same way as ordinary chickens.

BANVIN – French word for the feudal right which allowed the seigneur to sell the wine from his estate for a certain time, before anyone else. The word is also used for the proclamation announcing the day after which private persons could sell new wine.

BANYULS – Commune in the eastern Pyrenees, which has given its name to a well-known appellation contrôlée dessert wine – Banyuls and Banyuls grand cru, which is produced from the slaty mountainous terrain in a restricted zone comprising the communes of Banyuls, Port-Vendres, Cerbère and Collioure. This wine is made almost exclusively from the black Grenache grape. The Banyuls grand cru have to undergo an obligatory maturing period of thirty months in wood before being released for consumption.

BAOBAB – The largest known tropical African tree. Its fruit is called monkey-bread, because monkeys eat it. Its pulp, which is very sweet with a slight acid flavour, is made into a refreshing drink much liked by the local inhabitants of the region where this magnificent tree grows, and is drunk a great deal in Morocco and Egypt.

The Africans dry the leaves of the baobab in the shade, reduce them to powder which they call lalo, and mix it with their food.

Baobab

BARAQUILLES – A hot hors-d'œuvre; triangular patties, filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of winged game fillets, calves’ sweetbreads, foie gras, truffles and mushrooms, bound with Madeira-flavoured Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Baraquilles are also prepared as rissoles.

BARASHEK IZ MASLA (Butter lamb) (Russian cookery) – Make a model of a lamb with butter which has been rendered firm by being left in ice water. Cover the model with a thin coating of butter, pressing down with a coarse-weave cloth or canvas to give the appearance of fleece. Mark the eyes with two little circles of truffles, or two raisins. Put a small green branch in the lamb's mouth.

This symbolic lamb is a feature of the traditional table laid for the ritual Easter meal in Russia.

BARBADOS CREAM. CRÈME DES BARBADES – Liqueur made of lemon, orange and citron peel, mace, cinnamon, cloves, sugar and eau-de-vie, which was once a fashionable drink.

BARBAREA. BARBARÉE – This plant – also called herb of St Barbara, yarrow, and yellow rocket – has a piquant, rather bitter flavour not unlike that of cress, and has the same anti-scorbutic properties. It grows wild in damp and sandy places.

A variety of barbarea, called land cress or American cress (U.S. winter cress) is cultivated and eaten in salads.

Barbarea can be prepared in all the ways recommended for cress. In certain regions it is mixed with spinach.

BARBARIN – French name for a fish of the mullet family.

BARBARINE – A variety of marrow (U.S. squash) of various shapes and sizes. It has an elongated shape, rather like a cucumber, plain yellow or parti-coloured, sometimes striped with green. The best barbarines are pale yellow, and can be prepared according to the recipes given for marrows and cucumbers.

Barbel

BARBEL. BARBEAU, BARBILLON – River fish recognisable by the barbels at the end of the snout, and at the corners of the jaws.

In France, the common barbel is found in all the rivers. The southern barbel is found in the south of France, in the Alpes-Maritimes and in the Pyrénées-Orientales.

The flesh of the barbel is insipid, and it has too many bones to be pleasant. The fish feeds on the river bed and nibbles at the fishermen's bait, especially those of animal origin, which are very much to its taste. It is fond of crickets and grass-hoppers, and in the autumn rises to the surface in their pursuit.

Large barbel, found in the Loire, are considered the best, and may be poached, braised, baked or roast. The small ones, usually called barbillons, are grilled or fried. Recipes for barbel can be applied to the catfish of U.S.A. The soft roes of barbel are delicate, but the hard roes are reputed to be poisonous.

Boiled barbel with various sauces. BARBEAU BOUILLI – Poach the barbel in Court-bouillon IV (see COURT-BOUILLON). Drain thoroughly. Garnish with boiled potatoes and fresh parsley. Serve, as recommended in individual recipes, with melted butter or White sauce, Butter sauce, Hollandaise sauce or Caper sauce (see SAUCE).

Barbel à la bourguignonne. BARBEAU À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Brill à la bourguignonne (see BRILL).

Fried barbel. BARBILLON FRIT – Proceed as described in the recipe for Fried bass (see BASS).

Grilled barbel. BARBILLON GRILLÉ – Proceed as described in the recipe for Grilled bass (see BASS).

Barbel à la meunière. BARBILLON À LA MEUNIÈRE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Bass à la meunière (see BASS).

Barbel à la mode des mariniers. BARBEAU À LA MODE DES MARINIERS – Clean and scale a 1-kg. (2-lb.) barbel and cut off the wattles and fins. Put the roe, if any, back into the fish, seasoned with salt and pepper.

Fry 2 chopped onions and 4 shallots lightly in butter without browning, and place in an earthenware dish, together with 7 or 8 chopped dried walnuts and 100 g. (4 oz.) chopped mushrooms.

Make a few slits in the fish, season with salt and pepper, and place on the above ingredients in the dish. Add 2 glasses red wine, and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter divided into small pieces. Bring slowly to the boil on top of the stove, then cook in a hot oven for 35 minutes, basting frequently. Ten minutes before the end of cooking, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter and replace in the oven. By the end of the 35 minutes the wine should have boiled away.

Sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

Roast barbel. BARBEAU RÔTI – Make slits in a medium-sized barbel, insert fillets of anchovy in the slits, sprinkle with oil or melted butter, season, and roast in the oven or on a spit. Baste frequently during cooking.

When the fish is cooked and placed on a dish, dilute the pan juices with white wine, boil down, add 1 tablespoon butter and a dash of lemon juice, stir well, and serve with the fish.

Anchovy butter or Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER) can be served at the same time.

BARBERON – Name used in some parts of the south of France for salsify.

BARBERRY. ÉPINE-VINETTE – A common prickly shrub. Its green berries can be pickled in vinegar, like capers. The berries, which ripen to a red colour in November, contain a great deal of malic and citric acid, and are used to make syrup, jam, and a kind of wine.

Barberries are also used to make a refreshing drink for feverish conditions. A tisane brewed from the roots is used as a diuretic, especially in cases of jaundice.

Dried candied barberries. ÉPINE-VINETTE CONFITE AU SEC – An old recipe says: 'Take large ripe barberries of a fine red colour. Leave them in clusters. For 1 kg. (2 lb.) berries, cook  $\frac{1}{4}$  kg. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) sugar to a large feather (see SUGAR). Put in the barberries and boil on a high flame until bubbles appear.

'Take off the stove. When the fruit is beginning to cool, put it in a hot cupboard, leaving it to drain on a thick cloth until next day. Transfer to sheets of clean white paper to finish draining. Dust the clusters of berries with sugar which has been rubbed through a very fine sieve, and return them to the hot cupboard to dry off completely.'

BARBOTEUR ('Paddler') – Common French name for the domestic duck. (See DUCK.)

BARD. BARDER – To bard means to cover a piece of meat, poultry, game or, more rarely, a large fish before braising it, with thin slices of bacon or salt or fresh pork, tied with string.

After cooking, the barding fat is removed. Its main purpose is to protect delicate parts of the meat, or breast of poultry. It is, however, customary to serve roast game – woodcock, quail, pheasant, partridge, etc. – with the fat or bacon which was used for barding.

BARDING FAT. BARDE – Slices of fat bacon, or pork fat (fresh or salted) for enveloping poultry and game, as well as various cuts of meat, before they are braised, poached or roasted. It is also used for lining pâtés cooked in pie-crust and terrines.

BARIGOULE – Name for a mushroom which is also called brigoule and bourigoule in the south of France. It is very good to eat.

BARIGOULE (À LA) – Some authors of cookery books say that the term à la barigoule, given to stuffed artichokes, is derived from the name of the mushroom which is used in the south-east of France for filling artichokes.

BAR-LE-DUC – Town in Lorraine which is famous for its redcurrant jams.

BARLEY, ORGE – One of the most ancient cultivated cereals, which still exists in its original form on the shores of the Red and Caspian Seas.

Barley grain is poorer in gluten than wheat, and its flour does not form an elastic paste when formed with water. It is therefore not suitable as an ingredient for bread. Barley bread, which is generally mixed with wheat (once a staple food for agricultural labourers), is rarely made nowadays. It has good keeping qualities but is difficult to digest.

A barley infusion (barley water) was one of the most popular medicines prescribed by Hippocrates. Barley water is refreshing and emollient. To prepare it, wash 20 g. (1½ tablespoons, 2 tablespoons) pearl barley, and boil in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water until cooked. Leave to stand for a short time, strain, and press well with the back of a wooden spoon.

A tisane, which is slightly laxative, is made in the proportion of 1 to 2 tablespoons barley water to 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) water. This tisane is beneficial in feverish conditions.

Barley is used in cookery in the form of hulled barley and pearl barley, mainly used for soups, creams, porridge (bouillie), and as garnish for ragoûts (see MUTTON, Ragoût of mutton with barley).

Barley flakes and barley flour are used to lighten cereal diets. Artificially germinated barley produces malt (q.v.).

Barley sugar (confection). SUCRE D'ORGE – Cook 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) hulled barley in 5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts) water for 5 hours. Strain the liquid (which resembles white jelly) and decant. Add some sugar, previously cooked to soufflé degree (110°C., 230°F.) to this liquid, and cook until sugar reaches crack degree (150°C., 302°F.). Pour onto an oiled marble slab (or oiled metal sheet) and when it begins to cool, cut into long strips and twist.

This is the original method of making barley sugar sticks. They are now made from drawn sugar.

Consommé with pearl barley. CONSOMMÉ À L'ORGE PERLÉ – Wash 100 g. (4 oz., generous ½ cup) pearl barley in warm water and add it to 2½ litres (4½ pints, 5½ pints) consommé (meat stock). Add a stalk of celery, and simmer slowly for 2 hours.

Cream of barley soup – See SOUPS AND BROTHS.

Hulled barley broth. DÉCOCTION D'ORGE MONDÉ – Wash 100 g. (4 oz., generous ½ cup) hulled barley in warm water, and soak in 3½ litres (3 quarts, 7½ pints) cold water for an hour. Add 25 g. (4 teaspoons) salt, 2 carrots, 1 onion studded with a clove, 4 leeks and 2 stalks celery.

Simmer very slowly for 3 hours, and strain. This barley broth is most refreshing.

Mutton broth with barley – See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Mutton broth.

BARNACLE, BERNICLE – Common name for the limpet, the mollusc with the conical shell that attaches itself to rocks on the seashore. It is known by various names in different regions of France, for example, flie, bassin, jamble and arapède.

Its flesh is rather tough and is eaten raw, or with vinaigrette dressing. Small limpets can be prepared like mussels, while the large ones are often brushed with butter and grilled, or prepared à l'américaine, en matelote, etc.

BARNACLE GOOSE. BARNACHE, BERNACLE – Bird of passage resembling the greyleg goose. It is also called oie-marine (sea goose) in France.

Barnacle geese winter on the coasts of Europe. Their flesh is edible but indigestible. Preparation is the same as for bustard (q.v.).

BARON – This is the French name of a large joint of mutton comprising the saddle and the two legs. The term is also applied to lamb.

In England, it is only used for a large piece of beef: a baron of beef, or double sirloin. In U.S.A. the term is used mostly for the hindquarters (both legs and both loins) of lamb.

The following anecdote is told about baron or sirloin of beef. King Henry VIII, who was a hearty eater, was fond of roast beef. One day, delighted by the sight of a double loin set before him, he conferred knighthood upon it. The noble title bestowed on this piece of beef has been sanctioned by custom, and the cut is known to this day as sirloin or baron of beef.

The sirloin is generally prepared as a roast, and sometimes cooked on a spit. In England, where the dish is much esteemed, it is served with Yorkshire pudding, which is made from batter cooked in the dripping pan under the roasting joint.

Barons of mutton or lamb are also roasted, garnished with vegetables; or they can be served with their own gravy, and garnished with watercress.

BARQUETTES – Oval tartlet shells filled with various compositions before cooking. They can be baked blind (empty) and then filled.

Barquettes are also used for a small hors-d'œuvre (q.v.) or a small entrée. (For more sweet barquettes, see TARTLETS.)

Apricot barquettes I. BARQUETTES AUX ABRICOTS – Make Flaky pastry (see DOUGH) with 250 g. (9 oz., 2¼ cups) sieved flour, scant teaspoon salt, 2½ teaspoons sugar, 1 egg yolk, 150 g. (5 oz., generous ½ cup) butter and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water.

Roll out the paste to a thickness of 3 to 4 mm. (¼ inch) cut out with a fluted oval pastry-cutter and line boat-shaped tartlet tins with the ovals. Prick the bottom of the paste to prevent it rising during baking. Sprinkle with fine sugar.

Making barquettes (Larousse)

Stone and quarter fresh apricots, and arrange in the tartlets, skin side down. Bake in a moderate oven (180°C., 350°F., Gas Mark 4) for about 20 minutes. Take the tartlets out of the tins and cool them on a wire cake tray. Spoon apricot jam into them. Break the apricot stones, blanch the kernels, and put two halves on each tartlet.

Apricot barquettes II. BARQUETTES AUX ABRICOTS – As in preceding recipe, using puff pastry instead of flaky pastry.

Apricot barquettes à l'ancienne. BARQUETTES AUX ABRICOTS À L'ANCIENNE – Fill flaky pastry tartlets with vanilla-flavoured Butter cream (see CREAMS). Decorate with halves of blanched almonds and crystallised cherries.

Savoury barquettes

BARREL. BARIL – Small cask of variable capacity, usually 72 litres (15½ gallons, 19¾ gallons) used as a container for brandy, vinegar, oil, anchovies, herrings or other fish, olives, etc. A barrel of wine in Britain amounts to 115 litres (25 gallons, 31 gallons), in Tuscany 20 litres (4½ gallons, 5½ gallons).

BARRIQUE – Large cask or barrel used for transporting liquids in France. Its capacity varies in different regions. In Bordeaux and in the south of France it is about 225 litres (49½ gallons, 62 gallons), in Cognac about 205 litres (45 gallons, 56 gallons), in Mâcon about 213 litres (47 gallons, 58½ gallons), and in Nantes, 210 litres (46 gallons, 57½ gallons).

BARROT – French word for a small barrel containing anchovies; the term applies only to anchovy barrels.

BARSAC – Commune in the Gironde that has given its name to a fine white Bordeaux wine. Barsac has the right to the appellation Sauternes. (See BORDEAUX.)

BASELLA (Indian spinach). BASELLE – Edible plant, native of tropical countries, cultivated in some parts of France. It is prepared in the same way as spinach.

BASIL. BASILIC – Plant cultivated in gardens for the sake of its fragrance. There are several varieties: sweet basil, the leaves of which are dried and used as a condiment in cookery; monk's basil, which can be similarly preserved; and bush basil, which is often grown as a pot herb. It is used in Provence, together with garlic, for flavouring pistou, a popular soup in this region.

Basil was once considered a royal plant; only the sovereign (basileus) could cut it, and even then only with a golden sickle. The plant has now come into common use.

Basil

BASQUAISE (À LA) – Garnish for large cuts of meat composed of fried cèpes and Anna potatoes in dariole moulds sprinkled with chopped Bayonne ham.

BAS-ROND – Term incorrectly used in some cookery books instead of baron (q.v.).

BASS. BAR – This fish, which is also called sea dace, sea wolf or sea perch abounds in the Mediterranean. It is also found, in smaller numbers, in the Atlantic Ocean. Bass does not normally go beyond the English Channel, and rarely penetrates into the Baltic.

Two species are known: the common bass (sea wolf) on the Mediterranean coast, and striped bass. The common bass is seen a great deal in French markets, and is recognisable by its silvery, grey-blue back and white belly. The bass of the U.S.A., while not exactly the same, is prepared in the same way. Some gastronomes do not admit that the flesh of the bass has any particular delicacy, but many people like it.

To prepare. Clean the fish through the gills and through a light incision made on the belly. Do not scale the bass if it is to be poached, but scale it, without breaking the skin, if it is to be braised, fried or grilled. Wash and dry the fish.

Make a few light incisions on the fleshy part of the back, slit it along the backbone, or cut into uniform-sized pieces; proceed according to the recipe chosen.

Bass

Boiled or poached bass with various sauces. BAR BOUILLI OU POCHÉ – Put the bass into Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON). As soon as it boils, draw the pan to the edge of the burner, and poach, simmering lightly. Drain the bass, and garnish with fresh parsley.

Serve with melted butter, or with Hollandaise sauce or any other sauce recommended for boiled fish (see SAUCE).

Boiled bass, like all poached fish, is served with steamed or boiled potatoes.

Braised bass with various sauces and garnishes. BAR BRAISÉ – Clean the bass, and spread the inside with a large piece of butter which has been kneaded with chopped parsley and seasoned with salt and pepper. Season the outside. Put it in a fish kettle on a foundation of shredded carrots and onions lightly fried in butter. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.). Moisten with dry white wine; for a bass weighing 1 kg. (2½ lb.) use 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) wine. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) melted butter. Bring to the boil, then transfer the fish kettle to the oven and cook, uncovered, for 25 to 30 minutes, basting frequently.

Drain the bass and arrange on a dish. Reduce the braising liquor, add butter, and pour over the fish. Add the garnish.

Serve with Espagnole sauce (made with fish stock) or with Velouté (see SAUCE). All garnishes recommended for large braised fish are suitable for bass (see BRILL, TURBOT, SALMON).

Cold bass with various sauces. BAR FROID – Cook the fish, whole or in large pieces, in Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON). Allow to cool in the liquor. Drain, and garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with a cold sauce.

Cold bass can also be prepared by following one of the recipes given for salmon and salmon trout. Cooked in court-bouillon, it can also be served with the garnishes used for large cold fish, such as hard-boiled eggs, stuffed artichoke hearts, lettuce hearts, macédoines of vegetables, etc.

Curried bass à l'indienne. BAR AU CURRIE, À L'INDIENNE –

Cut the bass into uniform pieces. Cook as described in the recipe for Curried fillets of brill (see BRILL).

Bass Dugléré. BAR DUGLÉRÉ – Scale a bass weighing about 750 g. (1½ lb.). Cut into pieces of equal size. Melt some butter in a sauté pan, and add 1 tablespoon chopped onion, 4 peeled, seeded and chopped tomatoes, 1 tablespoon coarsely chopped parsley, a sprig of thyme, quarter of a bay leaf, and a pinch of grated garlic. Put the bass on this foundation, season, and moisten with 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) dry white wine. Bring to the boil, cover the pan, and transfer it to the oven, cooking for 12 to 15 minutes. Drain the pieces of bass and arrange them on a dish in the shape of the fish.

Remove the thyme and bay leaf from the pan, add 60 g. (2½ oz., ¼ cup) butter and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) made of fish stock. Pour the sauce over the fish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Alternatively, instead of using velouté sauce, thicken with a tablespoon of kneaded butter, or with ½ tablespoon flour mixed with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) water; this last is called à la meunière.

Fillets of bass. FILETS DE BAR – Bass is not often prepared in fillets, but when this method is adopted, the fillets should be skinned and well trimmed. All the recipes given for whole bass, as well as those given for bream (U.S. porgy or scup), mullet or river trout, can be applied to fillets of bass. So can recipes given for fresh cod, whiting, mackerel and, generally, for all sea fish.

Fried bass. BAR FRIT – This method is suitable for small-size bass. Scale the fish, make a few slits, and soak it in salted milk which has been boiled and allowed to get cold. Dredge with flour and deep-fry in sizzling oil.

Drain, dry, sprinkle with fine salt, and garnish with fried parsley and slices of lemon.

When no small bass are available, large fish, cut into slices or steaks, can be prepared in the same way.

Bass au gratin. BAR AU GRATIN – This method is mostly applied to fillets of bass. Proceed as described in the recipe for Sole au gratin (see SOLE).

Double grill for small fish

Grilled bass with various sauces. BAR GRILLÉ – This method is applied to bass of medium size. Scale the fish, make a few shallow incisions, season, dredge with flour, brush with oil or melted butter, and grill on a moderate heat.

Turn the bass once during cooking, and baste with oil or melted butter from time to time.

Garnish with fresh parsley, and surround with slices of decoratively cut lemon. Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter, Anchovy butter, Ravigote butter (see BUTTER), or one of the special sauces recommended for grilled fish.

Bass à la livornaise. BAR À LA LIVORNAISE – This method is suitable for small-size bass. Scale 4 bass, season, and put them in a well-buttered or oiled fireproof dish on a foundation consisting of 2 dl. (¼ pint, scant cup) Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) mixed with plenty of chopped onion, and flavoured with a pinch of pounded garlic.

Scatter breadcrumbs on top, sprinkle with oil, and cook in the oven for about 15 minutes. Sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

Bass à la meunière. BAR À LA MEUNIÈRE – Suitable for small-size bass. Scale them, make a few incisions, sprinkle with flour, and cook in a frying pan in butter. Use an oval-shaped pan, if possible.

When the fish is cooked and golden on both sides, place on a dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley and a few drops of lemon juice.

Heat the butter left in the pan until it browns, adding more if necessary, and pour it over the fish. Bass prepared in this way may be served with various garnishes (see SOLE, Sole meunière).

Bass à la portugaise I. BAR À LA PORTUGAISE – Scale a bass weighing about 300–400 g. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  lb.). Slit lightly along the back, season, and put into a buttered pan.

Boil equal quantities of white wine and concentrated fish stock down to a fumet (q.v.), pour over the fish, and cook in the covered pan for 15 minutes. Drain the bass, put in a fireproof dish, and surround with a border of thick Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Boil down the pan juices, add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock and some butter, and pour it over the bass.

Glaze in a very hot oven, and sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

Bass à la portugaise II. BAR À LA PORTUGAISE – Proceed as described for Bass Dugléré (but leaving the fish whole). Place in a fireproof dish. Boil down the pan juices, to which some butter has been added, pour over the fish, sprinkle with breadcrumbs, and glaze in a very hot oven.

Bass à la provençale. BAR À LA PROVENÇALE – Scale the bass, make a few shallow slits, dredge with flour, and fry briskly in oil.

When cooked and golden brown on both sides, put the fish in a fireproof dish, cover with Provençale sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with breadcrumbs and oil, and brown in a hot oven for a few minutes.

Sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

Stuffed braised bass with various garnishes. BAR BRAISÉ FARCI – Stuff a bass with one of the special forcemeats recommended for large fish. Braise it as described above.

BASTE. JUTER – To pour roasting or braising stock over a joint in order to keep it moist during cooking.

BAT – French culinary term for tail of fish. The length of fish is measured from eye to tail.

BAT. CHAUVE-SOURIS – Small mammal provided with membranous wings which enable it to fly. The meat is esteemed in certain oriental countries, notably in China.

BA-TA-CLAN – Pastry dessert said to have been invented by Lacam, the celebrated Parisian pastry-cook. It is still made in high-class Paris cake shops.

Pound 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) freshly blanched almonds in a mortar. Turn into a bowl, and add 9 eggs, one by one; mix well. Add 375 g. (13 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) fine sugar flavoured with vanilla, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum, 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour, and mix thoroughly until quite smooth.

Pour into a shallow tin with fluted edges and bake in a moderate oven. When cooked, leave to cool, and cover with vanilla icing.

BÂTARDE – Name given to Butter sauce I (see SAUCE).

BATAVIA – Variety of hearted lettuce in season in summer or winter.

BATEAUX – French name for china, glass or metal containers used for serving cold hors-d'œuvre. They are usually boat-shaped, hence their name.

BÂTONNETS or BÂTONS – Various preparations shaped in the form of little sticks.

Almond bâtonnets. BÂTONNETS AUX AMANDES – Fancy biscuits (cookies), which come into the category of petits fours.

Pound 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds in a mortar with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar. Turn into a bowl and mix with 3 egg whites and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum. Blend thoroughly into a smooth paste and roll out 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) thick on a marble slab lightly dusted with flour.

Cut the paste into strips 8 cm. (3 inches) wide, and cut the strips into bâtonnets, 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) wide. Dip them into lightly beaten egg white then into crystallised sugar. Brush baking trays with butter, sprinkle with flour, and bake the bâtonnets in a moderate oven (180°C., 350°F., Gas Mark 4).

Bâtons with vanilla icing. BÂTONS GLACÉS À LA VANILLE – Pound 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar in a mortar. Turn into a basin and add 3 egg whites and  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon vanilla extract. Blend the mixture thoroughly and roll out on a lightly floured marble slab until the paste is 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick and about 15 cm. (6 inches) wide. Coat with a layer of vanilla-flavoured Royal icing (see ICING). Cut into sticks 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) wide. Brush a baking tray with melted butter, sprinkle with flour, and bake the bâtons in a moderate oven (180°C., 350°F., Gas Mark 4).

Chocolate bâtonnets. BÂTONNETS AU CHOCOLAT – Proceed as in the recipe for Almond bâtonnets, using 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) almonds, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar, 200 g. (7 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) cocoa, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) vanilla-flavoured sugar, 3 egg whites.

Cumin bâtonnets. BÂTONNETS AU CUMIN – Add cumin to Short pastry II (see DOUGH), when rolling it out. Cut into small sticks, roll them, place on a buttered baking tray, brush with egg, and bake in a moderately hot oven (200°C., 400°F., Gas Mark 6).

Hazelnut bâtonnets. BÂTONNETS AUX AVELINES – These are made in the same way as Almond bâtonnets, replacing almonds with hazelnuts which have been blanched and dried in the oven. Flavour the mixture with kirsch.

Jacob's bâtons. BÂTONS DE JACOB – Cakes made from Chou paste (see DOUGH) in the shape of little hollow sticks filled with French pastry cream, and coated on top with sugar cooked to crack degree (150°C., 302°F.). (See ÉCLAIR.)

Royal bâtons (hot hors-d'œuvre). BÂTONS ROYAUX – Roll out a piece of shortcrust paste and cut into small rectangles. Fill the middle of each with Chicken and partridge forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Roll each piece, sealing the ends well. Deep-fry in smoking hot fat. Garnish with fried parsley.

BATTERS FOR FRYING. PÂTÉ À FRIRE – Frying batter I (Carême's recipe) – 'Sift 350 g. (12 oz., 3 cups) flour into a bowl, mix with slightly warmed water in which 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter has been melted. Stir to a soft paste, free from lumps. Add a pinch of salt and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy, stir well, and fold in 2 stiffly whisked egg whites. Use at once.'

Frying batter II – Mix 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sifted flour, 1 tablespoon oil,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) beer, 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) warm water and a tablespoon brandy into a smooth batter, adding a pinch of fine salt. Just before using, fold in 2 stiffly whisked egg whites.

Frying batter (for fruit fritters glazed in the oven) – Mix the batter as described in the previous recipe, using 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sifted flour, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) melted butter,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) beer, 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) water, one whole egg, 1 tablespoon brandy, a pinch of sugar and a pinch of salt.

After mixing, keep in a warm place to ferment. Just before using, whisk the batter.

To glaze fruit fritters, drain after frying, place on a metal sheet which has been lightly sprinkled with icing sugar, and set in a hot oven.

Frying batter (for vegetable fritters) – The batter should be prepared at least an hour before use.

Mix 250 g. (9 oz., 2½ cups) sifted flour with 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) melted butter, 2 whole eggs, a good pinch of salt, and enough water to make not too thick a batter.

Frying batter (for meat and fish fritters) – Put 250 g. (9 oz., 2½ cups) sifted flour into a bowl. Make a well in the centre and put into it 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) oil or melted butter, 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) slightly warmed water, and a good pinch of salt. Mix well with a wooden spoon.

Just before using, fold in 4 stiffly whisked egg whites.

Frying batter (à la provençale) – Mix 350 g. (12 oz., 3 cups) sieved flour, 2 egg yolks, 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) Aix oil, and enough cold water to make a soft paste. Add a small pinch of salt, and fold in 2 stiffly whisked egg whites. Use at once.' (Carême's recipe).

Batters (sweet) – See DOUGH.

BAVARIAN CREAM. BAVAROIS – Cold sweet once known as fromage bavarois, the name Carême gives it in his Traité des entremets de douceur.

The name bavarois was given to it by a French chef who practised his art in a stately home in Bavaria.

This dish, of solid consistency, should not be confused with the liquid preparation known as the bavaroise (q.v.), which used to be called crème bavaroise, and, according to culinary historians, was invented in Bavaria towards the end of the seventeenth century.

The bavarois in past days was prepared quite differently from present-day methods; the mixture was bound only with clarified isinglass, not with egg yolks, as used in some modern recipes.

Bavarian cream mould

The following include several of Carême's recipes.

Basic Bavarian cream. BAVAROIS À LA CRÈME – Blend 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) fine sugar and 16 egg yolks in a small saucepan over low heat, adding a pinch of salt. When the mixture is quite smooth moisten with 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) milk which has been previously boiled and flavoured with a vanilla bean. Add 25 g. (1 oz.) gelatine which has been dissolved in cold water. Keep stirring until the mixture is thick enough to coat the spoon; do not boil. Transfer to a bowl and leave to cool, frequently fanning it to help the process.

As soon as the mixture begins to set, fold in 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) stiffly whipped cream and 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) fine sugar.

Pour the bavarois into a mould which has been rinsed with iced water, cover with white paper, and chill for 2 hours in the refrigerator, or on crushed ice.

To loosen the bavarois, dip the mould in hot water, wipe it dry, and turn into a dish.

The same recipe may be used for bavarois flavoured with coffee, chocolate, tea, brandies and various liqueurs (anisset, Armagnac, Calvados, Curaçao, fine Champagne brandy, kirsch, kummel, rum, etc.), lemon, tangerine, orange, praline or burnt almond, hazelnuts, etc.

Bavarian cream à la cévenole. BAVAROIS À LA CÉVENOLE – Coat a mould with a layer of Basic Bavarian cream. Fill with a mixture of this cream and a purée of marrons glacés, flavoured with kirsch. Chill in the refrigerator.

Turn out the bavarois onto a dish, and decorate with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS). Surround with marrons glacés.

Bavarian cream à la créole. BAVAROIS À LA CRÉOLE – Coat a mould with sweet almond oil and fill it with alternate layers of rum-flavoured and pineapple-flavoured Basic Bavarian cream, mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of bananas steeped in rum. Turn out onto a dish, decorate with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) piped through a pastry-bag, and sprinkle with blanched, shredded pistachio nuts.

Bavarian cream à la normande. BAVAROIS À LA NORMANDE – Line a mould with a layer of Calvados-flavoured Basic Bavarian cream, fill with thick Apple sauce (see SAUCE) whisked with gelatine which has been dissolved in water.

Turn out on a dish and surround with apple quarters peeled, cooked in syrup, and well drained. Top with whipped cream.

Bavarian cream, after Carême

Bavarian cream au parfait amour (Carême). FROMAGE BAVAROIS AU PARFAIT AMOUR – 'Shred half the peel of a lemon very finely. Boil 2 cups milk, add the shredded lemon, 6 crushed cloves and 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) sugar. Leave to infuse for an hour, and strain through a muslin cloth into a basin. Add 25 g. (1 oz.) slightly warmed and clarified isinglass, and a few drops of cochineal essence. Put the basin into a bowl of ice. As soon as the mixture begins to set, fold in whipped cream.'

Bavarian cream with pistachio nuts (Carême). FROMAGE BAVAROIS AUX NOIX VERTES – 'Shell about 100 choice pistachio nuts, pound them in a mortar, and moisten with a little water from time to time to prevent them turning oily. Dissolve 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) sugar in 2 cups cream. Put the pounded nuts into a bowl, and add the cream, a little at a time, stirring well. Leave for an hour, and strain through a fine sieve.

Add 25 g. (1 oz.) slightly warm clarified isinglass which has been dissolved in a little water. Pour the mixture into a mould or a medium-sized terraine, and place on crushed ice for 15 minutes. Stir well, (with a large silver spoon, if possible) and stir again from time to time. As soon as it begins to set, stir all the time until a smooth-flowing mixture is achieved. Add whipped cream, a little at a time, until the bavarois has a velvety texture.

Keep on crushed ice for an hour and a half before turning out onto a dish.

BAVARIAN CREAM

Bavarian cream made with fruit (Robert Carrier)

Bavarian cream aux roses (Carême). FROMAGE BAVAROIS AUX ROSES – 'Strip the petals off about 30 freshly picked roses, and put them, with a pinch of cochineal grains, into 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) clarified boiling sugar syrup. Cover, and when it has become just warm, add 25 g. (1 oz.) isinglass. Strain the mixture through muslin into a bowl, and when it begins to set, fold in whipped cream.'

Bavarian fruit cream. BAVAROIS AUX FRUITS – Put into a bowl 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fruit purée, 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) heavy (30°) syrup, the juice of 3 lemons, and 25 g. (1 oz.) gelatine which has been dissolved in a little water and strained through muslin.

Blend well, and add  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) whipped cream. Pour into a mould which has been coated with sweet almond oil (or rinsed in ice water) and leave to set for about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours.

Mocha coffee Bavarian cream (Carême). FROMAGE BAVAROIS AU CAFÉ MOKA – 'Put 175 g. (6 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) mocha coffee beans into a small saucepan, and heat on a moderate fire, stirring constantly until they acquire a reddish-yellow colour. Roasting is complete as soon as the beans become oily.'

'Drop them into a basin containing 3 cups boiling milk, cover, and leave until the milk is just warm. Strain through a fine cloth. Add 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) sieved sugar and 25 g. (1 oz.) isinglass. Blend until quite smooth, and strain again.'

'When the mixture begins to set, add whipped cream, and pour into a mould. Place on crushed ice until fully set.'

Strawberry Bavarian cream. BAVAROIS AUX FRAISES – Rub  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) strawberry pulp through a fine sieve, and add  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) heavy syrup (30°), the juice of a lemon, and 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) gelatine which has been dissolved in a little water and strained through muslin. Add  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) whipped cream to the mixture.

Pour into a mould and chill on crushed ice, or in a refrigerator. Turn out onto a dish and surround with large hulled strawberries, sprinkled with fine sugar.

Apricot, peach, pineapple, pear, raspberry and other fruit bavarois can be prepared in the same way.

Striped chocolate and vanilla Bavarian cream. BAVAROIS RUBANÉ AU CHOCOLAT ET À LA VANILLE – Sift 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar into a saucepan, add 8 egg yolks and a pinch of salt. Stir over very low heat until the mixture is perfectly blended. Boil 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) milk separately, add 1 vanilla bean. Add slowly to the other mixture, and stir constantly over low heat. When the resulting custard thickens sufficiently to coat a spoon, remove from the heat.

Strain the custard and divide in two parts. Add 50 g. (2 oz., 2 squares) melted chocolate to one part, and blend in whipped cream when it begins to set. Blend whipped cream similarly into the remaining custard mixture.

Rinse a mould in ice water, or brush with sweet almond oil. Fill with alternate layers of the two mixtures, taking care not to add a new layer until the preceding one has set properly. Place the mould on crushed ice, or in the refrigerator, and leave to set  $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 hours. To loosen the bavarois, dip the mould in warm water, dry it, and turn the bavarois into a glass dish.

Striped Bavarian cream (various flavours). BAVAROIS RUBANÉS AUX PARFUMS DIVERS – Proceed as described in the previous recipe. Variegated Bavarian cream can be made by using alternate layers of vanilla and strawberry mixture (or any other red fruit), vanilla and coffee, vanilla and apricot, vanilla and pistachio nuts, etc.

Vanilla Bavarian cream (Carême). FROMAGE BAVAROIS À LA VANILLE – Add a vanilla bean to 3 cups cream and bring to the boil. Lower the heat and reduce the cream by one-third. Add 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) sieved sugar and 25 g. (1 oz.) isinglass. Blend thoroughly, strain through muslin into a basin, and place on crushed ice. When the mixture begins to set, fold in whipped cream.

BAVAROISE – Pleasant beverage prepared in several ways from tea, syrup, milk, etc.

In the early part of the eighteenth century several Bavarian princes sojourning in Paris were in the habit of taking tea together at the Café Procope, rue des Fossés-Saint-Germain-des-Prés (today rue de l'Ancienne-Comédie): but they insisted that it should be served to them from crystal decanters, and preferred it sweetened with capillary syrup rather than sugar. Thence the name bavaroise was given to the new beverage. Other cafés began to serve it, simply by replacing the capillary syrup with clarified sugar cooked to the consistency of a syrup, and adding milk.

Bavaroise I – Mix together 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) very strong tea, 1 tablespoon fine sugar, 1 tablespoon sugar syrup (104°C., 220°F.) and an egg yolk. Whisk until the mixture becomes frothy. Add a little boiled milk and 5 teaspoons kirsch.

Flavourings can be rum, maraschino, or any other liqueur.

Bavaroise II – Whisk 4 egg yolks with 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fine sugar until thick. Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) syrup (104°C., 220°F.),  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) freshly made hot tea, and the same amount boiling milk. Whisk until the mixture is very frothy. Add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum, kirsch or Calvados.

The bavaroise can also be flavoured with orange, lemon or vanilla, which should first be infused in boiling milk.

BAVAROISE AUX CHOUX – French slang expression describing a mixture of absinth and orgeat.

BAY. LAURIER-SAUCÉ – Bay leaves are a traditional ingredient of the bouquet-garni (q.v.). The berries of the bay tree are used in a distillation of aromatic herbs called Fioravanti.

BAYONNE – Town in the Basses-Pyrénées where the egg and oil sauce called mayonnaise is said to have been invented. It is also known for Bayonne hams which are, in fact, made in a neighbouring town, Orthez.

The ham is usually eaten raw. It is also used to improve the flavour of ragoûts and sauces, and cooked as a garnish for eggs prepared in various ways.

Bayonne and the neighbouring region produce excellent local dishes. There are garbures (q.v.) (a mixture of cabbage, bacon, goose fat and rye bread, popular in the Pyrénées district), preserved goose, preserved pork, locally called methode. All the charcuterie of the Bayonne region is good, especially the black (blood) puddings.

BEAN

Among the sweets, pâté de cédrat (a citron preserve), is delicious, and Bayonne chocolate is noted.

BEAN. HARICOT – A pulse of which there are many varieties, some edible, others ornamental. Among edible varieties are climbing beans, which grow to a height of 2 to 3 m. (6 to 10 feet), and are trained on bean poles. The dwarf varieties need no support. In most varieties the pod is tender and edible when young.

Edible bean pods fall under the general heading of green beans. In some varieties the pod remains tender and good to eat even when fully grown, but in the case of parchment-skinned beans, it becomes tough and leathery.

Varieties of beans

BROAD BEANS (U.S. Shell beans). FÈVES – Annual plant of the Leguminosae family, cultivated for its seeds, which serve as food for man and for animals. The broad bean, of which the Windsor is best known, is the common bean of Europe. Other well-known broad beans are the lima bean, a species originating in South America and cultivated extensively in California; the soya bean of China, Japan and India, now very widely cultivated. Some beans, such as the horse bean of Scotland and the cow pea of southern U.S.A. are chiefly used for forage.

The fresh broad beans that are commonly used in Europe do not have a very high food value. Dried beans, on the other hand, are rich in amino acids and potassium salts; they also contain large quantities of nitrogenous substances and Vitamins B and E. Their nutritive value is therefore greater than fresh beans. However, eaten in excess they can cause serious blood disorders (favism).

100 g. (4 oz.) unpodded beans yield approximately 50 g. (2 oz.) comestible beans.

To cook fresh broad beans. Shell the beans. Remove the tough outer skin and cook in boiling salted water with a bunch of savory. Drain, and proceed according to the selected recipe.

Fresh broad beans à l'anglaise. FÈVES FRAÎCHES À L'ANGLAISE – Cook the beans as indicated above, but leave in their skins. Drain, and serve with fresh butter.

Fresh broad beans in butter. FÈVES FRAÎCHES AU BEURRE – Proceed as for Peas in butter (see PEAS), and add chopped savory.

Broad beans in cream. FÈVES À LA CRÈME – Proceed as for Peas in butter (see PEAS). Moisten with thick fresh cream, and simmer for a minute or two.

Broad beans à la croque-au-sel. FÈVES À LA CROQUE-AU-SEL – Fresh broad beans served raw as an hors-d'œuvre. The guests shell the beans themselves, seasoning them with coarse salt. This hors-d'œuvre is popular all over the south of France.

Fresh broad beans à la française. FÈVES FRAÎCHES À LA FRANÇAISE – Shell and skin the beans, and cook as for Peas à la française (see PEAS), together with a bunch of savory.

Purée of fresh broad beans for garnishing. PURÉE DE FÈVES FRAÎCHES – Proceed as for Purée of fresh garden peas (see PEAS).

Purée of bean soup – See SOUPS AND BROTHS.

Fresh broad beans with savory. FÈVES FRAÎCHES À LA SARRIETTE – Shell and skin the beans, and cook in boiling salted water with a bunch of savory. Drain, return them to the pan, and shake over heat for a few seconds to get rid of any moisture left. Add fresh butter cut into small pieces. Mix carefully so as not to damage the beans.

FIELD BEANS. FÈVEROLES – European broad bean, smaller than the ordinary kind, cooked in the same way. These beans usually remain white. Field bean flour is sometimes added to wheaten flour for the manufacture of bread.

FLAGEOLET BEANS. HARICOTS FLAGEOLETS – Used mainly as a garnish (whether fresh or dried) for meat dishes. They are excellent with cuts of mutton or lamb, and make delicately flavoured purées. They are not common in U.S.A.

Fresh flageolets. HARICOTS FLAGEOLETS FRAIS – Small beans of a greenish colour. They are cooked in the same way as Fresh white haricot beans (see below). All recipes for haricot beans are suitable for flageolets.

FRENCH BEANS (U.S. String beans). HARICOTS VERTS – A delicately flavoured vegetable, which should be freshly picked, when they only need to be topped and tailed. With older beans, it is necessary to cut away the stringy edges.

Wash the beans in cold water, drain, and put them in a large saucepan full of boiling salted water (1½ teaspoons salt per litre, scant quart, generous quart water). Leave the saucepan uncovered and cook over a high flame. The beans are ready when they are tender but still firm in texture. Do not overcook. Drain thoroughly.

If the beans are to be kept for later use, or are to be dressed with oil and vinegar as a salad, they should be put in a colander under running water. If they are to be served at once in butter, cream or some other way, they should not be cooled after being boiled, but should be well drained.

French beans à l'anglaise. HARICOTS VERTS À L'ANGLAISE – Boil the beans in salted water, drain, and dry in a cloth. Serve with fresh butter.

French beans à la bonne femme. HARICOTS VERTS À LA BONNE FEMME – Boil the beans in salted water until they are three-parts cooked. Drain, and dry in a cloth.

Blanch about 200 g. (6 oz.) lean bacon, and cut into small dice. Fry in butter. Add 500 g. (1 lb.) of the nearly cooked beans, moisten with thickened brown veal stock, cover the pan, and simmer slowly until the beans are completely cooked.

When ready to serve, add a little butter and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

French beans in brown butter. HARICOTS VERTS AU BEURRE NOISETTE – Boil the beans in salted water as indicated above. Drain, and dry in a cloth. Brown 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter in a pan, add the beans, season, and toss them well until they have absorbed the butter. Sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

French beans in butter à la maître d'hôtel. HARICOTS VERTS AU BEURRE À LA MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL – Boil the beans as indicated above, and drain thoroughly. Toss them in a pan over heat for a few moments to ensure that all moisture left in them has evaporated.

Season, and add butter cut into very small pieces – 90 to 100 g. butter to 500 g. beans (3 to 4 oz., scant ½ cup butter per 1 lb. beans). Mix the beans in the butter so that they are all evenly coated. Sprinkle with parsley before serving.

French beans in cream I. HARICOTS VERTS À LA CRÈME – Boil the beans in salted water until they are three-parts cooked.

Drain, and dry in a cloth. Toss in melted butter, and cover with fresh thick cream. Simmer until the sauce has been reduced to half its original volume. Season.

French beans in cream II. HARICOTS VERTS À LA CRÈME – Follow the preceding recipe, but simmer the beans in a rather thin Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) instead of cream. Add butter just before serving.

French beans prepared in this way and sprinkled with chopped parsley are called haricots verts à la tourangelle.

Dried French beans. HARICOTS VERTS SECS – Soak for a long time in cold water and cook like fresh French beans.

French beans à la française. HARICOTS VERTS À LA FRANÇAISE – Slice the beans in pieces about 3 cm. (1 inch) long. Proceed as for Peas à la française (see PEAS).

French beans au gratin. HARICOTS VERTS AU GRATIN – Proceed as for French beans in cream. Put the beans in an ovenware dish with grated cheese. Pour melted butter over them and sprinkle with more grated cheese. Brown slowly in the oven.

French beans in gravy. HARICOTS VERTS AU JUS – Boil the beans in salted water until they are three-parts cooked. Drain, and stew them slowly in butter. Moisten with thickened brown stock.

French beans à la lyonnaise. HARICOTS VERTS À LA LYONNAISE – Boil 500 g. (1 lb.) French beans in salted water. Drain and dry in a cloth.

Brown 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onions in butter and add the beans. Sauté all together; the beans should be very slightly browned. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and add a little vinegar.

Mixed beans. HARICOTS VERTS PANACHÉS – Boil separately, in salted water, equal quantities of French beans and small fresh kidney beans (flageolets). Drain thoroughly. Blend the two in butter or cream.

French beans à la normande. HARICOTS VERTS À LA NORMANDE – Proceed as for French beans in cream. After the beans are cooked, blend in yolks of eggs. Just before serving add butter.

French bean salad

French bean salad. SALADE DE HARICOTS VERTS – Boil the beans in salted water. Drain and dry in a cloth. Serve with a French dressing.

The salad can be seasoned while the beans are still hot, flavoured with finely chopped mixed herbs or with thinly sliced onion rings.

French beans sautéed in butter. HARICOTS VERTS SAUTÉS AU BEURRE – Boil the beans in salted water. Drain and dry in a cloth. Sauté in a heavy iron pan in butter, slightly browning the beans. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

French beans sautéed à la provençale. HARICOTS VERTS SAUTÉS À LA PROVENÇALE – Proceed as for French beans sautéed in butter, substituting oil for the butter. Just before serving, add a little grated garlic and chopped parsley.

Preserved French beans – See PRESERVATION OF FOODS.

Purée of French beans. PURÉE DE HARICOTS VERTS – Boil the beans in salted water. Drain and dry in a cloth. Stew for a few minutes in butter, and rub them through a fine sieve. Add to this purée half its volume of mashed potato, and heat up the mixture. Add butter just before serving.

French beans in tomato sauce. HARICOTS VERTS À LA TOMATE – Boil the beans in salted water until they are three-parts cooked. Drain, and dry in a cloth. Stew for a few minutes in butter, and add several tablespoons Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Simmer. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

LIMA BEANS. HARICOTS DE LIMA – Lima beans, sometimes called Cape peas, are popular in America. They are green, like flageolets, and about the size of broad beans.

All recipes for Fresh white haricot beans (see below) are suitable for lima beans.

RED BEANS. HARICOTS ROUGES –

Fresh red beans (U.S. kidney beans). HARICOTS ROUGES FRAIS – Cook in the same way as Fresh white haricot beans (see below). All recipes for white beans are suitable for red beans.

Dried red beans. HARICOTS ROUGES SECS – Cook in the same way as Dried white haricot beans (see below). All recipes for dried white beans are suitable for dried red beans.

Red beans in red wine à la bourguignonne. HARICOTS ROUGES AU VIN ROUGE À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Cook the beans in equal parts of water and red wine, with herbs and a piece of blanched lean bacon, or lean smoked bacon.

When the beans are soft, drain and fry them, together with some coarsely chopped bacon, in butter. Serve with creamed butter.

TONKA BEANS – The seed of a pulse rich in coumarin, a fragrant crystalline substance, analogous to volatile oils and camphor, used in the manufacture of some liqueurs.

FRESH WHITE HARICOT BEANS. HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS – Cook in boiling salted water to which has been added aromatic vegetables and a bouquet garni (q.v.). They can also be cooked as follows:

Cut a carrot and an onion into quarters and brown them lightly in butter. Add the beans, a bouquet garni and 300 g. (11 oz.) blanched lean bacon. Cover with 3 litres (5½ pints, 6½ pints) water, seasoned with salt.

Bring to the boil, and after 25 minutes add the beans. Simmer slowly. This method of cooking greatly improves the flavour of the beans, which can be dressed in a number of different ways.

(Dry white haricot beans must be soaked in cold water for a time before cooking.)

Fresh white beans à la bretonne. HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS À LA BRETONNE – Cook the beans as indicated in the previous recipe. Drain, and put them in a pan. Blend in Bretonne sauce (see SAUCE) in the proportion of 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) sauce to 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) cooked beans. Simmer for a few minutes, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Fresh white beans in butter. HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS AU BEURRE – Cook the beans as indicated in the previous recipes.

Drain, and put in a saucepan. Toss them over a flame for a few seconds to dry them. Blend in 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter to every litre (scant quart, generous quart) cooked beans.

Fresh white beans en cassoulet. HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS EN CASSOULET – The cassoulet of Languedoc is made from dried white haricot beans, but it may also be made from fresh beans. (See CASSOULET.)

Fresh white beans in cream. HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS À LA CRÈME – Cook the beans as indicated in Fresh white haricot beans. Drain, and cover with thick fresh cream. Return to the pan, simmer until the cream has been reduced to half its volume, and add fresh cream. Mix well.

Estouffat of fresh white beans à l'occitane. ESTOUFFAT DE HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS À L'OCCITANE – Brown 250 g. (½ lb.) belly of pork, or salt pork, diced and blanched, in butter or goose fat. Add 1 chopped onion, 2 peeled, chopped tomatoes, and a little crushed garlic. Cook for 10 minutes. Add 1½ litres (2¾ pints, 3¼ pints) white haricot beans which have been three parts cooked, and then drained. Cover, and finish cooking.

Fresh white beans à la lyonnaise. HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS À LA LYONNAISE – Cook and drain the beans. To each litre (scant quart, generous quart) beans add 2 onions thinly sliced and cooked in butter until tender. Simmer for a few minutes in a casserole. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped parsley.

Fresh white beans with parsley. HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS AUX FINES HERBES – Proceed as for Fresh white beans in butter, with chopped parsley added.

Purée of fresh white beans. PURÉE DE HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS – Cook the beans, drain, and rub through a fine sieve. Warm this purée, stirring with a wooden spoon until it is smooth. Before serving, add fresh butter in the proportion of 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter to 500 g. (generous 1 lb., 2 cups) purée.

If the bean purée is to be served as a vegetable or a garnish it should be fairly thick.

Fresh white bean salad. SALADE DE HARICOTS BLANCS FRAIS – Cook and drain the beans. Put them in a salad bowl and dress with oil and vinegar, season with salt, pepper and chopped mixed herbs (parsley, chervil and chives). Mix well.

This salad needs a lot of seasoning. Onion rings or chopped onion may be added to it.

DRIED WHITE HARICOT BEANS (U.S. Horticultural beans). HARICOTS BLANCS SECS – Dried white haricot beans are usually soaked for a long time in water, but this traditional practice is a bad one. If dried beans or other dried vegetables have to be soaked they should be left for a short time only. Some recipes recommend 12 or even 24 hours of soaking, whereas soaking, even for a few hours, may cause slight fermentation which noticeably spoils the flavour of the beans and can also make them slightly poisonous. To swell the beans,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 hours soaking is sufficient.

If the beans are of good quality and have been dried within the year, they can be cooked without soaking.

Pick through the beans and wash them. Put them in a deep saucepan with plenty of cold water, and bring slowly to the boil. Skim. Season. Flavour with aromatic vegetables (onions stuck with cloves, quartered carrots, a bouquet garni (q.v.) and a small clove of garlic). Cover the pan and simmer very slowly.

In some cases, especially for cassoulet (q.v.) and estouffat (q.v.) it is advisable to cook the dried beans with fat. This is done by adding to the stock salted bacon, chine of salt pork or knuckle of pork, and fresh pork skin. This adds flavour to the beans.

Once cooked, dried white beans can be used in the same ways as fresh white beans: in butter, à la bretonne, en cassoulet, en estouffat, à la lyonnaise, in cream, with herbs, as a purée, in salad, etc.

Mix the beans with tomato sauce, add the bacon and simmer until the bacon is well cooked.

Dried white beans à l'anglaise. HARICOTS BLANCS SECS À L'ANGLAISE – Boil the beans in water with seasoning and herbs, and drain. Serve with fresh butter.

Dried white beans à la berrichonne. HARICOTS BLANCS SECS À LA BERRICHONNE – Proceed as for Dried white beans au gratin (see below). Alternate layers of beans and thick mutton hash in an ovenware dish. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs, pour melted butter over, and brown in the oven.

Dried white beans à la charcutière. HARICOTS BLANCS SECS À LA CHARCUTIÈRE – Cook the beans with a piece of desalted lean raw ham, and herbs. When the ham is cooked, drain it and cut into coarse dice. Drain the beans thoroughly. Brown 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) chopped onion in butter. Add the beans and simmer, presently adding the diced ham.

Transfer to a buttered ovenware dish. Cook 6 small pork sausages (crêpinettes) in butter, and press them down on the beans. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs, and add the butter in which the sausages were cooked. Brown slowly.

Dried white beans au gratin. HARICOTS BLANCS SECS AU GRATIN – Cook and drain the beans, and add some concentrated veal stock. Pour into a buttered ovenware dish, sprinkle with toasted breadcrumbs, and add melted butter. Brown slowly in the oven.

• Dried white beans in tomato sauce. HARICOTS BLANCS SECS AU TOMATES – Cook and drain the beans. To each litre (scant quart, generous quart) beans add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) flavoured with a little garlic and a tablespoon chopped parsley. Simmer all together in a pan for a few minutes, and serve.

BEAR. OURS – Bear meat can only be used after it has been marinated for a long time. It is not particularly tasty and is often tough. Prepare in any way suitable for wild boar or venison. Some gastronomes consider bear's paws to be a great delicacy.

Bear ham. JAMBON D'OURS – This ham, common in Russia and some European countries, is cured in the same way as pork ham. It is eaten cooked or raw. All recipes for pork ham are suitable for bear ham.

Bear's paw. PATTE DE L'OURS – The earliest delicacy known to the Chinese. Mencius, who lived about a hundred years after Confucius, said: 'Fish is what I like, so are bear's paws; but if I cannot have both, I will forego the fish and choose the bear's paw.'

The supply of this delicacy is now very limited, and is to be had, if at all, in north China. Its taste is unique. Mr. Cheng, one-time ambassador to the Court of St. James', said: 'The nearest comparison is that it is like the fat part of the best ham, or rather much better, for it has not the greasiness of the latter. It is so smooth and delicious that it simply melts in the mouth.'

To cook. Wrap the paw in clean mud and bake in the oven. When the mud becomes firm like clay, take the paw out of the oven, leave to cool, and peel off the mud – this will automatically tear off the hairy skin of the paw. Simmer in water, changing the water frequently to get rid of its gamey smell and taste.

When the paw has become very soft and 'tasteless', cook over low heat with shredded chicken meat, lean ham, sherry and just enough water to enable the ingredients to yield a thick gravy. Cut in slices, like ham.

BEARBERRY. RAISIN D'OURS – See ARBUTUS.

BÉARN, PAYS BASQUE, BIGORRE – The art of cookery is highly esteemed in these three picturesque provinces of the Pyrenees.

Culinary specialities – Among the many notable dishes are garbure, a substantial soup; lou trebuc, preserved goose or pork; toulia in Bigorre and oulia in Béarn, onion soup to which a dash of vinegar is sometimes added, and which is also made of cheese, tomatoes, leeks and garlic, when it takes the name of soupe du Berger.

Poule au pot d'Henri IV is a historic dish; tender lamb is to be had in the Ossau valley in Béarn, mutton cutlets in Barèges; there are also daube à la béarnaise, or estouffat; preserved goose, pork, turkey and duck.

Wines – Béarn produces excellent local wines. The département of the Basses-Pyrénées produces several wines that come under the categories of the appellations d'origine and V.D.Q.S.

The Jurançon is the best known of the appellations d'origine wines. It was with this wine that the King of Navarre moistened the lips of his nephew, the future Henry IV. It is a robust, rosy-tinged wine with an unusual, mellow bouquet, and comes from the so-called 'Manseng' vine. This vine, together with the Sémillon and Sauvignon, also gives the Pacherenc de Vicilh, a white wine produced in the north of the province.

The Madiran is a very strong wine, the perfect accompaniment to the cuisine of the region. Among the V.D.Q.S.

Sauveterre de Béarn, Béarn (French Government Tourist Office)

there is the Irouléguy, the red wine of the Basque country, the white and red wines of Béarn, the Rousselet, and the very dry rosés of Béarn – which are beginning seriously to rival those of Provence.

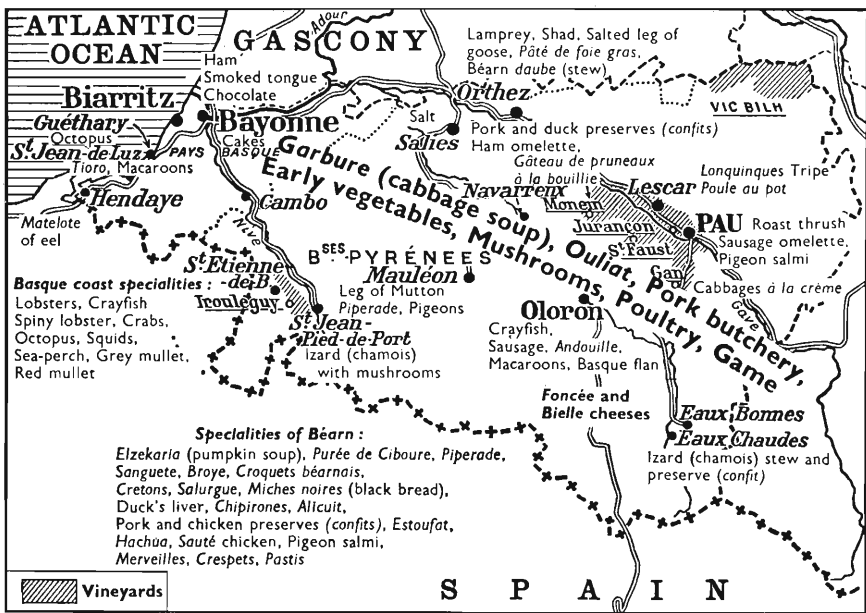

Paul de Cassagnac, a great gourmet, who studied the wines of the Adour basin, quotes among the remarkable vintages of the Madiran those of 1870, 1886, 1898, 1904 and 1916. He had also occasion to drink a Madiran of 1848 which was still ‘at the height of its form’.

‘The Portet is a white wine, gathered late, towards the end of November. It is sweet and soft, or dry, depending on the year.

‘The characteristic feature of the Jurançon is its sweetness, which does not destroy its bouquet or turn it into a syrup. The vintage years are mostly irregular; often the good qualities of Jurançon are swamped in the excess of sugar. 1886, 1905 and 1916 produced splendid results.’

A red Jurançon (Bouchy) is also made in Béarn and is greatly esteemed as a table wine, but it cannot compare with white Jurançon.

Map of Béarn

BÉARNAISE SAUCE – This famous sauce is said to have originated in Béarn, though some culinary writers assert that it originated at Saint-Germain-en-Laye and was named in honour of Henry IV, the Great Béarnais. But in fact the Henry IV pavilion dates as a restaurant from the year 1836 and the recipe for Béarnaise sauce first appeared in 1818 in la Cuisinière des villes et des campagnes.

BEAST. BÊTE – Animals intended for slaughter, which come under the general term of livestock, are enumerated under that heading. In addition, some beasts of burden, such as horse, mule, donkey and camel, are edible.

Among the wild animals, i.e. ground game, all of which are edible, are deer, chamois, fallow-deer, red deer, wild boar.

BÉATILLES (Titbits) – Cocks' combs and kidneys, lambs' sweetbreads, mushrooms, used as a garnish for vol-au-vent, bouchées and tourtes (q.v.), bound with a Velouté sauce or Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Ragoût of béatilles (titbits) – Here is an old recipe:

'Gently cook in butter 250 g. (9 oz.) lambs' sweetbreads (which have previously been soaked in cold water and blanched). Skin and soak in cold water 125 g. (4 oz.) cocks' combs, and cook in a court-bouillon (q.v.). Add 25 g. (1 oz.) cocks' kidneys, cooked in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira and a tablespoon butter. Sauté briskly in butter 250 g. (9 oz.) sliced and seasoned chicken livers. Cook 250 g. (9 oz.) trimmed and washed mushrooms in butter. Put the lambs' sweetbreads, chicken livers, cocks' combs and kidneys and the mushrooms in a saucepan. Add 125 g. (4 oz.) sliced truffles and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) Madeira. Simmer with a lid on.

'Make a Velouté (q.v.) using concentrated chicken stock. Add to it half its volume of fresh cream. Boil down by half. Lace with a little Madeira, add some butter, strain, and pour over the ragoût.'

BEAUGENCY – Small town in Loiret, producing wine which resembles the Basse-Bourgogne (Lower Burgundy) wines.

BEAUHARNAIS (À LA) – Method of preparing small cuts of meat, mainly tournedos.

Garnish with small artichoke hearts and Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE), with a purée of tarragon added to it; and little potato balls.

BEAUJOLAIS – Ancient French region that has given its name to a 'gulping' wine with a very strong bouquet which must be drunk when it is young and fresh. Léon Daudet said that Lyon was watered by three rivers: the Rhône, the Saône and the Beaujolais. The appellation 'Beaujolais' is linked with the viticultural region of Burgundy (q.v.).

BEAUMONT – Savoy cheese in season from October to June.

BEAUNE – Sub-prefecture of the Côte-d'Or. Famous since the Middle Ages for the excellence of its wines. It has given its name to an appellation contrôlée.

The white and red wines of the southern part of the Côte-d'Or are classed under the name of 'Côte de Beaune'. They are among the finest of the Burgundy wines (see BURGUNDY).

The annual wine auction of the Hospices de Beaune attracts buyers from all over the world.

BEAUVILLIERS – Beauvilliers was a great cuisinier. He served as Steward of the Household to the Count of Provence and Attaché Extraordinary of the Royal Household.

The restaurant which he founded (in 1782, according to Brillat-Savarin, in 1786 according to others) was situated at 26 rue de Richelieu and was called la Grande Taverne de Londres. It can be considered the first real restaurant to be opened in Paris. Rivarol, Pelletier, Champcenez, etc. were habitués and more than one issue of the Journal des Apôtres was composed after a good dinner in another restaurant that Beauvilliers owned in rue de Valois. He bought three arcades of the Palais-Royal in 1790 for 157,000 francs.

During the turmoil of the Revolution la Grande Taverne de Londres had to close its doors. Towards the end of the Directoire, Beauvilliers reopened it. In 1824 he wrote his book l'Art du cuisinier, which for a long time remained an authoritative standard work. Brillat-Savarin wrote:

'Beauvilliers had a prodigious memory. He recognised and welcomed people whom he had not seen for twenty years, people who may only have eaten at his restaurant once or twice.

'He would advise which dish not to take, which to snap up, and would then order a third one which no one else would have thought of; he would have wine brought up from the vaults, to which only he had the key . . . But this rôle of a host lasted but a moment and having accomplished it he would vanish. And a little while later the amount of the dinner bill and the bitterness of paying it showed clearly that one had dined with a great restaurateur. Beauvilliers made his fortune, lost it and made it again several times.'

BEAUVILLIERS – Garnish for braised meat consisting of spinach kromeskijs, tomatoes stuffed with a purée of brains, and salsify sautéed in butter.

BEAUVILLIERS AND BONVALET – These two cakes, the recipes for which are almost identical, were created towards the middle of the nineteenth century.

One of Beauvilliers' old pupils. Monnier, set up a cake shop in rue Monsieur-le-Prince and, as homage to his teacher, named his creation after him. This was the first cake intended for travel, wrapped in tinfoil.

The Bonvalet cake was created by Jules Leroy, head pastry-cook at Machin's, 99 rue de Turenne, and he dedicated it to a Monsieur Bonvalet in 1869. Here is the recipe for these cakes, as given by Philéas Gilbert:

'Pound 200 g. (7 oz., scant 1½ cups) almonds with an equal amount of sugar, add 5 egg whites little by little. Rub this mixture through a sieve.

'Blend 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar with 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) butter and 4 whole eggs in a bowl. When quite smooth, add the almond mixture, 175 g. (6 oz., 1½ cups) fine cake flour, the same amount of rice flour and potato flour. Add 7 egg whites whisked to a stiff froth. Cook in a moderate oven (160°C., 325°F., Gas Mark 3) in a special cake-baking tin (with a hole in the middle) called à trois frères, sprinkled with potato flour.

'When the cake is cold, ice it with kirsch icing and fill the centre with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) or Plombière ice cream' (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

BEAVER. CASTOR – A mammal rare in Europe but common in U.S.A. Its meat is sometimes eaten, but has a rather disagreeable musky flavour.

BEC (Beak) – Word often used in French colloquial expressions, such as rincer le bec (to wet one's whistle), which means to drink; tortiller du bec (to wolf down, to make short work of food), which means to eat; fin bec, which means a gourmet.

BEC-PLAT ('Flat-beak', i.e. Shoveller) – Common French name for spoon-bill duck, called so because of its flat beak. It can be prepared in all the ways suitable for Wild duck (see DUCK).

BEC-POINTU – French name for white skate. They call it 'sharp beak' because its head is elongated and the body oval. It can be prepared as ordinary skate (q.v.).

BÉCARD (Hooked nose) – French term for old male salmon. Its snout begins to protrude like a hooked beak, hence the name. (See SALMON.)

BÉCASSEAU – French name for the young woodcock, until its seventh month.

All the methods of preparation given for woodcock are applicable, but becasseau are mostly cooked on a spit.

BÉCHAMEIL (Louis de) – Marquis de Nointel, a financier who made his fortune during the Fronde (the rising of the aristocracy and the Parliament against Mazarin in 1648–53) and got himself the post of Lord Steward of the Royal Household to Louis XIV. The invention of béchamel sauce is attributed to him but is more likely to have been the invention of a court chef who dedicated it to Béchameil as a compliment.

The old Duc d'Escars said: 'That fellow Béchameil has all the luck. I was serving breast of chicken à la crème twenty years before he was born, but I have never had the chance of giving my name to the most insignificant of sauces!'

BÉCHAMEL SAUCE – Was béchamel sauce really invented by Marquis Louis de Béchameil? Was this financier a gastronome and a gourmet, and was he in any way competent in the culinary art? We do not know, but everything seems to indicate that, in fact, béchamel sauce, being a major sauce, must have been perfected by one of the queux de semestre – cooks in the service of the royal kitchen.

Originally, béchamel was made by adding a liberal amount of fresh cream to a thick velouté sauce. Nowadays béchamel is made by pouring boiling milk on white roux (blend of butter and flour). When a meat béchamel is wanted, lean veal, diced and simmered in butter with a minced onion, is added. (See SAUCE.)

Béchamel sauce (Carême's recipe) – 'When the velouté is thick, bind it with egg yolks and thick cream. Stir with a wooden spoon to make sure the sauce does not stick to the pan. Remove it from the heat, add a piece of butter the size of a walnut and a few tablespoons of thick double cream. Add a pinch of grated nutmeg, sieve through a white cloth and keep hot in a bain-marie.'

BECQUETER – French slang word which means 'to peck at food'.

BEDSTRAW. GAILLET – Plant of the Rubiaceae family. The flowering tops of the yellow bedstraw or cheese-rennet contain a substance which is used in the curdling of milk. It is used in the preparation of Cheshire cheese.

BEECH. HÊTRE – Handsome tree found in upland groves. Beech nut is good to eat. Beech oil is extracted from these nuts, and is second only to olive oil in quality.

Beech nut. FAINE – (See above.) Its flavour is midway between that of the hazelnut and the chestnut, with a slightly astringent taste which disappears when roasted, as in the case of chestnuts.

Cattle market at Bordeaux (French Government Tourist Office)

BEEF. BOEUF – Beef is the most fortifying and most nourishing of all red meat.

In France, there are three qualities of beef, graded according to breed, age, state of fattening, work done and sex of the animal (for beef includes the meat of bullocks, heifers, cows and bulls).

The English have long specialised in rearing and feeding cattle for beef. County Durham Shorthorns were imported into France to improve the strain of beef-producing stock. The Durham-Manceau crossbreeds, Charolais, Limousin, Garonne, Normandy and Salers are also good for fattening.

Charolais cattle

Prime beef is bright red in colour, firm and elastic to the touch. It has a fresh smell; the fat intermingles with the lean, peppering it with white or slightly yellowish grains of fat. Blotting paper applied to the surface should never be covered with greasy spots, as in the case of horse meat.

In France beef is classified in three categories according to its market value, which depends on how firm and fine-grained the texture is, as well as on the proportion of sinews and fat:

First category. Fillet, porterhouse steak, sirloin, top rump, rump steak, silverside and inner parts of the flank and round.

Second category. Top of sirloin, plate, top ribs, fore-rib and three-rib, shoulder of beef, chuck end of clod, and clod.

Third category. Flank, brisket, leg of beef, neck, ox-cheek, shin, ox-knees, shin of beef, knuckle.

Cows' meat is inferior to that of bullocks, generally speaking, although the flesh of young heifers and sterile cows can often be extremely good. Bull's meat is tough; it swells a great deal in cooking, but is not suitable for anything except the stockpot. The meat of a young bullock is usually the best.

Good quality beef is 97 per cent assimilable (provided it is not eaten to excess) and, since it leaves little residue, is easily digested. Eating beef to excess, that is to say, in larger quantities than the digestive juices can cope with (saturation point varies from individual to individual) leads to intestinal disorders. The fatter the piece of beef, the more calories it provides. However, an excessive amount of meat fat is difficult to digest, which explains why so many people eat the meat and leave the fat.

Aiguillette de boeuf – French term for the part which is also called pointe de culotte and pièce de boeuf. This is the top part of the rump and is usually braised or poached.

Baron of beef. BARON DE BOEUF – Joint served in England at Christmas time. It comprises the two sirloins and a part of the ribs.

This large joint is treated as Roast sirloin à l'anglaise (see below).

Beefsteak. BIFTECK – This word, of English origin, defines a slice of beef taken from the fillet and grilled. The name is also given to a slice of beef taken from the sirloin, or contre-filet.

Instead of grilling beefsteak, it may also be fried in butter or lard. For recipes see Entrecôte, Chateaubriand, Contre-filet, etc. In France, minced beef, served raw or cooked, is also called bifteck.

Beefsteak à l'américaine. BIFTECK À L'AMÉRICAIN – Trim 400 g. (14 oz.) fillet of beef, cut off fat, mince the meat finely, and shape into flat cakes. Make a little nest in the centre of each 'steak' and slip a raw yolk of egg into it.

Serve with the beef cakes chopped onion and parsley, and capers pickled in vinegar.

This dish is often prescribed in a building-up diet.

Beefsteak à l'andalouse. BIFTECK À L'ANDALOUSE – Mince 400 g. (14 oz.) beef finely, add to it 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onion lightly fried in butter, with a pinch of pounded garlic. Season and shape into flat cakes. Dredge with flour and fry in oil.

Arrange the beef cakes on half tomatoes which have been sautéed in oil. Fill the centre of the dish with rice pilaf. Dilute the pan juices left over from frying the meat with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sherry; boil down, add butter and pour over the beef cakes.

Beefsteak à cheval. BIFTECK À CHEVAL – Season the steak with salt and pepper and sauté quickly in hot butter. Arrange on a plate with one or two fried eggs on top. Pour butter and the cooking juices over the beef.

Beefsteak pie (English cookery). PÂTÉ CHAUD DE BOEUF À L'ANGLAISE – Cut  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. (3 $\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) best quality lean beef into slices 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg, and sprinkle with chopped onion and parsley. Put the slices into a pie dish. Add stock or water.

Bake in a moderate oven for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 hours. Serve hot.

Beefsteak à la russe (bitok). BIFTECK À LA RusSE – For each serving, trim 125 g. (4 oz.) lean beef; cut away all fat and remove sinews. Mince finely and add 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Shape into flat cakes, dip in flour and fry in clarified butter. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cream (sour cream, for preference) and 1 tablespoon demi-glace (q.v.) to the butter left in the pan. Put 1 tablespoon chopped onion, lightly fried in butter, on each meat cake, and garnish with sautéed potatoes.

Beefsteak tartare. BIFTECK À LA TARTARE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Beefsteak à l'américaine but omit the raw egg yolk. Serve Tartare sauce separately (see SAUCE).

Bifteck à la tartare (Ledoyen. Phot. Nicolas)

French cuts of beef

Cold boiled beef. BOEUF BOUILLI DE DESSERT – Left-over pieces of boiled beef, cut in thick slices, served with various sauces.

Cold boiled beef à la parisienne. BOEUF BOUILLI FROID À LA PARISIENNE – Cut the boiled beef into thin slices. Arrange on a long dish in a straight row. Garnish with boiled potatoes (peeled and cut in slices), sliced tomatoes, French beans, quarters of hard-boiled eggs, watercress and any other vegetables in season. Decorate the meat with thin onion rings, and sprinkle with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) and chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon. Serve cold.

Left-over pieces of boiled beef can be prepared in various ways, including: boulettes, croquettes, kromesnies, en fritt (i.e. fried in deep fat), en miroton.

Boiled beef à la diable. BOEUF BOUILLI À LA DIABLE – Cut boiled beef into thick slices. Spread with mustard, sprinkle with melted butter or oil, and coat with white breadcrumbs. Grill on a low heat, making both sides golden. Serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Boiled beef à la hongroise. BOEUF BOUILLI À LA HONGROISE – Cut the beef into large dice, and sauté in oil or butter in which 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion has been lightly fried. Season with paprika. Add Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Boiled beef with horseradish sauce. BOEUF BOUILLI SAUCE RAIFORT – Beef from the stockpot with Horseradish sauce (see SAUCE) served separately.

Boiled beef à l'indienne. BOEUF BOUILLI À L'INDIENNE – Like Boiled beef à la hongroise, substituting curry powder for paprika. Serve Rice à l'indienne separately (see RICE).

Boiled beef au pauvre homme (old recipe). BOEUF BOUILLI AU PAUVRE HOMME – Left-over boiled beef, cut into slices, sprinkled with salt, pepper, chopped spring onions and parsley. Add a little dripping or fat skimmed off the stockpot, a pinch of garlic, a glass of stock or water, and breadcrumbs. Leave to simmer for quarter of an hour on hot ashes. (This dish, it is said, was considered a great treat by Louis XV.)

Boiled beef with piquante sauce. BOEUF BOUILLI SAUCE

BEEF

PIQUANTE – Beef from the stockpot, with Piquante sauce (see SAUCE) served separately.

Boiled beef à la provençale. BOEUF BOUILLI À LA PROVENÇALE – Prepare as Boiled beef à la hongroise, substituting for the cream sauce an equal quantity of Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) flavoured with garlic. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Boiled beef with root vegetables. BOEUF BOUILLI AUX RACINES – Boiled beef served with various stockpot vegetables, such as carrots, turnips, leeks.

Sea salt, gherkins, pickles, etc., are served at the same time.

Boiled beef sautéed à la lyonnaise. BOEUF BOUILLI SAUTÉ À LA LYONNAISE – Cut 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) boiled beef into small slices and fry in cooking fat or butter. Add 225 g. (8 oz., 2 cups) chopped onions, previously fried in butter. Cook together, season with salt and pepper. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) vinegar, heated in the pan in which the beef was cooked.

Boiled beef sautéed Parmentier. BOEUF BOUILLI SAUTÉ PARMENTIER – Cut 2 medium-sized potatoes into large dice and fry in butter. When nearly done, remove from the pan. In the same butter brown 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) cut-up pieces of boiled beef. Add the potatoes and fry everything together. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Boiled beef with tomato sauce. BOEUF BOUILLI SAUCE TOMATE – Beef from the stockpot with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) served separately.

Beef bouillon. BOUILLON DE BOEUF – This stock, which constitutes the basis of clear soups, is also used for moistening sauces.

Beef stock is obtained by cooking lean beef with carrots, onions, leeks, celery and parsnips in water for about 4 hours. When the stock is to be served as soup, turnips are added.

For the method of preparation of beef stock, see SOUP, Clear soup.

Braised beef. ESTOUFFADE DE BOEUF – Fry lightly 300 g. (11 oz.) lean, blanched, diced bacon in butter. Drain, and in the same butter fry 1½ kg. (3½ lb.) beef, cut into pieces, each weighing about 100 g. (4 oz.). Add 3 medium-sized onions cut into quarters. Season with salt and pepper, add pounded thyme, bay leaf and a crushed clove of garlic.

When all these ingredients are well browned, sprinkle in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour. Let the flour colour slightly, stirring all the time. Moisten with 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) red wine and the same amount of stock. Blend well, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and bring to the boil. Cover the pan and cook in a slow oven for 2½ to 3 hours.

Drain on a sieve placed over a bowl. Put the pieces of beef and bacon into a pan, add to them 300 g. (11 oz.) mushrooms, sliced and sautéed in butter. Skim surplus fat off the sauce; boil it down, strain, and pour over the meat. Simmer gently for 25 minutes.

Brisket. POITRINE DE BOEUF – This part of beef is used for the stockpot. It can also be cooked as Forequarter flank.

Carbonades of beef à la flamande. CARBONADES DE BOEUF À LA FLAMANDE – Cut 750 g. (1½ lb.) lean beef (thick skirt, or chuck) into thin slices. Season with salt and pepper, brown quickly on both sides in sizzling fat (lard or clarified stock fat).

Remove from the pan and in the same fat fry 4 medium-sized chopped onions until golden. Put the beef and onions into a casserole in alternate layers and add a bouquet garni (q.v.).

Dilute the pan juices with 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) beer and a few tablespoons stock. Thicken with 3 tablespoons (scant ½ cup) Brown roux (see ROUX), add a tablespoon brown sugar, stir, cook for a few moments and strain through a fine sieve onto the meat.

Bring to the boil, cover with a lid, and cook in the oven 2½ hours.

Carbonades of beef with lambic (Belgian cookery). CARBONADES DE BOEUF AU LAMBIC – Cut the beef into slices and fry as described above in the recipe for Carbonades of beef à la flamande.

Remove from the pan and in the same fat fry the onions. Brown lightly, sprinkle in a good tablespoon of flour and cook for a few moments.

Put the beef slices into a casserole, season, add a bouquet garni (q.v.), moisten with lambic (strong Belgian beer), and bring to the boil. Cover the casserole with a lid and cook in a hot oven for 2½ hours.

Chateaubriand

Chateaubriand – Thick slice of beef fillet taken from the middle of the fillet, weighing between 400 and 800 g. (14 oz. and 1¾ lb.). It is usually grilled, garnished with Château potatoes (see POTATOES) and served with Colbert sauce (see SAUCE) or Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER). Chateaubriand can either be fried, or cooked in any way suitable for T-bone steak, filets and rump steak.

Grilled. Brush the chateaubriand with butter, and season. First place under a hot grill to seal the juices, then lower the heat and continue cooking, keeping it a little underdone.

Fried. Season the chateaubriand, and sauté in hot butter. Fry briskly but on a medium flame, to avoid the meat becoming dry. Keep underdone. Garnish and serve with a sauce made from the diluted pan juices.

The garnishes recommended for T-bone, rump steaks, tournedos and small fillet steaks are applicable to chateaubriands.

Contre-filet – Cut of meat located above the loins and chine of the animal, classed in the first category of beef. It can be grilled or, after being boned, trimmed and dressed, it can be roasted or braised.

Grilled. Cut into thick slices and grill as T-bone or rump steaks.

Roast. See CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts.

Braised. Proceed as described in the recipe for Braised beef. Served as a remove, the contre-filet, braised or roasted, is accompanied by vegetables. It is very good served cold.

Contre-filet braisé à l'ancienne. CONTRE-FILET BRAISÉ À L'ANCIENNE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Top rump braisé à l'ancienne (see below).

Contre-filet braisé à la bourgeoise. CONTRE-FILET BRAISÉ À LA BOURGEOISE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Top of rump à la bourgeoise (see below).

Contre-filet cold, with various salads. CONTRE-FILET FROID GARNI – Arrange as described for Contre-filet jellied (see below). Serve with a salad, stuffed artichoke hearts, hard-boiled eggs, lettuce hearts, etc.

Preparation of contre-filet (Larousse)

Contre-filet

Contre-filet with garnishes. CONTRE-FILET GARNI – The following are suitable for this meat. For their method of preparation see GARNISHES. (Those followed by the letter (b) are suitable for Braised contre-filet.)

Algérienne, alsacienne (b), anversoise, Béatrix, bouquetière, bourguignonne (b), Brillat-Savarin, bruxelloise, châtelaine, chipolata sausages (b), Clamart, dauphine, duchesse, favorite, flamande (b), française, hongroise, jardinière, languedocienne, lorraine (b), lyonnaise (b), macédoine, maraîchère, menton-naise, moderne, niçoise, nivernaise, orientale, piémontaise, portugaise, pritanrière, provençale, Richelieu, romaine, sarde.

The contre-filet can also be served with buttered or braised green vegetables, potatoes, macaroni and other pasta products, rich pilaf, risotto, and purée of dried vegetables.

Coquilles (scallop shells) au gratin. COQUILLES DE BOEUF AU GRATIN – Line scallop shells with half-slices of boiled potatoes which have been coated with Italian sauce (see SAUCE), and fill with thin slices of cold boiled beef cut up small. Cover with more sauce, sprinkle with cheese and breadcrumbs and brown in the oven.

A number of recipes for preparing hot and cold coquilles will be found under HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Scallop shells.

Beef à la Créole (Créole cookery). BOEUF À LA CRÉOLE – Put some fat and a tablespoon of olive oil into a casserole, and add 2 sliced onions. Cut the beef in large pieces as for Beef ragoûts (see below), and put them on this bed of onions. Add a tablespoon tomato sauce, a clove of garlic, a sprig of thyme and parsley and a few pinches of saffron. Cook gently for 3 hours with the lid on. The beef and the onions give out juice, but if at the end of cooking the juice becomes too concentrated, add a few drops of water or stock. If there is too much sauce, boil it down.

Daube of beef. DAUBE DE BOEUF – This old dish is prepared in different ways in different regions. Basically, it consists of a piece of beef, cooked in a daubière (q.v.) in braising liquor, with white or red wine added to it. In some provinces the meat (usually taken from the rump) is cooked whole, in others it is cut into square pieces or thick escalopes.

Prepared in this way, the daubes are very similar to Braised beef.

Daube of beef à l'ancienne. DAUBE DE BOEUF À L'ANCIENNE – Lard a piece of rump with thick lardoons (strips of salt pork) and marinate for a few hours in white wine and brandy, together with sliced carrots and onions, parsley, thyme, bay leaf and pounded garlic. Proceed as for Top rump (see below).

Daube of beef à la béarnaise. DAUBE DE BOEUF À LA BÉARNAISE – Cut 2 kg. (4½ lb.) beef, taken from rump or shoulder of beef, into 5-cm. (2-inch) square pieces. Lard each of these pieces with a thick lardoon (strip of salt pork), which has been rolled in chopped parsley and garlic, seasoned with powdered thyme and bay leaf, and sprinkled with brandy. Leave to marinate for 2 hours in red wine and brandy, with sliced carrots and onions, a sprig of parsley and thyme, and a bay leaf. Line a daubière (q.v.) with slices of Bayonne ham, alternating with layers of carrots and sliced onions which have been lightly fried in lard or goose fat. Dry the pieces of beef, dredge with flour, and put them in layers in the daubière. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.). Bring the stock in which the meat was marinated to the boil, add 2 crushed cloves of garlic, and simmer for 25 minutes. Strain and pour over the meat. There should be enough liquor to cover the meat completely; if not, add a few tablespoons meat stock.

Cover the daubière with a lid, sealing it with a strip of flour-and-water paste. Bring to the boil on top of the stove, then cook in the oven, maintaining an even heat, for 4 hours. Serve in the daubière, having first removed the bouquet garni and skimmed off surplus fat.

In Béarn, this daube is served with broyo instead of bread.

Daube à la provençale

Daube of beef à la provençale. DAUBE DE BOEUF À LA PROVENÇALE – Cut the beef into pieces, lard them and marinate for 2 hours as described above, but using white wine instead of red and adding 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) oil to it. Drain the pieces of beef and put them into a daubière which should be large enough to take all the ingredients. Spread in layers, alternating with fresh bacon rinds cut into small dice, blanched, diced bacon, sliced carrots, chopped onions, raw chopped mushrooms, peeled and chopped tomatoes, pounded cloves of garlic and stoned black olives. Put a bouquet garni (q.v.) in the middle of all these ingredients and, besides the usual aromatic herbs, add a small piece of bitter orange peel.

Pour the marinating liquor over the whole, add some veal stock, and cover, sealing the lid with a strip of flour-and-water paste. Cook in a moderate oven for 5 or 6 hours.

Serve in the daubière, having first removed the bouquet garni and skimmed off surplus fat.

Entrecôte or Steak – Entrecôte is the part of the meat between the bones of the ribs of beef. A slice taken from the contre-filet or from the rump is often served under this name.

The real entrecôte is usually grilled; a slice of contre-filet, often called rump steak in France, is sometimes fried in butter.

These steaks are generally boned before being grilled. When the pieces are thick, however, rib bones are left on.

Grilled. Trim and flatten the steak, brush with butter or oil, season and cook under a grill, first on a brisk and then on a lowered heat. Arrange and serve as indicated in the recipe.

Sautéed. Trim and flatten the steak, season it and sauté briskly in butter. Arrange and garnish as indicated in the recipe. Pour over it the pan juices left over from frying, having diluted them and finished off as described in the recipe.

In France, a steak taken from ribs of beef, or contre-filet, of 400 to 500 g. (about 1 lb.) is considered sufficient for four persons.

Entrecôte or Steak à la béarnaise – Grill the steak, and garnish with Château potatoes (see POTATOES) and watercress. Serve Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) separately.

Entrecôte or Steak à la Bercy – Grill the steak and cover with Bercy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Entrecôte or Steak à la bonne femme, or 'Grand-mère' – Sauté the steak in butter, browning on both sides. Surround it in the pan with 12 small glazed onions, 2 blanched potatoes cut small, and 50 g. (2 oz.) diced and blanched salt pork or bacon. Cook all together. Arrange in an earthenware dish, with the garnish surrounding it. Dilute the butter left in the pan with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) stock or water and pour over the dish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Entrecôte or Steak à la bordelaise – Grill the steak. Arrange on a dish and place 10 slices of poached and drained bone marrow on top. Serve with Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE).

The steak can also be served sautéed, with the pan juices added to the sauce.

Entrecôte or Steak à la bourguignonne – Sauté the entrecôte in butter, and garnish à la bourguignonne (see GARNISHES). Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) red wine, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) demi-glace (q.v.), boil down, strain and pour over the dish.

Entrecôte or Steak Dumas – Season and cook contre-filet steaks over a high heat. Lay them on a heated meat plate and place 3 slices of previously cooked beef marrow on each.

Make a sauce with the residue left in the pan by adding 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) dry white wine and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped shallots. Boil down by three-quarters. Pour in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) veal stock and bring to the boil. Boil for one minute. Add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter and season to taste.

Sprinkle the steaks with pepper and chopped parsley. Coat with the sauce and serve. (Recipe from the Restaurant Lasserre.)

Entrecôte or Steak à la fermière – Prepare Steak à la bonne femme, replacing the garnish indicated for that recipe by 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Vegetable fondue (see FONDUE). Pour over it the pan juices, diluted with white wine and thickened veal stock.

Entrecôte or Steak à la forestière – Prepare Steak with mushrooms I or II (see below), replacing the mushrooms by the garnish called à la forestière (see GARNISHES).

Entrecôte or Steak à la hongroise – Season the steak with paprika, and sauté it in butter. When three-quarters done, add a tablespoon chopped onion, lightly fried in butter and seasoned with salt and paprika. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) white wine, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) thin Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Cook for a few moments and pour over the steak. Serve with boiled potatoes.

Entrecôte or Steak à la lyonnaise I – Sauté the steak in butter. When three-quarters done, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion lightly fried in butter. Dilute the pan juices with 1 tablespoon vinegar and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) white wine, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) demi-glace (q.v.); boil down, add a tablespoon chopped parsley and pour over the steak.

Entrecôte or Steak à la lyonnaise II – Cook as above. Dilute the pan juices with vinegar and white wine. Add stock, and thicken the sauce with Kneaded butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Entrecôte or Steak maître d'hôtel – Grill the steak. Serve with Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Entrecôte or Steak marchand de vin – Grill the steak. Serve with Marchand de vin butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Entrecôte or Steak à la ménagère – Prepare as Entrecôte à la bonne femme. Replace the garnish in that recipe by an equal quantity of small glazed onions, mushrooms and cooked carrots. Pour the pan juices, diluted with white wine and thickened veal stock, over the dish.

Entrecôte or Steak à la minute – Flatten the steak to make it as thin as possible. Season and sauté in butter. Add a few drops of lemon juice and half a tablespoon of chopped parsley to the butter in which it was cooked and pour over the steak.

Entrecôte or Steak Mirabeau – Grill the steak. Arrange on a dish, decorate with anchovy fillets and tarragon leaves, garnish with stoned, blanched olives and serve with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Entrecôte or Steak with mushrooms I. ENTRECÔTE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Sauté the steak in butter. When three-quarters done, add 8 mushroom caps, and finish cooking. Arrange the mushrooms around the meat on a dish.

Dilute the butter left in the pan with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) white wine, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) demi-glace (q.v.), boil down, strain, add a teaspoon fresh butter, and pour over the meat.

Entrecôte or Steak with mushrooms II. ENTRECÔTE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Proceed as above. Dilute the pan juices with white wine, add stock and thicken with Kneaded butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Entrecôte or Steak à la niçoise – Sauté the steak in butter or oil. Arrange on a dish, garnish with Tomato fondue à la niçoise (see TOMATO), new potatoes cooked in butter, and black olives. Dilute the pan juices with white wine and tomato-flavoured veal stock, and pour over the steak.

Entrecôte or Steak à la tyrolienne – Grill the steak, top with onion rings fried in butter, surround with a border of Tomato fondue (see FONDUE), and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Entrecôte or Steak au vert-pré – Grill the steak, garnish with straw potatoes alternating with bunches of watercress, and serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Entrecôte or Steak à la viennoise (Austrian cookery) – Beat the steak to flatten thoroughly, season with salt and paprika, dredge with flour, and sauté briskly in lard. Cover with onion rings which have been fried in lard, drained, and dressed with butter and vinegar.

Serve boiled potatoes separately.

Beef essence. ESSENCE DE BOEUF – Concentrated meat juice prepared as described under Beef-tea (see below).

Filets mignons – These cuts are taken from the end of the fillet. The filet mignon is trimmed into the shape of a triangle; its weight varies according to the size of the fillet. If it is too big, it can be divided in two and thus provide two filets mignons.

This part of the fillet of beef can also be used for the preparation of steak on skewers, biki, pilafs and quick sautés.

Grilled. Flatten the filet mignon slightly, season it, dip into melted butter and cover with breadcrumbs, pressing with the flat part of the knife to make the breadcrumbs adhere properly. Sprinkle with melted butter and cook under a low grill. Serve with the garnish and sauce recommended in the recipe. As the fillet is cooked in breadcrumbs, the sauce accompanying it should be served separately.

Sautéed. Flatten the filet mignon, season, and sauté briskly in butter. Serve with a garnish and the sauce recommended in the recipe.

Filet mignon can be prepared in ways suitable for entrecôtes, rump steaks and other cuts, for escalopes of veal, noisettes and tournedos.

Filets mignons en chevreuil – Trim, flatten slightly, and lard the fillets with strips of bacon, inserting them in a rosette pattern. Leave to marinate for 24 to 28 hours in the summer, from 3 to 4 days in the winter (see MARINADES).

Take the fillets out of the marinade and dry them in a cloth. Sauté as quickly as possible in clarified butter or oil. Serve with the garnish and sauce recommended in the recipe.

The following are the most appropriate garnishes for filet en chevreuil: celeriac, lentils, chestnuts, onions. They can also be served with fresh or dried noodles, rice pilaf, risotto, etc.

Filets en chevreuil can also be prepared au chausseur, à la hongroise, à la poivrade, à la romaine, en venison, etc.

Fillet of beef. FILET DE BOEUF – The fillet is the undercut of sirloin. The end of the fillet is used for making tournedos and filets mignons. The middle of the fillet, after the fat and sinews have been removed, makes tender and delicate roasts, or, cut into slices, delicious grills. The top of the fillet, less delicate in taste, more sinewy than the middle, is roasted or grilled.

Trim the fillet, removing skin and sinews. Cut into thick slices if it is to be served as a chateaubriand, as grilled fillet, tournedos, or filet mignon.

If it is to be served whole, trim the fillet and lard it with thin strips of bacon; or bard with rashers and secure with string. Roast it in the oven or on a spit, fry or braise it, accord-

Division of a fillet of beef:

4. Tournedos; 5. Filets mignons

ing to the recipe chosen. Follow the special instructions for braising, frying, roasting, under CULINARY METHODS.

When the fillet is cooked, untie the string and remove the barding. Arrange on a heated dish, surround with the garnish indicated, and serve with its own juice or the sauce recommended.

Fillet of beef with garnish. FILET DE BOEUF GARNI – For various garnishes suitable for fillet of beef, fried or roast, see GARNISHES. In the following list of recommended garnishes, those followed by the letter (f) are intended for fried fillets; the others are suitable both for fried and roast fillets.

Anversoise, Béatrix, bouquetière, Brillat-Savarin, bruxelloise, châtelaine (f), Clamart, dauphine, duchesse, favorite, financière (f), forestière, française (f), Frascati (f), Godard (f), hongroise, jardinière, italienne (f), languedocienne, macédoine, massenet (f), mentonnaise (f), milanaise (f), moderne (f), niçoise (f), nivernaise (f), orientale, parisienne, piémontaise (f), portugaise, printanière, provençale (f), renaissance (f), Richelieu, romaine (f), Romanov (f), sarde (f), Saint-Germain, viennoise (f).

Fried or roast fillet of beef can also be accompanied by buttered or braised vegetables, potatoes and purées of various vegetables. These purées should be served separately.

Fillet of beef London House. FILET DE BOEUF LONDON HOUSE – This is the same as Fillet Prince Albert (see below).

Fillet of beef Matignon. FILET DE BOEUF MATIGNON – Lard a fillet with pieces of tongue à l'écarlate (salt beef tongue) (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS), and truffles cut into strips. Cover with a layer of matignon (q.v.), wrap in wide, thin rashers of bacon, and secure with string.

Put into a braising pan (see CULINARY METHODS). Moisten with Madeira, and cook with the lid on for 1 hour. Drain the fillet, remove the bacon rashers and matignon. Glaze the fillet in the oven, arrange on a dish on a croûton of fried bread.

Surround with garnish à la matignon. Strain the braising liquor, skim off surplus fat, pour a little of the sauce around the fillet and serve the rest separately.

Fillet of beef à la périgourdine. FILET DE BOEUF À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Insert slivers of truffle into the fillet, bard it, tie with string and braise in Madeira-flavoured braising stock. Drain, remove barding bacon and glaze. Surround with slices of foie gras tossed in butter, and tartlets filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of truffles. Boil down the braising liquor, strain, and pour over the fillet.

Fillet of beef Prince Albert. FILET DE BOEUF PRINCE ALBERT – Lard a trimmed fillet of beef with thin strips of bacon. Slit the fillet open without completely separating the two halves.

Fill the inside with pieces of uncooked foie gras, seasoned and studded with pieces of truffles. Close the fillet, tie with string, and brown in a hot oven. Put into a braising pan with the ingredients given in the recipe for Fillet of beef Matignon. Moisten with port, cook in the oven, and complete as described in the above-mentioned recipe. Surround with Prince Albert garnish (large truffles cooked in Madeira) and mushroom caps cooked in butter.

This fillet of beef is also known as Prince of Wales.

Fillet of beef on skewers. BROCHETTES DE FILET DE BOEUF – Prepared in the same way as Fillets of mutton on skewers (see MUTTON), using squares of fillet beef, pieces of blanched and fried lean bacon, and mushrooms.

Cold fillet of beef. FILET DE BOEUF FROID – Cold beef fillets can be garnished with various vegetables, boiled, drained, allowed to cool and mixed with half-set aspic jelly. They can also be garnished with various mousses.

Full instructions for these preparations, as well as a list of appropriate garnishes, will be found under the entry COLD FOODSTUFFS.

Jellied cold fillet of beef. FILET DE BOEUF FROID À LA GELÉE – This method is mostly applied to left-over pot-roasted or roasted fillet. If the piece is big enough to be served whole, cover it with aspic jelly and decorate with chopped jelly and watercress. Or cut it into thin slices and garnish with chopped jelly and watercress.

The fillet can also be trimmed and placed whole in a shallow serving dish, and covered completely with meat aspic jelly flavoured with Madeira, port or sherry.

Serve a green or a vegetable salad with the fillet, as well as a cold sauce: Mayonnaise, Rémoulade, Tartare, etc. (see SAUCE).

Cold fillet of beef à la niçoise. FILET DE BOEUF FROID À LA NIÇOISE – Roast or pot-roast the fillet, keeping it a little underdone. Leave to get quite cold. Line a mould with tarragon-flavoured jelly, decorated with truffles, pieces of hard-boiled egg white, and tarragon leaves which have been blanched, dipped in cold water and dried. Put in the fillet, fill the mould with jelly, and leave to set on ice, or in the refrigerator. Turn out onto a dish, on a foundation of tarragon-flavoured jelly.

Special braising pan for fillets (Dehillerin. Phot. Larousse)

Marinate 12 small tomatoes in oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, remove the insides, and stuff with a salpicon (q.v.) of truffles. Stuff 12 artichoke hearts with green asparagus tips; place these round the beef. Garnish further with stoned olives stuffed with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Put a little chopped jelly between each group of garnish and decorate the edge of the dish with jelly croûtons.

Cold fillet of beef à la parisienne. FILET DE BOEUF FROID À LA PARISIENNE – Pot-roast or roast the fillet and leave to cool. Trim, dry, and coat with jelly. Arrange on a dish, or on a buttered croûton of bread, or on a foundation of cooked rice. Surround with small timbales of Macédoine of vegetables (see MACÉDOINE). Decorate the dish with jelly croûtons. Serve with Mayonnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Cold fillet of beef à la russe. FILET DE BOEUF À LA Russe – Cook the fillet as described in the recipe for Cold fillet of beef à la parisienne and leave to get cold. Cut out the central part, leaving only a 'frame', with a narrow strip of about 4 to 5 cm. (2 inches) at each end. Cut the cut-out meat into thin slices, and put them back in the hollowed-out meat case, pressing them in tightly. Cover with Madeira-flavoured aspic jelly which has had chopped truffles added.

Arrange the fillet on a bread croûton or a foundation of cooked rice, and garnish with hard-boiled eggs, halved and covered with jelly, artichoke hearts stuffed with vegetables dressed with mayonnaise, and lettuce hearts cut in quarters.

Cold fillet of beef à la strasbourgeoise. FILET DE BOEUF FROID À LA STRASBOURGEOISE – Prepare and cook the fillet as described in the recipe for Fillet of beef Prince Albert, studding it with truffles instead of strips of larding bacon. Leave to get cold.

Trim the fillet and cover with port-flavoured jelly. Arrange on a buttered croûton of bread, or on a foundation of cooked rice. Garnish with truffles cooked in port, cooled and dipped in jelly, and with chopped jelly and bunches of parsley. Decorate with jelly croûtons.

Fillet of beef steaks. FILETS DE BOEUF DE DÉTAIL – Slices cut off fillet of beef can be prepared in any way suitable for steaks, rump steak and tournedos.

Grilled. Trim and slightly flatten the fillet, brush with butter or other fat, season and grill under a brisk heat.

Sautéed. Season the fillet and cook in a sauté pan in butter. Keep slightly underdone.

Small fillets of beef. PETITS FILETS DE BOEUF – Small slices of fillets cut a little bigger than tournedos. All the methods of cooking given for tournedos are applicable to small fillets.

Small fillets à la niçoise (Larousse)

Small fillets of beef à la niçoise. PETITS FILETS DE BOEUF À LA NIÇOISE – Sauté the fillets in butter, drain them and place each on a croûton of bread fried in butter. Fill the middle of the dish with cooked French beans dressed with butter, and place between each fillet a little heap of small potatoes (or potato balls) cooked in butter.

Dilute the pan juices with white wine, add Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) flavoured with garlic and chopped tarragon, and pour the sauce over the fillets. Top with rolled anchovy fillets and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Beef forcemeat for agnolotti. – See FORCEMEAT.

Forequarter flank. PLAT-DE-CÔTE – Top part of the rib, generally used for the stockpot.

After pickling in brine for several days, it can be poached in water with vegetables and aromatics, and served hot with a garnish: braised red cabbage, braised green cabbage, butter beans, and purées of fresh or dried vegetables.

This cut can also be used for making stews, and can be prepared as Pressed beef (see below).

Fricadelles of cooked beef. FRICADELLES DE BOEUF AVEC VIANDE CUIE – Mince 750 g. (1½ lb.) cooked beef (remains of a piece of boiled or braised beef) and mix with 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) thick potato purée. Add 150 g. (5 oz., 1½ cups) chopped onion, and bind with 2 whole eggs. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg, and mix well.

Divide into pieces of about 100 g. (4 oz.) each. Roll them on a board sprinkled with flour, and shape into thick, flat cakes. Brown them on both sides in butter and finish cooking in the oven.

Serve with a well-spiced sauce: Piquante or Robert sauce (see SAUCE), or with a vegetable purée.

Fricadelles of raw beef. FRICADELLES DE BOEUF AVEC VIANDE CRUE – Chop together 750 g. (1½ lb.) lean beef, 250 g. (9 oz.) decrusted bread, soaked and squeezed out, and add 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) butter, 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) onion chopped and lightly fried in butter, and a tablespoon chopped parsley. Bind with 3 whole eggs, season with salt, pepper and a pinch of grated nutmeg, and mix well.

Prepare and cook the fricadelles as described in the preceding recipe.

Beef glaze. GLACE DE BOEUF – Boil down concentrated beef stock to a syrupy consistency.

This glaze is used for flavouring sauces, gravies and stews. (See EXTRACTS, Meat extract.)

Goulash (Hungarian cookery). GULYAS DE BOEUF – A way of stewing beef (or other meat), spiced with paprika, or Hungarian red pepper.

These stews, in Hungary as in France, are prepared in different ways. Two popular methods are given below.

Grilled small fillets

Goulash

Hungarian goulash I. GULYAS DE BOEUF À LA HONGROISE – Fry 1½ kg. (3½ lb.) lean beef cut into pieces, and 2 medium onions, cut into large dice, in 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) lard. Season with salt and a teaspoon of paprika.

When all the ingredients are well browned, add 500 g. (generous lb.) tomatoes, peeled, seeded and diced. Moisten with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) water, bring to the boil, cover with a lid, and simmer for 1½ hours. Add 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) water and 4 quartered potatoes, and continue to cook for about another hour.

Hungarian goulash II. GULYAS DE BOEUF À LA HONGROISE – Brown pieces of beef and chopped onion in lard. Season with salt and paprika. Sprinkle 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour into the pan and cook for a few moments. Add enough clear brown stock to cover the meat, 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) tomato purée, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Stir, bring to the boil, cover, and cook in the oven for 2½ hours. Serve with boiled potatoes.

Beef au gros sel. BOEUF AU GROS SEL – Boiled meat, served hot, garnished with the vegetables with which it was cooked, and sea salt. (See BOUILLON, SOUP.)

Hamburger steak (also called steak à l'allemande). BIFTECK À LA HAMBOURGEOISE – Mince finely 400 g. (14 oz.) beef, taken from contre-filet or fillet. Add 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped, lightly fried onion, and 2 raw eggs. Season well with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg, and shape into 4 flat cakes.

Dredge with flour and fry in clarified butter, keeping them a little underdone inside (they are just right when little beads of blood form on the surface). Put a tablespoon of sliced onion, fried in butter, on each steak.

Beef hash. HACHIS DE BOEUF – This is made out of boiled or braised left-over meat.

Recipes for beef hashes will be found under the section HASHES. They can be made in scallop shells, as kromesnies, croquettes, aux fines herbes, à la hongroise, à l'italienne, à la lyonnaise, Parmentier, à la polonaise, à la portugaise.

Beef juices. JUS DE BOEUF – These juices, usually called jus de viande, are used in building-up diets, and are obtained by pressing grilled lean slices of beef in a special apparatus.

Keftedes of beef (German cookery). KEFTEDES DE BOEUF – Prepare Hamburger steaks omitting the onion garnish.

This method of preparation can also be applied to other meat. It is similar to bitki or cutlets à la Pozharsky, which can be made of veal, chicken or game, and fish.

Ox (beef) liver. FOIE DE BOEUF – This is less delicate than calf's liver. All recipes for calf's liver are suitable for ox (beef) liver. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

Beef marrow on croûtes. CROÛTES À LA MOELLE – Poach slices of marrow in salted water, and drain thoroughly. Fry slices of bread in butter. Chop a slice of the marrow in small pieces and mix with concentrated veal stock and a chopped shallot which has been simmered in a little white wine. Put this mixture on the croûtes. Place the remaining marrow slices on the mixture, cover with fine breadcrumbs, season with freshly ground pepper, and brown in a hot oven.

Medallions of beef fillet. MÉDAILLONS DE FILET DE BOEUF – Round slices of fillet, rather smaller than tournedos. Their weight varies between 80 and 100 g. (3 to 4 oz.) and they can be prepared in any way suitable for tournedos or noisettes. They are sometimes called coeur de filet de boeuf.

Miroton of beef. MIROTON DE BOEUF – Arrange thin slices of boiled beef, overlapping slightly, in a fireproof dish on a thick foundation of Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with sliced onions which have been lightly fried in butter. Pour Lyonnaise sauce over the meat, sprinkle with melted butter or dripping, and brown the top in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Paupiettes of beef. PAUPIETTES DE BOEUF – Paupiettes are ballottines (q.v.) made of thin slices of various meats, stuffed and rolled.

Flatten thin slices of beef, season with salt and pepper and cover with a layer of pork sausage or well-spiced forcemeat. Roll into the shape of large corks, wrap in thin rashers of bacon, and tie with string.

Braise the paupiettes, and moisten with white wine or Madeira (see CULINARY METHODS, Braising).

Remove bacon. Boil down, strain the braising liquor and pour it over the paupiettes. Garnish. All garnishes for braised beef can be served with paupiettes. Certain types of garnish, such as bourgeoise, chipolata sausages or small onions, should be added when the paupiettes are half cooked, covered with the strained braising liquor, and left to finish cooking with the paupiettes.

Paupiettes of beef can be prepared à la bourguignonne (braised in red wine). The garnish – small onions, lardons (strips of salt pork) and mushrooms – must be cooked with the paupiettes.

Paupiettes of beef à la hongroise. PAUPIETTES DE BOEUF À LA HONGROISE – Stuff the paupiettes with veal forcemeat mixed with chopped onion fried in butter. Place in a pan on a foundation of more fried onion, and season with salt and paprika. Put the lid on the pan and simmer for 10 minutes. Moisten with dry white wine, allowing 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) for 10 paupiettes. Boil down, then add about 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) light Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Put a bouquet garni (q.v.) in the middle of the dish. Bring to the boil, cover the pan, and cook in the oven, basting frequently.

When the paupiettes are nearly done, drain them, remove barding, put back into the pan and add 20 small mushrooms lightly tossed in butter. Add cream to the sauce, boil down a little, strain, and pour over the paupiettes. Cook until they are done.

Serve on croûtons fried in butter, covering them with sauce and mushrooms.

Paupiettes of beef with pilaf. PAUPIETTES DE BOEUF AU RIZ PILAF – Prepare as for Paupiettes of beef with risotto (see below), replacing the risotto with pilaf rice.

Paupiettes of beef with risotto. PAUPIETTES DE BOEUF AU RISOTTO – Cook the paupiettes, glaze them, and serve with Risotto (see RICE). Simmer down the liquor in which the paupiettes were braised, strain, and pour over them.

Paupiettes of beef Sainte-Menehould. PAUPIETTES DE BOEUF SAINTE-MENEHOULD – Braise the paupiettes until three-quarters done. Allow to cool in the strained braising liquor. Drain, dry, and spread with mustard flavoured with a pinch of cayenne pepper. Sprinkle with melted butter, roll in fresh breadcrumbs, and cook under a moderate grill.

Garnish with watercress, and serve with the braising liquor boiled down and strained.

Ragout of beef (Robert Carrier)

Paupiettes of beef with vegetables. PAUPIETTES DE BOEUF AUX LÉGUMES – Braise the paupiettes and serve garnished with vegetables: buttered French beans, broad beans, green peas, etc., braised celery, endive, lettuce, glazed carrots, turnips, small onions, etc., potatoes prepared in various ways, purées of dried or fresh vegetables.

Porterhouse steak – Cut from the chump end of the sirloin.

Pressed beef. BOEUF PRESSÉ – Pressed beef, which is served as an hors-d'œuvre, is usually bought ready-cooked in the shops, but it can be made at home.

Take 3 kg. (6½ lb.) brisket, prick with a thick trussing needle, and pickle in brine for 8 to 10 days. The process is completed more quickly in summer than in winter.

The pickling brine is the same as that used for Pickled (scarlet) beef or ox tongue (see OFFAL). Care must be taken that the beef is completely submerged in the liquid; cover with a wooden board and put a weight on top.

Wash the beef in cold water and cut into pieces to fit the moulds in which they will later be placed. Cook in water with a carrot cut in quarters and a bunch of leeks. After thorough cooking, drain, put into square moulds, cover with a wooden board and put a weight on top.

When the meat is quite cold, take out of the moulds. Coat with gelatine which has been diluted and mixed with burnt sugar and a little carmine. When one layer is set, add another, then another. These make a protective covering for the meat, enabling it to keep for some time.

To serve, cut into thin slices and decorate with fresh parsley.

Beef ragoûts. RAGOÛTS DE BOEUF – Pieces of rump, shoulder or rib are used for these ragoûts. Bone the meat and cut into pieces of about 100 g. (4 oz.). Brown in dripping or butter, together with onions and carrots cut into quarters. Season with salt and pepper.

When the meat and the vegetables acquire a good colour, sprinkle in some flour, moisten with clear brown stock and mix. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and a crushed garlic clove. Simmer, with the lid on, for 1½ hours. Drain, and place the pieces of meat in a large ovenware dish.

Put a garnish on top of the meat. Boil down the sauce, strain and pour over the ragoût. Complete the cooking in the oven for 1½ hours, with the dish uncovered.

Garnishes suitable for beef ragoûts: Bourgeoise, bourguignonne, chipolata sausages, mushrooms, chestnuts, salsify.

Beef ragoûts can be moistened with red wine, and are then called beef à la bourguignonne. It is a popular dish not only in Burgundy, where it originates, but also in Paris, where it figures almost daily on the menus of small restaurants, especially those kept by wine merchants. On these menus the dish is described as Bourguignon.

The garnish for beef à la bourguignonne consists of lean rashers of bacon, scalded and browned, small glazed onions and mushrooms.

Rib of beef. CÔTE DE BOEUF – This cut is also called train de côtes. It is divided into train de côtes découvert and train de côtes couvert.

When boned, the rib is cut in slices or entrecôtes, which are then grilled (see Entrecôte).

Roasted or braised whole, ribs of beef are excellent.

In big restaurants roast rib of beef is served on a mobile hotplate, and is carved in front of the guests. The garnish or gravy and sauce are also kept on the same trolley in bains-marie.

Roast rib of beef is treated like all red meats and must be underdone on the inside (see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts).

Braised rib of beef is prepared in the same way as Top rump.

Rib of beef

Rib of beef (roast or braised) is served with all the garnishes recommended for contre-filet and fillet. When roasted, it is usually served with its own juices, clear and strong; when braised, with the braising liquor boiled down. The left-overs of rib of beef can be made into various dishes, recipes for which are given under ÉMINCÉ, HASH, SALPICON.

Roast in the oven. Trim the ribs. Cover with pieces of fat beaten flat, and tie with string. Brush with dripping, sprinkle with salt, put in a roasting pan and cook in the oven, uncovered. When cooked, remove string, trim, and keep hot until ready to serve. Garnish and serve as indicated in the recipe.

Roast rib of beef (boned and rolled)

Roasting on a spit. Trim the rib. Tie with string as described above. Brush with dripping, season with salt, and cook in front of a hot fire to seal the juices. Reduce to a more moderate heat to ensure that the meat cooks through. Take off the spit and proceed as described above.

Rib of beef roasted on a spit should be taken off the spit and kept in a slow oven 30 minutes to 1 hour, depending on size (this applies to whole roast rib). The cooking is thus completed and the meat settles in the gentle heat and becomes more tender.

Rib of beef à la bouquetière. CÔTE DE BOEUF À LA BOUQUETIÈRE – Cut a thick slice (containing two bones) off a trimmed rib of beef. Season this slice of rib and cook in a sauté pan in clarified butter.

Drain, and garnish with carrots and turnips cut to a uniform size, French beans, artichoke hearts stuffed with garden peas, new potatoes cooked in butter, florets of cauliflower.

Dilute the pan juices with Madeira, add a little demi-glace (q.v.) and pour over the rib of beef.

Decorating a roast (French Government Tourist Office)

Braised rib of beef. CÔTE DE BOEUF BRAISÉE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Braised beef.

Note. To braise, use pieces of rib, cut in thick slices weighing from 2 to 3 kg. (4½ to 6½ lb.).

Cold rib of beef à la mode. CÔTE DE BOEUF FROIDE À LA MODE – Proceed as for Top rump à la mode (see below).

Rib of beef with garnish. CÔTE DE BOEUF GARNIE – For garnishes suitable for roast or braised ribs of beef, see GARNISHES. The following are the principal garnishes: letter (b) following the name of the garnish indicates that it is intended for braised rib of beef:

Bourgeoise (b), bourguignonne (b), bruxelloise, chipolata sausages (b), dauphine, duchesse, flamande, hongroise, jardinière, lorraine, lyonnaise, macédoine, maraîchère, milanaise, moderne, nivernaise, parisienne, piémontaise, potatoes cooked in various ways, portugaise, Richelieu.

In addition to these garnishes, roast ribs of beef can be served with buttered or braised vegetables, and purées of vegetables.

Jellied rib of beef can be accompanied by various plain or mixed salads.

Roast rib of beef à l'anglaise. CÔTE DE BOEUF RÔTIE À L'ANGLAISE – Roast the rib as described in the preceding recipes but allow a little more cooking time.

Serve with Yorkshire pudding, baked in the dripping-pan if the joint is cooked on a spit, or in an ordinary pan, using beef drippings for fat, if the joint is cooked in the oven.

Sirloin joint ready for roasting

Roast beef. ROSBIF – Rib roasts, filets (U.S. tenderloin) sirloin and rump make excellent roasts. The meat should be covered with dripping or other fat and roasted in a moderately hot oven (see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts).

Rump of beef. CULOTTE DE BOEUF – This cut represents what is left of the hindquarter after the sirloin has been cut off. It is first category beef and is braised and used for stocks.

The top of the rump, commonly known as pièce de boeuf, is served as a remove. All the recipes applicable to it will be found under Top rump (see below).

Rump steak. ROMSTECK – Rump steak is a slice of beef, varying in thickness, taken from the top of sirloin (U.S. face of the rump), or the lower part of the sirloin, formed by the thick, fleshy parts which cover the pelvic girdle. This cut is used for roasts and is also excellent when braised, but is chiefly preferred grilled.

Rump steak can be cooked in any way suitable for beef-steaks and filets.

Grilled. Proceed as described for Entrecôte, grilled.

Sautéed. Proceed as described for Entrecôte, sautéed.

Salt and smoked beef. BOEUF SALÉ ET FUMÉ – Suitable principally for brisket, but top rump and shoulder of beef (chuck) can also be prepared in this manner.

After having been kept in brine (in the same way as ox tongue) for a period of time according to season, these cuts are desalted and cooked in water, allowing 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.).

Salt beef is served hot, accompanied by various vegetables (braised red or green cabbage, sauerkraut) and, in general, with all vegetables normally served with poached beef. It is also used in potée. To serve cold, cool under a press, as described in the earlier recipe for Pressed beef.

Smoked beef, which must be pickled in brine before being smoked, is prepared in the same way as salt beef. It is served hot or cold.

Sautés of beef. SAUTÉS DE BOEUF – These are prepared from parts of rump and centre filet cut in pieces. Season with salt and pepper. Sauté briskly in butter, keeping underdone on the inside. Remove from the pan as soon as the meat is browned, and keep hot. Dilute the pan juices with wine, add thickened brown veal stock or demi-glace (q.v.), boil down, and strain. Put the pieces of beef back into the pan, pour the sauce over them, and reheat without boiling.

Sautés of filet of beef can be cooked with various garnishes; mushrooms cooked in the same butter as the beef; truffles, cut in thick slices, lightly tossed in the same butter; potatoes, cut in dice and fried in butter, added to the beef after it has been transferred into a timbale; fresh buttered or glazed vegetables.

The following methods are also suitable for preparing sautés of beef; à la crème, the pan juices being diluted with Madeira and moistened with fresh cream; à la bourguignonne, pan juices diluted with red wine, with a garnish of lean rashers of bacon, blanched and fried, and small glazed onions and mushrooms sautéed in butter; à la provençale, the pan juices diluted with white wine and moistened with Tomato fondue (see TOMATO).

Sauté of beef can also be served surrounded with a border of rice pilaf or risotto.

Shoulder of beef. PALERON DE BOEUF – Fleshy part of the shoulder. It is mainly used for making stock, but it can also be braised, as top rump, and made into stews.

Sirloin. ALOYAU DE BOEUF – This cut, which is classed in the first category of beef, is the part of the animal from the hook to the first ribs. It includes the contre-filet or faux-filet (U.S. sirloin) and the beef filet (U.S. tenderloin). It is only called aloyau (sirloin) when it includes these two cuts, which should be cooked together, without boning. It is not found in retail markets in U.S., but a sirloin roast can substitute in the following recipes.

When the sirloin is cooked whole, the top has to be trimmed off slightly and the ligament all along the chine has to be severed in several places. The filet, which is just inside this cut, should have quite a lot of fat left on it; some of the fat surrounding it should be cut off. After having been thus trimmed, the joint is seasoned with salt and pepper and tied with string.

The sirloin, served as a meat remove, is generally roasted. It is cooked either on a spit or in the oven and kept a little underdone inside. It can also be braised, cut into pieces 2 to 3 kg. (4½ to 6½ lb.), in the usual manner (see CULINARY METHODS, Braising).

Sirloin à la d'Albuféra (Carême's recipe). ALOYAU À LA D'ALBUFÉRA – 'Prepare, braise and glaze a sirloin. Pour round it a ragoût made in the following manner: Put some of the pan juices and a little fresh butter into Tortue sauce (see SAUCE), add to it a plateful each of lightly fried calves' sweetbreads, salt beef tongue and mushrooms. Bring the ragoût to the boil once. Garnish with sliced filets of young rabbits à la Orly. Decorate with attelets (q.v.); put on the attelet first a plump double cock's comb, then a slice of rabbit à la Orly, then another cock's comb and a glazed black truffle.'

Braised sirloin. ALOYAU BRAISÉ – Trim a piece of sirloin, cutting across the joint, with the grain of the meat. Lard it with thick lardoons, which have been seasoned with salt, pepper and spices, sprinkled with chopped parsley and steeped for an hour in a sprinkling of brandy with carrots and onions. Tie with string and braise.

Reduce pan juices, skim off fat, strain, and pour over the sirloin before serving.

Braised sirloin with various garnishes. ALOYAU BRAISÉ AVEC GARNITURES DIVERSES – Braise the sirloin as described above. Serve with one of the following garnishes, disposed around the meat or served separately: Bourgeoise, bruxelloise, celery, chipolata sausages, sauerkraut, kohlrabi, Dubarry, duchesse, flamande, jardinière, milanaise, napolitaine, noodles, piémontaise, various potatoes, provençale, Riche-lieu, risotto (see GARNISHES).

Sirloin, left-over pieces braised or roast. DESSERT DE L'ALOYAU – All the recipes given for the preparation of Rib of beef or Contre-filet are applicable to sirloin.

Bones which remain after the meat has been completely used up can be used for making Beef stock (see STOCKS).

Roast sirloin. ALOYAU RÔTI – This can be cooked whole or in pieces. Cut off the top and trim the sirloin, leaving a light layer of fat on the filet, to prevent it from drying during cooking. Tie with string.

Roast it, on a spit or in the oven, by following the instructions given for the cooking of red meats (see CULINARY METHODS). Garnish with watercress and serve its own juices separately.

Roast sirloin à l'anglaise. ALOYAU RÔTI À L'ANGLAISE – Trim and tie the joint, enclose in paste made of flour and hot water, with one quarter of its weight of chopped and salted beef fat added to it. When nearly cooked, remove the crust and brown the joint.

Serve with Yorkshire pudding (q.v.) cooked in the roasting pan, and the joint's own juices.

Roast sirloin with various garnishes. ALOYAU RÔTI – Roast the joint as described above. Serve with one of the garnishes recommended for Braised sirloin. The sirloin, braised or roasted, can also be accompanied by the garnishes recommended for Contre-filet (U.S. sirloin), Rib and Filet of beef (U.S. tenderloin).

BEEF

Sliced beef with various sauces. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF – Left-over poached, braised or roast meat is usually used for this dish. Cut the piece of meat into thin slices, and pour over them one of the following sauces: Bordelaise, bourguignonne, charcutière, chasseur, duxelles, fines herbes, italienne, lyonnaise, Madeira, piquante, poivrade.

Steak – See Beefsteak, Chateaubriand, Contre-filet, Entrecôte, etc.

Ox tail – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

American marmite for beef-tea

Beef-tea – Concentrated consommé or meat juice, obtained by cutting lean beef into small dice and sealing them hermetically in a wide-necked bottle, or in a special screw-top pewter receptacle (American marmite). Put into a pan of boiling water for 40 to 50 minutes.

500 g. (1 lb.) meat will give about 150 g. (4 to 5 oz.) liquid.

Beef-tea has a greater nutritive value than ordinary meat-stock but it is chiefly given, in small doses, to convalescents, for stimulating the secretion of digestive glands and awakening the appetite.

Tongue – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Beef or Ox tongue.

Top rump. PIÈCE DE BOEUF (POINTE DE CULOTTE) – (See Rump of beef.) Top rump is sometimes called pointe de culotte, but is more frequently described on menus as pièce de boeuf.

Braised. Lard a 3-kg. (6½-lb.) piece of top rump with strips of salt pork, well seasoned and sprinkled with brandy. Season the meat with fine salt, pepper and spices, and tie with string.

Marinate for 5 hours in wine with thyme, bay leaf, parsley and a crushed clove of garlic.

Drain and dry the meat with a cloth. Brown in butter or other fat. Fry 2 sliced onions and 2 sliced carrots in butter, put them into a braising pan with 1½ kg. (3¼ lb.) fleshy bones, a calf's knuckle chopped into small pieces and browned in the oven, 2 calf's feet, boned, scalded, dipped in cold water and tied with string, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Lay the meat on this foundation. Add the marinating liquor, cover the pan, and cook a little away from direct heat until the liquor is almost completely reduced. Add slightly thickened veal stock mixed with 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) tomato sauce to cover the meat.

Bring to the boil. Cover the pan and put in a slow oven for about 4 hours. Drain the meat, untie, and glaze it in the oven, basting with its own gravy.

Arrange on a large dish, surround with the garnish recommended, disposed in separate groups. Boil down the braising liquor, skim off the fat, and pour over the meat.

Poached. Tie with string and cook, with the usual garnish, in a large stockpot, as indicated for Pot-au-feu (see SOUPS). Bring to the boil, remove scum, season, and leave to simmer for 4 to 5 hours. Drain the meat, remove string, and serve with its own strained liquor, grated horseradish, and rock salt.

How to lard top rump (Nicolas)

Top rump à la bourgeoise. PIÈCE DE BOEUF À LA BOURGEOISE – Steep lardoons in brandy and spices and insert in a large piece of rump. Season and marinate in 5 dl. (scant pint, 2¼ cups) white wine for 6 hours.

Cook in a braising pan with vegetables and other garnish as indicated for Braising meat (see CULINARY METHODS).

When three-quarters cooked, drain the meat and put it in a casserole with 4 carrots which have been cut into small pieces and two-thirds cooked in stock, and small glazed onions. Add calf's feet, braised with the meat, boned and cut into pieces. Strain the braising liquor, skim off fat, and pour over the meat. Cook with a lid on for 1½ hours.

Drain the meat and serve with the liquor.

Top rump à la bourguignonne. PIÈCE DE BOEUF À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Insert large lardoons into a piece of rump and marinate in brandy for 6 hours. Braise in red wine, following the recipe for Braising meat (see CULINARY METHODS).

When three-quarters cooked, drain the meat and put into a daubière (q.v.) with garnish à la bourguignonne (see GARNISHES) and its braising liquor, strained and with fat skimmed off. Simmer slowly.

Top rump braisé à l'ancienne. PIÈCE DE BOEUF BRAISÉE À L'ANCIENNE – Trim top rump, and tie with string. Braise, and when the meat is still a little firm, drain, put under a press, or in a pan with a weight on top. Leave to cool.

Cut out the centre part, leaving a meat ring about 1½ cm. (¾ inch) thick. Brush with beaten egg and cover with white breadcrumbs mixed with grated Parmesan cheese. Press well to make the breadcrumbs adhere, sprinkle with melted butter, and brown in the oven.

Cut the meat taken out of the centre part into very thin slices, put them into a sauté pan, added thin slices of tongue à l'écarlate (salt beef tongue) and some sliced mushrooms, lightly fried in butter. Moisten with a few tablespoons concentrated braising liquor, strained and with the fat skimmed off. Add ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) Madeira and leave to stew slowly but do not boil.

Place these slices in the meat ring, and serve with the remainder of the sauce.

Top rump à la mode. PIÈCE DE BOEUF À LA MODE – Cook as described in the recipe for Top rump à la bourgeoise, replacing white wine by red.

Top skirt. ONGLET DE BOEUF – This juicy cut can be prepared in any way suitable for Beefsteak. It is also used for carbonades, for extracting meat juice, and for beef sautés. Grill or sauté.

Tournedos (medallions of fillet of beef) – Small slices of fillet of beef, usually fried in butter, or in a mixture of butter and oil, or in oil. Their preparation is similar to that of Noisettes of mutton (see MUTTON). They should be cooked very quickly, to make sure that they remain pink inside.

Tournedos can also be grilled (see Filets mignons, grilled). Before garnishing, they are sometimes placed on grilled or fried croûtons, potato cakes, artichoke hearts, small mounds of rice, etc. Garnishes and sauces for tournedos will be found in alphabetical order under GARNISHES and SAUCE.

Tournedos Abrantès – Season the tournedos with salt and paprika and sauté them in oil. Place them on grilled slices of aubergines. Fry 1 tablespoon chopped onion in the oil, add a salpicon (q.v.) of peeled pimentos and a few tablespoons tomato sauce, and pour over the tournedos. Serve with potatoes which have been cut small and cooked in butter.

Tournedos à l'algérienne – Season the tournedos with salt and paprika and sauté in butter. Place on fried croûtons and surround with Garnish algérienne (see GARNISHES). Dilute the pan juices with white wine to which has been added tomato-flavoured veal stock, and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos archiduc – Sauté the tournedos in butter and place them on potato cakes, garnishing with small croquettes of calves' brains. Toss slivers of truffle in butter and place 2 on each garnished tournedo. Dilute the pan juices with sherry, add fresh cream and veal stock in equal proportions, boil down a little, season with paprika, strain, and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos à la béarnaise – Garnish grilled tournedos with small Château potatoes (see POTATOES). Serve with Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Tournedos à la bordelaise – Place thin slices of poached and drained marrow on grilled tournedos. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve with Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Tournedos chasseur – Sauté the tournedos in butter, and place on a dish. Sauté sliced mushrooms in the same pan, adding a spoonful of chopped shallots. Season, brown for a few minutes, and add a little dry wine and a few tablespoons demi-glace (q.v.) (or thickened veal stock). Boil for 2 minutes. Add 2 teaspoons chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon, and a little butter to the sauce. Stir well and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos Choron – Sauté the tournedos in butter, and place them on fried croûtons. Garnish with artichoke hearts which have been stewed in butter and filled with garden peas or asparagus tips dressed in butter. Pour on each tournedo a ring of thick Choron sauce (see SAUCE). Dilute the pan juices with white wine and thickened veal stock, and pour a few tablespoons over the tournedos.

Tournedos à la Clamart – Sauté the tournedos in butter. Simmer artichoke hearts in butter, and fill with a purée of fresh peas and small new potatoes which have been cooked in butter. Dilute the pan juices with white wine and thickened veal stock, and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos Helder – Sauté the tournedos in butter, place them on fried croûtons, and top each one with a ring of Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE), further decorated with a teaspoon of thick Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Garnish with potatoes fried in butter, Dilute the pan juices with white wine and thickened veal stock, and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos Henri IV – Sauté the tournedos in butter and place on fried croûtons. Top each tournedo with a small artichoke heart filled with thick Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE), decorated with a sliver of truffle. Garnish with small potatoes. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira and demi-glace (q.v.) and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos Marguery

Tournedos Marguery – Sauté the tournedos in butter, and top each with an artichoke heart filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of truffles à la crème. Fill the centre of the dish with morels fried in butter, and place a few cocks' combs and kidneys between the tournedos. Dilute the pan juices with port, add fresh cream, boil down a little, and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos Massena – Grill the tournedos and arrange them on artichokes which have been simmered in butter. Add a slice of poached bone-marrow to each tournedo. Cover with Marrow sauce I (see SAUCE), and put a pinch of chopped parsley on each slice of marrow.

Tournedos with mushrooms – Sauté the tournedos in butter. When half cooked, add small mushrooms which have been lightly fried in butter, and complete cooking. Arrange the tournedos in a crown on a dish, and surround with the mushrooms. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira, moisten with demi-glace (q.v.) or thickened veal stock, and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos à la perigourdine – Sauté the tournedos in butter, place on fried croûtons, and top each with slices of truffle which have been tossed in the cooking butter. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira and demi-glace (q.v.) and pour over the tournedos.

Beer: fermentation room (Heineken) (Adwindig)

Beer: tank cellar (Heineken) (Adwindig)

Tornedos à la portugaise – Sauté the tournedos in butter and oil, and garnish with small stuffed tomatoes and Château potatoes (see POTATOES). Dilute the pan juices with white wine and tomato-flavoured veal stock and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos Rossini – Sauté the tournedos in butter and arrange on croûtons. Put a slice of foie gras tossed in butter on each, and top with slices of truffles, heated in the same butter in which the tournedos were cooked.

Dilute the pan juices with Madeira and demi-glace (q.v.) and pour over the tournedos.

Tournedos Saint-Germain – Sauté the tournedos in butter, place on fried croûtons, and garnish with a thick purée of fresh peas.

Dilute the pan juices with thickened veal stock and pour over the tournedos. Garnish with young glazed carrots and small new potatoes cooked in butter, alternating these vegetables round the dish. Serve with Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Tournedos can be cooked in any way suitable for small cuts of meat, especially as described in recipes for Noisettes of mutton (see MUTTON). Sautéed or grilled tournedos can also be dressed with butter or fresh cream, and served with French beans, kidney beans, peas, asparagus tips. They can also be garnished with fresh vegetables cooked in butter or braised, such as cucumbers, chicory, lettuce, small marrows, aubergines, celeriac, celery, spinach; as well as with potatoes cooked in various ways; and with purées of fresh or dried vegetables, rice pilaf, risotto, pasta products and cereals.

Beef à la vinaigrette. BOEUF À LA VINAIGRETTE – Boiled beef, diced or cut in thin slices, seasoned with salt, pepper, oil, vinegar, onion and chopped parsley. Serve with sliced boiled potatoes.

BEEF-EATERS – Nickname given to the Yeoman of the Guard on duty at the Tower of London. The name may have been derived from the French beaufaitier – one who attends the buffet. It is more likely that these yeomen were called beef-eaters in the seventeenth century, from their receiving a large daily ration of beef.

BEER. BIÈRE – A generic term used for all fermented malt beverages, and includes porter, ale and stout. The beverage is obtained through the action of yeast on an infusion of malted cereals. It is a refreshing and slightly stimulating drink which has some food value.

The invention of fermented beverages from grain is attributed to the Egyptians, who practised the manufacture of alcoholic liquor from grain at least 5,000 years ago. Papyri of the period 1300 B.C. refer to the regulation of beer shops to prevent people over indulging in beer. The Egyptians made several kinds of beer, and they also made a wine from barley which they called xithum.

The Pannonians, who lived along the Danube, made a potent drink out of barley and millet. A similar beverage existed in Illyria. Teutons made a kind of wine from fermented barley and wheat. 'The people of the west,' said Pliny, 'get drunk on mouldy grain.'

The beer made by all these people was not intended to be kept. Hops were later introduced in the brewing of beer in the Netherlands, and in the fifteenth century in England.

In all regions and at all latitudes, beer is brewed from Beer: filtering and refrigeration (Gruber, Melun) (Larousse)

Beer: bottle assembly line (Heineken) (Adwindig)

various cereals: wheat, oats, rice (the Japanese saké), millet, maize (U.S. corn), sorghum, etc; and even from starchy roots (sweet potatoes, cassava), when cereals are not available.

Industrial brewing. In Europe, beer is generally produced by the alcoholic fermentation of a sweetened juice, the wort, flavoured with hops and fermented by a micro-organism, yeast. The wort is the product of the maceration of malt flour or sprouted barley in water at suitably controlled temperatures. Cereal starch is not directly fermentable. The purpose of germinating the barley in the malting process is to breed enzymes in the grain; these induce the transformation of the starch into malt sugar or maltose during the mashing process.

After having been cleaned and picked over, the barley grains are set to soak in tuns, and dispatched to the malt houses. The sprouted barley is then dried in malt kilns, thus arresting germination. This operation is regulated according to the quality of malt desired: pale malt for the manufacture of pale ale; coloured, flavoured malt for the manufacture of brown ale. The malt is then degermed; that is to say, the rootlets or malt combs are removed. These have a high protein and nitrogen content which makes them ideal cattle feed.

During the mashing process the crushed malt is put to macerate in water and the mixture heated to a temperature of 75°C. (167°F.). In the course of this operation, which is done by decoction or infusion, the starch is transformed by enzymes into sugar: this is the process of saccharification. The wort is separated by filtration from the residue, called the draff; this is also used as cattle food. The filtered wort is cooked and hops are added in the proportion of 150 to 500 g. per hectolitre (5 oz. to 18 oz. per 22 gallons, 28 gallons).

The cooled wort is then sent to fermentation tuns. The addition of culture yeast completes the process and the beer is placed in maturing cellars cooled to 0° or 2°C. (32° or 36°F.), where it remains for a variable length of time depending upon its type and quality.

There are two principal types of beer: low fermentation beers and high fermentation beers. They differ in the type of leavening used, in the speed of fermentation and in the method of mashing the wort. In the former, the temperature of fermentation is maintained artificially above 10°C. (50°F.). After a period of six to twelve days most of the leavening is precipitated and forms a deposit at the bottom of the tun, from which comes the term 'low bottom fermentation yeast'. In the second case, the temperature rises to 15° or 20°C. (59° or 68°F.). Fermentation lasts from two to four days, and the yeast gathers at the top of the liquid, hence the term 'top fermentation yeast'.

Top fermentation, which used to be the most universally popular method, is still employed in Britain, Belgium and northern France. Bottom fermentation has developed since the introduction of refrigeration. It makes possible the production of a more consistent quality of beer.

Also manufactured, mostly in Belgium, is a yeastless beer called lambic and faro.

After a period in the maturing cellars the beer is filtered, then conditioned in casks or bottles. This liquid, so easily spoiled, requires the most careful handling. The premises and receptacles must be perfectly clean and regularly sterilised. The beer conditioned in bottles is generally pasteurised – heated to a temperature of 60° to 65°C. (140° to 149°F.).

Bottled beer is charged under pressure with carbonic acid which enables all its freshness and flavour to be preserved, provided that it is consumed immediately it is opened.

Low (bottom) fermentation beers used to be classed in three types: pilsen, a light blend beer; munich, a strong brown beer; vienné, a sweet, amber-coloured beer rapidly decreasing in popularity.

Among the top fermentation beers are the English brews: pale ale, a blend beer; porter and stout, brown beers. There are also special beers: the white beers of Louvain and Berlin, the lambic and faro of Belgium. The various beers belong to these types. The most widely distributed is the pilsen-type of pale ale. It is true, however, to say that there are as many varieties of beer as there are breweries.

The legal densimetric unit of beer is not the same in every country. In France it is the 'Régie' degree. There is a tendency to refer back to the original extract – that is, the extract contained by the wort before fermentation. This density is never expressed in alcoholic degrees, for the alcoholic content of beer depends on its attenuation – on the diminution of the extract in the course of fermentation. The alcohol content of beers made from the original extract fluctuates according to the degree of attenuation.

The chemical composition of beers varies according to the type and density of the original wort. The volume of alcohol it contains ranges from 3 per cent to 6 per cent, sometimes greater, depending upon the beer. English beers in particular can exceed this amount.

The extract is formed by dextrines, the maltose not transformed into alcohol, and by soluble nitrogenous substances. It is present in the proportion of from 4 to 9 per cent. This extract is what gives a sensation of fullness to the palate which the tasters call the mash. It is also due to this extract that the carbonic acid forms the substantial froth or head which indicates careful drawing and skilful brewing.

Beer contains amyloides, protides, alcohol, minerals, vitamins, etc. It is an excellent beverage easily assimilated by the body. The alcohol and the hops' extract have a stimulating effect. It can be used in a considerable number of dishes. A Belgian culinary school strongly recommends the beer dishes conceived by the late chef Raoul Morleghem.

In France, a special governmental body makes a regular check on beers, and severely punishes any infractions of the manufacturing regulations.

Besides the basic elements used in its manufacture (barley, hops, yeast), beer is rich in mineral salts and vitamins (B<sub>1</sub>, B<sub>2</sub>, B<sub>12</sub>, PP). Its consumption must be controlled, or rather drastically reduced, in the case of overweight, gout, and diabetes, as well as in certain types of dyspepsia. It is recommended in diets for increasing weight, and for nursing mothers, so long as it does not have too strong an alcoholic content.

Ale, stout and porter are consumed in much greater quantities in Europe than in U.S.A. Some ale is manufactured in the United States, but most American breweries produce a lager beer which is lighter bodied than the European varieties. There is a large volume of importing and exporting of beers between Europe and the United States.

Barley beer. CERVOISE – Decoction of barley, fermented with yeast – perhaps derived from fermenting grapes, which produces a kind of barley wine rather than a beer. This was a drink of the ancient Gauls.

Ginger beer. BIÈRE DE GINGEMBRE – Boil 2½ kg. (5 lb.) loaf sugar, 75 g. (3 oz., ¾ cup) ground ginger and 14 litres (3 gallons, 3¾ gallons) water for 1 hour. When cold, add the juice and thinly peeled rind of 5 lemons. Add ¼ cup brewer's yeast smeared on a piece of toast. Keep in a wooden tub, covered with a thick cloth, for 2 or 3 days. Strain through a cloth, bottle, and cork securely, tying the corks down.

The beer will be ready for drinking in 4 or 5 days. If a stronger brew is desired, add more ginger.

Home-made beer I. BIÈRE DE MÉNAGE – Boil 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) ordinary barley in 22 litres (4¾ gallons, 6 gallons) water for 2 hours. Add 125 g. (4 oz.) hops and 10 g. (¼ oz.) chicory, and leave to infuse. Strain, and pour into a 30-litre (6½-gallon, 8-gallon) tun. Add 1½ kg. (2½ lb.) sugar which has been dissolved in 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) water. Mix well. Leave the tun uncovered until the following day.

Add 50 g. (2 oz.) brewer's yeast which has been dissolved in a little hot water. Stir with a stick. Leave the tun open for 6 days. Add more liquid every morning and evening to replace that lost through fermentation. On the seventh day, bung the barrel, and on the eighth day, bottle the beer. Boil the corks in water for 5 minutes, and cork the bottles tightly.

Home-made beer II. BIÈRE DE MÉNAGE – Boil 100 g. (4 oz.) hulled barley, 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar and a handful of hops in 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) water; keep boiling for ½ hour. Remove from heat, add 10 g. (¼ oz.) yeast and 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) water.

Leave to ferment for 4 days, then bottle and cork. (A little burnt sugar may be added to this beer to give it colour.)

Malt beer. BIÈRE DE MALT – This beer is obtained by adding concentrated malt extract to the wort and letting it ferment slightly. It has much greater nutritive properties than ordinary beer and is used as a tonic, or for nursing mothers.

Beer soup (German cookery). SOUPE À LA BIÈRE – Dilute 150 g. (5 oz.) light roux (q.v.) made of butter and flour with 1½ litres (2¾ pints, 3¼ pints) light beer. Mix well. Season with salt and pepper and add 2 teaspoons fine sugar and a small pinch powdered cinnamon. Bring to the boil, and simmer for 25 minutes.

Before serving, thicken with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) double cream. Pour over thin slices of toast into a soup tureen while it is still boiling.

BEESTINGS. AMOUILLE – Name commonly given to the first milk of a cow after parturition.

BEESEX. CIRE – Product transformed from the honey absorbed by the working bee, which it uses to construct the cells in honeycombs and in the interior of the hive.

The name cires végétales is given to substances extracted from certain vegetables, in particular from certain palms.

BEET – See BEETROOT.

BEETROOT (U.S. Beet). BETTERAVE – There are many varieties of this plant, some cultivated solely for distillery purposes, some as animal foodstuff and some, as in the case of garden beet, as vegetable.

Among the best varieties of garden beetroot are: red stump-rooted, dark red Massy, large red, early red globe, dark red turnip-rooted Egyptian, red globe summer beet, dark red globe early beet.

Five varieties of beetroot

The Romans used beetroot leaves as a vegetable.

In Russian cookery both the roots and the leaves of beets are used, notably for various soups (see SOUPS AND BROTHS, Beetroot soup à la Russe).

Beetroot in hors-d'œuvre is refreshing and increases the appetite but is not recommended for sufferers of dyspepsia and colitis, since it is inclined to be indigestible and its cellulose fibres can cause flatulence.

For information on sugar beet, see SUGAR.

Beetroot leaves are perfectly edible, and are used in many recipes. In France the roots, boiled or baked, are used as garnish for salads, hors-d'œuvre and various game entrées.

Wash and scrub the beets with a brush. Dry them and bake in the oven. They are ready when they begin to 'give' a little, if pressed with a finger. Keep in a cool place.

Beet à l'anglaise. BETTERAVES À L'ANGLAISE – Choose tender beets, peel, cut into slices and boil in salted water. Drain, dry and serve with fresh butter.

Beetroot à la béchamel. BETTERAVES À LA BÉCHAMEL – Bake 2 beets in the oven, peel, and cut into fairly thick slices. Simmer gently in a sauté pan with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter and a pinch of salt.

To serve, cover with not too thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), to which butter has been added.

Beetroot in cream. BETTERAVES À LA CRÈME – Stew slices of beet in butter. Dilute the pan juices with 4 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant 2 cups) pre-boiled cream. Cook down by half, season, remove from heat, blend in 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, and pour over the beets.

Beetroot for garnish. BETTERAVES POUR GARNITURES – Choose well-shaped, uniformly sized beetroot. Bake them in the oven, allow to become quite cold, and peel. Cut into slices or dice, or shred into a julienne.

Prepared in this way beetroot can be served as a garnish for hors-d'œuvre or for salads.

Beetroot in gravy. BETTERAVES AU JUS – Proceed as described in the recipe for Beetroot in cream, replacing the latter by 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thickened brown veal stock. Boil the beets in the stock for a few moments.

Beetroot à la lyonnaise. BETTERAVES À LA LYONNAISE – Melt 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter in a pan, add 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) finely chopped onion, cook slowly without allowing it to colour, add sliced beetroot and simmer together.

Before serving, moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thickened brown veal stock.

Beetroot à la poitevine. BETTERAVES À LA POITEVINE – Stew sliced beetroot for a few moments in 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE). Add a tablespoon vinegar before serving.

Stuffed beetroot casseroles. CASSENETTES DE BETTERAVES GARNIES – These are served as hors-d'œuvre. Bake large beets in the oven and cut them into thick slices. Trim these to look like casseroles and fill with cold hors-d'œuvre composition: salpicons (q.v.) of hard-boiled eggs, fish, vegetables, dressed with mayonnaise, various purées, etc.

BÉGUINETTE – Name used in some parts of France for the garden warbler.

BEIGNETS – See FRITTERS.

Beignets (petits fours) I – Pound 500 g. (18 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds with 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sugar and 5 egg whites.

Add 2 whole eggs, and flavour with vanilla, orange or lemon peel, or shredded crystallised pineapple. Colour with carmine or green vegetable colouring agent. Fold in 16 stiffly whisked egg whites, and spoon into buttered and floured petits fours moulds. Decorate with pieces of candied orange or pineapple. Sprinkle with icing sugar and bake in a slow oven.

Beignets II – Pound together 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds and 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar. Add one egg white to the mixture and blend in one whole egg. Flavour with vanilla.

Whisk 8 egg whites into a very stiff froth and fold them into the mixture. Spoon into small biscuit moulds, sprinkle with icing sugar, and bake in a slow oven.

BEILCHE – A dish that goes far back in the history of German cuisine.

Trim and remove the fat from a round of beef. Make surface incisions cross-wise all over it (these cuts must not be too deep). Season inside the incisions with salt, pepper and spices.

Place the beef in a large terrine or cast-iron pan. (In Germany, a special silver receptacle used to be employed for this dish.) Cover it with very large floury potatoes. Season these and sprinkle with fat or butter. Place a lid on top, sealing it with a flour-and-water paste. Bake in cinders mixed with glowing charcoal for 4 to 5 hours. Serve in the receptacle in which it has been cooked.

BELGIUM – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.

BELLE-ALLIANCE – An excellent winter dessert pear (December and January). The skin is yellowish on one side and red on the other.

BELLE-ANGEVINE – Variety of large winter pear. Its skin is green at first, then becomes bright yellow, flushed with red and pitted with brown.

This pear, in season in February and March, is better to look at than to eat, and is used mostly for filling decorative baskets of fruit.

BELLE-CHEVREUSE – Variety of peach, with bright red skin. It should be eaten when it is just ripe; when it is too ripe, its flesh becomes 'sleepy'.

BELLE-DE-BERRY – Another name for a variety of pear called poire de curé.

BELLE-ET-BONNE – Pear with mediocre flesh, usually cooked in syrup or red wine.

BELLE-GARDE – Peach which ripens in September and October. Its flesh is on the firm side, and it is mostly used for compotes and in pastry-making.

BELLONE – A variety of very large fig, which grows in Provence. These figs are used for preserves.

BELON – River in Brittany. The oysters of the beds there bear the same name.

BELSHAZZAR. BALTHAZAR – Colloquial usage for copious meals; an allusion to the famous feasts mentioned in the Bible.

BÊLUGA (Huso Huso) – The white sturgeon of the Black Sea, Caspian Sea and other waters. It is the largest of the sturgeon family, producing the best caviare.

BÊNARI – Local name for a variety of ortolan found in the Languedoc district. They are fattened in the same way as the Landes district ortolans. For methods of preparation see ORTOLAN.

BÉNÉDICTIN (Cake) – Cream in a bowl 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) ground almonds, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar, 2 whole eggs and 12 egg yolks. When the mixture is smooth, add 2 more eggs, one by one. Mix well, and add 1 tablespoon Benedictine liqueur; and 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour, and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) potato flour which have been first sieved together.

Butter baking tins, sprinkle with flour, and fill two-thirds full with the cake mixture. Bake in an oven at 180°C. (350°F., Gas Mark 4). Remove cakes from the tins as soon as they are baked and cool on a flat wire rack. Sprinkle each cake with Benedictine, and when this is absorbed, cover the tops and sides of the cakes with thick apricot jam. Decorate the sides with chopped roasted almonds.

Ice the top of the cakes with pale yellow fondant icing which has been flavoured with Benedictine, and when it is set make a pattern of squares on it with mauve fondant icing, using a forcing-bag. Decorate the centre of each square with half a pistachio nut.

The same mixture can be used for small iced petits fours. The cake is made as described above, but is steeped in liqueur and cut into uniform squares before icing. Decorate each petit four with a mauve fondant spiral.

BENEDICTINE

BENEDICTINE. BÉNÉDICTINE – Renowned French liqueur invented by the Benedictine monks at the Abbey of Fécamp, and still produced there.

BÉNÉDICTINE (À LA) – Garnish suitable for poached fish or eggs, composed of a brandade (q.v.) of cod and truffles.

Salt cod à la bénédictine. MORUE À LA BÉNÉDICTINE – The cod is pounded as for brandade, but mixed with potatoes prepared as for purée. (See SALT COD.)

Joseph Berchoux (1765–1839)

BERCHOUX (Joseph) – French poet, born at Saint-Symphorien-de-Lay (Loire) in 1765, who made a name for himself in gastronomic literature with a poem entitled la Gastronomie, published in 1800. Berchoux was not a gastronome, but his poem was valued for its zest and light-hearted, witty tone, and was included in a volume of gastronomic writers of the quality of Grimod de la Reynière and Brillat-Savarin, published by Charpentier in 1829 under the title les Classiques de la table.

Bergamot

BERGAMOT ORANGE. BERGAMOTE – Fruit of the bergamot tree, a kind of orange with a very acid but pleasant taste. The highly scented oil extracted from its rind is used in perfumery, pharmaceuticals and confectionery. Candied bergamot peel is used in pâtisserie.

The bergamots of Nancy are the most sought after in confectionery.

BERGAMOT PEAR. BERGAMOTE – Name applied to several varieties of pear. The bergamote d'automne is the best.

BERLINGOT – A hard, sweet candy variously flavoured, but usually with peppermint. Several regions of France have their own special variety of berlingots; those of Carpentras are renowned.

BERNARD (Émile) – Famous nineteenth century chef employed by Wilhelm I, King of Prussia. In collaboration with Urbain Dubois he wrote one of the best cookery books of the period: Cuisine classique.

BERRICHONNE (À LA) – Garnish used for large cuts of meat and especially for mutton. It is composed of braised cabbage, small onions, chestnuts and rashers of streaky bacon.

BERRY – The richest sheep producing region of France. But lamb and mutton are not the only gastronomic assets of Berry. The province has always had a reputation for bonne chère and produces many other delicacies, solid and liquid.

The cuisine of the Berry region has an agreeable simplicity. There is the fine poultry of Bourges, good ground and winged game, a great variety of freshwater fish, including Vierzon lamprey, and excellent fruit and vegetables.

Argenton-sur-Creuse (French Government Tourist Office)

Culinary specialties – These include soups with truches or tarouffes (potatoes), with reuves and salt pork; sanguine, a kind of pancake made with chicken's blood; various matelotes; citrouillat (pumpkin pie); sauciaux, a peasant pancake; truffiat, home-made potato scone; grignaudes, flat cakes made of pork greaves or cracklings; poulet en barbouille, chicken coated with its own blood; matafan, pancake; potato gouère or gouéron.

Wines – Wine connoisseurs have a high regard for the wines of this region. And, indeed, the very dry white wines of Berry have every right to be acclaimed for their delicacy and bouquet. They all come from the Sauvignon grape.

Then there are the Sancerre wines from the vineyards surrounding the town of that name (immortalised by Balzac) and those in the neighbouring communes, particularly Bué, Verdigny, Champtin, Saint-Satur, Ménétrol, Reigny, Sury-en-Vaux.

The hamlet of Chavignol, near Sancerre, produces famous wine which the poet Hugues Lapaire, a native of Berry, placed far above the rest. Chavignol was also highly esteemed by Balzac and by the 'bonne dame' of Nohant – George Sand.

Gastronomic map of Berry

These wines are perfect with seafood, fish and with the celebrated goat cheese of the region. They are best drunk slightly chilled.

An excellent dry and fruity rosé is also produced in Sancerre from the black Pinot grape. In a good vintage year a very good red wine comes from the same source. Then there is Menetou-Salon, near Sancerre, which gives white wines similar to those already mentioned. Still in the département of Cher, at Quincy, some white wines of almost equally fine quality are produced.

BESAIGRE – Term indicating that a wine is beginning to turn sour.

BESI – Name in the Jura and Franche-Comté for salted and dried cow's meat. It is also a generic term for a variety of pear.

Besi de Caissoy – Winter pear, also called roussette d'Anjou.

Besi d'Héry - Winter pear, which takes its name from a forest in Brittany where it originated.

Besi de la Motte – Autumn pear with white, succulent flesh.

BÊTE ROUSSE – Term used in France to describe a wild boar six months to one year old.

BEURRÉ – Juicy dessert pear. There are many varieties, among which are beurré gris and beurré d'hiver nouveau, which reach maturity in January and February; beurré Capiannont, October and November; beurré Giffard, ripe at the end of July, and beurré Diel.

BEVERAGE. BOISSON – Liquid taken by the mouth to maintain or re-establish normal proportion of water in the organism.

Our bodies contain approximately 70 per cent water, eliminating daily an average of 3 litres ( $5\frac{1}{4}$  pints,  $6\frac{1}{2}$  pints). When the water content is lowered to a considerable degree, the sensation of thirst results. We therefore have to replace the water eliminated, partly by solid foods which contain a considerable proportion of water, partly by liquids.

Numerous beverages have been invented. Apart from milk (q.v.) which is considered a liquid food, beverages are classified in five categories:

1. Pure water and mineral waters (see WATER).

2. Aromatic and stimulating infusions (see INFUSIONS, HERBAL TEAS, COFFEE, CHOCOLATE, MATÉ, TEA) as well as various preparations based on these: Bavarian creams, iced coffee, bishop, etc. (dealt with in alphabetical order).

3. Fruit juices, freshly extracted and not modified by fermentation, which are drunk either in their pure state (grape juice), or mixed with water and sugar (lemonade, orangeade, etc.).

4. Fermented beverages, the principal of which is wine; then beer, cider, perry, hydromel and various fruit liqueurs (dealt with in alphabetical order). There is another large group of fermented or compound beverages, referred to as economical or medicinal, which will be found in this section.

5. Fermented and distilled beverages or mixtures, and preparations based on alcoholic drinks (dealt with in alphabetical order).

Quantity and temperature of beverages – The normal intake of beverages varies according to their nature, the requirements of the organism, outside temperature and state of health. Excessive intake of liquids diminishes appetite and impedes digestion. In some cases it is advisable to increase the intake of liquids in order to improve elimination and cleanse the organism. In others, it is advisable to reduce the intake of liquids.

Should beverages be taken with meals or in between meals? Man alone drinks while eating; other animals separate their solid feeding from absorption of liquids. Half a litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) water drunk on an empty stomach leaves it in less than half an hour. The water would remain in the stomach much longer if accompanied by other food. A meal eaten without drinking is digested quicker and better. It is advisable, therefore, in diets for people suffering from dyspepsia and enteritis to separate the intake of solids and liquids. They should drink an hour or so before the meal, so as to ensure that the stomach is empty in time for solid food. The result will not be the same if the liquid is taken after the meal; the stomach will be full, and the conditions will be the same as when drinking during a meal. With perfectly healthy people, however, provided the amount of drink taken is not so excessive as to impede digestion, the above does not apply.

Too much meat, highly spiced dishes and the excessive use of salt, considerably increases the sensation of thirst. Diet consisting mainly of vegetables, containing little salt, does not provoke thirst so much.

Moderately warm beverages dilate the blood vessels of the stomach, are better absorbed, and quench thirst efficiently. If too cold, they cause the contraction of the abdominal capillary system, and may lead to disorders, at times of a serious nature: colic, precordial anxiety, and even syncope (loss of consciousness from fall of blood pressure). These disorders are more likely to occur if one drinks a quantity of cold liquid quickly. To prevent such occurrences, sportsmen are advised to drink hot beverages after violent exercise. Such accidents occur less frequently with iced drinks, because these can only be swallowed in small sips.

The palate's reaction to various temperatures of beverages varies according to their nature. Below  $6^{\circ}$  to  $8^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $43^{\circ}$  to  $47^{\circ}\text{F}$ .) water gives the impression of being ice-cold; it is pleasantly cool at  $12^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $54^{\circ}\text{F}$ .), it becomes warm and unpleasant at  $16^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $61^{\circ}\text{F}$ .), and at  $25^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $77^{\circ}\text{F}$ .) it is too hot for most people. Aerated water seems colder than ordinary water at  $6^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $43^{\circ}\text{F}$ .) owing to the release of carbon dioxide, and remains cold up to  $10^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $50^{\circ}\text{F}$ .), becoming pleasantly cool up to  $17^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $62^{\circ}\text{F}$ .).

The temperature of milk at the farm immediately after milking varies between  $33^{\circ}$  and  $34^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $91^{\circ}$  and  $93^{\circ}\text{F}$ .). When heated to  $55^{\circ}$  to  $56^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $131^{\circ}$  to  $133^{\circ}\text{F}$ .) it seems very hot and causes perspiration.

Wines. The best temperature for an average white wine is about  $10^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $50^{\circ}\text{F}$ .). Some wines, such as Sauternes, can be chilled (frappés).

Sparkling wines should only be cooled by ice, without adding salt (often an expedient in a restaurant for clients who are in a hurry). These wines lose a great deal of their quality at a temperature below  $6^{\circ}\text{C}$ . ( $43^{\circ}\text{F}$ .). Red wines, especially the great wines of Bordeaux, are served chambrés – brought slowly to room temperature ( $16^{\circ}$  to  $18^{\circ}\text{C}$ .,  $61^{\circ}$  to  $64^{\circ}\text{F}$ .). Burgundy wines are drunk at a cooler temperature, and light white wines are served cold.

BEVERAGES IN DIETETICS. BOISSON EN DIÉTÉTIQUE – Beverages are of supreme importance in dietetics. Water, man's natural beverage, is essential to him. It is possible to go up to forty days, and even more, without eating if one drinks large quantities of water; being deprived of it leads to death.

Generally speaking, a man absorbs in twenty-four hours as many cubic cm. of water as he ingests calories. The need for water is related to the chemical composition of the diet. A protein-rich diet requires a considerable hydrous intake.

FERMENTED BEVERAGES. BOISSONS FERMENTÉES – The manufacture of fermented drinks demands a series of operations, often complicated. Spontaneous fermentation of grapes, apples, oranges, pineapples may have produced a pleasant drink by chance; but chance does not account for the alcoholic fermentation of cows', mares' and she-camels' milk, which does not take place of its own accord. Still more curious, historically speaking, is the transformation of cereal crops into fermented liquor. Small tribes in the far past, having neither fruit nor milk nor cereals at their disposal, managed to produce an intoxicating beverage from the tubers of cassava or sweet potatoes. The use of fermented liquors appears to be a need peculiar to mankind.

Barley cordial. BOISSON D'ORGE – Put 500 g. (18 oz.) ordinary barley and 200 g. (7 oz.) couch grass into 20 litres ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  gallons,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  gallons) water. Boil. Add 100 g. (4 oz.) liquorice cut into small pieces. Leave to get cold, strain, and bottle.

Barley water. EAU D'ORGE – Pour boiling water on a handful of barley and bring to the boil again. Pour off the water and replace with boiling water, this time boiling for 15 to 20 minutes.

If pearl or hulled barley is used, 1 tablespoon per litre (scant quart, generous quart) water, there is no need to boil it in two waters. Cook the barley until the grains split.

Cider type drink. BOISSON FAÇON CIDRE – Blend 11 litres ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  gallons, 3 gallons) water, 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) double beer, 10 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) citric acid and a large glass brandy. Stir well. Decant into bottles and tie down the corks. This drink will be ready for use in 5 to 6 days' time.

Clairot – Boil 6½ kg. (14½ lb.) carrots and 125 g. (4 oz.) liquorice roots in 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) water. Strain, pressing the ingredients so as to extract as much liquid as possible.

Add 250 g. (9 oz.) tartaric acid, 250 g. (9 oz, 2¼ cups) ground ginger, 2 kg. (4½ lb., 9 cups) brown sugar and 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) brandy to the liquid.

Pour into a barrel of 100 litres (22 gallons, 28 gallons) capacity. Fill with water, and leave for 8 days. Bottle and cork, tying down the corks.

Economical drink I. BOISSON ÉCONOMIQUE – To make 60 litres (13 gallons, 16½ gallons), put 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) red or white wine into a tun, add 56 litres (12½ gallons, 15½ gallons) water, 2 kg. (4½ lb., 9 cups) sugar (having dissolved it before putting it into the tun), a small lemon cut into pieces and tied in a muslin bag. Leave for 5 to 6 days, stirring once a day, decant into bottles, storing them upright.

Economical drink II. BOISSON ÉCONOMIQUE – Put into a receptacle 20 litres (4½ gallons, 5½ gallons) water, 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) wine, 1 kg. (2½ lb., 4½ cups) sugar and 1 lemon cut into slices. Leave to macerate for 4 days, stirring once a day. Bottle and tie down the corks. This drink will be ready for use in 4 to 6 days' time.

Elder blossom cordial. BOISSON DE SUREAU – Take a barrel of about 60 litres (13 gallons, 16½ gallons) capacity, enlarge the bung hole and fill the barrel with water. Put the following ingredients into a muslin bag: 2 kg. (4½ lb., 9 cups) refined sugar or, if that is not available, ordinary granulated sugar, 100 g. (4 oz.) dried elder blossom, 50 g. (2 oz.) hops, 1 lemon cut into pieces and the juice squeezed into the water, and 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) vinegar. Leave to infuse for 5 days, stirring with a stick once a day. Leave to rest on the sixth day and bottle on the seventh (decanting into champagne bottles, if possible). Tie down the corks. This beverage will be ready for use in 5 days' time. Keep the bottles upright in the cellar.

Elder and lime cordial. BOISSON DE SUREAU ET TILLEUL – Mix a handful each of elder and lime-tree leaves with 7 litres (6 quarts, 7½ quarts) water. Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar, 2 lemons and 1 glass vinegar.

Leave to macerate for 3 days, stirring once a day. Strain, bottle and tie down corks. This beverage will be ready for use in 5 days' time.

Hippocras. HYPOCRAS – Spiced wine, tonic and stomachic. There are beer hippocras, cider hippocras, red wine hippocras, etc.

The beverage can be flavoured with any stone fruit, oranges, vanilla, wormwood, violets, etc.

Angelica hippocras. HYPOCRAS À L'ANGÉLIQUE – Leave 8 g. (¼ oz.) fresh angelica and a pinch of ground nutmeg to infuse in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) cold wine (red or white) for 2 days. Add sugar and a little brandy to taste. Filter.

Juniper hippocras. HYPOCRAS AU GENIÈVRE – Leave 25 g. (1 oz.) crushed juniper berries to infuse in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) cold wine, mixed with 50 g. (2 oz.) alcohol, for 24 hours. Add a little vanilla and 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) fine sugar, and filter.

Raspberry hippocras. HYPOCRAS À LA FRAMBOISE – Strain 500 g. (18 oz., 3½ cups) freshly gathered raspberries over a bowl, pour in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) red wine, sweeten with sugar, add 50 g. (2 oz.) wine alcohol, and filter.

Hippocras with spices. HYPOCRAS AUX ÉPICES – Infuse 2 teaspoons cinnamon, 15 g. (½ oz., 2 tablespoons) nutmeg, a pinch of mace and 3 cloves (all ground into powder) in 50 g. (2 oz.) alcohol. Leave for 2 days. Add 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) white or red wine, 3 drops amber essence and 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) fine sugar, and stir well. Leave to stand for 24 hours, then filter.

Honey water. EAU MIELLÉE – Dissolve some pure honey in hot water, add a little rum or brandy and a dash of vinegar. It is a refreshing drink but does not keep.

Hop drink. BOISSON AU HOUBLON – Put into a 20-litre (4½-gallon, 5½-gallon) crock 1 kg. (2½ lb., 4½ cups) sugar, 2 handfuls hop flowers, 8 to 10 orange leaves and a glass vinegar. Fill with water. Leave to macerate for 2 days, stirring frequently. Strain through a cloth, decant into bottles, and cork, tying down the corks.

Hydromel (Codex recipe) – Dilute 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) pure white honey in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) warm water, and strain.

Vinous hydromel is made from one part honey and three parts water.

Hygienic and refreshing drink. BOISSON HYGIÉNIQUE ET RAFRAÎCHISSANTE – Mix 50 litres (11 gallons, 14 gallons) water, 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) brandy, ½ litre (scant pint, 2½ cups) coffee and 1 kg. (2½ lb., 4½ cups) brown sugar together. Stir well.

Kefir. KÉFIR – This beverage, made from fermented cows' milk, is used in countries bordering on the Caucasus. The fermented kefir is dried, preserved, and transported in the form of grains called pousse toujours. They multiply indefinitely by fermentation, so that a minute quantity is enough to produce any amount of kefir.

Allow 40 g. (1½ oz.) kefir to 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) water. Put the kefir into a stone jug, dilute with water, sweeten slightly, stir, and leave for 24 hours. Stir again, leave for 4 days, and bottle. Ready for use in 6 or 7 days' time after bottling.

Lemonade – See LEMONADE.

Fizzy lemonade. LIMONADE GAZEUSE – Ordinary lemonade aerated with carbon dioxide by means of aerating apparatus.

Lemonade with pomegranate juice. LIMONADE AU SUC DE GRENADE – Extract the juice from 6 ripe red pomegranates either by pressing in a fruit squeezer or by rubbing through a sieve. Add the juice of 2 lemons and 2 oranges, and the zest of 1 lemon and 1 orange. Add twice as much water as there is juice, sugar to taste, strain through a fine sieve and chill the lemonade.

Liquorice and orange water. EAU DE RÉGLISSE À L'ORANGE – Put 80 to 100 g. (3½ to 4 oz.) well-washed liquorice roots, cut into small pieces, in a pan. Add 10 g. (¼ oz.) orange zest.

Cover with 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) water, boil for 5 minutes, and strain through a cloth.

Oatmeal water. EAU DE GRUAU – Using oatmeal, proceed as described in the recipe for Barley water.

Orangette or Frénette cordial. BOISSON ORANGETTE OU FRÉNETTE – Take 50 g. (2 oz.) ash tree leaves, peel of 10 oranges, 3 kg. (6½ lb., 13 cups) granulated sugar, 50 g. (2 oz.) citric acid, 25 g. (1 oz.) brewer's yeast, burnt sugar.

Boil the ash tree leaves with the orange peel for 25 or 30 minutes in 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) water. Strain through a cloth.

Dissolve 3 kg. (6½ lb., 13 cups) granulated sugar in the above liquid. Add 50 g. (2 oz.) citric acid. Put into a barrel of about 50 litres (11 gallons, 14 gallons) capacity.

Dilute 25 g. (1 oz.) yeast in cold water, mix with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) burnt sugar and add to the barrel. Fill with water, leave to ferment for 8 days, bottle and cork.

Beverage made out of pea-pods. BOISSON DE COSSÉS DE POIS-VERTS – Put pods of green peas into a stockpot and add plenty of water. Boil for 3 hours, and leave to get cold. Add a handful of sage to 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) liquid. Leave to ferment in a barrel. Draw off and bottle.

Golden rhubarb cordial. EAU DORÉE DE RHUBARBE – Tonic and apéritif obtained by macerating a piece of rhubarb in a jug of water.

Rice water. EAU DE RIZ – Proceed as described in the recipe for Barley water.

Three flowers cordial. BOISSON DES TROIS FLEURS – Put 50 g. (2 oz.) hop flowers, 50 g. (2 oz.) violet flowers and 35 g. (1½ oz.) elder blossom into 20 litres (4½ gallons, 5½ gallons) boiling water. Boil for 5 minutes and strain through a fine cloth.

Pour into a barrel with 4½ kg. (10 lb., 20 cups) brown sugar. Add ½ litre (scant pint, 2½ cups) vinegar and ½ g. (½ oz.) brewer's yeast, broken up into pieces. Mix well. Fill the barrel with 80 litres (17½ gallons, 22 gallons) water, stir vigorously, bung the barrel, and leave to ferment.

Wine-flavoured water. EAU VINEUSE – Beverage for convalescents, made by adding a small quantity of Bordeaux or Burgundy wine to water or soda water. A little sugar and lemon essence is sometimes added.

Blackcurrant wine. VIN DE CASSIS – Press ripe blackcurrants in a tub, and leave for 24 hours.

Rub through a sieve or a coarse cloth and separate the juice. Cover the remaining marc with water, equalling in volume the amount of juice extracted, and leave to macerate for 12 hours. Press through the sieve again. Mix the two juices, and add 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) sugar per litre (scant quart, generous quart) liquid.

Pour the liquid into a barrel or some other receptacle and leave to ferment. When fermentation begins to be established, bung the barrel, leaving an opening the size of a vent-peg. After a few days, remove bung, to allow carbon dioxide to escape. Repeat this operation from time to time until there is no longer any risk of too great an expansion of gas, then bung the barrel. Draw off at the end of six months.

Cherry wine. VIN DE CERISES – Proceed as described in the recipe for Blackcurrant wine.

Fig wine or figuette. VIN DE FIGUES (FIGUETTE) – Put 1 kg. (2½ lb.) dried figs and 10 juniper berries into a small barrel. Add 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) water and leave to macerate for 6 to 8 days. Strain the liquid, bottle, and leave for 4 or 5 days before using.

Ginger wine. VIN DE GINGEMBRE – Put 9 kg. (20 lb., 40 cups) sugar into 40 litres (8½ gallons, 11 gallons) boiling water. When the sugar dissolves, add 300 g. (11 oz., 2½ cups) pounded ginger roots. Boil for a quarter of an hour, and remove from heat.

When the liquid is nearly cold, add 250 g. (9 oz.) brewer's yeast. Leave to ferment in a barrel. Draw off after fermentation, and when the wine is quite clear, decant into bottles.

Juniper wine. VIN DE GENIÈVRE – Mix 5 kg. (11 lb.) honey (or brown sugar) with 2 kg. (4½ lb.) brewer's yeast and 50 kg. (110 lb.) crushed juniper berries.

Add 100 litres (22 gallons, 28 gallons) hot water and a little crushed coriander. Pour this mixture into a cask and stir vigorously for 5 minutes. Cover with boards, sealing the cask hermetically if possible.

Leave to ferment in a place with a temperature of 25°C. (77°F.). When fermentation is complete and the wine has become clear, draw off into a keg and put in a place with a temperature not exceeding 15°C. (59°F.). At the end of one month, draw off again and keep in a cellar in a full, well-bunged keg. After one year, decant into bottles.

Juniper wine (genevrette). VIN DE GENIÈVRE (GENEVRETTE) – Put 50 litres (11 gallons, 14 gallons) juniper berries into 100 litres (22 gallons, 28 gallons) water, add 2 handfuls of worm-wood and leave to ferment in a cool place for one month. Filter and bottle.

The supply of this beverage may be prolonged by leaving the berries in the receptacle and adding water to replace the liquid drawn off. This is a bitter, aromatic, stimulating beverage.

Raisin wine. VIN DE RAISINS SECS – Put 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) raisins, 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) granulated sugar and ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) wine vinegar into a small barrel. Add water. Leave to macerate for 8 days, then bottle. The wine will be ready for use 8 days after bottling in the winter, and after 4 days in the summer.

BÉZIERS – Town of the Hérault département which produces a great deal of red table wines. The culinary specialities of the region are the same as those found in all towns of Languedoc. They include escargots à la lodévoise; cabassols; manouls; small Béziers pâtés called pâtés des Pézenas; flaunes or flauzonnes de Lodève; fouaces aux fritons; and oreillettes.

BEZIEU SOEP or REDCURRANT SOUP (Belgian cookery). SOUPE AUX GROISELLES – Cook vermicelli in water; when ready, add salt and potato flour diluted in a little cold water. Add redcurrant juice and sugar.

BIARROTTE (À LA) – Garnish for small cuts of meat composed of cèpes and galettes; the latter, prepared as for Duchesse potatoes (see POTATOES), form the base.

BICARBONATE OF SODA. BICARBONATE DE SOUDE – In medicine, this is used as an alkali and antacid. In cooking, it is added to soften the water used for certain vegetables. It is sometimes added to the water for the carrots prepared à la Vichy.

BICHQUES – Very small fish. (See CURRY, Bichique curry.)

BIGARADE SAUCE – See SAUCE.

BIGARREAU – Variety of hard-fleshed cherry, red and white. (See CHERRY.)

BIGNON (Louis) – Nineteenth century restaurateur. After a good training and much experience in well-known Paris restaurants, he took over the management of Café Riche, which soon became famous; sole à la Riche and woodcock à la Riche were among many noted specialities. The restaurant was frequented by most of the men of letters of the period.

Bignon was a remarkably intelligent man who took an interest in viniculture and agriculture. He received the highest awards at world exhibitions of agricultural produce, and became the first French restaurateur to be awarded the Legion of Honour, in 1867.

BIGOS (Polish cookery) – Wash 4 kg. (9 lb.) sauerkraut in several waters before boiling it in water. Drain, and add 2 pounded onions and 4 peeled and diced cooking apples. Mix well. Put in a casserole in layers with cooked meats such as venison, chicken, mutton, duck, ham, sausages or pickled pork. Add butter to each layer, pour in a little stock, and cook in a slow oven for 2 hours.

About 25 minutes before serving, add a butter-and-flour roux (q.v.) made with a little of the liquor in which the sauerkraut was cooked, and serve in this sauce.

BIJANE – Cold soup popular in the Anjou region made by crumbling bread into sweetened red wine.

BILBERRY. MYRTILLE – Small plant common in upland woods (naturalised in U.S.A.). The tart purple berries can be stewed, and they are also used in jam, syrups and liqueurs.

BILE – Thick, greenish-yellow, bitter fluid secreted by the liver. It is called 'gall' in cookery and in industry.

BIRD. OISEAU – Many wild and domestic birds are edible.

Biscuits (Nicolas)

In classic French cookery the term covers various small birds of the sparrow type, which are generally roasted or cooked on skewers like larks.

BIRD'S-FOOT TREFOIL (U.S. Lotus). LOTIER – Leguminous plant which grows abundantly in meadows, along the highways, and in fields of cereal crops. The leaves, stems and flowers have a pleasant fragrance, especially when dried, and can be used to flavour marinades.

In some districts the leaves and flowers of this plant are used to impart the flavour of wild rabbit to hutch rabbits when cooked. The rabbit is stuffed with a handful of bird's-foot trefoil after being drawn.

BISCOTTE – See RUSK.

BISCUIT – Term applied to many kinds of biscuit, and, in French, to an iced sweet, made of ice cream mixture, cut to look like biscuits (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES, Neapolitan ice cream).

Army biscuits. BISCUITS DE GUERRE – These used to be made of a fairly substantial paste (6 parts flour to 1 part water), baked for 20 to 25 minutes, and cooled off until completely dry. Sometimes a little leaven was added to the paste, and invariably some seasoning to give the dough some taste, as it had no salt in it. The biscuits were difficult to chew, and were not much good in soups, as they did not absorb enough liquid when soaked.

After 1894, as a result of the work of the Army food chemist, Balland, biscuit was replaced by army bread, which was porous and absorbant, though still not popular with soldiers.

SWEET BISCUITS (U.S. cookies). BISCUITS DE PÂTISSERIE –

Apricot biscuits (petits fours). BISCUITS À L'ABRICOT – Cream 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) fine sugar and 16 egg yolks in a bowl. Add 625 g. (1 lb. 6 oz., 5½ cups) sieved flour. Whisk the egg whites into a stiff froth, and fold carefully into the paste.

Half-fill greased and flour-sprinkled baking tins with the biscuit mixture, piped through a forcing-bag. Add a little apricot jam, and cover with the remaining mixture, sifting fine sugar over the top. Bake in a moderate oven for 20 minutes. When cool, store in airtight tins.

Chocolate soufflé biscuits (cookies). BISCUITS SOUFFLÉS AU CHOCOLAT – Whisk 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) fine sugar and 10 egg whites over low heat. When the mixture is firm, add 300 g. (11 oz., 11 squares) softened chocolate which has been blended with 2 egg whites.

Pipe through a forcing-bag onto a buttered baking sheet which has been dusted with flour, or spoon the mixture into small paper cases. Bake in a moderate oven (180°C., 350°F., Gas Mark 4).

Genoa biscuits (cookies). BISCUITS GENEVOIS – Mix together 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) fine sugar, 3 egg yolks, 1 whole egg, a little grated lemon rind and a pinch of salt. Stir with a wooden spoon for 2 minutes. Add 50 g. (2 oz., ¾ cup) melted butter, 35 g. (1½ oz., 6 tablespoons) ground almonds, 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour, and mix. Lastly fold in 3 egg whites whisked to a stiff froth.

Pour the mixture into finger-shaped moulds which have been buttered and dusted with a mixture of fine sugar and cornflour (cornstarch). Bake in a very slow oven. Dry the biscuits on a sieve and store in airtight tins.

Ginger biscuits (cookies). BISCUITS AU GINGEMBRE – Mix 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) fine sugar, 2 teaspoons ground ginger and 4 egg yolks, stirring with a wooden spoon until quite smooth. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) rice flour and 25 g. (1 oz., 3 tablespoons) potato flour and stir well. Fold in 4 egg whites whisked to a stiff froth.

Pipe the mixture onto greased paper through a forcing-bag, shaping it into small sticks. Sprinkle with sugar, and place on a baking sheet. Bake in the oven at 180°C. (350°F., Gas Mark 4) for 8 to 10 minutes. Dry on a rack, and store in an airtight tin.

Lemon biscuits (cookies). BISCUITS AU CITRON – Cream 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fine sugar with 2 egg yolks until the mixture is firm. Add grated rind of 1 lemon, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) sifted flour, 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 4 teaspoons) potato flour, 1 teaspoon ground almonds, and 2 egg whites whisked to a stiff froth.

Pipe through a forcing-bag into biscuits on wafer paper. Sprinkle with powdered sugar, and bake at 160°C. (325°F., Gas Mark 3). Dry and store the biscuits as in preceding recipes.

Italian biscuits. BISCUITS À L'ITALIENNE – Cream 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar with 10 egg yolks until smooth. Whisk the egg whites to a stiff froth and fold into the mixture. Add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) potato flour and 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sifted flour. Mix well.

Butter biscuit baking tins, using very hot melted butter, sprinkle the entire surface with icing sugar, and fill the tins with the biscuit mixture. Sprinkle with more icing sugar and bake in a hot oven.

Turn out the biscuits, ice with Curaçao-flavoured icing, and decorate the tops with candied orange peel.

Small unleavened biscuits. PETITS PAINS AZYME – Mix 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour and 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar. Spread on the table, make a well in the centre, put in a pinch of salt dissolved in water and 8 eggs. Mix to a firm dough, adding a little water of necessity.

Leave the dough in a cool place. Roll out and cut into circles with a pastry-cutter. Place on a lightly buttered baking sheet, prick the biscuits all over, and bake in a slow oven.

BISHOP (Mulled wine). BISCHOF – Hot beverage popular in northern European countries.

The bischof (the word can also be spelt bishop in this connection) is heated wine spiced with orange and lemon peel, cinnamon, cloves, and sometimes star anise. It is served mostly at evening parties.

Iced bishop. BISCHOF GLACÉ – Pour a bottle of Champagne and 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) lime-blossom tea into a bowl, add an orange and half a lemon cut into thin slices, and a sufficient quantity of heavy (32°) sugar syrup to bring the mixture to a light syrup consistency (18°). Leave in a cool place for 1 hour. Strain through a fine strainer.

Ice as for a granité. Add 4 small glasses fine Champagne brandy and serve in punch glasses.

Rhine wine bishop. BISCHOF AU VIN DU RHIN – Melt 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar and mix with grated rind of 1 orange and 1 lemon, 2 cloves and a small stick of cinnamon dissolved in 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) water. Cook for 5 minutes.

Add 1 bottle of Rhine wine. Heat until a light white foam is formed on the surface. Sieve through a fine strainer. Serve in a jug or in a large silver punch bowl.

Bishop can also be prepared with Champagne or any other wine. To make it more stimulating, a little Madeira, sherry or Marsala is sometimes added.

BISON – Genus of wild cattle, allied to the ox and yak. It differs from the ox by its shorter, wider skull, the way in which the line of the back falls away from the rounded humped shoulders, by the thick woolly coat covering head and forequarters, and by its beard.

Bison

The American is different from the European bison, which is found in some parts of Russia.

All methods of preparation indicated for beef are applicable to bison, but only after marinating the meat for several hours.

BISQUE – Name of a preparation in the form of a purée, more particularly a purée of crayfish, or other shellfish, served as a thick soup.

Bisque soups in the eighteenth century were made of poultry and game without any shellfish, and were not purées, but a presentation of boiled poultry or game, sometimes served with a garnish of cocks' combs and kidneys.

In 1758, in the last edition of Dons de Comus, there is a recipe for a quail soup with crayfish, which really was a bisque soup, made of quails, topped with crayfish purée. Bisque, therefore, probably meant a soup, with some kind of meat and breadcrumbs.

What could have given the crayfish purée the name of bisque soup was the addition of crayfish meat to various soups, which were then called bisques.

Bisques, whether made of shellfish, poultry or game, are considered high style preparations, and have always been excessively spiced.

For Crab bisque, Crayfish bisque, Lobster bisque and Spiny lobster bisque, see SOUP.

BISTORT. BISTORTE – A farinaceous plant, the roots of which are twisted in an S-shape, baked on hot coals and eaten by the Samoyeds instead of bread.

The tender leaves of this plant, found in some high Alpine regions, are eaten like spinach.

BITOK (Russian cookery). BITOKE – Bitok can be made of any kind of meat; beef, mutton, pork, veal, chicken, rabbit, etc.

Mince the meat, add bread soaked in milk and finely chopped onion (either raw or lightly fried), season, and put through a mincer again to ensure perfect smoothness. Shape into cakes about 4 cm. (1½ inches) in diameter, dredge in flour, fry in butter, cover with sour cream, and simmer for 5 to 7 minutes.

BITTER. AMER – Having an unpleasant, wormwood taste. Among the bitter plants which are used for making infusions or decoctions are: wormwood, camomile, endive, fumitory, gentian, germander, hops, lichen, wild pansy, lesser centaury, quassia amara (bitter ash), cinchona, rhubarb.

According to Foussagrives, infusions or liqueurs made of bitter plants may be divided into five classes (i) purgative bitters, based on rhubarb, aloes, etc.; (ii) nauseous bitters, based on camomile; (iii) astringent bitters, which, with the bitter substance content of tannin, include cinchona, knapweed, bark of chestnut tree, etc.; (iv) stimulating bitters (apéritifs) based on wormwood, peel of bitter oranges, gentian, germander, hops, etc.; (v) convulsing or toxic bitters belong in the province of medicine.

BITTER ASH. BOIS-AMER – Quassia amara (q.v.), used in the preparation of apéritifs.

BLACKBIRD. MERLE – Bird of the thrush family, with black plumage and yellow beak. Its flesh is aromatic in flavour and slightly bitter, and is most fragrant in autumn. Corsican blackbirds enjoy a great reputation. (See THRUSH.)

BLACK CUMIN. NIGELLE – Plant of the Ranunculus family, the pungent seeds of which are used as a spice in India and the Mediterranean region. The seeds can be used instead of pepper.

BLACKCURRANT. CASSIS – Fruit of the blackcurrant bush used to make a liqueur (see RATAFIA) and preserves.

BLADDER. VESSIE – Membraneous bag in animals, used after butchering in charcuterie to prepare certain dishes, for example Rouen duckling en chemise (see DUCK).

BLAISOIIS or BLÉSOIS – Region of France bordering on the Loire.

Culinary specialties – The specialties of Blaisois are similar to those of nearby Orléanais.

Blais rillettes and rillons are well known for their quality. All the charcuterie of this region is excellent, particularly the sauzages, andouillettes and black (blood) puddings (see PORK); game pâtés; lark pâtés which are made in the same shape as the famous Pithiviers pâtés; and Chartres pâté, made of partridges.

Also excellent are the pike, carp and other freshwater fish, prepared en matelote (q.v.), stewed, or au beurre blanc (see PIKE). Meat in Blaisois is of good quality. The following specialties are esteemed by gastronomes: lapereau à la solognote (young rabbit cooked in the Sologne style); gâteau Pithiviers (see PITHIVIERS); tarte des demoiselles Tatin (see TART); Lamotte-Beuvron (tart) and Orléans cotignacs (q.v.).

Wines – Wines of Blaisois and Orléanais include Saint-Jean-de-Braye, Meung and Beaugency among the Orléans wines, and Côte-des-Grouets of the Blois wines.

These wines often suffer from a lack of sun and tend to set one's teeth on edge, but they go perfectly with the local dishes of the region.

BLANC – A French culinary term usually used to describe a court-bouillon made from a mixture of water and flour in which various substances, such as white offal and certain vegetables, are cooked. A court-bouillon in which cultivated mushrooms are cooked is also called blanc (see COURT-BOUILLON).

This name is also applied to white stock, based either on veal or chicken (see STOCKS, White Stocks).

The term blanc is used to define breast of chicken or other poultry which are described on menus as blancs de volaille, etc.

BLANC DE BLANCS – Name given to Champagne obtained from the Pinot-Chardonnay white grapes, as distinct from the Champagne obtained from black grapes, the 'Blanc de Noirs'.

BLANCHING. BLANCHIR – Operation consisting of boiling various ingredients in salted water either to harden them, or, as in the case of some green vegetables, to cook them.

Some ingredients, previously soaked in cold water, are blanched in water (gradually brought to the boil), as in the case of calves' heads and trotters, calves' and lambs' sweetbreads, etc., both to cleanse them and to harden the skin. Bacon (pork) fat, generally cut in large dice, is blanched to extract surplus salt, before frying it. Certain green vegetables, such as green cabbages, onions, etc., are blanched to reduce their pungency. Other vegetables and fruit, such as tomatoes, peaches, etc., are blanched to render them easier to peel.

BLANCHING (Nuts). MONDER – To remove skin, husk, etc. of almonds, walnuts, pistachios and hazelnuts.

Pour boiling water over the shelled nuts to soften the skin.

BLANCMANGE. BLANC-MANGER – 'These delicious sweets,' said Carême in his Traité des entremets de douceur, 'are greatly esteemed by gastronomes, but, to be enjoyed, they must be extremely smooth and very white. Given these two qualities (so rarely found together), they will always be preferred to other creams, even to transparent jellies. This is because almond is very nourishing and contains creamy, balsamic properties which are just right for sweetening the bitterness of humours.'

Blancmange (Carême's recipe). BLANC-MANGER – 'Blanch 450 g. (1 lb., generous 3 cups) sweet almonds and about twenty bitter almonds. Leave them to soak in a bowl of cold water, which renders them singularly white. Drain on a sieve and rub in a napkin. Pound in a mortar, moistening them, little by little, with  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon water at a time, to prevent them turning into oil. When they are pounded into a fine paste, put into a bowl and dilute with 5 glasses filtered water, added a little at a time. Spread a clean napkin over a dish, pour the blancmange into it and, with 2 people twisting the napkin, press out all the almond milk. Put in 350 g. (12 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) granulated sugar and rub through a fine sieve. Strain through a napkin once again, add 30 g. (1 oz. plus 4 grains) clarified isinglass a little warmer than tepid. Blend with the blancmange. Pour into a mould and place in a container with crushed ice.

'To make rum blancmange, add  $\frac{1}{2}$  glass rum to the mixture described above. To make a maraschino blancmange, add  $\frac{1}{2}$  glass maraschino.

'To serve this sweet in small pots, prepare two-thirds of the quantity given in the preceding recipe; you will, however, need a little less isinglass, as blancmange served in small pots has to be more delicate than when it is to be turned out.

Blancmanges can be flavoured with lemon, vanilla, coffee, chocolate, pistachio nuts, hazelnuts and strawberries. Whipped cream can also be incorporated.'

Blancmange (modern method). BLANC-MANGER – Blanch and skin 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sweet almonds and 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 5 teaspoons) bitter almonds and pound in a mortar with a little water. Dilute with  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) cold water. Turn this paste on to a coarse linen cloth over a bowl and squeeze out all the almond milk. Return the paste to the mortar and pound again, adding enough fresh water to extract  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) almond milk.

Heat 200 g. (7 oz.) lump sugar, 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) softened gelatine and the almond milk, and stir with a wooden spoon until it boils. Strain and leave to cool. When it is tepid, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum or kirsch.

When the mixture is cold, pour into a bavarois mould greased with sweet almond oil, and place on crushed ice. The blancmange can be turned out and served after an hour.

BLANQUET – French pear which ripens in July or August.

BLANQUETTE

There are two kinds: the large and the small blanquet. They are mediocre in flavour, and used mostly for compotes.

BLANQUETTE – White ragoût, based on lamb, veal or chicken meat, bound with egg yolks and cream, and accompanied by a garnish of small onions cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.), and mushrooms. Other ingredients are sometimes added to the garnish.

Cut the meat into pieces. Cover with white stock or water, season and bring to the boil. Remove scum.

Add an onion studded with a clove, a carrot and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Simmer gently for 45 minutes for lamb or chicken, and 1½ hours for veal. Drain the pieces and return them to the pan with small onions and mushrooms which have been cooked in white court-bouillon (q.v.).

Prepare a velouté (q.v.) by thickening the liquor with white roux (q.v.) and binding with egg yolks and cream. Add a little lemon juice, sprinkle with chopped parsley, and garnish with heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter.

Blanquette à la ménagère, also called Fricassée – Fry pieces of meat, as described above, in butter, without allowing them to brown. Sprinkle with flour, stir, moisten with white stock or water, bring to the boil, season, and add an onion stuck with a clove, a carrot and a bouquet garni (q.v.).

Bind with egg yolks and cream, as described in the recipe for Blanquette. For further recipes for various blanquettes, see LAMB, VEAL, CHICKEN.

BLANQUETTE DE LIMOUX – Sparkling white wine made by the 'natural' method; the sparkle is derived from gas generated by natural fermentation. A second fermentation takes place in the bottle without the addition of sugar. (In other words, through the transformation of natural grape sugar remaining in the parent wine after the first fermentation.) It is produced from the Mauzac and Clairette grapes, and gets its name from the commune of Limoux in the Aude.

BLEAK (Ablet). ABLETTIE – Small European freshwater fish, with white, rather insipid flesh. It is used mostly for frying.

BLENDER – An electrically operated appliance used in restaurant and home kitchens for chopping and puréeing small quantities of foodstuffs in the preparation of soups, sauces, soufflés, baby food and other dishes. It is also used to emulsify eggs for such sauces as Hollandaise, Béarnaise, etc.

BLENNY. BLENNIE CAGNETTE – A genus of European freshwater fish. All the other members of the blenny family are sea fish. A characteristic which is common to all blennies is the absence of scales, the body being covered with a layer of viscous mucus of exceptional thickness. It varies in size from 10 to 15 cm. (4 to 6 inches) and is fawn-coloured, speckled with brown, with brown transversal strips along the back.

The blenny abounds in the waterways of the Hérault département. It is particularly plentiful in Agde, where it is called lièvre (hare), because the shape of its head resembles that of the hare. It is also found in the lake of Bourget and the fishermen of this region call it chasseur (hunter). In other regions it is known as havecca.

The blenny's flesh, white and good in flavour, is mainly fried, but can also be used as an ingredient for matelotes (q.v.).

BLETTE – Name given in some parts of France to white beet or chard.

BLEU (To cook au bleu) – Method applied to freshwater fish, mainly to trout. This consists of plunging the fish into a boiling court-bouillon (q.v.), generally a mixture of water and vinegar, seasoned with salt and sometimes spiced with thyme and bay leaf.

Cooked in this way, the skin of the fish, especially that of trout, takes on a slightly bluish colour. To accentuate the blueing, the fish can be sprinkled with pure vinegar, before immersing it in court-bouillon.

All fish cooked au bleu are generally served with melted butter, handed separately; or with Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE), or any other white sauce specially recommended for poached fish.

BLEU D'Auvergne – Cheese that is still sometimes called Bleu de Salers, eaten from November to May.

BLEU DE BASSILLAC – Limousin cheese eaten from November to May.

BLEU DE BRESSE – Round blue cheese from the co-operative of Servaz in the Ain.

BLIND (To bake). CUIRE À BLANC – Flan (pie shell) baked 'blind', i.e. empty. Some tart and flan cases are baked in the oven, and filled with dried vegetables, which are removed once the cases are cooked. They are then filled with the ingredients indicated in the recipe.

Cuire au blanc also describes the cooking of certain substances (mostly white offal or variety meats) in a special court-bouillon (q.v.).

BLINI (Russian cookery) – Blini are pancakes which have been made in Russia from time immemorial, especially during Shrovetide. Recipes for blini and various fillings are given under HORS-D'ŒUVRE.

A. Petit, in his Traité de la cuisine russe, says that during Shrovetide, 'from the humblest cottage to the richest palace, they all have their blini, twice a day, the whole of that week'.

Batter for blini. PÂTE À BLINIS – Prepare a light batter of 20 g. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  oz., 1 cake) yeast diluted in  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint, 2½ cups) warm milk and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sieved flour. Leave to ferment in a warm place for 2 hours.

Add 250 g. (9 oz., 2¼ cups) sieved flour, 4 egg yolks, 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, 1¼ cups) warm milk and a pinch of salt. Mix thoroughly. Add 4 egg whites whisked to a stiff froth, and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) whipped cream. Leave the batter to rise for 35 minutes. Make small pancakes, frying them in butter.

BLOATER. CRAQUELOT – Slightly salted, smoked herring served mainly in England for breakfast and for high tea.

The bloaters are grilled on a low fire and served with melted butter or Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

BLOCK. BILOT – Thick, short piece of tree trunk, placed on three legs, which serves for chopping-up meat.

A butcher's block is usually a wooden table enclosed in a wooden frame.

BLOND DE VEAU – Old French culinary term which describes white veal stock. Carême, in his Traité des sauces, uses this term.

White veal stock is used in the preparation of some brown sauces (see SAUCE) or for glazing certain substances.

BLOND DE VOLAILLE – A synonym of fond blond, clear or thickened chicken stock (see SAUCE, Brown sauces).

Rich veal or chicken stocks are used for braising certain vegetables, such as celery, artichoke hearts, lettuces, etc.

BLONDIR – The operation of lightly cooking any substance in butter, oil, or other fat.

The term faire blondir also describes the cooking of a flour and butter mixture which constitutes a light roux (q.v.).

BLOOD. SANG – The blood of butchered animals has no part in nutrition but it has a number of industrial uses (the treatment of wines, clarification of sugar, the manufacture of coal products, fertilisers, etc.).

The blood of the pig (often mixed with other blood) is used to make boudin (black pudding), and the blood of rabbit, hare and chicken is used to thicken the dishes called civets, which – after the blood has been added – must not be heated above 70°C. (158°F.), the temperature above which blood coagulates and the mixture curdles.

Blood soups are made in Sweden (svartsoppe) and Poland (tchernina).

BLOOD PUDDING – See PORK.

BLUE GAZELLE. GAZELLE BLEUE – Edible goat found mainly at the Cape. Its meat, which is very delicate, is cooked like roebuck.

BOAR – See WILD BOAR.

BOCAL – Wide-mouthed, short-necked glass bottle or jar for bottling or pickling vegetables and fruit (gherkins, capers, small onions, mixed vegetables, cherries, small melons, etc.) or for preserving fruit in brandy.

BODY (To have). CORPS (AVOIR DU) – One says a wine has body when it produces a sensation of plenitude in the mouth resulting from a harmonious combination of strength and flavour.

BOILING. ÉBULLITION – The movement of a liquid in the process of vaporisation. Boiling takes place when, as a result of heating, the steam pressure is at least equal to that of the liquid.

While a liquid is boiling its temperature remains constant. The boiling point of water has been taken as the norm for comparative purposes, and stands at 100°C. (212°F.). This temperature decreases by about a third of a degree per 100 m. (108 yards) of altitude.

BOIS DE SAINTE-LUCIE – Variety of fragrant cherry tree.

BOLÉE – Receptacle, usually brown earthenware, used for drinking cider in Normandy and Brittany. This term also applies to the cider contained in the receptacle. Thus it is said: 'Boire une bolée de cidre' – 'To drink a bowlful of cider'.

BOLETUS (Cèpe). BOLET – Genus of fungi of which about 70 species are known in France. Unless one is an expert, the only boletus mushroom which can safely be gathered is the boletus edulis, known in France as cèpe de Bordeaux and tête de nègre when it is young. It has a bronze-coloured cap, white underneath, on a white and swollen stem. As it grows, the cap becomes a lighter brown, begins to overlap the stem, the underneath becomes yellow. Later the tubes turn green, and can be removed like a choke of a cooked artichoke.

This mushroom is found in woods, under oak, chestnut and beech trees and sometimes under pines. In the Paris region it appears in April and is sometimes very plentiful in the autumn. The underneath may be white, yellow or greenish but never red. The stem is white, yellow or brown; it should never have any red spots. The flesh which is exposed to the air remains white and never becomes green; its taste is very pleasant, never bitter.

Very old cèpes, with green tubes and damaged by slugs, should be avoided.

The cèpe is a highly prized mushroom; it is, however, a little indigestible. According to some authorities, its nutritive value, like that of other fungi, is insignificant. (See MUSHROOMS.)

Bombe moulds:

BOMBE (Ice cream). BOMBE GLACÉE – Ice cream made in a spherical mould, hence its name. In modern cookery it is made in a conical mould. (See ICE CREAMS, Bombes.)

BONBON (Sweet, candy) – Sweets could not have been made in Europe until sugar was brought from the Orient by the returning crusaders in the thirteenth century. It is known that the first experiments with sugar-cane juices were carried out by the Jews in Sicily about A.D. 1230. Before that time, bonbons were made in France with fruit juice and honey, flavoured with amber or cinnamon.

The art of making sweets spread very rapidly. In order to appeal to the ladies at court, as well as to the great gentlemen who also had a liking for sweetmeats, confectionery methods were improved and the variety of sweets increased. During the brilliant epoch of the Renaissance this art was carried even further. All the great gentlemen carried bonbonnières of sweets, which they offered to the ladies. These bonbonnières were often works of art, some of them set with precious stones.

The making of confectionery continued, and a great variety of sweets is available today.

Sweets can be classified in four principal groups as follows: dragées (sugar-coated almonds) and pralines; bonbons fondants; boiled sweets and pastilles.

Other confectionery preparations, now factory-made, are also classed in the category of bonbons, such as caramels, butterscotch, toffee, fruit paste, a certain number of marzipan preparations, crystallised fruit and walnuts, almonds and hazelnuts dipped into sugar cooked to crack degree.

BON-CHRÉTIEN – A pear of which two varieties are known; one ripens in summer, the other in winter.

The flesh of this pear is quite sweet but a little gritty. It is usually eaten cooked.

BONDON – Type of cheese manufactured in Neufchâtel in Normandy. (See CHEESE.)

BONE, os – Any of the separate parts of a vertebrate skeleton, forming its framework. Bones are composed of a cartilaginous substance impregnated with calcareous salts. By boiling in water, especially under pressure, they produce gelatine. Bones, added to stock, give it a gelatinous consistency.

Uses of bones and meat parings – After prolonged cooking, bones retain a considerable quantity of juices and gelatine which can be extracted, flavoured with vegetables, seasoned, and used for soup.

Boil down this stock until it is transformed into meat jelly which keeps well and can be used for strengthening soups and sauces.

To extract all the juices, the bones should then be broken up as small as possible. This second stock is not an economical proposition, unless it can be done without using any further fuel, for instance, if one has a permanent fire at one's disposal.

BONE-MARROW, MOELLE – A soft, fatty substance contained in marrow-bones.

Spinal marrow is that part of the central nervous system contained in the spinal cord. The spinal marrow of meat sold in sections is called amourette (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS).

Beef bone-marrow, MOELLE DE BOEUF – Cut the marrow in thick slices (using a knife dipped in boiling water). Poach without boiling in salt water, and drain. This is used to garnish steaks.

Beef bone-marrow, diced, poached and drained, is also used in various brown sauces.

Bone-marrow canapés, CANAPÉS À LA MOELLE – Made from the marrow of the large marrow-bone cooked in the pot-au-feu or petite marmite (see SOUPS AND BROTHS).

These canapés can be served in two ways:

1. Spread the marrow on slices of toast. Season with salt and freshly ground pepper.

2. Spread a salpicon (q.v.) of marrow (poached and well drained) on slices of toast. Decorate with strips of marrow, poached in salt water and drained, or seasoned with peppercorns ground in a mill. Sprinkle with fresh breadcrumbs tossed in butter and drained. Put the canapés in the oven for a few moments.

Bone-marrow fritots, FRITOTS À LA MOELLE – Cut into thick slices. Stick them together in pairs with forcemeat (preferably à gratin), and steep for 20 minutes in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and chopped parsley.

Dip them in a light batter, deep-fry in very hot fat. Drain, dry in a cloth, and garnish with fried parsley.

Salpicon of bone-marrow, SALPICON DE MOELLE – Dice the marrow and poach without bringing to the boil. Blend with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE), flavoured with shallot which has been cooked in white wine until all the liquid has evaporated.

This is used as a filling or garnish for flaky pastry vol-au-vent and canapés, fried bread (in fancy shapes), coddled or poached eggs, artichoke hearts, large mushrooms, etc.

Bone-marrow sauce, SAUCE À LA MOELLE – Sauce served with meat, grilled or sautéed fish, and poached or coddled eggs. (See SAUCE.)

Small vol-au-vent with bone-marrow, BOUCHÉES À LA

MOELLE – Flaky pastry vol-au-vent filled while hot with a salpicon (q.v.) of beef bone-marrow blended with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE), or very concentrated veal stock. Flavour, if desired, with a little shallot cooked in white wine until all the liquid has evaporated.

BONING, DÉOSSER – The process of removing the bones from a joint of meat, poultry or other food, whether cooked or raw, which contains bones.

The boning of raw meat or poultry requires skill, since the bones should be taken out without damaging the meat.

BONITO, BONITE – Small species of tunny, commonly found in the Mediterranean and on the Atlantic coast, where French fishermen also call it germon. It is an important fish on the North American Pacific coast and is prepared in the same way as tunny (tuna).

BONNE-DAME – Common name for orach in France.

BONNES-MARES – Vineyard of the Côte de Nuits that produces noted red wines. It is situated partly in the commune of Morey-Saint-Denis and partly in that of Chambolle-Musigny (Côte-d'Or), and has the legal right to a special appellation. (See BURGUNDY.)

BONNET-TURC – Variety of pumpkin.

BONVALET – This cake, almost identical with the one called Beauvilliers was created in 1869 by a pastry-cook, Jules Leroy, who was in charge of the Maison Machin. (See BEAUVILLIERS.)

BOOPS, BOGUE – Mediterranean fish of which two species are known: the common boops which reaches 35 cm. (14 inches) in length, and the bogue saupe.

This fish, which can be served fried, à la meunière, and poached, and which is also used in bouillabaisse, is remarkable for the brightness of its colour – olive-yellow on the back and silver on the belly.

BORAGE, BOURRACHE – Herbaceous perennial plant. Its flowers are cooked in some regions of France as fritters. The young leaves are used for flavouring salads, iced drinks, herbal tea and vegetables, and also for flavouring claret cup.

BORAX or SODIUM PERBORATE, BORATE DE SOUDE – This was sometimes fraudulently used, under various names such as 'preservative powder', 'antiferment', etc., for preserving meat, fish, butter, wine, etc.

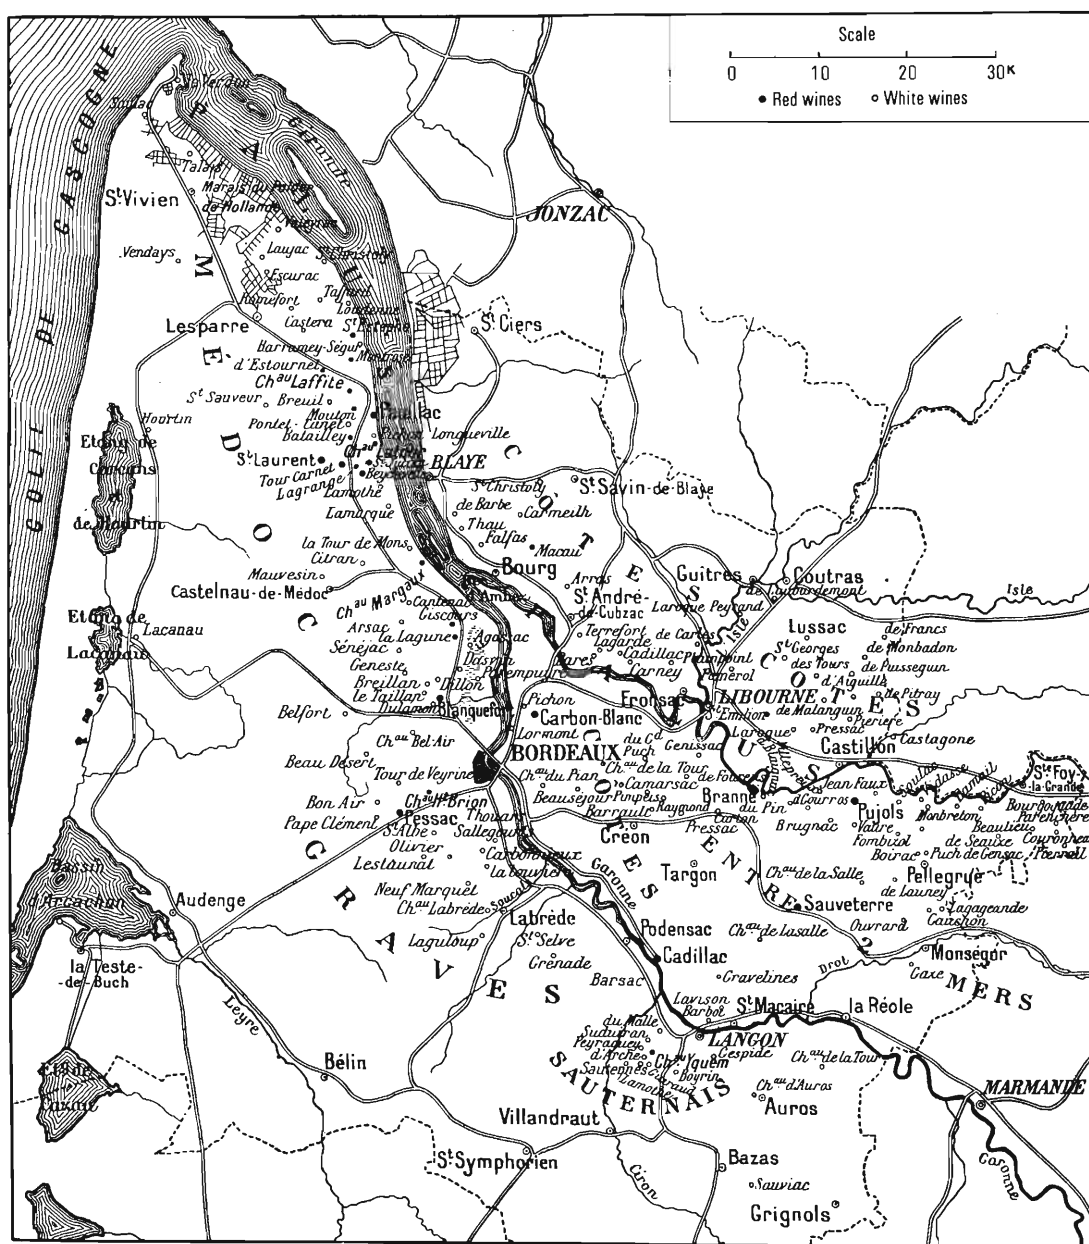

Its use was forbidden in France by an order of 14 July, 1891.

BORD-DE-PLAT – Small utensil used in the kitchen to protect the border of a dish on which food in sauce is being served.

BORDEAUX – Gourmands, connoisseurs of good things to eat, and gourmets, experts in the subtle art of wine tasting, hold this town in particular regard.

Bordeaux, whose wines and food were being sung long ago by the poet Decimus Magnus Ausonius, born in A.D. 310, is the birthplace of one of the greatest men in French classical cookery, Dugléré. He had for long been in charge of the kitchens at the Café Anglais in Paris, which at that time was frequented by kings, princes and all the most illustrious gastronomes of Europe.

Culinary specialties – Crayfish à la bordelaise; lamprey with leeks; mussels à la bordelaise; escargots à la Caudéran; fried whitebait; sausages with oysters; entrecôte à la bordelaise; leg of lamb à la ficelle; chicken sauté à la bordelaise; Pauillac lamb à la persillade; foie gras with grapes; terrine de Nérac; pâté de foie gras au truffes; cèpes

Excellent cheeses are produced throughout the region.

Wines – Bordeaux is one of the great viticultural regions of France, producing some of the world's best wines. The wine district of Bordeaux is completely contained within the borders of the Gironde département, mainly in the parts lying along the course of the rivers Gironde, Garonne and Dordogne. It has been known and esteemed for more than two thousand years. Even the Latin poet Ausone sang the praises of these wines.

Bordeaux has a very comprehensive range of wines: white, from the driest to the most liqueur-like; red, from the lightest (the Englishman's 'claret') to the most full-bodied.

Besides the so-called 'generic' appellations of white and red Bordeaux, Bordeaux supérieur, Bordeaux claret and Bordeaux rosé, which are produced all over the region, the great divisions are sub-divided into regions, which in their turn are divided into vineyards and appellations.

Médoc. A long strip of land approximately 15 km. (9 miles) broad, situated on the left banks of the Garonne and the Gironde, extending from Blanquefort in the south to Pointe de Graves in the north. There are two distinct divisions within the region: Bas-Médoc in the north; Haut-Médoc in the south where the communes of the great appellations of Margaux, Saint-Julien, Pauillac, Saint-Estèphe, Moulis and Listrac are situated.

Médoc wines are tannic and generous, and mature admirably. They are superbly elegant wines with a fine bouquet and aroma, and make excellent accompaniments to all types of roast and grilled meats. Those of Moulis, Listrac and Saint-Estèphe are best drunk with red meat and game; those of Margaux, Saint-Julien and Pauillac with white meat and lamb. (See accompanying table for the classification of these wines.)

The Château-Haut-Brion in the commune of Pessac is not actually in Médoc but in Graves, and is the only exception in the first growth category.

Graves. The Graves region lies to the south of Médoc, encircling the town of Bordeaux and extending along the left bank of the Garonne to the region of Sauternes. It produces red 'sappy' wines closely related to those of Médoc, of good lasting quality and with a bouquet reminiscent of the resin and undergrowth of the nearby pine forests; aristocratic dry white wines, also sappy, with a superbly elegant bouquet and taste, pleasant when drunk young in the not-so-good years but capable of maturing to perfection in the great vintage years. White liqueur-like wines, very similar to Sauternes, are produced in the south of the region.

The dry white wines of Graves make worthy companions to oysters, seafood, fish and shellfish, poached or grilled or in delicate sauces. The red wines serve the same purpose as those of Médoc. They, too, age magnificently. (See classification GRAVES.)

Sauternes-Barsac and Cérons. These wine districts form a sort of enclave in the Graves region north and west of Langon. They produce white, liqueur-like wines the colour and taste of honey, and have a flowery bouquet, greatly esteemed by connoisseurs. These wines are the product of the vinification of over-ripe grapes which are almost in a crystallised state when picked, owing to the action of a microscopic fungus called 'botrytis', which encourages the sugar to concentrate in the grape. Sauternes wines are usually consumed as dessert wines, but real connoisseurs like to drink them with foie gras, fish in sweet sauces and certain parsleyed cheeses.

Loupiac and Saint-Croix-du-Mont, situated on the opposite side of the Garonne on picturesque slopes overlooking the river, produce white wines similar to those of Sauternes. (See classification tables.)

Saint-Émilion. This wine district is situated on the right bank of the Dordogne east of the town of Libourne, and extends into the commune of the same name and several neighbouring areas.

Also worth mentioning are the 'satellite' appellations such as Saint-Georges-Saint-Émilion, which have the right to affix the appellation 'Saint-Émilion' to their own. Two types of wine can be singled out: those of the 'slopes' which are rounder and more full-bodied, and those of the 'gravel', which are sappy and more tannic. Both have the same rubiness and fullness which make them ideal with red meat, game, meat and sauce dishes, and the cheeses.

The appellations contrôlées of Saint-Émilion are: Saint-Émilion-Premier-Grand-Cru-Classé, Saint-Émilion-Grand-Cru-Classé, Saint-Émilion-Grand-Cru, Saint-Émilion.

'Satellite' appellations: Lussac-Saint-Émilion, Montagne-Saint-Émilion, Parsac-Saint-Émilion, Puisseguin-Saint-Émilion, Saint-Georges-Saint-Émilion, Sables-Saint-Émilion.

Pomerol. This wine district begins at the very gates of Libourne. A ferruginous subsoil with a pebbly topsoil gives rich, sappy, full-bodied wines with a pronounced personality and a powerful bouquet – perfect companions for red meat, meat in sauce, game (even big game) and cheese.

(French Government Tourist Office)

There is no official classification of the Pomerol wines; Château-Pétrus is usually given first place.

'Satellite' appellations of Pomerol: Lalande de Pomerol, and Néac (which has the right to the appellation 'Lalande de Pomerol'); all of these are red wines.

Other appellations. The wine district of Bordeaux is rich in other appellation wines, which include the strong glowing wines of the Côtes de Fronsac and Canon-Fronsac, west of Libourne on the right bank of the Garonne; and the Bourgeois and the Blayais on the right bank of the Gironde, opposite Médoc.

Between the Garonne and the Dordogne, in the triangle formed by the confluence of the two rivers, is situated the region 'Entre-deux-Mers'. The appellation covers a large production of white wine which used to be mellow, but which is vinified drier and drier to meet the current demands of today. There are some very good red wines which have the right to the appellations Bordeaux and Bordeaux supérieur. In the same geographical region there are the Premières, Côtes de Bordeaux, the Graves de Vayres, Bordeaux-Saint-Macaire and, on the border of the Dordogne département, Saint-Foy-La-Grande.

BORDELAISE (À LA) – Culinary term which applies to different dishes in four categories. The first is characterised by the sauce bordelaise, with white or red wine and marrow-bone fat; the second by the addition of cèpes; the third by mirepoix; and the fourth by a garnish of artichokes and potatoes. Other ingredients can be added.

This term also applies to various sweet courses (desserts), cakes, etc. (See MUSHROOMS, Cèpes à la bordelaise; CRAYFISH, MIREPOIX, SAUCE.)

BORDER (Ring). BORDURE – Dishes that are served in the form of a ring, which can be made of quenelle or other forcemeat, rice, semolina and duchess potatoes for hot dishes; jelly, custards and creams, rice à l'impératrice, etc. for cold and sweet dishes.

Borders can be made of small croûtons of bread, cut into various shapes and fried in butter, fixed to the inside edge of the serving dish with a mixture of flour and egg white. Fancy jelly shapes can be similarly used for cold dishes, and vegetable borders for hot dishes.

Ring (border) of béatilles à l'ancienne. BORDURE DE

BÉATILLES À L'ANCIENNE – Fill a buttered ring mould with a veal or chicken Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and poach slowly in the oven in a bain-marie (q.v.). When cooked, allow to stand for a few minutes for the forcemeat to settle.

Turn the ring out onto a dish, and fill the centre with a ragoût of lambs' sweetbreads, cocks' combs and kidneys, truffles and mushrooms, mixed in a Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira-laced Truffle fumet (see FUMET). Garnish with slivers of truffle heated in concentrated meat stock.

Ring for brains à la piémontaise. BORDURE DE CERVELLE À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Butter a ring mould and fill it with Risotto à la piémontaise (see RICE). Put the mould in the oven for a few minutes to heat it thoroughly.

Turn out and fill the centre with escalopes of Calves' brains à la poulette (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS) mixed with sliced mushrooms. Decorate the brains with thin slices of truffles heated in concentrated meat stock.

Egg ring Brillat-Savarin. BORDURE D'OEUFS BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Fill a mould with Veal forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and poach in the oven in a bain-marie (q.v.). Turn out and fill the centre with eggs which have been scrambled with Parmesan cheese and diced truffles. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan, pour a little melted butter over, and brown the top in a very hot oven.

Egg ring à la princesse. BORDURE D'OEUFS PRINCESSE – Prepare as Egg ring Brillat-Savarin, using scrambled eggs with asparagus tips and truffles. Scrambled eggs with crayfish, shrimps, fruits de mer, mushrooms, truffles, tomatoes, etc. can be prepared in the same way.

Cream fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) is used for Lenten entrées.

Fish forcemeat ring with various garnishes. BORDURE DE FARCE DE POISSONS – These rings, also Lenten fare, are made of Cream fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) of pike, whiting or other fish, moulded and baked as described above.

They are filled with a ragoût of fish or shellfish, the following being particularly suitable for the purpose: Ragoût of fruits de mer in shrimp, nantua or normande sauce; oysters and mushrooms in velouté sauce; mussels à la poulette; shrimps; slices of lobster or spiny lobster à la crème or à l'américaine; fish purées or salpicons with truffles and mushrooms.

Ring of frogs' legs vert-pré – BORDURE DE GRENOUILLES VERT-PRÉ – Prepare the frogs' legs as described in the recipe for Aspic of frogs' legs à l'ancienne (see ASPIC), coating them only with White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Cover with jelly.

Prepare a jelly ring decorated with circlets of truffles. Season cooked, well-drained asparagus tips with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Turn the ring out, and put the frogs' legs on it, overlapping them slightly. Fill the centre with the asparagus tips blended with concentrated aspic jelly. Decorate with truffle dipped in jelly.

Fluted and plain ring moulds (Dehillerin. Phot. Larousse)

Piping a border of duchess potatoes (Larousse)Border of duchess potatoes (Larousse)

Game force meat ring with various garnishes. BORDURE DE FARCE DE GIBIERS – These are made of Game force meat (see FORCEMEATS). The rings are filled with purées or salpicons of game in White or Brown sauce (see SAUCE).

Potato ring. BORDURE DE POMMES DE TERRE – Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES) piped through a forcing-bag onto a buttered dish, or moulded by hand into a ring.

Fill the centre with slices of cooked fish covered with Mornay sauce; slices of various shellfish; hashes of various kinds of meat; vegetables cooked in butter, etc.

Brush the ring with beaten egg, sprinkle with grated Parmesan, and brown in the oven or under the grill.

Rice ring with various garnishes. BORDURES DE RIZ – These rings (borders) are usually prepared from rice pilaf, risotto, or rice cooked in consommé and bound with egg.

Press the rice well into the mould and set it in the oven for a few minutes.

When turned out onto a serving dish, fill the centre with various ingredients, such as mixed ragoûts in white or brown sauce, various salpicons, etc.

Semolina ring with various garnishes. BORDURE DE SEMOULE – Prepare like Rice ring, using semolina cooked in consommé and bound with egg.

Ring (border) of sole à la normande

Ring of sole à la normande. BORDURE DE SOLES À LA NORMANDE – Prepare a Cream fish force meat (see FORCEMEAT), bake and turn it out on a dish. Fill the centre with a ragoût of mussels, shrimps and mushrooms, bound with Normande sauce (see SAUCE).

Roll up small sole fillets and cook in white wine. Place a poached, bearded oyster on each fillet, cover with normande sauce and decorate with thin strips of truffle. Garnish with crayfish cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.).

Veal or chicken force meat ring with various garnishes. BORDURE DE FARCE DE VEAU, DE VOLAILLE – Prepare as indicated in the recipe for Ring of bœuf à l'ancienne.

Turn the ring out onto a dish. Fill the centre with a garnish: veal amourettes à la poulette, cocks' combs and kidneys à la crème, slices of chicken in velouté sauce, lambs' or calves' brains à la poulette, veal or chicken hash à la crème, simple or mixed salpicons in white or brown sauce, purée of chicken in velouté sauce, eggs scrambled with various ingredients, fresh vegetables dressed with butter or cream, macédoine of vegetables blended with butter or cream, mushrooms à la crème.

Fancy jelly shapes arranged in a border round a dish (Larousse)

Cold rings for entrées or sweet dishes. BORDURES FROIDES D'ENTRÉES, D'ENTREMETS – These borders are usually made of aspic or fruit jelly. Cold entrée borders can also be made from foie gras, ham, game, chicken or fish mousses.

RINGS FOR DESSERTS. BORDURES D'ENTREMETS – For cold sweets, custards (see CREAMS, Custard creams) are made in a mould that has been caramelised. When turned out, the centre is filled with macédoines or purées of fruit, etc.

Rings can be made of Dessert rice (see RICE) and semolina (q.v.), and filled with macédoines of fruit or any other mixture suitable for a hot sweet.

Custard ring with mirabelles à la vosgienne. BORDURE DE MIRABELLES À LA VOSGIENNE – Prepare a kirsch-flavoured Custard cream (see CREAMS).

Fill a caramel-coated ring mould with the cream, and cook in a bain-marie (q.v.). Allow to cool completely before turning out.

Cook the mirabelles in syrup. Prepare whipped cream or Chantilly cream (see CREAMS). Turn out the ring onto a dish, and fill the centre with well-drained mirabelles. Top with whipped cream. Serve with mirabelle sauce laced with kirsch.

Rice ring with cherries. BORDURE DE RIZ AUX CERISES – Fill a buttered ring mould with Dessert rice (see RICE). Heat the mould for a few minutes in the oven, and turn it out onto a dish. Fill the centre with stoned cherries which have been simmered in syrup and combined with a little gooseberry jelly.

Rice ring à la créole. BORDURE DE RIZ À LA CRÉOLE – Butter a savarin ring mould and fill with sweetened dessert rice. Turn out, and fill the middle with half-slices of pineapple which have been poached in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Decorate with preserved cherries and angelica lozenges.

Heat in the oven, and serve with rum-flavoured Apricot sauce (see SAUCE).

Rice ring Montmorency. BORDURE DE RIZ MONTMORENCY – Fill a buttered ring mould with sweetened dessert rice, pressing it on well to ensure that there are no holes. Cover, and cook in the oven for a few minutes. Remove, and turn onto a dish.

Fill the middle with stoned cherries which have been cooked in syrup and well drained, alternating them with layers of hot French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Finish with a layer of cherries, piling them slightly into a dome shape. Sprinkle with crushed macaroons, pour on some melted butter, and glaze in a very hot oven.

Serve with Cherry sauce (see SAUCE) which has been laced with kirsch.

Semolina ring filled with various fruit. BORDURE DE

SEMOULE GARNIE DE FRUITS – Fill a buttered ring mould with sweetened dessert semolina, pressing it well into the mould. Heat for a few moments in a low oven.

Turn onto a dish, and fill with fruit cooked in vanilla-flavoured syrup: halved apricots, sliced pineapple, cherries, pears, quartered apples, etc.

Heat in the oven for a few minutes, and when ready to serve, pour over it a few tablespoons of liqueur-flavoured apricot sauce, or other fruit sauce which goes with the filling.

BORIC (Acid). BORIQUE – Sometimes used as a preservative agent (see BORAX).

BORSCH – See SOUPS.

BOTER MELK or BUTTERMILK (Belgian cookery) – Boil pearl barley in buttermilk, sweetened with brown sugar, for 1½ to 2 hours. Before serving, blend in a little cornflour (cornstarch) diluted in cold water. Treacle (molasses) is sometimes added.

Vermicelli, rice, semolina, and tapioca can also be cooked in buttermilk, with currants, sultanas and cooked apples added.

BOTHEREL (Vicomte de) – Famous financier who was born in Dinan in 1784 and who died there in 1859. His name deserves to be mentioned in a dictionary of cookery for it was he who, under the Restoration, created 'omnibus-restaurants'.

BOTTLE. BOUTEILLE – Oenology, the science which deals with wine, gives the following definition to the word bottle:

'A glass phial of various shapes and colours according to the nature of the wine it is intended to contain.' This means

Bottles:

1. Double litre;
2. Litre;
3. Demi-litre;
4. Bordeaux bottle;
5. Fillette d'Anjou;
6. Demi-Anjou;
7. Anjou;
8. Mâconnaise;
9. Champagne;
10. Bourgogne;
11. Saint-Galmier;
12. Fiasco de Chianti;
13. Flûte à vin d'Alsace that Bordeaux wines should not be bottled in Burgundy wine bottles, and vice versa. No doubt this law can be digressed when it is a case of ordinary table wines; in fact, most of these wines are sold in so-called Saint-Galmier bottles. The practice of serving very old wines and wines of great growths out of wicker cradles is not approved by gastronomes; these should be decanted into carafes for serving.

Contents of bottles in France – The law of January 1930, states:

Article 1. Under the conditions of Article 2 given below, it is forbidden to put on sale or to sell wines other than sparkling wines, wines imported in bottles and wines intended for export, wines imported in bottles and wines intended for export, in bottles other than:

1. Bottles known as bordelaise, bourguignonne and mâconnaise, the type and capacity of which are indicated in the table appended in the law passed on 13 June 1866, concerning trade usages;

2. Bottles which correspond to the following characteristics:

Type	Capacity (cl.)
Double litre	200
Litre	100
Demi-litre	50
Saint-Galmier	90
Anjou	75
Demi-Anjou	37.5
Fillette d'Anjou or Fillette de Touraine	35
Rhine wine	72

The capacity indicated above is that of a receptacle measured at neck rim at a temperature of 15°C. (59°F.). This capacity has a tolerance of 2 per cent.

Article 2. It will not be permitted to use bottles the appearance of which answers the description given in Article 1 which have not the minimum legal capacity, unless these bottles bear a label indicating their capacity.

In the case where, in accordance with the preceding paragraph, a label is used, this should bear, in addition to the indication of the minimum capacity, the indication of the degree of alcohol contained in the wine, where such indication is compulsory.

Article 3. The conditions laid down in this decree are not applicable to:

1. Bottles containing wines made before the publication of this decree and put into the above-mentioned bottles before the said publication;

2. Receptacles other than bottles, such as carafes, cellar-jugs, pitchers, etc., in which wines are served for consumption on the premises.

BOTULISM. BOTULISME – Serious infection caused by anaerobic bacteria (the organism involved is Clostridium botulinum) which develop in canned meat, fish or vegetables; both home and factory canned. It differs from ptomaine poisoning in that the substances affected by the botulism bacillus (ham, pork produce and other canned food) show no signs of putrefaction, although at times they do have a peculiar sour smell.

To avoid the occurrence of botulism only properly sterilised canned foods must be used. Vacuum, even a perfect one, is not a sufficient guarantee, because anaerobes develop even in the absence of oxygen. Food pickled in chlorine should contain at least 10 per cent of sodium chloride. If vinegar is used for pickling, its acetic acid content should be more than 2 per cent.

All suspect canned foods and those having a rancid smell should be avoided, as should foods showing signs of fermentation (bubbles of gas, bulging lids).

BOUCANADE – Spanish term derived from times when wine was placed in goatskin bottles. In slang it means quaffing straight from the bottle.

BOUCHE DU ROI – Term used under the old régime to describe the service which dealt with the kitchens of the royal household. These services, under certain kings, at times employed over 500 people (most of whom worked for only six months in the year). They were exclusively concerned with the king's table and were distinct from the common service, which catered for the officers and certain members of the royal household.

Bouche du roi included dealing with food supplies, the pantler's office and the royal butler's office. The pantler's office had charge of everything concerned with the king's tableware, bread, and accessories of the table. There were thirteen heads of service, four assistants, one keeper of table-service, one sommier, one washer-up, and several boys who assisted the officials in charge of these various posts.

The butler's office was mainly concerned with the beverages served to the king, and consisted of thirteen heads of service, five assistants and four sommiers, who directed the convoys of pack animals carrying baggage whenever the king travelled, or was at war. The butler carried a loaf of bread, two bottles of wine, two bottles of water, two napkins and some ice for the king's canteen, to His Majesty's closet early every morning. The canteen contained an emergency stock of beverages should the king require a drink while he was in his closet. These beverages were tasted first by an officer of the royal butler's office.

The staff for the royal kitchens included equerries, master cooks, cooks in charge of roasting, soup-cooks, pastry-cooks, and three galopins or kitchen errand boys, who were the commis of the kitchens of those days.

There were also water-carriers, fuel-carriers, armchair-carriers, ushers, sommiers, heralds, valets of sert-d'eau, and four washers-up.

The queen, the dauphin and the dauphine all had their separate kitchen services, bringing the total of servants to a very great number. The officials of the royal household were all members of the aristocracy until the end of the reign of Louis XIV, and supplies for the royal service were bought by these gentlemen. But the severe fiscal laws which came in made supplies prohibitively expensive, and aristocrats no longer sought these positions of high office. Instead, the duties were passed on to rich burghers, who paid a high price to obtain them.

Members of the Bouche du roi

BOUCHÉES – Name given to little patties made of puff pastry baked blind (empty) and filled with various mixtures.

It is said that these bouchées were invented by Marie Leczinska, who, being very fond of her food, 'adored' the vol-au-vent, and decided to eat it regularly. So the small, individual vol-au-vent was created – the 'bouchée à la reine'.

Recipes for the preparation of puff pastry bouchées will be found under HORS-D'ŒUVRE.

BOUDY – Good-looking apples which are rather mediocre in taste. They are used mainly for decorating fruit baskets, but they can also be cooked.

BOUFFOIR – Bellows which butchers use to force air under the skin and into the cellular tissues of carcasses.

BOUGRAS (Périgord cookery) – Soup prepared from cabbage, leeks, onions and potatoes, using water in which black puddings were cooked for stock. This soup, much appreciated in Périgord, is made at Shrovetide, when pigs are slaughtered and the delicious Périgord black puddings are made. Here is the recipe:

Bring about 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) water to the boil and put into it the sliced, blanched heart of a curly green cabbage, carrots, turnips, leeks, celery and quartered onions. Simmer slowly for 40 minutes. Add 2 large sliced potatoes, and continue cooking for a further 35 minutes.

About 15 minutes before serving, drain some of the vegetables, cut into slices, and fry lightly. Sprinkle with flour and a little stock, and add to the soup. (This is called fricassée in Périgord and is added to most soups.) Bring to the boil and pour into a tureen over thin slices of bread.

BOUILLABAISSE – This Mediterranean speciality is prepared all along the south coast of France from Cap Cebère to Menton, each having its special flavour and recipe. Connoisseurs consider that the only authentic bouillabaisse is to be found in the region between Marseilles and Toulon, though the varieties at Nice and Menton come a close second.

Legend attributes the invention of this dish to Venus, who, it is said, prepared it for her husband, Vulcan. Méry, however, gives the credit to the abbess of a Marseilles convent:

*'Pour le vendredi maigre, un jour, certaine abbesse
D'un couvent marseillais créa la bouille-abaisse.'*

'For a Friday abstinence meal, one day, a certain abbess
Of a Marseilles nunnery created the bouillabaisse.'

He then goes on to say what a real bouillabaisse is like, and what fish should go into the making of it:

*Ecoutez bien ceci, vieux cuisiniers novices,
Qui faites des homards avec des écrevisses,
Et qui croyez qu'on peut, chez Potel ou Chabot,
Traduire mon plat grec en tranches de turbot.
L'heure est enfin venue où notre capitale
Peut joindre à ses banquets la table orientale,
Et donner aux gourmands, chez le restaurateur,
Un ragoût marseillais et non un plat menteur.*

*À ce plat phocéan, accompli sans défaut,
Indispensablement, même avant tout, il faut
La rascasse, poisson, certes, des plus vulgaires.
Isolé sur un gril, on ne l'estime guère,
Mais dans la bouillabaisse aussitôt il répand
De merveilleux parfums d'où le succès dépend.
La rascasse, nourrie aux crevasses des syrtis,
Dans les golfes couverts de lauriers et de myrtes,
Ou devant un rocher garni de fleurs de thym.*

*Puis les poissons nourris assez loin de la rade,
Dans le creux des récifs: le beau rouget, l'orade,
Le pagel délicat, le saint-pierre odorant,
Gibier de mer suivi par le loup dévorant,
Enfin, la galinette, avec ses yeux de bogues,
Et d'autres, oubliés par les ichthyologues
Fins poissons que Neptune, aux feux d'un ciel ardent,
Choisit à la fourchette et jamais au trident.*

Hearken to me, old cooks and new
All those who make lobsters out of prawns
And think that one can, Chez Potel or Chabot,
Translate my dish into slices of turbot.
The hour has come at last, when our capital
Can add oriental dishes to her banquets
And give the gourmands in a restaurant
A real Marseilles ragoût, and not a lying dish.

For this Phocaeen dish, accomplished without fault,
Above all, is indispensable the rascasse,
'Tis true, a very common fish.
Served on a grill alone, it does not find favour,
But in a bouillabaisse it does exude
A marvellous aroma on which success depends.
The rascasse feeds in crevasses, in quicksands,
In bays shaded with laurel and myrtle bushes
Or around rocks covered with flowering thyme.

Then the fish which feed away from the roads,
Among the reefs: the beautiful red mullet and orades,
The delicate sea bream, the sweet-smelling saint-pierre,
Sea game escaping from the devouring sea perch,
And finally, the galinette, with its boops' eyes,
And others, forgotten by the ichthyologists,
Fine fish, that Neptune, in the fire of a blazing sky,
Spikes on a fork, and never on a trident.

In some regions, notably in Perpignan, potatoes are added to bouillabaisse, and often the saffron is omitted, which brings this soup nearer to the chaudrée (q.v.) or the cotriade (q.v.). At Sète a garlic-flavoured fish soup is made which is somewhat similar to the Flemish waterzootje (q.v.).

Ingredients for bouillabaisse – The Provence bouillabaisse, or, more correctly, the Marseilles bouillabaisse, is made of the following fish: rascasse, chapon, saint-pierre, conger eel, lophius (angler fish), red mullet, rouquier, whiting, sea perch, spiny lobster, crabs and other shellfish. (Many of the fish used for bouillabaisse, such as the traditional rascasse, are not found except in the Mediterranean. These are virtually unknown in England and America but gurnet, mackerel, small turbot, fresh tunny, perch, pike, grayling, trout, eel-pout and various rock fish can be substituted if necessary.)

All these fish should be cut into uniform-sized pieces. To make enough bouillabaisse for 8 to 10 persons you will need about 3 kg. (6½ lb.) fish and shellfish.

Put 200 g. (7 oz., 1½ cups) chopped onions, 3 large seeded and chopped tomatoes, 4 pounded garlic cloves, a sprig of fennel and 3 sprigs of bruised parsley, a sprig of thyme, a bay leaf and a piece of dry orange peel into a large casserole. Add the shellfish, then the firm-fleshed fish.

Sprinkle with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) olive oil and season with salt and freshly ground pepper. Add a good pinch of powdered saffron and enough water to cover the fish completely.

Boil briskly, with a lid on, for 7 to 8 minutes. Then add the fish with delicate flesh, such as whiting and red mullet, and cook together. Total cooking time of bouillabaisse does not exceed 14 to 15 minutes.

Ingredients for bouillabaisse (Scarnati)

Strain the soup over slices of bread, and serve with the fish and shellfish. Sprinkle soup and fish with chopped parsley. In Marseilles, special bread, called marette, is used for this purpose.

To make good bouillabaisse, one of the essential points is to cook it as quickly as possible, which results in the soup having the right consistency.

Originally a fisherman's dish, bouillabaisse ought not to contain lobster, only the cheaper cuts of fish.

Bouillabaisse borgne (Provençal cookery) – This bouillabaisse is called l'aigo-sau-d'iou in Provence.

Cook sliced potatoes slowly in fish stock prepared as described in the recipe for Bouillabaisse à la parisienne (see below). When the potatoes are done, poach fresh eggs, one by one, in the stock, taking care not to break them.

Pour the soup into a tureen over slices of bread, and arrange the potatoes and the poached eggs on another dish. Sprinkle with parsley and serve the two dishes at the same time.

Cod bouillabaisse. BOUILLABASSE DE MORUE – Prepared as Bouillabaisse à la parisienne (see below), this is a stew rather than a soup. For method of preparation, see COD.

Ocean bouillabaisse. BOUILLABASSE DE L'OcéAN – Although the bouillabaisse is essentially a Mediterranean dish, a kind of bouillabaisse is made on the Atlantic coast.

Fry 5 big chopped onions, 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) potatoes cut into slices, and 4 chopped leeks in 6 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) oil and 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Add a little thyme, savory and fennel, a bay leaf, 4 cloves, 4 garlic cloves, 2 celery stalks, 4 peeled and chopped tomatoes and a pinch of saffron.

Cut into slices 4 whittings, 1 conger eel, 3 red mullets, 3 mackerels, a few fresh sardines, 2 small lobsters or 2 crabs, and some Dublin Bay prawns, cut into chunks. Season with salt, pepper and a little cayenne pepper and add enough dry white wine and water to cover the fish.

Separately, cook 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) mussels and, when done, discard the shells and add the mussels, and the liquor they were cooked in, to the fish. Bring to the boil and simmer gently for 30 minutes.

Fry slices of bread until golden brown. Strain the fish and pour the liquor over the fried bread. Arrange the fish on a separate dish and serve at the same time as the soup.

Bouillabaisse à la parisienne – Fry briskly 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) chopped onion and 75 g. (3 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) chopped leeks (using only the white parts) in  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) oil, without allowing them to colour. Moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) white wine, and add 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) water. Add to this stock 4 peeled, seeded and chopped tomatoes, 4 crushed garlic cloves, a sprig of thyme and a bay leaf. Season with salt, pepper and a good pinch of powdered saffron. Add to this stock any heads and trimmings of fish intended for another dish. Cook briskly for 20 minutes and pass through a fine strainer.

Cut up gurnet, red mullet, whiting, conger eel, weever, and spiny lobster into chunks, and lay them flat in a deep pan. Place mussels, well washed, on top, season with salt and pepper and sprinkle with chopped parsley and oil.

Cook briskly for 15 minutes. Add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) kneaded butter.

Arrange the fish in a timbale (q.v.). Pour the soup into another timbale over grilled slices of bread.

Sardine bouillabaisse. BOUILLABAISSE DE SARDINES – Fry 1 chopped onion and 2 leeks in oil. Add a peeled, seeded and chopped tomato, 2 pounded garlic cloves, 1 bay leaf, 1 sprig of fennel and a small piece of orange peel. Moisten with  $\frac{3}{4}$  litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints) water. Season with salt, pepper and a pinch of saffron. Add 6 sliced potatoes, and cook with the lid on the pan.

When the potatoes are nearly done, arrange 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) cleaned, scaled and washed fresh sardines on them, and cook for 8 minutes. Sprinkle with parsley and serve separately. Strain the bouillabaisse over slices of bread laid in a deep dish.

Spinach bouillabaisse (Provençal cookery). BOUILLABAISSE D'ÉPINARDS – Here is a recipe contributed by the great master of Provençal cuisine, J. B. Reboul:

'Pick over and wash 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) spinach, cook for 5 minutes in boiling water, then dip into cold water and drain. Press with the hands to extract all water, and chop the spinach.

'Put  $\frac{1}{4}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) oil into an earthenware casserole, add a chopped onion, previously fried lightly without browning, and the spinach. Cook on a low fire for 5 minutes, stirring all the time.

'When the spinach is seared, add 5 sliced waxy potatoes. Season with salt, pepper and a little saffron. Moisten with 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) boiling water, add 2 chopped garlic cloves and a sprig of fennel, and cook, covered with a lid, on a low flame.

When the potatoes are cooked, poach 4 eggs in the pan.'

BOUILLANT – Small puff pastry patty, filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of chicken, served very hot as an hors-d'œuvre. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Small patties and rissoles.)

BOUILLE – Vessel used for transporting milk.

BOUILLETURE or BOUILLITURE (Anjou cookery) – Matelote (q.v.), made mainly of eel, moistened with red wine, thickened with kneaded butter, garnished with mushrooms, little onions and – a local touch – with prunes.

This matelote is served garnished with slices of toast.

BOULLI – Abbreviation of boeuf bouilli, i.e. boiled beef. For recipes, see BEEF, Boiled beef.

BOUILLON – Stock or broth.

Plain white stock serves as a basis for all soups, clear and thickened. It is also used for making white or brown sauces. Stock is a basic liquid obtained by prolonged boiling of meat and vegetables in slightly salted water.

Bouillon is one of the basic elements of French cookery, both in home kitchens and in the most sumptuous establishments.

Clear soup is a food of mediocre nutritive value (which can, however, be increased by the addition of pasta products, bread and various substances), but an excellent 'quickener' of digestion, and a stimulant which tones up the heart and slightly raises the blood pressure. (See SOUPS and BROTHS.)

Clarification of bouillon. CONSOMMÉ BLANC SIMPLE – The object of clarifying bouillon is to make ordinary bouillon more limpid; it also improves the taste. It is done with white of egg and lean beef and vegetables cut into small dice. Bouillon clarified in this way is called consommé.

In domestic cookery, stock is served without clarification. Served as a soup after adding various garnishes (principally some form of pasta), it is made with beef and fowl, carrots, turnips, leeks, parsnips, onion, celery, garlic, cloves.

To clarify bouillon, whisk 750 g. (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) lean meat, 2 leeks cut up into small dice, and a fresh egg white in a deep pan. Add 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  litres (4 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints) lukewarm bouillon. Continue to whisk the contents of the pan until it boils. Lower the heat and simmer for 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  hours. Strain through a cloth.

Bouillon de noce (wedding soup) (Périgord cookery) – This Périgord clear soup is really a version of ollapodrida (q.v.). Four kinds of meat are used: beef, a veal knuckle, a stuffed chicken and a turkey.

All these are cooked in stock flavoured with vegetables, together with Swiss chard. Add onion, fried in lard until golden, and vermicelli.

Cereal bouillons. BOUILLONS DE CÉRÉALES – These are rich in assimilable mineral substances and soluble nutritive matter which, being responsible for giving vegetable embryo the nutriment necessary for growth, have a beneficial effect on growing children. Boil 1 tablespoon each of wheat, oats, barley, rye, maize and bran for a long time in 3 litres (5 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints) water until the liquid has boiled down to 1 litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart). Strain, and add salt and sugar.

Herb bouillon (stock). BOUILLON AUX HERBES – Wash 40 g. (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) fresh sorrel leaves, 20 g. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  oz.) fresh lettuce leaves, 10 g. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  oz.) fresh chervil leaves and cook in 1 litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) water until done. Add a pinch of sea salt and 1 teaspoon fresh butter. Cook a little longer, and strain.

Vegetable bouillon (stock). BOUILLON DE LÉGUMES – Vegetarian cookery books give many recipes for these. Clear vegetable soups can be used in children's diets, partially replacing milk; and in diets for invalids. With tapioca or vermicelli added, these soups acquire more nutritive value.

Dr. Leclerc gives a vegetable stock for children: Boil 50 g. (2 oz.) carrots, 60 g. (2 $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) potatoes, 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) turnips, 6 g. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  oz.) dried peas and 6 g. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  oz.) dried beans in 3 litres (5 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints) water in a covered stockpot for 4 hours. Boil down to 1 litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) and add scant teaspoon salt.

Rice flour or other cereals can be added to this stock, or it can be used as a basis for other soups.

BOUILLON – Little restaurants which serve meals at a fixed price; the menu is usually limited.

BOUILLON AVEUGLE – Colloquial expression applied to mediocre clear soup when small spots of fat, called eyes, cannot be seen on the surface. Many of these soups, however, have the spots of fat carefully skimmed off before serving.

BOULE-DE-NEIGE – Name given to edible agaric.

BOULE-DE-NEIGE (Pâtisserie) – Cakes in the shape of balls, dipped in whipped cream. They are usually made of layers of fine sponge coated with butter cream.

The term is also applied to an iced sweet, made of bombe ice-cream mixture set in a round mould, and covered with whipped cream before serving (see SNOWBALL).

BOULE DE SON ('Bran Ball') – Slang term used to describe ration bread, called so because of the relatively high proportion of bran which went into its preparation.

BOULETTE – Dish prepared from some mixture (force-meat, hash or purée) which is given a spherical form. Boulettes are often made from pieces of left-over meat or fish. They are dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and fried in deep fat. Or they are brushed with butter or lard and cooked in the oven.

BOUQUET. BOUQUET DE VIN – Wine bouquet is due to ethers and essences or essential oils, which are extremely volatile. In the process of evaporation these essences release the multiple aromas pertaining to each wine.

The four elements which determine the quality of a wine are the colour, the bouquet, fruitiness and vinosity (the flavour and strength of the wine). Its quality lies in the right proportion of these elements.

BOUQUET GARNI – Aromatic herbs or plants tied together in a little faggot. The usual herbs are parsley, thyme and bay leaf, and their proportions are adjusted according to the nature of the dish. The strength of thyme and bay leaf must be taken into account and these aromatics used sparingly. Bouquets garnis can be small, medium or large, and for certain kinds of dishes they can include basil, celery, chervil, tarragon, burnet, rosemary, savory, etc. They are removed from stews and sauces before serving.

BOUQUETIÈRE (À LA) – Garnish used for meat dishes, composed of various vegetables disposed in bouquets. (See GARNISHES.)

BOURBONNAIS – Bourbonnais, ancient province of France, forms the whole of the département of Allier and a small part of Puy-de-Dôme, Creuse and Cher.

The 'Bourbonnichons' (i.e. natives of the district) are generally hearty eaters and enjoy good country dishes. Highest quality beef, mutton and pork are produced here. The rivers and ponds abound in succulent fish: carp, pike, eel, which are cooked en matelote (q.v.) or au bleu (q.v.). The streams are full of trout and crayfish. Very good game, both ground and winged, and excellent poultry, particularly geese, are also found in this district. The vegetable gardens and the orchards produce choice vegetables and fruit.

Beverages – The wines of Bourbonnais have an interesting bouquet. The white, red and rosé wines of Saint-Pourçain-sur-Sioule are classified as V.D.Q.S.

The mineral waters of Bourbonnais are famous. From time immemorial Vichy has been a famous watering-place. Its hot mineral waters were well known to the Romans. In the Middle Ages, Vichy was the seat of a castellany, which was acquired in 1344 by Pierre I of the house of Bourbon. His son, Louis II, in 1411 founded a Celestine monastery and it is to these monks, who propagated the virtue of its waters, that Vichy partly owes its fame. The religious wars, from which this town suffered a great deal, arrested its progress, but in the reign of Henri IV its fame began to spread. In 1605 a general administration of mineral and medicinal waters was created in France, and Vichy became its headquarters in 1648.

The popularity of Vichy water grew during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Louis XIV protected its early fortune, and the letters of Madame de Sévigné, who went there for a cure in 1676 and 1677, completed its rise to success. In 1716 Louis XV endowed the Vichy hospital. Louis XVI's aunts, Adelaide and Victoire, having undergone successful treatment, built a new establishment to replace the existing modest 'Maison du Roi'. In 1853, the mineral waters concession was granted to a company.

Culinary specialties – Freshwater matelotes and stews; pike à la crème; Montluçon and Moulin meat pies; sheep's tongues with turnips; goose stew called oyonnade locally; pompe aux gratons; potato pie; mihior or millias, rather similar to the one made in Languedoc; cherry tarts; pancakes which are called sauciaux locally; pear gâteaux; gounnerre, a kind of potato pie; Gannat brioche; and tarte bouronnaise, a pleasant country cheesecake for which the recipe is as follows: Pound fresh cream cheese in a bowl with fine salt, 4 eggs, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fresh butter and 4 table- spoons ( $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) flour. When the paste is smooth, spread it in a buttered pie dish, indent 7 or 8 holes with a finger and put a piece of fresh butter in each. Bake in a slow oven for 30 minutes. Sprinkle with sugar before serving.

BOURGEOISE (À LA) – Name which is applied to various dishes, mainly to large pieces of braised meat, prepared à la mode bourgeoise. These dishes always include a garnish composed of carrots, small onions and large dice of lean bacon. (See GARNISHES; BEEF, Top rump à la bourgeoise.)

BOURGUEIL – Wine produced from the Cabernet franc grape (nicknamed 'Breton' in the region). It has a delicious raspberry flavour and, generally speaking, is best drunk young. It is an excellent accompaniment to the regional dishes and to the goat cheeses.

The neighbouring appellation, Saint-Nicolas-de-Borgueil, produces wines of a similar character, but usually more robust and with a distinct tang.

BOURGUIGNONNE (À LA) – See the beginning of the article on BURGUNDY.

BOURRICHE – Type of long, handleless basket used to transport fruit, game, oysters, etc.

BOURRIDE (Provençal cookery) – Put 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) various small fish in a large pan with 2 litres (3 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints) water, 2 onions, 2 tomatoes, 2 garlic cloves – all finely chopped – and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Add a little bitter orange peel, seasoning, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) olive oil and some saffron. Boil fast for 15 minutes.

Strain the stock through a sieve, pressing the vegetables through. Bind the stock with 2 egg yolks mixed with ailoli (q.v.). Simmer lightly and pour into a soup tureen on slices of bread. Serve with the fish.

BOURRU (Wine) – Name given in the past to spiced wine. For a hogshead of the wine, it was prepared by mixing white wine with 1 litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) of a very strong concoction of wheat and elder flowers.

Nowadays new wine is often called vin bourru.

BOUTARGUE – Preparation of dried, pressed mullet roe that can be bought ready-made. It is a speciality of Provence. For instructions on how to make it see HORS-D'ŒUVRE.

BOUTELLER (Charge de) – This title in the olden days was given to the man in charge of the wine cellar of the king, of a prince, or some other great aristocrat. At the court of the kings of France the post was always held by high-ranking gentlemen. Today the word bouteiller – which in fact is hardly ever used – is synonymous with sommelier (wine waiter).

BOUTER – French term for wine that has turned sour.

BÔUT-SAIGNEUX – The neck of a calf or a sheep.

BOUVILLON – The word bouvillon is applied to a young steer until it loses its first milk-tooth.

BOUZY – One of the greatest and most highly regarded vineyards of Champagne. Its black Pinot grapes made into white wine contribute to the best Champagne. Made into red wine, this grape gives a delicious, natural fruity wine, much esteemed by gourmets. It is best drunk young, but in a good year it matures admirably; the wine growers of Champagne have some splendid bottles in their cellars.

BOWELS. BOYAUX – Intestines of slaughtered animals. Pigs' intestines are mainly used for making andouilles (q.v.) and andouillettes (q.v.). The smallest ones are used as casings for sausages. Fat intestines are used in the preparation of Lyons sausages.

Pigs' intestines are divided into two categories: the big and the small. Before being used pigs' intestines should be prepared and cleaned with minute care.

BOWL. BOL – Term used for basins of varying capacity, made of porcelain, earthenware, glass or metal. They are sometimes used in France for hot drinks (coffee, chocolate or tea with milk) served at breakfast.

The term 'punch bowl' is applied to a bigger receptacle usually made of silver, in which punch and mulled wine are prepared. In French the word bol also applies to china, glass or metal finger bowls put before guests after serving fish, or at the end of a méa. In the past, porcelain, pottery, silver and even gold basins were used for this purpose. They were sometimes set in stands, which can still be found in antique shops. It must be remembered that until the middle of the sixteenth century, forks were not used at table, and that it was customary for two people to eat out of one bowl. It was therefore essential to have washing arrangements for the guests in the room where the meals were served.

BRABANÇONNE (À LA) – Garnish of chicory and potato croquettes for large pieces of meat. The garnish is often supplemented by hop shoots cooked in butter or cream.

BRAIN. CERVELLE – Culinary term for the brain substance of edible animals. The brain is rich in vitamins and phosphorus, and provides a great deal of nourishment in proportion to its volume.

Water	69.10 per cent
Nitrogenous substances	13.26 per cent
Fatty substances	16.23 per cent
Extractive substances	0.12 per cent
Ash	0.19 per cent

It also contains phosphorated fats similar to the lecithin of egg yolk.

The weight of an ox brain varies from 450 g. to 700 g. (1 lb. to 1½ lb.); that of a calf's brain from 250 g. to 300 g. (9 oz. to 11 oz.); that of lamb's or sheep's brain about 100 g. (4 oz.); the weight of a pig's brain is about 150 g. (5 oz.). (The last is rarely used in cooking.)

Whatever the recipe, brains must be well purged and cooked in a court-bouillon (q.v.). For the various methods of preparation see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

BRAISE. BRAISER – To cook various foods by braising in a special utensil called a daubière (q.v.), or a braising pan.

BRAISING. BRAISAGE – Method which can be applied to most food substances, cooked in an airtight pan, adding very little liquid. Instructions relevant to braising will be found in the section entitled CULINARY METHODS.

BRAISING PAN. BRAISIÈRE – Utensil made of tinned copper, nickel, aluminium, enamelled cast-iron, earthenware and fireproof porcelain.

In restaurant terminology, the word braisière is applied to any kind of a stock, made out of various meat trimmings and bones, used for the preparation of basic sauces. This stock is used instead of estouffade (q.v.) and clear beef or veal stock, which should properly be used for the moistening of roux (q.v.), as is white consommé.

Braising pan (Dehillerin. Phot. Larousse)

BRAMBLE (Blackberry). RONCE – Prickly bush whose berries can be used to make syrup and jam. The young shoots can be eaten like asparagus.

BRAN. SON – Outer casing of the grain, which is separated from the flour by milling.

BRANDADE – Method of preparing pounded salt cod, which is very popular in Languedoc and Provence. It is flavoured with garlic, and is prepared by cooking slowly over moderate heat and stirring vigorously and constantly with a wooden spoon, maintaining the same heat throughout the operation. Add oil, little by little. (See COD, Brandade of salt cod.)

BRANDEVIN – Spirit distilled from wine. (See SPIRITS.)

BRANDEVINIER – Man who goes about the countryside with his still for distilling spirit from wine, marc or fruit.

BRASSERIE – Establishment where beer and cider are made or sold. Breweries, of which there are a great many in Germany and in the eastern regions, were not established in Paris and other parts of France until the middle of the nineteenth century. Brasseries in modern times are cafés or restaurants where food and drink are served.

Certain types of brasseries used to serve as a meeting-place for politicians, artists, men of letters and bohemians. Among the brasseries which have either become converted into something else or have disappeared altogether, are those in rue des Martyrs, associated with Nadar, Pelloquet, Privat d'Anglemont, Villiers de l'Isle-Adam, Baudelaire, Courbet and Carjat.

Brasserie Pousset, which at one time was a centre for literary men and journalists, became the meeting-place of government and colonial officials. Other famous brasseries were the Brasserie du Petit-Poucet, where one could meet Ponchon and Grenet-Dancourt; and Brasserie Steinbach in the Quartier Latin where Jean Moréas used to call for a chat with Maurice Maïndron or Paul Mounet.

The brasserie style survives in Paris today in Lipp, Bofinger, and the charming Brasserie Flo in the Passage des Petites-Ecuries.

BRAZIL NUT. NOIX DU BRÉSIL – Fruit of the bertholletia, a tree which grows in Paraguay and Brazil, sometimes to 35 m. (114 feet) in height. The nut is also known as American chestnut. In South America it is called juvia; the Portuguese call it castenas de maranon.

Its shell, which has three sharp edges, is brown and hard; the white kernel is similar in flavour to coconut and hazelnut.

BREAD. PAIN – Dough made of flour and water, fermented and baked.

Cereals were first used in the form of meal, then as a cake made from a mixture of meal or flour with honey, oil, sweet wine, various grains, fruit and meat.

The Hebrews, the Egyptians and the Chinese introduced flat cakes made of flour and water dough, baked without leaven. The discovery of fermented bread, no doubt an accidental one, is attributed to the Egyptians, who used the leaven of sour dough, left over from the previous bread-making, and the must of grapes, kneaded with flour and dried in the sun.

The use of fermented bread spread quickly but did not supersede the old method of making unleavened flat cakes, the only bread known to the Roman soldiers. In the middle ages, under the name of trenchers, these flat cakes were used instead of plates for cutting up meat; they were then eaten or thrown to the poor.

Making bread commercially – The flour, which must be kept for at least 15 days after milling, goes through a kneading operation, which consists of mixing it with yeast and moistening it with water.

The leaven, which gives the dough the ferments (alcohol barm and associated fungus) necessary for transforming sugar into alcohol and carbon dioxide, is taken from a previous kneading, or is a mixture of yeasts.

Kneading with yeast is the usual method. The flour is put in a bowl, a well made in the centre, yeast and warm water added, and the mixture left to ferment for 4 or 5 hours, to form the 'main leaven'. It is then 'refreshed' by adding an equal weight of flour to obtain the 'first leaven'. More flour is added later to obtain the 'second leaven' or tout point, which represents half or a third of the batch of loaves.

During the final kneading, the remaining flour is added, and the dough is moistened with warm, salted water. This operation is called frase (kneading) and is followed by contre-frase (second kneading), which is very hard work when done by hand. It consists of moulding the dough into one lump, leaving it to rise, allowing it to subside, dividing, stretching and kneading it into one lot again – and all these operations have to be done very quickly. In modern establishments they are done in mechanical kneaders.

When the kneading is completed, it is left to stand in a kneading trough covered with a cloth.

Bread kneaded with leaven is whiter and has more taste than bread kneaded only with diluted yeast.

Through the action of leaven, the released carbon dioxide puffs up the dough. When it reaches double its original volume, it is divided into loaves, the underside is sprinkled with wholemeal flour, rice flour or finely ground maize (corn meal) and the loaves put in the oven.

The oven is heated to between 220° and 300°C. (425° and 575°F.), in such a way as to sear the whole surface of the loaf immediately, while the interior continues to ferment. Carbon dioxide swells the dough, forms holes in the bread and causes the surface to bulge. When the inside temperature reaches 60°C. (140°F.), the starch is transformed into starch-paste. Fermentation ceases when the temperature goes up to 80°C. (176°F.). When the inside temperature reaches 100°C. (212°F.), the crust loses a large proportion of water by evaporation.

When the temperature of the oven (which will have gone down while the bread was being put into it) reaches 200°C. (400°F.) the starch is roasted. Water steam is then injected (or the oven is sprayed with water) to prevent the formation of too thick a crust. The baking time varies according to the size of the loaves.

BREAD

The total loss of water is proportional to the size of the loaf; to obtain 1000 g. (2.2 lb.) bread, 1140 g. (2.5 lb.) dough will be needed for loaves of 4 kg. (8.8 lb.) and 1670 g. (3.7 lb.) for loaves of 1 kg. (2.2 lb.).

If the fermentation of the dough is excessive, carbon dioxide is released before the loaves are placed in the oven, and the bread will be heavy and compact, with a cavity between the crumb and the crust.

Alcohol, which forms during fermentation, evaporates during baking as well as carbon dioxide, which continues to be released during cooling. A condensation of steam takes place during this cooling-off period in newly baked bread, which then begins to look greasy and shiny.

Qualities of bread – A good quality loaf should have a pale yellow or light brown bottom crust and a golden yellow or light brown top crust, which should be thick, domed, and resonant when tapped. Both the crusts should adhere to the crumb, and together equal one-fifth of the weight of the loaf (the thicker the crust, the less water there is in a loaf). If the crusts of a slice of bread are pressed together the slice should quickly regain its original shape.

The crumb should be homogenous, without any white or yellowish lumps, without grey, red or black spots; it should not stick to the fingers; the holes in it should be uneven, not too big (which is a sign of badly kneaded dough), nor too small (which is a sign of insufficient fermentation); the smell should be sweet, the taste clean and pleasant.

Too white a crumb is a sign of rice flour having been added; greyish-brown crumb shows that rye or buckwheat flour has been added.

If kept for a long time, bread becomes stale, the crumb dries up and the crust grows soft. This is not due solely to the loss of water (stale bread contains only about 1 per cent less water than fresh bread), but to a partial transformation of starch into dextrine. By heating stale bread (which causes it to lose 3 per cent of its water content) a distillation process is achieved; moisture from the crust penetrates the crumb, giving it, for a short time, the appearance of fresh bread.

Varieties of bread – In France, ordinary or household bread (pain ordinaire, or pain de ménage) is long and cylindrical in shape, flattened on the top, and slashed with slanting or parallel markings. The boulot or bouleau loaf is the same shape, but floured on top. The polka loaf is long or round, with a hard crust, slashed with lozenge-shaped decorations. A split loaf is made by joining two long loaves together; it is thicker and has less crust. The round loaf is of the traditional round shape, the upper crust having a domed top; the crown loaf, as its name implies, is circular in form.

Fancy loaves, sold by the piece and not by weight, are made out of highest quality flour and shaped either into batons, with a golden brown or floured surface, or into flat loaves or small rolls of various shapes.

The Vienna loaf is kneaded with a certain quantity of milk. The tin or pan loaf, square-shaped with a very thin crust, is used in France mainly for toast, canapés, garnish croûtons and sandwiches.

On the borderline between the domains of bakery and pastry-making we have brioche dough loaves and puff pastry croissants.

Bread containing some or all of the bran and germ of the grain and endosperm is theoretically more nutritive, but being less easily assimilated by the intestines, the advantages are rather problematical.

Wholemeal bread is made from meal containing the entire wheat grain. In some parts of Germany very dark bread (pumpernickel) is made of coarse unbolted rye.

Bread wedges (Nicolas)

Unleavened bread (Larousse)

Eight varieties of French ordinary bread
(Maison Syda. Phot. Larousse)

Wheaten flour is used for fine bread, but in many countries rye is the principal bread grain. Barley bread, bread made from a mixture of barley and wheat, used to be made and kept fresh for a long time, but it was very coarse, as can be judged from the saying 'as coarse as barley bread', because it is difficult to hull barley.

Rye bread, made of 15 per cent bolted whole rye, has a heavy, compact texture; bread made out of a mixture of rye and wheat (one part rye to three parts wheat) keeps well and is sold as quality bread.

Gluten bread, manufactured for diabetics, has gluten added to the dough; it contains up to 40 per cent starch.

Unleavened bread is much less used than ordinary bread, though in some countries, Sweden for example, it is served with hors-d'œuvre.

Adulteration of bread – The most prevalent method is to retain as great a proportion of water in the bread as possible, but there are other fraudulent practices, involving the use of grain poor in gluten content, and adding various 'improving agents' – chemical products – to the flour, thus rendering bread-making easier. This process, condemned by all nutritionists, has contributed not a little to the dis-favour in which bread is held by dieticians.

Digestibility of bread – Bread is a food which is used, and abused, more than any other, especially in France. For many, it is the staple food, which children are taught – and forced – to eat with all other food; in many circles the quantity of bread consumed exceeds in volume that of all other foods put together.

Good bread taken in moderate quantities is an excellent food, but it should not be consumed in excessive quantities. The crust is more digestible than the crumb, both because being hard it has to be chewed with greater care, and because one eats less of it. For the same reason, toasted bread is better for dyspeptics, who will thus be forced to chew it more thoroughly and will be less tempted to over-eat.

The difference in the composition of the crust and the crumb lies mainly in the latter's greater water content.

There are various prejudices concerning bread, the worst being the preference for white bread. This, having been reserved for the richer classes in times gone by, was always coveted by the less favoured classes. To satisfy them, the use of higher extracted flour was resorted to for the manufacture of 'rich' bread and artificially-bleached flour for the other kinds.

The principal drawback of excessively white bread, so popular at present, is that it is practically uneatable if stored for more than a few hours. Besides, its dietetic qualities are nil and undoubtedly it is harmful to people with delicate digestions.

Fortunately there is natural or dietary bread made with yeast and baked on stone over a wood fire by which means the goodness of this staple food is retained.

BREAD IN DIETETICS. PAIN EN DIÉTÉTIQUE –

Wholemeal bread – Dieticians are not wholly in agreement concerning the nutritive value of wholemeal bread, but they are unanimous in recognising that the white bread at present on sale commercially is no longer the ideal food it was when made with wheat flours stone-ground (and not by rollers), prepared with natural leavenings (and not with chemical ones), and cooked in a wood-fired oven (not an oil-fired one).

Wholemeal bread, on the other hand, is still this ideal food. But the consumer must ensure that it is really wholemeal bread and not bread made with ordinary flour mixed with bran, or even bread 'enriched' with wheatgerm or some such ingredient.

The only proper bread is that made with pure wheat flour, preferably bolted (between 90 per cent and 95 per cent, at best 80 per cent), leavened with natural yeast and baked on stone over a wood fire.

However, not all stomachs or digestive systems tolerate wholemeal bread, excellent though it may be. It is important to note that since wholemeal bread does more for the organism than ordinary bread, the usual daily ration can be reduced by a third or more. Also that wholemeal bread does not go very well with meats, highly spiced dishes, or alcoholic beverages.

According to the dieticians, wholemeal bread and a basically vegetarian diet is the ideal.

METHODS FOR MAKING GOOD BREAD – We give, quoting from Carême, three Edlin recipes.

'Cooks,' he writes, 'who travel with their gastronomically-mindful masters can, from now on, by following this method, procure fresh bread every day.'

Ordinary method. MÉTHODE ORDINAIRE - 'Put 2½ kg. (5 lb., 20 cups) flour in the mixing trough. Make a well in the middle and put in 50 g. (2 oz.) yeast. Moisten with warm water and mix until the consistency of brioche dough is reached, kneading well and adding 50 g. (2 oz., 3 tablespoons) fine salt, diluted in a little warm water. Cover and put in a warm place to ferment and rise.

'After having left the dough in this condition for an hour or two, knead it again, then cover and leave for another 2 hours.

'Divide the dough into 8 equal parts and shape into loaves. Put them in a hot oven as quickly as possible. When baked, rub the crust with a little butter, to make it golden.'

French rolled loaf. PAIN FRANÇAIS EN ROULEAU - 'Put 2½ kg. (5 lb., 20 cups) sieved flour into a kneading trough. Knead it with generous litre (2 pints, 2½ pints) milk, 250 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) warm butter, 60 g. (2½ oz.) yeast and 50 g. (2 oz., 3 tablespoons) salt. When all the ingredients have been mixed, knead with a sufficient quantity of hot water. Mix well, cover, and leave for 2 hours. Shape into rolls, put them on baking trays and leave in a warm place to rise for an hour. Bake in a very hot oven for 20 minutes.'

Loaf à la terrine or à la grecque. PAIN À LA TERRINE, À LA GRECQUE - 'Put 2½ kg. (5 lb., 20 cups) slightly warm fine flour into a big mixing bowl, also warm. Add 50 g. (2 oz.) yeast, 50 g. (2 oz., 3 tablespoons) salt and a sufficient quantity of water or milk to make the dough rather soft.

'Knead thoroughly, cover, and keep in a warm place for 3 hours. Divide into 8 loaves and put these into buttered terrines.

'Bake in a very hot oven. When nearly baked, remove from the terrines and put on baking trays for a few minutes to let them brown a little.'

Choiné bread. PAIN DE CHOINÉ - A fine-textured white bread. It was once a salted bread, therefore a luxury, salt being extremely expensive in the sixteenth century.

Consecrated bread. PAIN BÉNIT - Consecrated bread, which is distributed in churches of big towns, is most frequently made of fine brioche dough.

In the country the dough for consecrated bread is made like brioche dough, using the following ingredients: 1 kg. (2½ lb., 9 cups) sieved flour, 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) butter, 20 g. (¾ oz.) brewer's yeast, ½ litre (scant pint, 2½ cups) boiled milk and a pinch of salt.

English or tin loaf. PAIN ANGLAIS, DIT AUSSI PAIN DE MIE - Used for croûtons, white breadcrumbs, etc., or for making sandwiches, toast, or canapés served as hors-d'œuvre.

English loaves are baked in rectangular tins, and are used for making hollowed-out croustades (q.v.) in which various ragoûts, purées, etc. are served.

Finger rolls with milk. PETITS PAINS AU LAIT - Spread 1 kg. (2½ lb., 9 cups) sieved flour on the table in a circle. Make a well in the centre, and put into it 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) fine sugar, and a pinch of salt. Moisten with 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) boiled milk and add a little warm water. Knead with 40 g. (1½ oz., 2 cakes) baker's yeast and leave until the next morning.

Divide the dough into small 60-g. or 80-g. (2½-oz. or 3-oz.) pieces and shape into slightly oval rolls. Split the rolls slightly in the centre, brush with beaten egg and bake in a hot oven.

Finger rolls with eggs. PETITS PAINS AUX OEUFS - These are made like Finger rolls with milk, adding 3 egg yolks.

Gonesse Bread. PAIN DE GONESSE - This was renowned for its whiteness and taste. Gonesse was once a village on the outskirts of Paris. Olivier de Serres said that the bakers of Gonesse, having been questioned juridically on the reasons for the superior quality of their bread, attributed it to the water they used in its preparation.

Plaited bread. NATTE - Bread baked in the form of a plait.

Bread for soups. PAIN POUR POTAGES - This bread, which is made in the shape of a long thin roll and is sold only in big Paris bakeries, is prepared of dough very rich in gluten. These rolls are cut into thin slices and dried in the oven, or they can be cut and hollowed out in various shapes. (See CROÛTES.)

Unleavened bread. PAIN AZYME - The Book of Exodus tells us that in their haste to leave Egypt the Jews forgot to bring yeast with them, and that for a long time after that they had to eat unleavened bread.

The Israelites perpetuated the memory of this privation by eating only unleavened bread during Pesach. This is how this bread is made:

Knead some sieved wheaten flour with salt and water into a slightly softish paste. Roll out into round or square pieces 1 cm. (¼ inch) thick. Prick them all over and bake in a low oven.

Unleavened or offering bread. PAIN AZYME, À HOSTIE - Strain the flour through a silk sieve. Dilute with enough slightly salted water to obtain a softish paste, as for wafers, called oublies.

Pour into special moderately hot iron moulds in such a way as to dry the paste without allowing it to colour. Leave to dry on wicker trays in the oven. Store in a dry place in wooden boxes with well-fitting lids.

Viennese bread. PAIN VIENNOIS - Viennese bread was brought to Paris in 1840 by Count Zang, First Secretary of the Austrian Embassy, who founded the first Parisian bakery, in rue Richelieu, using Viennese methods. Zang made such a success of the venture that he became over confident, enlarged the bakery beyond his means, and ruined himself installing equipment. He was obliged to leave Paris following the events of 1848, but his Viennese bread remained.

BREADCRUMBS. CHAPELURE - The French word chapelure comes from chapeler, which meant to crush bread that had been dried very slowly in the oven.

White breadcrumbs are obtained by sieving stale white bread through a metal sieve with a fairly large mesh, and are used for crumbing objects destined for frying. Loaf bread, called 'English bread' in France, is generally used for this purpose. When French bread is used, the operation is easier if, after the removal of the crust, the bread is rolled in a lightly floured cloth. Then this bread passes much more easily through the meshes of a sieve.

White breadcrumbs can be kept for two or three days. If one takes the precaution of drying the breadcrumbs gently above the stove, without allowing them to brown, they keep much longer.

Golden breadcrumbs are prepared by drying bread crusts in a very slow oven. Once dry and slightly coloured, these crusts are pounded in a mortar (or crushed with a rolling-pin) and passed through a wire-mesh sieve. This type of breadcrumb will keep indefinitely in a covered glass jar in a dry atmosphere.

Golden breadcrumbs (if white breadcrumbs are not available) can be used for coating meat and fish with egg and breadcrumbs before frying, but they are mainly used for sprinkling over preparations which are cooked au gratin.

BREADCRUMB (To). PANER - To coat an object with breadcrumbs before frying it in clarified butter.

Coat with butter and breadcrumbs. PANER AU BEURRE - To brush various meats, before grilling them, with plenty of melted butter, and roll them in freshly grated bread-crumbs.

Coat with breadcrumbs à la milanaise. PANER À LA MILANAISE – As à l'anglaise (see below), but adding one-third of their volume of grated Parmesan cheese to the bread-crumbs.

Coat with egg and breadcrumbs. PANER À L'ANGLAISE – To dip various foods – escalopes, fillets of fish, cutlets, etc. – in a mixture of beaten egg, seasoned with a little oil, salt and pepper, and white breadcrumbs. The items of food are then fried in clarified butter.

Breadfruit tree

BREADFRUIT TREE. ARBRE À PAIN – Genus of plants which includes the sago palm and the raffia palm. It is a beautiful tree, with soft timber and deeply divided leaves. The tree is a native of tropical regions and is cultivated throughout the islands of the Asiatic archipelago and in the Pacific islands close to the equatorial regions. It attains a height of 15 to 20 m. (50 to 65 feet) and contains a thick, viscous, milky juice which is made into a kind of glue. The juice, which hardens on exposure to the air, is used by the natives of the South Seas to waterproof their canoes. The timber, in spite of not being very hard, is used in the building of huts and canoes. The fibrous inner bark is beaten out and made into a kind of cloth. The leaves, which reach enormous dimensions, serve as wrapping for food and roofing for dwellings. The dried spikes of the male flowers are used as tinderwood.

The fruit itself is large and round and of a greenish-yellow colour; it is an important item of food for the islanders. When fully ripe it has a sweetish taste, is laxative and indigestible, and goes bad quickly. It is gathered before it is fully ripe, when the flesh is firm and white, mealy and rich in starch, and has almost all the nutritive qualities of wheaten bread.

It is cut in slices and baked or toasted on hot coals, or baked in the oven until the outside skin becomes rather dark.

Breadfruit

Prepared in this way it is a valuable food, very nutritious, its taste recalling that of freshly baked bread, with a slight hint of artichoke and Jerusalem artichoke.

Two or three of these trees, it is claimed, provide sufficient food for one man for a whole year. The seeds are also edible, and are roasted in the cinders or cooked in water like chestnuts, which they resemble a little in size and taste.

Another species of the breadfruit tree called the jack tree has fruit structurally resembling the breadfruit, and is eaten on a vast scale, but it is greatly inferior to the real breadfruit in taste. Its ocrea is eaten like chestnuts. A small quantity of fruit and the green ocrea of the genuine breadfruit tree are exported.

BREAD SAUCE (English cookery) – Sauce made of milk and breadcrumbs. It is served with roast game. In England fried breadcrumbs are usually served at the same time as this sauce. (See SAUCE.)

Bream

BREAM. BRÈME – European freshwater fish, in appearance resembling the carp. All the recipes given for carp (q.v.) can be applied to bream. It is mostly used for matelotes (q.v.) and fish stews.

BRÉBANT – Famous Parisian restaurateur. (See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.)

BRÈDES (Créole cookery) – Name given in some of the old French colonies to a dish made from leaves of different plants: watercress, tips of pumpkin shoots, cabbage, spinach, lettuce. This dish is a speciality of Réunion Island; it is very refreshing and is served with Rice à la créole (see RICE).

Cabbage brèdes. BRÈDES DE CHOU – Trim the leaves of a white cabbage and remove the tough centre veins. Shred finely as for sauerkraut.

Cut some bacon into strips and fry until it is light golden. Add a pinch of pounded ginger and a chopped tomato.

Moisten with a little water, simmer for 20 minutes. Put the shredded cabbage into this sauce and cook for about 1½ hours. Serve Rice à la créole (see RICE) separately.

Lettuce brêdes. BRÊDES DE LAITUES – Wash the leaves of cabbage lettuce and cut them lengthways. Soak in cold water. Prepare in the same manner as Watercress brêdes (see below) but use less sauce and allow shorter cooking time.

Pumpkin brêdes. BRÊDES DE CITROUILLE – Detach the leaves of pumpkin shoot tips, leaving a piece of stalk 1 cm. (½ inch) long on each leaf. Peel off all skin and stringy parts, and scrape off all green knots. Wash carefully and leave to soak in cold water. Drain. Put some good fat in a casserole, add some diced bacon, and brown a chopped onion in this mixture. Add a large, skinned, seeded and quartered tomato, and some salt, garlic and ginger, which have been pounded in a mortar. Simmer for a few moments. Add the prepared pumpkin shoots and simmer without adding water.

Spinach brêdes. BRÊDES D'ÉPINARDS – Prepare as above, blanching the spinach before putting it into the sauce.

Watercress brêdes. BRÊDES DE CRESSON – Wash and pick over the cress as for a salad. Fry 150 g. (5 oz.) thickly sliced bacon and a chopped onion until golden. Pound 2 garlic cloves, a pinch of ginger and salt in a mortar, and add to the mixture, together with a peeled, seeded and sliced tomato. Allow to brown for a few moments, then add 1½ large glasses of water. Boil down the sauce slightly, and put in the cress to simmer until it is done. Serve with plenty of sauce and hand Rice à la créole (see RICE) separately.

BRESOLLES – This dish was said to have been invented by the chef in charge of Marquis de Bresolles' kitchen who called it after his master.

'Chop finely 250 g. (generous ½ lb.) lean ham with onions, a few spring onions, some mushrooms and a garlic clove. Season with salt, pepper and a little grated nutmeg, and add a little olive oil.

'Put a layer of this forcemeat into a buttered earthenware casserole. Lay thin slices of veal, beef or mutton on top, and continue alternating layers of forcemeat and slices of meat until the casserole is filled up to ½ cm. (¼ inch) from the top. Cover with a lid and cook in the oven.

'Garnish with braised chestnuts, and pour over some Demi-glace sauce (q.v.) flavoured with Madeira.'

BRESSE – The name of this ancient part of France is known throughout the world for the excellence of Bresse chickens and capons.

BRESTOIS – Cake which used to be made in Brest:

Whisk 12 eggs and 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) fine sugar over a low heat (as for Genoese pastry).

Add 125 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) sweet blanched almonds pounded in a mortar with 3 whole eggs. Flavour with a few drops of lemon essence, a little bitter almond essence, and a small glass of Curaçao. Whisk the mixture thoroughly and add 375 g. (13 oz., generous 1½ cups) melted butter and 375 g. (13 oz., ¾ cups) sieved cake flour. Blend well.

Put the mixture into buttered brioche moulds. Bake in a slow oven. This type of cake, if wrapped in foil, will keep in perfect condition for a long time. It is a kind of 'travelling cake' (gâteau de voyage).

BRETON (Gâteau) – This gâteau was created by Monsieur Dubusc, chief of the Seugnot laboratories.

The Breton, made from almond biscuit paste, is assembled by placing different cakes on top of one another, icing each with a different colour fondant icing and then decorating it.

BRETON FAR. FAR BRETON – Cream flan, a Breton speciality, made commercially.

BRETONNE (À LA) – Most dishes prepared à la bretonne include a garnish of beans cooked à la bretonne (see BEAN, Fresh white haricot beans). Thus Leg or Shoulder of mutton à la bretonne (see MUTTON) is roasted or pot-roasted (sometimes braised), and served with beans.

Purée bretonne is made of beans cooked à la bretonne and served, clarified, as a soup; or if a thicker consistency is retained, as a vegetable or a garnish for meat.

Sauce bretonne is poured over poached or soft-boiled eggs and braised filets of fish. This does not contain any beans but is made by adding finely shredded carrots, celery and leeks, lightly tossed in butter, to thick velouté sauce with cream, or to white wine sauce. (See SAUCE; SOLE, Sole à la bretonne.)

BRETONNEAU – An old Norman name for turbot.

BRIE – Name of an ancient province of France, situated to the east of Paris, with the town of Meaux as capital. The province was once divided into three regions: Brie champenoise (Meaux), Brie française (Brie-Comte-Robert) and Brie pouilleuse (Château-Thierry). These regions were part of the government of Champagne.

The name of Brie is known for the excellent cheeses produced there. There are no other gastronomical specialities. The cuisine is the same as that of the Ile-de-France and, therefore, similar to the one which constitutes the basis of Parisian cookery.

Brie cheeses. FROMAGES DE BRIE – In a research dedicated to Brie cheeses one reads the following: Every year 12 million cheeses are sold in the département of Seine-et-Marne. In Meaux alone 4,420,000 francs' worth of cheese is sold annually; in Crècy 1,300,000 francs' worth.

There are two distinct qualities of Brie cheeses: skim-milk cheeses made, as their name states, from skimmed milk, and cream cheese made from whole cows' milk. The latter (especially the cheeses made in the region of Nangis with pure whole milk drawn twice daily, morning and evening) are extremely delicate. According to M. Teyssier des Forges, it was these cheeses that were served at the Congress of Vienna and proclaimed 'the best in the world'.

It seems that this estimation of Brie cheeses, made in 1863, still holds good. The quality continues to be excellent especially where farm cheeses are concerned, although these, unfortunately, are becoming more and more difficult to find.

The Brie de Meaux and Brie de Coulommiers are best eaten from October to May. The Brie de Melun can be consumed throughout the year. (See CHEESE.)

BRIGNOLE – Dried plum which gets its name from the town of Brignoles in the département of Var. It is used in compotes in the same way as dried apricots and prunes.

BRILL. BARBUE – Flat sea fish, possessing a certain similarity to turbot, from which it differs by its smaller size, slightly more elongated shape, and by the tiny scales which cover its skin. Its flesh is light and delicate.

Brill

How to divide a brill

This fish abounds in all the seas of Europe, but the brill caught in the Atlantic Ocean is of the greatest gastronomical value. Grey sole, a species of flounder, resembles brill. Winter flounder, dab and lemon sole can be prepared in the same way as brill.

Clean the fish by making a transverse incision under the head on the dark-skinned side. Scale and trim, shortening the tail a little. Wash the fish, and cut in half, or in slices or fillets.

Brill à l'américaine. BARBUE À L'AMÉRICAINNE – Cook a medium-sized brill as described in the recipe for Brill in white wine (see below). Drain, and garnish with slices of small lobster or Lobster à l'américaine (see LOBSTER).

Boil down the liquor in which the fish was cooked, and add to it American sauce (see SAUCE). Pour over the brill.

Brill à l'amiral

Brill à l'amiral. BARBUE À L'AMIRAL – Scale and slit lengthwise, on the dark-skinned side, a 1-kg. (2½-lb.) brill. Place it in a buttered shallow pan. Season, and pour in white wine fish stock which has been boiled down to a fumet (q.v.), enough to reach the level of the fish. Season.

Bring to the boil, cover, and place in a hot oven for 25 to 30 minutes. After the fish has been partly cooked, baste from time to time with its own liquor; if basted earlier there is a risk of the fish splitting. When cooked, drain and remove all the dark skin. Trim off the side bones.

Place on a serving dish, taking care to wipe away all liquid. Heat for a moment or two in the oven. Make Normande sauce (see SAUCE) from the liquor in the pan, which has been strained, boiled down, and had a little Crayfish butter (see BUTTER) added to it.

Garnish with oysters coated in egg and breadcrumbs and fried, mussels à la Villeroi, scallop shells filled with crayfish tails à la Nantua with the tops slightly browned under the grill, and mushrooms cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.). Decorate the brill with thin slices of truffle which have been heated in butter and seasoned with salt and pepper.

The method of cooking Brill à l'amiral applies to all flat fish which are braised; braise in very little court-bouillon, and flavour the stock or fumet very well.

Sometimes the fish is glazed by dotting it with crayfish butter and heating it in the oven, surrounded by the above garnish, with the sauce served separately.

Brill à la Bercy. BARBUE À LA BERCY – Make a few incisions on the dark-skinned side of a brill, lifting the fillets lightly and seasoning the fish inside and out. Butter a fireproof dish long enough to take the brill whole, sprinkle it with a tablespoon chopped shallots and parsley, and put in the fish. Add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) white wine and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) concentrated fish stock which has been boiled down to the consistency of a fumet (q.v.). Cut 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) butter into very small pieces and scatter over the fish. Bring to the boil, and put in the oven to cook for 12 to 15 minutes, basting frequently.

When the brill is nearly cooked, glaze it by putting the dish into the hottest part of the oven.

Boiled or poached brill with various sauces. BARBUE BOUILLIE, POCHÉE – Make a court-bouillon (q.v.) of water and salted boiled milk in equal proportions. Put the brill on a wire grill in a shallow pan, and pour the court-bouillon over it. Heat slowly. When it boils, skim off the impurities which rise to the surface of the liquid, cover the brill with a napkin and leave to simmer very slowly, allowing 12 minutes cooking time per 500 g. (1 lb.) of fish.

When cooked, drain the brill thoroughly, and brush over with melted butter before serving. Garnish with boiled potatoes and fresh parsley, and serve with one of the sauces recommended for boiled fish (see SAUCE).

Brill à la bonne femme. BARBUE À LA BONNE FEMME – Prepare as for Brill à la Bercy, adding 125 g. (4 oz.) thinly sliced mushrooms, and moistening with white wine and a few tablespoons Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock. Bring to the boil on the stove, and finish cooking in the oven. Glaze.

Brill à la bourguignonne. BARBUE À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Season a brill with salt and pepper, put in a buttered pan and surround with small glazed onions and small mushrooms. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) red wine, preferably Burgundy. Cover the pan and cook in the oven.

Remove the brill when cooked, and garnish. Boil down the liquor until it reaches the consistency of a fumet (q.v.). Blend in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Kneaded butter (see BUTTER), boil for a minute or two, add 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter, blend thoroughly, and strain. Pour this sauce over the brill.

Braised brill with various garnishes. BARBUE BRAISÉE – Season the brill and put it in a shallow pan on a foundation of sliced carrots and onions which have been lightly fried in butter. Add concentrated fish stock, thyme, parsley and a bay leaf. Bring to the boil, and cook in a slow oven, basting frequently.

Drain the brill and remove the backbone. This is most easily done by placing the fish, dark side up, on a well-buttered long plate or dish, removing the fillets with a very sharp knife, taking out the bone, and replacing the fillets.

Garnish as indicated in the recipe you are using, and cover with a sauce to which has been added the braising liquor, boiled down and strained. Braised brill moistened with red wine fish stock reduced to the consistency of a fumet (q.v.), can be served with the following garnishes: bourguignonne (see above), Chambertin, mâconnaise, etc. (see below). Brill braised in white wine can be served with one of the garnishes used for fish cooked in white wine, especially those recommended for soles.

Brill Brancas. BARBUE BRANCAS – Scale and trim a brill weighing about 750 g. (1½ lb.), and cut into uniform pieces. Put an onion, leek and half a heart of celery shredded to a fine julienne (q.v.) into a pan with 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter and a pinch of salt. Cook very slowly. When the vegetables are about three-quarters done, add 125 g. (4 oz.) finely shredded mushrooms, and finish cooking. This julienne is called bretonne.

Sauté a tablespoon chopped onion in butter, and add 4 peeled, seeded and chopped tomatoes, together with a little chopped garlic, salt and pepper. Simmer slowly, stirring from time to time, until you get a tomato fondue. Add a small spoon chopped parsley.

Butter an ovenware dish, sprinkle with salt and freshly ground pepper, and pour in half the vegetable julienne. Put a bouquet garni (q.v.) in a corner of the dish so that it can be easily removed at the end of cooking. Place the pieces of brill on the dish in the shape of the original fish, season with salt and pepper, and cover with the rest of the julienne. Sprinkle with a few drops of lemon juice and add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine. Scatter a few dabs of butter on the surface of the fish.

Bring slowly to the boil on the stove, then place the dish in a slow oven for 15 to 18 minutes, basting frequently. A few minutes before the end of cooking, put a border of the tomato fondue round the brill. Return the dish to a much hotter oven to glaze the fish. Before serving, sprinkle with chopped parsley.

This way of cooking, evolved from the Dugléré method of preparation, can be used for fish such as young turbot, sole, whiting, fresh cod, plaice (U.S. flounder).

Brill à la cancalaise. BARBUE À LA CANCELALISE – Cook the brill in white wine as described in the recipe for Brill à l'amiral. Drain thoroughly. Garnish with oysters poached in their own liquor, drained, and with their beards removed.

Boil down the liquor in which the fish was cooked, and add to Normande sauce (see SAUCE), which is suitable for brill.

Brill cardinal. BARBUE CARDINAL – Remove the backbone, as described for Braised brill with various garnishes. Season the brill, and stuff it with finely pounded Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT), to which has been added Lobster butter or Crayfish butter (see BUTTER).

Poach the brill in white wine, drain, and garnish with slices of lobster or crayfish. Cover with Cardinal sauce I (see SAUCE, White sauces). Sprinkle with chopped coral.

Brill au Chambertin. BARBUE AU CHAMBERTIN – Cook the brill in concentrated fish stock made with Chambertin wine, as described for Brill à la bourguignonne, making the sauce with Chambertin instead of Burgundy.

Brill au Chambertin is garnished with mushrooms which have been cooked with the fish; brill prepared à la bourguignonne is garnished with mushrooms and small glazed onions.

Brill in Champagne: à la champenoise. BARBUE AU CHAMPAGNE: À LA CHAMPENOISE – Bone and stuff the brill with Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Season with salt and pepper, and place in a fireproof dish on a foundation of julienne (q.v.) of mushrooms which have been lightly tossed in butter.

Add dry Champagne, scatter small pieces of butter on the fish, bring slowly to the boil, and place in the oven to complete cooking, basting frequently.

Drain the fish, and add to the liquor in the dish 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock, and 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) cream. Add butter to the sauce, strain, pour over the brill, and glaze in a very hot oven for a few minutes.

Brill Chérubin. BARBUE CHÉRUBIN – Season the brill with paprika, place in a buttered pan on a foundation of a fine salpicon (q.v.) of carrots, leeks and celery, add concentrated fish stock, and cook in the oven, basting frequently.

Drain the brill, and surround with small heaps of very thick Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) alternating with truffles cut into large dice.

Boil down the liquor in which the fish was cooked to a fumet (q.v.), strain, and add a julienne (q.v.) of sweet (red) pimentos which have been lightly fried in butter. Mix with Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE) and pour it over the brill. Glaze in a very hot oven.

Cold brill with various sauces. BARBUE FROID – Cook the fish as described in the recipe for Boiled brill, and leave to cool in the liquor. Drain the brill well, garnish with fresh parsley or lettuce hearts, and serve with mayonnaise or any other sauce recommended for cold fish.

Brill with crayfish: à la Nantua. BARBUE AUX ÉCRIVISSES: À LA NANTUA – Prepare as Brill with shrimps (see below), replacing shrimps by crayfish tails, and covering with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE, Compound sauces). Boil down the liquor and add to the sauce before serving.

Brill in cream au gratin. BARBUE À LA CRÈME AU GRATIN – Prepare as Creamed cod au gratin (see COD), using brill cut into pieces.

Brill à la dieppoise. BARBUE À LA DIEPPOISE – Cook whole or filleted brill in white wine. Drain well. Garnish with mussels à la dieppoise (cooked in white wine) and peeled shrimps. Pour over the fish White wine sauce I (see SAUCE, White sauces) to which the concentrated pan juices have been added. Glaze in a very hot oven.

Brill Dugléré. BARBUE DUGLÉRE – Cut the brill into pieces and prepare as described in the recipe for Bass Dugléré (see BASS).

Brill à la fermière. BARBUE À LA FERMIÈRE – Season the brill with salt and pepper and place in a buttered dish on a foundation of a fondue (q.v.) made from carrots, onions, leeks and celery, shredded and lightly cooked in butter. Cover the brill with more fondue. Add a few tablespoons of dry white wine, or concentrated fish stock based on white wine (see STOCK, Fish stock). Scatter a few dabs of butter on the fish and cook in a slow oven, basting frequently. When the fish is done, add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) cream. Glaze in the oven.

Another method is to put the fish in a buttered ovenproof dish on a foundation of chopped onion which has been lightly fried in butter. Cover with sliced mushrooms, moisten with red wine, and add a few small pieces of butter. Cook in the oven.

Strain the pan juices, bring to the boil, and thicken with kneaded butter. Add a little fresh butter, stir well, and pour this sauce over the fish. Glaze in the oven.

Fillets of brill. FILETS DE BARBUE – Clean, scale and wash the fish, and fillet by slitting it down the middle from head to tail. Slide a sharp knife under the fillets to lift them, taking care to sever them completely from the body of the fish. Put the fillets flat on the table, skin side down, and slide the knife blade between the fish and the skin, holding the fillet at one end so as to remove the skin in one piece.

All methods of preparation for whole brill can be applied to fillets.

Fillets of brill à l'anglaise. FILETS DE BARBUE À L'ANGLAISE – Flatten the fillets a little, dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and fry in clarified butter until both sides are golden. Put softened Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) on each fillet. Decorate with half-slices of lemon placed round the border of the dish.

Fillets of fish grilled and accompanied by melted butter and boiled potatoes are often served under the name of fillets of fish à l'anglaise.

Fillets of brill à la créole. FILETS DE BARBUE À LA CRÉOLE – Season the fillets with salt and paprika, lightly dredge with

How to fillet brill.

First cut the fish lengthwise,
then slide the knife along the backbone to detach the fillet
(Larousse)

flour and fry in butter or oil. Garnish with halved tomatoes cooked in oil. Scoop out the centre of each half-tomato and fill with a spoonful of Rice pilaf (see PILAF). Add to this garnish peeled and diced sweet pimentos which have been cooked in oil.

Add a tablespoon chopped garlic and parsley to the hot oil in the pan, sprinkle the fillets with lemon juice, and pour the oil over them just before serving.

Fillets of brill curried. FILETS DE BARBUE À L'INDIENNE – Season the fillets with salt and pepper and put them into an ovenproof dish on a foundation of 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion which has been fried in butter, and seasoned with curry powder and a pinch of pounded garlic. Place 4 peeled, seeded and chopped tomatoes on the fish, and moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) white wine. Add a few small pieces of butter.

Cook in the oven for 10 minutes, basting frequently. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thick cream. Finish cooking in the oven, still basting frequently. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Fillets of brill à la Duxelles. FILETS DE BARBUE À LA DUXELLES – Season the fillets with salt and pepper, lightly dredge with flour and fry in a mixture of oil and butter.

Place on a serving dish on a foundation of a duxelles (q.v.) bound with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with slices of peeled lemon, sprinkle with chopped parsley, and pour the hot butter left from frying over the fish.

Fillets of brill Richelieu. FILETS DE BARBUE RICHELIEU – Dip the fillets in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in butter until both sides are golden. Garnish with thin slices of truffles heated in butter. Put dabs of Maître d'hôtel butter on top (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Fillets of brill à la toulonnaise. FILETS DE BARBUE À LA TOULONNAISE – Season the fillets with salt and pepper and dip them in egg and breadcrumbs. Fry in oil until both sides are golden. Arrange on a bed of thick Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) which, together with chopped onion, has been cooked in oil; add a pinch of pounded garlic. Surround with diced aubergines fried in oil, and put thin slices of lemon on the fillets. Sprinkle with a few tablespoons of the hot oil.

Fillets of brill à la tyrolienne. FILETS DE BARBUE À LA TYROLIENNE – Season the fillets with salt and paprika, brush with oil and grill on low heat. Arrange on a bed of Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) and cover with onion rings which have been fried in oil.

Fillets of brill Véron. FILETS DE BARBUE VÉRON – Cut the fillets in half lengthways, season with salt and pepper, dip in melted butter and breadcrumbs, sprinkle with more melted butter and cook under a low grill. Arrange on a layer of Véron sauce (see SAUCE) when serving.

Brill à la florentine. BARBUE À LA FLORENTINE – Cook in a little concentrated white wine stock. Drain, and arrange on a foundation of leaf spinach which has been cooked in butter. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and glaze.

This method is used for fillets cooked in white wine; very little liquid should be used. When cooking whole fish, remove the central bone after cooking, and trim all round before arranging it on the spinach.

Fried brill. BARBUE FRITE – Clean small brill, soak in milk, lightly dredge with flour, and deep-fry in very hot oil. Drain, dry in a cloth, season with fine salt, and garnish with fried parsley and slices of lemon.

Brill au gratin. BARBUE AU GRATIN – Proceed as described in the recipe for Sole au gratin (see SOLE), using small brill.

Grilled brill. BARBUE GRILLÉE – Make a few shallow incisions on the brill, season with salt and pepper, brush with oil or butter and grill on low heat. Garnish with fresh parsley and slices of lemon, and serve with Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) or any sauce recommended for grilled fish.

Jellied brill with various garnishes. BARBUE GLACÉE À LA GELÉE – Cook the brill in a little concentrated stock, based either on red or white wine, depending on the nature of the dish. Allow it to cool in its own strained liquor. Dry and trim the brill, and coat it with clarified jelly (see JELLY).

All garnishes recommended for Cold salmon (see SALMON) can be applied to brill.

Brill à la mâconnaise. BARBUE À LA MÂCONNAISE – Bone a medium-sized brill, taking care not to tear the white skin. Season, and stuff with fish forcemeat mixed with dry duxelles (q.v.) and chopped parsley.

Cook in concentrated fish stock based on red (Mâcon) wine, as described in the recipe for Brill à la bourguignonne. Drain the brill thoroughly and arrange on a dish. Surround with small white cèpes which have been fried in butter and seasoned with small shallots. Cover with a sauce as described in the recipe for Brill à la bourguignonne. Simmer small artichokes in butter, fill with a salpicon (q.v.) of truffles à la crème, brown the top, and place round the fish.

Brill à la marinière. BARBUE À LA MARINIÈRE – Prepare like Brill in white wine (see below). Garnish à la marinière (see GARNISHES) and cover with Marinière sauce (see SAUCE).

Brill à la ménagère. BARBUE À LA MÉNAGÈRE – Season the fish with salt and pepper, and place in an ovenproof dish on a foundation of chopped onions, lightly fried in butter and seasoned with pounded thyme and bay leaf. Moisten with red wine and cook in a covered pan.

When the brill is ready, arrange on a dish and thicken the pan juices with kneaded butter. Bring to the boil, add a little fresh butter, and pour over the fish.

Brill Mornay. BARBUE MORNAY – Cook fillets of brill in concentrated fish stock and arrange on a dish lined with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Cover with some of the same sauce, sprinkle with a mixture of grated Gruyère and Parmesan cheese, add melted butter, and brown the top.

Brill with mushrooms. BARBUE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Cook the brill – whole, in fillets or cut in pieces – in a concentrated white wine fish stock. Drain thoroughly, arrange on a dish, and garnish with mushrooms. Serve with White wine sauce 1 (see SAUCE), incorporating the liquor in which the fish was cooked.

Brill with mussels. BARBUE AUX MOULES – Cook the brill in a little concentrated fish stock. Drain, arrange on a dish, and surround with mussels which have been cooked in white wine. Cover with white wine sauce, or Normande sauce (see SAUCE) which has incorporated the liquor in which the fish and the mussels were cooked.

Brill à la normande. BARBUE À LA NORMANDE – Cook the brill in a little concentrated fish stock. Drain, arrange on a dish, and surround with garnish à la normande (see GARNISHES). Cover with Normande sauce (see SAUCE), to which has been added the boiled-down liquor in which the fish was cooked.

The method of preparation known as à la normande is also applied to turbot, plaice and sole.

Brill with oysters. BARBUE AUX HÛTRES – Cook the brill in a little concentrated white wine fish stock. Drain, and garnish with poached oysters. Add a white wine sauce to the liquor in which the brill and the oysters were cooked, and pour over the fish.

Brill sur le plat. BARBUE SUR LE PLAT – Proceed as described in the recipe for Sole sur le plat (see SOLE), using small brill.

Brill à la portugaise. BARBUE À LA PORTUGAISE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Bass à la portugaise (see BASS).

Brill à la provençale. BARBUE À LA PROVENÇALE – As Bass à la provençale (see BASS).

Brill in red wine. BARBUE AU VIN ROUGE – Cook the brill in a little concentrated fish stock based on red wine. Drain, and arrange on a dish.

Make a red wine sauce, incorporating the liquor in which the fish was cooked. Thicken with kneaded butter, or blend with Espagnole sauce based on fish stock (see SAUCE). Add a little butter, strain, and pour over the brill.

Brill à la russe. BARBUE À LA RUSSE – As described in the recipe for Sole à la russe (see SOLE), using medium brill.

Brill in scallop shells. COQUILLES DE BARBUE – Pipe a border of Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES) round the edges of scallop shells. Cover the centre of the shells with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), add small slices of hot brill, and cover with more Mornay sauce. Scatter grated cheese on top, sprinkle with melted butter and brown the top.

Brill with shrimps. BARBUE AUX CREVETTES – Cook the brill in a little white wine fish fumet (q.v.). Drain, and garnish the sides with peeled shrimps. Boil down the liquor in which the brill was cooked, add Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE) and pour over the fish.

Brill stuffed with salmon, with various sauces and garnishes.

BARBUE SAUMONÉE – Clean a brill weighing about 2 kg. (4½ lb.) and slit it lengthwise down the middle on the dark side. Remove the central bone through this opening, taking care not to tear the white skin.

Season, and stuff the brill with a cream forcemeat made of salmon and truffles. Lay the fish in a buttered ovenproof dish, season, moisten with 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) white wine fish fumet (q.v.) and poach gently in the oven with the lid on the dish.

When the brill is cooked, drain, dry in a cloth, and arrange on a dish. Boil down the juices, add to normande sauce, and pour over the fish.

All methods of preparation given for brill and sole poached in white wine can be applied to this dish, for which the following garnishes are suitable: amiral, cancalaise, cardinal, champanoise, diplomate, Nantua, normande, Polignac, Victoria.

Stuffed brill with various garnishes. BARBUE FARCIE – Bone the brill as described in the recipe for Brill stuffed with salmon. Stuff with Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Poach in a little concentrated fish stock.

Drain the fish, arrange on a dish, surround with the chosen garnish, and pour over it a sauce that goes well with the garnish.

All the methods given for Braised brill in red or white wine can be applied to stuffed brill.

Brill à vénitienne. BARBUE À LA VÉNITIENNE – As Sole à la vénitienne (see SOLE).

Brill à la Victoria. BARBUE À LA VICTORIA – Cook the brill as described for Brill in white wine (see below). Drain, arrange on a dish, and garnish with a salpicon (q.v.) of the flesh of spiny lobster (U.S. crayfish) and truffles. Cover with Victoria sauce (see SAUCE). Glaze in the oven.

Brill in white wine. BARBUE AU VIN BLANC – Season the brill and place in a buttered pan with a thinly sliced onion and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Moisten with a few tablespoons white wine, or with concentrated fish stock based on white wine and boiled down to the consistency of a fumet (q.v.). Cook on low heat with the lid on the pan.

Drain the brill, arrange on a dish, and cover with White wine sauce (see SAUCE), using as a basis the liquor in which the fish was cooked. The brill can be served as it is, or glazed quickly in a very hot oven or under a hot grill.

Jean Anthelme
Brillat-Savarin

BRILLAT-SAVARIN (Jean Anthelme) – French magistrate, politician and gastronome, born at Belley in 1755, died in Paris in 1826.

He started his career as a lawyer at the Court of Belley, became deputy of the National Assembly in 1789, was made mayor and commander of the National Guard of Belley in 1793, was banished during the Reign of Terror, fled to Switzerland, then spent three years as a refugee in America.

He returned to France in September, 1797, had his name removed from the list of émigrés, became first a commissioner to the army in Germany under Augereau, then commissioner at the court of the département of Seine-et-Oise, then member of the Supreme Court of Appeal.

He published various pamphlets, political and on subjects of law, but his lasting fame rests on a gastronomical work on which he had long been engaged, and which was published shortly before his death, la Physiologie du goût.

BRILLAT-SAVARIN (Method of preparing meat) – Lamb and mutton noisettes, with a garnish of duchess potato cassolettes (q.v.), filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of foie gras, truffles, and green asparagus tips in butter. Also the name of a cheese made in Normandy (see page 210).

BRINDE – Old French word for a two-handed wine-cup.

BRINE. SAUMURE – Solution of sea salt, to which is often added sugar, saltpetre and aromatics. Preserving mixture for foodstuffs.

Liquid brine. SAUMURE LIQUIDE – For pickled tongues and pressed beef. Boil in a large pan 5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts) water, 2¼ kg. (5 lb.) rock salt, 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) brown sugar, 150 g. (5 oz.) saltpetre, 15 peppercorns, 15 juniper berries, a sprig of thyme and a bay leaf. Boil for 25 minutes and leave to cool.

Prick the tongues, rub with salt and saltpetre, and place in a receptacle. Pour in the brine, and cover the receptacle with a piece of smooth wood, pressing it well down on the tongues. Keep in a cool place for six days in summer, eight in winter.

Full brine pickle for various meats. GRANDE SAUMURE – Pour 25 litres (5½ gallons, 7 gallons) water into a large copper vessel and add 12½ kg. (27½ lb.) rock salt, 1½ kg. (3 lb.) saltpetre and 800 g. (1¾ lb., 3½ cups) brown sugar. Bring to the boil on a strong heat.

To test the density of the brine, put a peeled potato into it. If the potato floats, the proportion of salt is too high and more water should be added; if the potato sinks to the bottom, the liquid should be boiled down until the potato is suspended in the middle. When this is achieved, remove the brine from the heat and leave to cool.

Prick the meat to be preserved with a long needle which has been rubbed in salt mixed with saltpetre and place in a brine tub, which should have a grille at the bottom for the meat to stand on. Pour in the brine when it is quite cold. Leave to pickle for at least 8 days if the meat weighs 4 to 5 kg. (8½ to 11 lb.). If larger cuts are used, inject brine into the meat with a special pump.

BRIOCHE – Cake made from yeast dough, usually in the shape of a ball with a smaller ball pressed into the top as a 'head'.

Brioche was made in Paris with baker's yeast until the middle of the eighteenth century. Brewer's yeast, which had been in use for a long time in Poland and Austria, was introduced into Alsace and Lorraine when the court of King Stanislas was transferred to Lunéville. The brioche of Gisors and Gournay, great butter marketing centres, were famous. Sansvoisin gives a recipe for Gisors brioche:

'The dough is made the night before baking. Make a dough of 750 g. (1¾ lb., 7 cups) flour and 7 eggs. Mix 250 g. (9 oz., 2¼ cups) flour with 10 g. (½ oz.) yeast. Mix with the dough, together with 750 g. (1¾ lb., 3½ cups) butter. Keep the dough in a bowl.

'When ready for baking, shape into brioche just before putting them in the oven.'

Various brioche doughs are given under the heading

Brioche
(Scarnati)

BRIOLET

DOUGH. For the preparation of various hors-d'œuvre and small hot entrée dishes, a standard brioche is made. (See BRIOCHE DOUGH I and II.)

Standard brioche dough. PÂTE À BRIOCHE COMMUNE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Brioche dough (see DOUGH).

Dough for brioche mousseline. PÂTE À BRIOCHE MOUSSELINE – Make a Brioche dough (see DOUGH), using 400 g. (14 oz., 1½ cups) butter and 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) flour. Add 60 g. (2½ oz., 5 tablespoons) softened butter to each 500 g. (1 lb.) dough.

Brioche en couronne

Brioche en couronne – Roll brioche dough into a round loaf, place on a baking sheet in the shape of a crown, and make a few light incisions on the surface. Brush with beaten egg and bake in a moderate oven.

Brioche Goubard

Brioche Goubaud – Line a buttered cake tin with brioche dough. Roll out another piece of dough, cut into pieces, moulding them into little pies. Stuff them with a salpicon (q.v.) of preserved fruit which has been steeped in rum or liqueur. Fill the cake tin with the pies, leave to rise in a warm place, brush with beaten egg and bake. When removed from the oven, brush the pie-tops with diluted apricot jam.

Brioche mousseline – This is baked in a tall mould, further heightened by buttered greaseproof paper tied round top.

Butter the mould and three-parts fill it with Mousseline brioche dough (see DOUGH). Leave to rise and bake in a moderate oven.

Cheese brioche. BRIOCHE AU FROMAGE – Dice or grate 250 g. (9 oz.) Gruyère cheese, and knead into 2 kg. (4½ lb.) ordinary dough. Leave to rise, and bake in a buttered mould.

Filled brioches à la bohémienne. BRIOCHES GARNIES À LA BOHÉMIENNE – Small brioches, three-quarters scooped out and filled with various mixtures: mousses, purées, salpicons, etc.

Brioche mousseline

Fruit briochin. BRIOCHIN AUX FRUITS – Line a flan ring with firm brioche dough, adding a layer of frangipane (q.v.). Steep sliced or diced fruit in liqueur, place on the frangipane, and cover with brioche dough. Leave to rise for an hour, brush with beaten egg, and bake in a fairly hot oven.

Brioche à tête

Large brioche à tête. GROSSE BRIOCHE À TÊTE – Roll a piece of brioche dough into a ball and place in a buttered mould. Make a hole in the dough and put into it a small ball of the dough, tapered to a point. Make a few light incisions on the surface of the dough, brush with beaten egg and bake in a hot oven.

Small brioches. PETITES BRIOCHES – Bake in small fluted moulds in the same way as Large brioche à tête.

BRIOLET – Slang word synonymous with another slang word, piquette (i.e., wine of poor quality). An allusion to a Brie wine which is rather mediocre.

BRIOLE (Corsican cookery) – Chestnut meal, prepared in the same way as polenta, with the addition of milk or cream.

BRIONNE – Name for chayote, a vegetable of the Cucurbitaceae family. (See CHAYOTE.)

BRISSE (Baron) – Author of culinary works which were not always accurate. His books include la Cuisine à l'usage des ménages bourgeois et des petits ménages, la Petite cuisine du baron Brisse and 366 menus, all published in the latter part of the nineteenth century. He had a high-flown romantic style, speaking of turkeys 'in blossom', and is remembered for his curiosity value rather than for gastronomy.

BRITAIN – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.

A Breton farmhouse (French Government Tourist Office)

BRITTANY. BRETAGNE – Choice food products are found in abundance in Brittany, whether they originate in the sea or on land. Excellent sheep (notably 'salt-meadow' sheep) and cattle are raised.

The Breton larder is well stocked with all sorts of foods and all of first-class quality. Let us give a rapid survey of these.

Among the seafoods are Cancale and Morbihan oysters, and oysters found in the rivers Auray and Belon; clams, cockles, scallops, winkles, ormers, haliotes, spiny lobsters, crabs, shrimps, Lorient sardines, conger eels (which are made into cotriade, so popular with the Breton fishermen), soles, turbot, brill, plaice, mackerel, herrings, tunny.

The rivers produce pike, carp, trout, eels, shad; the Odet and Aulne salmon are famous. Meat is of good quality; mutton and pork are excellent.

Sampling the culinary specialities of Brittany
(French Government Tourist Office)

Among the poultry particular mention should be made of the Nantes ducklings and succulent young turkeys. Ground and winged game are famous.

Roscoff cauliflowers and artichokes are sent to the markets of London and Paris. Breton potatoes must be mentioned, and Plougastel strawberries and apples are noteworthy.

Beverages—Cider is the usual drink of the Bretons. Among the famous growths are those of Pleudihen, Fouesnant, Clohars and Saint-Féréou.

The Loire-Atlantique produces an excellent dry white wine, best drunk young: the Muscadet. The name 'Muscadet' is the local appellation for a variety of vine, the 'melon', that was introduced into Brittany from Burgundy in the seventeenth century. There are two Muscadets, that of Sèvres-et-Maine and that of the banks of the Loire.

Gastronomic map of Brittany

BROCCIO

The region of Nantes also produces a V.D.Q.S., the best of the wines, very dry with a hint of acidity which is much appreciated by connoisseurs. It is an excellent accompaniment for fish and shellfish.

Culinary specialties – The best known are Cornouaille buckwheat and bacon soup; cotriade – the soup of the Breton fishermen similar to the chaudrée (q.v.) of the Aunis sailors; Morlaix flams; Ancenis andouilles and sausages, large andouilles de Bretagne; excellent black puddings; Quimperle andouillettes; pike au beurre blanc; shad à la crème; Nantes bacon; roast leg of salt-meadow lamb with beans called 'à la bretonne'; buckwheat girdlecakes and pancakes; Quimperle oat loaf à la crème; Quimper pancakes; Morlaix brioches; Lorient and Quimper cakes; Rennes mingaux (a kind of cream cheese similar to the Saumur crémets); Nantes flat cakes and guilarets; biscuits.

BROCCIO – See CHEESE.

BROCCOLI. CHOUX BROCOLIS – The flower heads which develop in the leaf axils are eaten before they are fully grown. They are also called broccoli tips. All methods of preparation given for cauliflower apply to broccoli.

The flower in this type of cabbage is generally very small. Broccoli is also eaten for its leaves as well as its flowers.

BROCKET. DAGUET – The name given to a young stag, between one year and eighteen months old. The French name daguet comes from dague, dagger, and refers to the shape of the young stag's horns.

In cookery, all recipes for roebuck (q.v.) are suitable for brocket.

BROOKLIME. BECCABUNGA – This plant is also called water pimpernel. It is a kind of European cress which grows wild on the banks of streams and ponds.

It is eaten in salads like watercress and can be prepared in all the ways suitable for the latter (see CRESS).

It is ordinarily used as a condiment for salad.

BROUILLY – Famous red Beaujolais wine.

BROUTES or BROUTONS (Béarn cookery) – Old cabbage shoots, served mainly during Lent.

Trim and wash the cabbage and cook in salted water. Drain and dry. Season with oil and vinegar.

In some villages in the Basses-Pyrénées a mixture of leeks and white cabbage, cooked together, drained, pressed and cut into pieces, is also called broutes.

BROYE (Béarn cookery) – Meal prepared from white or roasted maize (corn) flour.

'If white, that is to say unroasted, flour is used, make the broye as an ordinary bouilli. Bring some vegetable stock or simply salted water to the boil and little by little add the flour until a paste of a fairly firm consistency is obtained.

'When the bouilli is cooked, and it should be stirred all the time during cooking, it is served with a ladle, which should be dipped in fat to prevent the bouilli sticking to it.

'If roasted flour is used (troustad or tourrado, as they say in Béarn), you make a well out of it, moisten with the liquid indicated, blend well and proceed to cook.

'Cold broye can be cut into slices and fried in sizzling fat until golden.' (From la Cuisine en Béarn, by Simin Palay.)

BRUGNON – A French name for nectarine or smooth-skinned peach. For methods of preparation, see PEACH.

BRUNOISE – This word has the following meanings:

1. A method of shredding vegetables very finely. (Thus, people speak of shredding carrots, leeks, celery, into a brunoise.) All these ingredients are then cooked in butter or some other fat.

2. A mixture of vegetables, such as carrots, onions, leeks, celery and sometimes turnips slowly cooked in butter. This sort of brunoise is used for making soups or as a supplementary element for certain forcemeats, sauces and salpicons (q.v.).

3. A mixture of vegetables cut into small dice which is used as an aromatic element for crayfish and other dishes. (See CRAYFISH, TRUFFLES.)

Vegetable brunoise for soups. BRUNOISE DE LÉGUMES POUR POTAGES – Cut the following into dice about 3 mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) across: 3 small carrots (150 g., 5 oz.),  $\frac{1}{2}$  small turnip (100 g., 4 oz.), 2 leeks (75 g., 3 oz.), 1 very small onion (25 g., 1 oz.) and 2 stalks white celery (50 g., 2 oz.). Season these vegetables with salt and a pinch of fine sugar and simmer them in a covered pan on a low heat with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. When they are nicely softened add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) stock and leave to cook for 15 minutes. At the last moment, add a tablespoon cooked garden peas and a tablespoon diced French string beans.

Add 2 or 3 tablespoons of this mixture to every litre (scant quart, generous quart) soup.

BRUSH. PINCEAU – Kitchen tool consisting of hair or bristle attached to a handle used for brushing with melted butter or oil various articles intended for grilling.

The brush is also used in pastry-making, for buttering baking tins and other utensils, and for brushing the tops of pastries with beaten egg.

BRUSSELS SPROUTS. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES – The buds which develop in the leaf axils are eaten between October and the end of March.

Boiled Brussels sprouts. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES À L'ANGLAISE – Trim the sprouts, which means removing outer leaves which are either too hard or too withered, and cutting the base of each sprout. Wash them well.

Cook the sprouts in boiling salted water and drain. Serve fresh butter separately.

Brussels sprouts with cream. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES À LA CRÈME – Half cook the sprouts in salted boiling water, drain well, and simmer in butter. Cover with boiling fresh cream to which butter has been added. The sprouts can also be moistened with a Cream sauce (see SAUCE) instead of cream.

Brussels sprouts à l'indienne. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES À L'INDIENNE – Simmer the sprouts in butter and moisten with a curry sauce. Surround with a border of rice cooked the Indian way (see RICE).

Brussels sprouts in gravy. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES AU JUS – Simmer the sprouts in butter until cooked, then add a few tablespoons rich veal stock. Cook a little longer so that the sprouts can get well soaked in the gravy.

Brussels sprouts à la milanaise. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES À LA MILANAISE – Boil the sprouts and drain them well. Heap them on a buttered dish which has been sprinkled with grated cheese. Sprinkle with more grated cheese, pour melted butter over the sprouts, and brown in the oven. Serve with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Brussels sprouts Mornay. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES MORNAY – This is prepared in the same way as Cauliflower Mornay (see CAULIFLOWER) with the sprouts heaped on a gratin dish.

Brussels sprouts à la polonaise. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES À LA POLONAISE – Prepare like Cauliflower à la polonaise (see CAULIFLOWER).

Brussels sprouts purée. PURÉE DE CHOUX DE BRUXELLES – Prepare with blanched Brussels sprouts simmered in butter, in the same way as Cauliflower purée (see CAULIFLOWER).

Brussels sprouts salad. SALADE DE CHOUX DE BRUXELLES –

Festive buffet, 1785

Boil the sprouts, drain well, and arrange in a salad bowl. Season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Sprinkle with chopped chervil or with salad herbs.

Brussels sprouts sautéed in butter. CHOUX DE BRUXELLES SAUTÉS AU BEURRE – Boil and drain the sprouts. Sauté lightly in butter until they are brown. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

BRUXELLOISE (À LA) – Garnish for pieces of meat, small or large, composed of Brussels sprouts and pommes château.

BUCCAN. BOUCAN – Place where Indians cured their meat. The word also applies to the actual grid on which the smoking was done.

BUCKWHEAT. BLÉ NOIR – Variety of Saracen corn.

Buckwheat (Russian soup garnish). GRUAU DE SARRASIN, BLÉ NOIR – Add 1 kg. (2½ lb.) buckwheat to 7 or 8 dl. (1½ pints, 1½ pints) salted warm water and work to a smooth paste. Press into a deep pan; bake in hot oven for 2 hours.

Remove the crust which has formed on the surface, and turn out the buckwheat mixture into a pan without touching the crust which has formed at the bottom and on the sides of the dish.

Work the dough with 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter, and spread out on a slab until it is 2 cm. (¾ inch) thick. Leave to cool under a weight.

Cut into biscuits with a pastry-cutter and brown these with butter. Serve with broth. No use is made of the crusts left in the dish.

Buckwheat kasha – See KASHA.

BUFFALO. BUFFLE – Member of the ox family which is found in hot, swampy countries of the Old World. Buffaloes are domesticated in Italy and Asia. The American buffalo, more properly called bison, is much larger than the Asiatic buffalo. This animal is fast becoming extinct. The flesh of Asiatic and Italian buffaloes can be prepared in any manner suitable for beef (q.v.).

BUFFET (Restaurant) – The word buffet means a large tiered table often set near the entrance of a restaurant, on which dishes of meats, poultry, fish, cold sweets and pastries are arranged in a decorative manner. The buffet of a large restaurant is, in fact, a show of choice edibles.

Large tables with a display of foods set in or near a ball-room are also called buffets. The food is dispensed by a butler and the guests come to the table to be served with sandwiches, cold meats, pastries, and various drinks; or to have consommé served in cups. Buffets of this type are also arranged for wedding lunches.

BUFFET (Station). BUFFET DE GARE – A few years ago the S.N.C.F. (National French Railways) initiated a series of 'buffets gastronomiques'. Those of Lille, Épernay and Avignon have an especially high reputation.

BUFFETER – Action of drawing-off wine from a barrel and replacing it with water. 'Servir à buffet' used to mean serving guests with wine which had been liberally watered down.

BUGEY – Includes the part of Savoy which is today the département of Ain. Brillat-Savarin was born in Belley, which was the chief town of the old département of Bugey. The cuisine of this area is said to be among the best in France. Nantua, in particular, is celebrated for its crayfish, and all the famous cheeses of Burgundy are to be found there. The markets are full of choice plump capons, chickens, ducks and the best salt-meadow lamb. Trout and pike abound in the rivers, and the Bourget lake supplies lavaret, perch and char. The country hams are noted, and the hillsides and the plains provide succulent game. This fertile region also produces truffles, morels, and a great variety of other mushrooms.

Culinary specialties – Salt ham; Belley sausage; Belley fondue; Bugey rissoles; 'cardinalised crayfish'; crayfish croquettes; timbale of crayfish tails à la Nantua; char à la façon du lac du Bourget; quenelles and lavaret gâteaux; crayfish tails au gratin; pike à la crème; fillet of beef studded with black truffles; braised leg of mutton with onions; round of veal with Valromey black morels; calves' sweetbreads and black truffles; stuffed calves' ears; truffled turkey; truffled giblets with chestnuts; Bresse truffled chicken; chicken fricassée; chicken Célestine; gâteau de foies blondes; jugged hare de Diane de Châteaumorand; Bernardini salmis of woodcock. The salé of Bugey is the national dish of the region, just as anguries, a water-melon salad, is associated with Belley. The well-known Bugey rissole is a hot hors-d'œuvre eaten at Christmas; the following proportions will make a dozen rissoles.

Cut 250 g. (9 oz.) roast turkey into small pieces. Clean 150 g. (5 oz.) tripe thoroughly, cut up, and cook for 3 hours in a court-bouillon (q.v.) of white wine and beef stock, seasoned with salt, pepper, onions and a small bouquet of thyme and chervil. Cook a chopped onion in butter without allowing it to brown, add the meats, season with salt and pepper, moisten with a small quantity of roast turkey juices, and sauté for 5 or 6 minutes. Simmer until the liquor has boiled down by half, and add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) large currants. Leave to cool.

Make some puff pastry, roll out about 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick, cut into small rectangles. Spoon some filling onto these, fold over, brush with beaten egg, and bake in the oven.

BUGLOSS. BUGLOSSE – Common name for anchusa, a plant also known as alkanet. Its flowers are eaten as a salad, considered to be a tonic, and said to have been a great favourite of Louis XIII. In some regions the leaves are eaten prepared the same way as spinach.

BUGNES – A kind of fritter, made from rolled-out dough which is cut up and fried in oil. Lyons is the 'capital' of the bugnes.

BULBOUS CHERVIL. CERFEUIL BULBEUX – Biennial plant cultivated for its tuberous roots, which are rich in fecula and have a strong aromatic flavour. The roots are prepared like Chinese artichokes.

BULL. TAUREAU – Flesh of young bulls is tougher than that of beef, but of good quality. The flesh of old animals is very tough, and often musky in taste.

BULLY-BEEF. ENDAUBAGE – Slang term for tinned meat supplied to the armed forces.

Bugey crayfish

BUNDENFLEISCH – German word meaning Grisons salt beef.

Pickle a lean piece of meat for 6 days, take out of the brine and hang for 5 or 6 months. This pickling is done in the Swiss canton of Grisons in November, and the salted meat sold to the public the following April. When taken out of the brine it is put in a smoke-curing house for one day, except in the Engadine, where pickling is done commercially on a large scale, and the beef is not smoke-cured.

BUNG. BONDE – Wooden stopper for barrel bung-holes.

BUNTING. BRUANT – Genus of aquatic, web-footed birds, found in the marches of Bresse and Dauphiné. It is prepared in the same way as wild duck (see DUCK, Wild duck).

BURBOT. LOTTE DE RIVIÈRE – Species of freshwater fish with long dorsal fins, a long tail fin, and drooping barbels on the chin.

Burbot liver. FOIE DE LOTTE DE RIVIÈRE – Prepared in the same way as the soft roes of various fish, though it requires longer poaching than soft roes.

The liver is highly prized by connoisseurs. It is poached in white wine and used for various Lenten garnishes. It is also made into pâté (q.v.).

BURDOCK (Butter-bur, Beggar's buttons). BARDANE – Hardy perennial plant which grows along paths on the roadside and in the hedgerows. It is also called herbe aux teigneux (scurvy grass) because in the past its leaves were used as poultices for certain kinds of sores. The fresh spring root is well known as a depurative and is particularly useful in the treatment of furunculosis.

The tea made from its leaves is refreshing and stimulates the digestion. It soothes inflammations of the stomach and is an excellent remedy for stomach ulcers.

In Scotland young shoots and peeled roots of burdock are used in cooking; they are prepared as salsify.

BURGUNDY. BOURGOGNE – Burgundy is the region of France where the best food is to be had, and it enjoys the esteem of gastronomes for the quality and variety of its wines.

We are beholden to its excellent cuisine for a method of preparation called à la bourguignonne, used mainly for large cuts of braised meat, also for eggs, fish and poultry; a red wine sauce with a garnish of mushrooms and small onions.

Ain is the district where the best poultry is raised, and where the town of Belley, associated with Brillat-Savarin, is situated. Nantua evokes visions of crayfish à la crème; Saône-et-Loire has the town of Mâcon, which has given its name to one of our best wines; the Côte-d'Or, with Dijon, may be said to be one of the capitals of gastronomy; the Yonne produces Chablis wines, esteemed by gourmets.

The Burgundy larder is abundantly rich. In the pasture lands of Charolais the cattle give succulent beef. The poultry of Bresse is considered among the best in France. In Morvan, ground and winged game abounds. The woodcock of the Dombes marshes is unrivalled.

In the ponds, rivers and streams, pike, char, trout, salmon trout and crayfish are found. The escargots of Burgundy are most succulent. Among other excellent products are Courtivron and Oyonnax morels, St George's agaric, cèpes and other mushrooms, found in abundance in the woods and fields, and the choice vegetables cultivated in Auxonne and around Dijon.

The fruit of the Burgundy orchards is famous: Saint-Bris cherries; and blackcurrants used not only to prepare the famous Cassis liqueur made in Dijon, but also for a vast number of sweetmeats. Dijon mustard is considered the best; condiments seasoned with vinegar, such as pickled gherkins, are also made in Dijon.

The region which, with Bordeaux and Champagne, produces magnificent wines, produces excellent cheeses to accompany them. Among those highly esteemed by gastronomes are Gex blue-veined cheese which has a certain similarity to Roquefort; Soumaintrain, Cîteaux, Beugnon, Butteaux, Germigny, Pougny, the famous Époisses cheeses (which are made in the Yonne), Saint-Florentin, Passin which, according to some experts, is as good as the best Gruyère, various Morvan goat cheeses and the Saône-et-Loire cream cheeses.

For centuries Burgundy has been the land of great gastronomical feasts. The most characteristic were given at the time of grape-harvesting. Philéas Gilbert wrote a description of these feasts: 'From the moment the village crier had sounded the call (the roll of the drum before the proclamation), when only the père de la vigne and the masters of wine layering had the word, until the evening, when the last cask of grapes crushed by the wine press was poured into the vats, all was joy and song.

'And as a compensation for the mid-day meal, the supper menu promised a veritable feast, with the traditional potée – its robust fragrance teasing the men and women wine harvesters long before it was ready. La tisane de choux sucrée avec de lard, as Henri II used to say. Then there was goose à la taribade, and a sheep, sacrificed for the occasion and transformed into strange yet exquisite ragoûts. The flesh of this sheep, the grandam of the flock, at times tasted of wool grease (to say nothing of its toughness!) but, to make it go down, the pot-bellied jugs poured forth cool wine; it was 'plenty of grub' and carousing to one's heart's content . . .

'Ah! Those admirable Burgundian meals, when a great profusion of delectable dishes is served, such as escargots – à la bourguignonne, naturally! – meurette (q.v.) of various fish; andouillettes (q.v.) with beans; a succulent daube (q.v.) of beef; the traditional ferchuse à la ménagère, flamniche aux poireaux, souée au lard, and the Burgundy rigodon!'

Culinary specialties – To Philéas Gilbert, the escargot, prepared in accordance with Burgundian rites, eaten scalding hot as it is taken out of its garlic-scented butter bath, symbolises the gastronomy of Burgundy. But there is an infinite variety of other dishes, recipes for which will be found in alphabetical order.

Potée bourguignonne, which is similar to various French potées, for each region of France has its potée; pochouse (q.v.) and various freshwater fish matelotes (q.v.); beef à la bourguignonne, which must be made with red wine; round of veal à la crème; andouille with white beans; ferchuse (a corruption of the word fressure, i.e. pluck); daube bourguignonne; flamniche with leeks; souée, which is a cream flan filled with slices of bacon and sprinkled with walnut oil; poulet au sang; young pigeons à la gobyette; canard au laurier; jugged hare à la bourguignonne; saddle of hare à la Piron; omelette au sang.

There are pike à la crème; Arnay-le-Duc andouille; Sens andouillette; Dijon ham with parsley; the sausages of Belley (Brillat-Savarin's native place); crayfish tails à la Nantua; pike quenelles with crayfish; Pernollet chicken à la crème; coq au chambertin; sucking-pig à la bourguignonne; ham rigodon, and a whole range of charcuterie: large and small sausages; black pudding and pork pies, which are made in the Côte-d'Or, Ain, Saône-et-Loire and in Yonne.

Among the cakes, sweets and pastries of the Burgundy region are the rigodon (q.v.) (which can also be made as a dessert or sweet course); Lower Burgundy girdle cakes; Upper Burgundy girdle cakes known as pognon; pancakes, called matefaims in Upper Burgundy; bugnes or couques; Sens and Auxerre gougère; Louhans corgnottes; chamoure – a kind of marrow flan which is mainly made in Lower Mâconnais; fruit tartouillat; tarte aux boulettes; flamuse bressane; and gaudes.

Among local pastry and confectionery specialties are Dijon nonnettes and pain d'épice; Avallon and Chablis biscuits; Sens macaroons; Chablis meringues; Arnay-le-Duc marzipans; nougatines; black currant fondants; sugar-coated cherries (cherries in petticoats); excellent jams, among which the best known are Chanceaux raisiné, confiture d'épine-vinette; and Flavigny aniseed sweets.

To conclude the list of local produce are the esteemed cassis liqueurs made at Dijon; and prunelle, made at Flavigny.

Wines – The quality and variety of Burgundy wines assure them a leading place not only in France but in the world.

Viticultural Burgundy goes beyond the frontiers of historic Burgundy. It extends across four départements: Yonne, Côte-d'Or, Saône-et-Loire and Rhône, embracing the great regions of Chablis, Côte de Nuits, Côte de Beaune, Côte chalonaise, Mâconnais, Beaujolais. Each of these regions comprises several appellations, some communes, some vineyards, besides regional or 'generic' appellations (see accompanying table).

Chablis. The little town of Chablis in Yonne has given its name to this excellent dry wine with its greeny-gold hue and delicate bouquet. It is a wine that matures beautifully in good vintage years. Connoisseurs enjoy drinking it with oysters, seafood, fish and shellfish.

Map of the Burgundy wine-growing district

Côte de Nuits. This is the name given to the northern part of the Côte-d'Or, which begins south of Dijon with the commune of Fixin and ends south of Nuits-Saint-Georges. The vineyards climb halfway up a line of hills situated west of the autoroute Dijon-Mâcon.

The Côte de Nuits produces mostly red wines. These strong, full-bodied, glowing, fragrant wines enjoy an excellent reputation and accompany roast or grilled meat, game (even when it is high), piquant dishes and cheeses to perfection.

Côte de Beaune. This comes immediately after the Côte de Nuits and gets its name from the village of Beaune. Côte de Beaune extends from Ladoix-Serrigny in the north to Santenay, on the borders of the département of Saône-et-Loire in the south. Apart from some great red wines, Côte de Beaune produces some very fine dry white wines, the most famous being Montrachet, with its delicious fragrance of fresh almonds. Puligny-Montrachet often equals it; the Chassagne-Montrachet and Bâtard-Montrachet have better lasting qualities. The powerful Corton-Charlemagne, the fragrant, full-bodied Meursault are, like all the wines of this region, wines to serve with fish and shellfish; they also make fitting companions to the richest of sauces.

The red wines are as good as those of the Côte de Nuits. They can be drunk with meat, but it is preferable (apart from

The manufacture of Burgundy wines, 1470 (from contemporary tapestries)

Corton or Pommard) to keep them for less rich dishes than those that Côte de Nuits wines usually accompany.

Côte chalonnaise. This is the continuation of the line of sun-drenched hill slopes that begin south of Dijon. The red Mercurey, the white Rully, are worthy of their famous brothers of the Côte-d'Or. (There is also a white Mercurey and a red Rully.) We must not forget the Montagny (white) and the Givry (both red and white).

Mâconnais. Under the appellations Mâcon, Mâcon supérieur and Mâcon-Villages (white only) we find red, rosé and white wines which, when well vinified, make good carafe wines.

Also among the Mâconnais wines there is a superb dry white wine known all over the world: Pouilly-Fuissé which, gastronomically speaking, is interchangeable with Chablis wines or those of the Côte de Beaune. Two communal appellations, Pouilly-Vinzelles and Pouilly-Loché are in the same class.

Beaujolais. Although classed among the Burgundy wines, Beaujolais is a wine with a strong personality. Its name evokes light, fruity wines, the kind that are pleasant to drink when they are young and fresh – 'gulping' wines, the growers call them. It belongs to the Gamay kingdom, whereas the great wines of the Côte-d'Or come from the black Pinot.

The wine-growing district of Beaujolais begins in the département of Saône-et-Loire in the north and extends southwards to the environs of Lyons. The 'generic' appellations are 'Beaujolais', 'Beaujolais supérieur' and 'Beaujolais-Villages'; they are the lightest varieties and very drinkable.

Nine growths merit a special appellation, each of them with its own individual character (see accompanying table).

It is worth noting that contrary to most Beaujolais, which must be drunk young, the Morgon, Fleurie and Moulin-à-Vent can – in a good year – be laid down.

BUSH (In a). BUISSON (EN) – Method of arranging various ingredients, particularly shellfish: crayfish en buisson, lobsters en buisson, spiny lobsters en buisson. Smelts and other small fish are also fried and arranged 'in a bush'.

BUSTARD. OUTARDE – Genus of bird of the family Otididae, found in both hot and temperate regions of the Old World. The great bustard is the largest land bird in Europe, where it comes in December and stays until March. It is known for the delicacy of its flesh.

The little bustard is more highly prized. It comes to Beauce and Berry in April, but is non-migrant in Spain, Italy, Greece and Sardinia. The special feather structure on the head of the great bustard male is absent from the head of the little bustard male.

The principal method of cooking bustard is roasting. All the recipes indicated for the preparation of the domestic goose and the Nantes duckling can be applied to bustard.

BUTCHER'S BROOM. PETIT-HOUX – Shrub with bitter roots, which is one of the five roots used for aperitifs. Its young shoots are edible and are prepared like asparagus.

BUTCHER'S SHOP. BOUCHERIE – Shop for the retail sale of meat for human consumption. The meat trade has a long history. The Jewish High Priest in Biblical times, performing the sacrificial offering, was the real precursor of the butcher.

In Egypt, a fire was lit in front of the altar where a sacrifice was to be made, wine was offered and a god invoked. The throat of the animal was slit, the head severed and the carcase skinned. The head was taken to market; it was sold to a Greek if one could be found, if not, the head was thrown into the river.

The Romans made similar sacrifices, but created a special body of men to carry out the actual butchery of the animals,

Butcher's shop until end of seventeenth century which included the slaughtering of animals (l'Encyclopédie) giving these men special privileges to compensate for the fact that their occupation was held in contempt by the higher classes. Under Nero, the Roman butcher's shop was an imposing establishment, and they established a guild, which was subject to official regulations. Butchers specialising in the buying and selling of pigs were called suarii.

In France, a butchers' guild had been established by the eighth century; a man had to serve a three years' apprenticeship and buy, dress, cut and sell meat for a further three years before he could become a master butcher and buy an official diploma; both privileges cost a great deal of money. The guild was directed by a master of master butchers, and became extremely powerful, arrogating to themselves not only the monopoly of selling beef, veal, mutton, pork and sucking-pig, but also sea and river fish.

sell it at the right time, not too fresh or kept for too long, i.e., more than 2 days in winter and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  days in summer – it being reckoned that the meat became unfit for human consumption after these periods.

The sale of meat measured out by hand, a method of approximate estimation, caused continual arguments, and was replaced by the system of scales, which offered the greatest fairness. Fines, confiscations and penalties involving the loss of civil rights were inflicted on the law-breakers. It was the duty of the provost of Paris to see that these statutes were carried out.

The royal regulations were maintained until the end of absolute monarchy. Napoleon succeeded in doing away with privately owned slaughter houses, and created the public slaughter house. As soon as butchers were forced to take animals there, two branches of the industry developed: the wholesale trade and the retail trade. The first covered the purchase of livestock, transport to the slaughter house, and the work of the scalding room. The second consisted of retailing the carcasses of meat to the consumer.

Cattle markets were created in the nineteenth century, among them those at Sceaux, Pontoise and Passy for the Paris area. A fund was also set up from which butchers could obtain the necessary money for purchases, with a charge of 5 per cent interest, and a proviso that the loan be repaid within a fortnight. Thus the butchers retained one of their ancient privileges. Their creditors could not press claims on the eve of, or on, market day, nor seize the meat in the shop. These conditions were essential to safeguard the town's meat supplies.

During the nineteenth century the meat trade became free, but there was a transition period during which it was necessary to pay a fee of 3,000 francs to prove that an apprenticeship had been served and that one possessed the necessary knowledge to retail meat, to present a certificate of good conduct and character, and to undertake not to leave the business without giving the prefecture three months' notice.

Towards the middle of the century there were only 500 retail butcher shops left. Police regulations laid down the details relating to the running of shops; they had to be tiled, well ventilated and well positioned. No butcher could set

Arms of the butchers' guild

Charles VI revoked some of their privileges, and their power declined for a time, but in the sixteenth century they were raised to the status of tradesmen, and were subject to statutes, among which were ordinances which forbade them to open new stalls without authority; keep open after a certain time; exhibit meat on days of abstinence or during Lent in more than one stall out of ten, and that only for the sick; solicit custom or abuse customers; slaughter animals without informing the authorities; sell cooked meat; or pursue any other trade but that of a butcher.

They were expected to sell meat from healthy animals which had been properly slaughtered and had not died from disease or suffocation, to prepare it in a clean way and to up business before the police commissioner of his area had visited his premises and given his approval. Any butcher who displayed meat outside his premises was fined. A shop that did not display meat for three consecutive days was closed for six months.

Butcher's tools (Nicolas)

Since 1863 the number of shops has considerably increased. They are still controlled by police regulations, but the butchers' guild no longer has the prerogatives it enjoyed under the old régime. The work of slaughtering animals is now carried out in recognised slaughter houses, except in a very few localities where the butcher does the slaughtering himself. The bulk of a butcher's work is the preparation of cuts of meat for cooking, and the butcher often stuffs and dresses the joints himself.

Butcher's cold room (Nicolas)

The preparatory work is carried out on a chopping block: a section of a tree trunk, usually elm, mounted on three legs. The slab, also used as a bench, has a cross-grained wooden working surface with fittings for tools, and large drawers. The tools include choppers, saws and knives of various sizes; the latter are sometimes placed in a wooden case, called a boutique. These tools are often seen in the kitchens of large catering establishments which buy complete carcasses or large cuts wholesale, or direct from the slaughter house, for their own cooks to carve and prepare.

Butchers' shops also have scales which must be kept very clean, marble tables and ceramic plates to display the meat. Modern rules of hygiene being made to protect food from dust, many butchers' shops are provided with display counters enclosed with glass, and often with means of refrigeration. Uncut carcasses are hung from rails on hooks, and enclosed in a refrigerated chamber or in a large refrigerator. The walls and floors of a butcher's shop are usually tiled, and kept scrupulously clean. Employees are dressed in light-coloured clothes and wear white aprons.

BUTTER. BEURRE – Fatty substances extracted from the milk of mammals, known and used as food by man. The origin of butter goes back to the early nomadic people who used the milk of goats, cows, ewes, mares, she-asses and she-camels to prepare it.

The Aryans brought butter to the inhabitants of India, who soon considered it a sacred food.

The Hebrews used butter as a medicine as well as a food. Abraham offered butter, a symbolic food, to three men who came to his tent in the plains of Mamre. In his proverbs Solomon says: 'Surely, the churning of milk bringeth forth butter . . . .'

The Scythians also had butter, and brought it to the Greeks, and its use spread throughout the civilised world.

People living in some southern countries, like the Romans, used oil much more than butter in their cooking. This preference still persists in certain parts of the south of France, mainly in Provence, where oil plays a principal part in all the dishes.

Old way of making butter

Preparation of butter – In their emulsive state, the fatty globules of milk are relatively stable, but when the liquid is left to stand, they rise to the surface in the form of cream. Cream is generally obtained by the centrifugation of milk in separators. Once agitated (in what constitutes the churning operation) the fatty globules agglutinate into a compact mass called butter.

Modern butter factory (Rayot)

This mass in the churn exudes a quantity of watery liquid called buttermilk, which is drawn off. The remaining solid is rinsed in pure water while still in the churn, then worked until a homogenous butter is obtained.

The cream may be churned fresh from the cow, but the quality and yield of the butter are definitely improved by allowing the cream to mature. During this period of maturation the cream turns slightly sour under the influence of lactic ferments. This farm production method of maturing the cream before use is still observed in the industrial manufacture of butter but, in the latter case, maturation is preceded by heat treatment called pasteurisation, which ensures the destruction of possible microbes. Very high and consistent quality is obtained by subsequently sowing yeasts containing acidifying and flavouring elements in the butter.

Blocks and packets of butter
(Rayot. Phot. Nicolas)

For retail distribution, butter is usually machine packed in blocks and to satisfy trade regulations, it has to be protected from contamination by greaseproof paper or tinfoil. Salted and demi-sel butters are often packed in waxed cardboard cartons.

Quality of butter – A good butter should have a semi-soft consistency at room temperature and ought not to 'sweat' (an indication that it contains too high a proportion of water). It should have a slightly aromatic smell and a sweet, pleasant flavour. When placed on the tongue it should melt without leaving any deposit.

The colour varies according to the time of year it was produced and the type of animal feeding chosen by the farmers. It can be almost white. The content of substances other than fat (milk constituents remaining in the butter after churning and washing) must not exceed 18 per cent, of which 16 per cent should be water.

Butter is a valuable energy food (750 calories per 100 g., 4 oz.). It contains a large amount of Vitamin A (the vitamin that promotes growth) and Vitamin D (the anti-rachitic vitamin), but the quantities of these vary according to the quality of the butter, animal feeding methods, and the season. Unadulterated, it is the most digestible of the animal fats, provided that it is eaten raw.

Adulteration of butter – Like many other quality foods, butter used to lend itself to fraudulent falsification. Now that industrial manufacture (subject to strict controls) has replaced farm production, the only danger is insufficient working of the butter mass, leaving a residue of buttermilk and water in excess of 18 per cent; or, in the case of farm butters, the addition of preservatives, such as boric acid. The effects of prolonged storage at too high a temperature, possibly near other foodstuffs, is also a factor that cannot be ignored. Finally, cattle-food may, at certain periods of the year, produce peculiar odours and taste; these, however, can be eliminated by industrial processes.

The most frequent type of adulteration is that which gives rise to a greasy, rancid or poisonous taste, the consequences of careless production, or (more frequently) prolonged storage. These drawbacks can be eliminated by choosing a reliable retailer and a good brand of butter.

Preservation of butter – There are various methods of preserving butter, two of the most common being salting and amalgamation.

Salted butter is done by working a quantity of fine salt into the butter. There are two types: demi-sel butters (3 to 5 per cent salt) and salted butters (8 to 10 per cent salt). Demi-sel or salted are the most suitable for cooking.

Amalgamated butter is effected by amalgamation in a bain-marie, or processed over intense heat. The second method gives a product that has superior keeping qualities, but the process is detrimental to the flavour.

Butter is frequently clarified for cooking purposes; the water is evaporated, precipitating the casein contained in the butter. By using clarified butter, food can be lightly fried or sautéed without overbrowning and, the butter having been dehydrated, without causing spitting and splutterings of fat.

Clarification of butter – See CLARIFICATION.

VEGETABLE BUTTERS. BEURRES VÉGÉTAUX – These must not be sold under the name of butter, but should be labelled 'vegetable fat' or given a trade name.

It is possible to give a solid or semi-solid consistency to certain vegetable oils. For example, the hydrogenation of cottonseed oil, using nickel mousse as a catalyst, produces a kind of artificial butter or lard – in imitation of American lard.

Cocoa butter. BEURRE DE CACAO – Fatty substance obtained from roasted cocoa beans. It is sold in the form of rectangular blocks, with a sweet and pleasant taste, like that of chocolate. It melts at a temperature between 30°C. (86°F.) and 33°C. (91°F.) and stays liquid by cooling at a lower temperature, solidifying at 23°C. (73°F.).

This product, of which there are several brands, is sterilised and keeps very well. It contains no water and is easily digestible, perhaps more so than ordinary butter. Its taste is neutral and can in no way be compared to that of butter.

Coconut butter. BEURRE DE COCO – A vegetable butter frequently used in France. The copra (albuminous lining of the interior of the coconut), dried and put under pressure, yields an oil used in soap-making. After bleaching and various other processes the oil is transformed into an edible product of firm consistency, which looks like butter.

Nutmeg butter. BEURRE DE MUSCADE – Fatty substance obtained from nutmegs, sold in the form of rectangular loaves covered with palm leaves.

Walnut butter, hazelnut butter, peanut butter. BEURRE DE NOIX, NOISETTES, ARACHIDES – Factory-made products, high in nutritive value.

COMPOUND BUTTERS. BEURRE COMPOSÉS – (1) Butters mixed with one or more substances, generally reduced to a purée or chopped. (2) Butters cooked to various degrees, or melted, seasoned and served spiced; as accompaniment to various fish, meat and vegetable dishes.

Compound butters of the first category are used either in sauces and various dishes, or as garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre.

Almond butter. BEURRE D'AMANDES – Pound 75 g. (3 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) sweet blanched and washed almonds to a fine paste, adding a few drops of cold water to prevent them turning oily. Add 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter. Rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. As garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre, and as an addition to soups and some white sauces.

Anchovy butter. BEURRE D'ANCHOIS – Desalt and dry 75 g. (3 oz.) anchovy fillets and pound them in a mortar with 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter. Rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. As indicated for Garlic butter (see below). Anchovy butter is also a good accompaniment for grilled fish and meat.

Bercy butter. BEURRE BERCY – Add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons finely chopped shallots to 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine and boil down by half. When the liquor is almost cold, add 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) softened butter and 500 g. (1 lb. 8 oz.) beef bone-marrow which has been cut in dice, poached in salted water and drained. Add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and the juice of half a lemon. Season with 1 teaspoon fine salt and a pinch of freshly ground pepper.

Uses. Accompaniment for grilled fish and meat.

Brown butter. BEURRE NOIR – Cook 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter to a dark brown colour. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) washed and dried parsley leaves and 1 tablespoon capers. Pour the butter into a sauceboat or over the food with which it is to be served, and add a tablespoon vinegar heated in the same pan.

Uses. Brown butter is served with eggs; various fish; vegetables boiled in salted water; brains; and a number of other dishes.

For eggs with browned butter omit the parsley and the capers.

Caviare butter. BEURRE DE CAVIAR – Pound 75 g. (3 oz.) pressed caviare in a mortar. Add 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter, and blend well. Rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. As a garnish for canapés à la russe and for various cold hors-d'œuvre, and for certain fish forcemeat.

Chive butter. BEURRE DE CIBOULETTE – Prepare and use as Shallot butter (see below), using green chives.

Chivry butter. BEURRE CHIVRY – Blanch 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) each of parsley, tarragon and chervil leaves, fresh burnet and chives for 3 minutes in salted water. Drain, dip in cold water, and dry. Pound in a mortar with 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) chopped, blanched shallots. Add 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter. Rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. In white sauces and as a garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre. It is sometimes called beurre ravigote.

Colbert butter. BEURRE COLBERT – Prepare Maitre d'hôtel butter (see below). Add 1 teaspoon chopped tarragon and 1 tablespoon dissolved meat jelly for 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter.

Uses. Accompaniment for fried fish à la Colbert and for grilled meat and fish.

Crab butter. BEURRE DE CRABES – Prepare and use as Shrimp butter (see below), using small crabs which have been cooked in courti-bouillon (q.v.) and drained.

Crayfish butter (cold). BEURRE D'ÉCREVISSES (À FROID) – Prepare and use as Shrimp butter (cold) (see below), using shells and trimmings of crayfish cooked à la mirepoix.

Crayfish butter (hot). BEURRE D'ÉCREVISSES (À CHAUD) – Pound in a mortar the shells and trimmings of crayfish cooked à la mirepoix (the tails being used for some other dish). Add the same amount of fresh butter and blend well. Put the mixture in a small saucepan standing in a larger pan of hot water, allowing the crayfish butter to melt slowly.

When it is completely melted, pour it through a cloth secured over a bowl of iced water. Twist the cloth to squeeze out all the butter. This will solidify in the icy water, when it can be spooned out of the bowl and dried on a muslin cloth.

Uses. Add to sauces, gravies, thick shellfish soups, fish forcemeats and shellfish ragoûts. Crayfish butters form the basis for the sauce called à la Nantua.

Filbert butter. BEURRE D'AVELINES – Prepare in the same way as Almond butter. It has the same uses.

Garlic butter. BEURRE D'AIL – Peel, blanch, drain and dry 8 large cloves garlic, and pound in a mortar with 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) fresh butter. Rub through a sieve.

Uses. For certain sauces, and as garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre.

Gascogne butter. BEURRE DE GASCOGNE – Prepare with garlic, which is first cooked for a few minutes in salted water, drained, pounded with a little butter, and seasoned.

Uses. For seasoning kidney beans and for sprinkling over grilled mushrooms.

Green butter. BEURRE VERT – Wash and dry spinach leaves and pound them in a mortar. Put into a strong cloth, twist to extract all the juice; pour this into a double saucepan to thicken. Turn out onto a muslin cloth stretched over a bowl, and filter. Scrape off the green residue which remains on the cloth; this is called vert d'épinard (spinach green). Add double its weight of softened butter which has been rubbed through a sieve.

Uses. As for Chivry butter and Montpellier butter (see below).

Hazelnut butter. BEURRE DE NOISETTE – Prepare and use like Almond butter, using lightly roasted hazelnuts or filbert nuts.

Herring butter. BEURRE DE HARENG – Made of fillets of pickled herrings, as Anchovy butter and used in the same ways.

Horseradish butter. BEURRE DE RAIFORT – Pound in a mortar 75 g. (3 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) grated horseradish. Add 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter. Rub through a sieve.

Uses. As for Garlic butter.

Kneaded butter. BEURRE MANIÉ – Blend 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter and 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) flour into a smooth paste.

Uses. To bind some sauces, notably those called à la maitelote.

Lemon butter. BEURRE DE CITRON – Add finely grated rind of 1 lemon to 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter. Season with salt and white pepper. Blend well.

Uses. This is a garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre.

Lobster butter (cold). BEURRE DE HOMARD (À FROID) – Using the creamy parts, the eggs and the coral of the lobster cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.), proceed as described in recipe for Shrimp butter (cold) (see below). Use in the same ways.

Lobster butter (hot). BEURRE D'HOMARD (À CHAUD) – Using shells and trimmings of lobster, which have been cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.) or à la mirepoix (q.v.), prepare and use as for Crayfish butter (hot).

This butter is often called red colouring butter, which is prepared by pounding together in a mortar the coral, or eggs, of various shellfish which have been cooked in court-bouillon with an equal quantity of butter.

Maître d'hôtel butter. BEURRE À LA MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL – Mix 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) fresh butter with 1½ tablespoons chopped parsley, ¾ teaspoon fine salt, a small pinch of freshly ground pepper and a dash of lemon juice. Stir with a spoon until it forms a smooth paste.

Uses. Accompaniment for grilled meat and fish, fish fried in egg and breadcrumbs, and various boiled vegetables.

Melted maître d'hôtel butter may be served separately or put on or under the ingredients which it accompanies.

Marchand de vins butter. BEURRE MARCHAND DE VINS – Add 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) finely chopped shallots to 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) red wine and boil slowly down to half. Add a tablespoon dissolved meat jelly or 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) rich brown veal stock, 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter softened to a paste, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, and the juice of quarter of a lemon. Season with salt and pepper, and blend well.

Uses. Accompaniment for grilled rump steak à la marchand de vins.

Marseille butter. BEURRE DE MARSEILLE – Name ironically used for oil, in the same way as garlic is referred to as Marseille vanilla.

Melted butter. BEURRE FONDU – Melt butter slowly, season with salt and a pinch of white pepper, and add a few drops of lemon juice.

Uses. Accompaniment for poached fish and boiled vegetables.

Meunière butter. BEURRE À LA MEUNIÈRE – Heat butter in a pan until it acquires a light brown colour. Add a dash of lemon juice and salt and pepper.

Uses. Accompaniment for fish prepared à la meunière (see BASS, Bass à la meunière) and for certain vegetables, poached or simmered in butter.

Montpellier butter. BEURRE DE MONTPELLIER – Blanch in salted water the following herbs, picked over and washed: 20 g. (¾ oz.) each parsley, chervil, cress, tarragon, chives, 25 g. (1 oz.) spinach leaves, and 40 g. (1½ oz., 6 tablespoons) chopped shallot.

Drain, dip in cold water, and press well to extract all the water. Pound in a mortar, adding 3 medium-sized gherkins, 1 tablespoon well-pressed capers, 4 desalted anchovy fillets, and 1 small garlic clove.

When all the ingredients have been reduced to a smooth paste, add to them 750 g. (1½ lb., 3½ cups) butter, 3 hard-boiled egg yolks and 2 raw egg yolks.

Still pounding with a pestle, add little by little 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) olive oil. Season with salt and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Rub through a fine sieve. Whisk until quite smooth.

Uses. Mainly for dressing cold dishes particularly fish. However, when Montpellier butter is prepared specially for decorating cold dishes and for spreading on croûtons, raw egg yolks and oil are omitted.

Mushroom butter. BEURRE DE CHAMPIGNONS – Slice 150 g. (5 oz., 1½ cups) cultivated mushrooms; toss briskly in butter, season with salt and pepper, and pound in a mortar. Add 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) fresh butter, blend and rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. Addition to white sauce and garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre.

Mustard butter. BEURRE DE MOUTARDE – Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) mustard to 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter softened to a paste. Blend well.

Uses. The same as those for Anchovy butter.

Noisette butter. BEURRE NOISETTE – Cook butter to a light hazelnut colour.

Uses. Poured over eggs, lambs' or calves' brains, skate cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.), soft roes, and vegetables cooked in water and well drained. The juice of a lemon is squeezed into it if served separately.

Paprika butter. BEURRE DE PAPRIKA – Blend into a smooth paste 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, seasoned with 1 tablespoon paprika.

Uses. Garnish for canapés and other cold hors-d'œuvre.

Pistachio butter. BEURRE DE PISTACHES – Prepared like Almond butter, using blanched pistachio nuts.

Uses. The same as Almond butter.

Printanier butter. BEURRE PRINTANIER – Pound in a mortar an equal quantity of butter and green vegetables (green peas, asparagus tips, French beans, etc.) which have been cooked in water, drained and dried. Blend, and rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. Garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre; addition to thickened soups and some white sauces.

Ravigote butter. BEURRE RAVIGOTE – Name for Chivry butter.

Red butter. BEURRE ROUGE – Name given to Lobster butter and butter mixed with other shellfish.

Salmon butter. BEURRE DE SAUMON – Using fresh or smoked salmon, proceed as described in the recipe for Anchovy butter. Use in the same ways.

Sardine butter. BEURRE DE SARDINES – Prepared and used like Anchovy butter, using fillets of sardines in oil.

Shallot butter. BEURRE D'ÉCHALOTE – Shred, blanch, drain and dry 8 shallots and pound them in a mortar. Add the same weight of butter and rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. Accompaniment to grilled meat and fish.

Shrimp butter (cold). BEURRE DE CREVETTES (À FROID) – Pound 150 g. (5 oz.) cooked shrimps in a mortar with an equal amount of butter. Rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. Addition to fish sauces, and garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre and cold fish.

Shrimp butter (hot). BEURRE DE CREVETTES (À CHAUD) – Using cooked shrimps, prepare in the same way as Crayfish butter (hot).

Uses. The same as for Crayfish butter (hot).

Shrimp butter, as in the case of other shellfish, may be made using only the shells, if the flesh is needed for some other dish.

Butter for snails, à la bourguignonne. BEURRE POUR ESCARGOTS, À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Add the following ingredients to 700 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) best unsalted butter: 75 g. (3 oz., ¾ cup) finely chopped shallots, 2 garlic cloves pounded into paste, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped parsley. Season with 4 teaspoons salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Blend well.

Uses. For filling escargot shells cooked à la bourguignonne.

Soft roe butter. BEURRE DE LAITANCES – This butter is prepared by pounding together in a mortar equal quantities of soft roes of pickled herrings and butter, rubbed through a sieve.

It can also be prepared by pounding in a mortar 125 g. (4 oz.) soft roes of various fish (especially those of carp),

BUTTER CREAMS

poached, cooled and well dried, with 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter.

Uses. It is added to some fish sauces and used as a garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre.

Spiny lobster butter. BEURRE DE LANGOUSTE - Prepare, using shells and trimmings of the spiny lobster (U.S. crayfish) as for Lobster butter. Use in the same ways.

Sweet pimento butter. BEURRE DE POIVRONS DOUX - Pound finely in a mortar 150 g. (5 oz.) sweet pimentos (red or green) previously stewed in butter. Add 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter and rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. The same as for Garlic butter.

Tarragon butter. BEURRE D'ESTRAGON - Blanch 125 g. (4 oz.) fresh tarragon leaves for 2 minutes in salted boiling water. Drain, dip in cold water, dry, and pound in a mortar with 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) fresh butter. Rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. Addition to various sauces, and garnish for cold hors-d'œuvre, especially Canapés à la russe (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre).

Tomato butter. BEURRE DE TOMATES - Soften 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, add 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) concentrated tomato juice, and blend well.

Uses. The same as for Anchovy butter. It is also used for thickening soups and white sauces.

Truffle butter. BEURRE DE TRUFFES - Pound in a mortar 100 g. (4 oz.) fresh truffles with 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter. Rub through a fine sieve.

Uses. Garnish for canapés and other cold hors-d'œuvre.

Tunny (tuna fish) butter. BEURRE DE THON - Prepare as Anchovy butter, using tunny in oil.

Uses. The same as for Anchovy butter.

Walnut butter. BEURRE DE NOIX - Prepare as Almond butter, using dried, blanched walnuts.

Uses. The same as for Almond butter.

White butter. BEURRE BLANC - See PIKE, Pike au beurre blanc.

BUTTER CREAMS - See CREAMS.

BUTTER DISH. BEURRIER - Small dish used for serving butter on the table. Some butter dishes are made in such a way that the butter is always kept under salted water. Thus enclosed, the butter can be kept fresh for a longer period. There are more modern types consisting of a double-walled, bell-shaped cover in porous earthenware filled with water, which is changed every day. This cover is placed over the butter contained in a glass dish.

BUTTERMILK. BABEURRE - Milk which is left after churning butter. This product differs, depending on whether fresh or sour milk is being churned, and on whether the cream is taken off by centrifugal machinery.

Buttermilk contains all the casein of milk. This casein, following acidification, undergoes changes which render it more soluble and more digestible. It contains all the mineral salts found in milk and a proportion of lactose which has not yet been transformed into lactic acid.

Buttermilk soup. SOUPE DE BABEURRE - Mix a little flour (wheat, barley, rice, etc.) allowing one tablespoon per litre (scant quart, generous quart) in a small quantity of cold buttermilk, blending to avoid lumps. Add to heated buttermilk, and bring slowly to the boil. Boil down by one quarter, and sweeten with sugar, allowing 70 to 90 g. (2½ to 3½ oz.) sugar per litre (scant quart, generous quart).

The object of adding flour is to break up the globules of casein and thus make it more digestible. Prepared in this way, buttermilk soup has a nutritive value to a considerable extent approaching that of human milk.

BUTYRIC ACID. BUTYRIQUE - Acid which develops in butter by oxidation, and which causes it to become rancid.

BUTYROMETER. BUTYROMÈTRE - Instrument consisting of a calibrated glass tube for measuring the butter content of milk.

The milk is mixed with a certain volume of ether which dissolves the butter. Then an equal volume of alcohol is added. The butter floats on the surface in the form of an oily layer and its thickness, measured by the graduation of the tube, clearly shows the proportion of butter.

BUTYROUS. BUTYREUX - Having the consistency and appearance of butter.

BUVETTE - This was the name given to the small refreshment bars that existed under the Ancien Régime in the judicial high courts. They were necessary at a time when the judges assembled very early in the morning and sat often until mid-day without intermission. Later, buvettes became objects of ridicule and provoked epigrams such as the following:

Themis inspires the magistrates in the buvette

With the strictest equity;

During the hearing can be observed

Arrest after arrest by Bacchus served.

The Revolution put an end to the buvettes along with the judicial high courts; but they reappeared with the legislative assemblies.

Butyrometer

CABARET – There are various opinions on the origin of this term, ranging from the ancient Hebrew cabar (to assemble) to the mediaeval Latin verb cabare (to dig or make a cave). In a general sense the term means a tavern where drinks can be consumed on the premises, and where food is sometimes served.

The name is linked to the original courtille, a rustic tavern situated near vineyards, 'a green oasis which became alive on holidays with a joyous throng of people who flocked there to find in pleasure a revenge against boredom.' The courtilles were reserved for carousing on feast days; some of them can be traced by streets which still exist, identified by the names of the vineyards round the courtilles. Thus the clos Georgeot, which spread its vineyards on the southern slopes of the butte Saint-Roch has given its name to a little street close to the Palais Royal; the clos des Posteriers, traversed by the rue des Postes, is also represented by the impasse des Vignes.

These clos, or vineyards, the approaches to which were enlivened by the courtilles, were sometimes part of a nobleman's domain, and then the vineyards were well guarded – vines were forbidden fruit. Sometimes the crowd grew angry, and took revenge by rioting. The provost of merchants had his country seat, courtille Barbette, burnt down, together with his vineyards. 'And when they got to the clos de la Ville-l'Evêque, a famous episcopal courtille, it was not only caustic jibes that they aimed at the fat canons hiding under heavily laden climbing vines, who had gathered for a "theological banquet".'

A cabaret during the reign of François I (Flemish school)

'When the holidays came the people felt they were free for a few days. They were not afraid to forget themselves beside a jug of wine, and when the hot sun rays invited them to leave their damp and smoky dwelling-places they would venture into the country, in groups, as far as the most distant courtilles.

'But, as we know, not every day is a holiday. Whilst fully conscious of the truth of this old axiom, the people did not feel any the less the need to satisfy their daily thirst during the week. On Sundays they could regard it as a duty.

'They needed therefore, in the absence of the courtilles reserved for carousing on good feast days, some place not far from their homes where they could minister to the caprices of this daily thirst. These places were the first cabarets.

'A drinker worthy of the name never mistook a cabaret for a tavern. In a tavern he could sit down at a table and drink but he could not do so in a cabaret; he had to drink outside.

'A stout wooden trellis-work guarded the entry to the houses of cabaret keepers. Through an opening cut in the trellis-work the publican handed the wine to the customer. He had to hold the jug, which he used as a measure, upside down to show that there was no possible way of drinking on his premises. Such were the official orders of the provost, and the inn-keeper had to abide by this method of selling "by means of a cut door and an overturned jug"!

In the centuries which followed, the cabarets became identified with taverns, and the two words became synonymous.

Some cabarets which were frequented by writers, especially in the seventeenth century, acquired lasting fame. Among them were le Mouton blanc (in rue du Vieux-Colombier) where Racine, La Fontaine and Boileau used to meet; le Sabot (rue du Pot-de-Fer) where Ronsard would come in for a drink and which Chapelain also visited; l'Ecu d'Argent; la Pomme de Pin (rue de la Licorne), the meeting-place of the scholars mentioned by Rabelais. Notable among eighteenth century inns were le Caveau (on the Buci crossroads) where Collé, Piron and many other epicureans used to gather to sing their bawdy songs and where in 1737 the Caveau Society was formed; and le Chat blanc (rue de la Vieille-Lanterne).

CABARET (Liqueur stand) – A liqueur set, including glasses and decanters, presented either on a tray or in a special cabinet.

CABBAGE. CHOU – Highly esteemed by the Greeks and particularly by the Romans, the cabbage seems to have been unknown to the Hebrews. It is not mentioned in the Bible.

Apart from seakale, no species of cabbage survives in a wild state.

A great many new varieties have been developed through cultivation.

The three main classes of full-hearted cabbages are: the 'headed' smooth-leaved green cabbage, the Milan curly-leaved cabbage, and the red cabbage.

The spring 'headed' cabbage is usually conical and commonly known as 'pointed' cabbage. The summer or autumn 'headed' cabbage is rounder in shape and includes the varieties de Boston or de Brunswick and quintal d'Alsace which are often used in the manufacture of sauerkraut. Best known of the winter cabbages are de Noël and de Vaugirard d'hiver.

Milan cabbages have curly (occasionally crinkled) leaves. There are no less than twenty-five varieties.

Five varieties of red cabbage are cultivated in France. These are common to all regions and are in season throughout the year.

The cabbage is a particularly interesting vegetable from a nutritional point of view. It is rich in Vitamins B1 and B2 (essential for the assimilation of sugars and fats), in Vitamin C (it contains as much as a lemon), and in Vitamin K. Moreover, it contains large quantities of mineral salts: calcium, magnesium, potassium, sulphur, etc. Unfortunately, owing to its indigestibility, it requires prolonged cooking during which much of its nutritional value is lost. (This disadvantage can be partly overcome by shredding the cabbage finely and cooking it rapidly in a cupful of boiling water.) Dietetically speaking, it is best eaten raw.

GREEN CABBAGE. CHOUX VERTS –

Boiled cabbage. CHOU VERT À L'ANGLAISE – Cut a cabbage into quarters. Remove the fibrous part of the stem and the coarse outer leaves, cook in salt water until tender. Drain, press between two plates to extract the moisture, slice cabbage into rectangles.

Green cabbage prepared in this way is used as a vegetable served with melted butter, or as a garnish.

Braised cabbage. CHOU VERT BRAISÉ – Divide a cabbage into quarters, blanch, put under the cold tap, and then drain. Break up the cabbage and remove the thick portions of the stem. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Line a deep casserole with strips of larding bacon, add the cabbage, an onion stuck with a clove, a large carrot cut into quarters, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Moisten with stock which has not been skimmed of its fat (if there is no fat, add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) clarified fat to it). Cover with strips of fat bacon. Start cooking on top of the stove then cover the pan and put it in a moderate oven for about 1½ hours.

A piece of blanched lean pork can be added. Braised cabbage may be used as a vegetable but, more often, appears in a garnish.

Cabbage in marinade. CHOU VERT MARINÉ – Prepared like Red cabbage in marinade (see below).

Cabbage salad. SALADE DE CHOU VERT – Slice the cabbage finely, blanch for 15 minutes in salted water. Put under the cold tap, drain and dry. Season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper like an ordinary green salad.

Little stuffed cabbage balls (Larousse)

Little stuffed cabbage balls. PETITS CHOUX POUR GARNITURE – Divide a large cabbage into quarters, wash, blanch for 8 to 10 minutes in salt water, rinse, and drain.

Remove all the leaves and trim them by paring the ribbed stalks. Make a stuffing with the tender inner leaves and an equal quantity of forcemeat. Put a round of stuffing on each leaf and roll into tight balls. Braise in the usual way.

Stuffed cabbage balls are used to garnish large braised joints. The cabbage leaves can be stuffed with all kinds of hashes or purées.

Stuffed cabbage a la provençale (Robert Carrier)

CABBAGE PALM

Stuffed cabbage (Larousse)

Stuffed cabbage. CHOU VERT FARCI – Blanch a whole cabbage in salted water, put it under the cold tap, drain, and remove the stem.

Spread out the cabbage on a damp cloth. Stuff the heart with a ball of fine pork stuffing. Close the leaves round this, and fill the outer leaves, closing them in to reform the shape of the cabbage. Wrap in thin strips of bacon fat and tie in the cloth. Put the cabbage in a braising pan lined with bacon rinds and slices of onion and carrot.

Cover with a fat stock and braise for about 1½ hours. Drain the cabbage and remove the bards. Serve with a sauce made of the cooking liquor boiled down and enriched with a little brown sauce. This stuffed cabbage, cut into thick slices, is served as a garnish for large joints.

The cabbage can be prepared in another way. Remove the heart, chop the tender leaves, mix with the stuffing and fill the cabbage with this mixture and braise it.

Stuffed cabbage à la provençale (Niçoise cookery). CHOU FARCI – Blanch a large cabbage for 8 minutes in salted water, rinse in cold water, and drain. Remove the large outer leaves and the ribbed stems. Spread these leaves out flat on a thin damp cloth stretched on the table and chop the inside leaves. Stuff the outer leaves with the chopped-up leaves and the following ingredients, arranged in layers: 250 g. (9 oz.) blanched best leaves; 200 g. (7 oz.) diced and browned lean pork; 1 medium-sized onion, chopped and lightly fried in butter; 2 large tomatoes, peeled, seeded and chopped; 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) blanched rice; 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) fresh green peas; 750 g. (1½ lb.) sausage meat seasoned with a crushed garlic clove.

Fold the cabbage leaves round the stuffing in the form of a ball, tie up the cloth and put into a pot-au-feu prepared in the usual way but using mutton instead of beef. Cook slowly for about 3½ hours.

Drain the cabbage and pour a few tablespoons of the cooking liquor over it.

This dish, which is fundamental to the cuisine niçoise, can be served with the soup from the pot-au-feu in which it was cooked.

Stuffed cabbage rolls. CHOU VERT FARCI EN BALLOTTINE – Lay out slices of larding bacon on a damp cloth and place on top of them cabbage leaves which have been blanched, rinsed and dried, the leaves overlapping to form a rectangle. Put rolls of stuffing in the centre of the leaves, wrap them round the stuffing, and tie up in the cloth. Braise in the manner indicated above.

RED CABBAGE. CHOUX ROUGES –

Red cabbage à la flamande. CHOU ROUGE À LA FLAMANDE – Wash, quarter and shred the cabbage, removing the hard core and stem. Season with salt and pepper, and sprinkle with a few drops of vinegar. Cook slowly in butter. When three-quarters cooked add 3 peeled, quartered tart apples and 1 tablespoon brown sugar. Finish cooking on a low heat, the overall time being about 2 hours.

Red cabbage à la limousine. CHOU ROUGE À LA LIMOUSINE – Shred the cabbage and put it into an earthenware casserole. Moisten with bouillon and add 4 tablespoons (¾ cup) pork fat, and chopped peeled chestnuts. Season with salt and pepper. Cook with the lid on for about 2 hours.

Red cabbage in marinade. CHOU ROUGE MARINÉ – Shred the cabbage after removing the hard core and ribs. Sprinkle with fine salt and leave for 48 hours, stirring from time to time.

Drain the cabbage and put it in an earthenware bowl with peppercorns, fragments of bay leaf, and a garlic clove. Cover with vinegar which has been boiled and allowed to cool. Marinate for 24 to 48 hours.

Red cabbage in marinade is used as an hors-d'œuvre. It is also served with boiled beef.

Stalks and stumps of red and green cabbage. MOELLE DE CHOU ROUGE ET CHOU VERT – The core of these vegetables is usually discarded, but it can be very tasty and can, if well cooked, provide very good dishes.

Remove all the woody outer casing. Blanch whole if it is to be served with the vegetable. If it is to be cooked separately, cut into rounds. After blanching, these stalks and stumps can be prepared in the same way as artichoke stalks or endive stumps.

CABBAGE PALM. PALMISTE – Terminal bud of several species of palm.

Cabbage palm en daube (Creole cookery). PALMISTE EN DAUBE – Parboil pieces of cabbage palm shoots cut lengthways into strips and tied in bundles to keep them together.

Brown in fat on a low heat for about 30 minutes. Add 1 tablespoon flour and blend it in, frying it lightly. Add ½ teaspoon tomato purée and moisten with concentrated chicken stock prepared in advance from chicken giblets.

Cook for several minutes, put in the oven for a while without allowing the top to brown, and serve in a little sauce.

CABERNET – Variety of vine grown extensively in the Bordeaux vineyards. There are two species: cabernet-franc and cabernet-sauvignon.

The red wines of Chinon, Bourgueil and Saumur-Champigny are also made from this grape. A well-known Anjou rosé bears the same name.

CACHALOT (Sperm-whale) – Sea mammal, the flesh of which is sometimes used as food.

Stuffed cabbage rolls

CACHOU. CACHUNDÉ – Aromatic tablets used in the Far East, to which stomachic properties are attributed. They are mainly used to freshen and sweeten breath and are made of amber, musk, sandalwood, sweet calamus, galingale, cinnamon, bole, etc.

Cadenas for the royal cutlery

CADENAS – Container, with grooves, which closed like a drawer. It was used in the royal households for the same purpose as the nef, a basket containing royal cutlery, napkins, etc. It held fork, knife and spoon, and bread was placed on the dish. Under Louis XIV it became a hexagonal tray on which napkin, fork, knife and spoon were placed. The grand pantler had the nef and the cadenas conjoined on his coat-of-arms.

CAFÉS – Establishments where, in principle, only liquid refreshments are served, originally only wine and coffee.

Suleiman Aga first brought coffee in large quantities to France in 1669. Later, an Armenian called Pascal opened a coffee shop at the Saint-Germain fair, and did a roaring trade. After the fair, he went to quai de l'École and opened a new shop but did not have the same success as at the Saint-Germain fair. He then went to London, where coffee had been known since 1652. After Pascal, another Armenian, Maliban, opened a café, but a little while later went to Holland, leaving his house to a man called Gregoire who moved his establishment to rue Mazarine to be near the Comédie which was then in that street, opposite rue Guénégaud.

At the same period in Paris a man called Candiol went about carrying a hawker's tray with domestic utensils. He also sold coffee, which could be taken home at the price of two sous a cup, including sugar. His associate, Joseph, opened a café at the end of Notre-Dame bridge, and Etienne, a Levantine from Aleppo, opened another in rue Saint-André-des-Arts, facing the Saint-Michel bridge. These cafés were really no more than dirty little smoking-saloons frequented by confirmed smokers, travellers from the Lebanon and by several Knights of Malta. The coffee sold in these shops was mediocre and badly served. By 1754 there were 56 cafés in Paris; by the end of the eighteenth century their numbers had risen to 600, of a much higher quality.

The cafés very soon replaced the cabarets as meeting-places for men of letters. Among literary cafés the first was the Café du Parnasse at the end of the Pont-Neuf, near the Samaritaine; then the Veuve Laurent, in rue Dauphine; and the Café Procope whose fame goes back to the eighteenth century when it counted among its regulars Buffon, Gilbert, Marmontel, Voltaire, d'Holbach, Diderot, d'Alembert and others.

The widow Fournier, whose café in rue Saint-Antoine was founded by Baptiste in 1690, was the first to think of the idea of providing her regular customers with newspapers. She subscribed to Gazette de France, Mercure and Journal des Savants. The Café des Grâces, in rue de l'Arbre-Sec, was the first establishment in Paris to have public billiards. The Café de la Régence became the meeting-place of chess-players, and Jean-Jacques Rousseau tried his skill there against the celebrated Philidor. During the Revolution the cafés played an important rôle as meeting-places of secret committees of members of the National Convention and as tribunes for orators.

The Palais-Royal cafés, too, have had their hour of fame: Café de Foy, Café de la Rotonde, Café Corazza and Café Lamblin were the meeting-places of Bonapartist officers on half-pay.

Under the Second Empire the Boulevard cafés, Café Riche and, above all, Café Frascati, were the meeting-places of writers, dramatists and journalists. When Frascati's disappeared, it was replaced by Café Napolitain. In the Latin Quarter, Jean Moréas held court at Café Vachette.

Today the cafés, although more numerous and more luxurious than ever, have not the same political and literary influence, with the exception perhaps of a few Left Bank

A café in 1830 (Schaaf)

CAFFEINE

establishments, which still serve as meeting-places for young literary and artistic movements. (See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.)

CAFFEINE. CAFÉINE – Alkaloid substance contained in coffee, which acts on the nervous system. A moderate amount of coffee soothes, eliminates the feeling of tiredness and exhaustion, makes mental work easier, dispels drowsiness. A bigger dose can bring on nervous excitation, trembling, insomnia.

Coffee has a stimulating effect on the heart if taken in moderation; excessive coffee drinking causes palpitations and irregularity of the heartbeat.

Coffee also acts as a digestive stimulant, speeding the passage of food through the body (and often causing diarrhoea). It can have a diuretic effect. On the other hand, cases of articular deformation, cited by Brillat-Savarin, are not caused by excessive intake of coffee.

Coffee (especially strong black coffee) must not be given to children, adolescents, people of nervous disposition or those suffering from heart conditions; nor should it be given to certain dyspeptics.

Although Voltaire, who drank six cups of coffee daily, was loud in its praise, his over-indulgence could have had a bearing on the enterocolitis from which he suffered to the end of his life.

Finally, black coffee ought never to be drunk on an empty stomach and white coffee is even worse for the system than black.

CAILLEBOTTE (Curds) – Name given in certain regions of France to curdled milk, drained in a muslin bag and eaten fresh.

CAILLETOT – Name commonly used in Normandy for young turbot.

CAILLIER – Wooden vessel used in the Middle Ages and until the end of the sixteenth century as a drinking cup. It was made in the shape of a bowl of average size supported by a leg, the whole carved out of one piece of wood. There were also bowls made in a larger size which served as containers for wine, the bowl-shaped lids being used as drinking vessels.

CAISSETTES – Small garnished cases offered as hot hors-d'œuvre or as a small entrée. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

CAKE. GÂTEAU – The word gâteau is said to come from the word gasteau, which itself derives from the old term gastel, a delicate food that quickly deteriorates (gâter – to spoil).

The generic term gâteau or cake designates all types of pastry and cakes in the strict sense of the term, while the word entremets or sweet (U.S. dessert) applies more especially to sweet preparations such as creams, fritters, charlottes, tarts, flans and pies, puddings, soufflés and all kinds of ices, which belong to the domain of the cook rather than that of the confectioner.

Cakes are made from any of eight doughs in French confectionery: flake pastry (feuilletage), short pastry (pâte brisée), sweet pastry (pâte sucrée), brioche, savarin, baba, gênoise, chou pastry.

To these may be added a large number of mixtures of additional ingredients such as almond paste, various kinds of sugar icing, fondant, French pastry cream (crème pâtissière), frangipane cream and other creams, praline (q.v.), etc.

In France, as well as in many other countries, there are symbolic cakes which, in some cases, have been being made for centuries, and are eaten on certain feast days. One such is the Twelfth-Night cake, which symbolises the great feast of the Epiphany.

Ancient gâteaux or centre-pieces, after Carême: Turkish pavilion; Ruins of a rotunda; Large fountain

Large cakes: Dijon; Madagasgar; St James (Larousse)

In France, from the very earliest times, a large number of provinces have produced pastries for which they are noted.

Thus Artois had gâteaux razis, and Bourbonnais the ancient tartes de fromage broyé, de crème et de moyeux d'oeulz. Flat-cakes are still made in Normandy, Picardy, Poitou and in some provinces of the south of France. They are called variously fouaces, fouaches, fouées or fouyasses, according to the district. (See HEARTH-CAKE.)

Until the seventeenth century it was usual at Whitsuntide in Paris to throw down nieules and oublies (wafers), local Parisian confections, upon the heads of the worshippers gathered under the vaulted roofs of the Cathedral of Notre-Dame. At the same time blazing wicks were showered on the congregation.

Among the many pastries which were in high favour from the twelfth to the fifteenth centuries in Paris and other cities were: échaudés of which two variants, the flageols and the gobets, were especially prized by the people of Paris; and darioles (q.v.), small tartlets covered with narrow strips of pastry. Two kinds of darioles were made, one filled with cream cheese, the other with frangipane cream. Talemouses which are known today as talmouses (cheese turnovers) were also much appreciated. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRES, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

Casse-museau (q.v.) is a dry, hard pastry still made today; ratons, petits choux and gâteaux feuilletés are mentioned in a charter by Robert, Bishop of Amiens in 1311, which proves that flaky pastry was known in France before the seventeenth century, when, some writers claim, the process of making flaky pastry was invented by Claude Gelée, the painter.

In the following centuries, pastry-cooks, organised into guilds, produced not only the pastries listed above, but also gâteaux bavueux, gâteaux joyeux, briches, bridaneaux, pains d'épices, waffles of various kinds, marzipan biscuits, tarts and flans garnished in various ways; pâtes royales which were a kind of meringue; almond cakes, dough cakes, gâteaux de Beauce; gâteaux de Milan, cracknels and flamiches. (See FESTIVE COOKERY.)

CAKES AND SMALL CAKES—We list below some of the best known gâteaux and small cakes. Recipes for many of them will be found in this section or in alphabetical order throughout the book.

Vacherin, Victoria cake.

Almond cake – See ALMOND.

Angel cake (American pastry) – Whisk 8 egg whites stiffly, add 1 teaspoon cream of tartar dissolved in a little water, and 275 g. (10 oz., 1½ cups) sugar.

Fold in 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sifted flour and a few drops vanilla essence or 1½ teaspoons vanilla-flavoured sugar. Whisk lightly, and pour into a large, unbuttered angel cake pan with a centre tube.

Bake in a moderate oven (160°C., 325°F., Gas Mark 3) for 45 minutes to 1 hour. Invert the tin on a cake rack and cool before taking the cake out of the mould.

Apple cake – See APPLE.

Christmas yule log. BÛCHE DE NOËL – Symbolic cake sold by French confectioners at Christmas time. It is made of Genoise cake (see GENOESE) spread with various creams, usually a butter cream. It is rolled into the shape of a log and decorated by icing the cake with lengthwise strips of chocolate or coffee butter cream to represent the bark of the log.

At Christmas another symbolic cake is made in France. It is shaped like a wooden shoe, made of nougat and decorated with petits fours (q.v.).

Easter cake, German (Ostertorte) – Make a sponge cake dough of 125 g. (4½ oz., generous cup) sifted flour, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) sugar, 5 eggs (yolks and whites separated) and 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter.

Bake in a moderately hot oven (190°C., 375°F., Gas Mark 5) for 40 to 45 minutes. Turn the cake out of the mould, allow to cool, and cut it across into halves. Spread one half with coffee-flavoured butter cream. Place the halves together and ice the cake with Fondant icing (see ICING). Decorate with a border of butter cream piped through a forcing-bag and with chocolate eggs, each sitting on a nest of the same cream. In the centre of the cake place a chick made of sugar surrounded by 4 small chocolate eggs, each in its nest of butter cream.

Fruit loaf or Bireweck (Alsation pastry), PAIN DE FRUITS – Ingredients. 1 kg. (2¼ lb., 9 cups) sieved flour, 25 g. (1 oz., 1 cake) yeast, 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) fresh or dried pears, 250 g. (9 oz.) fresh or dried apples, 250 g. (9 oz.) prunes, 250 g. (9 oz.) dried figs, 250 g. (9 oz.) peaches, 125 g. (4½ oz., ½ cup) stoned (U.S. pitted) dates, 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) seedless raisins, 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) chopped citron candied peel, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped angelica, 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) whole almonds, 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) hazelnuts, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) shelled walnuts, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) each of lemon and orange rind cut into julienne strips, 50 g. (2 oz.) star anise, a pinch of spices, and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) kirsch.

Method. Cook the pears, apples, prunes, peaches and figs in water, keeping them rather firm. Make the dough, using the flour and yeast and moistening with the juice in which the fruit was cooked. Leave the dough to rise for 2 hours.

Add the well-drained fruit to the risen dough and mix well. Add the raisins, almonds, hazelnuts, walnuts, dates, citron candied peel, angelica, orange and lemon peel, anise and spices. Moisten with kirsch and blend well.

Divide the paste into 200-g. (7-oz.) pieces, shape them into small loaves, brush with water and bake in a slow oven for 1½ hours.

Genoa cake. PAIN DE GÈNES – Pound 500 g. (18 oz., 3½ cups) blanched almonds to a powder and add 325 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar. Stir with a wooden spoon and add 5 eggs one by one. Stir the mixture for 10 minutes and add 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) cornflour, a little powdered vanilla, 1 tablespoon Curaçao and 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) melted butter, lifting the batter to aerate it. Pour the mixture into buttered cake tins lined with buttered paper. Bake in a moderate oven.

Genoa cake will keep well for 5 or 6 days.

Another method is to pound 375 g. (13 oz., generous 1½ cups) fine sugar in a mortar with 6 eggs and 2 drops bitter almond essence. When the mixture is frothy, add 65 g. (2½ oz., 10 tablespoons) sieved flour and 125 g. (4½ oz., 9 tablespoons) melted butter. Blend well. Pour the mixture into lined and buttered cake tins and bake in a moderate oven.

Kulich (Russian Easter cake) – Place 1½ kg. (3¼ lb., 13 cups) flour in a warm bowl and make a well in the centre. Into this pour 25 g. (1 oz., 1 cake) yeast dissolved in a little warm milk and mixed with a little flour to make a leaven. Work the yeast mixture into the flour, cover the bowl and stand the dough to rise in a warm place for 1½ hours.

Add 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) half-melted butter, 10 eggs, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar and a pinch of salt. Beat the mixture until it is no longer sticky and comes away cleanly from the bowl.

Gradually work in 1 kg. (2½ lb., 9 cups) flour, beating the dough lightly until it is thoroughly mixed. Add 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) each of cleaned sultanas, currants and raisins. Leave the dough to rise again in a warm place. When well risen, turn it onto a floured table, keeping a small piece to decorate the cake. Make the rest of the dough into a large ball and place in a large, well-buttered baking tin.

Roll out the reserved dough and cut it into long, wide strips. Twist the strips and decorate the cake with them. Allow the cake to rise again for 30 minutes. Brush with a mixture of egg yolk and sugar, sprinkle chopped almonds on top, and bake in a hot oven.

It is customary in Russia to ice and decorate the top of the cake.

Maids of honour. DEMOISELLES D'HONNEUR – The recipe for these cakes, which enjoyed a great reputation in England, was for a long time kept secret. History relates that Anne Boleyn, then a maid of honour at the English Court, first made these cakes in the hope of pleasing King Henry VIII who was fond of his food. King Henry, finding them excellent, called them 'maids of honour', which has been their name ever since.

The secret recipe for the cakes was said to have been bought for £1000. Maids of honour were the speciality of Richmond (Surrey), where a confectioner claimed to have the secret recipe, and to make the only true maids of honour, which he sent out daily to all parts of the country.

The cakes are little tarts of light puff pastry, with a filling made of egg, ground almonds and lemon.

Mecca cakes. PAINS DE LA MECQUE – The paste for these is the same as Chou paste (see CHOU).

Force the paste through a pastry-bag in the shape of little eggs onto a metal baking sheet. Brush with beaten egg, sprinkle with granulated sugar and bake in a hot oven.

Plum cake – English cake which is prepared as follows:

Softens 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) butter until creamy, and whisk until it turns white. Add 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) sugar. Whisk again for a few minutes, and add, one by one, 8 or 9 eggs, whisking all the time. Add 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) chopped candied peel (lemon and orange), 200 g. (7 oz., 1½ cups) stoned (U.S. pitted) raisins, 150 g. (5 oz., 1 cup) best sultanas and 150 g. (5 oz., 1 cup) currants.

Add 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sifted flour mixed with 1½ teaspoons baking powder; the grated rind of 2 lemons and ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) rum.

Line a cake-tin with greased paper, so that it extends 4 cm. (1½ inches) above the rim of the tin. Pour the mixture into the tin, taking care not to fill it over two-thirds. Bake in a moderate oven for 3 to 4 hours, reducing heat after 1 hour.

Punch cake – Fill a charlotte mould with Savoy sponge-cake mixture (see SPONGE CAKES). Bake the cake, turn out, and leave for two days.

Cut the cake into three horizontal slices of equal thickness, soak them in rum and cover with apricot jam. Decorate with meringue and finish in the oven.

Meringue for the punch cake. Mix 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) finely sieved apricot jam, ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) rum, 1 tablespoon Curaçao, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) fine sugar. Fold in 6 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Spice cake. PAIN D'ÉPICE – Rye flour should be used for spiced loaf, but ordinary wheat flour can be used. It is not necessary to use best quality honey for this cake.

Heat 500 g. (18 oz., 1½ cups) honey nearly to boiling point and remove the scum. Put 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved bread flour into a bowl, pour the honey into a well in the centre and stir. It may be necessary to add more flour to make a firm paste. Form the paste into a ball, wrap in a cloth and leave to prove. After 1 hour add 12 g. (½ oz.) powdered yeast (dried chemical yeast which is used without moistening) and knead vigorously.

Another method is to mix 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved bread flour and 500 g. (18 oz., 1½ cups) honey, leave to stand, and knead as described above, adding 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) fine sugar, 12 g. (½ oz.) dried yeast, used as indicated above, 1½ teaspoons baking powder, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) blanched, dried and chopped almonds, 25 g. (1 oz., 1½ tablespoons) each of chopped candied orange and lemon peel.

The following can also be added to this dough: 10 g. (½ oz.) aniseed, a pinch of cinnamon, a pinch of powdered cloves, and ½ tablespoon grated or chopped lemon or orange peel.

Roll out either dough to the desired thickness and put it on a buttered baking sheet, or into baking tins. Bake in a moderate oven. As soon as the cake is cooked brush the surface with milk sweetened with sugar (it should be like a thick syrup) and leave for a few seconds in the oven. The milk can be replaced by sugar syrup, cooked to a thread (see SUGAR).

Twelfth-Night cakes. GÂTEAUX DES ROIS – The custom of baking Twelfth-Night cakes is still observed and the celebration that takes place in most French homes when the Twelfth-Night cake is eaten, is a relic of the pagan feast called the Basilinda. The name phoebe which is given to the bean or symbolic favour baked in the cake, is believed to be a corruption of the word éphèbe 'a son of the house' given by the Romans to the child who, hidden under the table, pointed out the guest chosen to receive the piece which held the phoebe.

In the seventeenth century the ceremonial was vigorously attacked by the priests of Saint-Germain, but attention had been drawn much earlier to the excesses to which this custom could give rise. Pasquier quotes a passage from a manuscript by Thomas Nèargorgus, which refers to the festival:

'Many come together to dine then, and elect a king by lot or vote. This king chooses ministers for himself. Next, he opens the feast which lasts for several days, the celebrations continuing until there are only empty purses left, and the creditors come to be paid.

'Their sons then make haste to follow their example. They, too, elect a king and hold sumptuous banquets either with stolen money, or at their parents' expense, thereby learning luxury and larceny at one and the same time.

'Finally, on the same day, the head of the family, the good master, causes to be brought forth, according to his means and the number of his guests, a cake in which has been hidden a silver coin which must serve as a token. He cuts the cake into as many pieces as there are members of his family present and gives each one his piece. At the same time, he keeps back one for the infant Jesus, one for the Virgin and one for the Magi, in whose names he then gives these to the poor. Whosoever receives the piece containing the silver coin is recognised as king, and all the guests shout for joy.'

Although the ceremonial attending the distribution of the cake is now shorter and rather different from what it used to be, custom still demands that the king or queen chosen at the feast should in turn give a dinner-party at which the symbolic cake is served.

The cake varies in different regions of France. In Paris and the Île-de-France the cake is a flaky pastry galette (q.v.). In the south the cake is made from yeast dough, similar to brioche dough, and shaped like a crown.

Bordeaux Twelfth-Night cake. Place 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) flour in a ring on the table with 20 g. (¾ oz.) yeast and

CAKE RACK

1½ teaspoons salt in the middle. Knead the dough, adding 8 whole eggs, one by one, grated rind of 1 lemon, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) sugar, and 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) softened butter. Mix these ingredients thoroughly. Leave the dough, which should be limp, to rise in a warm place overnight.

Next day, knock down the dough as for Brioche dough (see DOUGH), divide into equal parts each shaped into a crown, place on buttered paper and leave to rise in a warm cupboard. Leave the crowns to cool and brush with beaten egg. Decorate with slices of citron and crystallised sugar, and bake in a moderate oven.

Another method is to make a yeast dough of 250 g. (9 oz., 2¼ cups) sieved flour and 20 g. (¾ oz.) yeast. Add water, to make the dough limp, and leave it to rise in a warm place.

Make a well in the centre of 1 kg. (2¼ lb., 9 cups) sieved flour, and add 8 whole eggs and a pinch of salt. Make a luke-warm syrup with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar, the grated rinds of 2 lemons and 2 oranges, a 3-dl. (½-pint, 1½-cup) mixture of orange-flower water, water and rum, and stir gently. Add to the other ingredients in the well, mix gradually with the flour and when well blended add the yeast dough. Mix thoroughly.

Place the dough in a floured bowl, leaving it in a warm place to rise. Knock down the dough and then shape it into a crown on a floured table. Place the crown on a baking sheet covered with buttered paper and decorate the top with pieces of citron. Leave to rise. Brush the cake with egg yolk and bake in a cool oven (150°C., 300°F., Gas Mark 2) for 1½ hours.

Limoux Twelfth-Night cake. This cake, also in the shape of a crown, is made from dough similar to that used for the Bordeaux Twelfth-Night cake, but is richly decorated with candied citron.

Wedding cake. GÂTEAU DE NOCE – In England the centre-piece of the wedding reception is the wedding cake. This cake, made in 2 or 3 tiers, is a symbol rather than a delicacy; a tradition handed down from one century to the next. The cake must be large as each wedding guest is given a slice and pieces are sent in decorated boxes to absent relations and friends.

The ingredients are: 1 kg. (2¼ lb., 4½ cups) butter, 1 kg. (2¼ lb., 4½ cups) sugar, 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) ground almonds or pounded almonds, 500 g. (18 oz., 3½ cups) chopped candied peel, 500 g. (18 oz., 3½ cups) each of stoned (U.S. pitted) raisins, sultanas and currants, 1½ kg. (2½ lb., 11 cups) flour sieved with 2 teaspoons baking powder, 16 to 18 whole eggs, according to size, 15 g. (½ oz., 2 tablespoons) allspice, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) rum. Line the bottom and sides of three graduated round cake tins with buttered paper and fill with the mixture. Bake in a cool oven (150°C., 300°F., Gas Mark 2). Test with a skewer after 3 hours, and then at half-hourly intervals until cooked.

The cake should be made several days before decorating it, to give the mixture time to settle. Trim each tier so that it is flat and round, then spread with apricot jam and cover completely with a layer of almond paste, ½ cm. (¼ inch) thick. Level the tops of the tiers with a rolling-pin. After 24 hours, ice each tier, covering all parts which will be visible when they are put on top of one another. Arrange the tiers on a low stand.

Decorate the cake with motifs made by forcing Royal icing (see ICING) through a piping-bag, and place an ornamental motif or spray of flowers on the top tier.

CAKE RACK or TRAY. GRILLE – Flat tray, made from wire-mesh, on which cakes are put to cool when they are taken from the oven.

CALABASH GOURD or BOTTLE GOURD. CALEBASSE – Fruit of the calabash tree of which several species are known. One species has long leaves and a hard green shell with acid white pulp inside, which is made into a syrup in tropical America and the West Indies. The gourds are made into Calabash pipes (imported from South Africa), drinking vessels and other articles.

Calamary

Calappa

CALAMARY (Squid). CALMAR – Common name for certain varieties of cephalopoda, which have elongated bodies, and arms or tentacles with suckers on the tips. They are found mainly in mid-ocean depths or far out to sea, but come to spawn near the coasts.

Like cuttlefish, calamary have a bag situated near the heart which contains a dark inky liquid used in painting under the name of sepia.

This mollusc is considered a great delicacy in the Mediterranean region. Calamaries in su tinta (in their ink) is a Spanish speciality.

Stuffed calamary (squid) à la marseillaise. CALMAR FARCI À LA MARSEILLAISE – Take 4 calamaries, remove the black ink bag, the cranial cartilage and the tentacles. Wash the body sacs and place them flat on a cloth.

Fry a finely chopped onion in a few tablespoons oil, add the finely chopped tentacles and 2 or 3 chopped tomatoes. Season and fry together. Soak a piece of French bread in milk, squeeze it out and add it to the pan with 2 garlic cloves chopped with parsley. Blend well, moisten with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) hot water, add 2 or 3 egg yolks and remove from the heat. Fill the calamaries three-quarters full with the resulting forcemeat, which should be fairly thick. Sew them up and put them one by one into a pan with some oil.

Fry separately a finely chopped onion and add a bay leaf and a crushed clove of garlic. Blend in 1 tablespoon flour and moisten with 1 glass each of white wine and hot water. Season with salt and pepper and simmer for 15 minutes. Strain this sauce over the calamaries, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and oil and gently brown the top.

CALAPPA (Box crab). CALAPPE (COQ DE MER) – Shellfish which has a certain similarity to the crab.

CALEFACTION. CALÉFACTION – Action of warming. Phenomenon whereby a drop of water hitting a very hot surface takes on a spheroid shape and does not dissipate immediately because of the layer of steam which seals it off.

CALF, VEAU – See also VEAL.

Calves' brains – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Calf's crow, FRAISE DE VEAU – Membrane which covers the intestines of the calf. This may be cooked in various ways (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS Calf's mesentery.)

However the crow is to be prepared, it must first be cooked in a flour-and-water stock, as for Calf's head (see below).

Calf's ears, OREILLES DE VEAU – Calf's ears must be well cleaned and blanched before use. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

Calf's feet, PIEDS DE VEAU – Blanch and cook the feet in a flour-and-water stock, like Calf's head. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

Calf's head, TÊTE DE VEAU – Calf's head is blanched, cooked in a flour-and-water stock and served à la vinaigrette. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

Calf's heart, COEUR DE VEAU – All the recipes for calf's kidneys are suitable for calf's heart, which may be cooked whole, braised, pot roasted or roasted. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

Calf's kidneys – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Calf's liver – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Calves' sweetbreads, RIS DE VEAU – Considered the most delicate of the white offal meats. They can be cooked whole, sliced in médallions, or in various other ways. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

Calf's udder, TÊTINE DE VEAU – Mostly used in Jewish cookery, taking the place of bacon fat. After being soaked in cold water and blanched, the udder can be braised.

CALORIE – Unit of heat. The small calorie is the amount of heat necessary to raise 1 g. of water by 1°C. The large calorie is equal to 1000 small calories. The calorie is used as a unit in expressing the heat and energy-producing qualities of food.

Food substances are the combination of results produced by the energy borrowed from solar radiations – the source of all energy on earth. On decomposition, which is effected first by digestion and then by the transformations which they undergo in our organism, these substances restore lost energy which can be measured by the heat released.

Experiments have enabled scientists to establish the coefficients of calories released by albuminoids, fats and carbohydrates. Knowledge of the composition of a food product makes it possible to calculate its value in energy, measured in calories. These figures are only approximate and average, and too rigid conclusions should not be drawn from them.

Nutritional experts have devised slimming diets called 'low-calorie diets' based entirely on the calorie content of foods.

CALVADOS – Famous apple brandy from the Normandy region of the same name.

CAMBACÈRÈS (Jean-Jacques, duc de) – Cambacères who was born at Montpellier in 1753 and died at Paris in 1824 was the second consul appointed by Bonaparte after the coup d'état. Marco de Saint-Hilaire wrote in his diary, 'Yesterday I had the honour of being admitted to the table of Consul Cambacères and I must confess that out of the four courses – each of which consisted of at least sixteen or eighteen dishes, and about a quarter of which I had no chance of tasting – every single one would have been approved by Lucullus or Apicius, of gastronomical memory. Under the Republic, cuisine in France has made enormous steps forward, and I proclaim it to be the best in the world.'

Cambacères (1753–1824)

Cambacères prepared his dinners (himself compiling the menus) with meticulous care and good taste. In his Mémoires Bourienne tells us: 'During the Congress of Lunéville, the first consul, on being informed that mail coaches were carrying a lot of goods, in particular delicacies for the table of prominent persons, gave an order that henceforward postal services were to carry nothing but despatches. That evening, Cambacères came into the salon, where I was alone with the first consul, who was already laughing at the embarrassment caused to his colleague. "Well, what can you want at this hour, Cambacères?" "I have come to ask you to make one exception in the order you have given the director of post. How do you expect us to make friends with people if we can't give them elegant dishes? You know yourself that, to a great extent, it is at one's table that one governs." The first consul laughed a great deal, called him a glutton and finished by slapping him on the shoulder and saying, "Console yourself, my poor Cambacères, and don't be angry. The mail coaches will continue to carry your truffled turkeys, your Strasbourg pâtés, your Mayence hams and your partridges."'

CAMBRAI (Boulette de) – See CHEESE.

CAMEL, CHAMEAU – Large mammals with one or two humps. The former are known as dromedaries and the latter as bactrians. Moses forbade the Israelites to eat camel's meat. The Arabs are not bound by this edict, but only eat camels when they are young and the meat is tender.

From the time of Gallien, camel's meat was regarded with favour. Aristophanes maintains that it was served to royalty, and Aristotle praises it.

The hump, the feet and the stomach are the parts most appreciated by connoisseurs. Camel's milk is excellent.

Camel couscous (Arab cooking), COUSCOUS AU CHAMEAU – Prepare the couscous in the usual way, but substitute young camel's meat for the mutton (see COUSCOUS).

Camel escalopes with pimentos and aubergines, TRANCHES DE CHAMEAU AUX POIVRONS ET AUBERGINES – Sauté in butter slices of camel meat taken from the sirloin, which have been marinated in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and spices.

Drain the slices and set them on a dish. Put on each slice two rounds of aubergines sautéed in oil. Pour over them the juices of the meat to which have been added 2 sweet pimentos, peeled, cut into strips and cooked in oil; 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) white wine; 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) tomato purée; and a little garlic. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Camel's feet à la vinaigrette, PIEDS DE CHAMEAU À LA VINAIGRETTE – Soak the feet of a young camel and cook in a white court-bouillon in the same way as for Calf's feet (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS). Drain, and serve with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE).

Roast camel's fillet, FILET DE CHAMEAU RÔTI – Marinate the fillet with oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and spices. It can be larded with strips of larding bacon. Roast on a spit in the same way as for a beef fillet.

Roast camel's hump. BOSSE DE CHAMEAU RÔTIE – Only the hump of a very young camel is prepared in this way.

Marinate with oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and spices. Roast in the same way as for roast sirloin of beef. (See BEEF, Roast sirloin.) Serve with its own gravy, and watercress.

Camel's paunch à la marocaine. VENTRE DE CHAMEAU À LA MAROCAINE – Marinate a 2-kg. (4½-lb.) piece of camel's paunch, trimmed and tied with string, in oil, lemon juice, spices and vegetables. Brown in oil in an earthenware casserole and remove when it is browned all over. Put 2 sliced onions into the casserole and cook slowly until soft. Add 4 peeled, seeded and chopped tomatoes, 4 peeled, seeded and diced sweet pimentos, 4 crushed cloves of garlic, and the quartered core of a root of fennel. Season with salt and pepper. Cook for 15 minutes.

Return the camel's paunch to the casserole. Pour over it 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) good stock. Add the liquor from the marinade, and a bouquet garni of parsley, thyme, bay and zest of orange. Simmer for 2½ hours. Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) rice after removing the bouquet garni. Cook for a further 25 minutes.

Take out the meat, set it on a large dish and arrange the rice around it.

Camel pilaf. PILAF DE CHAMEAU – Prepare with lean camel's meat taken from the fillet or sirloin in the same way as Mutton pilaf (see PILAF).

Ragoût of camel with tomato sauce. RAGOÛT DE CHAMEAU À LA TOMATE – Prepare with camel meat cut into pieces and marinated in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and spices, in the same way as Ragoût of mutton with tomato sauce (see MUTTON).

Camel's ribs with rice. CÔTES DE CHAMEAU AU RIZ – Trim the camel's ribs and marinate them in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and spices.

Sauté in butter, lard or oil, drain them of fat, and garnish with Rice pilaf (see PILAF). Serve with a sauce made with the juices to which a few tablespoons stock and a little tomato sauce seasoned with garlic have been added.

All methods of preparation applying to ribs of veal or pork can be applied to camel's ribs.

CAMEMBERT – See CHEESE.

CAMOMILE. CAMOMILLE – Common name for a genus of herbs of the Compositae family, two varieties of which are the Roman or noble camomile and the German or common camomile.

Camomile oil, obtained by gently simmering 65 g. (2½ oz.) camomile flower heads in 500 g. (18 oz.) olive oil (camphorated or not) for 2 days in a bain-marie, is a popular remedy.

CAMPANULA. CAMPANULE – Common field plant. It has a purplish-violet flower and one variety is edible. The leaves and roots can be eaten in salad if picked before the plant develops its stalk.

CAMPEACHY WOOD (Logwood). BOIS DE CAMPÊCHE – Tree which grows in Mexico, chiefly around Campeachy Bay. Its wood, if boiled, produces colouring matter – red on contact with acids, turning violet on contact with alkali. Deprived of its toxic properties, it is used in the manufacture of liqueurs and for improving the colour of wine.

CAN, DRUM. BIDON – Originally a wooden jug of 5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts) capacity; nowadays a metal container for liquids.

As a slang expression in French this word has taken the same meaning as bedon (belly).

CANADA – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY, American cookery.

CANAPÉS – The primary meaning of this word is a slice of crustless bread, cut in rectangular shapes, the size and thickness of which varies depending on the nature of ingredients to be put on them.

Canapés, which are also called croûtons, are made of toasted or fried bread and can either be spread with various mixtures or left plain, depending on the nature of the dishes for which they are to serve as an accompaniment.

Canapés, used to accompany winged game, are spread with à gratin forcemeat or some other forcemeat.

Canapés (hors-d'œuvres) – These canapés are made from crustless bread, home-made bread or brioche dough, and are garnished with various mixtures.

Recipes for this type of canapé, some of which are referred to as canapés à la russe, will be found in the section entitled HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre.

Canapés for various dishes – These canapés are cut in rectangles, and browned. They are mostly described as croûtons and are used as foundations for fried or grilled escalopes, noisettes, tournedos, kidneys, etc.

Canary grass

CANARY GRASS. ALPISTE – Genus of plants of the Graminaceae family, one species of which is cultivated in the Canary Islands for its seed which is rich in edible starch and is used as food by the local inhabitants. It was first introduced into Spain; from there it was taken to the south of France where it quickly became naturalised. In some parts of France it is called canary grain, bird grain or spike grain.

The other species of this plant are suitable only for forage.

CANCALAISE (À LA) – Lenten garnish composed of oysters and shrimps in Normandy sauce (see SAUCE).

CANCALE – Small fishing port situated near the English Channel and famous for its 'blonde' plump oysters.

CANCOILLOTTE – See CHEESE.

CANDLEMAS – See FESTIVE COOKERY.

CANDY (Sugar). CANDI (SUCRE) – Purified, crystallised sugar.

CANE, CANNE – Name commonly given to different species of reeds. Sweet calamus was used in the past as an infusion. The roots of giant or bamboo reed are still used in popular medicine as an infusion against lacteal disorders. Sugar cane produces sugar.

Cane juice. vesou – Liquid juice which comes out of sugar cane crushed by the mill. It is also called vin de canne (cane wine).

CANNELONI, CANNELONS GARNIS – Pasta dish served as an hors-d'œuvre or a small entrée. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

CANNING – See PRESERVATION OF FOOD.

CANON – Old French wine measure of  $\frac{1}{16}$  litre. Slang term for a unit of liquid measure used by wine merchants. The word comes from canon which means a glass in masonic terminology.

CANTAL – See CHEESE.

CANTALOUPE – Melon, thus called because originally it was mainly grown at Cantalupo, near Rome. (See MELON.)

CANTEEN, CANTINE – Camp or barrack shop for liquor and provisions, etc. Refreshment room at work.

The name also applies to a small box containing cooking equipment for officers, and to a vessel for carrying liquids.

CANTON – Former capital of South China. The best of all Chinese cuisine is Cantonese.

CAPELIN or CAPLIN, CAPELAN, CAPEL – Small Mediterranean fish which is prepared as whiting (q.v.).

CAPENDU – Variety of red apple with a very short stalk.

CAPER, CÂPRE – Floral bud of the caper bush, which grows wild in the south of France, Algeria, Turkey, Asia Minor, etc. Capers are pickled in vinegar and used as a seasoning and condiment. The best are the round (nonesuch) capers from the départements of Var and Bouches-du-Rhône. They are firmer and smaller than the English capers, and should not be confused with pickled nasturtium seeds.

CAPITAINE – French name for a sea fish which resembles carp (q.v.) and is cooked in the same manner.

CAPON, CHAPON – Young cock which has been castrated and fattened to improve its flavour. Capons are prepared in the same way as chickens (see CHICKEN).

Capon in a pastry crust (belle aurore). CHAPON EN PÂTE BELLE AURORE – Bone a capon. Spread it out on a table, season with salt and spices. Prepare two stuffings separately. The first is made with the minced meat of a chicken, lean pork, pork fat and ham, seasoned, and combined with egg. The second is made with à gratin forcemeat (prepared with chicken livers, beef marrow, truffles and chopped mushrooms), well seasoned and combined with egg. Stuff the capon with these two stuffings in alternate layers. Marinate thin strips of veal fillet, lean pork, breast of chicken, wings of red partridge, saddle of hare, and blanched veal sweetbreads in oil, Cognac, lemon juice and spices, and lay between the two stuffings, adding quartered truffles. Roll up the stuffed capon and tie in a cloth, secured with string. Cook in a daubière (q.v.) on a foundation of onion, carrots and celery moistened with a very little stock and flavoured with Madeira wine, for 45 minutes. Drain the capon and cool quickly. Remove the cloth in which it is wrapped, lay the capon on fine pastry, cover with more pastry, and join the edges. Make a hole in the top so that the steam can escape, and decorate with pastry leaves. Brush with egg yolk and bake in a moderate oven. As soon as the pastry is cooked pour in a few tablespoons concentrated chicken stock to which Madeira has been added. Serve with a ragoût of mushrooms and truffles sautéed in butter, and with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) which has a little Madeira added.

CAPONATA (Sicilian cookery) – Peel and dice 4 aubergines. Sprinkle with salt and when they have yielded their juice, fry them in oil.

Shred 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) capers, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) black olives, 1 heart blanched celery, 4 desalted anchovies into julienne (q.v.) strips.

Fry a thinly sliced onion lightly in oil. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint, scant cup) tomato purée. Boil down until it takes on a dark colour, after which add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) vinegar. Leave to simmer for a few minutes, season generously, add some chopped parsley and mix with the aubergines and the other ingredients. Decorate the top with slices of spiny lobster, tuna (tunny) fish in oil, and poutargue (salted and dried grey mullet roes).

This dish is served both in summer and winter. It is advisable to prepare it well in advance to allow all the ingredients to be permeated by the sweet-sour taste of the tomato sauce.

CAPSICUM – See PEPPER.

CAPUA, CAPOUE – Italian town situated near Naples, once renowned for its wines which, along with other 'delights', corrupted Hannibal's soldiers after the battle of Cannae.

CAPUCIN – Name by which French hunters call the hare. (See HARE.)

CARAFE – Large-based glass or crystal bottle or flagon used for water or wine. A carafon is a small carafe.

CARAMEL (Burnt sugar) – Used in cookery for colouring clear soups, stews, gravies, sauces, brown stocks, jellies, etc. It is also used in pastry-making.

Keep in small bottles with longitudinally-incised corks, which allow the caramel to be poured drop by drop.

Caramels (confectionery). CARAMELS MOUS – 375 g. (13 oz., 3 cups) loaf sugar,  $\frac{3}{4}$  litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$  pints) double cream, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) finest butter, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) glucose, 1 vanilla bean.

Put the sugar, cream, glucose, and vanilla into a pan and boil on a high flame, stirring all the time with a wooden spoon. As the sugar begins to boil, scrape the sides of the basin with the spoon to detach the sugar which is beginning to crystallise. When the sugar has reached the degree of cooking known as thread, add the butter in small pieces, stirring all the time. Cook until ball degree is reached. Remove the pan from heat. Pour the sugar onto a slightly oiled marble slab, keeping it in a frame made with oiled rulers. The sugar layer should be 5 to 6 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick. The bottom of the pan must on no account be scraped, as this would cause the mixture to go gritty. Remove the vanilla bean, leave the caramel until completely cold, and cut into small squares.

Chocolate caramels. CARAMELS MOUS AU CHOCOLAT – Follow basic recipe. Add 200 g. (7 oz.) slab chocolate that has been previously melted in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) water.

Coffee caramels. CARAMELS MOUS AU CAFÉ – Basic method as above. Flavour with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) triple strength coffee essence.

Caramels with hazelnuts. CARAMELS MOUS AUX AVELINES – Pound finely 75 g. (3 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) blanched hazelnuts in a mortar or by machine. Put into a bowl, moisten with  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) boiling milk and strain through a cloth, pressing out thoroughly. Add sugar and cream and proceed as for basic recipe.

CARAMELISE

Pistachio-nut caramels. CARMELS MOUS AUX PISTACHES – Follow basic method. Add 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) blanched, finely chopped pistachio nuts.

Vanilla flavouring may be added to all these different preparations.

CARAMELISE. CARAMÉLISER – To caramelize a mould in which a cream or some other mixture is to be poured for cooking in a bain-marie (q.v.), coat it with sugar cooked to caramel degree. To do this, heat in the mould several pieces of sugar moistened with a little water, until the sugar acquires a brown colour (see SUGAR, Sugar boiling). The mould should then be rotated so as to coat the interior completely with the caramel. The mould can also be caramelised by brushing on sugar cooked to caramel degree. Creams, custards, and other mixtures are caramelised by adding to them some sugar cooked to caramel degree.

Caraway

CARAWAY. CARVI – Umbelliferous plant producing black seeds, whose odour and taste is halfway between that of aniseed and fennel. Caraway seeds are used to flavour certain cheeses and cakes. The seeds, which have a carminative effect, were included in the carminative compounds of the old pharmacopoeia. The leaves, and the white shoots in its first season, gathered before the flower stalks have begun to shoot, have a sharp and aromatic taste. They can be eaten in salads, as a vegetable, or in soup. They are also used for flavouring a marinade.

CARBOHYDRATE. CARBONE. HYDRATE DE – See ALIMENT, ALIMENTATION.

CARBON DIOXIDE. CARBONIQUE – Gaseous body formed by the union of one atom of carbon and two atoms of oxygen. This gas is found in the atmosphere, from which it is absorbed by plants. These, under the influence of solar radiation, combine it with hydrogen, obtaining complex hydrocarbon and fat syntheses.

Soluble in cold water, it forms carbonic acid which is found in many mineral waters. When introduced under pressure into ordinary water it forms artificial soda water.

Carbon dioxide is released in large quantities during alcoholic fermentation; it is this gas which forms froth on sparkling wines, beer, cider, etc.

Highly compressed carbon dioxide is used in many industrial processes; in particular, it is used for drawing beer, 'draught beer'.

This gas has no liquid state. When it is cooled or decompressed and projected onto a cold surface, it solidifies in the form of snow which, in turn, vaporises without becoming a liquid. This property has been successfully exploited in the refrigerating industry, where blocks of solid carbon dioxide (U.S. dry ice) are used instead of ice for the cold storage of perishable goods, for air conditioning, etc. The substitution of ice by solid carbon dioxide results in a great saving of space and completely avoids humidity.

Carbon dioxide may cause asphyxia when it is found in large concentration in confined spaces, in vats for harvested grapes, etc. In small doses, however, it is a stimulant.

CARCASE. CARCASSE – Bone structure of an animal. In butcher's parlance, the body of a slaughtered animal, drawn and trimmed.

CARDAMINE or LADY'S SMOCK. CRESSON DES PRÉS – Common plant of American origin. It is eaten as salad, and has the same taste as watercress, but is less strong. It contains vitamins, and is recommended for scorbutic complaints.

CARDAMOM. CARDAMOME – Common name for Elettaria cardamomum, a species belonging to the ginger family, whose aromatic seeds are used as a spice.

CARDINAL (À LA) – Fish garnish composed of coquilles cardinal, mushrooms and slivers of truffle.

CARDINAL FISH. APOGON – One of the varieties of red mullet, found in the Mediterranean. (See MULLET.) In U.S.A., redfish, which is found from New Jersey to Texas, is very similar.

CARDINALISER – French kitchen term for shellfish which are made to turn red by plunging them into boiling court-bouillon.

CARDOON. CARDON – Plant of the same genus as the artichoke, of which the stems are eaten. The principal varieties are the cardon de Tours, plein inerne and improved white. The cardon de Tours is best, though the stems are rather spiny.

Cardoons must always first be cooked in white vegetable court-bouillon. They are then simmered in the required sauce.

Cardoons, to cook. Discard the hard stems and those that are wilted. Remove the tender stalks, one by one, and divide them into 8-cm. (3-inch) long slices. Remove all the stringy parts and rub every piece with half a lemon, to prevent them from turning black. Put them in a white vegetable court-bouillon which is already boiling. Add the heart of the cardoon, carefully trimmed.

Boil, stirring so as to prevent the cardoon sticking to the bottom of the pan. Put on the lid and simmer for about 2 hours.

Cardoons in béchamel sauce. CARDONS À LA BÉCHEMEL – Drain and dry the cardoons after they have been cooked as above. Simmer in butter, with the lid on the pan, for about 15 minutes. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Simmer for 5 minutes.

Cardoons in butter. CARDONS AU BEURRE – Drain the cooked cardoons and cook them in butter for 20 minutes, with the lid on the pan.

Cardoons with cream I. CARDONS À LA CRÈME – Simmer the cooked cardoons in butter. Moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Simmer for 5 minutes.

Cardoons with cream II. CARDONS À LA CRÈME – Simmer the cooked cardoons in butter. Remove them, and pour 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fresh cream into the pan. Boil down by half. Take off the heat, add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, and strain through a sieve onto the cardoons.

Cardoons aux fines herbes I. CARDONS AUX FINES HERBES – Cook the cooked cardoons in butter, and drain. Moisten with a few tablespoons Fines herbes sauce (see SAUCE). Simmer for 10 minutes.

Cardoons aux fines herbes II. CARDONS AUX FINES HERBES – Proceed in the same way as for Cardoons in butter. Add chopped parsley and chervil.

Fried cardoons. CARDONS FRITS – Drain the cooked cardoons, dry, and marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice and chopped parsley. Dip in light batter and fry in smoking hot oil. Drain again and season with fine salt.

Cardoons à la grecque. CARDONS À LA GRECQUE – Trim and slice the cardoons, rub with lemon juice, and cook in a court-bouillon made in the same way as for Artichokes à la grecque (see ARTICHOKE). Finish as described in that recipe. They are served as hors-d'œuvre.

Cardoons à l'italienne. CARDONS À L'ITALIENNE – Proceed in the same way as for Cardoons aux fines herbes. Moisten with Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Cardoons à l'italienne gratinés. CARDONS À L'ITALIENNE GRATINÉS – Prepare the cardoons as described in the previous recipe. Put the cardoons in a gratin dish. Cover them with the sauce, sprinkle with fine breadcrumbs and pour over some melted butter. Brown quickly in the oven.

Cardoons à la lyonnaise. CARDONS À LA LYONNAISE – Proceed in the same way as for Cardoons à l'italienne. Moisten with Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Cardoons with marrow I. CARDONS À LA MOELLE – Drain the cardoons after cooking them in court-bouillon (q.v.). When serving, lay sliced hearts of the cardoons on top, alternating with slices of marrow poached in salt water and well drained.

Cover the dish with a few tablespoons Marrow sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Cardoons with marrow II. CARDONS À LA MOELLE – Arrange the cardoons in a pyramid on a dish, and cover them with sliced cardoon hearts. Pour Marrow sauce (see SAUCE) over them and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Arrange round the edge of the dish, hollowed-out croûtes of bread, buttered and filled with poached diced marrow.

The hollowed-out croûtes can be replaced by puff pastry bouchées.

The marrow can have chopped shallot and chopped parsley added, combined with concentrated veal sauce or with dissolved meat glaze.

Cardoons à la milanaise. CARDONS À LA MILANAISE – Cook cardoons in court-bouillon (q.v.), drain and dry them. Arrange on a fireproof dish in layers, sprinkling each layer with grated Parmesan. Sprinkle with melted butter and brown in the oven. When removed from the oven, sprinkle with brown butter.

Cardoons Mornay. CARDONS MORNAY – Arrange cooked and drained cardoons in a buttered gratin dish. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) and sprinkle with grated Parmesan. Pour a little melted butter over and brown in a very hot oven.

Cardoons with Parmesan (à blanc). CARDONS AU PARMESAN (À BLANC) – Proceed in the same way as for Cardons Mornay.

Cardoons with Parmesan (à brun). CARDONS AU PARMESAN (À BRUN) – Arrange cardoons, cooked and drained, in a buttered gratin dish; cover with a Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with Parmesan and brown in the oven.

Raw cardoons à la piémontaise or Cardiella Piemontese (Italian cookery). CARDONS CRUS À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Clean white cardoons. Remove the fibres and the thin skin on the inside of the stalks, and place the cardoons in fresh water. Divide the stalks into pieces about 4 to 5 cm. (2 inches) long. Serve them as they are, arranged in an hors-d'œuvre dish, with the following sauce:

Put 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter in a pan with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint, scant cup) olive oil, 4 shredded cloves of garlic and 6 desalted, diced anchovy fillets. Cook slowly; do not allow the garlic to brown.

Add to this sauce one or two white truffles, peeled and sliced into thin strips. Mix, and serve hot.

Cardoon purée. PURÉE DE CARDONS – Prepare cardoons as for Cardoons in butter. Pass through a fine sieve, heat the purée and add butter.

One-third of its volume of potato purée can be added to the cardoon purée. A few tablespoons thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) can also be added.

Cardoon salad. SALADE DE CARDONS – Cook cardoons in a court-bouillon (q.v.), drain and dry.

Season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, and sprinkle with chopped parsley and chervil.

Cardoons with various sauces. CARDONS AVEC SAUCES DIVERSES – Cook and drain cardoons, and serve with any of the following sauces: Butter, Cream, Hollandaise, Hungarian or Mousseline (see SAUCE).

Antonin Carême (1784–1833)

CARÈME – Marie-Antoine Carême, known as Antonin, was born in Paris on 8 June 1784, and died there on 12 January 1833.

His father was a poor working man who had so much difficulty in feeding his large family that he found it simplest to abandon little Antoine after a farewell meal in a tavern at the city gate, leaving him provided with this piece of advice: 'Go, little one. In this world there are excellent callings. Leave us to languish; misery is our lot and we must die of misery. This is the time of fine fortunes, it only needs wit to make one, and wit you have. Go, little one, and perhaps this evening or tomorrow some fine house will open its doors to you. Go with what God has given you.'

The boy, thus abandoned, could have knocked on the door of a carpenter or a locksmith. Destiny led him to a humble cookshop, the owner of which gave him his first lesson in cooking. The man who has been called the Cuisinier des rois et le Roi des cuisiniers (the Cook of kings and the King of cooks) made his début in the meanest of cookshops. A precarious beginning! But, by a lucky chance, Carême was set to work in a craft for which he had magnificent gifts. The speed with which he rose – starting from such a modest beginning – showed him to be something of a prodigy.

He began work in a restaurant as a kitchen help when he was fifteen years old. His great desire to work, his wise intuition for the secrets and resources of his art, and his serene authority revealed him as a person of exceptional quality. Very soon he moved to the celebrated pâtissier Bailly in rue Vivienne, who had as a client M. de Talleyrand, an extremely clever diplomat who made gastronomy serve his political ambitions. On leaving for the Congress of Vienna, where he was able to obtain important advantages for France, Talleyrand declared to Louis XVIII, the gourmet king, who was well able to understand the words: 'Sire, I have more need of casseroles than of written instructions.'

Carême has left us an account of the time he spent with the famous Bailly: 'At seventeen,' he writes, 'I was with M. Bailly as his first tourtier. This good master showed a lively interest in me. He allowed me to leave work in order to draw in the print room. When I had shown him that I had a particular vocation for his art he confided to me the task of creating pièces montées for the Consul's (Napoleon's) table. At that time, the illustrious Avicé flourished in the realm of pâtisserie; his work served as my instruction. The knowledge of his procedures gave me courage and I did all I could to follow him, but not to imitate him.'

In brief, Carême created extraordinary decorative pieces which provoked general admiration. This young pastry cook based his set pieces on the engravings in great French collections which he studied even in his tenderest years. He associated confectionery with architecture and wrote the following sentence, quoted by Anatole France: 'The fine arts are five in number, to wit: painting, sculpture, poetry, music, architecture – whose main branch is confectionery.'

Carême entered the service of M. de Lavalette who kept a famous table and entertained the most distinguished men in politics, the army, the arts and sciences. Here Carême worked, as he puts it, to further the union of delicacy, order and economy! He next stayed twelve years with Prince Talleyrand whose table, he declared, was furnished with grandeur and wisdom. Later, he became chief cook to the Prince Regent in England. Here he stayed for two years. Every morning he explained the properties of each individual dish to the Prince. 'Carême,' said his royal master one day, 'you will kill me with a surfeit of food. I have a fancy for everything you put before me. The temptation is really too great.' 'Your Highness,' replied Carême (who relates this conversation in the preamble to his Cuisinier parisien), 'my great concern is to stimulate your appetite by the variety of my dishes. It is no concern of mine to curb it.'

The English fogs depressed him, and he returned to France. The Prince Regent, later King George IV, asked him to return, and offered munificent terms which would assure his present and future prosperity, but Carême refused.

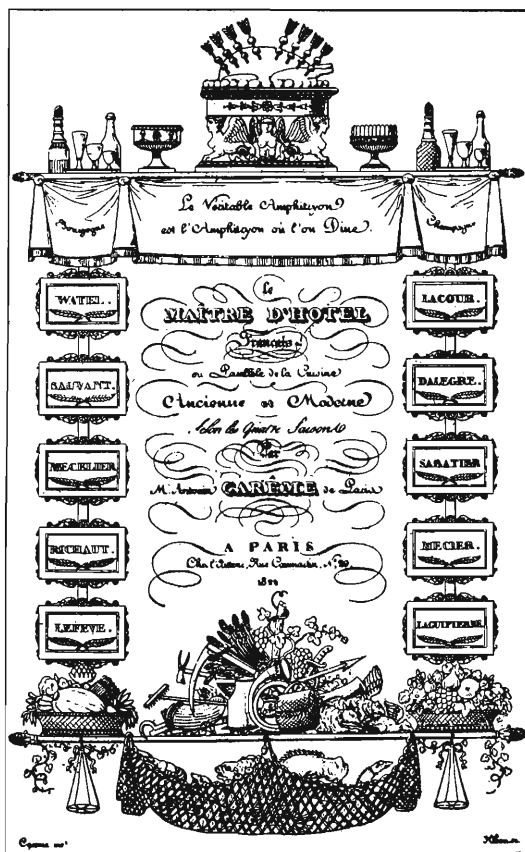

We find him at Saint Petersburg with the Czar Alexander, at the Court of Vienna, at the British Embassy in Paris, at the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, in the households of the Princess Bagration and Lord Stewart, and finally with Baron de Rothschild, where he remained for seven years. While he was with this prince of finance, the Rothschild table was considered the best in Europe. M. de Rothschild, having just bought the Ferrières estate, offered him the opportunity of directing the kitchens of the château, and added that he could, if he wished, retire there. Carême declined this offer. His strength was exhausted by the unremitting labours of thirty years.

'My prayer, he added, 'is not to end my days in a château but in humble lodgings in Paris, and to publish a comprehensive survey of the state of my profession at the present time.' He fell gravely ill and was forced to take to his bed. His great anxiety was his fear of not being able to complete books which he regarded as essential to the future of his art. He died, still under the age of fifty years, on 12 January 1833, burnt out, according to Laurent Tailhade, by the flame of his genius and the fuel of his ovens. His last moments of life were spent in dictating notes to his daughter.

Carême's life is a model of probity and nobility. Money meant nothing to him. His art alone was important. His very conception of culinary art is in tune with the grandeur of his character. It was always Carême's ideal to present sumptuously the culinary marvels with which he enriched the tables of kings. Nothing could be more meticulous than the drawings he made for set pieces, aspics, galantines, baskets of fruit, etc., or even simple borders.

Nowadays, we no longer approve of this ostentatious manner of setting out cooked dishes. We have banished display from our tables, as much for the sake of hygiene as for reasons of expediency. But it must be remembered that Carême worked for the great ones of the earth and wanted his art to 'serve as a foil to European diplomacy'. Nevertheless, while he considered that cooking must be decorative, he was equally emphatic that it must be hygienic. He himself was extremely sober and considered that 'good cooking should strengthen the life of old societies'.

Title page of one of Carême's works

He died poor, leaving only his works, listed below:

Le Maître d'hôtel français. Comparisons of ancient and modern cookery considered from the point of view of the plan and the arrangement of menus according to the four seasons, in Paris, St Petersburg, London and Vienna, 2 volumes.

Le Pâtissier royal parisien. Elementary and practical treatise, 2 volumes. Later edition, ornamented with 41 plates by the author, 2 volumes.

Le Cuisinier parisien. 1 volume.

L'Art de la cuisine au dix-neuvième siècle. 5 volumes.

Le Pâtissier pittoresque. Ornamented with 128 plates by the author.

There is unusual erudition in Carême's works. He prefaced his formulation of modern menus with a treatise on ancient cookery which required a great deal of research, and which bears witness to a devoted passion for his profession.

Le Pâtissier royal parisien is filled with the sentiment which earned his immortality: indignation. Carême was unable to view without disgust that men totally ignorant of the art of cooking published cookery books.

The plan of this book is extremely methodical. The subjects with which he deals are provisions (with observations on their freshness, quality and season), details and organisation of the larder, major and minor sauces, consommés, hors-d'œuvre, frying, sweets, the cold buffet; in short, all the details relating to the direction of the kitchen. Carême added to this treatise a vocabulary where he establishes the spelling of the names of dishes which had been travestied by so many.

Carême should be regarded as the founder of 'la grande cuisine', classic French cookery. His theoretical work, his practical work as an inventor of sauces, as pastry-maker, designer and author of works devoted to cooking, place him at a much higher level than those who preceded him.

CARIBBEAN CABBAGE. CHOU CARAÏBE – Root of Arum esculentum. Used in Asia and Africa and also cultivated in the south of France. Prepared as swedes (q.v.).

CARINA. BRËCHET – Breast bone of poultry and feathered game. If this bone is supple when gently bent to the right and to the left the bird is young and its flesh will be tender.

CARLINE THISTLE. CARLINE – Plant which grows in the mountains, particularly in the Cévennes. The root of the great carline thistle is sometimes used as a drug. The young flower-heads, eaten in salads, have a nutty taste, while the roots have a flavour similar to that of fennel.

CARMINATIVE. CARMINATIF – Medicament which prevents the formation, or provokes the expulsion, of gases contained in the intestines. The kind of carminative which featured in the old pharmacopoeia consisted of grains of aniseed, coriander, fennel and caraway in equal parts.

CARMINE. CARMIN – Substance derived from cochineal, of a vivid scarlet red colour, non-toxic, used to colour a variety of food substances.

CARNATION. OEILLET – The petals of the carnation flower are used to make a syrup and a ratafia.

CARNIVAL. CARNAVAL – The period between Epiphany and Ash Wednesday, given up to all kinds of rejoicing especially in the pleasures of the table.

CAROLINA. CAROLINE – Commercial name for a type of rice. (See RICE.)

CAROLINE – Name given in pastry-making to small éclairs served as hors-d'œuvre.

CAROTENE. CAROTÈNE – Yellow colouring matter, widespread in the vegetable kingdom. Besides carrots, it is also found in spinach, lettuce, peas, pumpkins, cabbages, oranges, etc. It is also found in butter and egg yolks. This substance plays an important rôle in the growth of animals, and is transformed into vitamins in the animal organism. Its properties emphasise the importance of fresh vegetables in the diet.

CARP. CARPE – Freshwater fish. It probably originated in China, and was imported into England in 1614 and into Holland and Scandinavia about 1660. In 1876 it was taken to U.S.A., put in fish ponds in Washington, D.C., and in 1879 distributed to twenty-five states and territories. It is abundant in the Middle West, and sold in the principal eastern cities of U.S.A.

The carp has a small mouth with four fleshy appendages called barbules, but has no teeth. The river carp has brownish scales on the back, golden-yellow scales on its flanks, greenish-white scales on the stomach. The carp which inhabits lakes and ponds often has a muddy smell, and is darker in colour. Carp can grow to an enormous size. The best season for eating them is between November and the end of March.

Mirror carp

There are several species of carp, of which the chief are the mirror carp, leather carp, Kollar carp, and Bohemian carp. The mirror carp was called the queen of carp in the old days on account of the great delicacy of its flesh. It is more hardy than the common carp, grows more rapidly, and attains a larger size. The Kollar carp is seldom found in France, but is abundant in Belgium, in Germany and in Hungary.

All these species of carp are prepared in the same way as common carp.

In France, carp are bred in Sologne and in the Dombes, from where they are transported alive to Germany in aquarium trucks for the manufacture of Hamburg carp pâté. They are also bred on the shores of the Dead Sea.

Carp à l'alsacienne. CARPE À L'ALSACIENNE – Fill a carp of medium size with a fish cream stuffing (see FORCE-MEAT, Fish forcemeat). Poach in a little white wine. Garnish with Sauerkraut garnish (see GARNISHES), and boiled potatoes. Serve with the boiled-down liquor in which it was cooked, thickened with Kneaded butter (see BUTTER) and with a little fresh butter added.

Carp cooked in beer (German cookery). CARPE À LA BIÈRE – Season a carp of moderate size which can be stuffed or not, according to taste. Put it in a fish kettle on a foundation of 150 g. (5 oz., 1¼ cups) chopped onion lightly fried in butter, together with 25 g. (1 oz.) gingerbread cut into small squares, and 2 stalks finely sliced celery. Add a bouquet garni.

Pour light beer over the fish; sufficient to almost cover it. Poach in a slow oven. When cooked, put the fish on a long platter and garnish with the roes, which have been sliced and poached. Boil down by one third the liquor in which the carp was cooked, sieve, add a little fresh butter, and serve with the fish.

Carp au bleu. CARPE AU BLEU – Small carp are used for this preparation. Proceed in the same way as for Blue trout (see TROUT).

Carp Chambord

Carp Chambord. CARPE CHAMBORD – Stuff a carp with a delicate fish cream stuffing (see FORCEMEAT, Fish forcemeats). Sew it up. Neatly remove a strip of skin from both sides of the fish leaving the skin towards the stomach untouched to hold in the stuffing. Lard the skinned portion with strips of fat bacon, or stud it with truffle slices. (Alternatively this part can be spread with a thin layer of fish stuffing garnished with slices of truffle cut in crescent shapes.)

Put the carp on the drainer of the fish kettle on a base of herbs and vegetables which, with some mushroom peelings, have been lightly fried in butter. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.).

Pour on some Fish stock with red wine (see STOCK) to reach two-thirds up the sides of the fish. Braise in a moderate oven (160°C., 325°F., Gas Mark 3).

Drain the fish, glaze it, and surround with a Chambord garnish (see GARNISHES) arranging the different parts of the garnish in separate groups. Put a little Genevoise sauce (see SAUCE) in the bottom of the dish, using the liquor from the braised carp. Serve the rest of the sauce separately.

Cold carp. CARPE FROIDE – All methods of preparation given for Cold salmon (see SALMON) and Salmon trout (see TROUT) apply to carp.

Carp au court-bouillon. CARPE AU COURT-BOUILLON – Poach the fish in a court-bouillon (prepared with red or white wine) containing aromatic vegetables and seasoning.

Bohemian carp

Drain the carp, and garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with melted butter or with a sauce used with poached fish.

Fillets of carp. FILETS DE CARPE – Lift the fillets from a medium-sized carp. Trim and season them, and poach in a little concentrated fish stock. Drain the fillets, and cover with one of the following sauces: Cream, Fines herbes, Hollandaise, Marinière, Normande, White wine, or any sauce suitable for poached fish (see SAUCE).

Fillets of carp can be accompanied by any of the garnishes appropriate to poached fish, and particularly those given for sole, or fillets of sole (see SOLE).

Fried carp. CARPE FRITE – Deep-fry small carp in hot oil. Drain, and wipe with a cloth. Season with fine salt and garnish with fried parsley and quarters of lemon.

Grilled carp à la maître d'hôtel. CARPE GRILLÉE À LA MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL – Small carp are prepared in this way. Follow the instructions for Grilled bass (see BASS).

Carp à la juive. CARPE À LA JUIVE – Cut a medium-sized carp into slices, and cook with 1 chopped onion and 3 chopped shallots which have been cooked in 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) oil without browning. Sprinkle with 35 g. (1½ oz., 6 tablespoons) flour. Almost cover the fish with white wine and fish stock (or water). Season with salt and a touch of cayenne. Add 2 crushed garlic cloves and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Sprinkle with a few tablespoons oil. Bring to the boil, and simmer slowly with the lid on for 20 minutes.

Drain the carp slices and set them on a dish, reforming the shape of the carp.

Boil down the liquor by two-thirds, remove from the heat, and beat in 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) oil. Pour over the carp and leave to cool. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Carp à la juive à l'orientale. CARPE À LA JUIVE À L'ORIENTALE – Prepared in the same way as Carp à la juive but after the sauce has been boiled down and the oil incorporated add a pinch of saffron and 25 g. (1 oz., ½ cup) peeled, blanched and chopped almonds.

Carp à la juive with parsley. CARPE À LA JUIVE AU PERSIL – Prepared in the same way as Carp à la juive with the addition of several sprigs fresh parsley to the cooking liquor. Add more chopped parsley when ready to serve.

Carp à la juive with raisins. CARPE À LA JUIVE AUX RAISINS – Prepared in the same way as Carp à la juive. Add to the boiled-down liquor, in which the oil has been incorporated, 15 g. (½ oz., 2 tablespoons) powdered sugar, 2 tablespoons wine vinegar, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) seeded raisins, and 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) currants and sultanas (mixed) which have been allowed to swell in lukewarm water and drained.

Carp en matelote. CARPE EN MATELOTE – Prepared with the carp cut into slices in the same way as Eel en matelote (see EEL).

Carp à la polonaise. CARPE À LA POLONAISE – Stuff a medium-sized carp with fish stuffing and place on a foundation of 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onion and 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped shallot in a fish kettle or large pan. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and season. Almost cover the carp with liquor consisting of half red wine and half fish stock. Add 100 g. (4 oz.) gingerbread cut into large squares.

Braise slowly on top of the stove or in the oven.

Drain the carp and cover with the following sauce:

Prepare a pale caramel syrup with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) vinegar. Add the sieved liquor in which the fish was cooked, mixed with 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) flaked almonds which have been lightly grilled.

Carp quenelles. QUENELLES DE CARPE – Prepare with carp meat in the same way as Pike quenelles (see PIKE).

Poach the carp quenelles and serve on croustades feuilletées (see CROUSTADE) or on croûtons fried in butter. They are accompanied by various garnishes and are covered with a sauce suitable for the garnish used. (See QUENELLE, Fish quenelles.)

Carp quenelles are also used as part of the garnish for large braised fish, and fish pies.

Roast carp. CARPE RÔTIE – Prepare in the same way as Roast pike (see PIKE).

Carp's roes. LAITANCES DE CARPE – Often used as part of a garnish for large braised fish. They can also be served as a hot hors-d'œuvre or as an entrée.

Carp's roes, and those of other fish, should first be poached in a little court-bouillon, or cooked in butter with lemon juice added, in a covered pan. Prepare according to the instructions given under the different recipes for soft roes (q.v.).

Stuffed carp à l'ancienne. CARPE FARCIE À L'ANCIENNE – Scale a large, soft-roed carp. Remove the flesh and add it to that of a small eel, and 8 desalted anchovies. Make a Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) but without adding any sauce. Keep it rather firm. Be careful, when removing the carp's flesh, to leave the backbone intact, complete with head and tail.

Blanch the roes, cut them into pieces, and sauté them in butter with a little lemon juice. Add truffles and mushrooms and a few tablespoons thick Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Thickly butter a tin tray of the same length as the carp. Lay forcemeat on this, about 5 cm. (2 inches) deep, in the shape of the carp, and set the backbone, to which the head and tail are still adhering, in place. Cover the bone with a little more forcemeat and add the ragoût of truffles, mushrooms and carp's roes. On top of this lay about 2½ cm. (1 inch) forcemeat, keeping carefully to the shape of the carp. Smooth the surface with the blade of a knife dipped in hot water. Butter a large baking sheet and sprinkle bread-crumbs on the butter. Put the tin tray on which the carp has been prepared over heat for a few minutes so that the butter melts. It is then possible to slide the fish onto the baking sheet.

Cover the fish with beaten egg, then with fine dry bread-crumbs, pressing them on with a knife. Pour on melted butter. With the tip of a small spoon press in a pattern of scales, beginning at the head.

Cook the carp in the oven for 45 minutes, basting frequently with clarified butter so that it acquires a golden colour. Remove from the baking sheet with a long fish slice, and slide it onto the serving dish, together with a little Sauce financière (see SAUCE), based on fish essence. Serve with more sauce. (L'art de la cuisine française de Carême, by Plumerey.)

CARPILLON or CARPEAU – Very small carp. Also a species of small mullet which does not spawn. This fish, which is found in the Rhône, the Saône and other European rivers, is treated in the same way as carp. Its flesh is tender and delicate.

CARPION – Variety of trout, principally found in alpine streams. All methods of preparation indicated for river trout can be applied to it (see TROUT).

CARRÉ DE BONNEVILLE – See CHEESE.

CARRIER PIGEON. BISET – Wild pigeon which is also called rock pigeon. It is smaller than the ring dove (or wood pigeon). Its plumage is slate-grey.

It can be prepared in any way suitable for the domestic pigeon (see PIGEON).

In France, this name is also given to a marsh bird similar to the wild duck, which is cooked in the same way as wild duck (see DUCK, Wild duck).

CARROTS. CAROTTES – Root vegetables which are used in many dishes, either as an aromatic base or alone as a garnish.

The carrot contains a notable amount of sugar, which adds to its nutritive properties. The following recipes are intended for new carrots. If old ones are used, they should be blanched first.

Carrots in béchamel sauce. CAROTTES À LA BÉCHAMEL – Cook the carrots in salted boiling water or prepare them in the same way as Glazed carrots (see below). Before serving, add a few tablespoons Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Boiled carrots. CAROTTES À L'ANGLAISE – Cook tender carrots in boiling water. Drain them, and serve fresh butter separately.

Two varieties of carrot:
1. Long; 2. Short, forced variety

Buttered carrots. CAROTTES AU BEURRE – Boil the carrots, drain, return them to the pan, add a little butter, and shake so that each carrot receives a coating of butter.

Carrots en cheveux d'ange (angel's hair). CAROTTES EN CHEVEUX D'ANGE – Carrot jam which used to be prepared in the south-west of France. (See CHEVEUX D'ANGE.)

Carrots à la crème I. CAROTTES À LA CRÈME – Boil the carrots, drain, return to the pan and cover with boiling cream. Boil down by two-thirds.

Carrots à la crème II. CAROTTES À LA CRÈME – Blanch 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) carrots, rinse in cold water, and drain. Cover with more cold water and add a pinch of salt, 1 tablespoon fine sugar and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Bring to boiling point, then reduce the heat and leave to cook until the liquid is syrupy. Test the carrots to make sure they are cooked. If they are still hard, add a few tablespoons hot water and boil down until the liquid again becomes syrupy.

Pour boiling cream over the carrots. Bring to the boil, then lower the heat and simmer until the cream has boiled down a little. Add 1 tablespoon butter, gently mixing it in.

Garnish according to the instructions of the particular recipe.

Carrots aux fines herbes I. CAROTTES AUX FINES HERBES – Proceed in the same way as for Glazed carrots (see below). Sprinkle with chopped parsley and chervil.

Carrots aux fines herbes II. CAROTTES AUX FINES HERBES – Pare and slice some tender carrots. Blanch for 5 minutes, drain, and cook in a little butter. Season with salt and a pinch of sugar, and sprinkle with chopped parsley and chervil.

Carrot flan or tart. FLAN AUX CAROTTES – Partly fill the bottom of a baked pastry shell with a slightly sweetened purée of carrots. Cover with finely sliced carrots which have already been cooked according to instructions for Glazed carrots (see below). Boil down the liquor in which the carrots have been cooked and pour it over the flan. Set in a hot oven for a few minutes.

This flan can be prepared with a greater quantity of sugar as a sweet.

Glazed carrots. CAROTTES GLACÉES – Pare some young carrots. Put them in a pan and cover with cold water. Bring to the boil with 1 teaspoon salt, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar, and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, allowing these quantities for each  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) water.

As soon as it is boiling lower the heat, cover the pan, and simmer until the liquid has practically evaporated. Shake the pan so that the carrots are properly covered with the syrupy liquid and use them according to instructions.

If old carrots are used, cut them in quarters, blanch in boiling salted water, and slice.

Glazed young carrots. CAROTTES NOUVELLES GLACÉES – Pare 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) new carrots of the same size, cover with stock, and cook slowly in a covered pan with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, a pinch of salt and 1 teaspoon sugar until the liquid is entirely boiled down. When the carrots are cooked and the liquid has become a syrup, roll the carrots in this so that each one is coated.

Carrots au jus. CAROTTES AU JUS – Proceed in the same way as for Glazed carrots, but at the last moment add a few tablespoons rich brown veal stock. Simmer for a few minutes and serve.

Carrot purée I. PURÉE DE CAROTTES – Cook 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) sliced new carrots in salted water, with the addition of 1 teaspoon sugar and 1 tablespoon butter. Drain the carrots as soon as they are cooked and put them through a fine sieve.

Heat the purée. Add a little of the cooking liquor if the purée is too thick, and incorporate 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fresh butter. Mix well and serve. One can use the carrots from pot-au-feu (q.v.) in this way.

Carrot purée II. PURÉE DE CAROTTES – Proceed in the same way as for Carrot purée I, but 10 minutes after setting the carrots on the stove add a quarter of their volume of sliced potatoes.

Carrot purée with cream. PURÉE DE CAROTTES À LA CRÈME – Proceed in the same way as for Carrot purée I. Finish the purée with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) boiled cream and 1 tablespoon fresh butter.

Carrot purée with rice. PURÉE DE CAROTTES AU RIZ – The same method as Carrot purée I, but with the addition of a quarter of the carrots' weight in rice when putting the carrots on to cook.

The addition of potatoes or rice in carrot purées helps to improve their consistency. They are prepared in this way when used for garnishes.

Carrot soufflé. SOUFFLÉ AUX CAROTTES – Press 250 g. (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) carrots, prepared as for a purée, through a fine sieve. Remove the moisture from the purée by allowing it to boil rapidly for a few moments.

Take the pan off the heat and add 3 egg yolks. Cool slightly and add 3 stiffly whisked egg whites. Turn into a buttered soufflé dish and cook in the oven (200°C., 400°F., Gas Mark 6) for about 15 minutes. Serve at once.

Small carrot soufflés. PETITS SOUFFLÉS AUX CAROTTES – Proceed in the same way as for Carrot soufflé. Put the soufflé mixture in small fireproof dishes and cook for 6 to 8 minutes.

Carrot timbale. PAIN DE CAROTTES – Sieve 250 g. (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) carrots cooked as for a purée, and place in a pan over heat to dry out for a few minutes. Add 3 whole eggs, mix well, and turn into a buttered charlotte mould decorated with sliced cooked carrots.

Cook in a pan of hot water or bain-marie in a moderate oven (180°C., 350°F., Gas Mark 4) for 30 minutes. Allow to stand a few minutes before turning out the mould.

Serve with béchamel sauce, cream, or hollandaise sauce.

Carrots à la Vichy. CAROTTES À LA VICHY – Pare and slice new carrots, and cook as for Glazed carrots, adding for each  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) water, 1 teaspoon salt, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter.

When the liquid is very concentrated and the carrots are glazed, arrange them in a dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Old carrots can be used for this preparation but cut them into strips, and blanch in salted boiling water before cooking them with the other ingredients.

Sometimes Vichy water is used as the cooking liquor, or a light pinch of bicarbonate of soda is added to plain water.

CARVING. DÉCOUPAGE – The action of cutting up meat, poultry, game, etc. to serve at table. In former times, the carving of meat was considered a noble art, carried out solely by high officials of royal or princely households who were known as écuyers (esquires) tranchants.

In royal households, the écuyer tranchant was usually a nobleman and he always carried out his duties with his sword at his side.

The art of skilful carving was considered essential by our forefathers and was taught to well-born young men as an indispensable part of good education. The last tutor provided for young noblemen was a master of carving.

For a long time in French society the carving and serving of food was carried out by the head of the household, who regarded it as a matter of honour to carve skilfully.

The introduction in France of the service à la Russe, which consists of presenting the diners with the food already carved, has caused the decline at the French table of this gracious custom.

The carving of meat is now done, at least in large restaurants, by a specialist known as the 'carver'. He may not have the glamour of the écuyer tranchant but he has the status of maitre d'hôtel, and must know his job inside out. In addition to a complete knowledge of anatomy, he must have great manual skill and physical strength, so as to be able to sever the joints of the animals he has to carve. He must also have an intimate knowledge of the grain and texture of every piece of meat which he has to carve, and he must work with elegance and delicacy.

Ways of carving poultry, game, fish, meat.

1. Chicken; 2. Goose; 3. Turkey; 4. Duck; 5. Pigeon; 6. Teal; 7. Partridge; 8. Woodcock; 9. Turbot; 10. Sole; 11. Salmon; 12. Lobster; 13. Hare; 14. Leg of lamb; 15. Shoulder of lamb; 16. Loin of veal; 17. Fillet of beef; 18. Ham

A number of restaurant carvers have won a world-wide reputation. The famous Joseph Dugnol, who founded the Taverne Joseph, was a master in the art of carving. One of his contemporaries thus describes one of the feats accomplished by this most able man:

'It was at a dinner held by M. Paillard for a few important members of the Paris press. In front of the spellbound guests, Joseph Dugnol, who was in charge of the dining-room of this famous establishment, carved a Rouen duckling while holding it up impaled on the prongs of a fork, so that there was nothing to support it. He carved this duck into very thin fillets all of which fell, in perfect order, onto the dish underneath. And that,' adds the narrator, 'with admirable despatch and in less time than it takes to tell.'

Another such was the celebrated Frédéric Delair, the great Frederick of the Tour d'Argent, who was also a master in the complex art of jointing and carving poultry, especially Rouen duckling which was the great speciality of his restaurant.

Principles of carving – As a general principle, all meat should be carved vertically, across the grain of the meat. The slices must be as large and as even as possible.

Poultry shears
(Coutell. André. Phot. Larousse)

Only leg of lamb or mutton is an exception to this rule. It can be carved in two ways, either parallel to or at right angles to the bone. Ham, whether boned or not, is always carved vertically, towards the bone if it is there.

To carve a chicken, begin with the leg. Insert the fork into the thigh and press down on it, using it as a lever on the leg as the knife slides along the carcase to sever the sinews. Sever the cartilage of the joint. Next, remove the wing. For this purpose, insert the fork under the wing and feel for the joint with the knife. To cut up the carcase, lay the chicken on its back. Hold it firm by wedging the fork high up in the breast. Divide the carcase lengthwise along the breastbone.

Nantes duck is jointed in the same way as chicken. To joint a Rouen duck, begin by detaching the two legs, as for chicken. Lay the duck on its back and shave off the two halves of the breast on either side of the breastbone. Pressing firmly down with the fork, cut the breast horizontally into very thin slices. The wings are removed last of all.

CASEIN. CASÉINE – Albumenoid substance in milk which is coagulated by rennet, the fermentation of which is the origin of all cheeses.

CASHEW. ACAJOU – There are different varieties of these trees. The type commonly known as pear cashew is cultivated in the tropical regions. Its fruit, the so-called cashew-nut, is kidney-shaped and contains an edible white nut with a sweet flavour. The fleshy part around this nut is called the cashew-pear, which is eaten raw throughout the whole of South America and in some European countries. It has a pleasant, slightly tart taste. Mixed with sugar, it can be made into excellent preserves, as well as a refreshing beverage.

Fermented, the cashew-nut fruit produces a kind of wine which is popular in Brazil, and a vinegar known as anacard or cashew-nut vinegar.

CASKING. ENTONNER – Pouring liquid into a cask.

CASSATA

CASSATA. CASSATE – The cassata is an ice cream block or mould consisting of two differently flavoured ice creams with a filling of Chantilly cream and crystallised fruits (previously soaked in brandy or liqueur). It varies greatly in quality and delicacy.

CASSAVA. MANIOC – Plant native to the West Indies, Equatorial America, and Florida, U.S.A. The root, which is a fleshy tuber, contains edible starch. The sap, containing hydrocyanic acid, is poisonous. The poison, however, can be eliminated by fermentation and cooking. Some varieties are sweet and do not contain poison; they can be roasted on embers and eaten.

In South America, cassava is used in the manufacture of tapioca. The roots are grated, left to ferment and then pressed. The residue, baked into a flat cake and powdered, forms a farinha (Portuguese for meal). The starch of cassava, dried quickly by heat when in a moist condition, agglomerates into small masses known as tapioca.

In Florida, cassava is used as food for man and beast, and is used to make starch and glucose.

CASSE-MUSEAU (Jawbreaker) – Very hard cake, much in vogue in former times, but hardly ever made today. Here is a recipe for this cake, which dates from 1730:

'Take some cream cheese, 4 eggs, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, juice of  $\frac{1}{2}$  lemon, 300 g. (11 oz.,  $2\frac{3}{4}$  cups) flour and a pinch of salt. Mix these ingredients into a soft paste and leave for a few hours.

'Make the casse-museaux in the form of very small buns. Bake for 15 minutes at a low temperature. Split them open and put them back in the oven to finish baking.'

CASSEROLE – Cooking utensil made in copper, aluminium, stainless steel, nickel, or other metals; and also in terracotta, fireproof porcelain, tempered glass, and enamelled cast-iron. Many are decorative enough to use as serving dishes.

Casseroles are usually made in a rounded form, with one or two handles. When deep-sided, as is most common in U.S.A., they are used in the oven; when shallow-sided, they are normally called sautoirs, sauteuses, plats à sauter (sauté pan or frying pan).

CASSEROLE – In French cooking the term casserole also denotes a preparation generally made with rice, which, after cooking, is fashioned in the shape of a casserole, or a timbale. Casseroles are also made with a preparation of duchess potatoes.

In U.S.A. a casserole is a dish made of two or more parts, the basis of which can be, besides rice, any pasta (macaroni, spaghetti, etc.) with meat or fish plus a sauce or gravy, and vegetables. This one-dish meal can be prepared in advance and served in a decorative casserole.

Fillings for rice casseroles. GARNITURES POUR CASSEROLES AU RIZ – All the fillings indicated elsewhere for timbales, small patty shells or vol-au-vent can be used for this entrée. Casseroles can also be filled with various minced meats (poultry, game, etc.), fricassées of fowl with truffles, various preparations of lambs' sweetbreads, truffled foie gras escalopes, and with all kinds of ragoûts and salpicons.

Rice casserole à l'ancienne (Carême's recipe). CASSEROLE AU RIZ À L'ANCIENNE – 'The rice casserole is as elegant as it is rich; its shape and appetising appearance give it a distinct character; it is certainly the most arresting entrée cooked in the oven.

'For a dinner which includes eight entrées, one prefers to serve a handsome casserole of rice rather than a hot pâté or vol-au-vent, and such a preference is right for the casserole is the most attractive of the coloured entrées.

Method of preparation. 'Wash 1 kg. (2½ lb., 4½ cups) Carolina rice in lukewarm water several times and put it in a large casserole. Cover with cold water, bring to the boil, allow to boil for a few seconds, and drain.

'Then cover the rice with good beef stock to about double its volume, and add some fat-skimmings from a chicken broth.

'Bring to the boil and then draw off the heat, in order to remove more easily the small amount of scum that will appear.

'Simmer for about 1 hour, and stir so that the grains burst evenly. Let it simmer for another 20 to 25 minutes, and stir it again. When you find it is soft and easy to crush between the fingers, take it off the heat. If still hard, add a little more stock and leave to cook until perfectly done. Stir it for a few minutes.

'When the rice is cool, work it well for a time with a wooden spoon so that every grain is crushed. It must be firm though malleable.

'Pour out the rice into a baking tin and form it into a casserole-shape 12 cm. (4 to 5 inches) high, making it smooth with the fingers. To decorate it, use the point of a knife and slices of carrot to emphasise the shape of the casserole.

'Cover the rice with clarified butter, and put in a hot oven for about 1½ hours. The colour should be a vivid yellow. When it is cooked, remove the cover which you outlined when forming the casserole, taking care to remove all the rice inside which does not adhere to the crust, which should be quite thin.

'Mix 1 tablespoon rice from the interior with a little béchamel sauce (if the filling is to use this sauce), or Spanish sauce (if the casserole is to be filled with a ragoût containing this), or any other sauce, and use to garnish the crust which is filled with whatever preparation is indicated. Before serving, lightly glaze the projections of the casserole.' (Carême, Le Pâtissier royal.)

Small casseroles of rice (Carême's recipe). CASSEROLETTES DE RIZ – 'These are made in the same way as casserole of rice. Place them in a hot oven on a metal sheet 7 cm. (3 inches) apart. Take them out when they are all a good golden colour.

'To serve, fill them with the appropriate ragoût.'

CASSIA. CASSE – Pod of a leguminous plant divided into compartments, each enclosing a fairly large seed, surrounded by a brownish pulp, which is sweet, slightly acid, with a flavour resembling that of the prune.

This pulp has laxative properties. When sieved it forms the casse mondée of the past.

CASSIS – Picturesque fishing port and commune of Bouches-du-Rhône, which has given its name to highly esteemed red, white and rosé wines. (See PROVENCE.)

Manufacture of cassis, Dijon (French Government Tourist Office)

CASSOLETTE – Small dish in fireproof porcelain, metal or fireproof glass, used for presenting hors-d'œuvre, hot or cold, little entrées, and also some desserts.

Duchess potatoes, deep fried, hollowed out and stuffed with various fillings, are also called cassolettes. Filled with salpicons or ragoûts mixed with brown or white sauce, they can be served as hors-d'œuvre or entrées.

Cassolettes served as sweets are filled with creams, various sweetened pastes, or fruits poached in syrup.

CASSONADE – French term for semirefined sugar. The yellow cane cassonade has a slight flavour of rum and is used in pâtisserie for this reason. The beet cassonade has rather an unpleasant taste.

CASSOULET – Haricot bean stew which originates in Languedoc. It is prepared with pork and mutton, or with goose or duck, in an earthenware dish which used to be known as the cassolle d'Issel, from whence derives its name.

Franc-Nohain, humorous poet, sang the praises of Languedoc cassoulet in his Nouvelle cuisinière bourgeoise. He even gives a recipe in verse for cassoulet, the substance of which is here:

'On a moderate fire I see two casseroles. In one, a leg of confit d'oie or confit de canard (preserved goose or duck) as well as little sausages, ribs of pork and loin of mutton, are browning. Do not forget the flavouring, 2 tomatoes and 2 onions cut in four. Meanwhile the white Soissons haricots are cooking gently in the other utensil. Let the cooking proceed for 2 hours, and then arrange the beans and meat in the same earthenware vessel, in such a way that the goose or duck, mutton and pork are distributed between layers of haricot beans. After which put the cassoulet in the oven. Then on the surface of the dish a golden crust forms, thick and fat. Break it, because it must be incorporated with the rest of the ingredients. Put it back in the oven, wait until another crust forms, which again must be broken: and this must be done six times. Serve after breaking the crust seven times. A royal feast; in Languedoc this is called a haricot cream or cassoulet.'

Anatole France loved the cassoulet. In Histoire comique he wrote:

'I am going to lead you to a little tavern in the rue Vavin, chez Clémence, who only makes one dish, but a stupendous one: le cassoulet de Castelnaudary, which contains legs of confit d'oie (preserved goose), haricot beans previously blanched, pork fat, and little sausages. To be good it must have cooked very slowly for a long time. Clémence's cassoulet has been cooking for twenty years. She replenishes the pot sometimes with goose, sometimes with pork fat, sometimes she puts in a sausage or some haricots, but it is always the same cassoulet. The basis remains, and this ancient and precious substance gives it a savour, which one finds in the paintings of the old Venetian masters, in the amber flesh tints of their women. Come, I wish you to taste Clémence's cassoulet.'

There are three kinds of cassoulets; that of Castelnaudary, of Carcassonne, and of Toulouse.

The three types should have the following differences: that of Castelnaudary is prepared with fresh pork, ham, knuckle of pork, and fresh bacon skins; that of Carcassonne with the addition to the above of a shortened leg of mutton, and partridges in season; that of Toulouse has added breast of pork, Toulouse sausage, mutton and confit d'oie or confit de canard.

In Languedoc the way in which the cassoulet is made varies according to whoever is preparing it. Some cook the haricots, pork, mutton, bacon skins and sausages together, and then arrange these in alternate layers in the terrine, covering the surface with a thick sprinkling of bread-crumbs, and take it to the baker's oven to cook gently for some hours.

Cassoulet de Castelnaudary I – Simmer white haricot beans and bacon skins in a glazed earthenware pot with the usual seasoning, meats, aromatic vegetables and a pinch of garlic.

Drain and place them in an earthenware pot which has been lined with the fresh bacon skins, knuckle of pork, breast of pork, sausage, and a leg of confit d'oie.

Sprinkle with a layer of coarse breadcrumbs and add goose fat. Cook gently in the oven for several hours.

When a good golden crust has formed on the surface of the cassoulet stir it in with a spoon and repeat this 2 or 3 times.

Gourmets like this served with either a fine red Aquitaine wine or with an old Minervois wine.

Cassoulet de Castelnaudary II – For eight people soak 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) dried white haricot beans for several hours, but not for too long or they may begin to ferment. Simmer in an earthenware pot with 300 g. (11 oz.) salt breast of pork, 200 g. (7 oz.) desalted rolled-up bacon skins, a carrot, an onion stuck with cloves, and a bouquet garni containing 3 cloves of garlic. Season with a very little salt.

In another pan, brown in lard or goose fat, 750 g. (1½ lb.) loin of pork and 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) boned loin of mutton, well seasoned with salt and pepper. Add 2 medium-sized chopped onions, a bouquet garni and 2 crushed cloves of garlic. Continue cooking with the lid on and add gravy or beef stock from time to time.

When the haricots are nearly cooked, remove the carrot, onion, and bouquet garni, and put in the pork, mutton, a garlic sausage, a leg of confit d'oie or confit de canard, and a home-made sausage. Simmer gently for 1 hour.

Remove the pieces of meat from the haricot beans. Cut the pork, mutton and goose into slices of equal size, cut the bacon skins into rectangular pieces, the skinned garlic sausage and the sausage into slices.

Put into a large earthenware pot lined with bacon skins, a layer of haricot beans and then a layer of the various meats with some of their sauce. Fill the pot with alternate layers, seasoning each one with a little freshly ground pepper. On the last layer of haricots lay slices of salt pork, bacon skins, and slices of garlic sausage.

Sprinkle with white breadcrumbs, and pour over them a little goose fat. Cook gently in the oven for about 1½ hours. Serve the cassoulet in the pot in which it has cooked.

There are other Languedocian cassoulets, that of Luchon, for example, which is called pistache.

CASTAGNACI (Corsican cookery) – Thick fritters or waffles made with chestnut flour.

CASTIGLIONE (À LA) – Preparation of small pieces of meat. The Castiglione garnish consists of large mushrooms stuffed with rice and browned in the oven, aubergines sautéed in butter, and slices of poached beef marrow (see GARNISHES).

CASTRATE. CHÂTRER – Castration of animals destined for the butcher, to hasten their fattening.

The word châtrer is also applied to the removal of the intestines of crayfish (U.S. crawfish) before cooking. In order to do this the central part of the tail is pinched and the intestines emerge.

CAT. CHAT – Domestic cat whose edible meat has a flavour halfway between that of rabbit and hare. Cat's meat has often been eaten in periods of famine or siege. Legend has it that in the cook-shops the cat is often used in the making of rabbit fricassées. Examination of the bones would easily enable one, in case of doubt, to distinguish between the two animals.

CATALANE (À LA) – Garnish for large pieces of meat composed of aubergines sautéed in oil, and pilaf of rice. (See GARNISHES.)

CATECHU. CACHOU – Thick sap which comes from a variety of Indian acacia. Areca catechu (betel nut). The catechu is found in compact, crumbly, irregular masses which are brownish on the outside and reddish-brown on the inside. It should neither stick to the tongue nor tint the saliva red.

Its taste, at first bitter and astringent, becomes sweet and clean without any smell. The most highly prized varieties come from Sri Lanka and Burma, the latter having medicinal properties.

The catechu contains a strong proportion of tannin, which gives it astringent properties.

Catfish

CATFISH. POISSON-CHAT – American river fish found principally in the Mississippi basin. It has six barbels or feelers around the mouth reaching from 30 to 60 cm. (12 to 24 inches) in length. The flesh is delicate and there are not too many bones.

Cat and rabbit bones:
A. Hindlimb of rabbit;
B. Hindlimb of cat;
C. Forelimb of cat;
D. Forelimb of rabbit

CATSUP or KETCHUP – Condiment of English origin, widely used both in England and U.S.A. It has a tomato base and is highly spiced.

CAUF. BANNETON – Receptacle with holes which permits fish to be kept alive in water. This term is also used to describe a baker's bread basket.

CAUL. CRÉPINE – Membrane enclosing the paunch of animals, applied particularly to that of pork and mutton. In French, this is also called toilette.

CAULIFLOWER. CHOU-FLEUR – Vegetable of oriental origin, known in Italy since the sixteenth century. A delicate food which must always be bought when its leaves are green. This is an indication of freshness. The leaves are edible.

Boiled cauliflower. CHOU-FLEUR À L'ANGLAISE – Boil a cauliflower in salted water, drain and serve with melted butter.

According to the English method a cauliflower served in this way must be cooked whole, with two rows of tender leaves enveloping the flower-head.

The leaves, ribs, and stems should not be wasted. They are excellent trimmed and cooked with the white part. They can also be used for soup, hors-d'œuvre, etc.

Cauliflower, whole and with flower head detached (right), which is the only part generally used for consumption

Boiled cauliflower with various sauces (cold). CHOU-FLEUR BOUILLI – Divide the cauliflower into florets, cook them in salted water, drain, and put them under the cold tap. Arrange the florets in their original form. Serve with Vinaigrette sauce, Mayonnaise or some other cold sauce (see SAUCE).

Boiled cauliflower with various sauces (hot). CHOU-FLEUR BOUILLI – Divide the cauliflower into florets, trim, and boil them in salted water. Drain, and arrange them in their original form. Garnish with fresh parsley.

Serve with melted butter or one of the usual sauces for boiled vegetables: Cream, Hollandaise, White sauce, etc. (see SAUCE).

Cauliflower with brown butter or noisette butter. CHOU-FLEUR AU BEURRE NOIR – Boil the cauliflower florets in salted water and arrange them on a dish in the shape of a dome. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and lemon juice. Cover with Brown butter or with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters.)

Cauliflower with cream. CHOU-FLEUR À LA CRÈME – Cook the cauliflower in the way described above, drain, and toss in butter. Rearrange the florets in their original form. Cover with a Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Cauliflower fritters. CHOU-FLEUR EN FRITOTS – Cook the cauliflower florets in salted water, keeping them rather firm. Drain, and soak them for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

Dip the florets in a light batter (see BATTER). Fry in deep fat and sprinkle with fried parsley. Serve with tomato sauce.

Cauliflower au gratin

Cauliflower au gratin. CHOU-FLEUR AU GRATIN – Cook the cauliflower florets in boiling salted water, drain them, and toss gently in butter. Arrange on a buttered gratin dish and cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and brown in the oven.

Cauliflower à la milanaise. CHOU-FLEUR À LA MILANAISE – Cook the cauliflower florets in boiling salted water, drain and toss them gently in butter. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and melted butter. Brown in the oven. When serving, pour on a little Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Cauliflower Mornay. CHOU-FLEUR MORNAY – Prepared in the same way as Cauliflower au gratin.

Cauliflower mould. PAIN DE CHOU-FLEUR – Made in the same way as Endive loaf (see ENDIVE) but with a purée of cauliflower.

Cauliflower à la polonaise. CHOU-FLEUR À LA POLONAISE – Arrange cooked cauliflower on a buttered dish and sprinkle with chopped hard-boiled egg yolks mixed with chopped parsley. Pour over the cauliflower Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) in which have been fried 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fresh breadcrumbs per 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter. Serve at once; the butter should be frothy.

Cauliflower purée. PURÉE DE CHOU-FLEUR – Cook and drain a cauliflower, dry it for a moment in the oven, and pass it through a sieve. Add one-quarter of its weight of potato purée, and heat. Mix in fresh cream, butter and seasoning.

Cauliflower salad. SALADE DE CHOU-FLEUR – Boil a cauliflower in salted water, and drain. Season with oil, vinegar, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Sprinkle with chopped chervil.

Cauliflower sautéed in butter. CHOU-FLEUR SAUTÉ AU BEURRE – Blanch cauliflower florets, drain, and cook in butter until lightly browned. Arrange in a dish and pour the butter over.

Cauliflower soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE CHOU-FLEUR – Prepare with cauliflower boiled in salt water. Pass it through a fine sieve, in the same way as for Chicory soufflé (see CHICORY, ENDIVE).

Stalks and stumps of cauliflower. MOELLE DE CHOU-FLEUR – Trim the stalks or stumps, removing the woody outer casing. Blanch whole if they are to be served with the vegetable. If they are to be cooked separately, cut into pieces. After blanching, these stalks and stumps can be prepared in the same way as artichoke stalks or endive stumps.

CAVAILLON – Little town in the Vaucluse district which has given its name to a variety of melon (see MELON).

CAVEAU – Small cellar, sometimes reserved for fine wines.

CAVEAU (LE) – Literary society, bacchic and gastronomic. Founded in 1729 by Piron, Collé, Gallet and Crébillion fls.

CAVIARE. CAVIAR – The roe of the sturgeon family, lightly salted or marinated.

Caviare is the 'fruit' of the sturgeon, a migratory fish, of which there are a dozen or so different varieties, each belonging to one of two species. That found in the Gironde is Acipenser sturio.

The sturgeon lives in coastal waters and in the spring, when fully grown, it swims up the rivers to spawn. The time of this migratory movement depends upon the temperature of the water, which itself depends upon the severity of the preceding winter and the melting snows. It usually takes place sometime between March and July.

The females (then in their eighth or ninth year) search for a deep sandy pool in the upper reaches of the river where the water is fresh; while the males (from six to seven years onwards) engage in a kind of love pursuit, escorting the females to the spawning grounds.

The baby sturgeons rapidly struggle free from the fertile eggs and, after a three-month period in the place of their birth, descend to the mouth of the river where they remain for several years. They then move to the sea and live there until fully grown, returning to the river only when they reach the age of reproduction.

At one time, the Cossacks of the Ural River harpooned the fish through holes in the ice, thus obtaining the first caviare of the year. This yellowy-gold caviare was superior to all the rest, a gift worthy of the Tsar, to whom they presented it.

Extracting the caviare is a knack acquired only through experience. Immediately the fish is caught, it is gutted (while still alive, and after having let its blood through an incision under the caudal fin so as to diminish its reactions). The eggs are immediately extracted and placed on a special sieve to be washed, drained, and salted.

Soviet scientists have perfected a type of Caesarian operation for sturgeons that makes it possible for them to be thrown back into the river alive and recommence the reproduction cycle.

Whatever the process, Iran and Russia, the biggest producers, offer three types of caviare:

Caviare malossol – A fresh caviare with firm, plump, sparkling eggs packed in specially treated tins. Malossol means 'slightly salted' in Russia.

Fresh salted caviare – From both Russia and Iran. It is prepared using eggs collected during the hot season. Packed in casks which contain approximately 60 kg. (132 lb.) caviare. It is difficult to find in Europe.

Pressed caviare – Prepared at the end of the fishing season. It consists of a dense mass of crushed black eggs which are packed in small glass jars.

French annual production of caviare does not amount to more than 3 tons, and the sturgeon (which at one time was even caught in the Seine) is becoming more and more rare.

Depending upon its age and size, a female sturgeon yields anything from 4 to 16 kg. (9 to 35 lb.) eggs. The average yield per fish caught in the Gironde is 6 kg. (13 lb.) Eaten lightly salted a few days after being fished, French caviare is delicious.

Gourmets eat caviare as it is, without toast or butter, simply adding a sprinkling of lemon juice.

There are different qualities of caviare and many other fishes' eggs are sold commercially under the name of 'caviare' ('salmon caviare', for example), but the term 'caviare' on its own can only be used to designate products based on sturgeon roe.

CAVOUR (À LA) – Method of preparing small pieces of meat, especially veal escalopes and calves' sweetbreads. These are served on circles of polenta, garnished with grilled mushrooms and filled with a purée of chicken livers and slices of truffle.

CAYENNE PEPPER – See PEPPER, Red pepper or pimento.

CELERIAC or CELERY ROOTS. CÉLERI-RAVE – Celeriac is a variety of celery which has a large edible root. Wash and pare the celeriac. Divide into quarters and cut into pieces or large slices. Blanch them for 5 minutes in boiling salted water, plunge into cold water, drain, and wipe dry. Cook them in butter, adding a little white stock or water. All the recipes for branch celery are applicable to celeriac.

The following recipes can also be applied to this vegetable.

Celeriac julienne. JULIENNE DE CÉLERI-RAVE – Used as a garnish. Pare a root of celeriac, wash and cut it into matchstick or julienne strips. Put them into a sauté pan in which

Caviare (Petrossian. Phot. Nicolas)

1 tablespoon butter has been heated. Add salt and a little powdered sugar, and cook slowly.

Celeriac purée. PURÉE DE CÉLERI-RAVE – Garnish for large or small pieces of meat. The purée is prepared in the same way as for Cardoon purée (see CARDOON).

Salpicon of celeriac. SALPICON DE CÉLERI-RAVE – Cut the celeriac into squares, blanch in salted water, drain, and cook in butter.

Stuffed celeriac à la paysanne. CÉLERI-RAVE À LA PAYSANNE – Used as a garnish. Pare and slice 2 celeriac roots into rounds 3 cm. (1 inch) thick. Blanch for 5 minutes in salted water, plunge into cold water, drain, and dry in a cloth. Scoop a hollow in each slice to half its depth.

Dice the pulp which has been hollowed out, and add double the quantity of carrot and onion brunoise (q.v.) sautéed in butter and seasoned with salt and pepper.

Stuff the celeriac slices with this mixture. Put them in a buttered ovenware dish, dust them with grated cheese, sprinkle with melted butter, and brown in a moderate oven.

All the stuffings used for tomatoes and artichoke hearts can also be applied to celeriac.

Varieties of celery and celeriac

CELERY. CÉLERI – Cultivated form of wild celery. Used a great deal by the Romans, celery did not come into wider cultivation until the sixteenth century. Growers have tried to develop the leaves as well as the root.

Celery contains an essential oil, which is highly aromatic. According to the different varieties, either the stems, elongated by trussing or culture in the dark, or the roots (celeric) are eaten. Both are eaten raw in salad, or cooked.

The Loire Valley is the principal region of French production.

Celery has diuretic and appetite-stimulating properties. Celery juice is rich in Vitamins A and C.

BRANCH (FORCED) CELERY. CÉLERI EN BRANCHES – Trim off the upper branches of the celery, keeping only the tender parts. Remove the green outer stems and trim the root. Wash the base of the celery, allowing water to run between the stems so that all earth or other foreign matter is washed away. Pare the outer stems to remove the fibres. Blanch the celery in boiling salted water for 10 minutes. Plunge into cold water, drain, and wipe dry.

Spread out on a cloth, open the stems slightly and season inside. Tie them together, 2 or 3 at a time, and put them in a deep casserole which is already buttered and lined with bacon rinds, chopped onions and sliced carrots. Cover with white stock from which not all the fat has been skimmed, or with beef stock.

Begin cooking on the stove, then remove the pan to the oven and cook for 1½ hours at a low temperature.

Celery can be cooked au maigre (without meat) by omitting the bacon rinds and replacing the stock with water.

Celery with béchamel sauce. CÉLERIS À LA BÉCHAMEL – Braise the celery, drain, and halve it lengthways. Fold each portion in half, put in a buttered pan and simmer for 10 minutes. Cover with Béchamel sauce – not too thick (see SAUCE). Simmer again for a few minutes.

Celery in butter. CÉLERIS AU BEURRE – Trim, wash, and blanch celery heads for 10 minutes in salted water. Halve them lengthways and bend each portion in two. Place in a well-buttered pan, season, and moisten with a few tablespoons white stock or water. Cook, covered, for 45 minutes or 1 hour.

Celery with cream. CÉLERIS À LA CRÈME – Pare and shorten heads of celery. Wash them and remove the fibres from the outside stems. Blanch in salted boiling water, plunge into cold water, drain, and dry.

Halve the heads lengthways, arrange them in a well-buttered pan, season, and cover with a light bouillon (or with water if you want to serve them au maigre).

Bring to the boil. Cover the pan and put it in the oven for about 1 hour. Drain the celery, bend the pieces in half, and place on a dish. Strain the liquor, skim, and boil it down. Add to it ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Moisten with 2 dl. (¼ pint, scant cup) thick fresh cream. Boil down by half and add 1 tablespoon butter. Mix, strain, and pour this sauce over the celery.

Celery à la grecque (cold hors d'œuvre). CÉLERIS À LA GRECQUE – Trim celery heads, wash well, divide into quarters and prepare them in the manner described for Artichokes à la grecque (see ARTICHOKE).

Celery à l'italienne. CÉLERIS À L'ITALIENNE – The same as for Cardoons à l'italienne (see CARDOON).

Celery au jus. CÉLERIS AU JUS – The same as for Cardoons au jus (see CARDOON).

Celery with marrow. CÉLERIS À LA MOELLE – The same as for Cardoons with marrow (see CARDOON).

Celery Mornay. CÉLERIS MORNAY – The same as for Cardoons Mornay (see CARDOON).

Celery with Parmesan. CÉLERIS AU PARMESAN – The same as for Cardoons with Parmesan (see CARDOON).

Celery purée. PURÉE DE CÉLERIS – Prepare the purée in the same way as for Cardoon purée (see CARDOON), using braised celery, cooked with beef bouillon or water. Add potatoes in the proportion of a third of the volume of the celery; this improves the consistency.

Celery with various sauces. CÉLERIS AUX SAUCES DIVERSES – Pare, wash, and blanch celery. Cook in salted water, drain, and serve like asparagus, with sauces handed separately.

Celery vinaigrette. CÉLERIS À LA VINAIGRETTE – Scrape and wash the celery. Arrange the sticks in a crystal glass. Serve with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) handed separately.

CELLAR. CAVE – Underground room with or without an arched ceiling, in which wine is kept. A good cellar must be cool (10° to 12°C., 50° to 54°F.), slightly damp, and the air must circulate a little.

Liqueur cellar. CAVE À LIQUEURS – Chest, made by a cabinet maker or goldsmith, used to lock up precious flacons and sometimes liqueur glasses.

CELLULOSE – A substance of varying degrees of hardness which forms the tissue of vegetable matter.

CENTRAL AMERICA – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY, American cookery.

CENTRAL EUROPE AND THE BALKANS – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.

CÉPAGE – Plant, variety of vine. French vines, restocked with American vines, have been grafted onto the ancient vine stocks which are recognised as the best in each region. The number of vine varieties is considerable. Among the principal stocks there are:

In Bordeaux the Cabernet franc, the Cabernet sauvignon, the Merlot, the Malbec, and the Verdot for red wines; the Sauvignon, the Sémillon, and the Muscadelle for white wines.

In Burgundy, the Pinot noir is the principal wine stock for the red wines; the Chardonnay for the white. The same in Champagne except that the Pinot noir is made into white wine. Gamay is the vine par excellence in Beaujolais. It is also grown all over central France and in the west. The Syrah and the Viognier are found mainly in the northern Côtes du Rhône; the Grenache, Carignon, Cinsault, Mourvèdre, Clairette, and Ugni blanc are the vines common to the south of France and the southern Côtes du Rhône. In Alsace the principal vines are the Sylvaner, Riesling, Traminer, Pinot gris (Tokay), and Muscat.

The white wines of the Loire come from either the Sauvignon (Pouilly-sur-Loire, Sancerre, etc.), from the Chénin (Vouvray, Saumur, Anjou), or from the Muscadet.

The Jura wines come principally from the Pinot blanc and the Poulsart; the Muscat wines from Roussillon are derived from the Alicante; the Grenache, the Aramon, and the Carigane are the vine stocks with a high yield, cultivated in the départements of Aude, Hérault and Gard.

Among the notable vine stocks producing table wines are the various Chasselas, the Muscats (white and red), the Oeillade, etc.

CÈPE – French name for boletus or edible mushroom. Recipes will be found under MUSHROOM.

CEREALS. CÉRÉALES – Farinaceous foodstuffs which are the basis of human diet.

Oats, wheat, maize, millet, barley, rice, rye and Indian millet are the gramineous crops; only buckwheat belongs to the polygonaceous group. All cereals can be made into bread, but wheat and rye are particularly suitable for this purpose.

Cereals are indispensable elements of man's diet, providing him with the energy necessary for his physical work, as well as valuable glucosides and Vitamin B.

Flour-refining processes too often deprive the cereal of its husk and germ, both of which contain these vital nutritive elements. It is for this reason that dieticians advocate the consumption of wholemeal bread, sprouted wheat and whole rice.

CERVELAS – Sausage made of pork meat and pork fat, seasoned with garlic. This type of charcuterie is so-called because brains (cervelle), particularly pigs' brains, once formed part of its composition. It is also called Saucisson de Paris (see SAUCISSON, Parisian saucisson).

CHABICHOU – See CHEESE.

CHABISSOUS or CABECOUS – See CHEESE.

CHABLIS – Town in the district of Yonne famous for its white wines (see WINE).

CHABOISSEAU – Freshwater fish of the Cottus family which has delicate flesh.

CHABOT – Mediterranean fish which locally is called 'scorpion', 'sea-devil', and 'toad', on account of its strange appearance. It is also known as 'tadpole' because of its large head, and 'grumbler' and 'sea-cock' because of the rumbling sound it makes when held in the hand. The flesh of this fish is delicate and is used in bouillabaisse and fish soups. It should not be eaten during the spawning season from November to May. In France, chub are sometimes called chabot.

CHAINGY – See CHEESE.

CHALK. CHAUX – Calcium oxide, found in various combinations and in different forms in organic tissue. Drinking water often contains too high a proportion of calcium salt and is called 'hard'. This water prevents the satisfactory cooking of vegetables. One can remove the calcium salts from drinking water by decanting it after prolonged boiling and subsequent cooling, but it must then be aerated by beating.

CHAMBERTIN – Vineyard on the Côte d'Or in the commune of Gevrey-Chambertin.

CHAMBORD (À LA) – Method of preparing large braised fish which includes a very complex garnish. (See CARP, Carp Chambord; GARNISHES).

CHAMBRER – Said of wines that are brought up from the cellar several hours before they are due to be served, so that they can be slowly raised to room temperature. All red Bordeaux should be chambré.

The expression goes back to a time when the word chambre could apply to almost any room in the house. The pantry was the chambre where the wine was usually kept before being drunk. The cold dishes were kept in the pantry and its temperature was therefore not very high.

Gastronomes are more or less in agreement that the various wines should be served at the following temperatures:

Dry white wines, between 5° and 8°C. (41° and 46°F.)

Dessert white wines, between 2° and 5°C. (36° and 41°F.)

Rosé wines, between 8° and 10°C. (46° and 50°F.)

Light red wines, between 10° and 12°C. (50° and 53°F.)

The great Burgundies, between 15° and 17°C. (59° and 63°F.)

The great Bordeaux, between 16° and 18°C. (61° and 64°F.)

It is also a question of taste. A connoisseur who wishes to have his Burgundy at 18°C. (64°F.) and his Bordeaux at 20°C. (68°F.) does not have to uncork the bottles and leave them in the dining-room, as he would have done in the old days. With central heating, our dining-rooms have a temperature often as high as 22°C. (71°F.) or 24°C. (75°F.). It is therefore necessary to gauge the proper rate of temperature-raising to avoid offering guests overheated wine. The process must be slow. A bottle of wine should never be plunged into hot water or left near a fire or radiator to hasten the process.

CHAMOIS – Wild mammal, bearing some resemblance to the goat, found in the high Alps and in the Pyrenees, where it is called Isard.

Chamois meat is considered excellent venison, especially when the animal is young. It is tougher when the chamois is older, and should be properly marinated before cooking. It is prepared in the same way as roebuck (q.v.).

CHAMPAGNE – This province, which comprises approximately the four départements of Marne, Ardennes, Haute-

Marne and Aube, has a world-wide reputation for its great sparkling white wines.

The cooking in the province is rather limited but excellent. The local charcuterie is in the first rank of gastronomic specialities, especially the delicious andouillettes of Bar-sur-Aube and Bar-sur-Seine; the andouillettes de mouton and the langues fourrées of Troyes; the famous pigs' trotters à la Sainte-Menehould; Reims hams and knuckles; and many other dishes.

Meat, particularly mutton, is good, and poultry is fairly good. Fruit and vegetables are excellent. Freshwater fish include trout, carp, pike and salmon. Good furred and feathered game is to be found, and the Ardennes thrushes are especially prized by connoisseurs.

Culinary specialities – Among the dishes of Champagne are matelotes (q.v.), using champagne; la potée champenoise; quartier de mouton à la champenoise; boudin de lapin à la Sainte-Menehould; thrushes à l'ardennaise, poulet à la peau de goret; gougère de l'Aube; salade de pissenlit au lard; and, as a sweet, beignets au fromage blanc.

Vineyards – The cellars of Champagne are famous. One single wine embellishes them – Champagne.

The vine-growing district of Champagne is divided into three great regions:

Montagne de Reims. South of Reims, of which the principal vineyards are Villiers-Marmery, Verzy, Verzenay, Beaumont-sur-Vesle, Mailly, Sillery, Puisieulx, Ludes, Rilly-la-Montagne, Chigny, Trois-Puits, Montbré, Villers-Allerand, Serriers, Charmery, Ecueil, Sacy, Villedomange, Jouy, Vrigny. Linked with the Montagne de Reims is the Petite Montagne with the vineyards of Hermonville, Saint-Thierry, Trigny and Pévy; and the Côte de Bouzy with the vineyards of Trépail, Louvois, Tauxières, Ambonnay and Bouzy.

Vallée de la Marne. Its principal vineyards are: Ay, Mareuil-sur-Ay, Mutigny, Avenay, Dizy, Cumières, Hautvilliers, Damery, Tours, Bisseuil, Venteuil, Fleury-la-Rivière, Reuil, Vandières, Verneuil, and Vincelles on the right bank; Nardeuil, Boursault, Leuvrigny, Festigny, Troissy, and Dormans on the left bank; Epernay, Pierry, Moussy, Vinay, and Saint-Martin on the Côte d'Epernay.

Côte des blancs. South-east of Epernay of which the principal vineyards are: Cuis, Cramant, Avize, Grauves, Oger, Le Mesnil-sur-Oger, Vertus, Bergères-les-Vertus, Mancy, Oiry, Monthelon.

The wine of Champagne – Apart from the 'still' white and red wines which are called nature wines, Champagne wine must be made effervescent according to the so-called Méthode champenoise with the second fermentation taking place in the bottle. This method (perfected by Dom Pérignon) comprises a series of processes that can be summarised as follows:

1. Usual alcoholic fermentation followed by all the processes employed in the production of white wine. (It should be remembered that in Champagne the black grapes are used en blanc which means that only the juice of the grape is fermented.)

2. Constitution of the cuvée (or special blend) by combining wines selected from a variety of Champagne growths.

3. After a 'dosage' of cane sugar, the wine is poured into hermetically sealed bottles. The sugar provokes a second fermentation by releasing carbonic acid gas; this is called the prise de mousse (sparkling process).

4. Working of the deposit. The bottles are placed on wooden frames (each bottle having a cage of its own) and slowly raised from a horizontal to a vertical position, to enable the deposit left by fermentation to slide down towards the cork.

5. Disgorging. Removal of the deposit.

6. Topping up the bottles with a 'liqueur' after the deposit has been removed. This liqueur consists of cane sugar solution of varying strengths, depending on whether the client requires an extra dry, dry, demi-sec or sweet Champagne.

7. Cellarage. The bottles are matured for a period which varies according to whether the wine is vintage or non-vintage.

CHAMPAGNE (Fine) – Name given to certain brandies made in the Charentes area. The famous name given to the locality which produces these famous brandies is due, it is said, to a resemblance between the soil and the chalky sub-soil with that of the Champagne region of north-west France. (See CHARENTE, Eaux-de-vie.)

CHAMPAGNISER – To produce the sparkling quality or to treat wines according to the Champagne method.

CHAMPIGNY (Pastry) – Use puff pastry (pâte feuilletée) which has been rolled out six times (see DOUGH). Roll it out to a thickness of not more than 3 mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) in a square shape. Fill the centre with a layer of apricot jam flavoured with a little kirsch and containing a few apricot kernels. Moisten the edge of the pastry, cover with a layer of pastry 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick, and seal the edges, indenting them with a fork. To prevent the jam from seeping out during the baking, press a ribbon of pastry round the edges. Brush with beaten egg and bake in a moderate oven for 25 to 30 minutes. Sprinkle with icing sugar and glaze.

CHAMPOREAU – Black coffee with the addition of eau-de-vie, Cognac, Armagnac, rum or kirsch. In slang language one says faire champoreau.

CHANFAINA (Spanish cookery) – Cook a lamb's or pig's liver in salt water. Fry 2 large chopped onions in oil. When almost cooked, add diced pimentos, chopped parsley, and chopped fresh mint. Season with salt, pepper, cinnamon, and cumin, and cook for a few minutes. Add the cooked liver, cut up into large dice.

Cook on a fairly strong heat for a few minutes. Add a few tablespoons of the liquor in which the liver has been cooked. Boil for 5 minutes. Add a small quantity of bread-crumbs cooked in water in the manner of a bread panada (q.v.) to bind the sauce. Season highly.

CHANTERELLE (Cantharellus cibarius) – Edible mushroom, also known in France as girolle. (See MUSH-ROOMS.)

CHANTILLY – Name given to fresh cream beaten to the consistency of a mousse, sweetened and flavoured with vanilla or other flavours. It can also mean a hollandaise sauce to which whipped cream has been added; also a cold sauce composed of mayonnaise and whipped cream. These last two sauces are also known under the name of mousseline. The name can be applied to various preparations and pastry confections. (See CHICKEN, Chicken à la chantilly; CHARLOTTE, Charlotte à la chantilly.)

CHAP. BAJOUÉ – The lower jaw, or half cheek (especially of pig).

CHAPELER – The preparation of breadcrumbs by drying them in the oven and sieving them. In the old days grilled bread was called pain cappelé. (See BREADCRUMBS.)

CHAPON (Mediterranean cookery) – Slice of French bread rubbed with garlic and seasoned with oil and vinegar. In the south of France, and especially in Languedoc, bread treated in this way is added to salads, especially to chicory salad.

CHAR or CHARR. OMBLE CHEVALIER – Fish of the salmon genus, found in the deep lakes and rivers of Switzerland, Savoy and Auvergne. It resembles trout, but has finer scales and teeth; and black spots on the sides. The flesh is very delicate. It is prepared like Salmon trout (see TROUT).

CHARCUTERIE (Pork butchery) – The art of preparing meats (especially pork) in order to present them in various ways.

'The pig, whose meat prepared by pork butchers is the delight of gourmets, was despised by the Egyptians, and Moses included it among the impure meats which he forbade the Hebrews to eat.

Inside a pork butcher's shop (Nicolas)

'The Greeks raised the status of the animal so far as to make it the favourite victim in sacrifices offered to the gods. They also used pork fat in cooking. The Romans probably learned how to prepare pork from them. The Roman porcella law determined the manner of raising, feeding, killing and

Some charcuterie products:

1. Paris ham; 2. Rolled shoulder; 3. Galantine of boar's head; 4. Pain de rillettes; 5. Rillon de Tours; 6. Black pudding; 7. Foie gras sausage; 8. Filet de Saxe; 9. Liver pâté; 10. Rabbit galantine; 11. Poultry galantine; 12. Brawn; 13. Truffled poultry galantine; 14. Truffled foie gras galantine (Larousse) preparing pigs, and controlled pork butchery. Pork meat was prepared in several ways in the time of the Roman empire, and was preserved by mixing it with salt, spices and aromatics. Mortadellas, salamis and all the Italian specialities were probably made under other names at that time, but more or less in the same way as they are made today. Particularly appreciated were the uterus and the udder before the animal began to breed. Varieties of small and large sausages called farcimina, tobelli, tomacula, and tomacina also appeared on Roman tables.

More charcuterie products:

1. Rolled smoked ham; 2. Knuckle of ham; 3. Rolled ham; 4. Trotters Sainte-Menehould; 5. Parisian pâté; 6. Veal and ham pâté; 7. Small meat pie; 8. Bayonne knuckle of ham (Larousse)

CHARD

'This art of charcuterie was preserved during the Middle Ages in France, but the métier of pork butchery was for a long time confused with that of cuisinier-oyer which, in the fourteenth century, comprised two categories: that of the chaircutiers and that of the rostisseurs (roasting chefs). In 1476, the chaircutiers obtained the monopoly of selling pork meat, cooked or raw (only fat pork in the latter case), but they were not allowed to kill the pigs themselves and had to buy pork meat from the butcher.

'The statutes of 17 January 1475 recognised the sole rights of the chaircutiers-saucissiers boudiniers to sell pork meat either cooked or prepared in the form of cervelas, sausages, black (U.S. blood) puddings etc.' (Franklin). In the sixteenth century they finally obtained the right to kill the pigs themselves. An order of 26 March 1664 forced them to buy their pigs at a distance of 21 leagues from Paris, a decree which has not been in force since the creation of the stockyards in the city itself.

All Parisians know the famous foire aux jambons (ham fair) which is held on the boulevard Richard-Lenoir before Holy Week. The little stalls are laden for days with all the charcuterie specialities from the French provinces, and even from abroad. Auvergne and Lorraine dominate with their concentration of sausages, hams, puddings, pâtés, etc. This fair dates from the remote past, and is said to have begun in front of Notre-Dame.

Dietetically speaking, opinion is divided about charcuterie. Some things – rillettes, brawn, andouilles, black pudding, etc. – are inclined to be indigestible, and even toxic if of poor quality. On the other hand, lean charcuterie such as cooked or raw ham, dried sausage, etc. have definite nutritional value. The virtue of charcuterie is that it excites the appetite since the spices that it contains encourage the secretion of saliva and gastric juices. It has no harmful effects if eaten in moderation.

Chard

CHARD. CARDE – Old name for white beet. (See BEET-ROOT.)

CHARENTE – Name famous for its magnificent brandies known as Cognac. They are made from the wines produced in the département of Charente-Maritime.

Eaux-de-vie of Charente. EAUX-DE-VIE DES CHARENTES – The general classification of the wines of the Charente region is arranged in the following order:

Grande champagne, Petite champagne, Borderies, Fins-bois, Bons-bois, Bois ordinaires, and Bois du terroir.

'Grande champagne includes the whole of the canton of Segonzac, and part of the Cognac canton south of the Charente river.

'The brandy of this region is the prototype of the brandies of Charente; it is characterised by a very delicate aroma, recalling the gentle perfume of the vine in flower, and by a vigorous and full savour which creates prolonged and pleasurable sensations when tasted. This brandy is warm without burning the palate, and its colour, if it has aged in an ideal situation, is a very pale gold.

'Petite champagne encloses the Grande champagne in a half-circle. It is bounded on the north by the course of the Charente, between Mosnac and Merpins; to the east by a line running from Mosnac to Barbezieux; on the south by the road running from Barbezieux to Jonzac; and on the west by the course of the river Seugne, from Jonzac to Beillant.

'The brandies of this region, without having the great finesse of those of Grande champagne, approach them to a certain degree, particularly in the bordering vineyards.

'The Borderies, as the name implies, form a series of little hills along the banks of the Charente, from Cognac to Chérac, and stretch northwards as far as the heights of Saint-Sulpice and Menac. This borders on the vast plain of the Pays-Bas.

'The Borderies produce good brandies with aroma, a certain finesse and a full body. They are less mellow than the Champagne brandies, but have more body.

The Fin-bois and Bons-bois surround the three preceding areas in the form of a pentagon whose upper angle touches Saint-Jean-d'Angély, and whose limits are the road from Saint-Jean-d'Angély to Angoulême; the line of the railroad from Angoulême to Chalais; a line drawn from Chalais to Montendre; the road from Montendre to Saujon; and a line running from Saujon to Saint-Jean-d'Angély.

'The Bois brandies have a smooth quality, but compared with those of Champagne they are soft, with less finesse, and offer briefer pleasures to the palate.

'All the other vineyards of Charente and the islands produce ordinary brandies, but worthy of imbibing.' (From les Dissertations gastronomiques by Ernest Verdier.)

Not only must the brandies of the Charente area come from the areas defined in the accompanying map in order to have the right to a Cognac label, but the wines on which they are based must derive from the following vine-stocks: Sémillon, Folle-blanche, Colombac, Blanc rainé, Jurançon blanc, Montils and Sauvignon.

CHARLEMAGNE (Saint) – See FESTIVE COOKERY.

Charlotte mould (Dehillerin. Phot.
Larousse)

CHARLOTTE – Two kinds of dessert are known by the name of charlotte. One, charlotte russe, is prepared with Bavarian cream (q.v.) which is set in a plain mould lined round the side and at the bottom with sponge fingers, and served cold. The other, fruit charlotte (and particularly apple charlotte, which seems to have been the first of its kind) is made with a confection of fruit in a mould lined with thin slices of buttered bread, usually served hot.

Carême invented the charlotte russe at his own establishment in Paris.

COLD CHARLOTTE. CHARLOTTE FROIDES –

Charlotte à la Chantilly – Use a straight-sided mould. Cut several sponge fingers into triangles and line the bottom of the mould in a rosette formation with a sponge finger cut into a circle in the centre. Trim the ends and sides of more sponge fingers and set them in the mould, upright, well pressed together one against the other. Whisk 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) thick fresh cream (kept on ice or in a cold place until the moment of beating). The cream must be so firm that it has the consistency of whisked egg whites.

Mix 125 g. (4½ oz., 1 cup) fine sugar with the cream and 1 tablespoon vanilla sugar or a few drops vanilla extract. Spoon the cream into the mould, and turn out at once.

Charlotte à la parisienne (Carême's recipe) – Take 175 g. (6 oz.) sponge fingers which are frosted on one side, and a packet of green pistachio biscuits. Cut the latter into thin slices and then into diamond shapes, 3½ cm. (1½ inches) long. Make a double star with them in the bottom of a plain octagonal mould. Then, using the sponge fingers cut into suitable shapes, fill the bottom of the mould. With the rest of the sponge fingers line the sides of the mould; setting them upright and close together. Take care to place the frosted side against the mould.

'Fill the charlotte with Vanilla Bavarian cream (see BAVARIAN CREAM) and cover the cream with sponge fingers. Surround it with broken ice, and 40 minutes later turn it out onto a silver dish.'

Charlotte plombières – Prepared in the same way as Vanilla ice cream charlotte (see below), with a filling of Plombières ice cream (see ICE CREAM AND ICES).

Charlotte russe – Line the bottom of a mould with sponge fingers cut into the form of hearts, and the sides with sponge fingers which have been trimmed at the ends and sides. Place these upright round the inside of the mould, pressed well together, and projecting about 2½ cm. (1 inch) above the top.

Fill the charlotte with Bavarian cream (q.v.). Place in the refrigerator until ready to be turned out.

Charlotte russe can be filled with Bavarian cream of different flavours.

Vanilla ice cream charlotte. CHARLOTTE GLACÉE À LA VANILLE – Line the charlotte mould with sponge fingers as described in the preceding recipe.

Just before serving fill the mould with vanilla ice or with a vanilla filling for a Bombe (see ICE CREAM AND ICES).

Iced charlottes filled with ice cream of various flavourings can be prepared in the same way.

FRUIT CHARLOTTE. CHARLOTTE DE FRUIT –

Apple charlotte. CHARLOTTE DE POMMES – Line the bottom of a charlotte mould with slices of bread cut in the form of hearts, and dipped in melted butter. Line the sides with slices of bread cut in rectangles the same height as the mould, and also dipped in melted butter. Slice 12 quartered apples and cook in 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter to which has been added 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) powdered sugar, a pinch of cinnamon, and a little lemon rind or vanilla. Stir continuously with a wooden spoon or spatula. When the apple mixture is considerably thickened, add 3 or 4 tablespoons apricot jam.

Fill the mould with the mixture and cover with a round of bread dipped in melted butter. Cook in the oven at 180°C. (350°F., Gas Mark 4) for 35 to 40 minutes. Leave the charlotte for a few minutes before turning it out, so that the apple settles. Serve with apricot sauce.

Charlottes can be prepared in the same way with pears, quinces, apricots, peaches, plums. The consistency of the fruit must be kept very stiff; if too liquid, it would soften the bread and the dessert would disintegrate when turned out of the mould.

Charlottes can also be filled with a fruit filling and with French pastry cream or with Frangipane pastry cream (see CREAM).

Schaleth à la juive is also a kind of charlotte. Line a cast-iron cocotte with noodle paste, and fill with cooked apple, sultanas, currants and raisins. Moisten with Malaga wine, and bind with eggs. (See SCHALETH.)

Apple charlotte with rice. CHARLOTTE DE POMMES AU RIZ – Sprinkle a thickly buttered charlotte mould with dried breadcrumbs, add a layer of Dessert rice (see RICE), 1 cm. (½ inch) thick. Fill the mould to within 1 cm. (½ inch) of the top with stiff apple filling. Cover with dessert rice and put in a moderate oven (160°C., 325°F., Gas Mark 3) for 30 minutes. Serve with a fruit sauce or zabaglione (q.v.).

CHARQUICAN-CHILENO (Chilean cookery) – This is the national dish of Chile. Sauté the charqui (lean beef cut into pieces) in oil with garlic and coarsely chopped onion, and then moisten with brown stock. Add carrots, turnips, tomatoes, peas in their pods, pumpkin, celery, green haricots, and pimientos cut into pieces. Braise, and serve in deep soup plates. Fried potatoes can be added.

CHARTREUSE – Liqueur made by the monks of Chartreux. The approximate composition of this liqueur is as follows:

640 g. (1 lb. 7 oz.) balm, 640 g. (1 lb. 7 oz.) hyssop, 320 g. (11 oz.) angelica leaves, 100 g. (4 oz.) cinnamon bark, 40 g. (1½ oz.) mace, 40 g. (1½ oz.) saffron.

Infuse for 10 days in 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) distilled alcohol, then add 1200 g. (2 lb. 11 oz.) white sugar.

CHARTREUSE – Preparation of partridges and cabbage. In the old days the word applied to a variety of preparations which included neither feathered game nor cabbage.

'The chartreuse is undoubtedly the queen of entrées which one can serve; it is composed of roots and vegetables, but is only perfect in May, June, July and August, that smiling and propitious season, when everything is renewed in nature, and seems to invite us to take fresh trouble in our preparations on account of the delicacy of these excellent products.' (Carême, Traité des entrées chaudes.)

Chartreuse à la parisienne, en surprise (Carême's recipe) – 'Cook 8 truffles in Champagne. When they are cold, pare and cut them in the direction of the greatest length. Peel 100 crayfish tails – these can be replaced by carrots prepared in the same way as for Chartreuse of partridge (see PARTRIDGE) – and begin to form a crown on the bottom of a buttered mould. Trim the truffles and place them on the crayfish tails in such a way as to make a Greek border. Add chicken fillets previously stiffened with butter and trimmed. Set on top of this border a crown of crayfish tails to form a parallel with the crayfish border underneath, so that the Greek border is framed with crayfish tails.

'Chop the trimmings of the truffles very finely and scatter them on the bottom of the mould. Cover these with a layer of chicken quenelle forcemeat 2½ cm. (1 inch) thick. Cover the Greek border too. Fill the middle with a Blanquette of chicken (see BLANQUETTE); veal or lamb sweetbreads; slices of game fillets; or with a ragoût à la financière or à la Toulouse. The mould should not be quite filled.

'Make a cover of forcemeat 13 cm. (5 inches) in diameter and 1 cm. (½ inch) thick on a round of buttered paper. Place this on top of the filling (stuffing side down). To remove the paper, put on it, for a second only, a hot lid which melts the butter. Join the forcemeat lid to the forcemeat surround with the point of a knife.

The chartreuse being completed, cover the top with a circle of buttered paper, and put it in a bain-marie (q.v.) for an hour and a half.

To decorate, place a ring of small white mushrooms on the chartreuse, and in the centre put a rosette of 8 filets mignons à la Conti (fowl) or game, according to the nature of the basic ragoût in the form of a crescent, topped by a mushroom.

Chartreuse of partridge, or pheasant – See PARTRIDGE, PHEASANT.

Little chartreuses of larks à la française. PETITES CHARTREUSES DE MAUVIETTES À LA FRANÇAISE – Prepare in dariole moulds (individual custard moulds) in the same way as Chartreuse of partridge (see PARTRIDGE).

The larks, boned and stuffed with à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT), and with foie gras and truffles, are rolled into a neat shape and set to cook in cabbage.

The dariole moulds are lined with glazed carrots and turnips cut into small balls, with peas and diced green haricot beans cooked in salted water. These vegetables are disposed in alternate layers and kept in place by a layer of quenelle forcemeat. The larks, individually wrapped in braised cabbage, are placed one in each mould. Cover them with a quenelle forcemeat. Cook in a pan of hot water or bain-marie, in the oven for 30 minutes.

To serve, pour game sauce, made with rich game stock, over the birds.

CHASSELAS – Species of vine stock considered to provide the best dessert grapes.

The fame of the Fontainebleau Chasselas is established everywhere. It is believed that it was originally imported into the area around Thomery from Switzerland in the sixteenth century. The introduction of Chasselas into Switzerland itself goes back to the Roman conquest by Julius Caesar. The Chasselas vines have always been grown in Turkey.

Only the white variety, or the rosé or violet varieties (obtained by careful selection and budding), are known, despite the fact that in their wild state all vines have black grapes. The Chasselas vine stock is found in Switzerland, Savoy and Pouilly-sur-Loire in the Nièvre. (The appellation Pouilly Fumé is reserved for Sauvignon wines.) The wine produced from the Chasselas grape is light and fruity, best drunk young and slightly chilled.

CHASSEUR (À LA) – Method of preparation applied to small pieces of meat, fowl or eggs which is characterised by a garnish of sliced, sautéed mushrooms, flavoured with shallots and moistened with white wine. (See BEEF, Tournedos chasseur.)

CHASSE ROYALE – Roast composed of various game arranged in a pyramid on a large dish.

CHÂTEAU (Steak, potatoes, sauce) – Name given to a rather thick slice of porterhouse steak (sirloin uppercut), weighing 800 g. to 1 kg. (1½ to 2¼ lb.), or a slice cut from a rib of beef.

This piece of meat, which in restaurants is called entrecôte chateau, is generally grilled.

The name also applies to potatoes cut into long strips and cooked in butter (see POTATOES) and in restaurants Chateaubriand sauce is sometimes abbreviated to Chateau sauce.

CHATEAUBRIAND – Method of preparing a beef fillet invented by Montmireil, chef to Chateaubriand.

The chateaubriand is a thick slice taken from the middle of the fillet, grilled and served garnished with chateau potatoes (q.v.) and accompanied by chateau sauce or bearnaise sauce.

More rarely the chateaubriand is sautéed in butter. (See BEEF, Chateaubriand.)

CHÂTEAUNEUF-DU-PAPE – The red wines of Châteauneuf-du-Pape, a small commune in Vaucluse, enjoy a world-wide reputation. They are derived principally from the vine stocks Grenache, Clairette, Syrah and Mourvèdre. They are powerful, full-bodied tannic, aromatic wines that age well. Some producers offer a full-bodied, aromatic, white Châteauneuf-du-Pape which is not without merit.

These wines have been famous for a long time. When Pope Urban X wished to transfer the papal chair from Avignon to Rome he met with a great deal of opposition from a number of Cardinals who did not wish to leave a part of the country producing such exquisite wines.

CHATOUILLARD – Name given to potatoes which are cut with a special implement into long ribbons and deep fried. (See POTATOES.)

Chatouillard was also the nickname given to an expert chef or an excellent rôtisseur or friturier.

CHAOURCE – See CHEESE.

CHAUD-FROID – Preparation of fowl or game which is cooked as a hot dish, but served cold.

Philéas Gilbert says that the chaud-froid originated at the Chateau Montmorency in 1759, and that it was given its name by the maréchal de Luxembourg himself.

The maréchal de Luxembourg had invited a large and brilliant assembly to his castle at Montmorency that evening. His table was famous as one of the best in the French kingdom. While waiting for grace to be said, a valet announced the arrival of a royal courier, bearer of a message to the maréchal requiring his immediate presence at the king's council.

There was instant dismay; disappointment showed itself on every face. But the maréchal commanded that his absence should in no way delay the serving of the banquet, and left.

The guests took their places at the table in an atmosphere of constraint, uneasy in the absence of their host, and only paying distracted attention to the dishes served with unaccustomed haste.

The maréchal returned very late and imperiously demanded to be served, but he only wanted a single dish, a fricassée of chicken embalmed in its ivory-coloured sauce which the famished maréchal tasted with pleasure. Nothing remains so firmly in the mind as a dish which has been enjoyed, and some days afterwards the maréchal expressed the wish for the succulent cold fricassée to be served again.

The dish was presented under the name refroidi, but this name displeased the maréchal who insisted that it should appear on the menu under the name of chaud-froid.

Chauds-froids – (Chaufroids is also written but it is incorrect) are in fact chicken fricassées or salmis of game served cold, covered with their gravy and glazed with aspic.

They are served with the appropriate chaud-froid sauce and glazed with a clear aspic jelly.

Recipes for chauds-froids of chicken, pheasant, partridge, quails, thrushes, will be found under these headings.

Here is Carême's recipe for chaud-froid of chicken in aspic.

Chaud-froid of chicken in aspic (Carême's recipe). CHAUD-

FROID DE POULET À LA GELÉE – 'After having lightly singed 5 fine farmyard chickens, cut them up and soak them for 2 hours in lukewarm water. Drain them, plunge them into cold water, and put them in a pan with enough stock to cover them completely. Boil for a few minutes, then drain and put them in cold water again. Trim the pieces of chicken and sauté them in butter over a moderate heat. Sprinkle with a little flour, continue to sauté, then pour in the strained stock. Stir, season with salt, a little nutmeg, a bouquet of parsley, spring onions, thyme, bay, basil, 2 onions stuck with 2 cloves, and 12 peeled mushrooms. Bring to the boil and simmer for 30 minutes. Skim carefully. Remove the pieces of chicken with a perforated spoon, draining them, and place in a covered casserole.

'Boil down the sauce to a good consistency, remove from the heat, and 2 minutes later add 5 egg yolks. Return the pan to the heat, stirring all the time, until the sauce almost reaches the boil, then sieve it. As soon as it is cold pour one-third into the fricassée, which you shake once or twice and set for 30 minutes on crushed ice. Arrange the dish in the following manner:

'Place the legs of the chickens in the form of a crown on the entrée dish. In the middle, place the wings, and above the legs put the parsons' noses and the breasts. On top of these put the fillets, as close together as possible.

'As much height as possible should be given to this entrée, which should be crowned with a fine truffle cooked in Champagne, and topped with a white double cock's comb.

'Work the sauce with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) lukewarm Aspic jelly (see ASPIC) which should make it very smooth and thick. Cover the surface of the fricassée (removing the truffle which is later replaced). Surround the piece with chopped aspic and a border of aspic in two colours cut in decorative shapes. Then serve the dish.' (Carême, le Pâtissier parisien.)

CHAUDRÉE DE FOURAS – Fish soup. Prepare a court-bouillon with herbs, white wine, a piece of butter and seasoning.

Cut various fish – conger eel, whiting, sole, plaice, raiteau, etc. – into pieces.

First put into the court-bouillon the firm fish such as conger eel. A few minutes later add the less firm fish. Boil for 15 minutes. Add butter. Serve the soup and the fish separately.

CHAUDRON (Cauldron) – Small copper cauldron, used for cooking.

Confit d'oie and confit de porc (preserved goose and pork) are cooked in this utensil. Untinned copper cauldrons may also be used for home-made jams and preserves.

CHAUMONT – See CHEESE.

CHAYOTE – See CUSTARD MARROW.

CHEESE. FROMAGE – Cheese is a product of curds, drained and, more often than not, fermented. From the earliest times cheese has been made in stock-rearing countries to use up surplus milk. Nowadays, there are so many different kinds of cheese that no list, however long, could claim to be complete. Every country, every district, has its own special cheese. Many local cheeses have a deservedly high reputation. Switzerland produces Gruyère and Emmenthal; England, Cheshire, Cheddar and Stilton; Italy, Parmesan and Gorgonzola; Holland, Gouda and Edam, and so on. It may justly be claimed, however, that no country has so great a variety and range of cheeses as France, where almost every rural district has its own local cheese.

The history of cheese is a very ancient one. We know from the Manuel de l'Antiquité celtique that the remains of enormous cheese draining racks can be found on Mont Beuvray.

The art of making fromage persillé, herb-injected cheese, goes back to the Romans who mixed their cheese with powdered thyme. Le Grand d'Aussy in his book Histoire de la vie privée des Français (1783) says: 'Even today in certain regions of Lorraine they make a cheese impregnated with fennel seeds'.

Draining curds

We also know that Blanche de Navarre sent 200 cheeses to Philippe Auguste every year, and that the poet François Villon bequeathed in his famous will a talmouze, a kind of cheese soufflé, to his friend Jehan Ragnier.

It was the custom at the beginning of the fifteenth century to send a gift of cheeses to persons one admired. For example, Charles d'Orléans, in the year 1407, sent several to 'ladies to whom he was attached'. In the sixteenth century Brie cheese was considered the best of all. The cheeses of Dauphiné, Vexin, Auvergne, Switzerland, Holland, and Italy were also very much in demand.

Madame de Montespan invented 100 sauces using cheese. When Louis XVI stopped at Varennes in need of refreshment he asked for wine and cheese.

In 1777 there were about thirty varieties that had made a name for themselves. Later Metternich gave a reception at which he served all the French cheeses, and invited his guests to take part in competitions for choosing the best.

Fresh cheeses are distinct from other cheeses in not being fermented. They are produced by spontaneous coagulation (Fromage à la pie) or coagulation with rennet (Petit-suisse).

Fermented cheeses made from raw curds are of two kinds: soft cheeses (Brie, Coulommiers, Camembert, Livarot, Pont-l'Évêque, etc.), and hard cheeses (Dutch, Cantal, Cheshire, Roquefort, Gorgonzola, etc.). There are also cheeses made from scalded curds (Gruyère, Emmenthal, Parmesan, Port-Salut, etc.).

(Maison Androuët. Phot. Larousse)

The milk of cows, goats, ewes, and sometimes other mammals, can be used skimmed, partly skimmed, whole, or enriched with added cream. Coagulation can take place spontaneously, that is to say by the natural fermentation of the milk, or it can be induced by the addition of certain vegetable juices. Most often it is brought about by the action of rennet, a curdling agent extracted from the stomachs of young mammals. Rennet may be used in solid form (dried or fresh) or in liquid form (plain or seasoned with herbs).

Curdling with rennet is carried out in different ways. The milk may be left to curdle in cold surroundings, when very little rennet is used. It may be curdled at a higher temperature (38° to 40°C., 100° to 104°F.) in which case more rennet is required.

The moulding of the cheese, which is the last stage in the drainage of the curds, is carried out in osier baskets, or in earthenware, pottery, wood or tinsplate moulds. These are usually covered with a cloth. For soft cheeses, the curds are carefully broken up before being put in the moulds. For hard cheeses, all moisture is expelled by putting the curds through a press, or by draining them between two boards with weights on top.

At this stage, the process of fermentation begins. Theoretically this process is divided into three stages which, in practice, tend more or less to overlap:

1. The action of the ferments in the milk which attack the lactose (sugar of milk) and turn it into lactic acid.

2. The culture of fungi which appear on the surface of the curds and quickly form a thick, furry fungoid skin (known in the cheese trade as the 'white'). These fungi feed on the lactic acid as soon as it is formed, up to the time when all the lactose has been used. They also play a part in the maturing of the curds. In particular, it is these fungi which give to certain cheeses their characteristic and much-prized bitter flavour; but their action must not be allowed to proceed unchecked.

3. The culture of secondary microbes. These are organisms of various kinds, microbes, fungi, mildew, mainly red or orange in colour (known in the cheese trade as the 'red'). Their function is to inhibit, by co-existence, the too-rapid breeding of the fungi of the second phase. Once the 'red' has been formed, the cheeses settle down and mature more or less quickly according to their nature.

Cheese shop (Nicolas)

Cheese platter (Ledoyen. Phot. Nicolas)

Dietetically speaking, cheese is a first-class protein capable of replacing meat in vegetarian diets. It is rich in proteins, fats, Vitamins A, B1, B2, and C, and in mineral salts. It is very digestible and, apart from some fatty or fermented varieties, is suitable for all constitutions.

Much has been written about which wine goes with which particular cheese. It is entirely a matter of taste. Saint-Amand described cheese as a drinking spur, but this opinion is debatable, for cheese can over-emphasise the value of the wine and give a false impression of its true quality. The great wines do not require cheese to throw them into relief.

Red wines are generally best. White wines suit goats' milk cheeses and cooked cheese dishes; Comte cheese and Château-Chalon wine go very well together. Never serve the great wines with cheese.

The serving of cheese – In France, cheeses of whatever kind, are always served before the sweet (dessert). Thus they would normally follow the main course, or the salad if this should be served separately after the meat and vegetables.

Each cheese is usually served alone on a separate plate, but cheeses may also be served on a cheese board.

It is desirable to serve fresh butter at the same time as the cheese. In this way, diners may take butter or not, as they please. Generally, connoisseurs prefer not to take butter with their cheese.

Savoury biscuits (U.S. crackers) of various kinds and slices of black bread may also be served with cheese. With certain cheeses, notably Munster, it is usual to serve cumin. Fresh heads of celery or bulb fennel also provide a suitable accompaniment for cheese.

It is the custom in France to offer the cheese first to the master of the house. He examines it and drives the knife into it before it is handed round to the guests. This applies especially to whole cheeses, for there are always shy guests who are reluctant to start, say, an uncut Camembert.

Various laws, decrees and judicial precedents regulate the legal use of the names given to various French cheeses. The name Roquefort, for instance, is strictly reserved for cheeses coming from an area whose boundaries are clearly laid down. In the case of other cheeses, such as Camembert, Brie, and Port-Salut, the name must be followed by a clear indication of the département or district in which the cheese has been made.

There are at least 400 different cheeses made in France alone. This section lists the most appreciated French cheeses as well as many foreign cheeses which are obtainable in France and elsewhere.

Aettekees – Belgian cheese which is in season from November to May.

Amou – Cheese made in Béarn which is in season from November to May.

Arrigny – A Champagne cheese in season from November to May.

Asco – Corsican cheese which is in season from November to May.

Aurore – Normandy cheese eaten throughout the year.

Autun – This is called 'cow cheese' and can be eaten all the year round.

(Les) Aydes – This cheese from the Orléanais district is in season between October and June.

Banon – Made in Provence, in the foothills of the Alps. In season from May to November.

Beaufort – Savoy cheese eaten all the year round.

Beaumont – Savoy cheese which is in season from October to June.

CHEESE

Beaupré de Roybon – Cheese made in the Dauphiné which is in season from November to April.

Bleu d'Auvergne – A blue mould cheese which is also known under the name of Bleu de Salers and is in season from November to May. It is usually made of a mixture of goats', ewes' and cows' milk.

Bleu de Basillac – Cheese made in the Limousin département. It resembles Roquefort, and is at its best between November and May.

Bleus français (French blue cheeses) – In France there are a number of these cheeses, which have something in common with Roquefort but are less delicate in flavour. Among the best of these are Bleu d'Auvergne, made chiefly in the Mont-Dore district; Fourme d'Ambert, Grand bornant, and Thônes of the Haute-Savoie; the Blue cheese Gex, made from cows' milk in the Ain département; Champoléon from the Queyras (in the High Alps); Saint-Marcellin and Sassenage, made in the Isère district; Septmoncel, made in the Jura mountains.

According to the producers of Roquefort, cows' milk cheeses and Roquefort are two distinct categories of cheeses. Persillé is the term used for Roquefort and bleu the term used for other veined cheeses. However, the 'persillé' of the Aravis is allowed.

Blue cheeses from other lands – A great many blue cheeses are made outside France. They include blue Tyrolean from Rastadt; Cabrales from the Asturias; Portuguese Castello-branco; Sarrazin from Sarraz in Switzerland; Stilton from England; the Italian Stracchino which has something in common with Gorgonzola.

Bondon – Variety of cheese which is made in Normandy, mostly around Rouen. It is a whole-milk, small, loaf-shaped cheese, rather like Gournay in texture, but with 2 per cent sugar added. It is about 7½ cm. (3 inches) high and 4 to 5 cm. (1½ to 2 inches) in diameter.

Bosson macéré – French cheese made in Provence, which is in season from December to March.

(La) Bouille – Cheese made in Normandy, which is in season between October and May.

Boule de Lille – Dutch cheese, known in Holland under the name of Oude Kaas, which can be eaten all the year round.

Boulette d'Avesnes, or Boulette de Cambrai – Cheese made in Flanders, in season from November to May.

Brie – This cheese has a claim to nobility. As long ago as the fifteenth century, Charles d'Orléans, father of Louis XII, ordered Bries by the dozen to give as New Year presents to his friends. Two centuries later, Saint Amant, the poet of good living, devoted a much-quoted ode to 'this gentle jam of Bacchus':

*Sus ! qu'à plein gosier on s'écrie :
Bény soit le territoire de Brie,
Pont-l'Évêque, arrière de nous !
Auvergne et Milan, cachez-vous.
C'est lui seulement qui mérite
Qu'en or sa gloire soit écrite ;
Je dis en or avec raison,
Puisqu'il feroit comparaison
De ce fromage que j'honore
A ce métal que l'homme adore :
Il est aussi jaune que lui ;
Toutefois ce n'est pas d'ennuy,
Car, si tost que le doigt le presse,
Il rit et se crève de gresse . . .
Hé ! pourquoi n'est-il infiny
Tout aussi bien en sa matière
Qu'il l'estoit en sa forme entière ?
Pourquoy tousjours s'appetissant,
De lune devient-il croissant ? . . .*

Now then, let us shout with all our might :

Blessed be the land of Brie.

Pont-l'Évêque, get thee behind us !

Auvergne and Milan, out of our sight.

Brie alone deserves that we Should record her praises in letters of gold.

Gold, I say, and with good reason,

Since it is with gold that one must compare

This cheese to which I now pay homage.

It is as yellow as the gold worshipped by man,

But without its anxiety

For one has only to press it with one's fingers

For it to split its sides with laughter

And run over with fat.

Why then, is it not endless

As indeed its circular form is endless ?

Why must its full moon, eternally appetising,

Wane to a crescent ? . . .

The cheese of Brie has not deteriorated since that time. On the contrary, it has actually improved in quality and is now more uniformly good, since the local farmers, abandoning the old methods, use the ferments tested and recommended by the laboratory at La Ferté-sous-Jouarre.

Brie is fully ripe when the cheese is all of the same texture. When pressure is exerted on the surface of a section the cheese should bulge but not run. Brie is made in various sizes. A large Brie may be up to 54 cm. (22 inches) in diameter, a medium Brie up to 42 cm. (16 inches), a small one not more than 33 cm. (13 inches). There are different kinds of Brie known as Bries fermiers, laitiers and façon Coulommiers.

It takes from 13 litres (2¾ gallons, 3½ gallons) to 20 litres (4½ gallons, 5½ gallons) milk to make a cheese, according to size. Although whole milk is always used, some experts advise a little skimming – bringing the percentage of cream down to 25 or 27 per cent – because, they maintain, a higher cream content makes the cheese bitter.

A good Brie must be creamy but not runny, and should be pale yellow in colour.

Brie de Meaux. At its best from November to May.

Brie de Coulommiers. Smaller than Brie de Meaux – approximately 26 cm. (10 inches) in diameter. At its best from November to May.

Brie de Melun. This is made in thicker and smaller rounds than Brie de Meaux. It is a special cheese with a much more pronounced aroma, being saltier and more piquant. It is good all the year round.

Brie de Montereau. Made in the same way as Brie de Meaux but is a smaller and deeper cheese.

Brillat-Savarin – Cheese made in Normandy which can be eaten all the year round.

Brinzen – Hungarian cheese made from fresh ewes' milk, mixed with rennet. It is dried for 10 to 12 days, kneaded with 3 per cent salt, then put into drums and pressed.

Broccio – Corsican cheese, made from goats' milk or sour ewes' milk, very delicate, and similar in appearance to Petit-suisse. A large proportion of this cheese is exported.

It is eaten plain, in fritters or in ravioli and is in season between May and November. It is also used as a stuffing for vegetables. A special cake called Fiadene is made with it.

Caccio-cavallo – Italian cheese made in the region of Naples from skimmed cows' milk, moulded in the shape of gourds and left to dry straddled on sticks. Some Caccio-cavallo addicts are not satisfied with merely having the cheese dried, but insist on its being smoke-cured as well, as was done in the time of the Romans.

Camembert – A soft cheese, invented, or rather perfected, in about the year 1790 by a local farmer's wife, Mme Harel, to whom, in grateful memory, a statue has been erected.

Good quality Camembert is made from whole unskimmed milk. The cheese is made mainly in the winter by a process similar to that used in the manufacture of Brie, but the micro-organisms are different and give to the cheese a slight characteristic bitterness which the makers attribute to the oat-straw of the wicker trays.

Camembert, which is chiefly made in the regions of Vimoutiers and Livarot, is disc-shaped, thicker and much smaller than Brie. The cheese must be pale yellow, smooth, without holes, and firm.

It is made today all over France and even in other countries, but by law its place of origin must be indicated. The Camembert season lasts from November to May.

Monument to Mme Harel, the creator of Camembert cheese

Cancoillotte – Very strong cheese mixture made in Franche-Comté, which has to be melted before serving. It is in season from September to June.

Cantal – Hard, strong cheese made in Auvergne. It can be eaten the whole year round but is particularly good from November to May.

Carré de Bonneville – Normandy cheese, in season between September and June.

Chabichou – Poitou cheese, in season from April to December. It is made from goats' milk and is soft and sweet.

Chaingy – Cheese made in Orléans which has its season from September to June.

Champenois – Cheese still called Riceys-Cendré which is in season between September and June.

Chaource – This cheese, made in the Champagne district, is somewhat similar to Soumaintrain. It is in season from November to May.

Chaumont – Cheese made in the Champagne region which is in season from November to May.

Cheddar cheese

Cheddar – English cheese eaten all the year round.

Cheshire – Hard, cows' milk English cheese made in two colours: red and white. It can be eaten all the year round.

Chester – Name by which Cheshire cheese is known in France.

Chevret – Bresse cheese made from goats' milk which is in season from December to April.

Chevrotin – Cheese produced in Savoy. It is made of dried goats' milk and is in season from March to December. The Chevrotins de Moulins are little cheeses made in Bourbonnais.

Chevronnet de Mâcon – Cheese, also called Mâconnais, that is in season from May to September.

Cierp de Luchon – Cheese made in the Comté de Foix which is in season from November to May.

Comté – Jura cheese which can be eaten all the year round.

Coulommiers – This comes into the category of soft cream cheeses. It is made in the Brie district in the neighbourhood of Coulommiers (Seine-et-Marne), and is at its best between November and May.

Coulommiers cheeses are usually eaten fresh, after salting. They may also be processed like Brie, that is to say, kept until they are covered with white mould.

A good Coulommiers must have a white crust with a slight greyish tinge, be creamy to the touch, and slightly yellowish inside.

Cream cheese. FROMAGE À LA CRÈME – There are several ways of making this cheese. One is to add some cream to the milk before introducing the rennet, another is to make it from skimmed milk worked with fresh cream after draining and put into moulds to complete the drainage.

Crème des Vosges – Alsatian soft cream cheese in season between November and April.

Crottin de Chavignol – Semi-hard goats' milk cheese made in Berry, which is in season from May to December.

Curé – See Nantais cheese below.

Dauphin – Cheese made in northern France, good between November and May.

Decize – Nivernais cheese which can be eaten all the year round. It resembles Brie.

Demi-sel – Small whole-milk soft cheese somewhat similar to double-cream. The curd, after being drained, sieved and put in moulds, has 1 to 1½ per cent salt added to it.

CHEESE

Double-cream. DOUBLE-CRÈME – French soft cream cheese in which the milk is enriched with added cream, increasing the weight by one-sixth. A small quantity of rennet is mixed with it so that the slow process of coagulation lasts about 24 hours. The curd, wrapped in a cloth, is put under weights to drain. Next, cream is worked into it. The curds are moulded and wrapped in waxed paper.

Dunlop – Scottish cheese somewhat similar to Cheshire and Double Gloucester, but which, in the opinion of English gastronomes, is much superior to both. Sir Walter Scott was enthusiastic about this cheese.

Dutch cheeses – There are a great many of these. The best-known, Edam, is made in a number of European countries and in America. Partly skimmed milk, curdled in 15 to 20 minutes, is mixed with rennet. Fermentation is very slow, and allowed to continue until a hard, non-porous rind is formed. As soon as the cheese is fully fermented, the cheese is painted over with a coating of linseed oil. Sometimes it is given a further coating of paraffin, before being coloured with annatto (dye).

Edam cheese is yellow-red when stove-dried, softish and free from holes.

Emmenthal – Swiss hard cheese named after the high Emme valley (in the Berne Canton), but made in Switzerland wherever there is highland pasture. As the transport of butter from these mountain districts would be uneconomic, Emmenthal cheese is usually made from whole milk. However, in some parts a semi-fat Emmenthal is made.

The cheese is manufactured in the same way as Gruyère. The round Emmenthal cheeses are larger than Gruyères, weighing from 60 to 100 kg. (132 to 220 lb.). Their rind is straw coloured.

The cheese is creamier than Gruyère, less pungent and usually less salty. It has a good many holes called 'eyes', usually three to every bore-hole made.

There is also a French Emmenthal cheese.

Epoisses – Whole-milk, mould inoculated, soft French cheese made in almost every part of Burgundy and in central France. Its name comes from a village on the Côte d'Or. The milk is curdled with a special rennet, flavoured with black pepper, clove, fennel, salt, and brandy. It is eaten either fresh or ripened.

The cheese is left in cellars to ripen for a longer or shorter time according to whether it is to be eaten passé (over-ripe) or coulant (runny).

The fresh cheese is eaten in summer; the ripe cheese in winter or spring (November to June).

Ercé – Cheese made in the Ariège district, in season between November and May.

Ervy – Cheese from Champagne which is at its best between November and May.

Étuvé – Semi-hard Dutch cheese which is good to eat all the year round.

Excelsior – Normandy cheese, eaten all the year round.

Feuille de Dreux – Cheese made in the Ile-de-France. It is good to eat between November and May.

Fin de siècle – Normandy cheese which is good to eat all the year round.

Fleur de Decauville – Cheese made in the Ile-de-France. It is good to eat between December and May.

Fontine – Cheese made in Franche-Comté all the year round.

Fourme – Cheese from the Limagne. There are the cheeses of Ambert, of Montbrissin, of Salers, etc., known as Fourme d'Ambert, Fourme de Montbrissin, Fourme de Salers. The latter is sometimes sold under the name of Canal. These cheeses are generally at their best from November to May.

Foutina – Italian soft, creamy cheese used in making fondues in the Val d'Aosta.

Friesche Kaas – Soft Dutch cheese in season between November and May.

Frirot – Cheese made in the region of Orléans, which is in season between November and June.

Fromage à la pie (fresh unfermented cheese) – Usually made from skimmed milk on farms and is for immediate consumption. It can also be made in the home from whole milk. The milk is left to stand in a cool place (12° to 15°C., 53° to 59°F.). Curdling takes place at the end of 24 to 36 hours, through the action of the lactic ferment. It can also be made with rennet.

Fromage à la pie is eaten fresh, with fresh cream added. It may be seasoned with sugar, or salt and pepper according to taste, and a little chopped chives for added flavour.

Gammelöst – Norwegian all-the-year-round cheese.

Gérôme – Cheese made in the Vosges. Its name is a corruption of Gérardmer.

It is made from whole milk and rennet, and is ripened in cellars for 4 months, until the crust has taken on a tawny colour. Sometimes aniseed, fennel or caraway seeds are added. Gérôme is a winter cheese, eaten between November and April.

Gervais – Well-known make of Petit-suisse. (See Petit-suisse.)

Gex – French blue-veined cheese manufactured at Gex, principal town of the Ain département, between November and May, from unskimmed whole milk, coagulated in 2 hours at 25° to 27°C. (77° to 81°F.).

Before it is offered for sale, it is stored for 2 weeks in ripening cellars where its special qualities develop.

The 'blue' which is due to the penicillium glaucum, is self-generating and appears during processing without the aid of any foreign body.

The chief characteristic of Gex cheese, which distinguishes it from all others, is that (except for the blue streaks) it remains pure white. It takes from 2 to 4 months to ripen completely.

Gjetöst – Brown-coloured Norwegian cheese which can be eaten all the year round. It is made of goats' milk.

Gloucester – There are two English cheeses of this name: the famous Double Gloucester and Single Gloucester.

Double Gloucester. The shape and size of a large grindstone, it is crumbly in texture and has a strong but mellow and delicate flavour. It ripens slowly (this process takes about 6 months) and keeps well.

Single Gloucester. Made during spring and summer, ripens in about 2 months. It is flat and round, similar to Double Gloucester in shape, and has a soft and open texture. It is excellent for toasting.

Glux – Nivernais cheese which can be eaten all the year round.

Goats' milk cheeses. FROMAGE DE CHÈVRE – A wide variety of goats' milk cheeses are manufactured throughout France. Occasionally a little cows' milk is added due to the growing scarcity of goats' milk. Goats' milk cheese is usually strongly salted to make it more closely resemble cows' milk cheese (and to preserve it). In fact, many goats' milk cheeses are far too salty.

Although this cheese is usually eaten fresh it can be preserved in various ways and eaten when very mature. (In the Ardèche it is wrapped in walnut leaves or placed in earthenware pots.)

Among the best known of the goats' milk cheeses are the Banon of Provence, the Cabécou of Quercy, the Chabichou of Poitou, the Chavignol of Berry ('crottins'), the Mothe-Saint-Héraye, the Levroux, small Mâcons of Burgundy, the Corsican Niolo, the Rigottes of Condrieu, the Rocamadour and Saint-Marcellin of Dauphiné, the Valençay, the Sainte-Maure.

Gorgonzola – Semi-hard cheese which takes its name from a little village near Milan. It is made by a rather complex process. Good Gorgonzola, which is a spring and summer cheese, has a thin rind. The cheese should be streaked with blue, but not excessively, and should be yellowish white in colour.

Gouda – Dutch cheese made from whole milk, very similar to Cantal but there is no preliminary fermentation.

Gournay – French whole-milk, soft cheese made at Gournay, in Normandy, and in neighbouring districts. At its best between September and June.

Gruyère – The Gruyère valley is situated in the Fribourg Canton, dominated by the Moléson. It has given its name to a cheese which is also made in the Cantons of Vaud and Neuchâtel. True Gruyère is only made in French Switzerland.

Formerly, only semi-fat cheeses or cheeses made from skimmed milk were manufactured, the cream being used for butter, which could be economically exported. Nowadays whole milk Gruyères are also made, especially for export.

This cheese is often confused with Emmenthal. Sometimes cheesemongers advertise 'a genuine Gruyère from Emmenthal' which is like saying 'genuine Brie from Camembert'! It is made in rounds of 50 to 60 kg. (110 to 130 lb.). The rind is golden brown. The cheese is waxy, more or less dry according to age. It is scored with cracks underneath through which drops of serum ooze out. To satisfy the demands of the French market which expects 'eyes' in the cheese, it is processed in such a way for export that little holes appear. These are always smaller than the holes in Emmenthal. The export cheeses are also less salty than those made for local consumption. To enhance the pungent flavour of this excellent cheese, it is usual in Switzerland to preserve the pieces in a cloth soaked in salted water or white wine.

Gruyère is manufactured in cheese factories in the mountains, close to the pastures. It keeps for a very long time uncut. Some connoisseurs demand a very ripe cheese, others prefer it fairly fresh. For fondue (q.v.) a mixture of the two kinds is normally required.

Gruyère, Crème de. For some years now, little triangles of processed cheese have been sold, wrapped in silver paper. This cheese is made from Comté and sometimes even from Gruyère.

At first, this cheese was produced mainly as a means of using up defective cheeses, but it has gained so much in popularity that it is now manufactured from cheese made especially for the purpose. There are now a great number of processed and packaged cheeses (called creams) made from a variety of basic cheeses.

Their indeterminate flavour does not always appeal to the connoisseur, but their success is easily explained. They are processed and packaged in a convenient and hygienic form, having no rind and leaving no waste.

Gruyère de Comté. A number of Gruyère-type cheeses are made today in countries all over Europe and in America. For a long time a type of Gruyère has been manufactured in the Jura, but Gruyère de Comté manufacturers themselves now insist that the appellation Gruyère de Comté be replaced simply by Comté.

Guerbigny – Cheese from Picardy, which is in season between October and May.

Guéret – Cheese made in Guéret, a city of the département of Creuse. It is sometimes called Creusois, and is at its best between September and June.

Hervé – Soft, fermented cheese. Made in Belgium, from cows' milk, it is curdled with rennet, and drained under great pressure in square moulds.

Ripening takes place in dark cellars where the cheeses are placed on their sides, one against the other, covered with cloths steeped in beer.

There is a strong and a mild variety of Hervé cheese. Best eaten between November and May.

Huppemeau – Cheese made at Huppemeau in the Loire-et-Cher region. It is somewhat similar to Brie.

Incheville – Normandy cheese which is in season from November to May.

Jonchée – Cheese made from ewes' or goats' milk. Half the milk is boiled with a few bay leaves. This is mixed with the remainder of the raw milk. It is curdled with rennet and decanted into little pots.

Kaunas – Lithuanian cheese which can be eaten all the year round.

Kummel – Dutch cheese with caraway seeds, which can be eaten all the year round. It is also called Leidsche Kaas.

(Les) Laumes – This cheese from Burgundy is good between October and July.

Levroux – Goats' cheese made in and around Berry, in season between May and December.

Leyden – Leyden cheese is made in the same way as Edam. It is often flavoured with cumin, cloves or cinnamon. Some connoisseurs prefer Dutch cheese stove-dried. This makes it less creamy but improves its flavour. Leyden is also known as Leidsche Kaas and Kummel.

Limbouger – Semi-hard, fermented cheese made in Belgium, Alsace and Germany. The whole-milk curds are kneaded with chives, parsley and tarragon, put in moulds and dried in the sun. The surface is made non-porous by salting and brushing.

Livarot – A small town in the Calvados region has given its name to a soft paste cheese (usually coloured annatto brown or deep red). This is an autumn and winter cheese.

Manicamp – Picardy cheese which is in season between October and July.

Marolles – Semi-hard, full-flavoured cheese which is square in shape and which takes its name from a village in the Avesnes district. It is manufactured in Thiérache and all over Picardy.

The whole-milk curds are salted, quickly dried and stored in a cellar where, at frequent intervals, the cheese is turned over, brushed, and washed with beer. It is at its best between November and June. It is also called Marolles or Marole.

Metton – Cheese from the Jura mountains which is in season from October to June.

Monsieur – Cheese made in Normandy, good between November and June.

Mont Cenis – A large, round, semi-hard, blue-veined, whole-milk cheese somewhere between a Roquefort and a Gorgonzola. It ripens in cellars where it acquires its characteristic blue streaks.

Mont d'Or – This cheese, which once had a great reputation, used to be made along the banks of the Saône, round Lyons. Only the milk of stable-fed goats was used. The cheese was ripened in cellars for 5 to 6 weeks.

The cheese which now bears its name is made all over France, is manufactured from cows' milk and bears very little resemblance to the original cheese. The best is made at Mont d'Or. Its season lasts from December to April.

Morbier – Lightly veined goats' milk cheese from Franche-Comté. Good between October and June.

(La) Mothe-Bougon – Poitou cheese in season between May and December.

(La) Mothe-Saint-Héraye – Goats' cheese from Poitou which is in season between May and November. Also called Lamothe-Bougon.

Munster – Semi-hard, fermented, whole-milk cheese, usually flavoured with caraway or aniseed. Made in Alsace, in the Munster valley (Upper Rhine), it is much prized by lovers of cheese and is good between November and April.

Murrol – Cows' milk cheese from Auvergne shaped like a small wheel with a hole in the centre. Good between October and June.

Mysöst – Norwegian cheese which can be eaten all the year round.

Nantais – This Breton cheese, sometimes called Fromage du curé, is good to eat all the year round.

Neufchâtel or Bondon – Small French, loaf-shaped cheese made from skimmed milk, whole milk or with added cream. It is ripened on straw bundles in a drying room until a skin, white at first and later bluish, forms on the surface (first skin). The ripening is then completed in cool, well-aired store rooms until a second skin forms, this time red in colour. The cheese is a rather dark yellow and is at its best between October and June.

Niolo – Corsican cheese, which is particularly good from November to May.

Noekkelöst – Norwegian cheese which can be eaten all the year round.

Olivet – Whole-milk, mould-inoculated cheese, made in the small town of Olivet, in the Loiret. It is made of ewes' milk, in discs about 2½ cm. (1 inch) thick and 15 cm. (6 inches) in diameter. The curd is white and rather salty. This cheese has its season from October to June.

There is another type of Olivet cheese, called Olivet Cendré, which is good to eat from October to June. Fresh creamy Olivet cheese is sold in the summer months.

Oloron – Cheese from Béarn also called Fromage de la Vallée d'Ossau, which should be eaten from October to May.

Paladru – Cheese made in Savoy, in season from November to May.

Parmesan – This famous cheese, which keeps for a very long time, is made in Lombardy and in the Romagna under various names. The name 'Parmesan' is used abroad for export cheeses of this type. It is made with skimmed milk.

During the ripening process, which is very slow, harmful microbes can cause liquid patches in the cheese, which are dealt with by Italian cheese-makers. They test the cheese by tapping it with a hammer. When they detect a soft patch, they open up the cheese, cut out the diseased section and cauterise the 'wound' with a red-hot iron. The ripening period lasts for nearly 4 years. At the end of this process the cheese may be kept for a very long time, 20 years or even longer.

Parmesan is a hard cheese which can be eaten all the year round. It is golden yellow in colour and should sweat very slightly.

Pavé de Moyaux – Normandy cheese which is in season from November to June.

Pelardon de Ruoms – Goats' cheese made in Ardèche, which is in season from May to November.

Petit-suisse – Very creamy, unsalted French cheese of the double-cream type, small and cylindrical in shape. It is made from whole milk, with 20 per cent proportion of fresh cream added. In spite of its name, it was first made not in Switzerland but in Gournay in Normandy (Seine-Inférieure). The Gervais Petit-suisse is the best-known make. Manufacturing this cheese is a delicate process, to which the most up-to-date scientific methods of production and supervision are applied.

Picodon de Dieulefit – Cheese made in the Dauphiné which is in season from May to December.

Pithiviers au foin – Cheese made in the Orléans region and ripened on hay. In season from October to May.

Pontgibaud (Puy-de-Dôme) – Made in the same way as Roquefort, but from cows' milk. Eaten all the year round, except in mid-summer.

Pont-l'Évêque – French semi-hard, fermented cheese, made from whole or skimmed milk. It is shaped in square moulds, salted and processed like the Bondon or Neufchâtel. It is ripened in cellars. This takes from 3 to 4 months, or less if the cheese is very rich in cream. Pont-l'Évêque can be eaten the whole year round except in August but is at its best between October and June. It should have a wrinkled, greyish-yellow crust. The cheese is softish and pale yellow in colour.

Port-Salut – A superb creamy, yellow, whole-milk cheese. It was first made at the Trappist Monastery of Port du Salut, near Laval. The name of Port-Salut was given to it by a company established at Entrammes (Mayenne département) where it is still made, as well as in Trappist monasteries all over the world, according to a secret formula. It is good throughout the year.

Poulligny-Saint-Pierre – Famous cheese made from May to December in Berry.

Puant Macéré – Cheese from Flanders, in season from November till June.

Pultöst – Norwegian mountain farm cheese which can be eaten all the year round.

Reblochon – Soft cheese made in Savoy. It is made of cows' milk and is in season from October to June.

Récollet de Gérardmer – Cheese from the Vosges, in season from October to April.

Remondou – Belgian cheese called Fromage piquant in season from November to June.

Riceys cendré – Cheese sometimes called Champenois which is in season from September to June.

Rigotte de Condrieu – Semi-hard, creamy goats' cheese of the Lyon district which is in season from May to November.

Rocamadour – This community in the Lot, celebrated for its picturesque setting and its places of pilgrimage, has given its name to a very small ewes' milk cheese which is in season from November to May.

Rollot – Cheese in the form of a disc resembling Brie and Camembert, although smaller. It is also called Bigolet, and comes from Picardy. It is in season from October to May.

Romalour – Cheese from the Loire district which can be eaten all the year round.

Roquefort – The true Roquefort cheese, made in the little town of that name in the Saint-Affrique district (Aveyron), is manufactured exclusively from ewes' milk, sheep being the only animals which can subsist on the arid pastures of the Causses. Corsica exports a large number of cheeses to the Causses to be 'treated' in the caves there.

The unique feature of this cheese is that the curds are mixed with a special type of breadcrumb. The bread is dried and then ground to a fine dust, in which a special greenish mould is allowed to develop. To ensure the right conditions for ripening, the cheeses are stored in damp, cool caves (4° to 8°C., 40° to 47°F.), such as the natural caves which are to be found in the Causses region.

After 30 or 40 days, the cheese is ready for sale, but before it takes on the pungent flavour which makes it so sought-after by the connoisseur, it must be left to ripen for a much longer period. In fact, in the view of the experts, it should be kept for a year.

A good Roquefort has a grey rind. The cheese is yellowish, very fatty and evenly veined with blue. If it is too white in appearance and chalky in texture, it is not completely fermented.

The Roquefort season lasts from May to September but it is eaten all the year round. A number of different districts in France produce a Roquefort-type cheese but these may not be sold under the name of Roquefort.

Roennais – Normandy cheese which is in season from October to May.

Rougeret – Small goats' cheese made near Mâcon. Is also known under the name of Maconnet.

Saint-Agathon – Breton cheese that is in season from October to July.

Saint-Florentin – Burgundian cheese, in season from November to July. It is soft and salty.

Saint-Marcellin – This cheese, manufactured chiefly at Saint-Marcellin, principal town of the Isère district, was formerly made exclusively from goats' milk. Today, both cows' milk and ewes' milk are added or are used as a substitute for goats' milk. It is in season between May and December.

Saint-Maure – Touraine cheese, in season from May to November. It is a soft, creamy, goats' milk cheese.

Saint-Rémi – Square cheese made in Franche-Comté and Haute-Savoie. It is soft and resembles Pont-l'Évêque.

Sassenage – Semi-hard, blue-veined cheese made in the Isère; in season from November to May.

Septmoncel – Small village in the Jura département which has given its name to a Roquefort-type cheese which comes from Saint-Claude. It is made in the same way as Gex cheese and is at its best between November and May. Curds from two milkings are sometimes put together, without mixing, to produce a cheese known as 'bastard Septmoncel'.

Serré or Seray – The whey, which is the residue in the manufacture of cheese, sometimes still contains a certain proportion of butter and a considerable quantity of casein and soluble albumen. This is particularly the case where curdling takes place quickly (by scalding). The butter can be extracted from this whey, and if it is first allowed to become acid, it can be curdled a second time with rennet. By this means it is possible to precipitate the serum containing the soluble albumen, and separate it from the lactose and mineral salts. This substance is called serré and is used both as human and animal food.

In some regions, notably in the Glaris district, the serré (called ligger in German) is pounded with herbs, wild celery in particular. This mixture is dried and made into slabs which are called schabziger. Grated and mixed with butter, this cheese, which has a strongly aromatic flavour, is held in high esteem by some connoisseurs. For some years, under the name of Crème de Glaris, it has been mixed with butter, and sold wrapped in silver paper.

Soumaintrin, also called Saint-Florentin – Burgundian cheese regarded as the prime vintage among all those made in the Armanche valley in Burgundy.

It weighs approximately 500 g. (1 lb.), is yellow in colour, with a yellowish-orange rind, and is in season from November to July.

Soya – Cheese made in China from time immemorial. It is the result of fermentation in the juices extracted from soya beans.

The beans, softened and swollen by soaking, are put through a press. The liquid thus extracted is mixed with a little sulphate of lime or magnesium. It coagulates into a grey mass which is left to ferment like curds.

Stilton – English cheese made from whole milk with cream added, which takes a very long time to ripen. The cheese is marked with grey and green streaks. It should not be cut but scooped out of the centre. A little sherry or port should be poured onto it and left to soak into the cheese.

Stracchino – Italian soft goats' cheese.

Stilton cheese

Strong cheese. FROMAGE FORT – This preparation, exceedingly savoury and strong-smelling, is especially well liked in the Morvan and Lyons districts and in Corsica.

Successive layers of grated or thinly sliced milk cheese, salt and mixed herbs, and sometimes a little cream, are put in glazed stoneware jars, which are filled to the top with white wine laced with brandy. They are hermetically sealed and left in a warm place for 2 or 3 weeks to ferment.

Tête de mort – Name sometimes given in France to Dutch Edam cheese. Good all the year round.

Tomme – Cheese of the Savoy, of which several varieties exist. Tomme de Beauges and Tomme au fenouil are in season from September to June, Tomme de Boudave from October to July.

Trappistes – Cheeses of which the most popular variety is known as Port-Salut, because it is made by the Trappist monks of Port-du-Salut in the Mayenne. There are several other types in various regions of France: Trappiste de Citeaux (Burgundy), Trappiste de Bricquebec (Normandy), Trappiste de Mont-des-Cats (Picardy), Trappiste de Sainte-Anne-d'Auray (Brittany) and Trappiste de Tamie (Savoy). These cheeses may be eaten all the year round.

White cheese garnished with radish, anchovy and chives

Troû – Touraine cheese in season from May to January.

Troyes – This creamy soft cheese, resembling Camembert, is in season from November to May. It is also known as Barbery.

Vacherin – Soft cheese made in the Jura, in Switzerland and in Franche-Comté. It is in season from November to May.

Valençay – Soft goats' milk cheese from the Berry district. In season from May to December.

Vendôme – There is a soft Vendôme cheese, made in Orléans, which is good from October to June. There is also a hard ewes' milk cheese ripened under ashes, which is good in the same months, and is also called Vendôme.

Vestgötaost – Swedish cheese which can be eaten all the year round.

Vic-en-Bigorre – Béarnaise winter cheese.

Villedieu – Normandy cheese at its best between November and May.

White cheese. FROMAGE BLANC – Made from whole milk, treated with rennet, and eaten fresh in summer.

CHEESE-RENNET. CAILLE-LAIT – Name given to various plants, the flowers and leaves of which have the property of curdling milk. Yellow bedstraw (Galium verum) is most commonly used for this purpose.

CHEF DE CUISINE – Director responsible for a kitchen team (see COOKING).

The rôle of the present-day chef de cuisine corresponds to that of officier de bouche in great houses in the old days, and in even earlier times to that of maître des garnisons des cuisines royales or grand-queux.

CHEMISER – To coat a substance, or a mould, with a thin layer of aspic jelly.

CHEMIST'S JAR. CHEVRETTE – Oblong faience vase, with a large mouth, projecting spout, and handle. In the old days only chemists (U.S. druggists) had the right to possess and exhibit this kind of vase in the windows of their shops. These jars have been replaced by glass jars filled with red or green coloured water which chemists stand in their windows, but these ornaments are now tending to disappear too.

The word chevrette also denotes a kind of iron tripod on which casseroles and marmites are stood.

CHENU – Colloquial term applied to a wine mellowed by old age.

CHÈRE – Word which used to be employed mostly in an expression La Fontaine used, 'faire chère lie', meaning 'to smile broadly', 'to welcome warmly'. The expression is now restricted to the sense of 'offering a good meal', an integral part of any welcome. Nowadays chère in French is a synonym of food.

CHERRY. CERISE – Fruit of a tree of the Rosaceae family of which the numerous varieties stem from two primitive species.

The wild cherry or bird cherry, originating in Persia and Armenia, from which derive the two sweet cherries, the heart cherry with soft flesh and coloured juice, and the whiteheart cherry with hard flesh and colourless juice.

There are numerous cultivated varieties, some early-fruited, which ripen in May; others late-fruited, which ripen in August or September. The whiteheart cherries are usually considered the best dessert fruits. The slightly bitter early English variety of cherry is also served as a dessert fruit. The very bitter morello cherries are used industrially.

French cherries are marketed between May and July.

Cherries are one of the most refreshing fruits. They can be preserved by drying in the sun or over heat, or by preserving in sugar or in brandy. Jams, jellies, and syrups are made from them (see JAMS, SYRUPS). They are used for distilling (see KIRSCH), and liqueurs are made with them (see MARASCHINO).

Their stalks, used in infusions, are a popular diuretic.

Cherries à l'allemande I. CERISES À L'ALLEMANDE – Cold hors-d'œuvre which is usually made commercially, but it can be prepared in the following way:

Destalk morello cherries which are only just ripe, and put them in a jar, in the same way as for gherkins (q.v.).

Cover with aromatic vinegar prepared in the following way: Put 200 g. (7 oz., 1 cup) brown sugar, a fragment of stick cinnamon, a little grated nutmeg, and 3 cloves into 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) vinegar. Boil, allow to cool and pour over the cherries. Leave the cherries in this for 15 days.

Cherries à l'allemande II. CERISES À L'ALLEMANDE – Put the destalked cherries in a dish and cover with brown sugar. Cook in a very slow oven until the cherries are slightly softened. When they have cooled, put them in a glass jar and cover with aromatic vinegar, prepared as above, but using less brown sugar. Leave for 15 days before use.

With either method, one can add thyme, bay and tarragon to taste.

Cherries prepared à l'allemande, served also under the name of sweet-sour cherries, are used to accompany boiled meats and cold meats in the same way as gherkins.

Cherries in brandy. CERISES À L'EAU-DE-VIE – Choose well-formed cherries not yet quite ripe. Cut stalks in half and arrange the cherries in a glass jar. Cover with good brandy in which some sugar has been dissolved in the proportion of 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) sugar to 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) brandy. Hermetically seal the jar. To obtain cherries less penetrated with alcohol, use the following method:

Shorten the stalks, and pierce each cherry with the point of a needle at the opposite end from the stalk. Dip in cold water, drain, and put them in a terrine, covering them with a syrup made with sugar and water in the proportion of 2 kg. (4½ lb., 9 cups) sugar to 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) water. Cover the terrine and leave the cherries to absorb the syrup for 24 hours. Drain, put them in a glass jar and cover with the syrup, which has been boiled down. After cooling, add 2 parts brandy for 1 part syrup. Seal the jar hermetically.

Cherries with claret. CERISES AU CLARET – Put 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) destalked cherries in a pan. Cover with red Bordeaux wine, add sugar, and flavour with a little cinnamon. Cook, covered, for 10 to 12 minutes on a gentle heat. Leave the cherries to cool in their syrup. Pour off the wine and boil it down by a third. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) gooseberry jelly, and mix well. Pour this syrup over the cherries. Serve cold with sponge fingers.

This dish is also called Cherry soup à l'anglaise.

Cherry compote. COMPOTE DE CERISES – Prepare with stoned cherries in the same way as Apricot compote (see COMPOTE).

Cherry Condé. CERISES CONDÉ – Prepare with stoned cherries cooked in a vanilla syrup, like Apricots Condé (see APRICOT).

Cherry coupe – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Cherry croûtes. CROÛTES AUX CERISES – Prepare with stoned cherries cooked in syrup, like Apricot croûte (see APRICOT).

Cherry flan. FLAN DE CERISES – Pastry shell or flan case made with sweetened pastry, filled with raw stoned cherries, and baked in the oven. Cherry tarts or flans are also prepared with crème à l'alsacienne or à la flamande (see TARTS).

Cherry fritters. BEIGNETS AUX CERISES – Stone the cherries, soak with liqueur and sugar, dip in light batter and fry. (See FRITTERS.)

Cherry ice. GLACE AUX CERISES – Pound 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) stoned cherries or crush in a mortar or blender. Add the pounded cherry kernels to this pulp. Soak the mixture for 1 hour in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) syrup – 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) sugar to 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water – flavoured with kirsch. Pass through a fine sieve and add the juice of 1 lemon. This preparation should measure 21° on the syrup gauge.

Freeze the mixture in the usual way (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

Cherry jam. CONFITURE DE CERISES – Prepared with 750 g. (1½ lb., 6 cups) lump sugar for each 1 kg. (2½ lb.) fruit. If the fruit is not very sweet the jam is made with an equal weight of sugar and fruit. (See JAM.)

Cherries jubilee. CERISES JUBILÉ – Simmer stoned cherries in syrup. Drain and put them into ovenproof dishes. Boil down the syrup in which they have cooked, add a little cornflour or arrowroot diluted with cold water, and pour over the cherries.

Add 1 tablespoon warmed kirsch to each dish and flame it at the moment of serving.

Cherry meringue tart or flan with rice. FLAN DE CERISES MERINGUÉES AU RIZ – Put a layer of Dessert rice (see RICE) in a gratin dish, and add a thick layer of stoned cooked cherries. Sprinkle with sugar and top with meringue. Decorate the top with arabesques in meringue and proceed in the same way as for Apricots with rice and meringue (see APRICOT).

Cherry mousse – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Cherry sauce – See SAUCE, Dessert sauces.

Cherry soufflé fritters – See FRITTERS.

Cherry soufflé Montmorency. SOUFFLÉ AUX CERISES, DIT MONTMORENCY – Add 400 g. (14 oz., 1½ cups) cherry purée to 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) sugar boiled in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water to the crack stage. Fold in 10 stiffly whisked egg whites.

Make the soufflé in the usual way (see SOUFFLÉ).

The soufflé can also be prepared with cream (see SOUFFLÉ, Cream soufflés).

Cold cherry soufflé. SOUFFLÉ GLACÉ AUX CERISES – Use the preparation for Iced cherry mousse (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES). Tie a fold of white paper round the top of a soufflé dish to reach 2½ cm. (1 inch) above it, and fill with this mixture.

Once the soufflé has set in the refrigerator remove the paper.

Danish cherry tart or flan. FLAN DE CERISES À LA DANOISE – Fill a flaky pastry shell or flan case with stoned cherries soaked in sugar and sprinkled with a pinch of cinnamon.

Cover the cherries with a mixture of 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) softened butter, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) sugar, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) ground almonds and 2 eggs.

Bake the tart or flan in the oven at a moderate temperature. Leave to cool, cover with gooseberry jelly, and glaze with rum.

Cherries in vinegar. CERISES AU VINAIGRE – Remove the stalks from ripe cherries. Put them in a glass jar, alternating layers of cherries with powdered sugar, a few cloves, and fragments of cinnamon. Fill the jar with these layers. Boil white wine vinegar with lemon rinds, cool, and pour into the jar.

Seal the jar with a cork covered with linen.

CHERRY BAY (U.S. CHERRY LAUREL). LAURIER-CERISE – The leaves of this shrub emit a smell of bitter almonds when they are rubbed between the fingers. They are used to flavour creams of various kinds, but must be used sparingly as they contain an appreciable amount of poisonous hydrocyanic acid.

CHERVIL. CERFEUIL – Pot-herb with stiff stems and curly leaves, originating in Russia and western Asia and cultivated from the beginning of the Christian era. It is used chopped for seasoning.

Wild chervil which is called sweet Cecily has darker, less denticulated, leaves and a more bitter flavour. Chervil, like parsley, is rich in Vitamin C.

CHERVIS – Plant originating in China. The very sweet and aromatic root was greatly sought after in the old days, but it is no longer much esteemed.

CHESTNUTS. CHÂTAIGNES – Chestnuts grow two or three together in a prickly shell. A number of chestnut varieties exist, improved by cultivation. The species of which the fruit contains only a single large nut are called marrons.

According to an analysis carried out by M. Baland, roast chestnuts (that is chestnuts cooked dry) retain 40 per cent of their moisture; boiled, they retain 70 per cent.

Dried chestnuts only retain 12 to 15 per cent of their moisture and contain as much nitrogen as wheat.

Chestnuts have considerable food value. 1½ kg. (3½ lb.) supply sufficient calories to satisfy the needs of an average person. Unfortunately chestnuts also contain a high percentage of starch, which is difficult to assimilate and makes them indigestible for many people. Moreover, the small quantities of Vitamins B1 and C they contain are destroyed during cooking. On the other hand their richness in mineral salts (particularly calcium and potassium) makes them an excellent food for growing children.

Chestnuts are preserved by drying, and flour is made from them. This flour, which is white with red particles here and there (debris of the outer skin) in inferior types, has a sweet flavour, an agreeable smell, and makes a non-elastic paste when combined with water. It is used to make various dishes.

Briloli. A kind of porridge made with chestnut flour to which milk or cream is added.

Castagnacci. Thick fritters, using chestnut flour.

Ferinana. This is briloli with oil added.

Pisicine. Cake prepared with chestnut porridge fermented with yeast and flavoured with aniseed.

Polenta. This is obtained by throwing sieved chestnut flour into lightly salted boiling water and mixing with a spatula until the paste no longer adheres to the sides of the cooking dish. Pour onto a floured cloth and cut into slices. These are either eaten as they are, with Broccio (Corsican cheese), grilled, or fried. (See POLENTA.)

Peeling chestnuts on domed face
(Claire)

Tourte. This is a porridge to which aniseed with pine kernels and dried raisins have been added. It is poured into a baking dish and cooked in the oven.

To peel chestnuts, slit the surface of the chestnuts on the domed face. Put them in a baking tin with a little water. Roast in the oven for 8 minutes. Peel them while they are still hot.

Another method is to slit the chestnuts as indicated above. Put them, a few at a time, into boiling fat and deep-fry for 2 minutes. Drain. Peel them while they are still hot.

Chestnut barquettes. BARQUETTES AUX MARRONS – Line barquette tins with Fine pastry dough 1 (see DOUGH). Bake blind. When they are ready, fill them with a purée of marrons glacés (or purée of chestnuts cooked in milk) flavoured with kirsch. Ice the barquettes with kirsch-flavoured Fondant icing (see ICING).

Boiled chestnuts. MARRONS BOUILLIS – Put the chestnuts in a saucepan and cover with cold water. Season with a pinch of salt and flavour with a little celery, star anise, Chinese anise or any other spice.

Bring to the boil. Cover and simmer gently for 45 minutes to 1 hour. Drain the chestnuts and serve wrapped in a folded napkin, or in a wooden bowl covered with a napkin.

Braised chestnuts. MARRONS BRAISÉS – Peel the chestnuts. Lay them flat in a buttered dish. Put into the middle of the dish a bouquet garni with plenty of celery. Season. Pour in a thin layer of concentrated veal stock. Cover the pan and cook in the oven without stirring, so as not to break the chestnuts.

Chestnuts prepared in this way are used as a garnish for various main dishes.

Chestnut compote. COMPOTE DE MARRONS – Cook the chestnuts in a light syrup flavoured with vanilla. To serve, pour the cooking syrup (boiled down if necessary) over the chestnuts.

They can be served either hot or cold, and may be flavoured with liqueur.

Chestnut confection. PÂTÉ DE MARRONS – ‘Shell the chestnuts, blanch, peel off the skin, pound in a stone mortar and weigh. Separately, clarify the same amount of sugar, cooked to ball degree. Take off the heat and mix with half its weight of apricot jam or apple jelly. Stir, combine all the ingredients, spread on a slate slab or a metal sheet to a thickness of 2 or 3 lines (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES) and put into a slow oven until dry. On the following day, cut into squares, lay out on a sieve, turning them from time to time. When they are quite dry store in boxes.’ (le Confiseur moderne.)

Chestnut croquettes. CROQUETTES DE MARRONS – Chop marrons glacés very finely. Chestnuts boiled in milk sweetened with vanilla sugar may also be used. Blend with thick French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Spread the mixture on a baking sheet. Leave to cool.

Divide the mixture into small portions. Flour each piece and dip in egg and freshly made breadcrumbs. Deep-fry in clarified butter. Serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with kirsch.

Chestnut jam. CONFITURE DE MARRONS – Make a chestnut purée with milk or water. Put it in a bowl with an equal weight of sugar, a vanilla pod and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) water to every 1 kg. (2½ lb.) of the mixture. Warm gently, stirring constantly. The jam is ready if it comes away from the bottom of the pan when stirred.

To ensure longer preservation, put the jam in special jars and sterilise as for bottled fruit.

Marrons glacés – Marrons glacés are first preserved and then glazed. This is a long and intricate process and is therefore seldom undertaken in the home.

Chestnut Mont-Blanc (sweet dessert). MONT-BLANC AUX

MARRONS – Shell the chestnuts, leaving the inner skin. Cover with water and bring to the boil. Remove the inner skin.

Simmer the chestnuts until soft in milk, with sugar and vanilla. Drain and rub them through a wire sieve over a large ring baking tin, so that the sides of the tin are lined with the sieved purée, which will look like vermicelli.

Turn this border out onto a dish. When it is quite cold, fill the centre with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with vanilla. Shape the cream into a dome.

Chestnut purée. PURÉE DE MARRONS – Shell the chestnuts, leaving the inner skin intact. Plunge them into boiling water, drain, and skin. Cook in white stock seasoned with a little celery. Drain, and rub through a fine sieve. Warm this purée in a saucepan, stirring constantly. Just before serving, add fresh butter and a few tablespoons fresh cream.

Chestnut purée soup or cream – see SOUPS AND BROTHS, Purée soups.

Chestnuts and rice. BORDURE DE MARRONS AU RIZ – Peel the chestnuts and cook in a light syrup flavoured with vanilla. Drain, and arrange them in a pyramid surrounded by a border of rice prepared as for Apricots Condé (see APRICOT). Decorate the top of the border with crystallised fruit and halved almonds. Serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with kirsch.

Roast chestnuts. MARRONS GRILLÉS – Lightly cut a ring round the chestnuts. Roast them in a pan on hot embers or on the stove, tossing them frequently so that all are thoroughly cooked.

Chestnut soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE MARRONS – Make a chestnut purée with stock or milk, and use for a soufflé, proceeding as for Potato soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ).

Sweet chestnut soufflé. POUDING SOUFFLÉ AUX MARRONS – Peel 1 kg. (2½ lb.) chestnuts and cook them in a light syrup, flavoured with vanilla. Add to this purée, while stirring it on the stove to evaporate the moisture, 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fine sugar and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter.

Remove the pan from the stove and blend in 8 egg yolks. Whisk 6 egg whites until they are very stiff. Blend them in at the last minute.

Pour the mixture into a buttered mould. Put the mould in a pan of water and bake in the oven. Serve with custard (q.v.) or zabaglione (q.v.).

Stewed chestnuts as a garnish. MARRONS ÉTUVÉS POUR GARNITURE – Peel the chestnuts. Put them in a buttered pan. Cover with clear white stock (or, for fish or vegetable dishes, with water). Add a pinch of salt, 1 teaspoon fine sugar and a stick of celery.

Bring rapidly to the boil. Cover and leave to simmer very slowly for 45 minutes.

Serve as indicated in the recipe for the main dish.

CHEVALER – Term indicating the symmetrical arrangement of the various elements of a dish placed one upon the other.

CHEVALET – A slice of bread trimmed en chevalet and covered with wafer-thin slices of fat pork or butter, on which chicken filets mignons (breasts) are placed to give them a correct shape while cooking.

CHEVRET – See CHEESE.

CHEVRIER – A type of haricot flageolet (bean) which stays green. Cultivated especially in the neighbourhood of Arpajon, it bears the name of the originator of this variety. (See BEAN.)

CHEVROTIN – See CHEESE.

CHEVROTTON DE MÂCON – See CHEESE.

CHIANTI – Tuscany wine. (See INTERNATIONAL WINES.)

CHICHA – Mexican and Central American alcoholic beverage obtained from the fermentation of maize flour.

CHICKEN. POULETS, POULARDES, VOLAILLE – Chicken is the generic term used to describe the barnyard fowl and includes everything from the very young chicken (poussin) to the large hen suitable only for the stockpot. The young chickens (poulet de grain and poulet de reine) weigh from 600 to 1800 g. (1½ to 4 lb.). Poulet gras weigh from 1800 g. to 2 kg. (4 to 4½ lb.), and fat hens or roasting chicken weigh from 1800 g. to 3 kg. (4 to 6½ lb.) or more and are called poulardes in French. Recipes for the different kinds of chicken are grouped together in alphabetical order in this section.

A good poulet has tender flesh, elastic, but not flabby; the feet can be black or white according to the breed, but never yellow. The comb should be small and unformed, the skin loose and white, and the parson's nose white or pinkish with a knob of fat above reaching the backbone.

Chicken flesh can replace meat and when grilled or roasted is suitable for all diets. Chicken in sauce, chicken with mushrooms, or creamed chicken are less so. Try to avoid buying 'battery' chickens.

The principal types of French hens are those of Bresse, Houdan, La Flèche, Crèvecoeur, Barbezieux, Faverolles and Le Mans.

General cooking instructions for chicken – When braising chicken there should be as little as possible of cooking liquid, so as not to dissipate the delicate flavour.

Sauces accompanying braised fowl are made with the liquor in which it was cooked, strained, all grease skimmed off, and finished according to the recipe.

Boiled or poached chicken is cooked in white stock (chicken or veal) or in a light beef stock.

A savoury stock can be made with the neck, head and crop, and the feet, cooked in water with aromatic vegetables and the usual seasonings.

Boiled chicken is accompanied by white or light sauce, made with the liquor in which it was cooked. A white roux should be made in advance, with butter and flour cooked gently together without colouring, and moistened with some of the chicken broth when the mixture is about three-quarters cooked.

Different ways of finishing these sauces are given in the list of white sauces (see SAUCE, Compound white sauces). Chicken baked in butter (cooked in the oven in a covered dish) is accompanied by the cooking juices skimmed of fat, diluted, and thickened. Cream is sometimes used.

Chicken baked à la Matignon is accompanied by the cooking juices diluted with wine, blended with veal or chicken stock, and bound with rich brown sauce. The garnish for a chicken dish is either cooked with the chicken or prepared separately, according to the recipe.

In none of the recipes that follow should all the sauce be used to coat the bird. A very little only should be poured over it, and the rest served separately.

Some instructions for cooking large fowls call for stuffings and prepared mixtures. Recipes for these will be found under FORCEMEAT.

In garnished chicken dishes, particularly those served at large dinners, the bird is often left whole. This calls for a decorative presentation. It is important, however, that the garnish should not cancel out the flavour of the dish. Garnishes should be arranged so that the bird can be quickly carved. Do not set all the accompaniments on the main dish but use only a small part as a garnish, and serve the rest separately when handing the sauce, all piping hot.

In making an ornamental arrangement set the fowl on a base of fried bread in order to keep it separate from the garnish.

To bake chickens and capons in butter. Clean, truss and bard the bird.

Put in a heavy-bottomed pot, pour melted butter over it, season, and cook quickly for a few moments over a good heat. Finish cooking in the oven, covered, basting frequently with its butter. Garnish according to the recipe. Serve with its cooking juices diluted according to the particular recipe.

To bake chickens and capons à la Matignon. Clean, draw, truss and bard the bird. Put it in a pan whose base is lined with Matignon (q.v.) half-cooked in butter.

Pour melted butter over, season, and cook covered in the oven, basting frequently with its butter.

When the chicken is cooked and golden brown, moisten with concentrated veal or chicken stock and baste with this juice.

Garnish and serve with its own cooking juice, diluted according to the recipe.

To bake chickens and capons à la Matignon (old style). Crisp in butter the flesh of a fowl prepared as for braising. Cover it in a thick layer of Matignon (q.v.); bard and wrap it in a sheet of buttered paper. Cook in the oven or on the spit. Unwrap the chicken, take off the bard and remove the Matignon. Put the bird in a saucepan, pour over Madeira. Boil down the liquid and add veal stock that has been boiled down and thickened. Remove all fat and strain.

Garnish according to the recipe and serve with its cooking liquor.

The recipes given below can be augmented by serving braised, boiled or baked chicken with different vegetables, with pasta and with other garnishes.

Braised chicken

To braise chickens and capons. Draw, singe, clean and truss the bird. Dip it for a moment into boiling stock to solidify the flesh, then lard the breast with bacon fat, truffles, or tongue.

Cover the breast with a bard of bacon fat big enough to protect this delicate part of the bird during cooking so that it does not become too dry. Brown the chicken in a hot oven, and then put it into a heavy braising pan with the ingredients used for braising white meat (see CULINARY METHODS, Braising).

Pour in the liquid indicated in the recipe, bring to the boil, cover the pot, return to the oven and cook, basting frequently.

Drain the chicken, remove the bard and trussing string and glaze in the oven, basting it with the cooking liquor.

Set it on a slice of fried bread (or directly onto the plate), garnish, and serve it with a sauce containing the liquid in which it was cooked.

How to truss a chicken

1. Pierce with threaded trussing needle the left thigh, the breast and the right thigh

3. The chicken is on its right side; cross the back and pierce the left wing.

5. Pass the needle through the lower part of the drumsticks and under the breast from left to right

7. Pull the two ends of the string and tie them

2. Lay the chicken on its left side and sew through the right wing

4. Bring the two ends of string together and tie them

6. Next pierce the lower part of the body from right to left

8. Chicken barded and trussed, ready to braise or roast

Carving a chicken into portions

1. Raw chicken: first remove the right leg

2. Remove the right wing

3. Place chicken on right side and remove the left leg

4. Remove the left wing

5. Cut away the fillets on either side

6. Cut the carcass in half

7. Roast chicken is cut up in the same way.

8. A small chicken can be cut in half lengthwise

To poach or boil chickens and capons. Clean and truss the bird. Rub the breast and legs with a slice of lemon to keep them white.

Lard or stud the breast with fat. Cover with a bard of bacon fat.

Bring to the boil in white stock and cook quickly for a few moments. Skim, cover the saucepan, and simmer very slowly.

To test whether the chicken is cooked, prick a fleshy part with the point of a knife. If a clear juice escapes it is done.

Drain the chicken, then remove the bard and the trussing string. Garnish and serve with a white sauce to which is added some of the liquor in which the chicken was cooked.

Chicken à l'allemande. POULARDE À L'ALLEMANDE – Poach the chicken in white stock. Coat with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) to which part of the boiled-down cooking liquor has been added.

Chicken Ambassadrice. POULARDE AMBASSADRICE – Stuff the chicken with a mixture of lambs' sweetbreads, truffles and mushrooms bound with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Cook it covered, in the oven, à la Matignon.

Surround with pastry cases filled with sautéed chicken livers, cocks' combs and kidneys. Put a slice of truffle heated in butter on each.

Coat the chicken with the cooking juices diluted with Madeira and thickened brown veal stock.

Chicken à l'andalouse. POULARDE À L'ANDALOUSE – Stuff the chicken with rice mixed with small pieces of lean ham and seasoned with paprika.

Cook in butter in a heavy pan, adding (for flavouring) one large onion and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Serve garnished à l'andalouse (q.v.).

Surround the chicken with this garnish and sprinkle with its cooking juices diluted with white wine, to which thickened brown veal gravy and tomato purée have been added.

Chicken à l'anversoise. POULARDE À L'ANVERSOISE – Stuff the chicken with Hop shoots (see HOPS) in cream. Simmer in butter in a covered dish until the bird is three-quarters cooked. Transfer to a casserole with 400 g. (14 oz.) potatoes, lightly fried in butter. Complete cooking in the oven.

Pour a small quantity of the pan juices, diluted with white wine and thickened rich brown veal gravy, over the chicken. Serve in the casserole.

Chicken in aspic. POULARDE EN ASPIC – Cut the breast and wings of a cold, boiled chicken into thin slices, and coat with White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with truffles and glaze with chicken jelly.

Set these pieces in an aspic mould that has been lined with a layer of jelly. Fill the middle of the mould with Chicken mousse (see MOUSSES) made of the flesh of the chicken legs with the addition of foie gras. Fill the mould with the aspic jelly, leave to cool, and chill on ice.

Turn out onto a dish, or raised on a croûton of bread. Garnish with chopped jelly.

Chicken à l'Aurora. POULARDE À L'AURORA – Poach the chicken in white stock. Coat with Aurora sauce (see SAUCE) to which has been added a small quantity of the boiled-down cooking liquor.

Stuff with cream Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) flavoured with strong tomato purée.

Chicken ballotines. BALLOTTINES DE VOLAILLE – Use either a whole boned chicken, filled with stuffing, rolled in a ballotine and braised or poached (see BALLOTTINE), or legs of large chickens prepared in the same manner. The latter are usually called Jambonneaux de volaille.

Chicken à la banquière. POULARDE À LA BANQUIÈRE – Stuff the chicken with rice half-cooked in white stock mixed with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) diced truffles. Poach in white stock.

Surround with quenelles (q.v.) of chicken forcemeat, mushrooms and thick slices of truffles. Coat with Banquière sauce (see SAUCE).

Boiled chicken à l'anglaise I. POULARDE POCHÉE À L'ANGLAISE – Poach in white stock. Surround with small slices of tongue, and with small mounds of celery, peas, carrots and turnips cooked in water.

Boiled chicken à l'anglaise II. POULARDE POCHÉE À L'ANGLAISE – Poach in water with a carrot cut in quarters, an onion stuck with a clove, a bunch of herbs and a piece of well-balanced lean bacon weighing 400 g. (14 oz.).

Surround with the bacon cut in squares.

Serve with Parsley sauce (see SAUCE) and chicken broth.

Boiled chicken à l'anglaise III. POULARDE POCHÉE À L'ANGLAISE – Poach the chicken in white stock with small carrots, pieces of turnip cut into balls, and celery hearts.

Surround with these vegetables, adding cooked French beans and cauliflower.

Serve with Butter sauce (see SAUCE), capers and chicken broth.

Chicken à la bonne femme. POULARDE À LA BONNE FEMME – Cook the chicken, covered in butter, in the oven. When it is half-cooked add 5 rashers blanched, diced lean bacon, and 20 small onions. Cook in the oven for 15 minutes.

Add 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) small potatoes. Finish cooking all together, basting frequently.

Put the chicken and its garnish in a cocotte or on a platter. Add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy to the cooking butter and pour over the chicken.

Chicken bouchées, canapés, croûtes and tartelettes – All these are filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of poultry finished off with truffles, mushrooms or other ingredients and bound with a white or brown sauce.

Chicken boudins à la Richelieu. BOUDINS DE VOLAILLE À LA RICHELIEU – Line small, well-buttered moulds with Chicken forcemeat à la crème (see FORCEMEAT). Fill the moulds with a salpicon (q.v.) of breast of chicken, truffles and mushrooms, blended with very thick Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Cover with another layer of chicken forcemeat, which should be well smoothed over with the blade of a knife dipped in cold water.

Place the moulds in a baking tin of hot water in the oven, and poach. When cooked, turn out of the moulds, dry, dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter until light golden.

Arrange in a turban shape on a dish, packing them in tightly. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Périgueux sauce or Suprême sauce with diced truffles added to it (see SAUCE).

Chicken à la bourgeoise. POULARDE À LA BOURGEOISE – Cook the chicken in butter in a covered casserole in the oven. When half-cooked add 5 rashers of diced lean bacon, 20 small onions and 20 small carrots. Finish cooking all together, basting frequently.

Dilute the cooking juices with white wine and thickened veal gravy, pour over the chicken and garnish.

Chicken à la bourguignonne. POULARDE À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Brown 5 rashers blanched lean bacon in 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter. Add 20 small onions and 20 sliced mushrooms.

Take these out and brown the chicken in the same butter. Remove the chicken. Dilute the juices with 4 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant 2 cups) red wine and boil down by half. Add 4 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant 2 cups) brown gravy, cook at boiling point for 5 minutes and add a bouquet garni (q.v.).

Put the chicken back in the pan. Cook gently for 20 minutes. Add the bacon, onions and mushrooms and continue cooking for 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Remove the bouquet garni and pour the sauce over the chicken.

Chicken brochettes. BROCHETTES DE VOLAILLE – Thread slices of chicken on metal skewers alternately with pieces of lean bacon and mushrooms. Coat in egg and breadcrumbs and grill.

Chicken broth (English and American cookery) – See SOUPS AND BROTHS.

Chicken capilotade. POULET EN CAPILOTADE – Use leftovers of boiled, braised, or roasted chicken for this dish.

Take the chicken off the bones, cut in thin slices, and simmer in a sauce such as Chasseur, Italian, Portuguese, Provençal, etc. (see SAUCE).

Chicken casserole. POULARDE EN CASSEROLE – Put the chicken, trussed for boiling and seasoned with salt and pepper, in a casserole in which some butter has been melted. Cook in the oven at a good heat.

Pour 4 to 5 tablespoons thickened rich brown veal stock over the dish.

Chicken casserole à la bonne femme. POULARDE EN CASSEROLE À LA BONNE FEMME – As above, adding to the chicken, when it has been well browned in butter, small pieces of blanched lean bacon, small onions that have been tossed in butter, and potatoes cut into pieces.

Chicken with celery (brown). POULARDE AUX CÉLERIS – Cook the chicken in butter in a covered casserole in the oven.

Surround with braised, quartered celery hearts. Dilute the cooking juices with white wine and thickened brown veal gravy, and pour over the bird.

Alternatively, the chicken may be braised with blanched celery.

Chicken with celery (white). POULARDE AUX CÉLERIS – As for Chicken à l'Allemande. Surround the chicken with braised celery. Pour Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) over it.

Chicken à la Chantilly. POULARDE À LA CHANTILLY – Stuff the chicken with cooked rice mixed with truffles or diced foie gras. Cook in butter, in a covered dish in the oven, but do not allow to brown.

Surround with large whole truffles cooked in port wine, and slices of foie gras lightly fried in butter. Dilute the pan juices with white stock, add thick chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and simmer down by half. Add a few tablespoons whipped cream and pour over the chicken.

Chaud-froid of chicken (joints)

Chaud-froid of chicken. CHAUD-FROID DE VOLAILLE – A cold entrée. Poach joints of chicken in a flour-and-water stock, drain, and coat with white or brown Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with truffles, glazed in jelly.

Chicken à la chevalière. POULARDE À LA CHEVALIÈRE – Take off the wings of 2 chickens. Trim, and insert small pieces of bacon fat under the skin. Braise in Madeira-flavoured stock.

Detach the breasts. Trim and flatten them a little, stud with pieces of tongue and truffles, and put them in a buttered dish.

Cook the four leg joints, the ends of the wings and the divided carcasses as for a fricassée. Drain and wipe the leg joints, coat with egg and breadcrumbs, and fry in clarified butter.

Arrange the pieces of carcase and wingtips in a pastry case. Pour over them the strained fricassée sauce.

Place the leg joints on top of the carcasses and between each leg put a wing. Poach the breasts and place on top.

Serve with the rest of the fricassée sauce, to which mushrooms and truffles have been added.

Chicken chipolata. POULARDE CHIPOLATA – Braise the chicken in brown gravy. Surround with a garnish of chipolata sausages (see GARNISHES). Pour the pan juices diluted with Madeira and mixed with Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE) over the dish.

Chicken à la Chivry. POULARDE À LA CHIVRY – Poach the chicken in white stock. Surround with artichoke bottoms garnished with asparagus tips or fresh peas. Pour Chivry sauce (see SAUCE) over the chicken.

For a variation, serve the chicken with Chivry sauce and mixed vegetables served separately.

Chicken à la Clamart. POULARDE À LA CLAMART – Half-cook in butter a chicken trussed as for boiling. Add 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) fresh peas à la française which have been three-quarters cooked. Cover with a lid and finish cooking in the oven.

Small chickens prepared in the same way are called poulets à la Clamart.

Chicken in cocotte. POULARDE EN COCOTTE – Chicken cooked in a pot or casserole and served in the same receptacle.

Chicken compote. POULET EN COMPOTE – Truss the chicken as for boiling. Prepare as for Compote of pigeon (see PIGEON).

Chicken consommé – See SOUPS AND BROTHS.

Chicken côtelettes. CÔTELETTES DE VOLAILLE – Under this name are known the following:

1. Breasts of poultry removed when raw and cooked separately, to be served as a small entrée.
2. Croquettes made with a chicken croquette mixture, formed into the shape of cutlets, coated in egg and breadcrumbs, and fried in butter.
3. Variety of quenelles made with a poultry forcemeat and poached in a special mould.

To prepare chicken breasts. Remove the breasts of a small roasting chicken or a fat hen after having taken off the skin. Leave the wingtips on the joint. Flatten lightly.

To cook in butter à l'anglaise. Season the côtelettes, sprinkle with flour, coat with egg and breadcrumbs, and cook in clarified butter.

Garnish and add sauce according to the recipe.

Chicken côtelettes may be coated with breadcrumbs to which chopped truffles or other ingredients have been added.

To cook à blanc, or poach. Season the côtelettes, brush with melted butter, and lay them flat in a buttered sauté pan. Add a few drops of lemon juice; cover the pan and cook for 6 to 8 minutes in a very hot oven.

Garnish and add sauce according to the recipe.

The cooking of chicken côtelettes à blanc must be done extremely rapidly but without boiling. The liquid must be limited to the few drops of lemon juice indicated above.

To cook in butter à brun. Season the côtelettes, sprinkle with flour and quickly sauté in clarified butter. Cook very lightly as these pieces are extremely delicate and liable to become tough if over-cooked.

Garnish and add sauce according to the recipe. Put paper frills on the ends.

Côtelettes are served on croûtons, vegetables, etc.

Chicken côtelettes à l'anglaise. CÔTELETTES DE VOLAILLE À L'ANGLAISE – Season and coat the côtelettes in egg and breadcrumbs. Sauté in butter. Garnish with a green vegetable tossed in butter. Serve with thickened brown veal gravy.

Chicken côtelettes Helder. CÔTELETTES DE VOLAILLE HELDER – Cook the côtelettes à blanc. Dish and garnish with a salpicon (q.v.) of carrots, artichoke bottoms, truffles and mushrooms cooked slowly in butter.

Coat with rich chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) diluted with 1 tablespoon tomato juice. Add strained butter.

Chicken côtelettes maréchale. CÔTELETTES DE VOLAILLE MARÉCHALE – Coat the côtelettes with egg and breadcrumbs, adding to the breadcrumbs a third of their volume of chopped truffles. Sauté in butter.

Top each côtelette with slices of truffles, and sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Chicken crépinettes – See CRÉPINETTES.

Chicken à la crapaudine. POULET À LA CRAPAUDINE – Prepare, using a small roasting chicken, as Pigeon à la crapaudine (see PIGEON).

Chicken croquettes. CROQUETTES DE VOLAILLE – Combine finely chopped chicken with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Bind with an egg yolk and season well with salt, pepper and lemon juice. Cool thoroughly. Make into small oval croquettes. Coat with beaten egg and fine breadcrumbs and fry in deep fat.

Chicken with cucumber. POULARDE AUX CONCOMBRES – Follow recipe for Chicken à l'allemande. Surround with cucumber cut in chunks and simmered in butter. Pour over Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken curry (Plumerey's recipe). CARI DE POULET – 'Toss in butter two chickens cut in pieces with 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) of uncooked ham cleaned of salt and cut in dice. Add a good tablespoon flour and moisten with light veal stock. Add also a bouquet garni (q.v.) and two teaspoons curry powder.

'After it is cooked, boil down the sauce without thickening it too much. It should look like a pale espagnole sauce, lightly coloured with saffron.' Serve with Indian style rice.

Chicken curry (Mont-Bry's recipe). CARI DE POULET – 'Draw, pluck and joint a medium-sized chicken. Divide each joint into 3 or 4 pieces (when cutting up chicken joints be careful not to splinter the bones into tiny fragments).

Cook in butter 2 chopped-up onions, 100 g. (4 oz.) ham cut in small pieces, and 2 peeled and chopped eating apples all seasoned with crushed garlic, thyme, bay leaf, cinnamon, cardamom and powdered mace. Add the chicken pieces.

'When quite firm, shake them about without letting them colour too much, and sprinkle them with 2 teaspoons curry powder. Add 2 peeled, seeded and crushed tomatoes and mix well.

'Put in 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) coconut milk (or almond milk). Cook very gently in a covered saucepan for about 35 minutes. 10 minutes before serving, add 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) thick fresh cream and the juice of 1 lemon. Thicken this sauce to the desired consistency by boiling down.

'Serve the chicken with rice cooked as follows:

'Cook 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) rice for 15 minutes in salt water, stirring often. Drain and wash several times in cold water. Dry, in the oven at a very low heat for 15 minutes.'

Chicken curry (Creole cookery). CARI DE POULET – Joint a medium-sized chicken. Brown the pieces very lightly in good fat, taking care not to let them become dry. Add 1 finely chopped onion and simmer very slowly. The onion must not be allowed to turn yellow. Add 2 small peeled, seeded and chopped tomatoes. Stir the mixture. Leave to simmer for 15 minutes. Add 2 teaspoons saffron, previously pounded in a mortar, with a sprig of thyme, a sprig of parsley, a clove of garlic, and a piece of stem ginger. Leave these spices to soak into the chicken before moistening the curry with a glass of lukewarm water, poured into the pan a little at a time. Simmer for 2 hours and serve with Rice à la créole (see RICE).

Chicken à la Cussy. POULARDE À LA CUSSY – Braise the chicken in brown butter. Surround with a Cussy garnish (see GARNISHES).

Pour the cooking juices diluted with port wine and Rich Brown sauce (see SAUCE. Basic sauces) over the chicken.

Chicken à la d'Albuféra. POULARDE À LA D'ALBUFÉRA – Stuff the chicken with rice half-cooked in white stock, mixed with small pieces of truffles and foie gras. Poach in white stock. Surround with pastry cases filled with small chicken quenelles, cocks' kidneys, slices of truffles and button mushrooms bound with d'Albuféra sauce (see SAUCE). Coat the chicken with d'Albuféra sauce.

Chicken demi-deuil. POULARDE DEMI-DEUIL – Poach the chicken in a white stock. Surround with pastry cases filled with a mixture of lambs' sweetbreads and mushrooms bound in thick chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Put a small truffle cooked in Madeira on each tartlet and pour on Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken demi-deuil is also called Poached chicken Lyonnaise.

Chicken Demidoff I. POULARDE DEMIDOFF – Cook the chicken à la Matignon in a covered dish in the oven.

Surround with artichoke bottoms garnished with vegetable purée. Put an onion ring, dipped in batter and fried, on each artichoke, topped with a slice of truffle.

Mix the cooking juices with Madeira and Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE). Pour over the chicken.

Chicken Demidoff II. POULARDE DEMIDOFF – Cook the chicken in butter in a covered dish in the oven. When it is three-quarters cooked, add 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) mixed vegetable purée, mushrooms and truffles. When cooked garnish with sliced truffles.

Mix the cooking juices with port wine and thickened brown veal stock, and pour over the chicken.

Chicken à la Derby. POULARDE À LA DERBY – Stuff the chicken with rice cooked in butter and mixed with truffles. Cook, covered, in the oven.

Surround with large truffles cooked in port wine, and slices of foie gras sautéed in butter. Mix the cooking juices with port wine and thickened brown veal gravy, and pour over the chicken.

Chicken à la Doria. POULARDE À LA DORIA – Poach the chicken in white stock. Take it out of the liquid, remove the barding and trussing string. Cut off the breast fillets and take out the small bones from the interior of the carcase.

Fill the chicken with the following mixture:

Bind 100 g. (4 oz.) each of cocks' combs and kidneys, 100 g. (4 oz.) button mushrooms and 100 g. (4 oz.) quartered truffles with 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) very thick chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Chill.

Fill the chicken with this mixture, giving the bird its original shape. Arrange the breast fillets, cut into fine strips, on top. Pour very thick Allemande sauce (see SAUCE), over the chicken. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and brown lightly in the oven.

Surround the bird with large chicken quenelles decorated with truffles, medium-sized truffles cooked in champagne, fried cocks' combs, and large mushrooms.

Pour into the bottom of the dish a few tablespoons Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

chicken (poached, braised or roasted), boned, and cut into thin slices. Coat with sauce and heat without boiling.

Chicken filets. FILETS DE VOLAILLE – Breasts of chicken removed when raw and cooked in various ways. See the recipes given under Côtelettes and Suprêmes below.

Chicken filets mignons. FILETS MIGNONS DE VOLAILLE – Long thin strips cut from the Suprêmes (see below) of poultry. These filets, encrusted with thin slices of truffles or pickled tongue, are formed into rings or arcs and placed on top of the suprêmes, which are cooked separately.

Chicken à la financière. POULARDE À LA FINANCIÈRE – Braise the chicken. Surround with a Financière garnish (see GARNISHES).

Pour Financière sauce (see SAUCE), to which has been added some of the juice in which the chicken was cooked, over the bird.

Chicken forcemeat – See FORCEMEAT.

Chicken fricassée – See FRICASSÉE.

Chicken fricassée à la minute (Plumerey's recipe). FRICASSÉE DE POULET À LA MINUTE – 'Cut up two chickens, put them in a saucepan with 175 g. (6 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) melted butter, and toss them so that they become firm without colouring. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour, season with salt, pepper, and grated nutmeg, and add as much water as will make a slightly thickened sauce. Add 6 small blanched onions, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Cook on a good heat, taking care that the chicken does not stick and that the sauce is boiled down little by little. At the end of 25 minutes test 1 of the legs to see if it is cooked. Add 250 g. (9 oz.) mushrooms, remove grease, bind the sauce with four beaten egg yolks, sprinkle with lemon juice.'

Chicken fritot. FRITOT DE VOLAILLE – Entrée prepared with slices of cooked chicken marinated in oil, lemon juice and herbs, dipped in batter and fried in deep fat or oil. (See also FRITTERS.)

Chicken galantine – See GALANTINE.

Chicken giblets. ABATIS DE VOLAILLE – Poultry giblets are composed of wingtips, neck, gizzard, liver, and heart. (See GIBLETS.)

Chicken à la Godard. POULARDE À LA GODARD – Braise the chicken. Surround with Godard garnish (see GARNISH). Pour over the chicken Godard sauce (see SAUCE) to which some of the cooking juices have been added.

Grilled chicken

Grilled chicken. POULARDE GRILLÉE – Cut the chicken open down the back, push the ends of the legs into the opening, flatten slightly, and season with salt and pepper. Brown on both sides in butter, cover both sides with fresh breadcrumbs and grill under gentle heat. The chicken can also be divided into joints as for Sautéed chicken (see below).

Grilled chicken is served with a highly seasoned sauce such as Diable, Mustard, Béarnaise, etc. (see SAUCE).

Grilled chicken à la diable. POULET GRILLÉ À LA DIABLE – Truss the chicken as for boiling and split it through the back. Flatten slightly, season with salt and pepper, spread with butter, and half-cook in the oven.

Smear the chicken with a little mustard to which some cayenne has been added. Coat with fresh breadcrumbs and sprinkle with melted butter. Finish cooking under a gentle grill, letting it colour well.

Garnish with gherkins and half-slices of lemon, and serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken Grimod-de-la-Reynière – See below, Chicken à la Nantua III.

Chicken ham. JAMBON DE POULET – Name given in France to the thigh of a large chicken, which is boned, stuffed, trussed in the shape of a ham and braised in Madeira.

Chicken hash. HACHIS DE VOLAILLE – Made with left-over poultry (poached or braised), boned and chopped or cut in very small dice. (See HASH.)

Hungarian chicken. POULARDE À LA HONGROISE – Stuff the chicken with rice three-quarters cooked and seasoned with paprika.

Cook, covered with butter, in the oven. Dilute the pan juices with white wine and pour over the chicken. Serve with Hungarian sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken à l'impériale. POULARDE À L'IMPÉRIALE – Stuff the chicken with a mixture of 150 g. (5 oz.) lambs' sweetbreads, 100 g. (4 oz.) button mushrooms, 3 medium-sized truffles shaped to look like olives, bound with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) mushroom purée and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thick chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Cook, covered, in the oven without allowing it to colour.

Surround with pastry cases filled with small pieces of foie gras, large mushrooms cooked in butter and garnished with asparagus tips, and small artichoke bottoms simmered gently in butter and filled with chopped truffles.

Coat lightly with a sauce, using the cooking juices as for Chicken à la Chantilly.

Chicken à l'indienne. POULARDE À L'INDIENNE – Poach the chicken in white stock, or cook it, covered, in the oven with butter.

Pour Curry sauce (see SAUCE) over it, and serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Cold chicken Isabelle (M. Apollon Caillat's recipe). CHAUD-FROID DE POULARDE ISABELLE – Cut the chicken in pieces, soak in cold water, drain and put in a shallow sauté pan. Pour over it 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) concentrated veal stock, flavoured with mushroom essence, and cook.

Drain the bird. Strain the cooking juices and use them to moisten a roux (q.v.) made with 75 g. (3 oz., scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter and the same quantity of flour, cooked together. Add 1 teaspoon paprika. Cook, and skim. Bind the sauce with 2 egg yolks beaten up in a little cream. Cook slowly, and strain over the pieces of chicken, which have been returned to the shallow pan. Add sweet pimentos cut in julienne strips. Simmer for a few minutes.

To serve, cover the chicken pieces completely with the sauce. When quite cold, decorate with small pieces of truffles and sweet pimentos.

Coat completely with a thin layer of jelly, which should be clear and almost colourless.

Chicken à l'ivoire. POULARDE À L'IVOIRE – Poach the chicken in white stock, surround with 20 mushroom heads and 20 chicken quenelles. Pour Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) over the bird.

Chicken jambalaya (Indian cookery). JAMBALAYA DE POULET – Pilaf made from rice cooked à l'indienne (see RICE).

CHICKEN

Dice coarsely 150 g. (5 oz.) raw, lean ham. Sauté in butter in a heavy pan. When almost cooked, add 250 g. (9 oz.) cooked diced chicken.

Sauté and season with red pepper. Add 200 g. (7 oz., 1½ cups) Rice à l'indienne (see RICE) cooked separately.

Jellied chicken in casserole. POULARDE EN TERRINE À LA GELÉE – Bone a plump fowl. Stuff with a forcemeat made of equal parts of veal, fresh pork fat and à gratin forcemeat, the whole well seasoned, bound with two eggs, and flavoured with brandy and essence of truffles.

Put half a raw foie gras studded with 4 quarters of truffles on the forcemeat, and re-form the shape of the chicken. Truss as for boiling, bard with a slice of fat bacon, add Madeira, and cook, covered, in the oven. Remove from the dish and cool. Dilute the pan juices. Remove the trussing string and barding, wipe the chicken, and put it in an earthenware dish on a base of well-set jelly. Cover completely with jelly to which the diluted cooking juices have been added. Leave to chill for at least 12 hours.

Jellied chicken with champagne. POULARDE AU CHAMPAGNE EN GELÉE – This dish should be prepared well in advance.

Stuff a chicken with a whole foie gras, trimmed and studded with truffles, which has been soaked in brandy and spices, and cooked in butter for a few minutes.

Cook, covered, in the oven in butter. Dilute the cooking juices with 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) dry champagne. Boil down. Add 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) Chicken jelly (see JELLY). Boil for a few moments. Strain.

Put the chicken in a large earthenware dish and cover with the jelly. Cool completely. When the jelly is quite set scrape off any fat that sticks to the surface, and wipe the bird over 2 or 3 times with a cloth wrung out in very hot water.

Jellied chicken may be flavoured with different wines.

Jellied chicken with foie gras (canned). POULARDE AU FOIE GRAS À LA GELÉE – Prepare as for Jellied chicken in casserole. Drain, remove the trussing strings and wings. Put it breast downwards into a large tin just big enough to hold the chicken. Cover with the clarified cooking liquor. Solder the tin, make a mark on the top with solder. Put the tin into a pot and cover completely with water. Bring to the boil and continue to boil, without interruption, for 1 hour.

Drain the tin and leave to cool, keeping it upside down so that the breast of chicken is in jelly and the fat goes to the bottom of the tin.

Chicken with tarragon in jelly (Scarnati)

Chicken with tarragon in jelly. POULARDE À L'ESTRAGON DANS SA GELÉE – Truss the chicken as for boiling, put in a saucepan and cover with white stock. Add a generous quantity of tarragon.

Cook slowly for 1 hour. Leave to cool in its own liquid. Drain, take off the trussing string and wipe carefully.

Reheat the cooking liquor, from which all grease has been removed, and strain. Add to it the required quantity of gelatine, soaked in cold water, and heat slightly.

Pour this, when lukewarm, into a saucepan in which 100 g. (4 oz.) minced lean beef, 1 egg white and a handful of chopped tarragon leaves have been whisked together. Cook over a good heat for a moment, whisking lightly.

As soon as it comes to the boil, remove the saucepan to a very low heat and cook slowly for 25 minutes.

Strain the jelly through a cloth, adding, when it has cooled, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) Madeira. When nearly cold, half-fill a dish with some of this jelly, and when it has set put the chicken on top.

Decorate with broad leaves of tarragon, blanched, trimmed, drained, and dipped one by one in half-set jelly. Arrange these leaves in a pattern on the breast of the chicken. Three-quarters cover the chicken with the rest of the jelly.

Place the dish on ice or in the refrigerator until ready to serve.

Chicken Katoff. POULET KATOFF – Grill a chicken (split down the back and lightly flattened) as for Grilled chicken à la diable.

Set it on a foundation of Duchess potato (see POTATOES), brushed with egg and browned in the oven. Surround with thickened brown veal stock to which butter has been added.

Chicken kromeskies. CROMESQUIS DE VOLAILLE – Prepared with a croquette mixture, wrapped in pig's caul (or pork fat), dipped in batter and fried. (See CROQUETTES.)

Chicken Lambertye. POULARDE LAMBERTYE – Poach a fat hen, trussed for boiling, in white chicken stock. Allow it to cool completely in its own liquid.

Make a circular incision round the breast and remove it. Fill the inside with a Foie gras mousse (see FOIE GRAS), rounding the top to re-form the shape of the chicken. Coat the chicken legs with White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE).

Place over the mousse the chicken breasts cut in slices, coated with the sauce and decorated with truffles and rounds of tongue glazed with jelly.

Serve on croûtons of bread, or on a bed of rice. Garnish with jelly shapes or chopped jelly.

Chicken à la languedocienne. POULARDE À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Cook the chicken, covered, in the oven with butter. Set on a dish and surround with tomatoes à la languedocienne and aubergines cut in slices and lightly fried in oil.

Dilute the cooking juices with white wine, season with a crushed clove of garlic, and add thickened brown veal gravy. Pour over the chicken and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Chicken livers. FOIES DE POULETS – Chicken livers are used mostly as a garnish, and for forcemeat. They may, however, be served grilled on skewers, sautéed, with mushrooms, in pilafs and risottos, and used in terrines and pâtés.

Chicken loaf (cold). PAIN DE VOLAILLE FROID – Prepare cold Chicken mousse mixture (see below) and decorate as for all other cold loaves (game, foie gras, fish, shellfish). Coat a mould with jelly and decorate with pieces of truffles, hard-boiled eggs, white pickled tongue, etc.

Chicken loaf (hot). PAIN DE VOLAILLE CHAUD – Prepare a Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT).

Butter a mould with a hole in the middle and fill with the above forcemeat to within 1 cm. (½ inch) of the top. Poach the loaf in the oven in a bain-marie (q.v.) for 45 minutes to 1 hour, depending on the size of the mould.

When the loaf is cooked, leave it to settle for a few moments before turning out. Surround with the garnish chosen and pour over it the sauce appropriate to the garnish.

The following garnishes and sauces are suitable for hot chicken loaves: Clamart (peas) and Cream sauce; mushrooms and Allemande sauce; Hongroise (salpicon (q.v.) of mushrooms and onions in separate groups) and Sauce hongroise; Monselet (coarsely diced artichoke hearts and truffles in separate groups) and Suprême sauce; Montpensier (asparagus tips in butter, slivers of truffles) and Allemande sauce; Nantua (crayfish tails, slivers of truffles) and Nantua sauce; asparagus tips and Velouté sauce cooked with cream. (See GARNISHES, SAUCE.)

Chicken à la lyonnaise or demi-deuil. POULARDE À LA LYONNAISE, DITE DEMI-DEUIL – Stuff the chicken with fine truffled forcemeat and poach in white chicken stock. Serve the chicken surrounded with vegetables cooked in the chicken broth, and accompanied by the strained poaching liquor.

This way of cooking chicken is the great speciality of the city of Lyons and is known as Poularde de Madame Filloux.

Chicken Maeterlinck (Mont-Bry's recipe). POULARDE MAETERLINCK – Stuff a chicken with a chopped-up mixture of cocks' combs and kidneys, lambs' sweetbreads, truffles and mushrooms, bound with very thick chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and fresh cream. Truss the chicken and wrap it in a bard of bacon fat. Put the bird in a deep pot with butter, strips of fresh bacon rind, sliced carrots and sliced onions. Season with salt. Cook in the oven, covered, for 45 minutes.

Drain the bird and remove the trussing string. Put it in an earthenware casserole and surround with 6 peeled truffles seasoned with salt, pepper and nutmeg, and 6 small slices of foie gras heated in butter. Dilute the cooking juices with 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) sherry and 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) thickened and strained brown meat gravy. Add 4 tablespoons (½ cup) brandy and set alight. Seal the lid of the casserole with flour-and-water paste. Cook in the oven, in a good heat, for 35 minutes. Serve in the casserole.

Marinade of chicken. MARINADE DE VOLAILLE – Prepare in the same way as Chicken fritot, using uncooked chicken.

Chicken à la Matignon. POULARDE À LA MATIGNON – Stuff the chicken with Forcemeat à gratin mixed with one-third of its volume of Quenelle stuffing (see FORCEMEAT).

Brown in the oven. Take out, cool, and cover with a thick coating of Matignon (vegetable mixture). Wrap the chicken in salt pork, and tie firmly. Braise. When cooked surround with braised lettuces, and pour the cooking juices diluted with Madeira and Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE) over the bird.

Chicken mayonnaise. MAYONNAISE DE VOLAILLE – Slices of cooked chicken (or other poultry) seasoned with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, set on shredded lettuce, coated with mayonnaise, and garnished with lettuce hearts and quartered hard-boiled eggs, capers and anchovy fillets. (See MAYONNAISE.)

Chicken médaillons. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE – There are several kinds. Some are prepared with a croquette mixture shaped into discs, coated in egg and breadcrumbs and sautéed in butter. Others, which belong to the category of Chicken quenelles (see QUENELLES) are made from quenelle forcemeat or chicken mousse, moulded into little cakes and poached. A third kind is made with the white flesh of a boned fowl, and, finally, some médallions are cut from the breasts or suprêmes of raw chicken, lightly flattened and cut into oval pieces.

Methods of preparing these last two types are given below.

Chicken médaillons à l'algérienne. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE À L'ALGÉRIENNE – Coat in egg and breadcrumbs médallions made with chopped chicken and sauté in butter. Set each médallion on top of ½ tomato which has been grilled and stuffed with rice pilaf mixed with diced sweet peppers. Surround with light Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken médaillons Beauharnais. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE BEAUHARNAIS – Season the médallions, cut from the breasts, and sauté in butter. Place each médallion on a small artichoke bottom cooked in butter and garnished with 1 tablespoon Beauharnais sauce (see SAUCE), and topped with a slice of truffle. Surround with thickened brown veal gravy mixed with butter.

Chicken médaillons cut from the breast. MÉDAILLONS DÉTAILLÉS SUR FILETS DE VOLAILLE – Remove the breasts from a roasting chicken. Cut them into regular slices. Flatten these lightly and trim into rounds or ovals. Cook according to the recipe, following the instructions given under Chicken côtelettes and Suprêmes of chicken (see below).

The filets mignons may be left with the médallions. They may also be cooked separately, as for Suprêmes of chicken, and served on top of the médallions.

The legs, wings and carcasses of the chickens used for the médallions can be used up by following the recipes given under Chicken ballotines (see BALLOTTINES).

Chopped chicken médaillons. MÉDAILLONS EN CHAIR DE VOLAILLE HACHÉE – Bone the breasts of a roasting chicken. Chop them, adding 50 g. (2 oz., 1 cup) breadcrumbs soaked in milk and squeezed out, and 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter. Add to the mixture 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) fresh cream, and season with salt, pepper and nutmeg.

Shape médallions from the mixture, coat with egg and breadcrumbs, or dredge with flour, and sauté in clarified butter.

The carcass, neck, head and feet of the bird can be used to prepare chicken stock or soup, or in a sauce to accompany the médallions.

Chicken médaillons Dunan. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE DUNAN – Make médallions of chopped chicken mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of lean ham and mushrooms. Coat in egg and breadcrumbs and sauté in butter.

Set in tartlets baked blind and filled with a salpicon of truffles à la crème. Serve with Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken médaillons à l'écarlate. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE À L'ÉCARLATE – Season médallions cut from the suprêmes and poach in white stock. Set in a dish in the form of a turban, alternating them with slices of pickled tongue heated in white stock.

Pour into the bottom of the dish a few tablespoons Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken médaillons à l'égyptienne. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE À L'ÉGYPTIENNE – Season médallions with paprika and sauté in butter.

Arrange in the form of a turban, alternating them with rounds of aubergines sautéed in butter. Garnish the middle of the dish with pilaf rice. Surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) to which has been added the cooking juices diluted with white wine.

Chicken médaillons Fédora. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE FÉDORA – Season the médallions and poach them in white stock. Set on croûtons of bread fried in butter. Garnish with cucumbers cut into uniform pieces and stewed in butter. Coat with the cooking juices diluted with cream and chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken médaillons Grignan. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE GRIGNAN – Make médallions from chopped chicken meat. Sprinkle with flour, dip in beaten egg, and cover with finely chopped truffles. Cook in butter.

CHICKEN

Arrange on artichoke bottoms cooked in butter. Garnish with a ragoût of Chicken quenelles (see QUENELLES), and cocks' combs and kidneys, bound with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken médaillons à la mantouane. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE À LA MANTOUANE – Season médallions cut from the suprêmes and coat them à la milanaise (with egg and bread-crumbs mixed with grated Parmesan). Sauté in butter.

Set in tartlets which have been baked blind, each filled with macaroni bound with Parmesan, to which a julienne of lean ham and pickled tongue has been added. Put a slice of truffle on top of each médallion.

Chicken médaillons à la turque. MÉDAILLONS DE VOLAILLE À LA TURQUE – Season médallions with paprika, and sauté in butter. Set on top of Rice pilaf (see PILAF). Coat with the cooking juices diluted with white wine, and tomato-flavoured veal gravy.

Chicken à la milanaise I. POULARDE À LA MILANAISE – Stuff the chicken with Macaroni à la milanaise (see MACARONI). Cook, covered, in the oven in butter.

Dilute the cooking juices with white wine and thickened veal gravy to which tomato purée has been added, and pour over the chicken.

Chicken à la milanaise

Chicken à la milanaise II. POULARDE À LA MILANAISE – Stuff the chicken with a mixture of sliced lambs' sweet-breads, tongue, lean ham, mushrooms and truffles, bound with brown sauce flavoured with tomato. Braise the chicken.

Surround with timbales of Macaroni à la milanaise (made in dariole moulds). Dilute the cooking juices with Madeira and Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with tomato, and pour over the chicken.

Chicken mousse and mousselines. MOUSSE ET MOUSSELINES DE VOLAILLE – Entrée, cold or hot, prepared with Chicken mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT).

Chicken with mousseline forcemeat – Poach the chicken in white stock, drain and cut off the breast fillets as for Chicken à la Doria.

Fill the inside of the bird with Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT), with the addition of one-third of purée of foie gras. Arrange this stuffing in layers, alternating with the pieces of breast fillets. Round off the top of the forcemeat to give it the shape of the chicken. Cook in a slow oven, setting the dish in a tray containing hot water.

Surround with one of the garnishes recommended for chicken poached in a white stock. (See GARNISHES.)

Chicken with mushrooms (brown). POULARDE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Cook the chicken, covered, in the oven with butter. 10 minutes before the end of the cooking time add large mushrooms. When cooked dilute the pan juices with white wine and Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE) and pour over the chicken.

Chicken with mushrooms (white). POULARDE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – As for Chicken à l'allemande. Surround with large mushrooms cooked without allowing them to colour. Pour Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) over the chicken.

Chicken à la Nantua I. POULARDE À LA NANTUA – Poach the chicken in white stock. Surround with quenelles made of Chicken forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) to which Shrimp butter (see BUTTER) has been added, and with boat-shaped pastry shells filled with shrimps in Nantua sauce (see SAUCE). Place on each boat a slice of truffle. Pour over the chicken Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) finished with shrimp butter.

Chicken à la Nantua II. POULARDE À LA NANTUA – Stuff the chicken with a purée of shrimps mixed with a very thick chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Poach in white stock.

Pour over it Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) finished with Shrimp butter (see BUTTER). Add a few pieces of truffle to the shrimp purée.

Chicken à la Nantua III. POULARDE À LA NANTUA – Poach the chicken, drain, cut off the breast fillets and stuff it in the same way as for Chicken à la Doria, replacing the mixture used in that recipe with purée of shrimps mixed with very thick chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Re-shape the chicken, placing the breast fillets, cut in strips, on top. Pour Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) over the chicken. Sprinkle with Parmesan and brown the top.

Serve with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE), finished with Shrimp butter (see BUTTER).

Prepared in this way the chicken is also known as Chicken Grimod-de-la-Reynière.

Chicken à la Nèva. POULARDE À LA NÉVA – Stuff the chicken with a fine Chicken forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) to which has been added some raw foie gras and diced truffles. Truss as for boiling, and poach in chicken stock. Allow it to cool and when the chicken is quite cold, wipe it and coat with white Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) prepared with some of the chicken broth. Glaze with jelly and allow to set firmly.

Set the chicken either on a bed of rice, on a slice of buttered bread, or directly onto the plate. Serve with vegetable salad in mayonnaise (the salad rounded into a dome and decorated with truffles). Garnish with jelly shapes.

Chicken à la Nèva can also be served in the same way as Chicken Lambertye.

Chicken à la niçoise I. POULARDE À LA NIÇOISE – Cook the chicken, covered, in butter, in the oven. Serve surrounded by quartered artichokes which have been simmered in butter, braised courgettes (zucchini), small new potatoes cooked in butter, and a few black olives.

Dilute the cooking juices with white wine, season with a crushed clove of garlic, thicken with brown veal gravy flavoured with tomato purée, and pour over the chicken. Sprinkle with chopped tarragon.

Chicken à la niçoise II. POULARDE À LA NIÇOISE – Cook the chicken in butter in the oven, covered. Arrange on a dish with tomatoes which have been slowly cooked in butter, diced courgettes tossed in oil, new potatoes cooked in butter, and black olives.

Pour the cooking juices, prepared as above, over the chicken, and sprinkle with chopped tarragon.

Chicken with noodles. POULARDE AUX NOUILLES – Stuff the chicken with noodles half-cooked in salt water, drained, and dressed with butter and grated cheese. Cook, covered in butter in the oven.

Dilute the pan juices with white wine, thicken with brown veal gravy flavoured with tomato purée, and pour over the chicken.

Chicken with oysters. POULARDE AUX HUÎTRES – Poach the chicken in white stock. Surround with oysters poached in their own liquor, and drained. Add boiled-down oyster liquor to Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) and pour over the chicken.

If preferred, the oysters may be served on pieces of fried bread or toast, or put in the sauce.

Chicken Panurge. ÉTUVÉE DE POULET PANURGE – Cut the chicken up as for a fricassée. Season with salt and pepper and put it in a shallow pan in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Sauté the chicken over a hot flame until the flesh is quite firm, and remove from the pan.

Cut into thin pieces a 3-dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$ -pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$ -cup) mixture of carrots, onions and celery; toss lightly in butter, and put in the pan. Lay the chicken pieces on this vegetable foundation.

Pour in dry white wine. Boil down the liquid and pour in a little fresh cream. Cook gently, covered, for 25 minutes. Add stoned olives and simmer for a few minutes.

Put the chicken on a dish and pour the sauce, to which has been added a good tablespoon butter, over the bird. Place thin slices of the gizzard which have been peeled, trimmed, cooked in consommé and fried in butter; and thin slices of the liver, also fried in butter; on the chicken. Garnish with heart-shaped bread croûtons fried in butter.

Chicken à la parisienne. POULARDE À LA PARISIENNE – Remove the breast bone and stuff the chicken with a Fine panada forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Truss the bird and poach in white stock.

Drain the chicken when it is cold; cut off the pieces of breast. Take out the stuffing, cut in large dice and add to a cold chicken Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Refill the interior of the bird with this mixture, and coat with white Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE).

Slice the breasts thinly, coat with the sauce, and place on the chicken. Decorate with truffles and tongue. Serve the chicken on buttered bread, and surround with vegetable salad moulded in darioles lined with jelly and decorated with truffles.

Ornament the borders of the dish with jelly shapes and garnish with chopped jelly.

Chicken à la périgourdine. POULARDE À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Stuff the chicken with foie gras and diced truffles, seasoned with salt and spice and moistened with brandy. Cook it, covered, in the oven with butter, or braise it.

Add truffles about 10 minutes before cooking is completed, and when serving surround the chicken with these. Pour over the chicken the cooking juices diluted with Madeira and Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken pie – See PIE.

Chicken pie à la créole. PÂTÉ DE POULET À LA CRÉOLE – Make some Brioche pastry (see PASTRY), very slightly sweetened and salted, tinted pale yellow with saffron. Prepare separately a chicken curry, boiling down the sauce as much as possible. Make a forcemeat with a blend of fat and lean pork, salted and very well peppered, and cook for a moment in fat. Spread out the pastry in the shape of a tart, hollow in the middle. Put a layer of forcemeat in the bottom, place the pieces of curried chicken on top, cover with another layer of forcemeat, and put on a lid of pastry.

Bake slowly in the oven. The middle should rise more than the sides. Serve hot or cold.

Chicken à la piémontaise I. POULARDE À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Stuff the chicken with risotto mixed with 100 g. (4 oz.) diced white truffles. Cook, covered, in the oven with butter.

Dilute the cooking juices with white wine, mix with thickened brown veal gravy, and pour over the chicken.

Chicken à la piémontaise II. POULARDE À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Cook the chicken, covered, in the oven with butter. When cooked garnish with cheese risotto. Cover the chicken with 100 g. (4 oz.) white truffles cut in thin slices. Pour the cooking butter mixed with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy over the dish.

Chicken pilaf. PILAF DE VOLAILLE – Cook the rice and arrange it in a border on a dish. Fill the middle with chicken prepared in the following manner:

Cut the chicken into small uniform pieces. Season with salt and pepper, sauté in butter and drain.

Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine. Add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) brown veal stock and 1 tablespoon tomato purée. Boil for a few moments. Strain the sauce. Replace the chicken in the sauté pan and simmer for a few moments.

Chicken à la polonaise. POULET À LA POLONAISE – Stuff a chicken with à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) mixed with a little bread that has been soaked and squeezed out, and chopped parsley. Truss as for boiling. Brown quickly in very hot butter. Put the bird in an earthenware casserole and finish cooking in the oven.

Take off the trussing strings and squeeze over the chicken a few drops of lemon juice. Sprinkle with browned butter in which some fine breadcrumbs have been fried, allowing 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) breadcrumbs to 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter.

Chicken à la portugaise I. POULARDE À LA PORTUGAISE – Cook the chicken, covered, in the oven with butter. To serve, surround with 8 tomatoes stuffed and topped with browned crumbs.

Dilute the cooking juices with white wine, thicken with brown veal gravy flavoured with tomato and a clove of garlic, and pour over the chicken.

Chicken à la portugaise II. POULARDE À LA PORTUGAISE – Cook the chicken, covered, in the oven with butter. When it is three-quarters cooked, put in the pot peeled, diced tomatoes which have been cooked in butter, and 1 tablespoon chopped onion.

To serve, pour the cooking juices over the chicken and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Chicken princess. POULARDE PRINCESSE – Poach the chicken in a small quantity of white chicken stock.

Surround with a garnish of pastry cases filled with buttered asparagus tips, and truffles simmered in butter. Pour Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) over the chicken.

Chicken purée. PURÉE DE VOLAILLE – Purée of chicken poached in white stock, served alone or as a garnish or filling.

It is sometimes called purée à la reine, and used as a garnish for entrées made with pastry, such as bouchées, rissoles and vol-au-vent.

Chicken purée, finished off with cream, is also used for the soup called coulis à la reine.

Chicken quenelles. QUENELLES DE VOLAILLE – Prepared with various forcemeats (q.v.).

Chicken à la régence. POULARDE À LA RÉGENCE – Insert pieces of bacon fat into the chicken and braise it in brown butter. Surround with slices of calves' sweetbreads sautéed in butter, truffles cooked in Madeira, chicken quenelles, cocks' combs and large prawns cooked in bouillon.

Pour Régence sauce (see SAUCE), with some of the cooking liquor added, over the chicken.

Whole braised sweetbreads can be used instead of slices.

Chicken à la reine. POULARDE À LA REINE – Stuff the chicken with the same mixture as for Chicken croquettes. Poach in white stock, with the minimum of liquid. Surround with small pastry cases filled with Chicken purée.

Put on each pastry case, in the form of a lid, a thin slice of truffle. Pour Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) over the dish.

Chicken à la Renaissance. POULARDE À LA RENAISSANCE – Poach a chicken in white stock with the minimum of liquid. Surround with Renaissance garnish (see GARNISHES).

CHICKEN

Pour Suprême sauce (see SAUCE), made with mushroom essence, over the chicken.

Chicken with rice à la Bourbon (Créole cookery). POULARDE AU RIZ À LA BOURBON – Lightly brown a chicken in fat. Add a finely chopped cooked onion, 2 carrots, a bunch of herbs, salt, pepper and 1 tablespoon tomato purée. Add stock and cook on very slow heat for about 1½ hours. Boil down the liquid.

Scald, drain, and cook rice in chicken stock. When soft, arrange on a dish and place the chicken pieces round it. Strain the stock and pour over the dish. Decorate with slices of carrot.

Chicken and rice with suprême sauce. POULARDE AU RIZ SAUCE SUPRÊME – Half cook a chicken, trussed as for boiling and covered with bacon fat, in white stock. When half-cooked, drain the bird. Put the stock through a fine strainer and replace the chicken in the pot. Add 250 g. (9 oz., 1¼ cups) blanched and drained rice, stock, and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Finish cooking all together, over slow heat.

Using part of the cooking liquor prepare a Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Flank the chicken with rice, and serve with suprême sauce and the chicken broth.

Roasting chickens, Angers (French Government Tourist Office)

Roast chicken. POULARDE RÔTIE – Truss the chicken and season inside and outside. Cover the breast with a thin slice of bacon fat, and roast in the oven or on the spit. For cooking times, see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts.

Serve with the cooking juices, and watercress.

Roast chicken à l'anglaise. POULARDE RÔTIE À L'ANGLAISE – Roast the chicken in the usual way. Surround with slices of bacon or grilled sausages, and serve with Bread sauce (see SAUCE).

Roast chicken à l'anglaise may also be prepared in the same way as Roast turkey à l'anglaise (see TURKEY).

Chicken with rock (coarse) salt. POULARDE AU GROS SEL – Poach the chicken in white stock. Serve with its strained cooking liquor and rock (coarse) salt.

An old-fashioned spit for chickens
(Grün)

Surround with carrots and onions cooked in the chicken broth.

Chicken Rosière. POULARDE ROSIÈRE – Stuff a chicken with Chicken forcemeat with cream (see FORCEMEAT). Truss it, laying the feet flat against the sides. Rub it all over with lemon juice and wrap it entirely in bards of bacon fat. Line the bottom of a casserole with strips of fresh bacon rinds, rounds of carrot and onion and a bunch of herbs. Place the chicken on top and add sufficient veal stock to cover the chicken. Simmer with the lid on for about 50 minutes.

Blanch, trim and press under a weight for 30 minutes 3 calves' sweetbreads, having removed all membranes. About 35 minutes before serving, cut the sweetbreads in slices 1 cm. (¼ inch) thick, put in a pan, just cover with white veal stock, add a piece of butter and simmer.

Roast chicken (A.B.C.)

Prepare  $\frac{3}{4}$  litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints) fresh Mushroom purée (see MUSHROOMS). Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) fresh cream to bring it to the consistency of an ordinary sauce, and mix into it 150 g. (5 oz.) mushrooms chopped and cooked.

Drain the chicken, remove the harding and trussing strings and surround with the slices of sweetbread. Coat the chicken and the garnish with some of the sauce and serve the rest separately.

Chicken à la Rossini. POULARDE À LA ROSSINI – Cook the chicken, covered, in butter in the oven. Set it on a dish and surround it with slices of foie gras tossed in butter. Place 2 slices of truffle heated in butter on each slice of foie gras.

Pour over the chicken its cooking juices diluted with Madeira and truffle-flavoured Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE). The slices of foie gras may be placed in pastry cases, or on slices of bread fried in butter.

Chicken salad. SALADE DE VOLAILLE – Set sliced cooked chicken on a foundation of shredded lettuce, sprinkle with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) and garnish with lettuce hearts and quartered hard-boiled eggs.

Sautéed chicken. POULETS SAUTÉS – Small tender fowls, weighing from 900 to 1800 g. (2 to 4 lb.) are more suited to being cooked this way than fat fowls and capons. The chicken should be sautéed rapidly in butter, in oil or in fat, but should not be allowed to boil in its juices.

To cut up the chicken for cooking, divide it into joints. Cut away the leg at its thickest part, having cut through the joint. Heating the feet makes them easier to skin.

Spring chickens are simply divided into halves, which are lightly flattened.

To sauté à blanc. Season pieces of chicken and put them in a pan of heated butter. Sauté the pieces without allowing them to brown. Cover the pan and cook at moderate heat. Take out the wings and breasts first. Pour off the butter, dilute the pan juices with white stock, mushroom juice or cream, and add a sauce. Garnish.

To sauté à brun. Heat 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter or oil in a pan and add seasoned pieces of chicken. Brown well on both sides, cover, and cook over a low heat. After 6 or 8 minutes, take out the wings and the pieces of breast, and keep them warm. (These parts, being the most delicate, are cooked the soonest.) Leave the legs and carcasses to cook for 8 to 12 minutes, according to size.

Take out the pieces of chicken, remove the cooking fat, dilute the juices with the liquid specified in the recipe – wine, stock or meat juices, etc. Boil down this liquor by half and add a sauce.

Put back the pieces of chicken in the pan, cover and keep warm, but avoid boiling. Garnish.

To sauté à brun à la ménagère. Brown and cook the pieces of chicken as above. Take them out of the pan. Add 1 tablespoon flour to the liquor in the pan and allow to colour slightly. Dilute with wine or other liquid. Boil down and then add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white stock, consommé or water. Cook for 12 to 15 minutes, stirring with a wooden spoon, and strain.

Replace the pieces of chicken in the covered pan, pour the sauce over and keep warm, but avoid boiling.

The many garnishes for sautéed chicken include sautéed aubergines, glazed carrots, small pieces of celeriac, brussels sprouts in butter, cucumbers, baby marrows (zucchini), sweetcorn in butter or cream, small glazed onions, noodles, macaroni, rice, etc.

In the recipes which follow, the diluted pan juices of the chicken sautées should have sauces added to them, such as thickened brown veal stock or Rich brown sauce (demi-glace) (see SAUCE). Tomato sauce can be added to them.

When the sauté preparations are diluted with wine and white stock or broth, the sauce may be thickened with a little butter and flour worked together. The same applies to à blanc chicken sautés.

Sautéed chicken Alexandra. POULET SAUTÉ ALEXANDRA – Sauté the chicken in butter à blanc. Dilute the cooking juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white stock and boil down. Stir in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Soubise purée (see PURÉE), 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cream and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Strain the sauce.

Sautéed chicken à l'algérienne. POULET SAUTÉ À L'ALGÉRIENNE – Sauté the chicken in oil à brun. When half-cooked, add 1 tablespoon chopped onion.

Take out the chicken; put in the pan a crushed garlic clove and 2 peeled, drained and chopped tomatoes; cook for 8 minutes, stirring. Put back the chicken in the pan and simmer 8 to 10 minutes without boiling.

When serving the chicken, garnish with 2 diced aubergines sautéed in oil. Pour the sauce over the chicken and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken ambassadeur. POULET SAUTÉ AMBASADRIE – Sauté the chicken and 8 mushrooms in butter à brun. Dilute the pan juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Madeira. Boil down the liquid and pour in 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened veal gravy. Cook at boiling point for a few moments.

Garnish the cooked chicken with 8 cocks' combs and 8 cocks' kidneys cooked in light stock, 4 chicken livers sautéed in butter, the mushrooms, and 8 slices of truffle. Coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken à l'ancienne mode. POULET SAUTÉ À L'ANCIENNE MODE – Sauté the chicken in butter à blanc. Dilute the juices in the pan with 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) white stock or mushroom stock, boil down to two-thirds of its volume, stir in 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and boil for 5 minutes. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, and strain. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped truffles and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) port.

Coat the chicken with the sauce and garnish with rosettes of puff pastry.

Sautéed chicken Annette. POULET SAUTÉ ANNETTE – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. Dilute the pan juices with white wine and add 1 chopped shallot. Boil down the liquid, and add 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown gravy. Boil for a few moments. Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon, a squeeze of lemon juice and 1 tablespoon fresh butter.

Set the chicken in a crust of Annette potatoes (see POTATOES). Coat with the sauce.

The crust of Annette potatoes is made with straw potatoes cooked in butter like Anna potatoes, but with a small dish put in the middle of the potatoes to form a hollow cake.

Sautéed chicken Archduke. POULET SAUTÉ ARCHIDUC – Sauté the chicken in butter à blanc. When it is half cooked add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion lightly cooked in butter, and a pinch of paprika.

Dilute the cooking juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, boil down, pour in 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) cream and boil for a few moments. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and a squeeze of lemon juice to the sauce and strain.

Garnish the chicken with cucumbers cut in chunks and simmered in butter. Coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken Archduke Salvator. POULET SAUTÉ ARCHIDUC SALVATOR – Prepare as for Sautéed chicken Archduke.

Set it on a Potato galette (see GALETTE) and garnish with cucumbers simmered in butter, sautéed mushrooms and slices of truffle.

CHICKEN

There are numerous ways of cooking Chicken Archduke. The basic recipe is sautéed chicken to which has been added onion and cream. The method of diluting the juices may be varied by using brandy or Madeira, the sauce finished off with whisky or port, the garnish composed of cucumbers, mushrooms, quartered artichokes or truffles.

Sautéed chicken with artichokes. POULET SAUTÉ AUX ARTICHAUTS – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When it is half-cooked, add 12 quarters of well blanched artichokes. Finish cooking all these together.

Take out the chicken and artichokes. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, boil down, pour in 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened rich brown veal gravy.

Set the chicken on a dish, garnish with the quarters of artichokes, and coat with the sauce. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

The chicken may also be garnished with artichoke bases, cooked in a flour-and-water court-bouillon, sliced and sautéed with the chicken.

Sautéed chicken with basil. POULET SAUTÉ AU BASILIC – Sauté the chicken in butter, browning it. Dilute the pan juices with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine and add 1 tablespoon chopped basil. Boil down the liquid by half. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter; mix well. Coat the chicken with this juice.

Sautéed chicken à la biarrotte. POULET SAUTÉ À LA BIARROTTE – Sauté the chicken in oil à brun.

Dilute the pan juices with white wine, boil down, and pour in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Add a crushed clove of garlic.

Garnish the chicken with 125 g. (4 oz.) cèpes (q.v.) sautéed in oil, 125 g. (4 oz.) diced potatoes sautéed in oil, a peeled, diced and sautéed aubergine and a medium-sized onion cut in rings and fried. Arrange in separate groups round the chicken.

Sautéed chicken à la bohémienne. POULET SAUTÉ À LA BOHÉMIENNE – Sauté the chicken, seasoned with paprika, in oil à brun. When it is half-cooked, add 4 sweet pimentos peeled and cut in large strips, 2 tomatoes peeled and cut in thick slices, a medium-sized onion cut in small dice and blanched, a crushed clove of garlic and a teaspoon chopped fennel.

Dilute the pan juices with white wine, add  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thickened rich brown veal gravy, and finish with a squeeze of lemon juice.

Set the chicken on a dish, coat with the sauce and serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Sautéed chicken Boivin (Mont-Bry's recipe). POULET SAUTÉ BOIVIN – 'Cook a jointed chicken lightly in butter, browning a little on both sides. When the pieces are lightly browned, put in the pan 24 small onions that have been tossed in butter, 12 quarters of small blanched artichokes, and 24 small new potatoes of uniform size and shape. Season. Cook, covered, on a gentle heat.

'Drain the pieces of chicken. Set them on a dish and arrange the garnish of onions, artichokes and potatoes round them. Pour over the chicken the cooking juices diluted with pot-au-feu broth, with the addition of 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) dissolved meat glaze, sharpened with a squeeze of lemon juice, and with butter added.'

Sautéed chicken à la bordelaise. POULET SAUTÉ À LA BORDELAISE – Sauté the chicken in a mixture of oil and butter. Finish as in the recipe for Sautéed chicken with white wine (see below). Add to the sauce 1 tablespoon Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) and a crushed clove of garlic.

Garnish the chicken with 125 g. (4 oz.) sliced potatoes sautéed in butter, 2 blanched artichokes cut in quarters and cooked in butter, several sprigs fried parsley, and 2 medium-sized onions cut in rings and fried. Coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken à la bordelaise

Sautéed chicken à la bourguignonne. POULET SAUTÉ À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When three-quarters cooked add 12 small glazed onions, 12 mushrooms lightly cooked in butter and 2 slices blanched, diced lean bacon lightly fried in butter.

Take out the chicken and its accompaniments. Dilute the pan juices with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) red wine and add a crushed clove of garlic. Boil down to two-thirds, add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE), cook at boiling point for a few moments, and strain.

Surround the chicken with the garnish, and coat with the sauce. Heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter may be added.

Sautéed chicken à la bourguignonne or en matelote. POULET SAUTÉ À LA BOURGUIGNONNE, EN MATELOTE – Fry in butter 2 slices blanched lean bacon cut in big dice. Add 12 blanched small onions, cook till golden, and add 12 small mushrooms.

Remove these ingredients, which form the garnish, and brown quickly pieces of chicken in the same fat. When they are half-cooked, put the garnish back in the pan, cover, and cook for 15 minutes.

Take out the chicken and the garnish. Dilute the pan juices with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) red wine, boil down to half, and thicken with 1 tablespoon butter mixed with a little flour. Strain.

Surround the chicken pieces with the garnish and pour the sauce over.

Sautéed chicken in butter or à la minute. POULET SAUTÉ AU BEURRE, À LA MINUTE – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun.

To serve, squeeze lemon juice over, pour on the very hot cooking butter, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken with cèpes I. POULET SAUTÉ AUX CÈPES – Sauté the chicken in oil or in a mixture of oil and butter. When it is three-quarters cooked, add 300 g. (11 oz.) white cèpes (q.v.) which have been cut into thick slices and sautéed in oil. Sprinkle with chopped onion.

Drain the chicken and cèpes. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, boil down and add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter.

Garnish the chicken with the cèpes, coat with the juice, and sprinkle with chopped parsley. A crushed clove of garlic may be added.

Sautéed chicken with cèpes II. POULET SAUTÉ AUX CÈPES – Prepare the chicken as for Sautéed chicken with white wine (see below). Garnish with Cèpes à la bordelaise (see MUSHROOMS). Coat with the sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken chasseur

Sautéed chicken chasseur. POULET SAUTÉ CHASSEUR – Sauté the chicken in a mixture of oil and butter. When it is three-quarters cooked, add 125 g. (4 oz.) sliced mushrooms.

Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine. Add a chopped shallot, boil down, add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened veal gravy and  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for a few moments, add 1 tablespoon brandy and 1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon.

Coat the chicken with the sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken with chayotes. POULET SAUTÉ AUX CHAYOTTES – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken with artichokes. Garnish the chicken with quarters of chayotes or custard marrows (q.v.) stewed in butter, and coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken with cream. POULET SAUTÉ À LA CRÈME – Sauté the chicken in butter à blanc. Dilute the pan juices with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) cream. Boil down to half. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Coat the chicken with the sauce. The diluted cooking juices may be thickened with 1 or 2 tablespoons chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Sautéed chicken curry. POULET SAUTÉ AU CURRIE – See below Sautéed chicken à l'indienne.

Sautéed chicken Demidoff. POULET SAUTÉ DEMIDOFF – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When it is half-cooked add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup), purée of cooked chopped vegetables à la Demidoff.

At the end of cooking add 2 sliced truffles and 1 tablespoon blanched curly parsley leaves. Take out the chicken and its garnish, dilute the pan juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira. Boil down and add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE).

To serve, cover the chicken with the vegetables, coat with the sauce and garnish with slices of onion dipped in batter and fried.

Sautéed chicken Duroc. POULET SAUTÉ DUROC – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken chasseur.

Garnish the chicken with 8 small tomatoes peeled and simmered in butter, and with 150 g. (5 oz.) small new potatoes cooked in butter. Coat with the sauce, sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken à l'écosaise. POULET SAUTÉ À L'ÉCOSSAISE – Sauté the chicken in butter, browning it.

Dilute the pan juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sherry. Boil down and add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy. Boil for a few moments, and add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter.

Garnish the chicken with buttered French beans, and truffles which have been cut in thick strips and heated in sherry. Coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken fermière or à la paysanne. POULET SAUTÉ FERMIERE, À LA PAYSANNE – Sauté the chicken as above. Add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Vegetable fondue (see FONDUE). Finish cooking together.

Set the chicken and vegetables in an earthenware dish or casserole, add 2 tablespoons diced lean ham and simmer, covered, in the oven.

Dilute the cooking juices with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened veal gravy and sprinkle over the dish.

Sautéed chicken aux fines herbes I. POULET SAUTÉ AUX FINES HERBES. Sauté the chicken in butter à brun.

Dilute the pan juices with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) white wine, add a chopped shallot. Boil down and add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy. Boil for a few moments. Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon finely chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon, a squeeze of lemon juice, and 1 tablespoon fresh butter.

When ready to serve, pour this sauce over the chicken.

Sautéed chicken aux fines herbes II. POULET SAUTÉ AUX FINES HERBES – Sauté the chicken as above, and put on a dish. Dilute the cooking juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine. Add a chopped shallot and  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon finely chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon. Draw away from the heat and add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and a squeeze of lemon.

Sautéed chicken à la florentine. POULET SAUTÉ À LA FLORENTINE – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken with various wines. Set the chicken in a border of Risotto (see RICE) mixed with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped truffles. Coat with the sauce, which has been well boiled down.

Sautéed chicken à la forestière. POULET SAUTÉ À LA FORESTIÈRE – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken with mushrooms (see below). Replace the mushrooms by 150 g. (5 oz.) morels sautéed in butter, 150 g. (5 oz.) diced potatoes sautéed in butter and 100 g. (4 oz.) small blanched cardoons.

Sautéed chicken with hop shoots. POULET SAUTÉ AUX JETS DE HOUBLON – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. Dilute the pan juices with white wine, boil down and add thickened brown veal gravy. Garnish the chicken with 300 g. (11 oz.) hop shoots cooked in butter.

Sautéed chicken with hop shoots in cream I. POULET SAUTÉ AUX JETS DE HOUBLON À LA CRÈME – Prepare the chicken as for Sautéed chicken with cream, and garnish with hop shoots in cream.

Sautéed chicken with hop shoots in cream II. POULET SAUTÉ AUX JETS DE HOUBLON À LA CRÈME – Cook the chicken in butter and take it out of the pan. Put 1 tablespoon flour into the cooking butter and cook without allowing it to colour. Stir in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white stock or consommé. Boil down by one-third and add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) cream. Garnish as above.

Sautéed chicken à l'indienne I. POULET SAUTÉ À L'INDIENNE – Sauté the chicken in butter or oil à blanc. Add 1 large chopped onion and 1 tablespoon curry powder. As soon as the pieces of chicken are firm, sprinkle over them 1 tablespoon flour. Cook for a few moments, stirring, and pour in 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white stock. Add a bouquet garni and cook with the pan covered.

Set the chicken in a timbale and coat with the boiled-down sauce, to which lemon juice has been added. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Sautéed chicken à l'indienne II. POULET SAUTÉ À L'INDIENNE – Cut up the chicken into small pieces and put it into a casserole in which 1 large chopped onion, 100 g. (4 oz.) diced ham and 1 large grated eating apple have already been heated in butter (with oil or lard). Add a sprig of thyme, a bay leaf, a pinch of cardamom, a pinch of cinnamon, a pinch of mace and 2 crushed cloves of garlic. Sprinkle in 4 teaspoons curry powder and mix. Add 2 peeled and seeded tomatoes. Pour in 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) coconut milk and cook for 40 minutes. Add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) double cream and the juice of 1 lemon. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Each Indian cook has his own method of preparing curries of mutton, lamb, chicken, fish, etc. The basic principle, the curry seasoning, does not vary, but the recipes differ from each other in requiring different ingredients. As well as the traditional Indian-style rice – yellow (saffron) rice – boiled cabbage mixed with mashed potatoes and sprinkled with curry, thin pancakes made of fine wheaten flour, etc., are served.

In France, Sautéed chicken à l'indienne is often prepared by adding curry powder to a chicken sauté à blanc, its sauce bound with a chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Sautéed chicken à l'italienne I. POULET SAUTÉ À L'ITALIENNE – Sauté the chicken in a mixture of oil and butter à brun. Dilute the juices with 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) white wine; reduce and add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Sautéed chicken à l'italienne II. POULET SAUTÉ À L'ITALIENNE – Sauté the chicken in oil and butter. When half-cooked, add 1 tablespoon onion which has been partly cooked in butter, 1 chopped shallot, and 4 chopped mushrooms.

Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine; boil down and add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thickened brown veal stock and  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for a few moments and add 1 tablespoon lean chopped ham and 1 tablespoon parsley, tarragon and chervil. Coat the chicken with this sauce.

Sautéed chicken à la japonaise. POULET SAUTÉ À LA JAPONAISE – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When it is half-cooked add 300 g. (11 oz.) blanched and drained Japanese artichokes. Continue cooking until the chicken is ready, then finish off as for Sautéed chicken with artichokes.

Sautéed chicken à la livonienne. POULET SAUTÉ À LA LIVONIENNE – Sauté the chicken in butter à blanc. When it is three-quarters cooked add 250 g. (9 oz.) morels sautéed in butter. Dilute the pan juices and finish as for Sautéed chicken with cream. Garnish with the morels and coat with the sauce, to which 1 tablespoon blanched and chopped chives have been added. Scatter 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) bread-crumbs fried in butter over the morels.

Sautéed chicken à la lyonnaise. POULET SAUTÉ À LA LYONNAISE – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When it is half cooked add 2 large chopped onions which have been sautéed in butter. Finish cooking. Dilute the pan juices with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) vinegar. Boil down, and add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thickened brown veal gravy or Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE). Coat the chicken with the sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken à la Marengo. POULET SAUTÉ À LA MARENGO – Sauté the chicken in oil à brun. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, boil down and add  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy, 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) and a crushed clove of garlic. Boil for a few minutes and strain.

Garnish the chicken with 8 fried mushrooms; 4 small fried eggs (or just the yolks); 4 crayfish trussed and cooked in court-bouillon; 4 heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter; and 8 slices of truffles sautéed in butter. Coat with the sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken au matelote – See Sautéed chicken à la bourguignonne.

Sautéed chicken à la meunière. POULET SAUTÉ À LA MEUNIÈRE – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken in butter, adding chopped parsley, lemon juice and 3 or 4 tablespoons veal gravy or Rich brown sauce. (see SAUCE).

Sautéed chicken Mireille. POULET SAUTÉ MIREILLE – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine; boil down and stir in 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy and  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for a few moments.

Garnish the chicken with 8 endive hearts (gourilos) in cream and 8 small tomatoes, peeled, drained and cooked in butter. Coat the chicken with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken Monselet. POULET SAUTÉ MONSELET – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When it is three-quarters cooked, add 2 artichoke bottoms, blanched and cut in slices, and, when completely cooked, 2 medium-sized sliced truffles. Take out the chicken and its accompaniments, dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine and boil down. Add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy, and boil for a few moments. Garnish the chicken with the artichokes and truffles and coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken with morels and other mushrooms. POULET SAUTÉ AUX MORILLES – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken with mushrooms (see below), replacing the latter with 300 g. (11 oz.) morels (or an equivalent quantity of other mushrooms).

Sautéed chicken with mushrooms

Sautéed chicken with mushrooms. POULET SAUTÉ AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When three-quarters cooked add 250 g. (9 oz.) sliced mushrooms. Dilute the pan juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Madeira, boil down and add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy. Boil for a few moments. Garnish the chicken with the mushrooms and coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken niçoise. POULET SAUTÉ NIÇOISE – Sauté the chicken in oil à brun. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, add a crushed garlic clove, boil down and add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Garnish the chicken with 8 artichoke quarters cooked in butter, 4 braised baby marrows (zucchini), 125 g. (4 oz.) small new potatoes cooked in butter, and 12 stoned black olives. Coat with the sauce and sprinkle with chopped tarragon.

Sautéed chicken with oysters I. POULET SAUTÉ AUX HÛÎTRES – Sauté the chicken in butter à blanc. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine and the liquor from 12 poached oysters. Boil down and add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for a few moments. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and a squeeze of lemon juice. Strain.

Garnish with the drained oysters and coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken with oysters II. POULET SAUTÉ AUX HUITRES – Sauté the chicken in butter à blanc and when half-cooked add 1 tablespoon blanched chopped onion.

Take out the chicken; add to the pan juices 1 tablespoon flour, the liquor from 12 poached oysters and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) mushroom or white stock. Cook for 10 minutes. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cream and 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter. Strain and finish as above.

Sautéed chicken panetière. POULET SAUTÉ PANETIÈRE – Prepare as for sautéed chicken with cream. Place on a round of bread, trimmed, dried in the oven and spread with purée of foie gras.

Garnish with morels (or other mushrooms) in cream. Coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken with paprika. POULET SAUTÉ AU PAPRIKA – Season the chicken with paprika. Sauté in butter à blanc and finish as for Sautéed chicken with cream.

Sautéed chicken à la parisienne. POULET SAUTÉ À LA PARISIENNE – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken with white wine (see below). Put the chicken on a layer of Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES) brushed with egg and browned in the oven. Garnish with buttered asparagus tips. Coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken Parmentier. POULET SAUTÉ PARMENTIER – Sauté the chicken in butter. When two-thirds cooked, add 4 blanched potatoes, cut in large dice and half-cooked in butter.

Finish as for Sautéed chicken with white wine (see below). Garnish with the potatoes, coat with the sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken à la Périgord. POULET SAUTÉ À LA PÉRIGORD – See Sautéed chicken with truffles. The truffles may be cut to look like small olives.

Sautéed chicken petit-duc. POULET SAUTÉ PETIT-DUC – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. Dilute the pan juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira, boil down and add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for a few moments.

Garnish the chicken with morels and truffle slices sautéed in butter. Coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken à la piémontaise. POULET SAUTÉ À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken with white wine (see below). Put the chicken in a border of risotto mixed with diced white truffles, and garnish with slices of white truffle lightly heated in butter. Pour the sauce over it.

Sautéed chicken à la portugaise. POULET SAUTÉ À LA PORTUGAISE – Sauté the chicken in oil. When two-thirds cooked, add 1 tablespoon chopped onion. Take out the chicken, and put 4 peeled and piped tomatoes and a clove of crushed garlic in the pan. Season, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine and boil down by half. Add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy. Coat the chicken with the sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken à la provençale. POULET SAUTÉ À LA PROVENÇALE – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken à la portugaise.

Garnish the chicken with 20 stoned, blanched olives and 8 small mushrooms sautéed in oil. Coat with the sauce. Decorate with 8 anchovy fillets and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed chicken Rivoli. POULET SAUTÉ RIVOLI – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When three-quarters cooked add 4 sliced potatoes sautéed in butter, and when completely cooked, 2 chopped medium-sized truffles.

Remove the chicken and garnishes and dilute the pan juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sherry. Boil down and add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy. Pour the sauce over the chicken.

Sautéed chicken à la romaine. POULET SAUTÉ À LA ROMAINE – Sauté the chicken in oil, browning it. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Asti wine. Boil down and pour in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) tomato sauce and  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy.

Put the chicken on a layer of leaf spinach, simmered in butter and mixed with 2 diced anchovy fillets. Coat with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken Stanley. POULET SAUTÉ STANLEY – Sauté the chicken in butter à blanc. When it is half-cooked add 2 finely chopped onions. Remove the chicken and garnish with mushrooms cooked in butter.

Add to the onions and cooking juices 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) cream. Cook for 10 minutes and sieve. Reduce the onion purée by a quarter, season with a pinch of curry powder and cayenne, and add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Coat the chicken with sauce; put 8 slices of truffle on top.

Sautéed chicken with tarragon. POULET SAUTÉ À L'ESTRAGON – Prepared as for Sautéed chicken aux fines herbes I but the shallot, parsley and chervil are replaced by an equivalent quantity of chopped tarragon. Decorate the chicken with blanched tarragon leaves.

Sautéed chicken with truffles. POULET SAUTÉ AUX TRUFFES – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. When cooked, place 12 slices of raw truffle on it. Cover and cook for 5 minutes. Take out the chicken and truffles. Dilute the pan juices and finish as for Sautéed chicken with mushrooms.

Fresh or preserved truffles may be used. If the latter, add their boiled down juices to the sauce.

Sautéed chicken à la viennoise. POULET SAUTÉ À LA VIENNOISE – Proceed as for Sautéed chicken Archduke, but without the onion. Garnish with cooked, buttered cucumbers.

Sautéed chicken with various wines. POULET SAUTÉ AUX VINS DIVERS – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. Dilute the pan juices with wine, add thickened brown veal gravy, and finish in the ordinary way.

Note. These preparations are designated by the name of the wine used: Chablis, Graves, Pouilly, Frontignan, Sauternes, Madeira, Port, Sherry, Champagne, etc.

Sautéed chicken with red wine is always called à la bourguignonne.

Sautéed chicken with white wine. POULET SAUTÉ AU VIN BLANC – Sauté the chicken in butter à brun. Dilute the juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, boil down, and pour in  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal gravy. Boil for a few moments and finish with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Coat the chicken with the sauce.

Sautéed chicken à la zingara. POULET SAUTÉ À LA ZINGARA – Season the chicken with paprika, and sauté it in oil à brun. When it is cooked, add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) zingara garnish (q.v.).

Take out the chicken and its garnish. Dilute the cooking juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira, boil down and add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE), flavoured with tomato.

Garnish the chicken with zingara garnish arranged on 4 small slices of toast with a thin slice of ham tossed in butter added to each one. Coat with the sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley. The slices of ham may also be served in thin pastry tartlet shells.

Chicken in scallop shells – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Scallop shells of poultry.

Chicken soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE VOLAILLE – Using raw chicken. Add 5 stiffly whisked egg whites to 1 kg. (2½ lb.) Chicken mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Put in a buttered soufflé dish and cook gently in the oven for 35 to 40 minutes.

Using cooked chicken. Pound 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) cooked chicken meat adding 6 tablespoons (scant ½ cup) thick cold Béchalme sauce (see SAUCE). Season and rub through a sieve. Heat this purée, without allowing it to boil. Add 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) butter, 5 egg yolks and 6 stiffly whisked egg whites. Put in a buttered soufflé dish and cook gently in the oven.

Cream of chicken soup. CRÈME DE VOLAILLE – Soup made with chicken cooked in a veal or chicken stock, pounded to a purée and finished with velouté sauce and cream. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS.)

Chicken Souvarov. POULARDE SOUVAROV – Stuff the chicken with chopped foie gras and truffles, seasoned with salt and spices and a few drops of liqueur brandy.

Put the chicken in a covered pan with some butter and cook until three-quarters done. Transfer the chicken to a casserole and add 8 medium-sized truffles which have been seasoned and simmered in butter for 5 minutes.

Moisten the chicken with the cooking juices diluted with Madeira, boiled down and mixed with Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE) made with the truffle juices. Cover, and seal the lid with flour-and-water paste. Finish cooking in the oven for 20 to 25 minutes.

Spring chicken. POUSSIN – This term can be used to describe a newly hatched chicken, but the flesh of such a young bird is so soft and insipid that it is scarcely edible. In culinary terminology the word poussin usually means a young chicken which is sufficiently well formed for its flesh to have all the necessary firmness and flavour.

The name is also given to a very small chicken, of which the best type is Hamburg chicken. These have delicate flesh and can be prepared in any of the ways given for small roasting chickens.

Spring chicken (cold). POUSSIN FROID – Prepared in any of the ways given for cold chicken or pigeon dishes. The chicken is stuffed with forcemeat or with foie gras and diced truffles. For some dishes the chickens are boned.

Spring chicken en compote. POUSSIN EN COMPOTE – Stuffed with a fine forcemeat (made with the chicken liver).

Prepared as for Compote of pigeon (see PIGEON).

Spring chicken (fried). POUSSIN FRIT – Cut the chicken into pieces of equal size and marinate in oil, lemon juice and salt and pepper. Roll the pieces in flour, coat with egg and breadcrumbs and fry in deep fat. Garnish with fried parsley and lemon quarters.

Spring chicken grilled à la diable. POUSSIN GRILLÉ À LA DIABLE – Prepared as for Grilled chicken à la diable.

Spring chicken in marinade (fried). POUSSIN EN MARINADE (FRIT) – Cut the chicken in quarters and take out the small bones. Marinate in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper, and chopped herbs. Dip the pieces in a light batter and fry in deep fat.

Drain, and garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

This dish is often incorrectly served under the name of fritot of chicken; but fritot denotes previously cooked substances.

Spring chicken with peas. POUSSIN AUX PETITS POIS – Prepared as for Pigeon with peas (see PIGEON).

Spring chicken à la piémontaise. POUSSIN À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Fill the chicken with fine forcemeat, the chopped liver and a little onion lightly cooked in butter. Truss as for boiling. Cook in butter, browning it all over. Drain, and remove the trussing strings. Surround the chicken with a risotto. Dilute the juices with white wine, thickened brown veal gravy and a little tomato purée. Boil down together and pour over the chicken.

Spring chicken à la polonaise. POUSSIN À LA POLONAISE – Stuff a chicken with à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) mixed with soaked bread, butter and chopped parsley.

Cook in a casserole. Finish as for Chicken à la polonaise.

Roasted spring chicken. POUSSIN RÔTI – Put a bouquet garni, 1 tablespoon butter and the chopped liver, well seasoned with salt and pepper and grated nutmeg, inside the chicken. Truss, bard with bacon fat and put on the spit. Cook on a good heat, basting frequently.

Arrange on a long dish and garnish with cress. Hand the juices separately.

Spring chicken à la sicilienne (Prosper Salles' recipe). POUSSIN À LA SICILIENNE – Cook some lasagne (q.v.) in salt water. Drain and reheat for a few moments in hot butter. Bind with a purée of pistachio nuts. Season well and allow to cool. Stuff the chicken with this mixture and truss as for spit roasting. Cook at a good heat, basting frequently. When three-quarters cooked sprinkle with freshly grated breadcrumbs and let it colour. Hand the juices separately.

Spring chicken à la tartare. POUSSIN À LA TARTARE – Split the chicken down the back, season, brush over with melted butter and sprinkle with breadcrumbs. Grill on a gentle heat. Serve with Tartare sauce (see SAUCE).

Spring chicken à la viennoise. POUSSIN À LA VIENNOISE – Divide the chicken into quarters. Season, sprinkle with flour, and coat with egg and breadcrumbs. Brown them well on both sides in clarified butter (or lard), or fry in deep fat. Garnish with fried parsley and lemon quarters.

Chicken Stanley. POULARDE STANLEY – Poach the chicken in a white stock to which 4 large chopped onions have been added. Put the chicken on a dish and surround with 20 large mushrooms and 8 tartlets filled with chopped truffles.

Finish as for Sautéed chicken Stanley.

Stuffed chicken à l'ariégeoise. POULET FARCI À L'ARIÉ-GEIOISE – Stuff the chicken with forcemeat made as follows: soak 250 g. (9 oz.) crustless bread in milk, squeeze and put in a basin. Add 100 g. (4 oz.) chopped raw ham, the chopped chicken liver and gizzard, 2 finely chopped cloves of garlic and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion cooked lightly in fat. Bind with an egg and the blood of the chicken. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley.

Truss the chicken as for boiling. Cook in a pot-au-feu with a piece of beef and a piece of chined salt pork (pork back). Take the trussing strings off the cooked chicken and garnish with balls of stuffed cabbage, potatoes sliced and cooked in the pot-au-feu broth, and the boned and sliced pork.

Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) seasoned with garlic.

The pot-au-feu broth is served as a soup, with rice or vermicelli.

Stuffed chicken à la mode de Sorges (Périgord cookery). POULET FARCI À LA MODE DE SORGES – Stuff the chicken with forcemeat made of chopped chicken liver, stale breadcrumbs, chopped bacon, chopped parsley, chopped spring onions, chopped shallot and chopped garlic, all well seasoned with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg, and bound with the blood of the chicken and egg yolks.

Brown the chicken all over in goose fat. Put it in a marmite and cover with boiling water. Season with salt and pepper. Bring to the boil and skim. Add 3 carrots, 2 turnips, the white parts of 3 leeks, 1 celery heart, 1 large onion stuck with 1 clove, and beet stalks tied in a bunch. Cook very slowly for 1 hour. Drain the chicken, remove the trussing strings, and garnish with the sliced carrots and turnips.

Serve with Sorges sauce, which is a highly seasoned vinaigrette sauce with chopped parsley, spring onions and shallots added, bound with 2 egg yolks cooked for 3 minutes in boiling water. Finish with the whites of these eggs, recooked in the chicken broth and cut in dice.

Suprêmes of chicken. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE – The breast and wings of poultry, removed when raw. Also known as côtelettes or filets, and served as small entrées.

When suprêmes of poulardes or fat hens are used, they are divided into 2 or 3 slices, flattened, trimmed into oval shapes, and cooked like chicken côtelettes.

Suprêmes of chicken ambassade. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE AMBASSADRE – Sauté in butter. Garnish with chicken livers sautéed in butter, cocks' combs and kidneys, and truffles cut into the shape of olives. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira and thickened brown veal gravy. Pour over the dish.

Place on top of these suprêmes the filets mignons (pieces which lie against the breast bone), studded with truffles.

Suprêmes of chicken Camérani. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE CAMÉRANI – Coat the suprêmes with a mixture of egg and breadcrumbs and chopped truffles. Sauté in butter.

Place on a bed of noodles. Make a sauce with the pan juices, mixed with Madeira and thickened brown veal gravy, to which has been added 1 tablespoon julienne (q.v.) of celery and truffles, cooked in butter until tender.

Suprêmes of chicken Carême. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE CARÊME – Slit open the suprêmes and fill with a thick mushroom purée, to which a fine julienne (q.v.) of cocks' combs and truffles has been added. Sauté in butter.

Place on croûtons of bread fried in butter. Garnish with Chicken quenelles (see QUENELLES), truffles cut into olive shapes, and mushrooms. For sauce use thickened brown veal gravy with tomato and butter. Put the filets mignons, studded with pickled tongue, on top of the suprêmes.

Suprêmes of chicken à la florentine. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE À LA FLORENTINE – Poach in veal or chicken stock until three-quarters cooked. Coat with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) to which chicken essence has been added. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and brown quickly.

Suprêmes of chicken Gabrielle. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE GABRIELLE – Remove the suprêmes, without detaching the filets mignons. Cover with a thin layer of mirepoix (q.v.) cooked in butter until tender. Coat with egg and breadcrumbs. Sauté in butter.

Suprêmes of chicken à l'impériale. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE À L'IMPÉRIALE – Stud the suprêmes with semi-circles of truffles and pickled tongue. Cook in white stock.

Fill cooked barquettes with a purée of truffles à la crème and put in the suprêmes. Coat lightly with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE). Put the filets mignons, studded with truffles, on top of the suprêmes.

Suprêmes of chicken marquise. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE MARQUISE – Sauté in butter. Garnish with bouchées of puff pastry filled with a salpicon of cocks' combs, kidneys and truffles bound with cream. Dilute the pan juices with cream, to which has been added butter and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) truffles. Coat the suprêmes with this sauce and put filets mignons, poached in white stock, on top.

Suprêmes of chicken Montpensier. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE MONTPENSIER – Coat the suprêmes with egg and breadcrumbs and sauté them in butter. Garnish with asparagus tips in butter and put two slices of truffle on each suprême. Dot with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). For sauce use thickened brown veal gravy.

Suprêmes of chicken à la Périgueux. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE À LA PÉRIGUEUX – Sauté in butter and put on croûtons fried in butter. Garnish with sliced truffles and coat with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), flavoured with Madeira.

Suprêmes of chicken Pojarski. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE POJARSKI – Chop the flesh of the suprêmes. Add 50 g. (2 oz., 1 cup) breadcrumbs, soaked in milk and squeezed, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) butter, and 1 or 2 tablespoons fresh cream. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Reshape the suprêmes, flour lightly and sauté in butter.

Garnish with a green vegetable cooked in butter, and dot with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Suprêmes of chicken princesse. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE PRINCESSE – Cook in veal or chicken stock. Put the suprêmes on croûtons fried in butter, garnish with asparagus tips in butter and coat with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Place two slices of truffles on each suprême. Put the filets mignons, studded with truffles, on top.

Suprêmes of chicken Richelieu. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE RICHELIEU – Coat with egg and breadcrumbs and sauté in butter. Dot with Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and put 4 slices of truffle on each suprême.

Suprême of chicken Rossini. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE ROSSINI – Sauté in butter, and put on croûtons fried in butter. Garnish with slices of foie gras sautéed in butter, and sliced truffles. Coat with Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Suprêmes of chicken, with various vegetables. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE AUX LÉGUMES DIVERS – Season the suprêmes and sauté in butter.

Garnish with any of the following vegetables: diced aubergines fried in butter, peeled mushrooms, braised endives, cucumber cut in chunks and simmered in butter, French beans in butter, braised lettuce, macédoine of vegetables in butter, peas in butter or à la française, asparagus tips in butter or cream, vegetable purées.

For sauce use the cooking juices, mixed with white wine and thickened brown veal gravy.

Suprêmes of chicken Verdi. SUPRÊMES DE VOLAILLE VERDI – Sauté the suprêmes in butter. Put them in a pastry shell filled with diced macaroni bound with purée of foie gras. Put two slices of truffle on top of each suprême and coat lightly with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), finished with Marsala.

Add the filets mignons, cut in slices, coated in egg and breadcrumbs and sautéed in butter.

Chicken with tarragon I. POULARDE À L'ESTRAGON – Poach a chicken in white stock with a bunch of tarragon. Decorate with blanched tarragon leaves. Pour over the chicken several tablespoons of the cooking liquor, strained and thickened with arrowroot, to which chopped tarragon has been added.

Chicken with tarragon

Chicken with tarragon II. POULARDE À L'ESTRAGON – Cook the chicken in butter in a covered dish in the oven. To serve pour over it the cooking juices, diluted with white wine and thickened veal gravy, to which a handful of chopped tarragon has been added.

Chicken timbale. See TIMBALE, CROÛTES.

Chicken à la Toscane. POULARDE À LA TOSCANE – Stuff the chicken with 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) cooked spaghetti, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) of purée of foie gras, 2 diced truffles and 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) grated Parmesan, seasoned and bound with 4 tablespoons (½ cup) thickened brown veal gravy. Cook the chicken, and prepare the sauce as for Chicken à la Derby.

Surround the chicken with 8 pastry cases filled with ham, tongue and truffles, bound with Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE), flavoured with tomato, and with 8 slices of foie gras, tossed in butter.

Pour the pan juices over the chicken.

Chicken Toulouse. POULARDE TOULOUSE – Poach the chicken in white stock. Garnish with Toulouse garnish (see GARNISH) and pour Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) over it.

Chicken with truffles. POULARDE AUX TRUFFES – Cook the chicken, covered, with butter in the oven. When cooked add 250 g. (9 oz.) sliced raw truffles. Cover, and keep on low heat for a few moments.

Dilute the cooking juices with Madeira and Rich brown sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken with truffles à la périgourdine (Plumerie's recipe). POULARDE TRUFFÉE À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – 'Draw and singe a chicken without damaging the skin. Wash and peel 1 kg. (2 lb.) truffles and cut into pieces the size of pigeons' eggs. Keep the scraps. Simmer the truffles with salt, pepper, spices, half a bay leaf, a small sprig of thyme and some grated nutmeg, in 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) chicken fat and 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) melted, strained fat bacon, for 15 minutes. Stuff the chicken with the mixture, cover with the outside skin of the truffles and leave for 3 or 4 days. On the day it is served, remove the truffle skins and toss in butter with an onion, a carrot and a sprig of parsley. Put the chicken on a skewer, bard with fresh pork fat, cover with the vegetables and truffles, and wrap in oiled paper. Cook on a spit for 1½ hours, sprinkling with water. 5 minutes before serving, unwrap the chicken and let it brown. Remove from the spit, discard the bards and serve with Périgueux sauce' (see SAUCE).

Chicken turban (ring). TURBAN DE VOLAILLE – Line a buttered savarin (ring) mould with thin slices of raw chicken, overlapping the edges. Cover with a thin layer of Chicken mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Fill the mould with a salpicon (q.v.) of cooked chicken, truffles and mushrooms, bound with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Cover with another thin layer of the forcemeat, folding the edges of the sliced chicken over it. Poach the 'turban' in the oven in a bain-marie for 40 minutes.

Leave for a few moments after cooking before unmoulding. Fill the middle with a garnish and serve with Suprême or Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Chicken à la viennoise. POULET À LA VIENNOISE – This method is for small spring chickens, but can be applied to small tender roasting chickens (poulets de grain). Joint the chicken. Season the pieces with salt and pepper, flour them, dip in egg beaten with oil, and cover with fresh breadcrumbs. Cook in clarified butter or lard. Serve on a napkin, garnished with fried parsley and quarters of lemon.

This chicken may also be fried in deep fat.

Chicken vol-au-vent – See VOL-AU-VENT

Chicken wings – See PINIONS.

CHICK-PEA. POIS CHICHE · Plant (of the family Legumi- nosae) originating in the Mediterranean area, one species of which is cultivated in France.

In south-western France chick-peas are cooked en estouffade (q.v.). They are used in Spain a great deal, being an essential ingredient of many soups. Chick-peas are also very popular in North Africa, where they are part of the garnish for the classic couscous.

Chick-peas Catalan style. POIS CHICHES À LA CATALANE – Soak the chick-peas until they become quite soft. Boil in water with a vegetable garnish (for example, white dried beans), a bouquet garni (q.v.) and a piece of bacon. Season with salt and pepper. Add a few tablespoons oil to form a layer of fat on the surface. Add Spanish sausages called chorizos. Simmer very gently for about 4 hours.

Drain the chick-peas, remove the vegetable garnish and the bouquet garni and put the chick-peas into a saucepan. Add a few tablespoons tomato purée, the chorizos and the bacon cut in uniform pieces. Add a pinch of garlic and a few tablespoons of the liquid left over from boiling the chick-peas. Simmer for 1 hour.

CHICORY (U.S. Endive). ENDIVE – Magdebourg chicory is known in France and U.S.A. as endive and in Belgium, where it is grown in large quantities, as chicorée de Bruxelles, witloof or barbe-de-bouc (goat's beard).

Chicory roots, grown in the dark, are white and delicate. Chicory comes into season in October and is available throughout the winter. It is eaten raw in salads, or cooked in various ways.

Method of cooking. Trim and wash the chicory, leaving it in water for as short a time as possible. Place in a saucepan with 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, a pinch of salt, juice of ½ lemon and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water, for 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) chicory. Cover and bring to the boil. Simmer steadily for 45 minutes.

Another method. Trim and wash the chicory and place in a saucepan with 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) butter, a pinch of salt and a few drops of lemon juice. Cover and stew for 45 minutes. Chicory cooked in this way can be used for the recipes given below. Chicory should never be parboiled before stewing.

Chicory à la béchamel. ENDIVES À LA BÉCHAMEL – Cook the chicory as above. Cover with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), and the cooking stock, boiled down with butter.

Chicory with brown or noisette butter. ENDIVES AU BEURRE NOIR – Cook the chicory as in the first recipe. Drain. Arrange on a dish. Pour on lemon juice and, just before serving, hot Brown or Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Chicory with butter. ENDIVES AU BEURRE – Cook as in first recipe. Pour on the stock with a piece of butter added.

Chicory chiffonnade. CHIFFONNADE D'ENDIVES – Remove the outer leaves. Wash, dry and shred them finely. Cook in butter, in a covered pan, with a pinch of salt and sugar.

Chicory chiffonnade with cream. CHIFFONNADE D'ENDIVES À LA CRÈME – Cook as in the first recipe. Five minutes before serving, moisten with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) boiling cream. Boil fast for a few seconds. Serve with the cooking stock and fresh butter.

Chicory à la flamande. ENDIVES À LA FLAMANDE – another name for Chicory with butter.

Chicory fritots. ENDIVES EN FRITOT – Cook the chicory as in the first recipe. Drain and dry. Quarter the shoots and steep in a marinade of oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Before serving, dip them in light batter and deep-fry. Serve garnished.

Chicory au gratin. ENDIVES AU GRATIN – Cook the chicory in butter. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour on melted butter. Brown in the oven.

Chicory in gravy. ENDIVES AU JUS – Cook as in the first recipe. Arrange on a dish and pour on a few tablespoons concentrated brown veal stock and the cooking stock of the chicory.

Chicory (Nicolas)

Chicory à la grecque (hors-d'œuvre). ENDIVES À LA GRECQUE – Trim small chicory shoots. Wash and dry in a cloth. Plunge them into a stock prepared as for Artichokes à la grecque (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE). Finish as in that recipe.

Chicory à la meunière. ENDIVES À LA MEUNIÈRE – Name used for Chicory with brown butter.

Chicory à la milanaise. ENDIVES À LA MILANAISE – Cook the chicory as in the first recipe. Arrange on an ovenproof dish. Proceed as for Asparagus à la milanaise (see ASPARAGUS).

Chicory à la Mornay. ENDIVES À LA MORNAY – Cook the chicory as in the first recipe. Arrange in an ovenproof dish and cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) and the concentrated stock of the chicory. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour on melted butter and brown in a very hot oven.

Chicory à la polonaise. ENDIVES À LA POLONAISE – Cook the chicory as in the first recipe. Arrange in a dish and proceed as for Asparagus à la polonaise (see ASPARAGUS).

Purée of chicory. PURÉE D'ENDIVES – Cook the chicory as in the first recipe. Rub through a sieve. Heat the purée and add a little butter or cream.

This purée can be thickened with a few tablespoons of Béchamel sauce or thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), or a third of its weight of mashed potatoes. Concentrated brown veal stock may be added.

Chicory salad. SALADE D'ENDIVES – Wash and dry the chicory. Remove faded leaves. Separate the remaining leaves and halve or shred them. Season with oil, lemon juice or vinegar, salt, and pepper.

Chicory, with the leaves whole or shredded, can also be dressed with Mayonnaise (see SAUCE, Cold sauces). Cooked chicory can also be made into a salad.

Chicory soufflé. SOUFFLÉ D'ENDIVE – Using cooked chicory rubbed through a fine sieve, proceed as for Endive soufflé (see ENDIVE).

CHICORY, COFFEE. CHICORÉE À CAFÉ – The wild chicory root has been used as a substitute for coffee since 1769. It was first used in Sicily, then in Germany and has given rise to an important industry. The roots, cut up into cossettes, are dried and powdered, more or less finely. The different types are known commercially as gros-grains, from selected cossettes (roots); demi-grains, from small cossettes; chicory courantes; and chicory in powder form.

Chicory has more food value than coffee, although this is not important as the amount consumed is small. It produces a dark infusion with laxative properties, and prevents caffeine poisoning which occurs when too much real coffee is drunk. Coffee addicts, justifiably, do not allow the addition of any chicory in coffee.

CHIFFONNADE – Term used in cooking for all plants, herbal or otherwise, cut into fine strips or ribbons. It is specially used for a mixture of sorrel and lettuce cut into julienne strips and cooked in butter.

Most of the chiffonnades are used as a garnish for soups.

Lettuce chiffonnade cooked in butter. CHIFFONNADE DE LAITUE AU BEURRE – Slice the leaves of a lettuce finely, leaving aside the coarser leaves. Put the sliced lettuce in a pan with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter for every 250 g. (8 oz.) lettuce. Season and cook gently until the liquor has evaporated.

Lettuce chiffonnade with cream. CHIFFONNADE DE LAITUE À LA CRÈME – Prepared in the same way as Lettuce chiffonnade cooked in butter. When the lettuce has softened, moisten with a few tablespoons fresh cream and boil down until the liquor has evaporated.

This chiffonnade can also be moistened with cream sauce.

Mixed chiffonnade (garnish for soups). CHIFFONNADE MELANGÉE – Prepared in the same way as Lettuce chiffonnade, with a mixture of equal parts of sorrel and lettuce leaves.

Sorrel chiffonnade. CHIFFONNADE D'OSEILLE – Prepared with sorrel leaves in the same way as Lettuce chiffonnade. It is used specially for Potage santé (see SOUPS AND BROTHS).

CHIMNEY HOOK. CRÉMAILLÈRE – A toothed pot-hook used for suspending cauldrons and cooking pots in chimneys.

The symbolic expression pendre la crémaillère (to hang up the chimney hook) means the first meal in a new home.

CHINA – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.

CHINCHARD – See SAUREL.

CHINE. CHAÎNE – The bony part adhering to the fillet of a loin of veal, mutton, lamb or pork, or the bony part of a rib or sirloin of beef.

Chinese artichoke

CHINESE ARTICHOKE. CROSNE DE JAPON – Plant originating in China and Japan, first cultivated in France for its edible tubers, at Crosnes (Seine-et-Oise). It is also called knotroot, chorogi and Japanese artichoke.

This vegetable, delicious when fresh, is white. Tubers which have dried out and been revived by soaking, are sometimes sold as fresh, and can be recognised by a brown discolouration.

The Chinese artichoke is rich in carbohydrates, mostly sugars. It has a pleasant, though rather insipid, taste and is easily digested.

Put the tubers in a strong linen cloth with a handful of sea-salt, and shake them well. Wash them and remove any skin that is left. Blanch in salted water. Simmer in butter without allowing them to brown.

Tubers prepared in this way can be served as they are as a vegetable, or used to garnish a roast.

They can also be prepared à la crème, aux fines herbes, au jus and in all the ways given for Jerusalem artichokes (q.v.).

Chinese cabbage or Pe-tsai

CHINESE CABBAGE or PE-TSAI. CHOU DE CHINE – This fairly common cabbage has an oval heart with very tightly closed leaves.

All recipes given for green cabbage can be used. It can also be used in raw salad, or in a marinade, like red cabbage.

CHINOIS (Fruit) – French name for small green or yellow Chinese oranges, which are preserved in brandy.

Two types of chinois
(Larousse)

CHINOIS (Utensil) – Conical strainer with a fine mesh.

CHIPOLATA – Garnish of braised chestnuts, small glazed onions, diced breast of pork, chipolata sausages, and sometimes glazed carrots (see GARNISHES). Applies also to cuts of butcher's meat and to chicken.

Chipolata was originally an Italian ragoût with an onion foundation. The word is also applied to small sausages enclosed in sheep's intestines.

CHIQUETER – To indent the margins of a vol-au-vent case, the rim of a tart, or gâteau, with a small knife.

Chives

CHIVES. CIBOULETTE, CIVETTE – Chives are used as a seasoning, mainly in salads.

CHLORIDE. CHLORE – Metalloid that enters the system in the form of sodium chloride. It is found in most of the body tissues and body liquids, particularly the blood.

In certain illnesses a salt-reduced (salt-free) diet is prescribed. This requires not only the drastic cutting down of condiments but also the elimination of foods rich in chloride.

CHOCOLATE. CHOCOLAT – The dried, roasted and polished 'nibs' or almonds of the cacao bean are crushed, and the resulting liquor, if of good quality, is about 50 per cent cocoa fat. When the liquor is partly defatted, it is cooled and solidifies into a hard block, known as bitter chocolate. This is used for baking in U.S.A. The cooking chocolate used

The manufacture of chocolate (l'Encyclopédie).
From left to right: Sifting the almonds of the cacao beans; Roasting; Grating the almonds; Crushing the chocolate

most in England and France is a mixture of the chocolate liquor with some of the fat removed and sugar added. In England this is known as pure chocolate and in the U.S.A. as bitter-sweet chocolate. Milk chocolate has powdered or condensed milk added to the sweetened chocolate and is flavoured with vanilla, almond, cinnamon, etc. Chocolate used in confectionery to coat sweets has added cocoa fat. Cocoa is made from powdered chocolate which contains only 18 per cent fat.

Chocolate is a concentrated food, but should not be abused. The cocoa from which it is made contains theobromine – a nitrogenous substance similar to caffeine, which has a stimulating effect on the nervous system, and makes chocolate an excellent tonic for intellectual fatigue – but also calcium oxalate, which is harmful to the obese and those with rheumatic or liver complaints.

Chocolate is rich in calcium, phosphates and Vitamin D – which helps the bones to absorb calcium – and is therefore a valuable food for children, athletes, heavy workers and intellectuals, but in moderation. It is not recommended for sufferers from constipation, rheumatism, nor for diabetics, who have their own special chocolate. It is better eaten between meals.

Chocolate was brought to Europe by the Spaniards, who had discovered it in Mexico in 1519. Its use spread through Europe soon after.

Brillat-Savarin divulges the secret of increasing the flavour of chocolate which Mme. d'Arrestrel, Mother Superior of the Convent of the Visitation at Belley, revealed to him: 'When you want to taste good chocolate, make it the night before in a faience coffee pot, and leave it. The chocolate becomes concentrated during the night and this gives it a much better consistency.'

Preparation of chocolate (beverage). CHOCOLAT – Use 40 g. (1½ oz.) good sweet chocolate for a breakfast cup of liquid. Break the chocolate into pieces, add a little water and hot milk and heat gently. Cover the pan, let the chocolate soften, remove from the heat and whip into a smooth paste. Add 2 or 3 tablespoons boiling water or milk to dilute the paste, then the rest of the liquid, stirring all the time. The chocolate or cocoa must never be allowed to boil.

CHOEELS (Belgian cookery) – A ragoût made of tripe and pancreas.

Cleaned, with the fat removed, pancreas resembles meat, but is flat and elongated. Beef pancreas, which is usually used for choesels, weighs about 500 g. (18 oz.).

The pancreas is often supplemented by other parts of the animal, which add their qualities to the flavour of the dish. Ox-tail, kidneys, quenelles of calves' sweetbreads, and breast and feet of lamb feature in choesels.

The seasoning usually consists of onions, thyme, bay, cloves, nutmeg, pepper and salt. The sauce is combined with a glass of Madeira, or strong Belgian beer (lambic).

Choesels à la bruxelloise (Paul Bouillard's recipe) – Brown an ox tail, cut into pieces, together with two calf (U.S. veal) sweetbreads in 100 g. (4 oz., ¼ cup) smoking-hot, clarified beef fat. Reduce the temperature and cook gently for 45 minutes. Add 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) breast of veal, cut into pieces, and 1 large sliced onion. Cook for a further 30 minutes, stirring. Add 1 beef kidney, cut into large pieces. When the kidney has stiffened, moisten the stew with 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) lambic (Belgian beer). Add a bouquet garni (q.v.). Season with salt and cayenne.

Cook gently for 30 minutes. Add to the choesels a bottle of lambic and 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) of the cooking liquor from some mushrooms (see COURT-BOUILLON, White court-bouillon for mushrooms).

CHOLESTEROL. CHOLESTÉROL – Fatty substance rendered assimilable by the liver. The diets of sufferers from atheroma, arteriosclerosis, gout and liver complaints should contain only moderate amounts of cholesterol.

Below is the proportion of cholesterol contained in some common foods:

Brains	20.00 per 1000
Butter	4.00 " "
Calf's heart	1.50 " "
Calf's kidney	3.50 " "
Calf's lights	4.50 " "
Calf's liver	2.50 " "
Calf's sweetbread	2.80 " "
Egg yolk	20.00 " "
Other foods contain less than 1 per 1000.

Two substances found in plants (phytosterol and ergosterol) bear a strong resemblance to cholesterol. Therefore those on cholesterol-reduced diets must avoid vegetables that are particularly rich in these two substances, such as the pulses (peas, chick peas, haricot beans, broad beans, lentils) and mushrooms.

Cholesterol has a dual origin. It comes either from cholesterol-rich foods (egg yolk, offal, milk, cream, butter) or as the result of a synthesis effected mainly by the liver. Cholesterol can therefore continue to form itself in the body even when the intake of cholesterol-rich foods is reduced.

Cholesterol has a wide variety of functions. It forms part of the cellular membranes; it enters into the composition of tissue fats; it is present in the plasma to ensure the transference of acids by reserve fats to the liver where they are burned up.

Its oxidation in the liver produces bile acids which act as an emulsifying agent in the intestine.

The synthesis of the corticosteroid hormones seems to follow a parallel course to that of cholesterol.

While it is a delicate matter to wrestle with the excessive formation of cholesterol internally, it is very easy to put a stop to excessive intake of cholesterol simply by eliminating certain foods from the diet.

One should avoid becoming overweight, especially in the early fifties, and it is wiser to limit the percentage of calories derived from fats to 30 per cent.

All foods containing animal fats should be avoided: offal (calves' and sheep's livers, kidneys, sweetbreads), egg yolks, butter, margarine, oysters, chocolate, milk, cream cheese (apart from small quantities of Gruyère, Port-Salut, Dutch, and skimmed milk cheeses), charcuterie, pork, sauces, stews, fried foods. Small quantities of the following fats may be eaten: corn oil, soya oil, walnut oil, saffron oil, sunflower oil, grapeseed oil, and also virgin olive oil from first pressing.

CHOPE

Allowed. Grilled or roasted red meats (in moderation), fish.

Recommended. Vegetables (French beans, endive, spinach, celery, leeks, beetroot, carrots, tomatoes, aubergines, all types of green salad vegetables, asparagus, sorrel, onions, artichokes, melon, cucumber, radishes, potatoes), all kinds of fruit (but not walnuts, hazelnuts, chestnuts, and almonds).

CHOPE – Goblet of glass or earthenware, containing about  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (12 fl. oz.), used for beer.

CHOPINE – Old measure for wine, equal to  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (18 fl. oz.).

CHOPPING. HACHAGE – French term for chopping food is hachage or hachement.

Hachage can also mean food which has been chopped, as in onion hachage, though the more common word is hachis.

Meat is chopped on a chopping block, usually made of cross-grained planks set upright in a wooden frame. The chopping blocks or tables must not be washed with water but scraped with a special scraper, thoroughly dried with sawdust, and then rubbed clean.

'CHOPS'. BABINES – Slang name for lips of some animals, such as dogs or monkeys. The expression 'to lick one's chops' indicates satisfaction at a good dish.

CHOPSTICKS. BAGUETTES – The 'fork' of the Far East, indispensable to an Asian meal, made in ivory, ebony, or plastic. The Chinese call them 'lively fellows'. They are not difficult to manipulate and can be adapted to the requirements of various dishes. They are used, for example, to pick up pieces of food, also to push rice into the mouth whenever it is permitted to raise the bowl to chin level.

CHORON – Chef de cuisine of the Voisin restaurant.

CHOU (Pastry) – Bun made with chou pastry, which is pushed through a forcing (pastry) bag onto a metal baking tray. The chou, which is round, is either served as it is, or stuffed with cream or some other preparation.

Chou pastry or cream puff pastry. PÂTE À CHOU – Ordinary chou pastry is made as follows:

Ingredients. 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) water, 375 g. (13 oz., generous  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) butter, 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 1 tablespoon salt, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar, 16 eggs; 1 tablespoon orange blossom water or 1 teaspoon orange extract.

Method. Boil the water, butter, salt and sugar together in a deep flat-bottomed pan. When the mixture boils, remove the pan from the heat and pour in the sifted flour. Mix well. Dry out the mixture over a low heat, working it with a wooden spoon until it comes away from the sides of the pan and oils a little. Add the eggs, off the heat, two at a time, stirring vigorously, and then the flavouring.

Various cakes such as éclairs, Jacob's ladders, Saint-Honoré, profiteroles, are made with this pastry, as are soufflé fritters.

Cooking the choux or cream puffs. DRESSAGE ET CUISSON DES CHOUX – Put the mixture through a forcing-bag onto a buttered baking tray, allowing a space between each. Make them the size of a walnut or smaller if they are to be used as profiteroles. Brush with beaten egg. Cook in the oven at 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6) for 15 minutes. When cold, these buns are filled with French pastry cream (see CREAMS) or with any other filling, according to the recipe.

Choux or cream puffs à la cévenole. CHOUX À LA CÉVENOLE – These are made like Choux or cream puffs à la crème (see below). When cold, fill with a purée of chestnuts mixed with whipped cream and flavoured with kirsch.

Squeezing chou paste onto baking tray
(Larousse)

Choux or cream puffs à la Chantilly. CHOUX À LA CHANTILLY – Prepare and cook as for Choux or cream puffs à la crème (see below). Leave them to cool, split and fill with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with vanilla.

Chocolat choux or cream puffs. CHOUX AU CHOCOLAT – Prepared in the same way as Coffee choux or cream puffs (see below).

Coffee choux or cream puffs. CHOUX AU CAFÉ – Fill the cooked puffs with French pastry cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with coffee essence. Glaze with sugar flavoured with coffee.

Choux or cream puffs à la crème. CHOUX À LA CRÈME – When the puffs are cold, slit them on one side and fill with French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Close the puffs and sprinkle with icing sugar.

Choux or cream puffs à la frangipane. CHOUX À LA FRANGIPANE – The same as Choux or cream puffs à la crème, with Frangipane cream (see CREAMS).

Glazed choux or cream puffs. CHOUX GLACÉS – Ordinary puffs filled with cream or any other filling, and glazed with sugar cooked to the crack degree (see SUGAR, Sugar boiling).

Choux or cream puffs Montmorency. CHOUX MONTMORENCY – Made like Choux or cream puffs à la crème. Fill the puffs, when cold, with a mixture of cherries and French pastry cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with cherry brandy.

Choux or cream puffs à la normande – CHOUX À LA NORMANDE – Choux filled with a stiff apple purée mixed with a third of its weight of French pastry cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with calvados.

Plate of cream puffs

CHRISTMAS. NÔEL – In the fourth century Pope Julius I fixed 25 December as the date on which the birth of Christ was to be celebrated.

In France, the main Christmas meal is served on the night of 24 to 25 December, after the celebration of Midnight Mass. This meal is called the reveillon.

The menu for the reveillon and for Christmas Day itself – essentially a family celebration – must include dishes which have a ritual significance. Even if the reveillon menu includes expensive delicacies such as foie gras, truffles, game of various kinds, rare fish and shellfish, it must also include, in deference to tradition, a black or white pudding, sometimes both, and a goose or turkey with chestnuts, often enriched with truffles.

In Britain, Christmas Day is celebrated with even more gastronomic splendour than in France.

'For many of the islanders,' wrote Alfred Suzanne in his book la Cuisine anglaise et americaine, 'this anniversary is memorable (apart from all religious significance) because it evokes a great slaughter of turkeys, geese and all kinds of game, a wholesale massacre of fat oxen, pigs and sheep. They envisage garlands of black puddings, sausages and saveloys . . . mountains of plum-puddings and ovens-full of mince-pies. . . .

'On that day no-one in England may go hungry. . . . This is a family gathering and on every table the same menu is prepared. A joint of beef, a turkey or goose, which is usually the pièce de résistance, accompanied by a ham, sausages, and game; then follow the inevitable plum-pudding and the famous mince pies.'

Chub (J. Boyer)

CHUB. CHEVAINE, CHEVESNE – Freshwater fish with a long spindly body, the dorsal fin set below the ventral opening.

The common chub, called in English, coheven, nab, botling, and in French, meunier, cabot, chabot, chavanne, testard, rotisson, caboda, etc. sometimes reaches a size of 50 cm. (20 inches).

In U.S.A. chubs, known as the longjaw, blackfin and bloater, are found in the Great Lakes. Lake Superior is the source of most of the blackfin, which is the only chub used extensively as fresh fish.

All the recipes given for the fêra (q.v.) (a fish belonging to the salmon family) are applicable to chub. This fish is also used in the matelote (q.v.).

CHUTNEY – Condiment of Indian origin which is made commercially. It is a purée made with seeded raisins, garlic, shallots, pimentos, apple, mustard, brown sugar and vinegar.

Bring 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) white vinegar to the boil. Add 1½ kg. (3½ lb.) cooking apples, peeled and sliced. Cook them and add 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) brown sugar, 25 g. (1 oz., ½ cup) finely chopped chillis, 200 g. (7 oz., 1½ cups) seeded raisins, 500 g. (18 oz., 3 cups) finely chopped, preserved lemon peel, 500 g. (18 oz., 2 cups) diced preserved ginger, 2 crushed garlic cloves. Season with 4 teaspoons salt, 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) mustard grains, and 15 g. (½ oz., 2 table-spoons) powdered ginger. If possible, add 500 g. (18 oz.) preserved mangoes. Cook for 8 minutes. Put into warm glass jars while hot, and seal.

Ordinary bottling jars with rubber rings and screw caps are best.

CICADA. CIGALE – Insect common to southern countries. According to Aristotle, the Greeks were very fond of cicadas and their larvae.

CIDER. CIDRE – Fermented drink with an apple base. It was already being made in Normandy in the thirteenth century and is mentioned in the Chronicles of Charlemagne. Special apples are used, sweet, acid, and tart, which have given a reputation to the cider of the districts where they grow. There are early and late species. A good cider is made with ⅓ sweet apples and ⅔ sour and acid apples. Early ripening apples are put in the press as soon as they are ready; the rest should be stored in attics, and not in heaps at the foot of trees.

The apples are crushed and put in a press. The marc (what is left of the fruit after the juice has been pressed out) is sprinkled with water and pressed a second time.

Fermentation is started in the same way as with wine. Cider is subject to the same diseases as wine, and the same remedies can be applied to it.

There are different commercial brands of cider: sweet cider and bottled cider, sparkling or not, according to whether it has been bottled before or after complete fermentation in cask. It is a refreshing drink and less alcoholic than wine.

Apple press for cider

CIERP DE LUCHON – See CHEESE.

CIGAR, CIGARETTE – Tobacco rounds off a meal in a pleasant way for those who like it. Smoking before or even during the meal is a heresy and destroys the sense of taste. Professional tasters have to give up smoking altogether.

CINNAMON. CANNELLE – Bark of the cinnamon tree. The name is also given to other kinds of bark which resemble cinnamon in smell or flavour. The only medicinal species is the Ceylon cinnamon which is found in the shops in the form of thin sticks, about 1 cm. (½ inch) in diameter and up to 1 m. (1 yard) in length, consisting of rolled pieces of bark, each about ¼ mm. (⅛ inch) thick. It is yellow in colour, easily breakable, with a spicy aroma and a very fine, sweet, hot taste.

The Chinese cinnamon (Cassia lignea) is found in shorter, thicker sticks, formed of one layer of rolled bark, yellowish brown in colour, with a few brown or black spots, easily breakable but with a less pleasant aroma and taste.

Cinnamon contains a volatile oil: Powdered cinnamon is often made from inferior quality bark and adulterated. Cinnamon sticks are sometimes dried (with the essential oils extracted) before being sold, but such fraudulent practice is rare.

Cinnamon trees

CINNAMONE – Old name for a spice which is probably cinnamon (cannelle).

CISELER – French term for superficial incisions on the back of a fish to hasten its cooking. Also applied to the slicing of any kind of leafy herb which is to be cut up into julienne (q.v.) strips or into a chiffonnade (q.v.).

CITRIC ACID, CITRIQUE – Organic acid found in a great many fruits (lemons, oranges, gooseberries, raspberries, etc.) and some other plants. It is extracted from lemon juice, or it is prepared commercially by fermentation of glucose. It appears in large fragile crystals, with an agreeable acid flavour, and is soluble in water. It keeps well when dry, but solutions of citric acid are rapidly invaded by moulds.

Citric acid is used for making lemonade and also orange and lemon syrups, etc.

Citric acid syrup – See SYRUP.

Citron

CITRON, CÉDRAT – Species of lemon with a very thick coruscated skin, cultivated on the Mediterranean coast.

It is highly perfumed and, unlike the ordinary lemon or orange, is seldom eaten in a natural state. Because of its thick skin it is chiefly preserved, and is much used in cake-making and confectionery.

In Corsica, where it is widely cultivated, a liqueur called cédration is made from the fruit.

CITRONELLA, CITRONELLE – Common name for Collinsonia canadensis, a coarse plant of the mint family. It exudes a penetrating scent, rather like lemon. The leaves are used for seasoning. Digestive liqueurs are made from its flowers.

CITRUS AURANTIUM (Seville orange), BIGARADIER, BIGRADE – Species of bitter orange used in confectionery and in distilling certain liqueurs and drinks. It is used in cookery for spicing various sauces for game, in particular for waterfowl, and also for making bitter orange marmalade.

The green leaves are principally used as an infusion (see TISANE).

The flowers, or orange blossoms, are used in confectionery, pharmaceuticals and perfumery (distilled orange blossom water, essence of neroli).

CITRUS FRUIT, AGRUMES – Collective noun for oranges, lemons, tangerines, grapefruit and other cultivated Rutaceae.

CITRUS MEDICA – See AIGRE DE CÈDRE.

CIVET – Word mainly used for ragoûts of furred game, which are moistened with red wine, garnished with small onions, lardoons and mushrooms, and combined, when cooked, with the blood of the animal in question. This liaison with blood is essential to the dish.

The name of this preparation comes from the word cive (green onion) because the dish was flavoured with these onions.

It can be made with any furred game, and also with feathered game or fowl. There are even civets de viandes in some districts, and spiny lobster civets in Languedoc.

Civet of hare – See HARE.

Civet of spiny lobster – See SPINY LOBSTER, Spiny lobster stew.

CLAFOUTI – Fruit pastry or thick fruit pancake from the Limousin, usually made with black cherries.

Ingredients. 125 g. (4½ oz., generous cup) flour, 2 eggs, 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) powdered sugar, half of which is kept to sprinkle over the fruit, 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) boiled milk, a pinch of salt, and 400 g. (14 oz.) cherries. Fill the pastry with the stoned cherries, and bake in a buttered flan case in the oven.

CLAIRE – Name of the marine enclosures in the Marennes region where the oysters are left to go green. (See OYSTER, Green Marennes oysters).

CLAIRET – Formerly, clairet was a spiced and flavoured wine.

It was well known at the time of Charlemagne, and was called vin piment, or simply piment. In this form it was drunk as an apéritif, made in the same way that vermouth and other mixed wines are made now.

This wine was not the same as vin clairet, which was a natural, raw wine, neither red nor white, a 'grey wine' as it would be called today. It was of vin clairet that poets sang in the eighteenth century.

Le Grand d'Aussy says of the other clairet: 'Something had been lacking at a feast if piment had not been served'; this being the name given to the wine in the thirteenth century. Clairret or piment was made in the religious houses. He also says the pouillis (statements of ecclesiastical profits in a province), prove that in the twelfth and fourteenth centuries the priors of the deanery of Châteaufort, on the Feast of the Assumption, were each in turn required to provide piment for the chauvines (nuns or postulants). This aperitif was made only with vin clairret. It had several different shades: grey, straw coloured, 'partridge-eye', etc.

Current legislation of appellations d'origine authorises the use of the word clairret in Bordeaux and Burgundy; Bordeaux clairret, Bordeaux supérieur clairret, Bourgogne clairret.

The expression clairret designates a pale red, light-bodied wine, not quite a rosé. It should be drunk young and slightly chilled.

CLAIRETTE – Name given to a sparkling white wine made in Drôme, where it is called Clairette de Die. Also the name of a white grape grown in the Mediterranean regions.

CLARET – Name given in England to red Bordeaux wines.

CLAM, PALOURDE – Name for many edible bivalve molluscs which live in slimy sand and are found at low tide.

Some of these molluscs are cultivated in special beds along the beaches of Auray, Croisic and in the Bay of Bourgneuf. Auray and Roscoff are the principal French centres of the clam trade.

In many of the places along the Atlantic coast the name palourde is also applied to other molluscs. Tapé à stries croisées, tapé virginal, and tapé à stries fines, are called palourdou in La Rochelle. In Provence these molluscs are called clovisse.

They are mainly eaten raw in France but the North Americans, who are very fond of this shellfish, prepare it in many ways.

All recipes given for clovisse, oysters, mussels and other shellfish can be applied to them.

Clam chowder – See SOUP.

CLARIFICATION – Clarifying of food, usually liquids. The process varies for different substances.

Clarification of bouillon. See BOUILLON.

Clarification of butter. CLARIFICATION DU BEURRE – Heat the butter on a very gentle heat; the butter melts and appears as clear as olive oil while a white deposit forms on the bottom of the pan. Strain the clear butter into another receptacle.

Clarification of liquids and fruit juices. CLARIFICATION DES LIQUIDES ET DES SUCS DE FRUITS – Most liquids can be clarified by filtering; fruit juices are clarified by light fermentation.

Clarification of sugar – See SUGAR.

CLARY, ORVALE – Common name of the Salvia sclarea (herb of the sage family) formerly used in England for flavouring certain pastries. When infused in wine it has a muscat taste. It is one of the herbs used in making Italian vermouth.

CLAVARIA or CLUB-TOP MUSHROOM, BARBE-DE-CHÈVRE, CLAVAIRE – Capless, spindle-shaped mushroom which grows into branches of various colours, white, pink or purple. It is edible but tough, indigestible and rather insipid.

It can be prepared like other mushrooms: sautéed in oil or butter; à la provençale; à la crème, etc.

CLAYÈRE – Bed where oysters are fattened.

CLAYON – Small mat of rush or straw on which certain foods are placed. The same name is given to small wire trays.

CLEMENTINE, CLÉMENTINE – Fruit of the clementine tree, a hybrid of unknown origin discovered at the beginning of the twentieth century. It seems to be closely related to the mandarin tree.

The clementine is a small, round, orange-coloured fruit, flattened at both ends. The flesh is sweet, juicy and moderately acid. The true clementine is seedless. Recently the Montreal clementine, an earlier and more prolific variety containing about twenty seeds, has been developed.

The clementine is cultivated in North Africa and Spain, and is marketed between the middle of October and the end of January. Its development has been detrimental to that of the mandarin (tangerine), as clementines have a more delicate flavour and are often seedless.

It is usually eaten as a fresh fruit.

CLIMAT – Certain vineyards, especially in the Côte de Nuits district, are so called because each has a specific climate.

CLISSE – Small tray or mat, made of wicker or rush, used to drain cheeses. Also a wicker covering round a bottle.

CLOCHE – Silver or plated cover for keeping dishes warm; also a glass cover under which cheese is kept, or a glass utensil used as a cover during cooking (see MUSHROOMS, Mushrooms sous cloche).

CLOSE (Jean-Joseph) – Famous pastry-cook born in Normandy, said to have invented the pâté de foie gras aux truffes in 1782, when he was in service with the maréchal de Contades, governor of the province of Alsace at the time. However, the pâté and the terrines de foie gras were known in the south-west of France before the time of Close. It is possible that Close popularised the dish in Alsace, and perhaps perfected it.

CLOS VOUGEOT – Famous vineyard of the Côte de Nuits (situated in the commune of Vougeot) which has the right to a special appellation contrôlée (see BURGUNDY). Apart from its wines, Clos Vougeot is famous for the fact that the château in the middle of the vineyards is the headquarters of the Confrérie du tastevin (see CONFRÉRIES VINEUSES).

The grape of the Clos Vougeot wines is the Pinot; the Gamay serves the remainder of the commune. The geological composition of the soil and subsoil are determinant factors in the particular flavour of the wine produced. Oenologists and gourmets attach great importance to which vineyard a wine comes from, and rightly so. In fact it is the vine, the microclimate, the year and the soil that determine the personality of a wine.

CLOTH FILTER, BLANCHET – White woollen cloth filter for straining syrup and thick liquids.

CLOUD, LOUCHER – To become cloudy. This term is used of a liquid which is no longer clear.

CLOUTER (To stud) – An operation consisting of the insertion of small pieces of truffles, cooked ham, and scarlet tongue into meat, fowl, game.

Fish are studded with truffles, fillets of anchovy and gherkins.

CLOVE, GIROFLE (CLOU DE) – Flowers of the clove tree picked in bud and dried in the sun. The tree probably comes originally from China, but was first cultivated in the Moluccas by the Dutch, who had the monopoly. It was introduced into Réunion and Mauritius by Governor Poivre, and later into the West Indies, Cayenne and Zanzibar.

Cloves have a four-sided stem and a calyx with four sepals.

CLOVISSE

They have an aromatic scent and a hot spicy flavour, and are used for seasoning in cookery. They are sometimes sold mixed with cloves which have already been used in the manufacture of dyes or liqueurs. The clove matrix or fruits of the clove tree are also sold as cloves.

The clove is an excellent condiment and a powerful antiseptic.

CLOVISSE – Bivalve mollusc which is like the palourde; it is eaten fresh like oysters or cooked like mussels, and is served with or without lemon.

CLUPEIDAE. CLUPES – Family of seawater and freshwater fish which include shad, herring, sardine and anchovy.

CNICAUT – Edible wild cardoon, with a taste of cabbage.

COAGULATE. FIGER – To thicken or congeal, when applied to fats.

COAL FISH. CHARBONNIER – A kind of cod fished in the North Sea. Prepared like cod (see COD).

COASTER. GALERIE (BORDURE) DE PLAT – Ring of silver or silver-plate made to fit the inner diameter of round dishes. This ornamental circle is set in the well of the dish to hold in position the garnishes arranged round the main course.

COAT. ENROBER – To dip food either in batter or in a sauce which masks it entirely, such as chaud-froid sauce.

COCA – Peruvian shrub, the leaves of which are chewed by the Indians. Considered an economical food, its properties are due to the effect produced by its alkaloid, cocaine, which is as stimulating as tea or coffee.

It is used as an infusion, as a wine, as an elixir, and also used as an ingredient of certain cakes.

COCHINEAL. COCHENILLE – Insect used to prepare a red dye called carmine. The best-known cochineal is that of nopal (cochineal cactus).

The female insect is used, collected after she is fertilised and before the complete development of the eggs. Gray cochineals are the most sought after, but there are also red and black varieties.

They are put in the oven on metal sheets for a few moments, or plunged into boiling water, and dried.

Carmine is used for colouring in cooking and cake-mixing.

COCHLEARIA. COCHLÉARIA – Type of cruciferous plant, of which one species, the wild horseradish (Cochlearia de Bretagne) grows on the sea coast, particularly in Brittany, in England and in Ireland. It is known as scurvy-grass in the United States.

COCIDO (Spanish cookery) – Popular Spanish soup, also known under the name of Olla podrida (q.v.).

COCK-A-LEEKIE or COCKY-LEEKY (Scottish cookery) – Soup made of cock and leeks. (See SOUP.)

COCKLE. BUCARDE – European marine bivalve mollusc of the genus Cardium, found mainly at the mouth of rivers. The type found on the Atlantic coast of France, called bucarde sourdon, is edible. It is also known in France under the names of coque, sourdon and poor man's oyster.

Cockles are eaten raw and can also be prepared like mussels (q.v.).

COCK'S COMB. CRÊTE DE COQ – Fleshy excrescence, often voluminous, found on the heads of cocks and other gallinaceans. It is used chiefly as a garnish for entrées.

Method of cleaning and cooking cocks' combs. Prick the combs lightly with a needle and put them under the cold tap, pressing them with the fingers to dispel the blood.

Cover with cold water and cook until the water reaches a temperature of 40° or 45°C. (110°F.), when the skin of the combs begins to detach itself. Drain the combs and rub them one by one in a cloth sprinkled with fine salt.

Remove the outer skin; put the combs in cold water, and when they are white plunge them into a boiling White court-bouillon (see COURT-BOUILLON). Cook for 35 minutes.

Attelets of cocks' combs. ATTELETS DE CRÊTES DE COQ – Cook the cocks' combs, keeping them as white as possible and rather firm. Drain and wipe them, and thread on skewers, the frilled edge uppermost.

Cocks' combs en attereaux. CRÊTES DE COQ EN ATTEREAUX – Cook the cocks' combs in the manner described above and leave to cool. Drain, wipe, and marinate them in oil and lemon juice. Add chopped parsley.

Drain, and impale them three at a time on silver skewers. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter.

Cocks' combs en attereaux à la Villeroi. CRÊTES DE COQ EN ATTEREAUX À LA VILLEROI – Cook the cocks' combs in a White court-bouillon (see COURT-BOUILLON), drain and dry them, and cover with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE). Leave to cool on a grid. Cover the combs with egg, sprinkle with breadcrumbs, and fry in clarified butter.

Cocks' combs barquettes and tartlets. BARQUETTES ET TARTELETTES DE CRÊTES DE COQ – These are made in the same way as barquettes and tartlets filled with various salpicon preparations. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

Salpicon of cocks' combs à blanc. SALTICON DE CRÊTES DE COQ À BLANC – Cook the cocks' combs in the manner described above, and dice them. Heat for a few moments in wine or liqueur. Add a few tablespoons Velouté sauce or Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

This salpicon is used as a filling for boucheés, barquettes, tartlets, or other similar preparations.

Salpicon of cocks' combs à brun. SALTICON DE CRÊTES DE COQ À BRUN – Prepared in the same way as Salpicon of cocks' combs à blanc, but replace the white sauce with a concentrated, thickened brown stock, to which Madeira has been added before boiling down.

Stuffed cocks' combs. CRÊTES DE COQ FARCIES – Choose very large combs and cook them in White court-bouillon (see COURT-BOUILLON), keeping them rather firm. Leave to cool, drain and wipe them, and slit them down the centre of the fattest part. Stuff each with a small ball of forcemeat. Cover the combs in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE). Dip in egg, sprinkle with breadcrumbs, and fry in clarified butter.

COCKTAIL – Drink of (usually) alcoholic liquor mixed with other liquid and aromatic ingredients, stirred or shaken with ice and served ice-cold in special glasses. The origin of the word 'cocktail' is uncertain. Probably Anglo-American, it might refer to the shimmering which results from mixing coloured liqueurs, or, according to some etymologists, because the primitive cocktail of the Manhattan pioneers consisted of cocks' tails, dipped in a concoction of pimentos, with which they tickled their throats to incite them to drink. The French origin of the word coquetel is, however, told by a number of authors, who maintain that it was in Bordeaux, towards the end of the eighteenth century, that this kind of drink was invented.

The cocktail party is a phenomenon of the twentieth century, and is used for entertaining small or large gatherings. On such an occasion one or more kinds of cocktails are served as well as 'straight' liquor, usually Scotch, Irish, Bourbon or rye whisky, poured over ice cubes ('on the rocks') or with crushed ice ('in a mist'), and served in short glasses; or mixed with water or carbonated water and served in long 'highball' glasses. Accompanying these drinks are hors-d'œuvre that can be eaten while holding the glass. These range from the simple to the elaborate.

There are a great many cocktails which have been in vogue from time to time, either because of their exotic nature or because of their fantastic names, but certain mixtures have stood the test of time and continue to win the approval of connoisseurs. These include the following:

Dry Manhattan (Bronx) – 3 parts whisky (Scotch, rye, or Bourbon), 1 part dry French vermouth. Garnish: twist of lemon peel.

Gin and Dubonnet (Dubonnet cocktail) – 2 parts Dubonnet and 1 part gin, combined with cracked ice, shaken hard in a cocktail shaker and strained into cocktail glasses.

Manhattan – 3 parts whisky (Scotch, rye or Bourbon), 1 part sweet Italian vermouth and a dash of Angostura bitters. Garnish (optional): a maraschino cherry.

Martini (gin and vermouth) – 3 parts gin, 1 part dry French vermouth, garnished with an olive, a twist of lemon peel or a pearl onion (in which case the drink is called a Gibson). Proportions may vary; some people prefer a straight Martini which means less gin and more vermouth. A sweet Martini would contain 5 parts gin and 1 part sweet Italian vermouth, and is garnished with a twist of orange peel.

Old-fashioned – Whisky (Scotch, rye, or Bourbon), Angostura bitters or cherry juice, sugar. Garnish: cherries, orange slices, lemon slices or pineapple wedges. A small lump of sugar moistened with the Angostura bitters or cherry juice is placed in an 'old fashioned' glass. Ice cubes are added and  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) whisky poured over them. One or more of the garnishes are added or, if preferred, a piece of lemon peel is twisted over the drink. A 'muddler' (stirring stick) is placed in each glass.

Pink gin – Made by putting Angostura bitters in a glass and agitating the glass so that the bitters coat the inside. The bitters are then poured away and gin added until the drink is pale pink.

Rum Daiquiri – 1 part lime juice, 1 part sugar syrup, 4 parts Bacardi rum. Blend syrup and lime juice. Add rum and finely crushed ice. Shake hard and strain into chilled glasses.

Whisky sour – 4 parts whisky (Scotch, rye, or Bourbon), 1 part orange juice, 1 part lemon juice, sweetening to taste. Garnish: maraschino cherry, orange peel or lemon peel.

The following is a selection of various types of cocktail, classified for easy reference:

Classic cocktails – Adam I.C.D.  $\frac{1}{4}$  tin grapefruit,  $\frac{1}{2}$  bitter Cinzano,  $\frac{1}{4}$  dry Cinzano,  $\frac{1}{4}$  gin.

Canasta.  $\frac{1}{3}$  Cinzano bianco,  $\frac{1}{3}$  gin,  $\frac{1}{3}$  maraschino.

Champagne cocktail. 1 glass Champagne, 1 dash Angostura bitters, twist of lemon peel, 1 sugar lump.

Champagne flip. 1 glass Champagne, 1 beaten egg yolk, twist of lemon peel. Sprinkle with grated nutmeg.

Cherry blossom.  $\frac{1}{2}$  Cognac,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cherry brandy, 1 dash Curaçao, 1 dash grenadine, 1 dash lemon juice.

Cinzano cobbler.  $\frac{1}{2}$  Cinzano rosso,  $\frac{1}{4}$  Curaçao,  $\frac{1}{4}$  kirsch, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 slice orange, diced fresh fruit.

Cuba libre. 1 glass rum, 1 glass Coca-Cola.

Curnonsky.  $\frac{2}{3}$  Cognac,  $\frac{1}{3}$  Cointreau, 1 tablespoon orange juice.

Daiquiri.  $\frac{2}{3}$  rum,  $\frac{1}{3}$  lemon juice, 1 tablespoon grenadine.

Dubonnet fizz. 1 glass Dubonnet, juice of  $\frac{1}{2}$  orange. Top up with Champagne.

Evening delight. 1 glass rye whiskey, 1 dash Curaçao, 1 dash apricot brandy.

Gin fizz. 1 glass gin, juice of 1 lemon, 1 tablespoon sugar, soda water.

Half and half.  $\frac{1}{2}$  pale ale,  $\frac{1}{2}$  stout.

Maca.  $\frac{1}{2}$  gin,  $\frac{1}{2}$  sweet Martini,  $\frac{1}{2}$  Noilly Prat, 2 dashes cassis, 1 slice orange.

Manhattan.  $\frac{2}{3}$  Scotch whisky,  $\frac{1}{3}$  Noilly Prat, 2 dashes Angostura bitters, 2 dashes Cointreau, 1 twist of lemon, 1 cherry. Dry.  $\frac{1}{2}$  white vermouth,  $\frac{2}{3}$  gin, 1 olive.

Mr. Callaghan.  $\frac{2}{3}$  dry Cinzano,  $\frac{1}{3}$  apricot brandy,  $\frac{2}{3}$  Angostura bitters.

Negroni.  $\frac{1}{2}$  gin,  $\frac{1}{2}$  Campari,  $\frac{1}{2}$  Cinzano rosso, twist of lemon peel.

Planter's.  $\frac{2}{3}$  rum,  $\frac{1}{6}$  lemon juice,  $\frac{1}{6}$  orange juice.

Porto flip. 1 glass port, 1 egg yolk, 1 tablespoon sugar. Sprinkle with grated nutmeg.

Rose.  $\frac{5}{10}$  gin,  $\frac{3}{10}$  Noilly Prat,  $\frac{2}{10}$  cherry Rocher, 1 cherry.

Sherry cobbler. 1 glass sherry, 2 dashes Curaçao, 3 dashes orange juice, 1 slice orange, 1 slice lemon.

Side car.  $\frac{1}{4}$  lemon juice,  $\frac{1}{2}$  Cognac,  $\frac{1}{4}$  white Curaçao.

Sputnik.  $\frac{2}{3}$  vodka,  $\frac{1}{3}$  dry Cinzano, 1 cocktail onion.

Tom Collins. 1 glass gin, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, soda-water.

Coffee-based cocktails – Roman holiday (for 4 people). 100 g. (4 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) very finely ground coffee, 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) water, 2 to 5 teaspoons icing sugar, according to taste, 3 to 4 ice cubes per glass.

Make the coffee in a bain-marie. Crush the ice cubes and fill the glasses three-quarters full with them. Sprinkle with the sugar. Pour the boiling coffee over. Romans top this drink with a generous swirl of sweetened Chantilly cream flavoured with cinnamon.

Bourbon coffee. Black coffee, ice, Bourbon whiskey. Fill the glasses with ice and pour a liqueur glass of Bourbon whiskey in each. Top up with black coffee. If you like sugar or cream, or both, add these and stir. If the coffee is pre-chilled less ice is required.

Milk-based cocktails – Tango. 1 cup milk, 2 ice cubes, 2 tablespoons fruit syrup, (grenadine, cassis, raspberry, strawberry, pineapple or orange). Shake vigorously. The cocktail must be frothy.

Brésilien. Evaporated milk diluted with  $\frac{1}{2}$  water, 2 teaspoons soluble coffee,  $\frac{1}{4}$  teaspoon cinnamon, sugar to taste, ice cubes.

Prepare as for Négrillonne (see below), the chocolate being replaced by coffee.

Négrillonne. Evaporated milk diluted with  $\frac{1}{2}$  water, 1 tablespoon chocolate powder,  $\frac{1}{4}$  teaspoon vanilla or cinnamon, sugar to taste, ice cubes.

Blend the chocolate, vanilla and sugar. Add the milk diluted with the water and pour into the mixer or shaker. Shake until frothy. Serve with ice.

Tea-based cocktails – Casbah. This Algerian drink is an excellent thirst quencher. Drunk hot, even very hot, during the hottest season, it is delightfully refreshing.

1 tablespoon green tea, 1 tablespoon mint tea, 100 to 150 g. (4 to 5 oz., 1 cup) loaf sugar,  $\frac{3}{4}$  litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints) water.

Mix the green and mint tea together and leave them to infuse for some time. Crush the sugar and add gradually to the tea, until it all dissolves. The infusion must be very strong and sweet, almost syrup-like in consistency. Serve very hot with a fresh leaf of mint in each glass.

This beverage can be entirely prepared from powdered mint, in which case honey is substituted for sugar.

Tea punch (for 4 people). 2 teaspoons tea, rind of  $\frac{1}{2}$  lemon, water, 3 tablespoon powdered milk, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum, ice cubes.

Make the tea, but add the lemon rind before pouring in the boiling water. Infuse for quarter of an hour. Add the sugar. Leave the tea to get quite cold; it can be placed in the refrigerator. To serve, place a large cube of sugar in each glass, pour in the rum and, lastly, the cold tea.

This cocktail is often drunk through a straw stuck through a slice of lemon.

Vitamin-based cocktails – The following cocktails have been specially devised by the dietician Gayelord Hauser.

Cocabacrem. 1 glass milk, 1 tablespoon yeast, 1 tablespoon honey, 1 tablespoon powdered milk, 1 sliced banana.

Cocabana. 1 glass pineapple juice, 1 tablespoon milk, 1 tablespoon honey, 1 mashed banana.

Cocabricot. 1 large glass apricot juice,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup skimmed milk, 1 tablespoon honey.

Cocktomate. 1 glass tomato juice, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley.

Complete cocktail. 1 glass pineapple juice, 1 tablespoon crushed walnuts, 1 tablespoon yeast, 1 tablespoon honey, 10 wild strawberries.

Maraicher.  $\frac{1}{3}$  celery juice,  $\frac{1}{3}$  carrot juice,  $\frac{1}{3}$  apple juice.

Milk shake. 1 glass orange juice, 2 tablespoons milk, 1 tablespoon honey.

COCOA (Beans). CACAO – Seeds contained in a pod which is the fruit of the cacao tree. The pod is gathered when ripe, and split. The beans, covered with fleshy pulp, are fermented; a process which destroys the germ, and enables them to be shelled. They are then dried in silos or in the open air. The highest quality cocoa comes from Venezuela, and Guatemala; it has a thick, ochre-coloured shell and a purple-blue bean. Ecuador cocoa beans are bigger, with a brown shell and a brown, almost black, bean. Brazil varieties of cocoa, including the Maragnan, are flatter in shape, with a purple-blue bean. Guiana cocoa beans are small, with a grey shell and brown bean.

Different characteristics make it possible to distinguish the cocoa of Jamaica, Martinique, Guadeloupe, etc. The beans should have a clean smell and should not have any wormholes, grit, or other foreign matter.

Columbus was, according to legend, the first European to see cocoa in use, but the specimens he took back to Spain were not considered of any value. Cortés found it widely grown and used in Mexico in 1519. The Aztecs grew it for many generations, and their Emperor Montezuma, and his court, are reputed to have consumed fifty large jars a day. There was no sugar at that time, and the drink was flavoured with vanilla and drunk cold.

In Europe, the Spaniards imitated the Aztecs' method of preparing 'chocolate', flavouring it with chillies and other hot spices and making it into a soup-like concoction.

Chocolate became a fashionable drink in France. The first record of its use in England was at Oxford in 1650. Seven years later a Frenchman opened a cocoa house in Bishopsgate Street, London. Under Charles II the duty payable on chocolate in its finished state was 8 shillings per gallon. Later, someone thought of adding sugar to chocolate. Pepys, in his diary, after his first taste of 'jucalette' described it as 'very good'.

Cocoa pods

Chocolate houses were fashionable in the eighteenth century, each having a literary, political or gambling clientele. White's, the notorious gaming-house in St James's Street, began as a chocolate house.

Chocolate was first prepared by hand. Dr Joseph Fry of Bristol, having bought the patent rights from Walter Churchman, who had been making chocolate since 1728, was the first to manufacture it on a big scale in England, introducing a steam engine for grinding the cocoa beans in 1795. Dr James Baker founded the first chocolate factory in America in 1780. Both businesses still exist.

All this was still cocoa, or drinking chocolate. It is not definitely known when chocolate was first sold for eating; probably not until Victoria's reign. Cadbury's price list, as late as 1842, shows only one kind of eating chocolate.

Cocoa powder. POUDRE DE CACAO SOLUBLE - Cocoa with reduced fat content treated with potassium (of which it must not contain more than 3.5 g. per 100 g.). It is soluble.

Cocoa contains various alkaloids, the most important of which are theobromine and caffeine. It also contains about 17 per cent nitrogenous matter, 25.5 per cent fats and 38 per cent carbohydrates, all of which have important food value and a stimulating action. It is mainly taken in the form of chocolate.

Preparation of cocoa - To prepare an excellent breakfast beverage, cocoa can be used instead of slab chocolate. Boiling water and milk is poured on cocoa powder and mixed with sugar according to taste. A smooth paste can be made by mixing cocoa powder with sweetened condensed milk and then adding boiling water.

Roasted cocoa. CACAO TORRÉFIÉ - Cocoa beans have a very light smell and a bitter taste. Roasting, as in the case of coffee, is necessary to release the aroma. After roasting, the beans are pulverised and presented in various forms.

Cocoa shells. COQUES DE CACAO - The membranous shells of husked cocoa beans can be used to prepare a pleasant beverage, resembling chocolate, which possesses fortifying properties owing to the vitamin content. Allow 1 tablespoon cocoa shells per cup.

Coconut

COCONUT. NOIX DE COCO - Fruit of the coconut tree, belonging to the palm tree family. The sap is used to make fermented drinks called palm tree wines.

Gathered before the fruit is ripe, the coconut contains a kind of milk or cream. When ripe, the nut has a hollow centre and adheres to the shell. It is used mainly for cake-making and confectionery. Dried, and with the fibrous outer skin removed, coconut is called copra, and is used for making an industrial oil for soap manufacture.

Purified and deodorised, coconut oil, which has a firm consistency at ordinary temperatures, is called coconut butter. There are a number of commercial products under this name. It is fatty, almost without water content, odourless, tasteless, and very digestible. It is used in certain diets when butter cannot be assimilated, and especially in vegetarian cookery.

Coconut milk. LAIT DE COCO - Used to moisten curry sauces. Mix 400 g. (14 oz., 4 cups) finely grated coconut with 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) warm milk. Strain through muslin.

COCO-PLUM. ICAQUE - Fruit of the tropical coco-plum tree. It is eaten fresh or preserved.

COCOSE - Butter made from coconut.

COCOTTE - Utensil in which certain foods are cooked, especially meat, fowl and game.

Cocottes are made in earthenware, fireproof porcelain or glass, tinned copper, nickel, aluminium, stainless steel, cast iron or silver. Dishes cooked in these utensils, in which they are usually served, are described as en cocotte or en casserole.

Cocottes

COD. CABILLAUD, CABLIAUD – Large fish of the genus Gadus, found in North Atlantic waters. It has an elongated body with soft grey scales, and yellow and brown spots on its back and flanks, which are white like its belly. A cod can weigh as much as 36 kg. (80 lb.). In France fresh cod is called cabillaud and salt cod is called morue. The flesh is white and flaky.

Its roe, smoked, is excellent.

Cod

Fresh cod is prepared in many different ways. In addition to the recipes given below, this fish, whole or in steaks or fillets, can be prepared in any way suitable for brill (q.v.), turbot (q.v.), haddock (q.v.) and any other large fish.

The following recipes are particularly suitable for cod: Bercy, bonne femme, normande, portugaise, provençale.

Cod à l'anglaise. CABILLAUD À L'ANGLAISE – Cut the cod into slices 3 cm. (1¼ inches) thick, taken from the middle of the fish for preference. Season with salt and pepper and dredge in flour. Dip in beaten egg mixed with oil, cover with white breadcrumbs, and cook in clarified butter until both sides are golden. Serve topped with half-melted Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Boiled cod (hot) with various sauces. CABILLAUD BOUILLI (CHAUD) – Poach the cod whole, or in steaks, in Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON). Put the fish into the liquid when it is cold, bring to the boil then reduce the heat and leave to poach without allowing it to boil further.

Drain the fish and garnish with fresh parsley and boiled potatoes. Serve with one of the sauces recommended for boiled fish: Anchovy, Butter, Caper, Shrimp, Fines herbes, Hollandaise, Lobster, Ravigote, etc. (see SAUCE, White sauces).

Boiled cod (cold) with various sauces. CABILLAUD BOUILLI (FROID) – Cook the fish as described in the preceding recipe, but only until it is two-thirds done, so that the cooking process can be completed as it cools in the court-bouillon. Drain when it is cold, dry in a cloth, and garnish with fresh parsley or with lettuce hearts and quartered hard-boiled eggs. Serve with one of the sauces recommended for cold fish: Gribiche, Mayonnaise, Ravigote, Rémoulade, Tartare, Green, Vincent (see SAUCE, Cold sauces).

Cod à la boulangère. CABILLAUD À LA BOULANGÈRE – Season a piece of cod with salt and pepper, sprinkle with melted butter and brown lightly in the oven in a fireproof dish. Surround with sliced potatoes and sliced onions. Season the potatoes with salt and pepper, powdered thyme and bay and sprinkle with a little melted butter. Bake in the oven, basting frequently. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve in the dish in which it was cooked.

Cod braised in white wine. CABILLAUD BRAISÉ AU VIN BLANC – Proceed as described in the recipe for Brill in white wine (see BRILL).

Cod braised in white wine with various garnishes. CABILLAUD BRAISÉ AU VIN BLANC AVEC GARNITURES DIVERSES – All methods of preparation given for brill, sole, whiting and other braised and garnished fish can be applied to cod.

Cod with melted butter. CABILLAUD AI BEURRE FONDU – Cook the fish whole or in pieces in Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON). Drain. Serve with melted butter and boiled potatoes.

Cold cod with various sauces. CABILLAUD FROID – Poach cod in salted water and leave to cool in the cooking liquid. Drain, and garnish with parsley. Serve with Tartare, Mayonnaise, Vinaigrette or any other sauce recommended as an accompaniment for cold fish (see SAUCE, Cold sauces). All the garnishes indicated for cold bass (q.v.) are suitable for cod.

Cod cooked in cream. CABILLAUD ÉTUVÉ À LA CRÈME – Bone a medium-sized cod. Skin the fillets and cut into 5-cm. (2-inch) pieces. Season with salt and pepper.

Fry 150 g. (5 oz., 1¼ cups) chopped onion lightly in butter without allowing it to colour, and add the fish. Fry the pieces on all sides. Moisten with 2 dl. (¾ pint, scant cup) dry white wine. Simmer for several minutes. Add 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) of Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Simmer slowly, with the lid on the pan, until cooked.

Cream cod gratin. CABILLAUD CRÈME GRATIN – Butter a dish and pipe a high border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) round the edges. Put a few tablespoons Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) in the dish. Fill up to two-thirds of the height of the border with slices of cod, heated in butter. Cover with Mornay sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese, brush the border with beaten egg, sprinkle with melted butter and brown in a moderate oven.

Cod à la crème. CABILLAUD À LA CRÈME – Season slices of cod with salt and pepper. Fry in butter. When half-cooked, moisten with thick fresh cream. Finish cooking with the lid on the pan. Remove the fish, boil down the cream, add 2 or 3 tablespoons fresh butter to it and pour over the fish.

Cod à la dieppoise. TRONÇONS DE CABILLAUD À LA DIEPPOISE – Prepare 5 dl. (scant pint, 2¼ cups) concentrated fish stock (see FUMET). Clean, shell and open ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) mussels and add 50 g. (2 oz.) shelled shrimps' tails. (To obtain this amount of shelled shrimps' tails allow 150 g. (5 oz.) shrimps.)

Make a roux with 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter and 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) flour. Dilute with the fish fumet and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) of the liquor in which the mussels were cooked, well strained. Season with a pinch of pepper and a little grated nutmeg. Bring to the boil, stirring all the time, add a small bouquet garni and 1 tablespoon mushroom peel. Simmer gently for 20 minutes.

Make a few small incisions on both sides of the cod fillets. Season with salt and cook in white wine and 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter cut in pieces. Bring to the boil, transfer to the oven, and continue cooking in moderate heat for 15 to 18 minutes, basting frequently.

Strain the sauce into another saucepan. Add the liquor in which the fish was cooked and 2 egg yolks diluted with a few tablespoons mushroom stock. Stir for a few minutes over heat, add 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, remove from the heat, and add the mussels and the shrimps' tails. Do not allow to boil.

To serve, arrange the fish on a long dish and surround with the sauce and garnish. (Philéas Gilbert.)

Cod Dugléré. CABILLAUD DUGLÉRÉ – Cut the fish into steaks. Proceed as described for Bass Dugléré (see BASS).

Cod fillets. FILETS DE CABILLAUD – Skin the cod fillets and cut into pieces. Follow one of the recipes given for cod, or for whiting (q.v.), sole (q.v.) or bass (q.v.).

Filleting cod (Ledoyen. Phot. Nicolas)

Cod à la flamande. CABILLAUD À LA FLAMANDE - Season cod slices with salt and freshly ground pepper, and place in a buttered baking tin sprinkled with chopped shallots and chopped parsley. Cover with dry white wine and put a slice of peeled lemon on each piece of cod. Bring to the boil. Finish cooking in the oven, allowing about 12 minutes.

Drain the fish and arrange on a long dish. Bring the pan juices to the boil, add 1 tablespoon butter, pour the sauce over the fish, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Fried cod

Fried cod. CABILLAUD FRIT - Cut the fish into 2½-cm. (1-inch) thick slices. Dip in cold boiled milk. Dredge in flour and deep-fry in sizzling fat. Drain, dry in a cloth, and sprinkle with salt. Garnish with fried parsley and quarters of lemon.

Fried cod in breadcrumbs. CABILLAUD FRIT PANÉ - Dip slices of cod in egg and breadcrumbs and fry as above. Drain, season, garnish with fried parsley and lemon, and serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Fried cod Orly. CABILLAUD FRIT ORLY - Cook cod fillets as in Whiting Orly (see WHITING).

Cod au gratin. CABILLAUD AU GRATIN - Prepare and cook cod steaks or fillets like Brill au gratin (see BRILL).

Grilled cod. CABILLAUD GRILLÉ - Season cod steaks with salt and pepper, sprinkle with melted butter or oil, and cook under a moderate grill. Put a slice of peeled lemon on each steak and garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter or one of the sauces recommended for grilled fish (see SAUCE; BUTTER, Compound butters).

Cod à la hollandaise. CABILLAUD À LA HOLLANDAISE - Cook a piece of cod in Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON), together with good, mealy potatoes. Drain the fish and surround with the potatoes, which have been dried off in the saucepan. Serve with melted butter.

This dish should not be confused with cod with hollandaise sauce, where the fish is cooked in a court-bouillon and served with hollandaise sauce.

Cod à l'indienne. DARNES DE CABILLAUD À L'INDIENNE - Season cod steaks with salt and pepper and put them into a pan on a foundation of 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) chopped onions lightly fried in butter, 2 peeled, seeded and chopped tomatoes, a pinch of grated garlic, and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Sprinkle with 2 teaspoons curry powder and 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter cut in very small pieces. Moisten with 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ⅔ cup) dry white wine. Bring to the boil, then bake in the oven for 10 minutes. Baste with thick fresh cream and finish cooking, basting frequently. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Cod steaks can also be cooked in a concentrated fish stock. Drain, season with salt and pepper, and cover with Curry sauce (see SAUCE) to which the concentrated pan juices have been added. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Cod à la meunière. CABILLAUD À LA MEUNIÈRE - Slice the cod and proceed as described for Bass à la meunière (see BASS).

Cod Mornay. CABILLAUD MORNAY - Cook thin slices or fillets of cod in a very little white wine. Place them in an ovenproof dish, cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and brown in the oven or under the grill.

Cod Mornay in shells. COQUILLES DE CABILLAUD MORNAY - This is useful for using up left-overs. Pour Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) into ovenproof shells. Fill with slices of hot cod and cover with Mornay sauce. Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and brown in the oven or under the grill.

Roast cod. CABILLAUD RÔTI - Use cod whole or cut in large pieces. Season with salt and pepper, sprinkle with oil and a dash of lemon juice, and leave to steep in this seasoning for 1 hour. Drain the fish, put on a spit and secure with string. Brush with melted butter and roast before a brisk fire, frequently basting with butter.

Remove the fish from the spit. Dilute the pan juices with white wine and serve with the fish.

The cod may also be roasted in the oven, placed on a grid to prevent its lying in the pan juices.

Cod in shells à la florentine. CABILLAUD EN COQUILLES À LA FLORENTINE - Proceed as described in the recipe for Cod Mornay in shells lining the bottom of the shells with 1 tablespoon leaf spinach, blanched and simmered in butter.

Cod in shells au gratin. CABILLAUD EN COQUILLES AU GRATIN - Put a border of sliced mushrooms round the edges of the shells. Pour in Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Fill with small pieces of cod, put a cooked mushroom in the middle and cover with Mornay sauce. Sprinkle with grated bread-crumbs and melted butter, and brown under the grill.

Sprinkle with chopped parsley just before serving. To keep the fish from spilling out of the shells, a border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) can be piped round the edges.

Cod in shells à la Nantua. CABILLAUD EN COQUILLES À LA NANTUA – Proceed as described in the recipes for Cod Mornay in shells replacing Mornay sauce by Nantua sauce (see SAUCE). Before serving put a large slice of truffle, heated in butter, into each shell.

Cod in white wine. CABILLAUD AU VIN BLANC – Using cod slices or fillets, proceed as for Brill in white wine see BRILL).

SALT COD. MORUE – Wash thoroughly under a running tap, cut into pieces and soak for 24 to 36 hours in cold water. Drain the cod, put it in a pan and cover the fish with cold water. Heat, and at the first signs of bubbling, skim the water and lower the heat. Cover the pan, and poach for 15 to 18 minutes, according to the size of the pieces. The water must not boil. Drain well and prepare according to the recipe chosen.

Salt cod à l'anglaise I. MORUE À L'ANGLAISE – Poach the cod in water. Drain. Garnish with fresh parsley and serve with parsnips boiled in salt water and drained, and hard-boiled egg sauce.

Salt cod à l'anglaise II. MORUE À L'ANGLAISE – Wash and soak fillets of salt cod and cut into thin slices, gently flattening them. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs, fry in butter, and cover with partly melted Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Serve with boiled potatoes.

Salt cod à la bamboche. MORUE À LA BAMBOCHE – Cut washed and soaked fillets of cod into thin slices. Dip in milk, then flour. Twist into spirals and deep-fry in boiling oil.

Drain, dry in a cloth. Fill a bowl with a macédoine (q.v.) of vegetables blended with butter or cream, and arrange the fillets on top.

Salt cod à la béchamel. MORUE À LA BÉCHAMEL – Poach the fish in water. Trim and flake, keeping the cod hot. Spread it in layers in a dish and pour over each layer a few tablespoons Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), with butter and fresh cream added.

Salt cod à la bénédictine. MORUE À LA BÉNÉDICTINE – Wash and soak 1 kg. (2½ lb.) cod. Poach, drain, remove skin and bone, and flake the fish. Dry in the oven for a few minutes. Mix in a mortar with 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) boiled potatoes which have been drained and dried in the oven. Work this mixture so that it absorbs 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) oil and 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) boiled milk, taking care to add these ingredients alternately, a little at a time. When the mixture is smooth and moist, put it in a buttered baking dish, smooth the surface, pour on melted butter, and brown in the oven.

Brandade of salt cod with truffles is often served under the name of salt cod à la bénédictine. This dish is a kind of brandade of potatoes, browned in the oven.

Salt cod à la Benoiton. MORUE À LA BENOITON – Brown very lightly in oil and butter 150 g. (5 oz., 1¼ cups) finely sliced onions. Sprinkle with 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) flour and cook for a few seconds. Moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) red wine and 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) fish fumet (q.v.). Season with salt and pepper. Add a crushed clove of garlic and mix. Cook for 15 minutes. Add 5 sliced boiled potatoes, and 1 kg. (2½ lb.) flaked boiled cod.

Tip the contents of the pan into a buttered baking dish in one movement (without mixing) and smooth the surface. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs, pour on melted butter and brown in the oven.

Boiled salt cod with various sauces. MORUE BOUILLIE – Wash and soak cod fillets and cut into pieces. Roll these into scrolls and tie them. Poach in water, as indicated in the introduction to this section.

Drain the cod scrolls, untie them and garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with boiled potatoes and a sauce: Bâtarde, Caper, Cream, Curry, Parsley, Hollandaise, Mustard, Ravigote, Saint-Malo, etc. (see SAUCE).

Bouillabaisse of salt cod. BOUILLABAISSE DE MORUE – Cook 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion and 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped leek in oil without browning. When these vegetables are tender, add 2 skinned, seeded, chopped tomatoes and a crushed clove of garlic. Cook rapidly for 5 minutes. Moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) white wine, and 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) water or fish fumet (q.v.), and add a generous pinch of saffron. Bring to the boil. Put into this stock 750 g. (1½ lb.) fillet of salt cod cut into pieces. Pour in 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ pint) oil. Season with a pinch of freshly ground pepper. Cover the saucepan and boil fast for 25 minutes. At the last moment add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley.

Serve the bouillabaisse with slices of toasted bread, or, if preferred, the soup can be served in a tureen with slices of French bread in it, and the fish served separately.

Bouillabaisse of salt cod à la ménagère. BOUILLABAISSE DE MORUE À LA MÉNAGÈRE – Cook 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) finely chopped onion and 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped leek in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) oil. They should not brown. Add 2 crushed garlic cloves and moisten with 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water. Season with salt and pepper, add a pinch of saffron and a bouquet garni, and bring to the boil. Add 300 g. (11 oz.) thickly sliced potatoes and boil for 12 minutes. Now add 750 g. (1½ lb.) salt cod cut into pieces. Pour 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) oil into the pan. Cover, and boil fast. Before serving, remove the bouquet garni and add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley.

Serve the bouillabaisse with slices of toasted bread, rubbed with garlic and soaked in a little of the cooking stock.

Brandade of salt cod. BRANDADE DE MORUE – Wash and soak 1 kg. (2½ lb.) salt cod and cut into pieces. Poach in water for 8 minutes. Drain, remove skin and bones, and flake the flesh. Heat 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) olive oil in a heavy, flat-bottomed saucepan until it begins to smoke. Put in the cod and add a small crushed clove of garlic. Work the mixture on the stove with a hard wooden spoon until it is reduced to a smooth paste. Turn the heat very low and keep on working the brandade, adding, a little at a time, 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) oil. Still stirring, add 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) boiled milk or fresh cream, pouring in a little at a time. Season with salt and white pepper.

When the brandade is ready, it should have the appearance of a white paste, very smooth, with the consistency of mashed potatoes.

Garnish with triangles of bread fried in butter or oil, or with croûtes of French bread, fried in oil.

Brandade of salt cod à la Nantua. BRANDADE DE MORUE À LA NANTUA – Prepare the brandade as indicated above, moistening it with fresh cream. Serve in a bowl, alternating the brandade with layers of a ragoût of crayfish tails. Surround with strips of truffle tossed in butter, and garnish with slices of bread fried in butter.

Brandade of salt cod with truffles. BRANDADE DE MORUE AUX TRUFFES – Make the brandade as indicated above. Add diced truffles tossed in butter. Cover with strips of truffle also tossed in butter. Surround with slices of bread fried in butter.

Salt cod with brown butter. MORUE AU BEURRE NOIR – Put the trimmed, poached and drained cod on a serving dish and dry for a minute or two in the oven. Pour over it a few drops of vinegar or lemon juice. Sprinkle with chopped parsley, and capers, if desired. Pour sizzling brown butter over the cod, allowing 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) butter for 1 kg. (2½ lb.) fish.

The cod can also be prepared as follows: Put the cooked fish on a serving dish, pour vinegar over it and sprinkle capers on the top. Fry sprigs of parsley in brown butter and add to the dish.

Salt cod with noisette butter. MORUE AU BEURRE NOISETTE – Poach and trim the cod, squeeze lemon juice over it and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Add a few tablespoons Noisette butter (butter heated in a frying pan until it is as brown as a hazelnut).

Salt cod à la crème. MORUE À LA CRÈME – Proceed as for Salt cod à la béchamel, using béchamel sauce enriched with cream.

Salt cod à la crème au gratin. MORUE À LA CRÈME AU GRATIN – Trim, poach and flake the cod, and proceed as for Cream cod gratin.

Salt cod à la créole. MORUE À LA CRÉOLE – Trim, poach, drain and flake the cod. Make a dome of it in a buttered gratin dish on a bed of a tomato fondue prepared as follows:

Cook 150 g. (5 oz., 1½ cups) finely chopped onions in a mixture of oil and butter until they are very tender. Skin 4 tomatoes, remove seeds and crush. Add these to the onions, together with 4 skinned, diced sweet peppers. Season with salt and pepper, and flavour with a little chopped garlic. Put a few slices of tomato sautéed in oil, halved sweet peppers, skinned and sautéed in oil, on top of the cod, and pour a little of the hot oil over it. Bake in the oven for a few minutes. Before serving, squeeze a little lemon juice over the fish, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Croquettes of salt cod. CROQUETTES DE MORUE – Poach salt cod, leave to cool, dice into very small pieces, and make in the same way as other croquettes. Add cooked mushrooms and diced truffles, if desired. (See CROQUETTE.)

Curried salt cod, called à l'indienne. MORUE AU CURRIE, DITE À L'INDIENNE – Trim, poach, drain and flake the cod. Put it in 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) Curry sauce (see SAUCE). Mix gently. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Salt cod en escabèche. MORUE EN ESCABÈCHE – Wash and soak fillets of cod and cut into thin slices. Proceed as for Anchovies à la grecque (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre).

Fillets of salt cod Orly. FILETS DE MORUE ORLY – Cut the raw cod into thin slices. Steep for 1 hour in a marinade of oil, lemon juice and chopped parsley. Dip in light batter and deep-fry. Garnish with fried parsley and serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Fish balls of salt cod à l'américaine. CROQUETTES DE MORUE À L'AMÉRICAINNE – Bind equal parts of Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES) and cooked, flaked cod with a few tablespoons Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Season well and mix. Leave to cool. Divide into small parts and roll into balls on a floured board. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry. Garnish with fried parsley and serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Fried salt cod. MORUE FRITE – Cut a fillet of cod into thin slices. Dip in boiled milk, drain, and flour lightly. Deep-fry in oil. Drain, dry in a cloth and season with fine salt. Garnish with fried parsley and lemon.

Fritot of salt cod. MORUE EN FRITOT – Poach and flake the cod. Steep in a marinade of oil, lemon juice, pepper and chopped parsley. Dip in a light batter and deep-fry in boiling oil. Garnish with fried parsley and serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Salt cod à la hongroise. MORUE À LA HONGROISE – Cook chopped onions seasoned with paprika in butter until very tender. Cut 1 kg. (2½ lb.) cod into pieces and lay them on top of half the onions. Cover with the remaining onions. Moisten with 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) dry white wine. Add 150 g. (5 oz.) diced mushrooms. Cover the pan and cook for 6 minutes. Moisten with a few tablespoons thick fresh cream. Cover and simmer for 10 minutes.

Salt cod à la languedocienne. MORUE À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Cut 1 kg. (2½ lb.) desalted cod in pieces and cook in water. Drain, and put it into a ragoût of potatoes prepared as follows: Cut 1 kg. (2½ lb.) potatoes into quarters and brown lightly in oil. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon flour and fry for a few seconds, shaking the pan all the time. Add a crushed clove of garlic. Moisten with a little of the fish cooking stock and add a bouquet garni.

Cover the dish and bake in the oven for 25 minutes, then remove the bouquet garni. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. Place the pieces of cod on top of the ragoût, pour oil over it and finish cooking in the oven for 5 to 6 minutes.

Salt cod à la lyonnaise (Carême's recipe). MORUE À LA LYONNAISE – Boil, drain and flake the cod. Dry in a saucepan over low heat, or in the oven.

Dice three large onions and cook in butter over a gentle heat until golden. Brown the cod in the same pan. Season with butter, grated nutmeg and lemon juice, and serve.

Salt cod à la maître d'hôtel. MORUE À LA MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL – Poach and flake the cod. Put in a dish with alternate layers of sliced boiled potatoes, and cover with partly melted Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Salt cod mayonnaise. MAYONNAISE DE MORUE – Trim, poach and flake the cod. Prepare in the same way as Cold salmon mayonnaise (see SALMON).

Salt cod à la meunière. MORUE À LA MEUNIÈRE – Slice raw fillets of cod. Flour and fry in butter. Arrange on a long dish, sprinkle with lemon juice and chopped parsley. Pour sizzling butter over the fish.

Salt cod Mireille. MORUE MIREILLE – Cut cod fillets into pieces of equal size. Flour, and brown quickly in smoking-hot oil. Prepare a fondue of tomatoes as follows: Cook 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped onion with 4 skinned, seeded and chopped tomatoes and ½ clove of chopped garlic in oil. Season with salt and pepper and 1 teaspoon saffron. Cook until almost all the liquid has evaporated. Moisten with 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) white wine. Cook for 10 minutes.

Serve with a border of Rice pilaf (see PILAF). Cover with the tomato sauce. Arrange black olives on top and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Salt cod Mornay. MORUE MORNAY – Trim, poach and drain pieces of cod. Put in an ovenware dish on a layer of Mornay sauce, and cover with more of the sauce. Sprinkle with grated cheese, add small pieces of butter, and brown in the oven.

Salt cod à l'occitane. MORUE À L'OCCITANE – Heat 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) oil with 1 clove of garlic in an ovenware dish. Add the following in layers: 750 g. (1½ lb.) cooked, flaked salt cod, 3 sliced hard-boiled eggs, 4 sliced boiled potatoes, 1 large peeled and diced tomato which has been cooked in oil, 24 black olives, 1 tablespoon capers.

Decorate the dish with sliced hard-boiled eggs, black olives and slices of peeled lemon. Pour on a few tablespoons oil, season with freshly ground pepper and heat gently. Garnish with chopped parsley.

Salt cod à la parisienne. MORUE À LA PARISIENNE – Trim, poach and drain slices of cod. Cover with diced hard-boiled eggs, capers and chopped parsley. Squeeze lemon juice over the fish, and pour on a few tablespoons brown butter in which 4 tablespoons (½ cup) fresh breadcrumbs have been fried.

Salt cod Parmentier. MORUE PARMENTIER – Cook and flake

the cod and put it in a buttered ovenproof dish. Cover with a light purée of potatoes. Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour on melted butter and brown in the oven.

Salt cod à la Provençale. MORUE À LA PROVENÇALE – Make 5 dl. (scant pint, 2¼ cups) tomato fondue with oil, flavoured with garlic. Add to it 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) flaked cod poached in water. Add salt and pepper and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Cover the dish and simmer for a few minutes.

Salt cod en rayte. MORUE EN RAYTE – Brown 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion in oil. Add 1 tablespoon flour. Cook for a few seconds, stirring. Moisten with ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) red wine and the same quantity boiling water. Mix, season with pepper and a very little salt. Add 2 cloves garlic, 1 bouquet garni and 1 tablespoon tomato purée. Bring to the boil.

Deep-fry 750 g. (1½ lb.) floured, desalted cod fillets in oil. Add 2 teaspoons capers, cover the pan, and simmer for a few minutes.

Rougail of salt cod and tomatoes – See ROUGAIL.

Salt cod salad. SALADE DE MORUE – Mix slices of boiled potatoes and cooked, flaked cod. Add chopped onion, season with oil and vinegar, and sprinkle with chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon.

Salt cod with spinach au gratin. MORUE AUX ÉPINARDS GRATINÉE – Poach and flake the cod. Wash 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) spinach, parboil for 5 minutes in boiling salted water, drain and chop. Heat 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) oil until it begins to smoke. Put the spinach into the smoking oil. Season with salt, pepper, a touch of nutmeg and a little crushed garlic. Add the flaked cod and a few tablespoons Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Mix together and put it in a fireproof dish. Shape into a dome and smooth. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs, pour on a little oil and brown in the oven.

Salt cod with tomatoes à la marseillaise – MORUE AUX TOMATES À LA MARSEILLAISE – Cut the cod into pieces, flour, and deep-fry in oil. Simmer for 10 minutes in Tomato fondue (see TOMATO) strongly flavoured with garlic.

Vol-au-vent of salt cod. VOL-AU-VENT DE MORUE – Fill flaky pastry cases with Brandade of salt cod. Vol-au-vent can also be filled with flaked salt cod mixed with sliced truffles and mushrooms, and blended with either a meatless velouté sauce or a cream sauce.

COD-BURBOT – Freshwater fish of the codfish type. The cod-burbot is also known as burbot, eel-pout and coney fish. The method of cooking is the same as for burbot (q.v.). In U.S.A. the burbot, also called freshwater cusk, is found in the Great Lakes and smaller lakes and rivers across the northern latitude of the country.

COFFEE, COFFEE SHRUB. CAFÉ, CAFÉIER – The coffee shrub originated in Abyssinia and the Sudan. It is a large, evergreen bush with dark shiny leaves.

The cherry-like fruit is soaked, depulped and dried. The seed is then polished to remove the parchment-like husk and outer filament.

According to Balland, the coffee grains contain 6.15 to 15.30 per cent nitrogenous substances, 3.98 to 11.40 per cent fatty matter and 0.70 to 2 per cent caffeine (q.v.).

Coffee contains alkaloids, volatile aromatic products and various substances belonging to the phenolic series. It stimulates the central nervous system and the cardiac muscle.

History, or perhaps legend, tells us that the first man to drink coffee was the Mufti of Aden, who lived in the beginning of the ninth century. According to another tradition, we owe the discovery of coffee to a certain Mullah, or Moslem priest, called Chadely or Scyadly, whose name, it is said,

Coffee pot and grinder (Nicolas)

Special grinder and cup for Turkish coffee (Delius) is still venerated in the Middle East. This holy man, upon finding himself often overcome by sleep in the middle of his prayers, attributed his drowsiness to the half-heartedness of his devotions, and his conscience tormented him. The Prophet, touched by his sorrow, led him to encounter a herdsman, who told him that each time his goats ate the berries of a certain shrub, they would remain awake, jumping and gambolling all night.

The Mullah wished to see this extraordinary plant, and the herdsman showed him a pretty shrub with a greyish bark and brilliant foliage, the slender branches of which, at the bases of their leaves, had bunches of small white flowers and clusters of small berries. Some were green, some were a clear yellow colour and others, which had reached full maturity, were the size, shape and colour of a cherry. It was the coffee shrub. The Mullah, testing these unusual berries, made himself a potent brew, and spent the night in a state of delicious intoxication which, however, in no way affected his intellectual capacities.

He told his Dervishes about his discovery and soon coffee became much in demand among devout Moslems, who looked upon it as a divine gift brought by an angel from heaven to the faithful. The use of coffee spread from Aden to Medina, Mecca, and throughout the whole of the Middle East. Coffee was taken during prayers, in the mosques, even in the Holy Temple at Mecca and before the Tomb of the Prophet.

Coffee, in the Middle East, is one of the first necessities of life. It was hardly known in Europe before the seventeenth century. Travellers who had acquired the habit of drinking this beverage in the East imported it at first for their personal use. Suleiman Aga, the ambassador of the Sublime Porte to the Court of Louis XIV in 1669 popularised coffee in France. As laid down by Turkish custom, he offered it to all who came to visit him. The vogue for coffee spread through high society; it was soon in demand and the price was high.

The Dutch founded the East India coffee trade when they introduced coffee into Java about 1690, but it was a Frenchman, Desclieux, who introduced it into the western hemisphere in the reign of Louis XIV. He brought one small seedling to Martinique. The plant flourished, and seedlings were taken to French Guiana. From there it spread to Central America. Brazil is the greatest producer of coffee.

The best varieties, known as mocha or Yemen, came from Arabia, Réunion Island and Martinique. The names have been preserved in the trade to distinguish three types of coffee, although the designation in no way implies its origin.

Bourbon. Medium-sized grains, yellowish, oblong.

Martinique. The biggest grains, rounded at the ends, greenish in colour.

Mocha. Small irregular grains, yellowish in colour and convex on both sides.

Like wine, coffee gives the greatest production in the plains, but the best qualities come from the highest parts of the torrid zone, particularly from Central America (Guatemala, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica), as well as from the northern part of South America (Venezuela and Colombia) whose products are always highly rated.

After the fruit has been depulped and dried and the seed polished, the seeds are classified as to size and ripeness.

Coffees of various origins are usually blended in different proportions. When green, coffee keeps for a long time, provided it is protected from damp. It is entirely devoid of smell. To release the aroma, coffee has to be roasted, an operation which many coffee lovers insist on performing themselves. Well-roasted coffee should be brown, of varying degrees of darkness, but never black. If not sufficiently roasted it produces a colourless infusion which is rough and astringent. If over-roasted it produces a black, bitter infusion.

During the industrial roasting process a small quantity of sugar molasses or other product is sometimes added to 'coat' the berries. This is permissible by law. It gives the berries a better colour and more shiny appearance; it prevents the loss of aroma and has the further advantage, for the merchant, of increasing the weight. It also enables him to use inferior quality or damaged grains.

After roasting, coffee does not keep its aroma for long, and should not be roasted or purchased already roasted in quantities exceeding one's immediate needs. It is advisable to keep the berries in tins with well-fitting lids. Ideally, coffee should be ground immediately before being made, as ground coffee loses its aroma very quickly.

Soluble coffee, more commonly known as instant coffee, was the invention of a Mr G. Washington, an Englishman living in Guatemala. One day while waiting for his wife to join him in the garden for coffee, he noticed on the spout of the silver coffee-pot fine powder which seemed to be the condensation of the coffee vapours. This intrigued him, and led to his discovery of soluble coffee. In 1906 he started experiments and put his product on the market in 1909. Since that time many varieties of instant coffee have appeared and with great commercial success.

Brewing coffee – There are four basic methods of brewing ground coffee – boiling, steeping, percolating and filtering. Coffee experts consider filtering the best method of extracting the soluble essences from the coffee which is contained in a paper or cloth filter. Boiling water is poured over, flowing into a container where it will not come into contact again with the grounds. For perfect coffee, earthenware or glass receptacles should be used, since contact with metal lowers the quality of the beverage.

The Turkish method consists of pouring coffee, ground to a powder, into a special receptacle containing boiling water, and heating until the coffee is on the point of boiling. This operation is repeated three times. A few drops of cold water are added to settle the grounds, and the coffee is ready.

The French method consists of pouring boiling water on finely ground coffee (but less finely ground than for Turkish coffee) contained between two perforated disks in a receptacle called a cafetière. Among the numerous types of cafetières the traditional cafetière à la Dubelloy is still the favourite with coffee connoisseurs.

Bourbon créole coffee. CAFÉ CRÉOLE BOURBON – Créole coffee must be strong and fragrant. Allow 1 heaped teaspoon ground coffee per cup. Press the coffee down well and proceed as follows:

Put the filter into a bain-marie, which must not be boiling. Keep some boiling water in a separate receptacle. Steep the coffee thoroughly, then, little by little, add tablespoons of the boiling water. Let it drip through until you have obtained the required amount of coffee. Serve very hot in a coffee-pot which has been scalded.

Coffee with cream, with milk. CAFÉ À LA CRÈME, AU LAIT – The addition of cream or milk to coffee reduces its stimulating properties and turns it into a real food. Dieticians, however, are very much against it because of its indigestibility.

Iced coffee. CAFÉ GLACÉ – Use 300 g. (11 oz., 3½ cups) freshly ground coffee and ¾ litre (1½ pints, 1½ pints) boiling water. Pour into a bowl with 575 g. (1¼ lb., 2½ cups) granulated sugar. Dissolve the sugar and chill the infusion.

Add to the coffee 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) vanilla-flavoured cold boiled milk, and ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) fresh cream. Chill in an ice pail. If served with whipped cream it is called café liégeois.

Uses of coffee – Coffee is used for flavouring many hot and cold sweets. It is used in the form of an essence which is prepared with very strong coffee. To flavour creams, roast the coffee beans on a metal sheet in the oven, grind, and put them into boiling milk. Cover with a cloth and leave to infuse for a few minutes. (See CREAMS, ICE CREAMS AND ICES, PARFAIT.) Industrially produced coffee essence and instant coffee can also be used for flavouring creams.

Coffee with caffeine extracted. CAFE DÉCAFINÉ – To render coffee less harmful and extract the caffeine, attempts have been made to extract from coffee its alkaloid constituent (see CAFFEINE). This operation, which is nowadays done on a large scale, consists of breaking up the beans by steam, subjecting them to the action of chloroform or some other solvent, and then eliminating this liquid by heating and roasting.

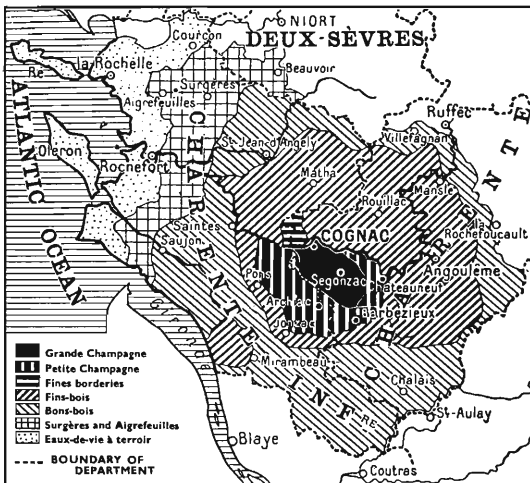

After roasting, the coffee retains the same taste as ordinary coffee which has not been treated, without having any of its stimulating properties.

Coffee substitutes – Various grains and roots have been used to replace coffee, or for adulteration. Apart from chicory, the most important adulterants include figs, dates, acorns (mildly astringent), malt, barley and other roasted cereals, chick-peas and lupins (used a great deal in Brittany). The majority of these adulterants are harmless.

COGNAC – Town in the district of Charente which has given its name to famous brandies (see CHARENTE, SPIRITS).

The distillation of wines which provide the various Cognacs is done by the method of brouillis and repasses. The special qualities of the Champagnes, the Borderies and the Fins-bois are not apparent until the brandy has been allowed to age for 15 to 20 years in barrels of the white oak of the district, or in Limousin oak. Several brandies are blended together to obtain a perfect bouquet. The blend is left to age.

For the boundaries of the Cognac region and its various subdivisions, see map below.

Map of the Cognac-producing areas

COLA. KOLA – African tree. Its seeds which are flattened oblong in shape, have a bitter, astringent flavour, and are chewed by the natives. They contain a high proportion of caffeine, theobromine, and a glucoside, cola red. Cola is a tonic and a stimulant but does not have any real nutritive value. It is used as a colouring matter, a liquid flavouring

Branch and nut of cola

extract, in wines, etc.

Dieticians are firmly against all cola-based beverages.

Cola cream. CRÈME À LA KOLA – Made by adding a variable amount of essence of cola nut to some kind of sweetened substance. Often it is made by adding the extract to a thick French pastry cream (crème pâtissière), frangipane cream, or butter cream. Cola cream, flavoured with orange essence, is used to fill or decorate cakes and pastries such as Genoese cake, choux, éclairs, tartlets, etc.

COLBERT (À LA) – Name given to a preparation of fish which are dipped in egg and breadcrumbs before being fried (see SOLE, Sole Colbert).

The name is also applied to a special butter which is served with fish prepared à la Colbert (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

COLD FOODSTUFFS, PRESENTATION OF COLD DISHES. PLATS FROIDS – 'The basis of a cold buffet,' wrote Carême, 'is attractive presentation. Judicious cooking and careful seasoning are also supremely important. Good jellies are essential. These must be clarified, perfectly transparent, and of two colours only. One of these must be white, the other a beautiful bold colour.'

Carême gives the following recipe for a good jelly.

'Melt fine, dry sugar for 15 minutes on red embers to colour slowly. When it is reddish amber in colour moisten with  $\frac{1}{2}$  glass water and bring to the boil over a higher flame. After it has boiled for a few minutes it becomes a transparent caramel of a beautiful reddish amber colour.' Carême also recommends the use of 'beautiful saucés magnonnaises' (this was his name for mayonnaise) 'one white and the other a fine pistachio green.'

'Entrées must be dressed with care, glazed with an attractive light jelly, artistically presented, decorated as simply as possible with truffles, meat from the breasts of chicken and pickled ox tongue, and garnished with fine rounds of jelly arranged as elegant borders . . . these are the essentials in the presentation of handsome, cold dishes.'

The presentation of cold dishes should never be over elaborate or finicky. A dish of food should not be a work of architecture. In conclusion, Carême says that 'they should be put on smooth white plinths.' He was voicing the taste of his own day, which no longer prevails.

The simpler the presentation of a cold dish, the more handsome it is. But there are those who remain faithful to the old customs. It is for them that we quote Carême's rules for the presentation of cold dishes:

'Fillets of beef. Dressed in a long rectangle, glazed and decorated with jelly. The dish to be surrounded by a border of jelly.

'Ribs of beef. Dressed in their natural shape, garnished with their own bones, carefully scraped to make them white; border as above.

'Chauds-froids of chicken. Arrange in a pyramid and cover with a transparent sauce. Crown with a fine black truffle and a white double cock's comb. Scatter clumps of lightly chopped jelly on the peaks of the pile. Finish with a border of clear jelly. This is an entrée of great distinction.

'Chicken salads. Presented like fricassées en chaud-froid. Instead of a truffle, place  $\frac{1}{2}$  hard-boiled egg with the heart of a lettuce on top. Serve with a good white or green mayonnaise. Make a border of hard-boiled eggs or coloured butter, decorated with fillets of anchovy.

'Galantines of poultry. Garnish with a good forcemeat using plenty of truffles, whole and diced, pickled calf or ox tongue and calf's udder. Glaze lightly.

'Salmis. Presented as above.

'Noix de veau (see VEAL). Trimmed into an attractive shape and decorated with tétine. Glaze the remainder of the noix and decorate with jelly.' (By tétine, Carême means the layer of fat which covers part of the noix de veau.)

'Eel galantines. Should be tower shaped, set on a bed of Montpellier butter and decorated with jelly. Make a border of jelly or coloured butter garnished with sprigs of tarragon.

'Salmon steaks. May be masked with Montpellier butter. Decorate with jelly, truffle, breast of chicken or pickled tongue, so that the decoration is all the same colour. Make a border of coloured butter or jelly.

'Salads of fillets of sole or other fish. Arrange inside a border of moulded jelly. Fillets of turbot, trout, salmon, brill, pike and perch are arranged in the same way. For whole perch, cover the fish with white mayonnaise and decorate with truffles. Make a border of jelly in two colours'.

Carême writes, 'Cold dishes are everything in themselves, or they are nothing. The man of talent brings out all their inherent beauty; the man without taste detracts from it and makes them insipid.'

In modern practice the cold dish is presented more simply. The old methods, inspired by architecture rather than by the arts of the kitchen, have been abandoned and all the garnishes of a cold dish are grouped in the simplest manner possible round the main dish, without seeking after architectural effects.

Dishes are made in shapes adapted to their purpose. On these, food, simply presented and decorated, is much more elegant than formerly when wooden supports covered with butter, or plinths ornamented with so-called artistic figures were used.

The object is to make the most of the intrinsic shape and colour of the main dish, and to surround it only with garnishes which would normally be eaten with it.

Some time ago disciples of the Italian 'futurist' Marinetti attempted, unsuccessfully, to revive the decorative presentation of cold dishes.

COLD ROOM. CHAMBRE FROIDE – Room kept at an extremely low temperature and used for preserving and storing perishable foods.

COLIFICHET – A dry cake, without butter or salt, made for birds.

In pâtisserie, pièces montées (set pieces), which decorated the table and buffets were called colifichets, to distinguish them from the proper dishes. Although the colifichets were almost entirely edible, they were laden with ornament.

Nowadays, they are rarely made. They can occasionally be seen as specimens in culinary exhibitions.

COLIN – Name given in Paris markets to hake. This fish has delicate flaky flesh and is also called saumon blanc (white salmon). The head and back are grey, the stomach white and lightly silvered. Before the opening up of north Atlantic fishing, the colin was salted and used instead of salt cod in European markets.

The methods of preparation given for cod (q.v.) are suitable for colin.

COLLAGE – Clarification of alcoholic drinks by precipitation of the solids, which may spoil their keeping qualities (see WINE).

COLLE – Another word for gelatine. Butter sauce is sometimes called sauce colle.

COLLER – Adding dissolved gelatine to give body to a preparation.

COLLOP. EŞCALOPER – To slice meat or vegetables.

COLOCASIA. CARAIBE (CHOU) – Colocasia esculenta (family Araceae), tuberous herb native of the Moluccas (Spice Islands). In the West Indies, leaves as well as tubers are eaten as cabbage, hence the French name caraibe (chou).

COLOCYNTH – Member of the gourd family. The multi-coloured fruit is rich and used as a table ornament. The pulp is bitter and a violent purgative.

COLOMBINES – Croquettes with an outer layer of semolina with Parmesan. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

Moule à colonne
(Dehillerin. Phot. Larousse)

COLONNE – Implement used to core apples and cut vegetables into a column. Also called moule à colonne.

COLOURINGS. COLORANTS – The colourings used in cookery, cake-making, and confectionary, are mainly of vegetable origin, and are harmless; some are of insect origin, like the carmine of cochineal; or of mineral origin, such as those derived from coal.

The colouring most often used in cooking is caramel, especially to improve the look of the stock of pot-au-feu, meat glazes and sauces. Liquid caramel is obtained by cooking sugar with a little water until it turns dark (see SUGAR).

COLZA – Colza, or rape seed, is an oily plant sometimes used to adulterate mustard seed.

COMFITS

COMFITS. CONFITS – Fruits or vegetables preserved in sugar, brandy, or vinegar (see GHERKINS, CAPERS, FRUITS).

COMFREY. CONSOUDE – Name of various plants, some of which are edible and used in salad, or cooked, like corn-salad.

COMINÉE DE GELINES (Ancient recipe) – The ancestor of the Chicken fricassée, for which one of the oldest culinary treatises (1290), le Traité où l'on enseigne à faire et appareiller et assaisonner toutes viandes, gives the following recipe:

'If you wish to make cominée de gelines, take the chickens and cook them in wine and water, boil them, skim off the fat, and take out the chickens. Take egg yolks, beat them well, and dilute them with chicken stock. Put in some cumin, and put all together. There is your cominée.'

COMPOTE – Preparation of fresh or dried fruit in a thick or thin syrup, flavoured or not with various aromatics such as vanilla; lemon or orange zest; cinnamon; clove; etc.

Dried fruits, prunes, apricots, apples, pears, etc., must be soaked for some time in cold water before being cooked in the syrup.

Compotes are usually served cold. They can be sprinkled with kirsch or some other liqueur.

Simple compotes consist of one type of fruit cooked in syrup.

Compotes composées consist of a macédoine of various fruits, arranged in a dish. The syrup in which they have been cooked is poured over them, or they can be covered with a fruit jelly (quince, gooseberry, apple, etc.).

The word is also used for certain dishes (of pigeon, partridge) which have been cooked for a considerable time.

Fruit compote

COMPOTES OF FRESH AND DRIED FRUITS. COMPOTES DE FRUITS FRAIS ET SECS:

Apple compote. COMPOTE DE POMMES – Made with whole fruit, cored and peeled, or with fruit cut into halves or quarters, peeled and with the pips removed. Put the fruit in a syrup of 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water, with or without vanilla flavouring.

Remove the pieces as soon as they are cooked, arrange them in a dish and pour the cooking syrup over the fruit.

Apricot compote. COMPOTE D'ABRICOTS – Halve the apricots; break open the stones and blanch the kernels; cook the fruit in a syrup – 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water. Arrange the apricot halves in a dish and put half a kernel on each fruit. Pour over the cooking syrup.

Banana compote. COMPOTE DE BANANES – Peel the bananas and remove the strips of fibre. Cook for 5 minutes in a heavy sugar syrup – 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water. Flavour with kirsch.

Cherry compote I. COMPOTE DE CERISES – Put the stoned cherries in a sugar syrup which has been cooked to the large ball stage (119°–122°C., 246°–252°F.) (see SUGAR). Use 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) sugar for each 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) cherries (net weight). Cook with the lid on for 8 minutes over low heat. Stir from time to time. Arrange the cherries in a dish and pour the cooking syrup over. Flavour with kirsch or cherry brandy.

Cherry compote II. COMPOTE DE CERISES – Put the stoned cherries in a deep dish with a bag containing 12 crushed kernels. Sprinkle generously with powdered sugar. When the cherries are swimming in their own juice, cook in the oven in a covered dish.

Fig compote (dried figs). COMPOTE DE FIGUES SÈCHES – Prepared in the same way as Prune compote (see below).

Fig compote (fresh figs). COMPOTE DE FIGUES FRAÎCHES – Peel the figs, which should be ripe and of equal size; put them in boiling syrup – 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water – flavoured with vanilla. Poach for a few minutes. Pour the cooking syrup over the fruit arranged in a dish.

Pear compote. COMPOTE DE POIRES – If the pears are small, leave them whole, and peel them. If they are large, cut into quarters or halves and trim them.

Poach the fruit in boiling vanilla syrup – 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water – cooking only lightly if soft.

If this compote is made with firm pears (cooking pears) rub the fruit with lemon and blanch them for a few minutes before putting them in the vanilla-flavoured cooking syrup.

Pineapple compote. COMPOTE D'ANANAS – Remove the skin and core of a pineapple. Slice the fruit and cook in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Arrange the fruit in a dish and pour the cooking syrup over it. Flavour with kirsch or any other liqueur.

This compote can be made with tinned pineapple.

Plum compote. COMPOTE DE PRUNES – Made particularly with mirabelle plums or greengages, but also with any kind of plum.

Stone the fruit and poach in a syrup of 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water for 10 to 12 minutes.

Prune compote. COMPOTE DE PRUNEAUX – Soak the prunes in cold water until they swell. Cook in a syrup of 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) liquid, consisting of half red wine and half water, flavoured with cinnamon or with lemon zest. Cook very gently. This compote can also be prepared in a syrup made without the wine.

All dried fruit compotes are made in the same way, cooking the fruit in a thin syrup.

Raspberry compote. COMPOTE DE FRAMBOISES – Arrange the fruit in a deep dish. Pour over a few tablespoons of boiling syrup.

Strawberry compote. COMPOTE DE FRAISES – Prepared in the same way as Raspberry compote.

COMPOTES OF PRESERVED FRUITS. COMPOTES DE FRUITS EN CONSERVE:

Apricot compote. COMPOTE D'ABRICOTS – Choose slightly under-ripe fruit. Prick them and put in a basin. Cover with a very heavy cold syrup. Soak in the syrup for 3 hours.

While the fruit is soaking prepare a 26° syrup (see SUGAR) with lump sugar.

Clarify the syrup with white of egg – one white for 2 litres

(3½ pints, 4½ pints) syrup. Strain the syrup through a straining bag or cloth. Leave to cool.

Drain the apricots. Put them into wide-mouthed jars and cover with the boiling, clarified syrup so that it reaches at least 3 cm. (1 inch) above the level of the fruit. Fix on the tops and screw bands tightly, then give the bands one half-turn to loosen them.

Place a wire rack in the bottom of a large preserving pan and arrange the bottles on it so they do not touch. Fill the pan with cold water, making sure it covers the jars. Boil rapidly for a full 10 minutes. Remove the bottles, wipe and seal them. Keep in a cool place, away from the light.

Halved apricots can also be used for the compote. They are put in a basin and soaked in a heavy syrup. Half the number of stones are cracked, the kernels peeled and put into the preserving jars with the apricots.

The process for capping and boiling is the same as above.

Compote of cherries, peaches, plums and other fruits for preserving – All these fruits are prepared for preserving in the same way as apricots. They are boiled for a longer or shorter time, depending on their variety.

COMPOTIER – Deep dish on a raised base, used for fruits, compotes, jams and other cold sweets. China or crystal fruit dishes are also used for fresh fruits.

COMTÉ – See CHEESE.

CONCASSER – French term for rough chopping, or pounding in a mortar.

CONDÉ (Pâtisserie) – Roll out a piece of left-over Flaky pastry (see DOUGH) into a strip about 25 cm. (10 inches) long, 10 cm. (4 inches) wide and ½ cm. (¼ inch) thick. Cover with a layer of royal almond icing called Condé (see below). Divide the strip into rectangles 4 cm. (1½ inches) wide. Lift them with the blade of a large knife and put them on a baking tray. Powder with icing sugar. Cook in a gentle oven.

Preparation of the Condé – Beat together 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) icing sugar and 2 egg whites. When the mixture is stiff, add enough finely chopped, peeled almonds to make a thick paste.

Two much used condiments: pickled gherkins and mustard

CONDIMENTS – Aromatic substances, added to food to improve its flavour.

The term 'seasoning' is used for substances which are added during cooking, while 'condiments' apply to those added at the table to food already prepared. The two words are interchangeable in current speech.

All condiments, except salt, and saltpetre, are of vegetable origin, and vegetarian peoples, particularly those who live in hot countries, use strong condiments the most.

Condiments are classed, according to their dominant flavour, into acid, aromatic, bitter, salt, sweet, etc.

Acid condiments – Vinegar, verjuice, the juice of lemon or tamarind, etc. affect the taste buds and encourage salivary secretion. So do all vegetables preserved in vinegar; salted cucumbers, which become acid through fermentation; capers; nasturtium flowers; Indian pickles; purslane; sweet-sour cherries; sea-fennel or samphire; little onions in vinegar; melon in vinegar.

Bitter aromatic condiments – Pepper is the chief example of this group; its aromatic qualities are largely lost in the process of cooking, and to preserve its flavour it should be added after cooking.

Paprika, the various types of pimento, and ginger can be used to reinforce the flavour of pepper.

Among the main aromatic condiments are dill, anise, basil, cocoa, coffee, cinnamon, chervil, coriander, cumin, turmeric, tarragon, fennel, juniper, clove, bay, mace, mint, nutmeg, parsley, saffron, sage, savory, thyme, vanilla, orange and lemon zest, and various aromatic vegetables.

Bitter condiments – Garlic, shallot, Welsh onion, spring onion, onion, rocambe (Spanish garlic), leeks, are vegetable seasonings rather than condiments, but are sometimes used raw as condiments; mustard and horseradish are true condiments, stimulating the appetite.

Fat condiments – The fatty elements (oils, butter, fats) are sometimes classed as condiments, because they are used for seasoning. They are really food, not condiments.

Ready-made condiments – There are many condiments, prepared industrially, which have a distinctive taste according to the proportions in which the specific ingredients are used. They include the English sauces (Worcestershire, Harvey, etc.), ketchups, curry powders, prepared mustards, soy sauce, etc.

Salt condiments – Sodium chloride or sea-salt is the only table condiment of mineral origin. Its importance is underlined by its frequent use in metaphors.

CONDIMENT SET

Salt is both an element which is an integral part of our tissues and body fluids, and an actual condiment. All our foods contain varying amounts of salt; in spite of this, there are few dishes which are not improved by the addition of it.

Saltpetre (azotate or potassium nitrate) is hardly used in cooking, but it is employed in the salting industry to accentuate the red colouring of meats.

Sweet condiments – Sugar and its derivatives (syrops, etc.) as well as honeys, are foods and condiments. In some countries, compotes (whortleberries, gooseberries) are used as condiments. Having a flavour which is sweet and sour at the same time, they are often served with roast or boiled meats, particularly game.

Sweet condiments also include the aceto-dolce of the Italians, a preserve of fruit and vegetables in vinegar, sweetened with concentrated grape must or with honey, and preserved fruits with mustard.

CONDIMENT SET. HUILLIER – Piece of tableware, often consisting of two glass bottles in a metal, wooden or pottery frame. Formerly, it was a magnificent piece of silver, placed on the table for decoration rather than use.

CONFECTIONER'S CUSTARD. CRÈME PATISSIÈRE – See CREAMS, French pastry cream.

CONFECTIONERY. CONFISERIE – The transformation of sugar into sweets. It tends more and more to be an industry of which the products are sold in special shops. One branch of confectionery is the making of chocolates. Long ago the Egyptians, the Arabs and the Chinese prepared sweetmeats based on various fruit juices and honey. In Europe the use of sugar was not widespread until after the Crusades, and even then remained for a long time in the hands of apothecaries. In the fifteenth century the crystallised fruits of Auvergne, the sugared almonds flavoured with amber or musk, and the 'gigembrats de Montpellier' enjoyed a well-deserved reputation. In 1660, the regulations promulgated by Colbert underlined the importance of the manufacture of the sugared almonds of Verdun. In Diderot's Encyclopédie several plates show the work of the confectioner. With the discovery of sugar beet juice and the advance of machinery in the nineteenth century, sweet-making developed rapidly.

CONFIT – Meat of pork, goose, duck, turkey, etc., cooked in its own fat, and kept covered in the same fat to prevent it coming in contact with the air.

Confit d'oie (Preserved goose) (Gascon cookery) – Pieces of goose, cooked in goose fat and preserved in stoneware pots. (See GOOSE).

Confit de porc (Preserved pork) (Gascon cookery) – Pieces of pork, marinated in salt with spices, and cooked in melted pork fat.

Confit de porc, which is used a great deal in Gascon cookery, is preserved in stoneware pots in the same way as Confit d'oie.

CONFRÉRIES VINEUSES (Wine Lodges) – The first wine lodges date back to the Middle Ages. Their principal aim was mutual brotherly aid, but some of them also took a protective interest in the quality of wine. The first of the present day confréries was founded in 1905 (the Sacavins d'Asjou). The Chevaliers du tâte-vin (1934), which followed it, was such a commercial success that after the Second World War more and more confréries were established. They all adhered to the spirit and tradition of mediaeval corporate confréries or ancient Bacchic societies. In fact, most of them are closer in character to the latter despite the fact that some of their ceremonial tends towards the mediaeval style.

Their celebrations are conducted according to a long established ruling: chapters, inauguration of members, banquets generously laced with local wines, traditional entertainment, all carried out in an atmosphere of high spirits and (usually rather earthy) good humour.

The importance of these confréries is undeniable. They have taught people, French and foreigners alike, to know and better appreciate French wines. There are almost enough of them now, however; if there are many more their effectiveness will be diminished.

The list of confréries that follows is divided into their regional categories, with comments on the most important of them.

ALSACE –

La Confrérie Saint-Etienne d'Alsace – Without question the oldest known confrérie vineuse; established in Ammerschwihr in the fourteenth century and reinstated after the Second World War in 1947.

It has preserved the mediaeval hierarchies inherited from the corporations. There are three progressive stages laid down for novices: apprentice, companion, master. There is also a special category, hors cadre, that of 'honorary member'. This is reserved for official personalities whom the confrérie considers worthy of the dignity.

BORDEAUX –

La Commanderie du bontemps de Médoc et des Graves – In Médoc, bontemps is the name for the wooden bowl in which the vine-grower beats the egg whites which will be used to coller (clarify) his wine. This confrérie, founded in 1949, has chosen this object for its name and symbol, and for their traditional headgear, too, since the ruffle of white muslin that decorates the hat resembles stiffly whisked egg whites.

Every year, and particularly in June for the flower festival, and in September for the proclamation of the vendanges (vine harvest), the chapters of the Commanderie are celebrated in the splendid setting of some Graves or Médoc château. They are followed by marvellous spectacles and a banquet graced by the best wines.

La Commanderie du bontemps de Sainte-Croix-du-Mont – This, the most recent of the Bordeaux confréries, also comes under the banner of bontemps. It represents the white dessert wines of the right bank of the Garonne.

La Commanderie du bontemps de Sauternes et Barsac – The great white dessert wines of Sauternes and Barsac have rallied under the emblem of their neighbouring red wines. But while the robes of the latter are bordeaux-coloured, the vine-growers of Sauternes drape themselves in golden-hued velvet, the colour of their wines.

La Connétablie de Guyenne – The name of this confrérie refers to the administrative divisions of ancient France. It has taken upon itself the task of promoting the wines of the Premières Côtes de Bordeaux. The meetings are held in the magnificent château of the duc d'Eprenon at Cadillac.

Le Grand Conseil du vin de Bordeaux – This is the amalgamation of several Bordeaux confréries.

La Jurade de Saint-Émilion – It was John 'Lackland', King of England, who signed a charter in Falaise in 1199 giving the freedom of the communes to Saint-Émilion. For six centuries this charter was to govern the jurade, the equivalent of the town council of Saint-Émilion.

The powers of the jurade extended to the domain of wine, and consisted of the proclamation of the vendanges, as well as control of the quality of the wines. It was in pursuance of these ancient functions that the confrérie of Saint-Émilion adopted the name of Jurade when it was 'resurrected' in 1948.

Nowadays the official chapters are held by torchlight in the monolithic church carved out of the rock. One of the most important occasions is the proclamation of the vendanges by the jurats from the top of the 'Tour du roi'.

BURGUNDY –

Les Compagnons du Beaujolais – This confrérie, as its name indicates, takes its inspiration from the ancient trade guilds; its Paris section is called le Devoir parisien (Parisian duty). Its aim is to make the wines of Beaujolais and the whole of this picturesque province better known and appreciated. Its headquarters are at Villefranche-sur-Saône.

La Confrérie des chevaliers du tête-vin – Founded in 1934 at Nuits-Saint-Georges, this confrérie continues to be extremely successful. Its activities to publicise Burgundy wine have been considerable. It has branches in many foreign countries; the commanderie in the United States, for example, is well known. Its headquarters are in the beautiful château of Clos-Vougeot, where the main celebrations of the confrérie take place: tastevinages and official chapters. The latter take the form of a spectacle enlivened by Burgundy chants and followed by copious disnées washed down with the best wines. It is attended by many foreigners as well as French people.

Celebrations of this kind are held several times a year, a special one being the wine sale of the Hospices de Beaune. This is the most important of the Trois Glorieuses of Burgundy. Each year, near 22 January, the confrérie organises a Saint-Vincent's day celebration in one of the villages of the Côte in honour of the patron saint of the vine-growers.

La Confrérie Saint-Vincent de Mâcon – This confrérie, also under the protection of the patron saint of the vine, has its headquarters in Mâcon and represents the wines of the whole region as well as those of Pouilly-Fuissé.

Les Piliers chablisien – Why this name of Piliers? It is not because the members are 'pillars of wines', but because Chablis is nicknamed the 'Golden Gate' of Burgundy. This very lively confrérie has borrowed its name and its hierarchy from architecture. The grand master is called the grand-architrave. The chapters are conducted with earthy good humour in a Chablisien cellar. Each year, at the end of November, there is the joyous feast of 'Saint-Cochon' ('Saint Sucking-pig').

CHAMPAGNE –

L'Ordre des coteaux – This Champenois confrérie is the revival of a Bacchic society founded by Saint-Evremond, le marquis de Bois-Dauphin et le comte d'Olonne. Boileau alludes to this order in his third satire. The present-day confrérie holds its chapters in the cellars or estates of Champagne firms, as well as in other parts of France, and abroad. Its headquarters are in Reims. The great wines, however, do not associate themselves with it.

MEDITERRANEAN REGION –

Le Conseil des mestres tastaïres du Languedoc – This confrérie concerns itself with the wines produced in the départements of Tarn, Aude and Hérault.

L'Ordre des chevaliers du cep – This order was created in 1951 by M. Eugène Causse, editor-in-chief of the newspaper la Journée vinicole, a publication dedicated to the study and defence of wine development. Its headquarters are in Montpellier.

L'Ordre illustre des chevaliers de Méduse – This confrérie represents the wines of Provence, Cassis, Bandol, Côtes de Provence. It is the revival of an ancient Bacchic society of the same name initiated in Toulon towards the end of the seventeenth century. The founder was Girardin de Vauvray, general administrator of the Far Eastern seas.

Les Templiers de la Serre – To escape from the persecutions of the Pope and the French King, Philippe le Bel, a number of Templars took refuge in Banyuls, which was then a protectorate of Majorca. They gave a considerable impetus to viticulture and the wine-making industry. It is for this reason that when the vine-growers of Banyuls created an ancient order to publicise their wines, they chose the patronage of the Templars. The farm of la Serre, situated in the vineyards, is their headquarters.

LOIRE VALLEY –

La Confrérie des baillis de Pouilly – Based in Pouilly-sur-Loire, this confrérie, which was founded in 1949, has as its aim the promotion of the excellent dry wines of Pouilly-Fumé. Each year there is a tasting of these wines in Paris.

La Confrérie des chevaliers de la chantepleure de Vouvray – Chantepleure is the picturesque name for the cask tap, the wooden spigot that the vine-grower places in the vat in order to extract the wine. When the tap is turned it 'sings'; then the wine 'weeps'.

The wine is Vouvray, dry or mellow, still or sparkling. Twice a year, in mid-June and mid-September, an official chapter is held in the Bonne Dame cellars hollowed out of the chalky soil on the banks of the Loire. This ancient confrérie was revived in 1937.

La Confrérie des chevaliers de Sancerre – This, the most recent of the confréries vineuses, aims at publicising the excellent dry white wines, rivals of the Pouilly wines, and is situated exactly opposite the Pouilly vineyards, on the Berry bank of the Loire.

La Confrérie des tire-douzils – Based in Marigny-Brizay in Vienne.

Les Entonneurs rabelaisiens – What more illustrious patron could one choose for the wine of Chinon than Maître François Rabelais, born in the town and a great lover of his 'Breton' wine. This confrérie was founded in 1962. It holds one chapter a year, at the end of September, in the Cave Peincte at Chinon. As is the custom, this chapter is accompanied by a bountiful repast, excellent wines and traditional entertainments.

L'Ordre des chevaliers brevins – This confrérie, founded in 1948 and based in Nantes, aims at publicising Muscadet, the wine of this region, as well as regional dishes.

Les Sacavins d'Anjou – This is the oldest of the modern confréries, founded in 1905. Its headquarters are in Angers, and its purpose is to publicise the numerous Anjou wines. It organises a large number of celebrations, chapters, and tastings in Anjou and elsewhere.

SOUTH-WEST –

La Compagnie des mousquetaires d'Armagnac – Inspired by the glorious memory of D'Artagnon and his musketeers but instead of fighting against the protectorship of the Cardinal, it rallies to the cause of Armagnac. Its headquarters are in Condom.

La Confrérie des alambics charentais – This is the confrérie of Cognac. The purpose of its celebrations is, of course, to make the famous brandy even better known and appreciated.

La Confrérie Rabelais de la 'dive-bouteille' – For the wines of Gaillac.

Le Consulat de la vinée de Bergerac – For the wines of Bergerac.

La principauté de France-Pineau – This group, with its capital in Cognac, favours the Pineau of Charentes. It endeavours to make this wine better known and appreciated with the help of numerous celebrations held both in France and abroad.

La Viguerie royale de Jurançon – This confrérie, with its headquarters at Pau, has taken up the mission of defending, and promoting the wine that was so dear to Henry IV.

CONGER EEL. CONGRE – Large fish, also called anguille de mer (sea eel), found in the seas of the temperate zone, particularly those of northern Europe.

Conger eels in an aquarium

The best-known type is the common conger, the flesh of which resembles that of eels, but is less delicate. The conger eel is chiefly used for making fish soups, notably the bouillabaisse, but can be cooked in all the ways given for eel (see EEL).

CONSOLANTE – Glass of wine, beer or cider served to the team of cooks in course of their work.

CONSOMMÉ – Meat stock which has been enriched, concentrated and clarified (see BOUILLON, Clarification of bouillon).

For the preparation of various consommés (simple consommés, chicken, game, fish consommés) see SOUP, Clear soups.

CONTISER – Term for encrusting chicken fillets, or those of game or fish (chiefly sole), with truffles or other ingredients cut in the shape of little cocks' combs. These are soaked in egg white in order to make them adhere properly and set at regular intervals into cuts made in the fillets.

CONVERSATION (Pâtisserie) – Roll out a piece of puff pastry (pâte feuilletée) which has already been rolled out five times (see DOUGH). Set out tartlet moulds close together on a table, moisten each one slightly and lay the pastry on top of the moulds. Flour a lump of pastry and press it gently into each mould so that the pastry adheres to the bottom and sides of the moulds. Half fill each tartlet with a preparation of almonds made according to the directions for Dartois cakes (q.v.), or with French pastry cream (see CREAMS) to which some powdered almonds have been added.

Moisten the edges of the tartlets lightly and place on them pastry rolled out thinner than the first.

Pass the pastry-roller over the tarts, cutting the pastry on the rim of the moulds and sealing the edges.

Make Royal icing (see ICING) with 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) icing sugar and one egg white worked well together, adding a pinch of flour to prevent it running.

Put thin bands of pastry crosswise on top of the tarts. Bake them at a moderate temperature.

COOK. CUISINIÈRE – Woman responsible for the preparation and cooking of food. The term is also used in France to describe a small household cooking-stove.

COOKIES – See BISCUIT.

COOKING. CUISINE – The French word cuisine is used for the art of preparing dishes (cooking) and the place (kitchen) in which they are prepared.

Cooking is an ancient art, born when primitive man first discovered that if a hunk of meat was placed near the fire it tasted better, and was easier to eat. Some ingenious man found a way of heating water in a stone hollowed out into a basin. The clay vase succeeded this primitive pot. The spit and the pot, however rudimentary in the beginning, made many culinary operations possible. Prehistoric finds such as fragments of pottery, flint and bronze implements and traces of hearths throw light on the origins of cooking.

Cooking among the Egyptians and Assyrians is described under BANQUET.

Greek cook

Greek cooking – In early Greece the only cook was the mageiros, who was not a real cook, but a baker. The name comes from magis, madza, barley bread or kneaded cake, or from masso, matto, to knead.

In Homer's time the mageiros did not exist. Female slaves ground the corn and prepared the food. According to the Iliad and the Odyssey, the host himself, however exalted, prepared and cooked the meals with the help of friends when he received distinguished guests.

Later, the mageiros cooked as well as baked for his masters. In time he became archimageiros or chef de cuisine and was given assistants.

Great houses had a hierarchy of slaves, under a steward, the eleatros. Each slave had definite duties. The opsonomos or agorastes (from agora or market place) bought the food, while the opsarytes looked after the fires, did rough jobs and prepared food for the household slaves. A woman, the demiourga, only made sweetmeats and other delicacies. Women had free access to the kitchen. Other slaves prepared meals or served at table. The trapezopoios laid the table and washed the dishes, the oinophoros had charge of the wine, the oinochoikos, a young slave, filled the wine cups of the guests.

In the fourth century B.C., Athenian cooks, as shown in the Greek theatre, were often slaves. They played an important rôle in the life of the city, judging by the taunts poets levelled at their pretensions.

'They were artists in their way; their apprenticeship lasted two years, under the direction of a cook of reputation, and during this time they wore the apron of the apprentice. In order to acquire this difficult métier the apprentice not only learnt from his masters, he was given books which set down the rules of his art, and, if zealous, spent his nights studying them.

'It was only after long study that he could aspire to become one of those artists whose names were quoted, and who became famous through the creation of a single dish.' (C. Daremberg and E. Saglio, Dictionnaire des antiquités grecques et romaines.)

In Greece, cooks had become persons of importance, ruling as masters over all the other slaves in the household. A special law permitted the cook who invented a new dish the privilege of making it and selling it to the public.

Many Greek cooks left famous names behind. Cadmos was cook to the King of Sidon in Phoenicia, and, according to legend, introduced writing into Greece. As a result of the burning of the library in Alexandria, only a few fragments and the authors' names remain from the Greek literature of gastronomy.

Although early Greek cooking equipment was rudimentary, kitchen utensils were gradually perfected. Casseroles, cauldrons and gridirons were sometimes made in precious metal and magnificently decorated. Objects from the Bosco-Reale Treasure, in the Louvre in Paris, show their splendour.

Cauldrons of bronze or iron were shaped like an egg, or truncated cone, with a rounded base, chains and a cover. Among them were the chytra and the chutros, common earthenware pots without ornament, the kakkabe (or kakkabos), a metal pot, the lebes, a large metal basin, the olla, an earthenware pot, ancestor of the marmite.

Casseroles and pans, generally made of bronze, and frying pans (the Greeks enjoyed fried food) were like those we use today. There were special dishes for cooking eggs, with cavities of different sizes. Athenaeus says: 'The first row belongs to the peacocks' eggs, the second to geese's eggs, the third to chickens' eggs.' (Deipnosophistai.) These utensils were usually placed on a metal support, the eugytheke.

Graceful bronze kettles or double-bottomed amphorae, like a modern double-boiler, were used to heat drinks. Food was served on earthenware or metal utensils, such as the kane, a concave dish with two horizontal handles, and the pazopsis, a deep dish made from pottery, bronze, silver or even gold. Some dishes were served on ichthuai, plates decorated with fishes. Greek drinking vessels, richly decorated, were called patarion or poterion.

Roman cooking – In early Rome, as in Greece, there were no cooks as such. Bakers took their place. Cooking was rudimentary and there was no need for skilled cooks.

Not until after the war against Antiochus the Great (568 B.C.), did the Romans have banquets and employ skilled cooks. The rôle of the cook in society became more important with the return of the deputation sent to Athens to bring back the laws of Solon, and to study Greek Art and Letters.

Cooks and gastronomes were brought to Rome, and formed a society, one of their number calling himself vicarius supra coenas. Under Hadrian an academy, Collegium coquorum was formed. Cooks were highly paid. The triumvir Antony gave a house to Cleopatra's cook as a reward for an admirable meal.

In large Roman households, the kitchen slaves each had specific tasks. There was the coquus, who resembled the gros bonnet ('big noise'), the focarius, who kept the fires going, the coctor, who superintended certain dishes, the pistor or pinsitor, who was kitchen help, preparing the stuffings, pounding various foods (the Romans had a taste for purées), and grinding corn for bread and cakes.

Underground Roman kitchen
(from de Vogüé, Antiquités civiles et religieuses de Syrie)

Many slaves were attached to the kitchen and dining-room. The condus managed the household, and ordered and stored the food. The doliarius managed the cellar, the structor arranged the food on the serving platters, the captor carved the meat, the proegustator, a reliable man, tasted the dishes, and the aquarius was responsible for the supply of water.

In the triclinium (dining-room) was the tricliniarcho, who was like the butler in a large household today, the pocillator, who poured wine, and the nomenclator, a high-ranking servant, responsible for protocol.

For a long time in ancient Rome, and under the Republic, the chief food was a gruel, puls or pulmentus, made with barley or spelt (German wheat). This was roasted, pounded and cooked with water, to make a porridge like the polenta still eaten in Italy. This was made in a bronze cauldron.

Our terms for liquids like potées, potages and pot-au-feu derive from the Roman word potus from potare (to drink).

Under the Empire, decadence, gluttony and extravagant luxury became the characteristic of Roman cooking. Carême, who studied the Roman cuisine, declared that it was heavy and without refinement. The Romans carried their taste for meat to such extremes that restrictive measures had to be taken. They even ate elephant, of which Pliny tells us only the trunk found favour. He writes also of three roebuck, set on the table as a first course. Herds of these animals were set up in parks in the neighbourhood of Tarquinia.

The Romans did not confine themselves to wild animals, eating puppies: dormice especially fattened with chestnuts, acorns and nuts; and guinea pigs kept in a cage called the glirarium.

Mazois, in the Palais de Scaurus, described the kitchen in the house of a great Roman:

'Scaurus' kitchen is arched, its dimensions are enormous, it is 45 m. (148 feet) long; and this will not astonish you when thinking of the banquets he gives and the great number of guests, freed men and slaves, he has to feed. Here the fireplace is elbow-high, but vast and made so as to draw off the smoke because, in winter, a house filled with smoke is uninhabitable, particularly if green wood or new brushwood are burnt. The decoration of the kitchen has a painting representing one of those ridiculous sacrifices made to the goddess Fortunax. This is surrounded with paintings of all the food necessary for a great feast: fish ready for cooking; hams; venison ready for the spit; birds, hares and many others objects. The floor is made of a composition used in Greece, producing a fine black paving, well drained so even those walking barefoot are warm.

'Near the kitchen are subsidiary rooms, such as the olearium where oil is kept in great dolia (earthenware pots 123 cm. (four feet) in diameter); the horreum where a great many things are kept, such as winter provisions, honey, fruits, dried raisins, salt meats, and all the provisions necessary for a great household. These storerooms are under the surveillance of a storekeeper called promuscondus, who checks on all the foodstuffs and supplies and delivers them to the servants when required. The steward sees to the maintaining of supplies; the amount of provisions the storerooms contain make them resemble actual shops.'

The kitchen utensils used by the Romans were similar in material and shape to those used by the Greeks. For cooking meat, they used a grill, called craticula. They also had a great many pastry moulds, sieves, skimmers, ladles, all more or less like those we use today.

Cooking and eating habits of the Gauls – Strabo wrote: 'The Celts eat bread in very small quantity with a great deal of meat either boiled, roast or grilled. Their rivers and the two seas which surround them provide fish, which they season with cumin and vinegar as oil is scarce. They add cumin to all their beverages.'

'The rich drink wine, which they bring from Italy and Marseilles, and which is served as follows: a servant brings in each hand a bowl of earthenware or silver, similar to a marmite, and filled with wine. Each one draws from the bowl. Little is drunk at a time, but they drink often, and wine is almost always undiluted.'

The Gauls loved spiced dishes. The recipes given below show their taste for strong condiments:

Method of preparing cranes and ducks. 'Wash and trim the crane (or the duck) and put it in an earthenware marmite. Add water, salt and dill. Let it reduce by half and then put the whole into a cauldron with oil and broth, a bouquet of marjoram and coriander. When the crane is on the point of being cooked, add a little heated wine. Pour over a mixture of honey, lovage, cumin, coriander, roots of benzoin, rue and pounded caraway, with vinegar. Put some starch in the pan and make the liquid boil. Put your crane on a dish and pour the sauce over it.'

Stuffing for dormice. 'Make this with the meat of the dormouse with powdered pepper, nuts, benzoin and broth. Put the dormice on a tile after sewing them up and put them in the oven. They can also be cooked in a copper boiler.'

Cooking and eating habits of the Franks and Merovingians – 'Once established in Gaul, the Franks imitated the luxurious example set by the Romanised Gauls. They ate reclining on couches in dining-rooms, around tables decorated with flowers. The Franks borrowed various dishes from the Gauls, and their cooking remained very much the same as that of the Romanised Gauls, entirely Roman. Pepper, honey, wine, vinegar, meat broth and aromatic plants formed the basis of all seasonings.' (From l'Art Culinaire, marquis de Cussy.)

At the end of the Merovingian period the convents, which had preserved all the traditions of the gourmands, increased in number in France, and great progress was made in cooking.

French cooking in the Middle Ages – Viollet-le-Duc gives a picture of what kitchens were like at the time:

‘In the houses of the Middle Ages, chimneys were large and high; a man could get inside the chimney without bending, and ten or twelve people could sit easily round the hearth. Inside these chimneys strong andirons, called landiers, were needed to hold the enormous logs that were put on the fire, and to prevent them from rolling into the room. There were andirons for the kitchen and for other rooms; the former were complicated in form because they were put to various uses. Their uprights were furnished with supports or hooks to take the spits; they were surmounted by an extension in the form of a small brazier on which dishes could be prepared or kept warm.

‘The division of stoves into several compartments as in our day, was seldom seen. The dishes were cooked on the fire itself, and these fierce fires did not allow for dishes which needed constant stirring, or to be made in frying pans.

‘The andiron-braziers, filled with charcoal, were at a convenient height and at a distance from the fire. Sometimes they were divided into two compartments, in which case it was possible to prepare and cook four dishes outside the hearth. Over the hearth hung pots, suspended from hooks or tripods; in front of the fire one or two spits turned several pieces of meat. Only in this way could a large meal be prepared.

‘Before the twelfth century, only roast meats and boiled vegetables were eaten, and the art of making stews was almost unknown. What was needed were good clear fires, large hearths on which many long spits could be set, and space for hanging vast cauldrons.

‘The architects of the twelfth century began to put ovens in kitchens, and tables on which to arrange food before serving it. From the fourteenth century onwards, sauces were much appreciated. Ovens were needed to make the many dishes which were served at the big feasts of the time. The equipment of the kitchens began to improve.

‘In the castles and convents of the Middle Ages, the chimney was not always built against the wall in the room kept for cooking, but was sometimes built in the middle of the vaulted roof, and the hearth set in the centre of the room. A kitchen like this resembled a tower, open at the top, without joists to separate the intervening space into floors, and with the diameter decreasing towards the top. Such a kitchen can still be seen in the Palace of the Popes at Avignon.’

French cooking in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries – Information on cooking at this time is found in le Viandier by Taillevent.

Soups were a gruel, made with milk, often flavoured with honey, saffron and sweet wine and thickened with moyeux (egg yolks) and butter. Rice soups were made and various purées like garbures (q.v.). They were called soupes (sops). Brouet was made of calves’ meat, with fowl or conies (rabbits) cut into pieces, browned in sein de lard (lard) with onions and crushed almonds, and moistened with wine and stock. The hochepot (hotchpotch) was similar to brouet, but grilled bread or grated breadcrumbs were added as thickening. Galimafrée (which did not have its modern connotations with bad stew, mauvais ragoût), was made with mutton or fowl, cooked, chopped, simmered with onion and moistened with camelaine sauce.

Taillevent gives recipes for seventeen sauces, including sauce Robert, so wholesome and necessary, according to Rabelais, for duck, rabbits, roasts, fresh pork, eggs, salt cod and other meats. Sauces were thickened with bread.

French cooking in the sixteenth century – Under François I, the days of feasting and drinking, as recounted by Rabelais, were revived. The first real cookery books date from this time. In 1543, la Fleur de toute cuisine, by Pierre Pidoux, and in 1570, the Viandier de Taboureau, appeared.

Cooking flourished in this reign. The refinements of the Italian Renaissance had penetrated into France, and French banquets became more splendid than ever. Menus included fish, fowl, feathered game and venison, but meat and vegetables featured little. Kitchen utensils were now augmented by vast copper daubiers (q.v.).

In the following reigns expense had to be cut down owing to imperial and religious wars. Prosperity returned under Henry II, and cooking made rapid progress. Feasts were magnificent. A meal served to Henry II himself included a profusion of lampreys in Hippocras sauce, hot-pots, ducklings à la Malvoisie, slices of muraena (an eel-like fish) served with a sauce of egg yolks and herbs, ducks à la didone, sturgeon fillets à la lombarde, quarters of roebuck, partridges à la tonelette, and a whole series of puddings such as darioles and échaudes.

At the end of the sixteenth century, Italian cooks and pastrycooks came to France under the influence of Catherine and Marie de Medici. At this time the Italian maîtres queux (head chefs) were considered the best in the world. They taught the French many recipes which have remained in the French culinary repertoire. Cooks were already aware of their rôle and social importance.

French cooking in the seventeenth century – The reign of Henry IV is symbolised by the famous ‘hen’ which the King wished all his subjects to be able to put in the pot on Sundays.

Although cooking had little significance during the reign of Louis XIII, it received an impetus founded on the Cuisinier Français by La Varenne, which appeared in 1651, the first book to fix the rules and principles of working, and to establish some order in cooking. In 1691 the Cuisinier Royal et Bourgeois by Massialot, giving precise instructions, appeared. It showed that cooking was growing more varied, and dishes were named after famous people or royal favourites. Menus mention the olla – the Spanish olla podrida – multiple hors-d'œuvre, monumental removes and entremets (q.v.). Courses were arranged in a logical way.

During the Grand Siècle cooking was spectacular rather than fine or delicate.

In the reign of Louis XIV the culinary utensils of the Middle Ages were replaced by a Batterie de cuisine (see KITCHEN EQUIPMENT) which included many new pots and pans in tinplate and wrought iron. Later, silver utensils were used.

The festivities of Superintendent Fouquet in his château de Vaux, and of the Prince of Condé at Chantilly, were particularly sumptuous. The famous Vatel was maître d'hôtel of the Grande Condé, a very important position.

Seventeenth century cook (Mariette)

All the grands seigneurs took a great interest in food, and master cooks, grateful for this interest, gave their masters' names to new dishes. This gave rise to the mistaken impression that dishes were created by those whose names they bore, as with Béchamel, called after the marquis de Béchamel.

Table manners were simpler than those in the preceding century. Although Louis XIV ate too heavily for a true gourmet, he established the habit of having dishes served separately. Before his time everything was thrown together, making a monstrous pyramid described by Boileau in his Festin ridicule:

*Sur un lièvre flanqué de six poulets étiques,
S'élevaient trois lapins, animaux domestiques,
Qui, dès leur tendre enfance élevés dans Paris,
Sentaient encor le chou dont ils furent nourris.
Autour de cet amas de viandes entassées,
Régnaient un long cordon d'alouettes pressées,
Et sur les bords du plat, six pigeons étalés
Présentaient pour renforts leurs squelettes brûlés.*

On top of a hare surrounded by six emaciated pullets
Lay three rabbits, domestic animals,
Who, raised since their tender infancy in Paris,
Smelt still of the cabbage on which they had been fed.
Round this mass of piled up meats
Reigned a long border of pressed larks,
And on the edges of the dish, six pigeons spread out
Exposed their burnt skeletons as a reinforcement.

In the seventeenth century a great quantity of dishes were served at each meal, and there are many descriptions of the meals served at the royal table of Louis XIV.

The Palatine Princess wrote; 'I have seen the King eat, and that very often, four plates of different soups, an entire pheasant, a partridge, a large plateful of salad, mutton cut up in its juice with garlic, two good pieces of ham, a plateful of cakes, and fruit and jams.'

And according to Saint-Simon, 'All his life he had eaten very little bread, and for some time past only the soft part as he had no teeth. Soup in very large quantities, fine hashes and eggs were used as a supplement. Everything he ate was very highly spiced, at least twice as spiced as is ordinarily the case, and very strong indeed.' It was due to Louis XIV that the custom of serving sweets, formerly reserved for fête days, was introduced into daily use.

Menus were equally copious in the great houses and among the rich bourgeois of the time, and the master chefs, or cordons bleus, who prepared these meals had a great deal to do.

French cooking under the Regency – History has judged the eight years of Regency severely. But, if the years under Philippe d'Orléans were disastrous politically and economically, they had at least some distinction as regards gastronomy. The true French cuisine dates from this time.

While the Regency lasted, the ovens of the great houses in the kingdom were hardly ever cold, and the gifted cooks who directed the kitchens of the Palais Royal, the Trianon and the other princely houses had to satisfy the refined table companions who were the guests of the Regent.

The Regent himself took a hand with the pastry. In la vie privée d'autrefois, Franklin wrote: 'For the little suppers given by the Regent, the dishes were prepared in special rooms on the same floor, where all the utensils were made of silver; the roués often worked with the cooks.'

The menu of one of these suppers gives a picture of the brilliant cuisine of the time. This meal is a key to the principal dishes in fashion:

First course. Joint of salt beef, garnished with carrots and potatoes.

Two soups. One made of a pike cullis, one of turnips with a duck thereon.

Two fish dishes. Carp à l'anglaise; freshwater fish consisting of twenty-four little perch and four little pikes.

Ten entrées. Mutton filets larded and glazed with gherkins on top; two chickens stuck with parsley, espagnole sauce; pike à la polonoise; perch à la genevoise (six perch and one bottle of white wine); sauerkraut with one pike; twenty-five oysters cooked with a pint of cream; noix de veau à la napolitaine; three partridges en levraut (leveret); two fine eels à la bavaoise; and half a hundred fine crayfish; roebuck kidneys in marinade.

Two dishes of pâtisseries. A cake filled with apricot marmelade; an iced tart (six peaches iced and a pint of cream).

Four roasts. Fried smelts (crumbed), two poulardes, two fried soles, two wild ducks.

Four different salads, with sauces.

Four little hot entremets. Six veal sweetbreads larded and glazed; pig's trotters Sainte-Menehould; dried peas à la crème; dessert apples à la chinoise.

Until the beginning of the eighteenth century, cooking was done on the fire and on charcoal braziers. Kitchens were provided with a stove called a potager which had twelve or twenty grates (foyers), according to the size of the household. This arrangement lasted until the cast-iron stove heated with coal came into use.

French cooking under Louis XV – Cooking in the reign of Louis XV was much the same as under the Regency. The nobility were very interested in the culinary art. They were 'gastronomic snobs', and wished to have dishes named after them, whether invented in their own house or not. It is to this period that we owe Bouchées à la Reine, named in honour of Marie Lezczinska, wife of Louis XV; Cailles à la Mirepoix (quails) and Timbale Pompadour.

The menus served at the court of Louis XV by Héliot, écuyer de bouche of Madame Dauphine de France, were grandiose. Carême published part of these menus, taken from the original source, in his Maître d'hôtel français. Philéas Gilbert notes that the menus were presented in the form of placards 'whose dimensions are those of electoral notices and in which figure: 4 ollas and 8 lesser soups; 12 fish entrées; 32 entrées and 44 lesser entrées; 12 removes; 4 hors-d'œuvre before the King; 2 grand entremets; 32 roasts; 2 lesser roasts at the ends of the table; 2 little dishes before the King; 40 cold entremets and 48 hot entremets.' Many master cooks were needed to execute such a menu.

In the time of Louis XV a number of culinary books appeared. The most interesting were le Cuisinier moderne by Vincent de la Chapelle, published in English in 1733, and translated into French in 1735, and the Dons de Comus, which appeared without the author's name but was written by Marin, maître d'hôtel of the maréchal de Soubise. This was preceded by a Discours préliminaire, remarkable both for its style and documentation, and attributed to the Jesuit fathers, Pierre Brunoy and Hyacinthe Bourgeant. Carême thought the work of de la Chapelle the best of the books which appeared in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, although he criticised the author for having given certain dishes inadmissible names, such as Filet de boeuf en talon de botte, and Potage à la jambe de bois, which he found grotesque.

Among the bourgeois at this time, meals were also simpler. Brillat-Savarin describes a typical meal served in the middle classes. In 1740 a dinner for ten people would consist of:

First course. Le bouilli (boiled meat); an entrée of veal cooked in its juice; an hors-d'œuvre.

Second course. A turkey; a dish of vegetables; a salad; a cream.

Third course. Cheese; fruit; a pot of jam. The plates were only changed three times – after the soup, for the second course, and for dessert. Coffee was seldom served, but quite often a ratafia of cherries or carnations, a recent introduction, was served.

French cooking at the time of Louis XVI – During the first years of the reign of Louis XVI, the tendency continued to refine culinary methods and to establish more order and logic, as well as greater elegance in menus for grand galas. Brillat-Savarin writes in his Histoire de la cuisine of great improvements in all branches of catering.

'Cooks, caterers, pâtisseries, confectioners, grocers, have multiplied on an ever increasing scale. . . . Physics and chemistry have been called to the aid of cooking. The most distinguished intellects have not thought it an unworthy task to occupy themselves with our basic needs, and have introduced improvements ranging from the workman's simple pot-au-feu to the transparent extracts (Brillat-Savarin means here the aspic jellies) which are served in gold and crystal. . . .

'The French cuisine has appropriated foreign dishes, such as caviare and beefsteak; seasoning such as curry and soya; drinks like punch and others. . . . Coffee has become popular, in the morning as nourishment, and after dinner as an exhilarating and tonic drink.

'Finally, the word gastronomy has been revived from the Greek.'

During the reign of Louis XVI the first restaurant came into being (see RESTAURANT). Menus of restaurateurs of the time provide information on cooking in general. These included 12 soups, 24 hors-d'œuvre, 15 or 20 entrées of beef, 20 entrées of mutton, 30 entrées of fowl or game, 12 or 20 entrées of veal, 12 dishes of pâtisserie, 24 dishes of fish, 15 roasts, 50 entremets, 50 desserts.

French cooking during the period of the Revolution and the Empire – The author of Avant de quitter la table described the French cuisine at the time of the Revolution:

'... the poor chefs were forgotten; a new austerity prevailed and the supreme bon ton was to assume a spartan simplicity.

'But the pleasures of the table never lose their rights, and the new masters of France soon tired of so much virtue, and once again in Paris and in the provinces, there was a return to good living. The chefs of the great houses of the nobility, finding themselves unemployed on the emigration of their masters, put themselves at the service of those who governed them, and soon the ovens were heated once again throughout the country, and particularly in Paris, in the Palais ex-Royal, rue Montorgueil, and the boulevard du Temple.

'Men of talent, such as Brillat-Savarin and Grimod de la Reynière, began to assemble their observations, and to experiment in order to write. In 1798, at the age of 16, Carême, the man who was going to write the new 'culinary charter', after 6 years in a modest cabaret on the outskirts of Paris, started as a pastry-cook with Bailly. The maison Bailly was one of the leading Paris pâtisseries and supplied the prince de Talleyrand, who kept a sumptuous table. Two years later Carême was first pastry-maker in this famous house'.

In the relatively calmer period of the Directory, the great bourgeois households reorganised themselves, new restaurants opened, and cooking again became as grandiose as in the time of Louis XV.

Under the Directory, an attempt was made to revive official dinners and suppers. Ostentation was re-established, and magnificent buffets with enormous, over-decorated cold pièces were prepared for balls. Even if the emphasis was on luxury rather than on a well-chosen ensemble in these great festivities, both in Paris and in the provinces, more rational menus were introduced.

A kitchen in the early nineteenth century

'The first Empire passed in the clash of arms and in triumphal trumpetings marked by splendid fêtes and immense banquets.' (Varras.)

The position of chef in the Imperial Court was no sinecure. The chefs came and went. Was it due to bad ventilation in the kitchens, or to the severe economy established in the household, which reduced wages to 2,400 francs?

Among those who exercised their art at the Imperial Court, and contributed to the extravagance of the great galas which took place, was Chandelier, the man who was the most devoted of Napoleon's servants, followed him to St Helena, and in spite of countless difficulties applied himself to the task of encouraging the appetite of the fallen Emperor.

It was at this period that Carême himself, the great master of culinary art, collected his material for his works on French cuisine in the nineteenth century. While continuing his innovations in pâtisserie, he perfected his culinary knowledge. He was seen at the Tuileries, at the great dinners given by Talleyrand, at the fêtes of the Hotel de Ville where the new marshals of France, the new nobility, ministers and ambassadors came, and at the Elysée-Napoléon with the great Laguipière.

As a pâtissier he took the place of those who had come to the end of their careers: Tirolay, one-time chef of the Soubise household, Feuillet of the house of Condé, Lecoq, who had worked in the royal household for Louis XVI. Carême was rapidly promoted under the famous chefs with whom he studied, and expresses his gratitude in his works.

French cooking at the beginning of the nineteenth century – Even the best equipped kitchens of this period had very mediocre implements, and cooking stoves were rudimentary. Carême has left us a picture of these kitchens at the hour of work.

'Imagine yourself in a large kitchen such as that of the Foreign Ministry at the moment of a great dinner. Twenty chefs are at their occupations, coming, going, moving with speed in this cauldron of heat. Look at the great mass of live charcoal, a cubic metre (yard), for the cooking of the entrées, and another mass on the ovens for the cooking of the soups, the sauces, the ragoûts, the frying and the bain-marie.

'Add to that a heap of burning wood in front of which four spits are turning, one of which bears a sirloin weighing 20 to 27 kg. (45 to 60 lb.), another a piece of veal weighing 16 to 20 kg. (35 to 45 lb.), the other two for fowl and game.

'In this furnace everyone moves with tremendous speed; not a sound is heard; only the chef has the right to make himself heard, and at the sound of his voice everyone obeys. Finally, to put the lid on our sufferings, for about half an hour the doors and windows are closed so that the air does not cool the dishes as they are being dished up. And in this way we pass the best days of our lives.

'But honour commands. We must obey even though physical strength fails. But it is the burning charcoal which kills us!'

During the Restoration, Brillat-Savarin's la Physiologie du goût appeared, and shows the importance that gastronomy and cooking had at that time. In the restaurants of the Palais Royal trade flourished. Thanks to the efforts of restaurateurs and master cooks to satisfy the tastes of their clientele, great progress was made in cookery.

Under the reign of Louis-Philippe the art of cooking was in lower favour. Everyone about the economical King lived with a simplicity close to stinginess. Dinners at the Tuileries were bourgeois in their presentation.

Louis-Philippe lived as a bourgeois, always with an eye on economy. He even assigned to the caterers the supplying of dinners at fixed prices to the château. The cost of these dinners was to be 5 to 10 francs per head, according to the importance of the guests.

Under such a régime the art of cooking could hardly make progress. However, it was in the reign of the 'bourgeois' King that the most famous clubs and gastronomic coteries were founded. These societies met in the best restaurants and were the forerunners of the Académie des gastronomes founded by Curnonsky. Although Brillat-Savarin had predicted such an academy, its programme was nebulous.

The brief Republic of 1848 had its patriotic banquets, where the menu comprised only veal and salad.

French cooking during the period of the Second Empire – The Second Empire may have been 'the reign of electroplated ware and tinsel, the time of crinolines and prefects', but it was also a time that favoured the cuisine. Magnificent festivities and banquets took place at the Tuileries, and in the various châteaux in which the court of Napoleon III lived. The great dinners of the time achieved perfection. The first edition of the Cuisine classique by Urbain Dubois and Auguste Bernard appeared. This work is still an authority, and has done more for professional cooking than even the books of Carême, which are sometimes hard to read. Among the great chefs were Armand Gouffé and Joseph Gastilleur.

'On ordinary occasions,' says Madame de Carette, 'the table at the Tuileries was rich and elegant, and the food exquisite and delicate.' (Souvenirs intimes de la cour des Tuileries.)

'One ate at almost all seasons strawberries, peaches, little new peas, from the greenhouses of the châteaux of Versailles. . . . There were four double courses, (which means, today, two soups, two removes, four entrées, two roasts, etc.)

'The kitchens in the Tuileries were in the basement and the dishes arrived by lifts installed behind the Gallery of Diana'.

Despite the brilliance and delicacy of food in high social circles, many writers criticised the cooking of the time, complaining that it was mediocre. In the Courrier de Paris of 27 March 1858, cooking and chefs were severely rated:

'A good dinner is a rare thing today. Gastronomy is like poetry: it has fallen into a complete decadence. . . .

'The present generation eats and knows not how to eat. . . it is the enemy of that grande cuisine which was France's glory. The chefs are the cause of this indifference, which is blamed on us. They have muddled everything, spoilt everything, exhausted everything.'

On 7 June 1867, during the Universal Exhibition, the dinner of the three Emperors took place in the Café anglais. The guests were all illustrious, including the Czar, the Czarevitch, King William I of Prussia, and several Grand Dukes. A description of this meal will be found under the heading MENU. It cost 400 francs per head, a considerable sum at that time.

French cooking of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century – French cooking has reached its peak since the end of the nineteenth century. Many excellent cookery books were written at this time, starting with those by Urbain Dubois, Auguste Bernard, Gouffré, and Joseph Favre. After 1900 important books like Escoffier's Guide culinaire (in collaboration with Philéas Gilbert), Plaisirs de la table by Nignon, le Grand livre de la cuisine by Prosper Salles, were published. Interesting works came from the pen of master cooks such as Alfred Suzanne, Dietrich, Garlin, Werner, Bouzy, Alfred Guérot and Pellaprat.

These books deal only with theoretical instruction; often there is a gap between theory and practice. The fact that they were written at all proves that culinary practice was highly developed. The present-day chef must have the same qualities as those at the beginning of the last century, of whom Désaugiers wrote:

*Un cuisinier, quand je dine,
Me semble un être divin
Qui, du fond de sa cuisine,
Gouverne le genre humain.
Qu'ici bas, on le contemple
Comme un ministre du ciel,
Car sa cuisine est un temple
Dont les fourneaux sont l'autel.*

'A cook, when I dine, seems to me a divine being, who rules the human race from the depths of his kitchen. One considers him a minister of heaven, because his kitchen is a temple, in which his ovens are the altar.' (See also INTERNATIONAL COOKERY).

COOT. FOULQUE – Bird similar to the moorhen. It has dark flesh, dry and not strongly flavoured.

There are several varieties of coot in France: foulque morelle, foulque macroule, also known as foulque judelle, foulque à crête du Cap (African or crested coot) and foulque bleue du Portugal. It is found in England but is not so popular as it was. There are several species in the U.S.A., but they are not marketed.

The coot is classified by the church as Lenten fare. All ways of cooking a wild duck apply to a coot. It is good eaten fresh, if skinned immediately after it is shot (the skin is oily and smelly) and cooked in a casserole with a piece of larding bacon.

Coot

COPEAUX (Twists) – Small sweets or petits fours made from a mixture like that given for langue de chat (q.v.). They are squeezed from a forcing-bag on to a baking tray, and cooked in a hot oven. While still malleable, they are rolled round a stick into twists.

COPPER. CUIVRE – Metal used in the manufacture of many cooking utensils. It is a good conductor of heat, and copper cooking pans have the advantage of spreading heat evenly and cooking the food right through.

In minute but measurable doses, copper is one of the mineral elements in the human body and in some foods. Copper salts were long regarded as virulent poisons. Experiments have long proved this false, although salts, like sulphates and acetates (verdigris), tend to cause nausea and vomiting.

Coq au vin (Robert Carrier)

COQ – Chef aboard ship. Also the French word for cock and a synonym for chicken in certain dishes. Coq is usual on menus.

Coq en pâte – This dish is prepared with a fine chicken, and not a cock. It is much better if made as follows, in the old way:

Remove the breast bone from the dressed chicken. Stuff the bird generously with foie gras and truffles cut into large pieces, seasoned with salt and spices, moistened with Cognac and with some delicate forcemeat. Truss the chicken en entrée (i.e. the legs inserted into the sides).

Brown in butter on all sides. Cover with a matignon, made with 1 medium carrot, 1 onion, 1 small stick celery, all chopped, softened in butter and seasoned with salt, pepper, thyme and powdered bay. Add 75 g. (3 oz.) finely sliced lean raw ham at the end of cooking. Wrap the chicken in a pig's caul soaked in cold water, or in salt pork. Place on an oval base of Lining pastry (see DOUGH), made from 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) flour, 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) butter, 1 egg, 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) water, 1½ teaspoons salt. Cover the chicken with more pastry, join the edges and pinch together. Brush with egg. Make an opening in the pastry to allow the steam to escape. Cook in a hot oven for 1 hour.

Chicken cooked in pastry is more often prepared like this: Stuff the chicken and brown it in butter, as described above. Place in a terrine which exactly contains it. Cover with pâte à foncer (as above). Brush with egg and cook in the oven.

Coq en pâte should be served with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Coq au vin (from an old recipe) – Cut a young chicken into six pieces. Heat 100 g. (4 oz.) diced lean breast of pork, and several button onions in 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter in an earthenware pot. When browned, put in the pieces of chicken, a finely chopped garlic clove, a bouquet garni, morels (q.v.) or other mushrooms. Sauté, with the lid on, until golden. Remove the lid and skim off the fat. Add a little good brandy, flame, and then pour on ½ litre (scant pint, 2½ cups) old Auvergne wine. Cook on a good heat for 15 to 20 minutes. Remove the chicken and pour over the sauce, thickened with the blood of the chicken, mixed with the pounded chicken liver and some brandy. Do not cook the sauce after this liaison, or it will curdle. The sauce may be thickened with Kneaded butter (see BUTTER), instead of the blood.

COQUE DU LOT – Cake made in the region of Lot for the Easter celebrations.

Ingredients. 1 kg. (2¼ lb., 9 cups) flour, 6 whole eggs, 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter, 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) sugar, 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) citron, cut in long, thin slices, 25 g. (1 oz., 1 cake) yeast, flavouring made of a third each of lemon essence, orange-flower water and rum.

Method. Make a dough like Brioche dough (see DOUGH). When risen, shape into an oval loaf. Leave it to rise again. Bake in a hot oven.

COQUERET – Popular name for the strawberry-tomato, of which the fruit is edible. Common in the south of Europe.

COQUES À PETITS FOURS – Two of these are joined with a stiff fruit marmelade or other composition, and glazed with Fondant icing (see ICING).

Pound 500 g. (18 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) dry blanched almonds with 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar. Add 12 stiffly beaten egg whites. Mix well.

Pipe through a forcing-bag into balls on a sheet of grease-proof paper. Sprinkle with icing sugar. Cook in a slow oven.

The mixture can also be made as follows:

Grind 500 g. (18 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds and mix with 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar, and 5 egg whites. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) potato flour, 1 teaspoon powdered vanilla and 5 stiffly beaten egg whites.

COQUETIER – Egg-cup used to keep boiled eggs upright when served in their shells. Also applied to tradespeople dealing in eggs and poultry.

Coquille for roasting

COQUILLE – Kitchen utensil which is filled with charcoal. Used for roasting joints on a spit.

The name is also given to dishes of fireproof porcelain, tempered glass or metal made in the form of a shell. The deep shell of the scallop is used in the same way.

Various preparations are put in these shells: salpicons, purées, ragoûts, chicken fillets, fish or shellfish. These are covered in various sauces, sprinkled with grated bread-crumbs and grated cheese, and browned in the oven or under the grill (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Scallop shells, garnished).

CORDÉE – A pastry is said to be cordée when too much water has been used in the mixing. Such pastry is as hard as leather.

CORIANDER. CORIANDRE – The rounded fruits of this plant are about 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) in diameter, pale in colour, with an aromatic smell, and a taste both sweet and bitter. It is used to flavour spirits and to season many foods, including meats, cheeses, pickles, salads, soups, puddings and pastries.

CORKSCREW. TIRE-BOUCHON – Implement with a spiral thread, which can be flat or rounded, used to pull the cork from a bottle. There is less risk of cutting or breaking the cork with a rounded stem.

CORN (Maize). MAÏS – Also known as Indian corn and corn-on-the-cob. This plant is of South American origin. It was cultivated by the Peruvians before the arrival of the Spanish settlers.

Corn was introduced into France in the sixteenth century and many varieties are now grown there. It flourishes in the wine-growing districts.

The grain is enclosed in a fibrous casing with tasselled tops. Its flour makes a bread which is very popular in America. It contains a high proportion of oil but does not keep. Corn is relatively poor in nitrogenous substances, but quite rich in lipids and carbohydrates. In some regions it is eaten as porridge or polenta, cakes or bread. The grains can be grilled, boiled or made into popcorn or cornflakes.

Ear of corn (maize) (Nicolas)

Fresh corn-on-the-cob is not much used in French cooking. In America, on the other hand, it is eaten in quantity.

Fresh corn à la béchamel. MAÏS FRAIS À LA BÉCHAMEL – Boil the cobs as for Boiled fresh corn-on-the-cob I. Strip the cobs and mix the corn with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Boiled fresh corn-on-the-cob I. MAÏS FRAIS AU NATUREL – Choose fresh corn cobs. They should be tender and milky. Boil them in salt water for 15 minutes, with or without their leaves.

Drain the cobs. Fold back the leaves, if not already stripped, to expose the cob. Serve fresh butter separately.

Corn-on-the-cob can also be steamed.

Boiled fresh corn-on-the-cob II. MAÏS FRAIS AU NATUREL – Sever the stem at the base. Remove the green leaves and the silky threads. Plunge into unsalted boiling water with milk –  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) milk to every 5 litres ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  quarts,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  quarts) water. Boil quickly for 10 minutes.

Corn bread (American cookery). PAIN DE MAÏS – Mix 500 g. (18 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) cornmeal, 250 g. (9 oz., generous 2 cups) sieved wheat flour, 4 teaspoons sugar,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons baking powder,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter in a bowl.

Blend in 4 egg yolks beaten with  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) milk and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) double cream, stirring as little as possible. Fold in 4 egg whites, whisked into a stiff froth, and pour into well-buttered muffin pans, filling them three-quarters full.

Bake in a hot oven for 25 or 30 minutes. This bread is served hot, straight from the oven, at breakfast.

Fresh corn in butter. MAÏS FRAIS AU BEURRE – Strip the cobs and proceed as for Peas in butter (see PEAS).

Fresh corn in cream. MAÏS FRAIS À LA CRÈME – Strip the cobs and proceed as for Peas à la crème (see PEAS).

Grilled fresh corn. MAÏS FRAIS GRILLÉ – Put the cobs on a gridiron and cook in a hot oven. When the grains have swollen and are a good colour, take the cobs out of the oven. Grilled corn may be stripped, or served on the cob.

Corn en suso with chicken giblets (Créole cookery). MAÏS EN SUSO AUX ABATIS DE POULET – Suso is a porridge made from cornmeal. It must not be too thick and should be simmered slowly for a long time.

Cut the giblets into equal pieces. Brown in fat and add a little water. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) tomato purée and season. When completely cooked, drain off the stock and keep it to moisten the flour.

CORNELIAN CHERRY

Wash some cornmeal. Put it in the pan in which the giblets have been browned, together with chopped onion. Add the giblets, the stock gradually, and cook slowly.

CORNELIAN CHERRY. CORNOUILLE – Tart, red fruit, the size of an olive, which is preserved in honey or sugar. It is preserved in pickle, like olives, and used for jelly. It is also called a cornel.

CORNET – This word has the following meanings:

1. A twist of paper used for wrapping.
2. A horn-shaped pastry.
3. A thin slice of ham, tongue, or other meat, rolled into the shape of a horn.
4. Term used in butchery, in France, for the larynx of a carcass.

Cornet for decorating. CORNET À DÉCORER – Paper cornet, which was used for decorating cold dishes. Replaced in pâtisserie by the forcing-bag (pastry bag).

Carême, in the Discours préliminaire du Pâtissier royal, says, 'I must give an honourable mention to the man who invented the paper cornet, used to decorate and embellish our modern sweets with meringue.'

'I have been told that this ingenious idea belonged to a fashionable pastry-cook in Bordeaux; others have said that it was another pastry-cook in Bordeaux. Whoever he was, I am grateful to him for this delightful innovation; I regret not being able to associate his name with that of men of reputation.'

This remark implies that the paper cornet was not used in pâtisserie until the beginning of the nineteenth century. This seems improbable, if one thinks that in preceding centuries, especially in the eighteenth century, the decoration of cold dishes and sweets had been perfected.

Carême adds that one can use the cornet 'to form sponge fingers, croquettes à la reine and biscottes à la parisienne'.

CORNFLOUR or CORNSTARCH. FÉCULE DE MAÏS – White flour used for thickening, and in puddings. It is milled from corn (Indian corn or maize).

CORN OIL. HUILE DE MAÏS – Corn oil is used extensively in the U.S.A. for salad dressings, frying and as a shortening in baking.

CORN SALAD. MÂCHE – A variety of valeriana also known as lamb's lettuce. This plant grows wild in Europe, North America, North Africa and Asia Minor. It has been improved by cultivation, and is eaten in salad. In Europe it is on the market during the autumn. It was brought to America in the early part of the nineteenth century and is cultivated commercially and in gardens.

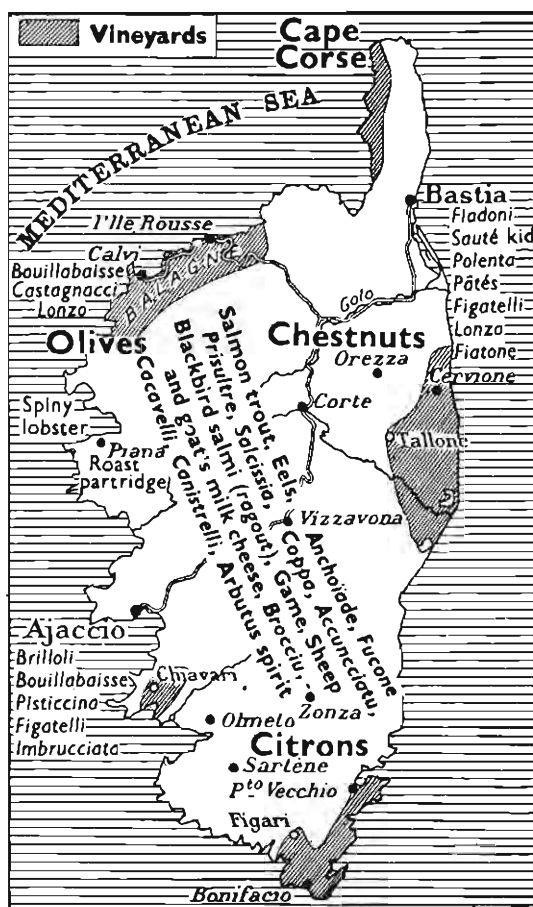

Corn salad can also be cooked like spinach (see SPINACH).

COROZO – White substance, used in industry, taken from the seed of the fruit of a palm tree. Corozo flour has been used as bran flour for bread, but this is forbidden today.

CORRECT. CORRIGER – In cooking, to correct a dish means to modify a too-predominant flavour by adding another savoury substance.

CORSICA. CORSE – Mediterranean island, which is a French département. Corsican cookery is simple. The Corsican is frugal. He no longer lunches dans le tiroir 'out of the drawer', (the main part of his meal consisting of chestnuts kept in the drawer of a cupboard); but he eats dishes based on fish, shellfish, and other fruits de mer, which are plentiful.

The sea around Corsica produces abundant fish, spiny lobsters and other shellfish. Lampreys and trout are found in the lakes and streams of the island. Corsica produces good vegetables, and plums, peaches, cherries, almonds, oranges and lemons grow in the orchards. Corsican figs are famous. Olives and chestnuts grow everywhere. Vines give wines of good quality. Arbutus trees, which produce red acid fruits reminiscent of strawberries, grow in the Maquis.

Sheep give good meat, goats are eaten young, and there are fine-quality pigs, from which several excellent types of charcuterie are made.

Game abounds in Corsica. Though rare, the mouflon, or wild sheep, is still found. In the forests are woodcock; and the blackbirds, fed on myrtle and arbutus, are succulent. The old French proverb which says faute de grives, on mange les merles (failing thrushes, one eats blackbirds) could hardly apply to Corsica, where the hunter who has killed a few of these delicate blackbirds, is upset if one or two thrushes are found among them.

The best Corsican cheese is Broccio, used for sweets such as fritelles and figadones. The ewes' milk cheese is sent to Roquefort, where it is made into blue cheese.

Corsican wines are varied, and some, without rivalling those of Guyenne, Burgundy, or the Côtes du Rhône, are excellent. Among them are those of Cap Corse, Porto-Vecchio, Cervione, Olmeto, Corte, and the heady Malvoisies, made in the neighbourhood of Cap Corse.

Culinary specialities – Among them are various fish soups, some of them like the Marseilles bouillabaisse, and flavoured with garlic, pimento, capicum, and saffron; the anchotade, similar to the one made in Nice; various hors d'œuvre; all kinds of shellfish and other fruits de mer, which are eaten raw or cooked in a court-bouillon. Also deserving special mention are stockfish, prepared in the same way as in Nice; langoustes cooked in a court-bouillon or braised; various local fish fried in olive oil, braised, baked in the oven, or cooked in various ways similar to those used on the mainland.

Other specialties are the lonzo, a fillet of pork, typical of the country (see LONZO); coppa, a highly flavoured sausage; prisuttu, raw ham; omelette au broccio; figatelli, a sausage made of pig's liver; ragoût of pork with beans; stuffatu of mutton; assaignes; pebronata of beef, braised beef flavoured with juniper; missiasoga made with goat's flesh cured in the sun; cabris and cabiros (kid), roasted or stewed; mississa, fillet of pork slashed, marinated, smoked and cooked on a grill; tripa, sheep's belly or intestines stuffed with a mixture of spinach, beet and fines herbes, combined with sheep's blood, tied up like a boudin (black pudding), and cooked in salted water.

Not to be forgotten are Corsican polenta, made as in Italy; accuncciatu, a stew of goat meat or lamb or mutton, with potatoes; and tripettes, made with sheep's small intestines cut into squares, fried, sautéed in lard with tomatoes and various condiments. The ragoût de mouflon is now rarely made, since the wild sheep have almost disappeared.

More exotic dishes include blackbirds which are roasted and wrapped in sage leaves, or made into salmis or pâtés; woodcock à la cacciatore; salmis of partridges; wild boar with pibronata sauce.

Among sweet dishes are brioli, made with chestnut flour; fritelle, a fritter with Broccio cheese; fladène, a tart made with Broccio and flavoured with vanilla; fijadone, a flan, panette douce, a bread made with eggs and sugar, decorated with raisins (eaten at Easter); torta, a cake decorated with pine kernels or almonds and flavoured with aniseed; migliassis, cakes baked in the oven on chestnut leaves; preserves made with citron and other fruits; chestnuts cooked in various ways.

There is also an excellent liqueur called cédratine.

COTEAUX, ORDRE DES – The name coteaux was given in the seventeenth century to people of refined taste, who not only were able to distinguish the best wines, but had the same taste for everything which concerned good living.

The poet, de Villiers, wrote:

*Ces hommes admirables,
Ces petits délicats, ces vrais amis de tables,
Eux qu'on en peut nommer les dignes souverains,
Savent tous les coteaux où croissent les bons vins.
Et leur goût leur ayant acquis cette science,
Du grand nom de Coteaux on les appelle en France.*

These admirable men,

These fastidious people, these true friends of good living,
One can name them worthy sovereigns,
They who know all the slopes on which the good wine grows.

Their science having been acquired through taste,
They are called in France by the great name of Coteaux.

Connoisseurs of good living were jokingly called 'profès dans l'ordre des coteaux'.

The origin of this title is as follows: One day M. Lavardin, Bishop of Mans, was chaffing Saint-Evremond, who was dining with him, on his refinement. 'These gentlemen', he said, speaking of comte d'Olonne and of the marquis de Bois-Dauphin, 'exaggerate everything from the need to refine everything. They are not able to drink unless the wine comes from one of the hillsides of Ai, of Haut-Villiers, or Avenau.'

Saint-Evremond retold this criticism to his friends, and they repeated the words so often that in the end they were called 'les trois coteaux' (the three hillsides), after which the Ordre des coteaux very soon came into being.

COTIGNAC – Quince paste. The most famous is the one made industrially at Orléans.

CÔTOYER – French culinary term which means to turn a joint in the oven.

COTRIADE or BRETON BOUILLABAISSE – As in the bouillabaisse, the more fish there are in the cotriade, the better.

These fish should be chosen from among the following: sardine, mackerel, John Dory, daurade (chrysophrys), baudroie (sea devil), hake, conger eel, gurnet, red mullet, etc. One or two large fish heads can be included.

Heat some butter or lard in a cauldron (on a wood fire) and cook quartered onions in it. When the onions turn pale gold, moisten with water, allowing  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) per person. Add potatoes cut in quarters, thyme, bay and other herbs. Bring to the boil. Put the sliced fish on top of the potatoes. Cook rapidly.

Put slices of bread in a tureen and pour in the liquor. Serve the fish separately, on a large dish, with the potatoes.

COUCHER – French term, meaning to force stuffing, pâté or purée on to a baking sheet with a forcing-(pastry-) bag using a round or fluted nozzle.

COUCH GRASS. CHIENDENT – Common plant, the rhizomes of which are infused as a diuretic.

COUCOUZELLE – French name for the fruits of a variety of gourd which is picked before it is fully grown. They are called courgettes in France, and zuchetti or zucchini in Italy.

COULAGE – Disease of grapes. Also waste resulting from inadequate supervision in kitchen work.

COULIBIAC (Russian cookery) – A hot fish pie. Plumerey gives the following recipe in L'Art de la cuisine française au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle:

'In St Petersburg, this pie is made with salmon and soudac, but on state occasions with sterlet (the most prized fish in Russia).

'In Paris, where we have neither of these fish, they are replaced by turbot. The description given here is for twelve to fourteen persons. It is easy to increase or diminish it according to the number of guests.

'Take a 10-cm. (4-inch) slice of salmon and the same amount of turbot; remove the flesh and cut it into 12 square pieces. Chop plenty of parsley, spring onion, some chives and two punnets (small baskets) of mushrooms and put them in a large sauté pan with 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) butter; salt; pepper; allspice; clove; nutmeg and cinnamon. When they are softened, add  $\frac{1}{2}$  glass Madeira, put in the pieces of fish and simmer gently until cooked.

Take out the pieces of fish and let them cool. Put a good tablespoon Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE) into the fines herbes, boil down, and put in a basin for use later on.

'Hard-boil 6 eggs and chop the whites and the yolks. Put 225 g. (8 oz.) kache (buckwheat) into a pan with the same volume of water, some butter, and salt. When it begins to boil, remove from the heat. Mix in 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fine butter, and cook for 15 or 20 minutes. The buckwheat will swell like Indian rice; the grains must be separate from one another. Pour out onto a plate.

'Take some Brioche dough (see DOUGH), less fine than usual. Roll it out twice. Make it into 2 sheets, one  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (1 inch) thicker than the other. Lay the thicker one on a baking sheet, spread some buckwheat on it, then a layer of fish, another layer of buckwheat, finer herbes, sauce, the eggs, and so on, until everything is used. Cover with the second sheet of dough, trim, moisten the edges, and draw up the edges of the lower sheet so that it covers the edge of the upper. The pie must be the shape of what is called a pantin in Paris. Moisten it outside and cover lightly with breadcrumbs. Put it in a gentle oven for 1½ hours, and serve straight from the oven, with melted butter.

Petits coulibiacs de poulet à la russe (Russian chicken pie) (Plumerey's recipe) – Chop parsley, mushrooms and spring onions, and cook them in butter. Add a little blanched, chopped horseradish, salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. When this seasoning is browned, add a small spoonful Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE). Boil down, and take off the heat. Add cooked breast of chicken cut into large dice, 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) rice which has been cooked in good consommé, and chopped hard-boiled eggs. Put on a plate to cool.

Roll out some puff pastry four times. Let it rest for 10 minutes, roll it out to a thickness suitable for little patties and cut them out. Lay 24 rounds of pastry on a damp metal sheet and moisten them. Put a lump of the mixture on each, cover and press together to close. Moisten them, and sprinkle with freshly grated breadcrumbs.

Cook in a medium oven for 25 to 30 minutes; give them a good colour and serve.

These patties are served as a hot entrée.

COULIS – In the past, sauces in general were called coulis (cullis). More precisely, coulis are the juices which run out of the meat during cooking.

Some authors say that liquid purées should be called coulis, and that this word should not be used except for chicken purées, game purées, fish purées and those of shellfish and vegetables.

Some of these coulis can be served as soup. The principal type is potage à la reine.

As well as juice, coulis is what we call veal stock (fonds de veau), and what Carême called blond de veau.

In modern practice the word coulis is often used for thick soups which are made with a purée of shellfish: coulis d'écrevisses (crayfish cullis), coulis de crabes (crab), de homard (lobster), de crevettes (prawns), is often used instead of bisque d'écrevisses, etc.

COULOMMIERS CHEESE – See CHEESE.

COUPAGE – Mixing of various wines to obtain a commercial blend of colour, strength, and uniform taste.

COUP D'AVANT – The glass of wine, of liqueur or any alcohol which is taken immediately before a meal. This term is hardly used now. It is used more often for the generous glass of wine which is drunk after the soup. This custom has been passed from generation to generation, and is still found in different countries, in particular in rural communities.

The picturesque language of the Middle Ages gave names to the different drinks which were imbibed in particular circumstances. At court, and among the great, there was the vin du coucher (night-cap); in the middle of the meal, the coup du milieu (this custom still exists in Champagne). At a time when hardly anyone travelled except on horseback the glass of wine which was taken when setting out was given the name of coup de l'étrier (stirrup cup).

COUP DE FEU – The effect which is created by a joint being charred.

Also used in professional cookery for the hours devoted to serving up a meal.

COUP DE VIN – The amount of wine that can be drunk in a single gulp.

COUPE JACQUES – Fruit soaked in liqueurs and covered with various ices (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

COURGETTES – See ITALIAN MARROWS.

COURT-BOUILLON – An aromatic liquor (liquid) in which meat, fish and various vegetables are cooked.

Court-bouillon I, à la grecque, for marinating vegetables. COURT-BOUILLON À LA GRECQUE, POUR LÉGUMES MARINÉS – Put 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) olive oil, 7 dl. (1½ pints, 1½ pints) water and the strained juice of 2 lemons in a pan. Add a bouquet garni of parsley roots, celery, fennel, thyme, bay; 12 to 15 coriander seeds and the same number of peppercorns. Boil for 20 minutes. Use according to instructions. This amount is enough for 25 to 30 small artichokes or an equal quantity of other vegetables prepared à la grecque.

Court-bouillon II, à la grecque, for marinating fish. COURT-BOUILLON À LA GRECQUE, POUR POISSONS MARINÉS – Gently simmer 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) finely chopped onion in 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) olive oil. Do not allow the onion to brown. Moisten with 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) white wine, 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) water and the strained juice of 1 lemon.

Add an unpeeled, crushed garlic clove, a bouquet garni of 2 parsley roots, a sprig of thyme, a bay leaf, and a sprig of fresh fennel; 10 or 12 coriander seeds, and 2 sweet pimentos, skinned and cut into strips. Season with ¾ teaspoon salt and a pinch of freshly ground pepper.

Boil for 15 minutes. Use according to the recipe. This amount of court-bouillon is enough for 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) fish (net weight).

Court-bouillon III, salt water. COURT-BOUILLON À L'EAU SALÉE – This consists of salt water in the proportion of 1½ teaspoons salt to 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) water. It is used to poach various fish such as sea perch, sea dace, coalfish, cod, white fish, haddock, etc.

Court-bouillon IV, for salmon and salmon trout. COURT-BOUILLON POUR SAUMONS ET TRUITES SAUMONÉES – Made with water; lemon juice or vinegar; sliced onions and carrots; parsley; thyme; bay leaf; salt and peppercorns. These fish can also be cooked in a white wine court-bouillon.

Court-bouillon V, for lobster and other shellfish. COURT-BOUILLON POUR LANGOUSTES ET AUTRES CRUSTACÉS – Made with water; thinly sliced carrots and onions; parsley; thyme; bay leaf; salt and peppercorns.

Court-bouillon VI, for lobster and other shellfish. COURT-BOUILLON POUR LANGOUSTES ET AUTRES CRUSTACÉS – Often used for cooking shellfish. It is made with salt water flavoured with thyme and bay.

Court-bouillon VII, au bleu, for river trout, carp, pike. COURT-BOUILLON AU BLEU, POUR TRUITES DE RIVIÈRE, CARPES ET BROCHETS – Made of salt water and vinegar, flavoured with carrots and sliced onions, parsley, thyme, bay leaf, salt and pepper. (see TROUT, Blue trout).

Court-bouillon VIII, white wine, à la hongroise. COURT-BOUILLON AU VIN BLANC, À LA HONGROISE – Melt 1 large tablespoon minced onion in 1 tablespoon butter until soft. Season with salt, paprika pepper, and a bouquet garni.

Moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) dry white wine. Boil for 8 minutes.

This court-bouillon is used for fish prepared as hors-d'œuvre. It can be made with olive oil instead of butter.

Court-bouillon IX, vegetable. COURT-BOUILLON AUX LÉGUMES – Cook 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) finely chopped onion and 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) finely chopped carrot in a tablespoon butter or oil. Season with salt and pepper. Add 2 crushed garlic cloves and a bouquet garni.

Moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) dry white wine. Boil for 10 minutes. This is used for fish and other food served as hors-d'œuvre.

Court-bouillon X, au vert – Cook 100 g. (4 oz.) sorrel leaves; 25 g. (1 oz.) very young nettle leaves; a few sprigs of parsley; 1 tablespoon each of savory, burnet and green sage; 1 teaspoon tarragon and a sprig of thyme in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Season with salt and pepper. Moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) white wine. Cook for 8 minutes.

Used for small fish cooked au vert (set to stiffen in herbs before the white wine is added).

After the fish is cooked, the court-bouillon is thickened with egg yolks, and made acid with a few drops of lemon juice. (See EEL, Eels au vert).

Court-bouillon XI, white wine, for fish in marinade. COURT-BOUILLON AU VIN BLANC, POUR POISSONS MARINÉS – Put into a pan 2 small tender carrots cut in thin scalloped rounds; 1 small onion cut in thin slices; 2 finely chopped sticks of celery; 2 sliced shallots; a small handful of parsley stalks; 2 sprigs of thyme and a bay leaf.

Moisten with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) white wine and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) vinegar. Season with salt and freshly ground pepper. Boil for 15 minutes. Pour, with the vegetables, over fish prepared à la marinade (see MARI-NADE). Cook according to the instructions given in the recipe.

The vegetables in this court-bouillon should be correctly sliced and scalloped, as they are usually served with the marinated fish.

Court-bouillon XII, white wine, à la mirepoix (for braised or poached fish). COURT-BOUILLON AU VIN BLANC, À LA MIREPOIX – Simmer 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) vegetable mirepoix (q.v.) (carrot, leek, onion, celery, thyme, powdered bay leaf) in butter, and moisten with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) dry white wine.

Boil down by two thirds. Add 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) fish fumet (q.v.). Boil for 10 minutes. Use according to instructions.

Court-bouillon XIII, Champagne, à la mirepoix. COURT-BOUILLON AU VIN DE CHAMPAGNE, À LA MIREPOIX – Made in the same way as Court-bouillon XII, using Champagne instead of white wine.

Court-bouillon XIV, red wine, à la mirepoix. COURT-BOUILLON AU VIN ROUGE, À LA MIREPOIX – Made in the same way as Court-bouillon XII, using red wine from Burgundy or Bordeaux instead of white wine. Mushroom peelings can be used for all court-bouillons à la mirepoix.

Simple court-bouillon XV, for meats and offal – Cover 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) each of shredded carrot and onion; 1 bouquet garni; 10 peppercorns and 1 clove of garlic with salted water. Boil for 10 to 15 minutes before adding the meat.

Court-bouillon XVI, white, for meat. BLANC POUR VIANDES – Used for cooking certain offal (variety meats), such as sheep's tongues and feet, calves' heads, and cocks' combs and kidneys.

Proceed as for Court-bouillon XIX (see below) adding one medium-sized carrot cut in quarters; one onion studded with a clove; and a bouquet garni (q.v.).

Put the meat into the boiling court-bouillon.

Court-bouillon XVII, white, for cooking calf's head. BLANC POUR CUIRE LA TÊTE DE VEAU – Mix flour with cold water, using 1 heaped tablespoon per litre (scant quart, generous quart) water, until smooth. Strain. Pour into a saucepan large enough to take the head, either whole, cut in half, or in pieces. Season with 1 teaspoon salt and add 1 tablespoon vinegar per litre (scant quart, generous quart) water. Bring to the boil, add 1 large onion studded with 2 cloves, and a bouquet garni made of a sprig of parsley, thyme and a bay leaf. When the stock is boiling, put in the calf's head wrapped in a fine muslin cloth. Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) beef or veal fat, chopped and soaked in cold water. The fat will melt and form a protective layer over the calf's head and will prevent it from going black.

Court-bouillon XVIII, white, for mushrooms. BLANC POUR CHAMPIGNONS – Also used for other vegetables. Bring 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, the juice of ½ lemon and 1 teaspoon salt to the boil in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water.

Mushrooms or other vegetables are cooked in this liquor when it is boiling.

Court-bouillon XIX, white, for vegetables. BLANC POUR LÉGUMES – Used for cooking vegetables which are liable to turn dark, such as chards, cardoons, artichoke hearts, salsify, etc.

Mix 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) flour into a smooth paste with 4 tablespoons (½ cup) water. Add 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water, mix, and strain through a fine sieve. Season with 1 teaspoon salt. Add the juice of ½ lemon and 2 or 3 tablespoons raw, chopped suet.

Boil for a few moments. Add the vegetable to be cooked.

This court-bouillon can be spiced with an onion studded with a clove, and a bouquet garni (q.v.), but this is not necessary if the ingredients cooked in it have to be seasoned at the final stage of cooking.

The court-bouillon cooks the vegetables and keeps them white. It is with this in view that suet (or butter) is added, as it forms a layer which protects the vegetables from contact with air.

A couscous bowl

COUSCOUS or COUSCOUSSOU – North African dish, dating from the earliest times. It is made with millet flour, or with crushed rice, and meat (mutton, chicken, etc.).

Some authors say the word couscous means becquetée (pecked at), from the food which a bird takes in its beak and rolls in small bits to feed its young. Leon Isnard wrote in a book on African cooking:

'It seems that the word couscous is a Gallic version of rac keskes, meaning crushed small. The word derives phonetically from the names koskos, keuscass, koskosou, kouskous, used in different parts of North Africa for a pot of earthenware or alfa glass in which semolina is steamed. The pot, which is pierced with holes is set on top of another similar one containing boiling water or stock.

'The inhabitants of North Africa used this name for all kinds of dishes made with flour, white or brown (buckwheat flour), and steamed in the keskass, a receptacle similar to a basin.

'But we think that the word couscous or couscoussou is onomatopoeic, simulating the noise made by the steam as it passes through the holes of the utensil in the process of cooking.

'In Kabylia, the word sekjou is used; in the Mozabite dialect oucheou. However, for some unknown reason the people of Oued-Rigt have adopted the word gouni, borrowed from the Berbers.'

There are many ways of preparing couscous.

Cooking the crushed grain by steaming. CUISSON DE LA SEMOULE À L'ÉTUUVÉE – Soak the crushed grain in water until swollen. Place in the cooking vessel (a colander or strainer, fitted over a pan, can be used), without pressing it down.

Put some water or stock to boil in the pot, in the proportion of 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) to 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) couscous (i.e. crushed grain). When the liquid begins to boil, put the uncovered vessel containing the crushed grain on top of the pot. (The vessel in which the grain is steamed must never come into contact with the boiling water.)

Place a damp cloth between the two vessels at the point of contact to prevent the steam escaping round the edge. When the steam begins to rise, cook for 40 minutes. Remove from the heat. Turn the grain on to a large plate. Fork it over to work out any lumps. Moisten with two glasses of water and a tablespoon oil. Add salt and pepper.

Leave for 15 minutes. Return the pot to the heat, and when the water boils put the couscous back in the steaming vessel. Steam for a further 20 minutes.

Cooking the crushed grain in boiling water. CUISSON DE LA SEMOULE PAR ÉBULLITION SPONTANÉE – The steaming vessel is dispensed with. Soak the couscous in the same way as above. Throw it into the boiling water or stock, stirring meanwhile. Use 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) strained stock, or milk or water. Add butter and draw off the heat after 15 minutes. Leave it for a moment, but serve very hot, with meat or vegetables.

Armenian couscous. COUSCOUS ARMÉNIEN – Prepared like the Arab couscous, with crushed grain, chick-peas, slices of carrots and new turnips, pieces of white cabbage, and hashed mutton, all browned in oil. Hot pimento sauce is served separately.

Moroccan couscous. COUSCOUS MAROCAIN – Sieve 500 g. (18 oz.) finely ground hard wheat into a deep dish. Add water, drop by drop, working it with the hands until it is reduced to a fine consistency; without this working a lumpy mass will result. Put the grain in a strainer and steam it over a bain-marie or pan of hot water for 15 minutes. Put the couscous in a pan and separate the grains with the hands, adding lukewarm water. Cook for another 10 minutes, then separate it out again. Mix in butter and salt. Raisins can be added, if liked.

R. Pinet's recipe for tagine, which always accompanies the couscous, is as follows:

'For 12 people: 2 large quartered chickens, a neck of mutton cut for sautéing. Brown the meat in chicken fat with 4 large carrots and 4 diced onions. Sprinkle with a tablespoon ground red pepper, and moisten generously with mutton and chicken stock. Add crushed tomatoes, a bouquet garni, celery, and a sachet containing peppercorns, cloves, saffron, cinnamon and cumin.

Add equal quantities of quartered artichokes, garbanzos, (chick-peas), turnips, beans, marrow and diced courgettes.

Cook for 1 hour. The ragoût should be immersed in the stock and served in earthenware pots, without removing the fat.'

Mutton couscous 'chtitra'. COUSCOUS AU MOUTON

'CHTITRA' – For 6 or 8 persons, prepare and steam 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) couscous.

Put into a pot a leg of mutton cut into pieces; 3 chopped cloves of garlic; 3 small-chopped red peppers; 2 soup spoons sweet red pepper powder; 1 teaspoon each of oil, salt, pepper, parsley and chopped chervil.

Moisten with 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water. Simmer for 3 hours or more. When cooked and ready to serve, add 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter to some of the liquor from the meat, and pour over the couscous.

Arrange the couscous on a large dish, place the meats on top, and serve with the rest of the sauce.

COUSINETTE (Béarnaise cookery) – Soup made with spinach, sorrel, lettuce, and other finely chopped green herbs.

COVER. COUVERT – Word used in various ways.

It is applied to the implements set out on a table which has been laid. The expression lever or enlever le couvert (to clear the table) means clearing the table once the meal is over. The word also applies to the number of guests present at a meal: un diner de 20, de 100 couverts (a dinner of 20, or 100 people). More often the word couvert de table (table-setting) means the three implements used by the diner: the knife, the fork and the spoon.

Although together they form a logical collection, the knife for cutting, the fork for piercing solid food and the spoon for liquids, several centuries separate their discovery.

The oldest is the knife. Man's first need, even in primitive times, was to make a tool to cut up the meat obtained by hunting. As the use of bronze and iron was still unknown, he used flint and obsidian, a volcanic substance. Fragments of obsidian have the advantage of being both hard and sharp. Fitted between two bands of wood or bone, bound with plaited fibres, a piece of obsidian made one of the first knives. Placed at the end of an arrow or spear, it became a weapon. Later, bronze, iron and steel replaced obsidian for knives. According to Ammien Marcellin, bronze knives, made in one piece, were used by the Gauls, who used them to divide the largest pieces of meat. From the tenth century, the town of Beauvais had the monopoly for their manufacture.

The fork, which originally had only two prongs, was invented later than the knife.

The spoon was probably contemporary with the knife, as it would have been essential for liquids. At first it was a simple shell with a wooden handle. Metal spoons were made at least as early as metal knives. Many bronze spoons survive from excavations and can be seen in museums. They are of different shapes and sizes, some rounded, others elongated, similar to the spoons used today. Among these objects in museums there are only one or two early forks, which do not seem to have been used for eating. In the fourteenth century, even amongst the splendid silverware in palaces, there were far more spoons than forks. Piers Gaveston, the favourite of Edward II, owned sixty-nine silver spoons and three forks. These, according to the inventory, were designed for eating pears. Queen Clemence of Hungary (1328) left thirty spoons and a single fork at her death. M. le comte de Laborde writes, 'From the thirteenth century forks existed for exceptional dishes, but were not in common use.' Under the influence of a famous beau, M. de Montausier, the fork became generally used during the seventeenth century.

Not only has the couvert (place setting) made up of these three pieces become widely used today, but many implements, designed to fill particular needs have been developed. There are settings for luncheon, sweets, cakes, dessert, fruit, fish, or crayfish. There are spoons for absinth, porridge, jam, coffee, ices, infusions, liqueurs, mocha, eggs, syrup, soda, tea, or for glasses of water. There are special forks for winkles, snails, oysters, vegetables, fish and melons.

These three basic implements which make up the couvert are augmented by special implements for eating lobster, artichokes, asparagus, snails etc.

COW. VACHE – The cow is the female of the bovine species and is generally bred for milk or for reproduction. The meat of barren cows, or heifers, is more sought after than that of bullocks.

The flesh of old cows, worn out by bearing calves and by lactation, is tough and of inferior quality. Developments in milk production have meant that the herd is renewed more often, and milking cows discarded earlier. When they reach the butcher their meat is often of good quality, since breeders fatten them beforehand so that they are in the best possible condition.

COW-PARSNIP. BERCE – Weed of the family Umbelliferae, common in marshy places, in meadows and hedges. In Siberia its young shoots are eaten like asparagus. In Lithuania and Poland its leaves and seeds are made into a potent beer.

CRAB. CRABE – Shellfish of the order Decapoda. Many species are edible.

Crabs and shellfish in broth (Créole cookery). CRABES ET CRUSTACÉS EN BOUILLON – Soften chopped onion, tomato, pounded ginger, thyme, 2 cloves garlic, and the parts of the crab not usually eaten in some fat. Set aside the edible parts. Moisten the ingredients in the pan with broth and simmer gently for 2 hours. Sieve, pressing to obtain a thick sauce. Put some fat and a teaspoon each of saffron and chopped pimento in a casserole. Lightly brown the pieces of crab or other shellfish and pour the sauce over them. Cook for some minutes and serve hot with Rice à la créole (see RICE).

Cold crab. CRABE FROID – Cook a crab in court-bouillon, suitable for all shellfish, made from water, thyme, salt and a bay leaf. Leave to cool. Garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with Mayonnaise sauce, Tartare sauce, Gribiche sauce or Green sauce (see SAUCE).

In England, cold crab is sold already prepared (dressed crab). The meat, mashed with two forks, is seasoned with a sauce made from the crab's liver, English mustard, oil and vinegar, and is put back in the shell. The preparation is smoothed with a knife and decorated with egg yolks and chopped parsley. The crab is served with a Mayonnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Crab au gratin. CRABE AU GRATIN – Cook a large crab in court-bouillon (q.v.). Let it cool. When cold, remove the claws and legs. Using the point of a knife, make an incision underneath the crab's shell so as to detach the upper part.

Remove the meat from claws, legs and shell. Cut the meat into large dice, or mash with two forks. Clean the hollow shell with hot water and cover the bottom with a few tablespoons Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) to which the crab's liver and the creamy parts, finely pounded, are added. Replace the meat and cover with more sauce. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour on some melted butter and brown in a moderate oven.

CRACK (Small and large). CASSÉ (PETIT, GROS) – Degrees in cooking sugar (see SUGAR).

CRACKNEL (Biscuit). CRAQUELIN – Knead 250 g. (9 oz., 2½ cups) sifted flour with 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter, 2 egg yolks, 8 tablespoons (¾ cup) cold milk, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar and a pinch of salt.

Leave the pastry to rest for 2 hours. Roll it out ¼ cm. (¼ inch) thick, and cut into 5-cm. (2-inch) squares. Arrange on a baking sheet. Brush with egg and cook in a very hot oven. Sprinkle with vanilla-flavoured sugar.

How to prepare crab

1. To twist off the legs and claws, wipe crab with damp cloth. Place on back with tail flap facing. Remove claws and legs by twisting inwards and towards you

2. To separate body from shell, place thumbs under tail flap and push upwards until the body breaks away from the shell

How to prepare crab (continued)

3. To remove mouth and stomach bag, place shell with mouth facing you. Press thumbs down and forward on mouth until this, and stomach bag attached, breaks away with a click

4. To remove the stomach, take hold of the mouth and stomach bag and carefully remove them; they should come away in one piece. Discard them

5. To remove meat, ease around inside shell with handle of a spoon, loosening soft brown meat. Turn all the meat into a basin, leaving the shell clean

6. To trim shell, tap 'false line' around shell cavity with knife handle, press with thumbs until edges of shell wall break away neatly. Scrub and dry the shell and oil lightly

7. Taking body of crab, discard 'dead men's fingers'. Remove brown meat, adding to basin. Scoop white meat from leg sockets, keeping free from bone; put in second basin

8. Twist first joint off claws to remove meat. With back of heavy knife tap sharply round centre of claw's broadest part until the shell cracks apart; empty both into white meat basin

CRAMIQUE (Belgian pâtisserie) – Brioche bread which has currants in it.

CRANBERRY or MOSSBERRY – Fruit of a small edible shrubby plant which grows in the boggy regions of North America and Europe. Cranberries look like small cherries and their colour varies from a clear pink to a deep red. They have an acid, slightly bitter flavour and are unpleasant eaten raw. They may be made into a compote or jelly, which has a delicate taste. Cranberry jelly is traditionally used with game and fowl, such as duck and goose.

Here is Dr Leclerc's recipe for cranberry jelly. Cover the berries with water and cook for 15 minutes, until they are soft. Add 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar for each 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) fruit and cook again until a thick syrup is made. This forms a jelly when cool.

CRANE. GRUE – Wader, seldom used for food nowadays. The Romans prized this bird, which they fattened specially to give it a richer flavour. In the Middle Ages, the crane was among the game birds eaten in the best society. It can only be eaten very young and is cooked in the same way as bustard (see BUSTARD).

CRAPAUDINE (À LA) – Preparation of fowl, particularly of pigeon (q.v.).

Some authors say that this name comes from the word crapaud (toad) and was given to the dish because the birds, trussed in this way, resemble toads.

CRAQUELIN – A cake which is so called because, being very dry, it crunches between the teeth. It is made in different ways; sometimes in the same way as Reims biscuits, sometimes with a dough (pâte à chaudés).

CRASSANE – Juicy variety of pear with aromatic flesh. (See PEAR.)

CRAYFISH (Freshwater). ÉCREVISSE – There are three principal varieties of crayfish: the red-clawed crayfish (under-part of the claws red) which is the largest of the French varieties and has delicate flesh: the white-clawed crayfish which is smaller – not more than 65 to 75 g. (2½ to 3 oz.); and the slender-clawed crayfish which is imported from central Europe and is of mediocre quality.

Whichever method of cooking is chosen for crayfish, it is necessary first of all to remove the media lamina of the tail flukes to which is attached a small black sac. If this is not discarded it spoils the delicate flavour. Approximately one fifth of the gross weight of a crayfish is edible.

Female and male crayfish

Crayfish bisque or coulis. BISQUE (COULIS) D'ÉCREVISSES – Thick soup made with crayfish cooked à la mirepoix. While pounding the crayfish in a mortar, add some cooked rice. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Purée of crayfish soup.)

Crayfish à la bordelaise. ÉCREVISSES À LA BORDELAISE – Make a fine mirepoix of vegetables. Toss the crayfish in butter separately. Season with salt, pepper and spices.

Pour brandy over the crayfish and set alight. Moisten with white wine. Add the mirepoix and cook together for 20 minutes. Drain the crayfish and put them in a deep dish. Bind the cooking stock with 3 or 4 egg yolks. Add a generous piece of butter. Season well. Mask the crayfish with this sauce and serve at once, piping hot.

Bush of crayfish. BUISSON D'ÉCREVISSES – A buisson is a small bush or clump. Cook the crayfish in court-bouillon as for Crayfish à la nage (see below). Leave them to cool.

Ingredients for crayfish à la bordelaise

Special dish for arranging crayfish

Arrange them on a special dish, fixing them by their tails to the points on the dish. Garnish with bunches of fresh parsley.

Crayfish croûtes. CROÛTES AUX ÉCREVISSES – Using Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see below), proceed as for Mushroom croûte (see MUSHROOM).

Crayfish flan with cheese. FLAN AUX ÉCREVISSES GRATINÉ – Fill a flan crust baked blind (baked pie shell) with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see below). Sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour on melted butter and brown in the oven.

Crayfish as a garnish. ÉCREVISSES POUR GARNITURE – Wash and gut the crayfish. Truss them (fasten the claws to the tail) or leave as they are, according to the recipe. Put them in a boiling court-bouillon of water, salt, thyme and bay leaf. Boil until cooked. Use them hot or cold.

Crayfish à la liégeoise. ÉCREVISSES À LA LIÉGEOISE – Cook the crayfish in a court-bouillon as for Crayfish à la nage (see below). Drain and arrange them in a deep dish. Strain the cooking stock and boil down to a quarter of its volume. Mix in 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter for 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) stock. Whisk thoroughly. Pour this sauce over the crayfish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Crayfish à la marinière. ÉCREVISSES À LA MARINIÈRE – Sauté the crayfish in butter over a very hot flame. When they are browned, season with salt, pepper, powdered thyme and bay leaf, and moisten with enough dry white wine to cover them.

Cover the saucepan and boil for 12 minutes. Remove the crayfish. Boil down the stock and add some meatless velouté. Remove from the heat and mix in 2 or 3 tablespoons butter. Pour this sauce over the crayfish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Crayfish mousse à l'ancienne (cold). MOUSSE FROIDE D'ÉCREVISSES À L'ANCIENNE – Cook 36 medium-sized crayfish à la mirepoix. Drain them and shell the tails. Pound the shells in a mortar with the mirepoix, adding 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) cold meatless velouté and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) melted aspic jelly.

Rub this mixture through a sieve and put it in a saucepan. Add 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) fresh partly whipped cream, and the crayfish tails, shelled and diced.

Line a charlotte mould with white paper and fill the mould with the mixture. Leave to chill on ice, or in a refrigerator, until just before serving.

Turn the mousse onto a serving dish. Decorate with slices of truffle dipped in half-set jelly. Surround with chopped aspic jelly.

Crayfish mousse (cold). MOUSSE FROIDE D'ÉCREVISSES – Make the mousse as in the previous recipe and arrange in a charlotte mould lined with aspic jelly and decorated inside with shelled crayfish tails and strips of truffles.

Crayfish mousse can also be served completely covered with aspic jelly.

Crayfish mousselines à la Nantua (hot). MOUSSELINES D'ÉCREVISSES À LA NANTUA – Use Fine cream forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) made with fillet of pike or whiting mixed with a purée of crayfish tails. When the forcemeat is ready, add chopped crayfish tails. Fill small buttered moulds with this mixture. Stand in a dish of water and poach in the oven.

Turn out the mousselines on a dish, each one set on a round of bread fried in butter, or, if preferred, placed straight on the dish. Cover with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate the top of each mousseline with a thick piece of truffle.

Crayfish mousseline can be served with various garnishes and covered with a sauce chosen to blend with these garnishes: cancalaise, normande, cardinal, Victoria, etc.

Mousselines are also used to garnish large braised fish. They can be served in tartlets baked blind (empty), or with artichoke hearts cooked in butter. The same mixture can be used to make large hot mousses which are poached in charlotte moulds standing in water.

Crayfish mousselines (cold). MOUSSELINES FROIDES D'ÉCREVISSES – These are made with a mousse mixture prepared as in the recipe for Crayfish mousselines à la Nantua (hot). Line small moulds with jelly, and decorate with crayfish tails and truffles. Fill the moulds with the mousse mixture and chill on ice.

Crayfish à la nage. ÉCREVISSES À LA NAGE – Remove the intestinal matter from the centre of the tails of 48 crayfish. Wash them and plunge immediately into a court-bouillon prepared as follows:

Slice 3 small carrots into thin rounds, and put them in a saucepan with 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) small finely chopped onions, 4 sliced shallots, a small crushed clove of garlic, a sprig of thyme, half a bay leaf, and a handful of parsley heads. Moisten with 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) white wine and 2 dl. (¼ pint, scant cup) water. Season with salt and freshly ground pepper. Cook for 15 minutes.

Cook the crayfish in this court-bouillon for 10 minutes, tossing from time to time. Season with cayenne pepper and leave to cool in the cooking stock.

Crayfish puffs. FRIANDS AUX ÉCREVISSES – Proceed as for Crayfish rolls (see below) using flaky pastry cut into triangles.

Crayfish rolls. CHAUSSONS AUX ÉCREVISSES – Cut small rounds from a rolled-out layer of Flaky pastry (see DOUGH). Put a heaped tablespoon of Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua in the centre of each round when cold. Roll up and seal the edges. Brush the tops with egg and lightly score. Bake in a slow oven. Serve hot.

Crayfish rolls des Dames de Bous. CHAUSSON DE QUEUES D'ÉCREVISSES DES DAMES DE BOUS – 'Cook 100 crayfish à la mirepoix with white wine, seasoning rather highly.' According to Mme. de Loiseau, residuary legatee of the recipes of Mme. de Marron, this seasoning should be a mixture of 'all the main types of pepper'.

'With the shelled tails of the crayfish, make a Ragoût à la Nantua (see below), finishing it as indicated in the recipe for this ragoût. Leave to cool. At the same time, poach soft carp roes in white wine and also leave to cool.

'Roll out a round layer of Flaky pastry (see DOUGH) and place on a baking sheet. Spread it on one side only with the ragoût and with the soft roes enriched with thick slices of truffles seasoned with salt, pepper and spices, and sprinkled with liqueur brandy.

'Roll into a scroll, carefully sealing the edges. Score light diagonal lines on the scroll, brush with egg, and bake in a hot oven.

'When it is ready, pour a little hot Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) into the scroll through the opening.'

Fried crayfish rolls. RISSOLES AUX ÉCREVISSES – Proceed as for Crayfish rolls. Make the rolls as shown in the recipe. Deep-fry them instead of baking them in the oven. When they are a good colour, drain them and season with table salt. Garnish with fried parsley.

Crayfish tails au gratin. GRATIN DE QUEUES D'ÉCREVISSES – Prepare the crayfish tails as for Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see below). Put the ragoût in a buttered ovenware dish. Sprinkle with grated cheese, preferably Parmesan. Pour on melted butter. Brown slowly in the oven.

Crayfish tails au gratin à la façon de maître La Planche. GRATIN DE QUEUES D'ÉCREVISSES À LA FAÇON DE MAÎTRE LA PLANCHE – Using crayfish cooked à la mirepoix, prepare a ragoût of crayfish tails thickened with highly seasoned crayfish purée.

Put this ragoût in a buttered ovenware dish with layers of fresh truffles cut into thick slices, seasoned and tossed in hot butter. Sprinkle with finely grated cheese. Brown in a moderate oven, standing the dish in warm water to prevent the sauce from curdling.

Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua. QUEUES D'ÉCREVISSES À LA NANTUA – Make 1½ dl. (½ pint, ¾ cup) mirepoix by cooking a mixture of finely diced carrots, onions, and celery, with powdered thyme and bay leaf, in butter until tender. Toss 48 crayfish tails in this mixture. Season with salt and pepper. Moisten with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) white wine. Cover the saucepan and cook for 10 minutes.

Drain the crayfish. Shell the tails. Pound the shells and the mirepoix in a mortar and add béchamel sauce to this purée as shown in the recipe for Nantua sauce (see SAUCE).

Put the crayfish tails in a small pan with a tablespoon butter. Heat without browning. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon flour and mix thoroughly. Moisten with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) thick cream. Mix.

Leave to simmer on low heat for 8 minutes. Add the Nantua sauce, prepared separately. Remove from the heat and add 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) butter.

According to how this ragoût is to be used, the whole or only part of the Nantua sauce made with the pounded shells is added to it. If it is to be used as the only filling of a vol-au-vent or pie, and if the tails of the crayfish are small, more tails will be needed. If intended as a garnish, it can be served with other garnishes such as mushrooms, truffles, oysters, etc.

Crayfish tails in shells. COQUILLES DE QUEUES D'ÉCREVISSES – Line silver, fireproof china or glass shells with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Pipe a narrow border of Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES) round the shell.

Arrange 6 to 8 shelled crayfish tails on the sauce. Cover with more Mornay sauce, and sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour on melted butter and brown quickly in the oven.

Crayfish tails can be prepared in shells in the same way, using different sauces and garnishes, à la normande, à la cardinal, with mushrooms, etc.

Crayfish timbale à l'ancienne. TIMBALE DE QUEUES D'ÉCREVISSES À L'ANCIENNE – Prepare Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua. Line a shallow pie dish with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Line with a thin layer of Fine pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Mix coarsely diced truffles tossed in butter, and left to cool, with the ragoût; fill the pie with this.

Cover the ragoût with a layer of pike forcemeat, cover the pie with pastry and seal. Decorate with flaky pastry motifs.

Make a small hole in the pastry lid to allow the steam to escape. Brush with egg. Bake in a slow oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour.

When the pie is ready, pour into it a few tablespoons of thin Nantua sauce (see SAUCE).

Crayfish timbale à la mode de Chavillieu. TIMBALE DE QUEUES D'ÉCREVISSES À LA MODE DE CHAVILLIEU – Cook crayfish à la mirepoix with white wine. Drain them, shell the tails and put the tails in a pan with melted butter. Pound the shells in a mortar and divide the purée in half. With one half make Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Mix the rest of the crayfish purée with an equal quantity of Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), diluted with fresh cream. Rub this purée through a sieve with a spatula.

Heat the crayfish tails in the butter, without browning. Pour on some fresh cream and blend in the crayfish purée. Mix over heat. Moisten with thick fresh cream. When the ragoût has thickened, mix in some of the crayfish butter. Season with cayenne pepper and flavour with liqueur brandy. Keep hot in a double saucepan.

Prepare separately 24 forcemeat balls with lavaret stuffing. (This is a cream stuffing made with filleted fish, egg whites and thick fresh cream.) Poach the forcemeat balls slowly and keep them hot. Fill a pie crust of fine pastry, baked blind (empty), with alternate layers of crayfish tail ragoût and forcemeat balls. The pie must be hot when filled. Cover with Nantua sauce (made with the rest of the purée and the crayfish butter), and decorate with large slices of truffle, seasoned with salt and pepper, tossed in butter and flavoured with liqueur brandy. Serve very hot.

Crayfish vol-au-vent. VOL-AU-VENT AUX ÉCREVISSES – Make a vol-au-vent case (see VOL-AU-VENT). Fill with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua.

Little crayfish vol-au-vent, barquettes or tartlets – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

CREAM (from milk). CRÈME DU LAIT – Cream not only contains globules of fat, used for butter, but also a proportion of water, casein, lactose and mineral salts (see MILK).

There is a difference between single cream which is obtained by skimming milk that has been left to settle in shallow bowls, and which contains 10 to 20 per cent butter, and double cream, which is obtained by a separating machine and which must contain at least 30 per cent butter. Possible adulterants are starch, fecula (potato flour) and gelatine. These are easy to detect as they give the cream a mealy or gluey flavour.

Since cream is largely composed of fatty substances, sufferers from liver complaints should not eat it. Healthy people should use it sparingly.

CREAM CHEESES. FROMAGES À LA CRÈME – See CHEESE.

CREAM HORNS À LA CHIBOUST. CORNETS FEUILLETÉS À LA CRÈME, DITS À LA CHIBOUST – Ingredients (for 12 cornets). 500 g. (18 oz.) Puff pastry (see DOUGH), 150 g. (5 oz., generous ½ cup) fine sugar, 5 egg yolks, 4 egg whites, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) flour, ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) milk, ½ vanilla pod or a few drops vanilla essence and a pinch salt.

Method. Make the pastry as for Puff pastry (see DOUGH) and roll it out 2 mm. (¼ inch) thick. Cut into 12 strips, 3 cm. (1 inch) wide and 25 cm. (10 inches) long. Roll these strips round cornet moulds.

Arrange the cornets on a wet baking sheet; leave for 10 minutes. Brush them with egg and bake in a hot oven for 12 to 15 minutes. When nearly cooked, sprinkle with icing sugar, glaze, and take them out of the oven as soon as they glisten.

The cream. The base of this preparation is the Crème pâtissière (French pastry cream). Put the sieved flour, sugar and salt in a pan. Add the egg yolks and whip until the mixture is smooth.

Moisten with the milk, which has been boiled with ½ vanilla pod. Mix carefully and cook on a good heat, beating until the cream is the right consistency. The cooking must be rapid, not more than 5 minutes. This makes the crème pâtissière. To obtain the crème Chiboust, add 4 stiffly beaten egg whites, while the mixture is still hot.

CREAMS

Fill the cornets with the cream when cold. Use a forcing-bag with a round nozzle, or a cornet of greaseproof paper.

CREAMS. CRÈMES – The French word crème applies to whipped cream; butter and custard creams used to garnish pastries and cakes; custard cream sauces; and soups.

Almond cream. CRÈME D'AMANDES – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 3½ cups) almonds, 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) fine sugar, 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) butter, 8 eggs.

Method. Pound the peeled almonds with the sugar, moistening with two of the eggs. When the almonds have formed a paste, add the softened butter. Continue to work the mixture, adding the rest of the eggs one by one.

Butter creams. CRÈMES AU BEURRE – There are two ways of making butter creams, which are used for garnishing cakes and pastries. One combines butter with Custard cream (see below) and the other is made with sugar syrup, beaten egg yolks and butter. Both types of butter cream may be flavoured with mocha, praline, chocolate, vanilla or any liqueur.

Butter cream (with custard) I. CRÈME AU BEURRE – Make a Custard cream (see below). Beat it until it is lukewarm. Add 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) butter in small pieces for every 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) custard, beating all the time. Flavour with vanilla sugar, or other flavouring, according to the recipe.

Butter cream (with custard) II. CRÈME AU BEURRE – Ingredients. 12 egg yolks, 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) fine sugar, 2 dl. (¾ pint, scant cup) fresh cream, 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) butter, 1 vanilla pod, or 1 teaspoon vanilla essence.

Method. Work together the sugar, egg yolks, vanilla and cream in a basin.

Put the basin over a low heat or over a pan or casserole half-full of hot water, and whip the mixture until it becomes frothy, light and white. Remove from the heat and continue to whip until it cools. Mix this custard with the creamed butter.

Custard creams can be flavoured in various ways; with vanilla; lemon, orange or mandarin zest; with coffee, tea or liqueurs.

Butter cream with syrup. CRÈME AU BEURRE AU SYROP – Boil 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) sugar and 3½ dl. (generous ½ pint, 1½ cups) water to 104°C. (220°F.), making generous 5 dl. syrup. Infuse the chosen flavouring (vanilla, zest, etc.) in the syrup. Gradually pour the boiling syrup over 12 egg yolks, beating constantly. Pass through a fine sieve and add 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) butter. Mix well.

Chantilly cream. CRÈME CHANTILLY – To make 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart), put ½ litre (scant pint, 2½ cups) thick fresh cream in a basin. The cream should have been kept in a cool place, or on ice, for 24 hours, if possible. Beat the cream until it doubles its volume. Drain the cream on a fine sieve. Add 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) fine sugar and 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar or a few drops vanilla essence.

Chantilly cream with fruit. CRÈME CHANTILLY AUX FRUITS – This can be made with all kinds of fruit pulp, but strawberry or raspberry are the most suitable. Add to the whipped cream a third of its volume of fruit pulp, passed through a fine sieve.

Chocolate cream I. CRÈME AU CHOCOLAT – Pour 2 dl. (¾ pint, scant cup) warm water over 125 g. (4 oz., 1½ cups) grated chocolate. Stir over a gentle heat until the mixture boils, then simmer for 15 minutes. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ½ cup) fresh thick cream and 1 tablespoon butter.

Usually served hot but can be served cold.

Chocolate cream II. CRÈME AU CHOCOLAT – Add melted chocolate to ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) Custard cream (see below).

Custard cream. CRÈME À L'ANGLAISE – Work 8 egg yolks, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar, and a small pinch of salt in a pan with a spatula, over a gentle heat, until the mixture forms ribbons when the spatula is lifted. Moistens gradually with 5 dl. (scant pint, 2¼ cups) boiled milk, flavoured, according to taste, with vanilla or lemon or orange zest.

Mix well. Keep the pan on the heat, stirring all the time, until the contents almost boil. At this point the custard should cling to the spatula.

Pass the custard through a fine sieve and keep it warm in a bain-marie (double boiler) if required to accompany a hot pudding, or turn it out into a basin and keep in a cool place if to be served cold. In the latter case, it should be stirred while cooling to prevent a skin forming.

This custard can be made more cheaply by using fewer egg yolks (6 instead of 8) and by adding to the egg yolk and sugar mixture a teaspoon of arrowroot or fecula (corn or potato starch). This gives a thicker consistency to the custard and prevents it from clotting if allowed to overheat.

It is used cold, with the addition of gelatine, for cold sweets, such as bavarois (q.v.), charlottes (q.v.), Rice à l'impératrice (see RICE), etc.

Custard cream with gelatine. CRÈME À L'ANGLAISE COLLÉE – Used for cold sweets (desserts). Prepare the custard as described above. When it is cooked, add 25 g. (1 oz.) gelatine which has been soaked in cold water. Stir while it dissolves. Strain the custard, and stir while it cools.

Custard cream with liqueurs. CRÈME À L'ANGLAISE AUX LIQUEURS – Prepare the custard cream in the same way as Custard cream with gelatine. When it is cool, add a tablespoon of liqueur: Curaçao, kirsch, maraschino, rum, etc.

Custard cream au miroir. CRÈME AU MIROIR – Custard cream glazed with a salamander or hot poker.

Custard cream filling for waffles I. CRÈME POUR FOURRER LES GAUFRES – Whip 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) icing sugar, 200 g. (7 oz., 1 cup) praline in a slightly warmed basin. When well blended, use as a filling for waffles.

Custard cream filling for waffles II. CRÈME POUR FOURRER LES GAUFRES – Cook 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) lump sugar and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water till it reaches the ball stage (see SUGAR). Skim and strain the syrup. Put 15 egg yolks in a basin. Pour the sugar syrup over them, letting it fall in a thin thread. Mix. Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter worked into a cream. Add 200 g. (7 oz., 1 cup) praline, beating all the time.

Although praline flavouring is given for these creams, one can also use coffee, chocolate, vanilla or orange flavouring.

Custard cream flavoured with tea. CRÈME À L'ANGLAISE AU THÉ – Prepare like Mocha custard cream, replacing the coffee with a strong infusion of tea.

The custard can also be made by adding to the egg yolk and sugar mixture milk in which tea leaves have been infused (without boiling).

Frangipane pastry cream. CRÈME PÂTISSIÈRE, DITE FRANGIPANE – Ingredients. 200 g. (7 oz., 1¼ cups) sifted flour, 4 whole eggs, 6 egg yolks, 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) milk, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) fine sugar.

Method. Mix the whole eggs, egg yolks, flour and sugar in a pan over low heat. When they are smooth and form a ribbon when the spatula is lifted out of the pan add the milk and butter. Cook over the heat, stirring continuously with the spatula. Add the crushed macaroons. Cook, stirring from time to time, to prevent a skin forming.

French pastry cream or Confectioner's custard. CRÈME PÂTISSÈRE – This filling is much used in pâtisserie for large and small gâteaux, and in the preparation of puddings, both hot and cold. We give two ways of making it, the first being the more economical.

First method. Put 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sifted flour, 175 g. (6 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) fine sugar, a small pinch of salt, 1 tablespoon good quality butter and 4 whole eggs in a thick-bottomed pan. Work the mixture with a spatula or wooden spoon.

Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) boiling milk in which a vanilla pod has been infused, or to which a few drops of vanilla essence have been added. Stir and put the pan on the heat. Let it boil for a few minutes, stirring constantly to prevent the cream from catching on the bottom of the pan.

Turn into a basin. Stir the cream from time to time as it cools.

Second method. Follow the same procedure, but modify the ingredients: 65 g. (2½ oz., 10 tablespoons) flour, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar, 6 egg yolks,  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) milk flavoured with vanilla, a pinch of salt.

Mocha custard cream. CRÈME ANGLAISE AU MOKA – Prepared in the same way as a simple Custard cream, but the mixture of egg yolks and sugar is moistened with milk in which some freshly roasted coffee beans have been infused. (The infusion is made by heating the milk and coffee beans without allowing it to boil.)

Plombières cream. CRÈME PLOMBIÈRES – 'Put 8 egg yolks and 1 tablespoon rice flour in a casserole. Add 3 glasses (cups) good milk which is almost boiling: put the pan on a moderate heat and stir continuously with a wooden spoon. When the mixture begins to thicken, remove from the heat and continue to stir until smooth. Cook for a few minutes longer. This cream must be of the same consistency as an ordinary French pastry cream. Mix in 175 g. (6 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) fine sugar and a minute pinch of salt. Pour the mixture into another pan and set it on ice, stirring from time to time. It thickens as it cools. Just before serving, mix in a good half glass of liqueur and a saucerful of whipped cream. The whole, well amalgamated, should produce a light, velvety cream of a perfect consistency. Arrange the cream in a silver dish, or in small pots, a pastry-case, a specially made biscuit-case, or in a dish-shaped container of almond paste'. (From le Cuisinier royal by Viard and Fouriet, 1828).

Praline custard cream. CRÈME PRALINÉ – Add praline to Custard cream.

St Honoré cream. CRÈME SAINT-HONORÉ – This is French pastry cream to which stiffly beaten egg whites are added when the cream is still boiling. Use 16 egg whites for a cream made with 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) milk, 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar and 16 egg yolks.

CREAM SAUCE – See SAUCE.

CREAM SOUPS. CRÊMES, POTAGES – Thickened soups, based on cereal, vegetables, fowl, fish or shellfish. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS.)

CRÉCY (À LA) – Name for various preparations, especially a soup called purée Crécy. All dishes named in this way include a garnish of carrots and some are exclusively made from carrots (see SOUPS AND BROTHS).

This name has been given to various dishes because of the high quality of the carrots harvested at Crécy, a small town in the Seine-et-Marne.

Some authors insist that the name of this soup comes from that of a small town in the Somme, near which the Battle of Crécy took place in 1346. Monselet leans towards this view, as can be seen from his sonnet called la Purée Crécy:

*Aux jours de dime et de taille
Crécy fut une bataille,
Dont le pays maltraité
Garde la plaie au côté.
Combat d'estoc et de taille!
De cette cruelle entaille,
O contraste! Il n'est resté
Qu'un potage réputé.
Le temps a, pour nos détresses,
D'irrésistibles caresses
Dont chaque âge est adouci.
Légumes taillés en pièces
Disent seuls, en ce temps-ci
Les grands combats de Crécy!*

This sonnet is a play on the word taille, and is really untranslatable. The sense is this: In the days of tithes and taxes there was a battle at Crécy from which the district suffered greatly. Of this cut-and-thrust fighting, this cruel slashing, nothing remains but a famous soup. Time has a way of healing distress, and vegetables cut into pieces are the only record of the great fights at Crécy.

CRÉMANT – Word used for Champagne wines which have only a small amount of creamy froth.

CRÈME (À LA) – Name given to meat and vegetable preparations, of which the pan juices are mixed with fresh cream e.g. Mushrooms à la crème (see MUSHROOMS).

CRÈME RENVERSÉE – Made like Caramel custard (see CUSTARD). Custard cream poured into a mould, cooked in the oven in a bain-marie and turned out when cold.

CRÊMETS D'ANGERS, DE SAUMUR – Cream cheeses to which egg whites are added. They are prepared by gradually adding fresh stiffly whipped cream and whipped egg whites, beating all the time, so that the various elements are properly amalgamated. The mixture is put in perforated moulds, covered with fine muslin, and left to drain in a cool place. To serve, the crêmets are turned out of their moulds and covered with fresh cream.

CRÉOLE (À LA) – Term for various culinary preparations, usually containing a rice garnish, prepared as a pilaf or à la créole and finished with sweet peppers simmered in oil, and with tomatoes.

A la Créole can also apply to sweet dishes. Most of these are prepared with rice, and flavoured with orange.

CRÊPE. PANCAKE – A dish made of a batter of eggs and flour, poured sparingly into a frying-pan, and fried on both sides.

Crêpe batter I. PÂTE À CRÊPES – Mix 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) fine sugar, a small pinch salt, and a vanilla pod (or a few drops vanilla essence, added after the eggs). Add 8 whole eggs and 4 yolks, one by one, working the batter with a wooden spoon until well mixed.

Add  $\frac{3}{4}$  litre ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints) milk, and 2 to 3 tablespoons Cognac or other liqueur, and 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, which has been heated until light brown.

The batter should be made in advance and left to stand.

Crêpe batter II. PÂTE À CRÊPES – Mix 500g. (18oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) flour, 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fine sugar, and a pinch of salt. Add 10 eggs. Work the mixture until it is smooth, and add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fresh cream,  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Cognac, 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) melted butter and 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) milk. Strain through a fine sieve. Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) orgeat syrup, and 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) finely crushed macaroons. Flavour to taste.

Crêpes filled with strawberries

Crêpe batter III. PÂTE À CRÊPES – Mix 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) flour, 150 g. (5 oz., generous ½ cup) fine sugar, a pinch of salt, 10 eggs. Work the mixture and add 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) cream and ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) milk. Flavour to taste.

Crêpe batter IV. PÂTE À CRÊPES – Mix 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sifted flour, 150 g. (5 oz., generous ½ cup) fine sugar, a pinch of salt, 4 whole eggs and 5 yolks. Work the mixture; add 1 litre (1¼ pints, generous quart) milk and finish with 6 stiffly beaten egg whites. Flavour to taste.

Savoury crêpe batter. PÂTE À CRÊPES SALÉES – This is used for soup garnishes and hot hors-d'œuvre. Work 250 g. (9 oz., 2¼ cups) sifted flour and 4 eggs together in a basin; season with 1½ teaspoons salt. Moisten with ¾ litre (1½ pints, 1¼ pints) milk, which has been boiled down by one third. The milk can be replaced by stock or broth.

Alsatian crêpes. CRÊPES ALSACIENNES – Pancakes made from a crêpe batter, filled with redcurrant or raspberry jelly, sprinkled with sugar and glazed in a hot oven.

Apple crêpes. CRÊPES DE POMMES – See APPLE, Crêpes stuffed with apples.

Buckwheat crêpes, called galetous. CRÊPES AU BLÉ NOIR, DITES GALÉTOUS – Put 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) olive oil in a basin with 2 small glasses brandy, 2 pinches salt, 2 cups sour milk, 500 g. (18 oz., 4¼ cups) buckwheat flour. Mix well. Add 8 whole eggs, one by one, and work the mixture thoroughly to avoid lumps.

Cook the pancakes on a griddle which has been rubbed with butter or fat. This is a Breton speciality.

Crêpes à la cévenole. CRÊPES À LA CÉVENOLE – Make the crêpes in the usual way, with a sweetened batter. When they are cooked cover each one with a thin layer of a purée of marrons glacés, flavoured with rum.

Roll up the pancakes and arrange on a fireproof dish. Glaze them in the oven.

Potato crêpes – See POTATO, Potato pancakes.

Crêpes as a soup garnish, and for other purposes. CRÊPES POUR GARNITURE DE POTAGES – Prepared in the ordinary way, with unsweetened pancake batter, or with Savoury crêpe batter. (See GARNISHES.)

Crêpes Chartreux. CRÊPES DES CHARTREUX – Prepare a pancake mixture and add crushed macaroons, grated zest of an orange and some fine Champagne. Cook the pancakes in the usual way.

Serve with creamed butter blended with crushed meringues and flavoured with green Chartreuse. Finish as for Crêpes Suzette (see below).

Raspberry crêpes. CRÊPES AUX FRAMBOISES – Cover thin pancakes with raspberry purée, made by removing stems of raspberries and soaking them in sugar and liqueur. Thicken with French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Roll up the pancakes and trim them on a slant at both ends. Sprinkle with icing sugar and glaze in a hot oven.

Crêpes with Roquefort. CRÊPES AU ROQUEFORT – Make small pancakes with unsweetened batter. Spread them with the following mixture:

Work 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Roquefort cheese into a paste. Add 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Season with pepper and nutmeg.

Roll up the pancakes. Arrange them on a fireproof dish, sprinkle with grated cheese, and glaze in a hot oven.

Crêpes with Gruyère, Parmesan, Cantal, Brie, and Edam cheese can be made in the same way.

Crêpes Suzette – Make thin pancakes with a batter flavoured with Curaçao and mandarin orange juice.

Spread them with the following mixture:

Cream 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) fine sugar with 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter. Add the juice of a mandarin orange, its grated zest, and 1 good tablespoon Curaçao. Work the mixture with a spatula.

Spread the pancakes with this filling, fold them into four, and serve hot.

CRÉPINETTES – Small sausages, encased in caul. Most similar preparations are enclosed in a layer of forcemeat. Paper-thin slices of salt pork can be substituted for the caul.

Crêpinettes, however made, are usually covered in melted butter or other fat, coated with fresh breadcrumbs and grilled. They can be sautéed or cooked in the oven.

Very small crêpinettes are called Pieds cendrillon. In the past they were wrapped in sheets of special paper and cooked on hot cinders. Nowadays they are cooked in the same way as crêpinettes, or enclosed in a thin sheet of fine pastry and cooked in the oven.

When they are grilled, or cooked in the oven, crêpinettes are usually accompanied by a purée of potatoes. They can also be served with a strongly seasoned sauce, or, if they are truffled, with a Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

When crêpinettes are truffled, the stuffing includes diced truffles, whatever the basic ingredient is, and a large slice of truffle is placed on top of the stuffing before enclosing it in the caul.

Crêpinettes cendrillon – See PORK, Cinderella pork crêpinettes.

Chicken crêpinettes. CRÉPINETTES DE VOLAILLE – Made with minced fowl, combined with truffles and mushrooms in a concentrated Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) in the same way as Lamb crêpinettes (see below).

Lamb crêpinettes. CRÉPINETTES D'AGNEAU – Prepared with minced lamb, mushrooms, truffles and a white or brown sauce, enclosed in a delicate forcemeat and wrapped in caul.

Pork crêpinettes. CRÉPINETTES DE PORC – Flat sausages.

Crêpinettes Sainte-Menehould – Made with minced pig's trotters, bound with concentrated brown veal gravy (with or without diced truffles) enclosed in a fine pork forcemeat (with or without truffles), and wrapped in caul.

Truffled crêpinettes. CRÉPINETTES TRUFFÉES – Made with sausage meat, or with a fine pork forcemeat and diced truffles. Divide into portions weighing 100 g. (4 oz.). Wrap each portion in a piece of caul.

Cover the crêpinettes with melted butter and grill under a gentle heat. Serve with a purée of potatoes and Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Veal crêpinettes. CRÉPINETTES DE VEAU – Made with minced veal, combined with a white or brown sauce, in the same way as Lamb crêpinettes.

CRESS. CRESSON – Name given to two separate plants which have similar properties. One is watercress, the other garden cress.

Jam croissants (Austrian pâtisserie)

To these two species should be added lady's smock, the leaves of which are sweeter than those of watercress. They are eaten in spring salads. Rock cress is eaten in salad in the Vosges, and is more bitter than watercress. There is also wild cress.

Cress has a slightly bitter taste, like that of mustard.

The cress most used in cooking is watercress. It is used raw, to garnish grilled and roast meats, or in salad. Although it is excellent cooked, it is not often treated in this way.

Cress contains iron, sulphur, calcium and, most important, iodine (which is easily assimilable). It also contains a large quantity of antiscorbutic Vitamin C. Wild cress should not be eaten as it can transmit parasites. When cress is to be eaten raw, it should be picked over carefully, the thicker stems and yellowing or faded leaves removed, and the rest quickly washed and drained. It should not be left to soak in water. For recipes see WATERCRESS.

CRESTED LARK. COCHEVIS - See LARK.

CRETAN DITTANY. DICTAME DE CRÊTE - Aromatic labiate formerly used in treacle. It is sometimes used in the manufacture of liqueurs.

CREUX (Wine) - French term applied to wine which lacks body.

CREVER (To burst) - The use of the word crever gives many people the mistaken belief that rice should be cooked to the point of bursting, when it becomes a glutinous, insipid mass (see RICE).

CRICKET. CRIQUET - Insect of the same family as the grasshopper. It is eaten in some countries.

CROCK POT - A crock pot, commercially produced under a variety of trade names, is an electrically operated counter-top well-insulated cooking appliance that cooks food at a low temperature for many hours. Manufacturers' research kitchens have invented a large repertoire of recipes, but the crock pot is particularly useful for such foods as stews, soups, baked beans, etc.

CROCODILE - Reptile with strong-smelling flesh. It is eaten in some countries for its alleged restorative properties. (See ALLIGATOR).

CROISSANT - Crescent-shaped roll generally made with pâte feuilletée (puff pastry), or with a leavened dough for which the recipe is given below.

This delicious pastry originated in Budapest in 1686, when the Turks were besieging the city. To reach the centre of the town, they dug underground passages. Bakers, working during the night, heard the noise made by the Turks and gave the alarm. The assailants were repulsed and the bakers who had saved the city were granted the privilege of making a special pastry which had to take the form of a crescent in memory of the emblem on the Ottoman flag.

Put 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) sifted flour on the table, and place 20 g. (¾ oz.) dry yeast in the middle of the flour. Moisten the yeast with a little lukewarm milk and incorporate one quarter of the flour. Let the dough rise.

Add a pinch of salt, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter and 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) milk. Mix these well with the remaining flour and the other dough, working it all together and moistening it, if necessary, with a little extra milk. The dough should be firm, rather than soft. Roll it into a ball, cover with a cloth and leave to rise.

Divide it into pieces the size of an egg. Using a rolling-pin roll the pieces out into ovals and then roll them up into crescents. Place them on a baking sheet and leave to rise. Brush with milk and bake in a hot oven. As soon as they are ready, baste with a mixture of 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) potato flour and ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) boiled water.

Bakers usually sell two sorts of croissants, those made with butter, and 'the others', which no law obliges him to declare are 'made with margarine'.

Almond croissants. CROISSANTS AUX AMANDES - Pound 300 g. (11 oz., 2 cups) peeled almonds and 300 g. (11 oz., 2½ cups) vanilla-flavoured sugar in a mortar, moistening little by little with egg white in sufficient quantity to obtain a paste which can be rolled out by hand. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour to this paste.

Divide into pieces the size of a nut, and roll these with floured hands into cigar shapes. Dip in beaten egg and roll them in chopped almonds. Shape them into crescents on sheets of paper laid on baking sheets. Brush with egg yolk. Bake for 8 to 10 minutes in the oven at medium heat, and then brush with sweetened milk.

Jam croissants (Austrian pâtisserie). CROISSANTS AUX CONFITURES - Cut some Puff pastry (see DOUGH) into triangular pieces. Put a teaspoon of jam on one side of each triangle, and roll up as for ordinary croissants. Put them on a baking sheet, brush with egg yolk, and bake at a good heat. When ready, sprinkle with fine sugar.

CROMESQUI - Small entrée or hot hors-d'œuvre made with a salpicon (q.v.) enclosed in a pig's caul (or slices of salt pork) dipped in batter and deep-fried. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

CROP. JABOT - A dilation of the gullet forming a pouch in birds, especially grain-eating birds. In the drawing of poultry and winged game, the crop is removed.

CROQUANT (Pâtisserie) - Petit four which, as its name indicates, crunches when bitten.

Pound in a mortar 250 g. (9 oz., 1¾ cups) almonds blended with 4 egg whites, added little by little. Add 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar and 1 tablespoon vanilla sugar or a few drops vanilla extract. Strain through a fine sieve.

CROQUE AU SEL

Make the paste into little boat-shapes, roll in brown sugar and put them on a buttered baking sheet. Bake in a very moderate oven.

CROQUE AU SEL (À LA) – Term for food which is eaten raw seasoned only with salt. Artichokes à la croque au sel are an example.

CROQUEMBOUCHE (Pâtisserie) – Made with ingredients which crunch between the teeth because they are glazed with sugar which is cooked au cassé (to the crack stage).

The typical croquembouche is that made of choux profiteroles filled with some kind of cream, glazed with sugar, and arranged one on top of the other.

Croquembouches can also be made of Genoese pastries, meringues, almond paste, and various fruits, the one most frequently made today being croquembouche of oranges.

Croquembouche of chestnuts (Carême's recipe) CROQUEMBOUCHE DE MARRONS GLACÉS – 'Grill 60 fine Spanish chestnuts, and after having peeled them and removed any traces of burning, glaze by dipping them in sugar cooked to the crack stage (see SUGAR). Place them, as soon as glazed, into a mould.

'The croquembouche has to be piled up at the last minute before serving, because the moisture contained in the chestnuts tends to soften the sugar and make it lose both its consistency and its brilliance.'

Croquembouche of oranges

Croquembouche of oranges. CROQUEMBOUCHE D'ORANGES – Dip segments of orange in sugar cooked to crack stage. Arrange them one on top of the other in a croquembouche mould. When the sugar is cold, lightly heat the periphery of the mould and remove the croquembouche. Set it on a pastry base, and complete by adding more orange segments dipped in glazing sugar, topping it with an aigrette of spun sugar. Decorate with preserved cherries glazed in sugar cooked to crack stage.

CROQUE-MONSIEUR – Hot sandwich served as an hors-d'œuvre or small entrée.

Cut slices from a fresh or stale loaf. Spread with butter on one side, and lay a thin slice of Gruyère cheese on top, with a slice of lean ham on top of that. Close the sandwich and fry until golden in clarified butter.

CROQUETS – Dry petits fours of which the most famous are those of the Bordeaux area.

Bar almond croquets. CROQUETS DE BAR AUX AMANDES – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar, 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) ground almonds, 275 g. (10 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 8 egg whites, 1 tablespoon vanilla sugar.

Method. Moisten the sugar and ground almonds in a basin with the egg whites worked in one at a time. Mix in the sifted flour and vanilla sugar. Arrange on a baking sheet in the shape of leaves, using a thin piece of card bent into leaf shape, or a special metal cutter.

Bake in a gentle oven. When ready, leave to cool on a marble slab. Store in a jar or tin, and keep in a dry place.

Bordelais croquets. CROQUETS BORDELAIS – Pound 300 g. (11 oz., 2 cups) peeled almonds in a mortar with 150 g. (5 oz., scant cup) unpeeled almonds, 275 g. (10 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sugar, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 2 whole eggs, the grated zest of a lemon or orange, a packet of powdered yeast and a pinch of salt.

Chop up and roll into the form of a large boudin (black pudding), slightly flattened at the edges. Place on a baking sheet. Brush with egg, score it, and bake for 15 minutes in a moderate oven. Cut into slices.

CROQUETTES – Small preparations made with a salpicon (q.v.) bound with a white or brown sauce and containing, as well as the basic ingredient, chopped mushrooms, truffles and sometimes lean ham.

They can also be made with potatoes or other vegetables, fresh or dried; with rice cooked in stock or water; with various forms of pasta combined with cheese and Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE); or with a hash or a forcemeat of various meats or fish.

Sweet croquettes are made with rice cooked in milk, with semolina, or with a salpicon of fruit combined with stiff French pastry cream (see CREAM). Croquets is the name given to a number of croquettes made with a basic element of pasta.

Preparation of croquettes – Mix a salpicon (q.v.) of 500 g. (18 oz.) of the principal element (poultry, game, veal, lamb or offal) cut up into very small dice with 250 g. (9 oz.) cooked, diced mushrooms and 100 g. (4 oz.) diced truffles. Moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira and heat in the oven in a covered pan.

Add 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) which has been boiled down and to which 3 egg yolks have been added after the desired thickness has been reached. Stir well over heat. Pour into a buttered baking dish, and dab the surface with butter to prevent a crust forming. Allow to cool completely before making the croquettes.

Croquettes made with fish or shellfish have only mushrooms and truffles added to them.

Divide the mixture into portions of about 50 to 75 g. (2 to 3 oz.). Roll these on a floured table, dip in a mixture of egg and olive oil beaten together, cover entirely with fine bread-crumbs, and shape them into corks, balls, eggs or rectangles.

Arrange them on a grill or in a frying basket, and plunge them into boiling oil. Cook until they are crisp and golden. Drain, wipe with a cloth, and sprinkle with fine salt.

Arrange the croquettes in the form of a pyramid or turban, and garnish with curled parsley.

When croquettes are served as an entrée, they are accompanied by a garnish of fresh vegetables to which butter has been added, or with a purée of vegetables.

Croquettes themselves if made very small can be used as a garnish for large roasts, for fowl, game or fish.

Recipes for the following croquettes will be found under HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre: beef, brains, cress, foie gras, game, lobster, oyster, vegetables, macaroni, Montrouge, cod, fish, potatoes, printanière, various meats, Viennoise, poultry, etc.

Apricot croquettes I. CROQUETTES AUX ABRICOTS – Cook 500 g. (18 oz.) apricots in syrup, drain dry, and cut them into large dice. Bind with 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) Fried custard (see CUSTARD), and flavour with kirsch. Leave to cool.

Divide it into 50 g. (2 oz.) portions, roll them in flour and in egg and breadcrumbs. Deep-fry and serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with kirsch.

Apricot croquettes II. CROQUETTES AUX ABRICOTS – Cook halved apricots in a vanilla syrup. Drain well, and fill each half with 1 tablespoon Frangipane pastry cream (see CREAMS), flavoured with kirsch. Put two apricot halves together and envelop in a coating of cooked semolina (see SEMOLINA). Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry. Serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with kirsch.

Brie cheese croquettes. CROQUETTES DE FROMAGE DE BRIE – Put 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) sifted flour in a casserole with 25 g. (1 oz., 3 tablespoons) rice flour. Moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk. Add 250 g. (9 oz.) Brie and 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter, both cut into small pieces. Season with salt, a pinch of cayenne, and a little grated nutmeg. Cook on a good heat, stirring until the mixture is thick enough. Spread it out on a buttered baking sheet and leave to cool. Cut into rectangular pieces, dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry.

This creamy mixture is also used to fill tartlets or barquettes served as a hot hors-d'œuvre.

Chestnut croquettes I. CROQUETTES DE MARRONS – Peel the chestnuts and cook them in a light syrup flavoured with vanilla. Sieve. Evaporate their moisture over heat, add 5 egg yolks and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter for 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) purée.

50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) of the purée makes 1 croquette. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry in boiling oil. Serve with apricot sauce flavoured with kirsch.

Chestnut croquettes II. CROQUETTES DE MARRONS – Crumble 500 g. (18 oz.) marrons glacés (see CHESNUTS). Add 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) French pastry cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with kirsch. Leave to cool and make into croquettes. Finish in the same way as for Apricot croquettes.

Gruyère cheese croquettes. CROQUETTES DE FROMAGE DE GRUYÈRE – Mix 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sifted flour in a pan with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) rice flour, 3 eggs and 2 egg yolks. Moisten with 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) boiled milk; season with a pinch of salt, a small pinch of cayenne, and a little grated nutmeg. Bring to the boil. Cook on a good heat for 5 minutes, stirring constantly to prevent it from sticking to the bottom of the pan. Remove from the heat.

Add 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) grated Gruyère. Spread out the mixture on a baking sheet and leave to cool. Cut into rectangles. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in boiling oil.

This cream can also be used to garnish canapés, barquettes, fried bread, or tartlets, which are then browned in the oven and served as hot hors-d'œuvre.

Mussel croquettes. CROQUETTES DE MOULES – Cook 2 litres ( $3\frac{1}{2}$  pints  $4\frac{1}{2}$  pints) mussels in white wine with sliced onions, parsley, thyme and bay leaf. Drain the mussels, take them out of their shells and dry them on a cloth. Put them in a sauté pan with an equal quantity of diced mushrooms which have been simmered in butter.

Add Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) which includes the liquor in which the mussels have been cooked and which has been boiled down. Leave to cool.

Make croquettes, dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry.

Potato croquettes
(Larousse)

Potato croquettes. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE – Prepare with a Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES).

To vary the dish, when served as a hot hors-d'œuvre or used as a garnish, add various ingredients to the basic duchess preparation, such as finely hashed ham, mushrooms, truffles, thick tomato sauce, chopped onion lightly cooked in butter, mirepoix (q.v.), duxelles (q.v.) etc.

Rice croquettes (savory). CROQUETTES DE RIZ – Prepare either with rice cooked in butter and bound with egg, or with cheese risotto. Make the croquettes and fry in smoking-hot fat. Garnish with fried parsley and serve with tomato sauce.

Rice croquettes (sweet). CROQUETTES DE RIZ – These can be served as a sweet course. Prepare 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) sweetened rice (see RICE). As soon as it is cold, divide into portions of 50 g. (2 oz.). Make the croquettes in the shape of apples or pears, dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry in very hot fat. Serve with a fruit sauce.

Rice croquettes (stuffed). CROQUETTES DE RIZ FOURRÉES – Divide cooked, sweetened rice into small balls. Put them on a floured board, slit them slightly, and fill with 1 teaspoon fruit marmalade (q.v.) or with thick French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Close the slit, dip the balls in egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry.

Rice croquettes old style (Carême's recipe). CROQUETTES DE RIZ À LA MANIÈRE ANCIENNE – 'Cook 175 g. (6 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Carolina rice in good stock. Mix with 1 tablespoon thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) grated Parmesan cheese, and a little nutmeg. Divide into 10 portions, make hollows in each, and fill them with a salpicon of game or fowl combined with velouté sauce which has been boiled down. Close up the balls, roll in fine grated Parmesan and then in the palm of the hand to make the croquettes completely round.' Dip in egg and breadcrumbs mixed with finely grated Parmesan cheese and deep-fry. Garnish with fried parsley.

La Varenne croquettes – Make large, thin crêpes (q.v.) with an unsweetened crêpe batter. Cover the crêpes with a layer of finely chopped mushrooms which have been cooked in butter and combined with thick tomato sauce. Roll up, cut into slices, dip in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry. Garnish with fried parsley.

CROQUIGNOLLES PARISIENNES (Pâtisserie) - Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) flour, 600 g. (21 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) fine sugar, 10 egg whites, flavouring (vanilla, orange or lemon zest, liqueurs).

Method. Mix half the egg whites with icing sugar. Add the sifted flour, the rest of the egg and flavouring, and mix well. Press through a forcing-bag into various shapes on a buttered baking sheet. Leave to dry out for a few hours. Bake in a moderate oven.

In various regions of France croquignolles are slightly different. The best known are those of Navarre in the Basses-Pyrénées, which are made in the same way as above but with the following ingredients: 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) fine sugar, 7 egg whites, 4 drops lemon essence or powdered vanilla, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy.

CROUSTADE (Pie, pasty) Dishes made with flaky or puff pastry, filled with ragoûts, salpicons or other preparations.

Croustades are also made with bread which is hollowed out, brushed with egg and deep-fried, then filled with various purées (meat, fowl, fish, shellfish, or vegetable).

Bread croustade. CROUSTADE DE PAIN DE MIE - Made with stale bread. Cut a slice 5 cm. (2 inches) thick and trim to the desired shape. Decorate with knife-cuts in a pattern. Cut round the top with the point of the knife to mark the lid. Fry in deep fat until golden. Drain, and carefully prise off the marked lid. Remove the crumb from the inside, and line with a thin layer of forcemeat. Leave for a few moments at the open door of a warm oven. Fill the croustade with a ragoût. All the fillings given for timbales (q.v.) and vol-au-vent (q.v.) can be used.

Little croustades (hot). PETITES CROUSTADES (CHAUDS) - Line tartlet moulds with a sweet pastry dough (shortcrust with 1 egg and a little sugar added). Bake the tartlets blind, and fill with the chosen mixture (see HOR-D'ŒUVRE, Hors-d'œuvre.) They can also be filled with rice, semolina, duchess potato mixture, macaroni, noodles, etc.

Little duchess potato croustades: how to empty them using the handle of a small spoon

Little duchess potato croustades. PETITES CROUSTADES EN POMMES DE TERRE DUCHESSE - Spread out the Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES) in a thick, even layer on a baking sheet, and leave to cool. Cut into croustades with a pastry-cutter, dip in egg and breadcrumbs and finish in the same way as for Little noodle croustades (see below).

Little noodle croustades (Carême's recipe). PETITES CROUSTADES DE NOUILLES - 'Prepare a noodle paste with 12 egg yolks (see NOODLE). Roll out the paste and cut into narrow strips. Boil for a few minutes in salted water. Drain the noodles and sauté them in 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter and a little salt. Pour them into a large sauté pan and spread them out to a depth of 6 cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches).

'When they are cold, turn them onto a slab and cut croustades with a pastry-cutter. Mark lids with a smaller-size pastry-cutter, and fry in deep fat. Drain, remove the lids and remove the centres, leaving only a thin casing. Fill with a salpicon.'

Little rice croustades. PETITES CROUSTADES DE RIZ - Made with rice cooked in stock, left to cool, and cut into shapes with a pastry-cutter, in the same way as Little noodle croustades.

Little semolina croustades. PETITES CROUSTADES DE SEMOULE - The same as Little noodle croustades, using semolina cooked in stock. When quite cold, the semolina can be combined with egg yolks.

Little vermicelli croustades. PETITES CROUSTADES DE VERMICELLE - The same as Little noodle croustades, using vermicelli cooked in stock or plain water.

CROÛTES - Different preparations are designated under this name, some made of bread, some of brioche dough or other types of bread dough. They are used either with soups or as hors-d'œuvre.

Croûtes made of bread and served as a garnish are usually called croûtons.

CROÛTES FOR SOUP. CROÛTES À POTAGE -

Croûtes for croûte au pot - Divide a French loaf (fiûte) into 5-cm. (2 inch) slices, cut each in half lengthwise, remove the soft part, and dry the crusts in a slow oven.

Alternatively, sprinkle them with the fat from the pot-au-feu and bake them in the oven until golden.

Diablotins. CROÛTES DITES DIABLOTINS - Cut a French loaf into slices 6 to 8 mm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. Cover with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) to which grated cheese seasoned with a little cayenne has been added. Sprinkle with cheese and brown in the oven.

Stuffed croûtes. CROÛTES FARCIES - Cut a French loaf into Preparation of croûtes

slices 4 cm. (1½ inches) thick. Take out three-quarters of the soft part, and dry the crusts in the oven. Stuff them with chopped or sieved vegetables. Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour over them a little melted butter and brown in the oven. Serve as an accompaniment to soup.

CROÛTES FOR HORS-D'ŒUVRE or SMALL ENTRÉES. CROÛTES POUR HORS-D'ŒUVRE OU PETITES ENTRÉES – Small croustades made with stale bread, cut into 2½-cm. (1-inch) thick slices. Press a small pastry-cutter half-way into the slices to mark the lids.

Fry the croûtes, drain, remove the incised portions, fill.

Croûtes with grated cheese. CROÛTES AU FROMAGE GRATINÉE – Cut 2-cm. (¾-inch) slices from a stale loaf and trim into oval shapes. Fry in butter until they are golden.

Add grated cheese and thick cream to béchamel sauce, boil down, sieve, and pour over the croûtes. Put a thin slice of Gruyère on each croûte, pour some melted butter over, and brown in a hot oven.

Croûtes with mushrooms. CROÛTES AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Mushrooms prepared à la crème are used as a stuffing for brioche croûtes in the form of a galette (q.v.) – a round open tart made with puff pastry. The croûte is hollowed out, buttered, browned in the oven, and filled with Mushrooms à la crème (see MUSHROOMS). The croûtes are served hot.

Croûtes à la Nantua – Fry small rectangles of bread in butter, and cover with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) combined with a little Crayfish butter (see BUTTER). Add peeled crayfish tails, and cover with a cream sauce to which more crayfish butter has been added. Sprinkle with fine bread-crumbs, pour over a little melted butter, and brown quickly in a very hot oven. Shrimps can be substituted for the crayfish.

Croûtes à la reine – Cover slices of fried bread with a purée of fowl cooked à la crème. Sprinkle with fine breadcrumbs, pour over a little melted butter, and brown in a hot oven.

Croûtes Saint-Hubert – The same as Croûtes à la reine, but replace the purée of fowl with a game purée which has been combined with concentrated game stock.

Croûtes gratinées with truffles. CROÛTES GRATINÉES AUX TRUFFES – Cut cleaned, peeled truffles in thick slices, season with salt and pepper and dip in melted butter. Set these slices, overlapping, on slices of bread that have been lightly cooked in butter. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese and pour over a few drops of melted butter. Brown in a very hot oven.

Croûtes with truffles. CROÛTES AUX TRUFFES – Made like Croûtes with mushrooms using truffles prepared à la crème.

CROÛTES FOR MIXED ENTRÉES. CROÛTES POUR ENTRÉES MIXTES – These are made of pastry or puff pastry left-overs, in the same way as for a pastry case. Cook the cases blind, and fill with the preparation indicated in the recipe.

CROÛTES FOR DESSERTS. CROÛTES POUR ENTREMETS –

Croûtes dorées – Cut stale brioche into slices 1 cm. (½ inch) thick. Soak the slices in cold sweetened milk flavoured with vanilla, then in slightly sweetened egg, and cook in clarified butter. Sprinkle with vanilla sugar. (See below, Golden croûtes.)

Fruit croûtes. CROÛTES AUX FRUITS – Cut a stale savarin (q.v.) into ½-cm. (¼-inch) slices, place on a baking sheet, sprinkle with fine sugar, and glaze in the oven.

Cut a piece of white bread into a conical shape, fry it, and place it in the centre of a dish. Arrange the savarin slices round it, alternating them with pineapple slices which have been cooked in syrup.

Cook quartered pear and apple slices in syrup and arrange them round the cone. Fill the inside of this border with a mixture of fruits which have been cooked in syrup and drained. Decorate with preserved cherries and lozenges of angelica, quartered preserved apricots, oranges preserved in brandy, and halved almonds. Stick a skewer (attelet) decorated with preserved fruits into the central cone.

Heat in a very moderate oven, and when ready to serve, cover with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with kirsch. Serve with more of the sauce. Other fruits cooked in syrup may be used.

Golden croûtes. PAINS À LA ROMAINE DITS AUSSI CROÛTES DORÉES – Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz.) stale brioche, ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) milk, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter, 125 g. (4½ oz., ½ cup) fine sugar, ½ vanilla bean, 2 eggs.

Method. Cut the brioche into thick slices and soak them in milk which has been boiled with the sugar and vanilla and left to cool. Dip the slices, one at a time, in the eggs, which have been beaten with a little fine sugar, and fry in butter. When both sides are golden, drain the slices and sprinkle with the rest of the sugar.

Croûtes with Madeira. CROÛTES AU MADÈRE – Made of slices of savarin and pineapple, like Fruit croûtes. Fill the centre with a salpicon (q.v.) of fruits cooked en compote to which have been added currants, sultanas and raisins that have been washed and left to swell in lukewarm water.

Cover the croûte with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira. Serve with a little more of this sauce.

Croûtes Montmorency – Cut a stale brioche into 1-cm. (½-inch) thick slices, and shape them into half moons. Sprinkle with sugar and glaze in the oven on a baking sheet. Cover each slice with a thin layer of Frangipane pastry cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with cherry brandy, and arrange them on a dish in the form of a crown, setting them very close together.

Fill the centre of the crown with a dome of stoned cherries which have been cooked in a vanilla syrup and drained. Decorate the border of the crown with preserved cherries, angelica lozenges and halved almonds. Cover with red-currant jelly laced with cherry brandy, and serve with a little of this sauce.

Croûtes à la normande – Glaze slices of stale brioche with sugar, cover with a thick purée of apple prepared as for Apple charlotte, (see CHARLOTTE) and finish with thick cream. Arrange on a dish in the shape of a crown. Fill the centre with quartered apples cooked in syrup flavoured with vanilla, and cover with Apple sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Calvados. Serve with this sauce.

CROÛTON

CROÛTON – End of a long loaf. Also diced bread fried in butter, served as an accompaniment to soup.

Bread croûtons. CROÛTONS EN PAIN DE MIE – Slices cut from a stale white loaf which are fried in butter, grilled, or dried in the oven. Except for large croûtons used under game, croûton-supports are not considered edible. Their only rôle is to support large hot or cold joints in order to be able to display the various garnishes round them. All excessive trimmings should be avoided in these arrangements, which should be simple in order to be effective.

Bread croûtons

Croûtons for garnishes. CROÛTONS POUR GARNITURES – Croûtons made of white bread cut in different ways, often in the form of hearts. They are cooked in oil or butter and are used to garnish various dishes which are presented in sauce, such as blanquette de veau, civet, chicken fricassée, chicken Marengo, salmis. Croûtons used to garnish salmis are usually covered with à grain forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Croûtons cut in the form of dents de loup (wolves' teeth) are used to garnish spinach and other vegetable dishes. Those cut in lozenge shapes are used for fish prepared à la normande.

Croûtons for scrambled eggs or omelettes. CROÛTONS POUR OEUF BROUILLÉS OU OMELETTE – These are made of diced white bread fried in butter and added to scrambled egg or omelettes.

CROW. CORBEAU – The meat of this bird, except when young, is tough and fibrous. Nevertheless, in many forest regions where crows abound, they are used to make a poor soup. Cuniset-Carnot, in his Vie aux champs, gives a humorous recipe for cooking a crow. 'Make a good pot-au-feu. On the reversed lid of the pot put a plucked crow. After 5 or 6 hours of gentle cooking, throw the crow on the fire and enjoy the pot-au-feu.'

CROWN. COURONNE – Method of dressing a dish in the form of a crown or ring. Brioche en couronne is a type of dough-cake made in this shape.

CROWN-PIGEON (Squab). GOURA – This is cooked in the same way as the common pigeon, or squab.

CRU – The soil in which a plant or a fruit has grown. This applies particularly to vines.

CRUCHADE – A kind of porridge made with maize flour and milk or water. It has a great similarity to miliasse or millat, made in the south-west of France; and also to polenta, made in the south-east and in Italy. (See MILIASSE.)

CRUDITÉS – Food eaten raw. Man is the only living creature to use cooked foods. Children, however, have an innate taste for raw vegetables and even for unripe fruit, which indicates that raw food should be an essential part of man's diet.

The indigestibility of crudités is caused by the way they are sometimes presented; served finely chopped or grated, and chewed well, they are perfectly digestible.

Some foods are not pleasant to eat raw, or are only really edible when they are cooked. Meat, for instance, nearly always needs to be masked in various ways in order to be eaten raw, and is distasteful to many people even then. On the other hand, a cooked oyster can never have the flavour of an uncooked one, and this holds good for salads and fruit.

Gastronomes can see another advantage in crudités. Since their food value is generally minimal, they are useful for allaying the first pangs of hunger without spoiling the appreciation of the remainder of the meal; on the contrary, they rather enhance the main meal. Thus the perils of over-eating that so often menace those who love good food are avoided.

CRUET STAND (U.S. Castor set). MÉNAGÈRE – Table-set consisting of bottles and jars of glass, porcelain or metal, set in a base.

CRUSH. ÉCRASER – To flatten and break aromatic seeds, or bread which has been baked hard in the oven and is intended for breadcrumbs.

CRUSTACEANS. CRUSTACÉS – Animals, usually aquatic, with a hard, shelly crust and jointed extremities. Some species are used in cooking, e.g. crabs, crayfish, lobsters, etc. For the various dishes made with these different shellfish see recipes under their names.

Shellfish have a firm, close-grained flesh and an agreeable taste, but are not easy to digest. They have a reputation as aphrodisiacs, no doubt due to the very strong condiments with which they are often flavoured.

A crustacean: crab

CUCUMBER. CONCOMBRE – Genus of plants belonging to the gourd family, with large elongated fruits. Cucumbers originated in the north-west of India, where they have been cultivated in Hindustan for three thousand years. They also grow in a wild state. There are a large number of species, white or green, with smooth or rough skin, early or late fruiting. They are very watery and contain little nutritive value. Cucumbers are eaten raw in salads and are sometimes cooked. When they are to be cooked the rather bitter juice should be removed by salting and pressing before seasoning.

Cucumber contains Vitamins A and C, but it is indigestible, and should only be eaten by those with good digestions.

Cucumbers in butter. CONCOMBRES AU BEURRE – Peel the cucumbers, cut into pieces, blanch and drain. Season, and cook them slowly in a buttered sauté pan with the lid on.

Cucumbers à la crème. CONCOMBRES À LA CRÈME – Prepare the cucumbers as for Cucumbers in butter. When they are three-quarters cooked cover with boiling cream, and finish cooking. This dish can also be prepared by moistening the cucumbers with a Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Cucumbers à la dijonnaise (hors-d'œuvre). CONCOMBRES À LA DIJONNAISE – Cut two green cucumbers into slices, then cut the slices into quarters. Boil for 2 minutes in salted water to which a few drops of wine vinegar have been added. Drain, put them in a colander under a cold tap, drain again, then simmer for 12 minutes in a casserole with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) olive oil, 1 tablespoon vinegar, a pinch of salt and a pinch of paprika. Before serving add 2 teaspoons Dijon mustard and mix well.

Cucumbers au gratin. CONCOMBRES GRATINÉS AU PARMESAN – Cut the cucumbers into slices, blanch lightly, and cook them in butter. Put the slices in a buttered gratin dish sprinkled with grated Parmesan, sprinkle with more Parmesan, pour over some melted butter, and brown in the oven.

Cucumbers à la grecque (hors-d'œuvre). CONCOMBRES À LA GRECQUE – Quarter a large cucumber and cook in a court-bouillon made with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) water, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) oil, the juice of lemon, a bouquet of celery, fennel, thyme, and a good pinch of coriander, salt and pepper.

Boil for 8 minutes. Drain the cucumbers, boil down the liquor in which they have been cooked to half, cool, and pour it over the cucumbers. Keep in a cool place and serve cold.

Cucumbers au jus. CONCOMBRES AU JUS – Prepare in the same way as Cucumbers in butter, adding a few tablespoons concentrated veal stock when cooked.

Cucumbers Mornay. CONCOMBRES MORNAY – Prepare in the same way as Cucumbers in butter. Put the cucumber pieces in a gratin dish lined with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Pour more sauce over them, sprinkle with grated cheese, pour over a little butter, and brown in the oven.

Cucumber purée. PURÉE DE CONCOMBRES – Peel two large cucumbers, split them lengthways and remove the seeds. Cut into slices and simmer in butter. Add half their quantity of potatoes, cut into quarters. Moisten with consommé or water, boil until soft, drain. Sieve the cucumbers and potatoes, and put this purée into a pan over low heat. Add a few teaspoons butter and thick cream, and work the mixture with a wooden spoon until it is smooth.

Cucumber salad. SALADE DE CONCOMBRES – Peel the cucumbers, split them in half lengthwise, remove the seeds, and slice the flesh finely. Spread the slices on a cloth, sprinkle with salt and leave for 30 minutes. Drain, season with salt, pepper, vinegar, oil and chopped chervil.

The cucumbers can be seasoned with vinaigrette sauce without first being salted.

Stuffed cucumbers. CONCOMBRES FARCIS – Peel cucumbers and cut into slices 5 cm. (2 inches) thick. Boil in salted water for 5 minutes. Drain, and scoop a hollow out of each slice.

Mix 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) duxelles (q.v.) with 250 g. (9 oz.) veal or pork forcemeat. Add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onion which has been cooked in butter and cooled. Fill the scooped-out cucumbers with the stuffing.

Line the bottom of a sauté pan with bacon rinds, slices of carrots and onion and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Set the cucumbers on this foundation and add enough slightly salted stock to reach two-thirds up the sides of the cucumbers. Bring to the boil. Put a buttered sheet over the cucumbers, cover the pan, and cook slowly in the oven for 35 minutes.

Strain the cooking liquor and boil down rapidly to 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup). Thicken slightly with a brown sauce or with Kneaded butter (see BUTTER), and pour over the cucumbers when serving.

CUIRE VERT – Colourful expression once used to indicate to what degree certain meats should be cooked to keep them rare (très saignantes). Nowadays the expression is cuire bleu.

CUISINE – See COOKING.

CUISINE MINCEUR – A new method of French cooking. Based on the classic French principles, it attempts to maintain the characteristic subtle flavors without including the highly caloric ingredients such as butter, cream, oil, and starches except in very limited quantities. The success of this venture is a subject of controversy.

CUISSON – This term has several meanings in French.

1. The cooking of any kind of food.

2. Cooking time.

3. Liquid used in the cooking of certain foodstuffs for example, cuisson of mushrooms, cuisson of calves' heads. In this context the word means stock or clear soup.

CUISSOT – See HAUNCH.

CULINARY ART. ART CULINAIRE – 'Cookery is an old art,' said the marquis de Cussy. 'It goes back to Adam.'

The culinary art is closely bound with the history of man. Brillat-Savarin asks: 'Does not this art in fact embrace all branches of human activity? Is not the art of feeding oneself one of the primordial needs of man?'

For a short history of cookery see the entry on COOKING.

CULINARY METHODS. MÉTHODES CULINAIRES – All culinary operations, from the simplest to the most complicated, must be carried out according to precise rules. It is advisable to adhere scrupulously to these principles in order to achieve success in the preparation of simple as well as complex dishes.

The culinary rules governing the different methods of cooking foodstuffs are listed below in alphabetical order.

Braising meat. BRAISAGE DES VIANDES – Method of cooking meat chiefly used for red meats such as beef and mutton, but it can also be used for white meats such as lamb and veal. By slightly modifying the procedure it can also be used for pork and venison.

Large poultry is also braised, and the method may be used for large fish although, in fact, fish is stewed with a very little liquid rather than braised in the strict sense of the word.

Red meat should be interlarded before being braised; that is, thick lardoons, seasoned with spices, moistened with brandy and sprinkled with chopped parsley are threaded into it with a larding needle.

Large cuts of meat and venison are steeped in a marinade (q.v.) for a time before braising and then moistened with a braising stock prepared in advance, or from the stockpot or even with water. White or red wine, the marinade and aromatic vegetables of the marinade should be added to the stock.

Instructions for braising large cuts of meat are given under BEEF.

Garnishes for braised meat. Meat is usually braised à la bourgeoise, with carrots and onions added towards the end of cooking. Braised cuts can also be served with vegetables braised in stock, stuffed vegetables, macaroni prepared in different ways, risotto, etc.

Braising white meat. Strictly speaking, cuts of white meat, veal in particular, should be pot roasted rather than braised. However, cuts of white meat can be braised in the same way as red meat, but using very little stock. (See below Pot roasting.)

Braising large poultry. BRAISAGE DES GROSSES VOLAILLES – Large poultry is usually pot roasted rather than braised. Use very little stock in cooking.

Clarifying and enriching soups, stocks and jellies. CLARIFICATION DES BOUILLONS, FONDS ET GELÉES – The purpose of this operation is to make soups, stocks and jellies clearer and tastier. This applies to sweet jellies as well as to fish and meat stocks. After clarification, and enriching with chopped lean beef and egg white, the soup is known as consommé. Allow 250 to 350 g. (9 to 12 oz.) chopped lean beef to every litre (scant quart, generous quart) stock to ensure adequate clarification. For jelly stocks, which are very concentrated in themselves, 100 to 150 g. (4 to 5 oz.) per litre (scant quart, generous quart) is required.

Where appropriate chopped poultry may be used instead of chopped beef. A small quantity of egg white and finely diced vegetables should be used.

When clarifying sweet jellies (made with fruit and wine or liqueur) egg white only is used.

Clarified consommé and jellies of various kinds must be strained after boiling. Wet and wring out a cloth of closely woven material. Fix it to the four legs of an upturned stool. Under this cloth place a bowl large enough to take all of the stock. Skim off the fat, then pour the stock into this improvised strainer. For smaller amounts, lay the cloth on top of a bowl and lift up the corners.

Deep-frying. FRITURE -- Method of cooking used a great deal in household kitchens. Fried foods, well prepared, are much prized by gastronomes. (See DEEP-FRYING.)

Gratin – Name given to dishes which, after being subjected to intense heat in the oven or under the grill, acquire a crisp, golden-brown crust. To assist in the formation of this crust, sprinkle the food either with fresh or lightly toasted breadcrumbs or with grated cheese, preferably Parmesan, and pour on melted butter.

Gratins can be made with either raw or cooked food. The most common raw gratins are made of fish covered with Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE.) A recipe for cooking raw vegetables au gratin is given under Potatoes à la dauphinoise (see POTATOES).

Fish prepared with a white gratin sauce are poached in concentrated fish stock, drained, covered with white sauce, sprinkled with cheese or breadcrumbs and browned quickly in the oven. When browning a gratin the dish should be set on a wire tray separating it from the oven shelf, or in a dish half-full of hot water. This prevents the fats from separating and the sauce from spoiling.

Grilling (U.S. broiling). GRILLADE – Grilling, like roasting, is a method of cooking by intense heat, the nourishing juices being sealed into the meat by the crust formed on the surface. The fuel traditionally used for grilling in France is small charcoal (known as braise). The charcoal, when thoroughly alight, is spread out to form a bed in a grille pan with a well-regulated draught. This bed of charcoal varies in depth according to the size and kind of meat to be grilled. Nowadays there are also gas and electric grills, both of which are very good and extremely practical.

The grill must be scrupulously clean, and heated before the meat is laid upon it or under it. The food to be grilled must be basted with clarified butter, oil or fat, and seasoned. Meat should be gently flattened and trimmed before cooking.

Fish should be scored with a knife, well coated with butter and oil, and seasoned. Fish which is rather dry has a tendency to stick to the bars of the grill, and should therefore be floured before being coated with butter or oil. This will form a covering which will enable the fish to cook without becoming too dry. Turn grilling meat or fish over once or twice during cooking, and baste frequently with the butter or oil, using a brush.

Grilled food is ready when it resists pressure if lightly touched with the fingertip. Tiny pinkish droplets appearing on the browned surface are another indication that it is fully cooked. Grilled white meat should be less browned than red meat and a less intense heat should be used. Grill fish at moderate heat, and baste frequently.

Grill poultry first if it is to be cooked in breadcrumbs. When three-parts cooked, cover with butter or oil and roll in the breadcrumbs as indicated for Chicken à la diable (see CHICKEN).

Interlarding a round piece of meat

Interlarding meat. PIQUAGE DES VIANDES -- Certain cuts of meat, such as fillet of beef, leg of veal, etc., are interlarded with best pork fat cut into small lardoons. In the same way, poultry, veal sweetbreads, veal chops and large fish such as carp, sturgeon, etc. are interlarded with very small lardoons.

Interlarding a fillet of beef. Skin the meat and remove all tendons. Using a larding needle threaded with a lardoon, thread it into the fillet, following the grain of the meat. The depth of the stitch is determined by the length of the lardoon. Each lardoon should project 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) on either side.

Thread the second row of lardoons through the meat, alternating them with the first, at a distance of 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) making sure that the lardoons always project over the meat. Keeping the spacing even, thread as many double rows of lardoons into the meat as its length requires. After the fillet is completely interlarded, trim the lardoons so that the ends are of equal length. Tie the fillet crosswise to keep it round in shape. Put it on a spit or, if it is to be roasted in the oven, in a roasting tin fitted with a grid.

Interlarding a fricandeau or leg of veal. Trim the joint as indicated under VEAL. Interlard as for fillet of beef.

Interlarding saddle of mutton or roebuck, baron of hare, haunch of venison, etc. Proceed as indicated above, adapting the thickness of the lardoons to the size of the meat.

Interlarding small cuts of meat. Lardoons must be cut very fine for small cuts and a finer needle should be used. Small round portions of meat may be interlarded by threading the lardoons into them in the form of a rosette. This method can also be used with beef and mutton filets mignons, and for veal sweetbreads. These last, before being interlarded, must be soaked in water, blanched, cooled under running water, and left to get quite cold under a weight.

Interlarding poultry and game. PIQUAGE DE VOLAILLES ET DU GIBIER – Only large poultry for braising is interlarded. Singe with a hot flame the part of the breast to be interlarded or dip it in boiling water to make the flesh firm.

Only old game for braising, such as partridge, pheasant or hazel-grouse, is interlarded. Proceed as for poultry, using very small lardoons.

Poaching. POCHAGE – Poaching is a gentle simmering in liquid. The amount of water or stock used depends on the food to be poached.

Meat, poultry and fish can all be poached, as well as eggs and meat balls, Mousses and mousselines are poached in a bain-marie. Sweetbreads are poached in a very little stock.

Red meat is poached in a white stock with vegetables, or in boiling salt water, as is customary with Leg of lamb à l'anglaise (see LAMB). White meat is seldom poached. But the term 'poaching' may be applied to the method of cooking used in preparing lamb and veal en blanquette.

Large poultry to be poached is put into cold white stock, the liquid brought to the boil, skimmed, and seasoned as with pot-au-feu (q.v.). The poultry is then simmered very slowly in the stock. Poultry for poaching can be stuffed or not, and trussed. It can be larded with best lardoons or studded with pieces of ham, tongue or truffles cut into the shape of little pegs. To protect the breast while cooking, poultry should be barded. To test whether the poultry is ready, prick the thigh. When the juice which runs out is white, the bird is cooked. After cooking, drain and untruss the poultry and remove the barding. Serve on fried bread, surrounded with an appropriate garnish. The stock, strained and skimmed, is boiled down and added to the sauce to be served with the dish.

Large fish can be poached whole or in slices, and moistened with concentrated fish stock (fumet). Thick slices of fish are prepared in the same way. Fillets of fish (brill, whiting, sole, turbot, etc.) to be poached are put in a buttered baking dish, seasoned, moistened with a few tablespoons concentrated fish stock and cooked in the oven.

Poached eggs are cooked in boiling salt water to which a few drops of vinegar have been added.

Fish or meat balls are put into a buttered pan, covered with boiling salt water and very slowly simmered.

Food poached on the bain-marie principle, such as mousses, mousselines, moulds, puddings, etc., are stood in baking tins or pans half full of hot water, and cooked in a very slow oven.

Pot roasting. POÊLAGE – Slow cooking by steam, using a casserole with a tightly fitting lid. The food is cooked with butter or fat, together with vegetables which have been slowly cooked in butter. Pot-roasted meat, poultry or fish must be frequently basted during cooking. When ready, take it out of the casserole and serve on a dish or in a cocotte (q.v.). Remove most of the cooking fat, add wine or stock, boil for a few moments, strain, and pour the liquor over the dish.

Pot roasting à la Matignon. Brown meat or fish to be pot roasted lightly in butter. Cover with a thick layer of Matignon (q.v.) or fondue of root vegetables. Wrap in buttered paper and cook in the oven. After cooking, unwrap, surround with garnishes and pour on the strained stock to which the matignon has been added.

Braising à la matignon can also be carried out by lining a braising pan with the fondue of root vegetables and placing the meat, fish or poultry, liberally basted with butter, on top.

Ragoûts – Details and recipes for the preparation of ragoût dishes are to be found under RAGOÛT.

Roasting. RÔTISSAGE – This is used in the cooking of meat, poultry, game, large fish and shellfish.

The distinctive feature of roasting is that the internal juices are preserved. In his Principes et lois culinaires Reculet defines the roasting process:

'Cooking by concentration works by means of transmission and not, as in the case of boiling, by means of insinuation. The concentrating agent, whether ponderable or imponderable, attacks and envelops the substance. The first coating is heated, the juices are driven inwards towards the centre, and the crust forms on the surface. The heat of the first coating is transmitted to the second. The juices sealed in by the outer coating, being unable to escape from the tissues, generate heat themselves, and contribute powerfully to the cooking of the whole.'

There are two ways of roasting: by the action of a naked flame on the spit; or by radiant heat in the oven. Spit roasts are superior to oven roasts because substances placed before an open fire can evaporate freely whereas those cooked in an enclosed oven are enveloped and radically altered by the vapour produced. However, roasts are usually cooked in coal, gas or electric ovens. These, being extremely well designed, produce good results, and they do sometimes incorporate an automatic spit.

Piece of beef ready to be oven roasted

Roasting in the oven. RÔTIS AU FOUR – The intensity of the cooking heat must be regulated to suit the roast. When the crust is formed, the heat must be lowered. With a solid fuel cooker, the roast should be moved to a cooler part of the oven and the roasting pan stood in another pan if necessary. It is essential for oven roasts to be raised above the bottom of the roasting pan on a grid. Basting of oven roasts should be carried out as for spit roasts (see below).

It does not take long to acquire the knack of knowing when the roast is ready. If in doubt, follow the instructions in the section on Average cooking time for roasts (see below), and look for the following indications.

When red meat (beef and mutton) is perfectly cooked, a small prick will make it exude pale pink blood. In the case of white meat (veal, lamb, pork) the juice is colourless. Poultry is perfectly cooked when, if tilted on a plate, pure white juice pours out of the body. As long as there are any reddish traces, the poultry is not fully cooked. Winged and ground game should, as a rule, exude a pinkish juice. It should be tested in the same way as red meat.

Poultry and game should be trussed and barded, or interlarded with best lardoons. The purpose of barding with pork fat or fat bacon is to protect the delicate parts of the breast from the intensity of the heat, and also to impregnate the flesh with fat to make it more tender. Barding is done by tying the fat to the bird with string. After cooking, the fat is removed.

Large cuts of meat are sometimes barded. More often, the delicate parts of these cuts are protected with well-flattened pieces of beef or veal fat.

Most roasts should be served directly they are removed from the spit or the oven. For red meat, however, it is advisable to take it out of the oven or off the spit a few minutes before it is quite ready, and to keep it hot in front of the open oven until it is ready to be served. While it is standing thus, the meat settles and is ready to carve.

Spit roasting. RÔTIS À LA BROCHE – Red meat, rich in juices, must always be browned and then subjected to an even heat, to ensure that the meat is cooked right through. Anthracite gives an intense heat without producing flames, and is very suitable for cooking red meat.

For white meat, the heat must be adjusted so that the external browning and internal cooking take place simultaneously. The same principles apply to poultry.

Spit-roasted food must be frequently basted. This is done with the fat floating on the top of the liquid in the dripping-pan, and not with the juice itself. Basting with pure fat produces a tender, well-browned roast, whereas basting with the cooking liquid prevents the roast from browning.

Gravy of the roast. JUS DE RÔTIS – It is essential to extract all the goodness in the roasting or dripping pan by immediate dilution with water or clear stock, and boiling. The gravy of a roast should not be completely skimmed.

The serving of roasts. DRESSAGE DES RÔTIS – The roast, if it is a joint or a bird, is laid on a very hot dish and garnished with fresh watercress which has been picked over, washed and thoroughly drained. The gravy is served separately, but just before serving, the cooking fat may be poured over the roast. In some parts of northern and eastern France, a thick purée of apples and stewed fruit is often served with roasts. These compotes and purées should be only slightly sweetened.

Winged game, other than wild duck, pintail and teal, are served on canapés or slices of bread fried in butter and spread with à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT).

Game birds are usually garnished with watercress and halved or quartered lemons. Orange is sometimes served instead of lemon with wild duck, teal, pintail and other wild-fowl.

In England, roast winged game is often garnished with Potato crisps (see POTATOES). Bread sauce (see SAUCE) and fried breadcrumbs are served in addition to the gravy.

Redcurrant jelly and chestnut purée are often served with roast venison and small ground game.

Average cooking times for roasts. TEMPS MOYEN DE CUISSON DES RÔTIS –

Beef. Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6) – except fillet.

Contre-filet or faux filet – Boned, 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes. On the bone, 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes.

Fillet – Oven temperature 230°C. (450°F., Gas Mark 8) 12 to 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.); or 15 to 18 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) if using a spit.

Rib – 15 to 18 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes; or 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes if using a spit. As soon as the meat is taken off the spit it must be put in a warm oven for 30 minutes or longer, according to size. Under this very moderate heat cooking is completed and the rib retains all its internal juices.

Sirloin – 10 to 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 10 minutes.

Sirloin roast à l'anglaise – 15 to 18 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes.

Lamb and mutton. Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6).

Baron – 18 to 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 18 minutes.

Breast – 20 to 25 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes.

Leg – 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes.

Saddle – 18 to 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 18 minutes.

Shoulder – 18 to 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 18 minutes.

Pork. Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6).

Breast – 25 to 30 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 25 minutes.

Fillet – 25 to 30 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 25 minutes.

Veal. Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6).

Breast – 24 to 28 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 24 minutes.

Lengthwise cut of chump end (U.S. tenderloin) – 25 to 30 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 25 minutes.

Top loin or fillet – 25 to 30 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 25 minutes.

Poultry.

Chicken – Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6), 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes; or 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes if using a spit.

Duck – Oven temperature 190°C. (375°F., Gas Mark 5), 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes; or 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes if using a spit.

Goose – Oven temperature 190°C. (375°F., Gas Mark 5), 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes.

Guinea-fowl – Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6), 45 to 60 minutes per bird; or 1 to 1½ hours if using a spit.

Pigeon – Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6), 20 to 30 minutes per bird; or 30 to 40 minutes per bird if using a spit.

Turkey – Oven temperature 190°C. (375°F., Gas Mark 5), 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes for a bird weighing up to 5½ kg. (12 lb.), or 10 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 10 minutes for a bird weighing over 5½ kg. (12 lb.).

Ground game. Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6).

Hare (baron) – 15 to 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes; or 20 to 25 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes if using a spit.

Roebuck (haunch or saddle) – 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes; or 25 to 30 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 25 minutes if using a spit.

Young rabbit – 15 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes; or 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 20 minutes if using a spit.

Winged game. Oven temperature 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6).

Grouse – 25 to 30 minutes per bird; or 30 to 40 minutes per bird if using a spit.

Partridge – 30 to 45 minutes per bird; or 45 to 60 minutes per bird if using a spit.

Pheasant – 50 to 60 minutes per bird; or 1 to 1½ hours if using a spit.

Quail – 15 minutes per bird; or 20 minutes per bird if using a spit.

Snipe – 15 minutes per bird; or 20 minutes per bird if using a spit.

Teal – 30 minutes per bird; or 40 minutes per bird if using a spit.

Woodcock – 25 to 30 minutes per bird; or 30 to 35 minutes per bird if using a spit.

Sautés – Method of cooking in a wide, shallow frying pan, generally used for small portions of food. In France these pans are called sautoirs, plats à sauter or sauteuses.

The cooking is done in heated fat, butter or oil. The food is seasoned and when the butter or fat is thoroughly heated, it is laid flat in the pan so that it is thoroughly sealed.

Small cuts of meat treated in this way are rump and fillet steaks, médallions and tournedos (beef); cutlets and noisettes (mutton or lamb); veal chops and escalopes or veal sweetbreads.

Red meat must be sautéed as quickly as possible in clarified butter. White meat can be sautéed in fresh butter and, after sealing, may cook more slowly. These cuts are sautéed with the pan uncovered.

Sautéed poultry (chicken of medium size, pigeon, etc.) is always jointed. The same principles apply as in the case of white meat.

Pieces of larger poultry are well browned on both sides and left to cook further with the pan covered.

Serving. Sauté dishes must be taken out of the pan and served as indicated in the selected recipe. The dishes are arranged with pieces of fried bread cut into shapes. After garnishing, the cooking stock which has been diluted with red or white wine, white or brown stock, or cream, is poured over the dish.

Mixed sautés – Name given to various ragoûts where the gravy is not thickened with flour. These ragoûts, made up of small pieces of boned lamb, beef, mutton or veal, are fried in butter, fat or oil.

They are cooked in their own stock diluted with various liquids, as with ordinary ragoûts, and served with various garnishes.

CUMIN – Plant whose long and spindle-shaped seeds are dull yellow or light brown in colour. They are five-sided and smooth or covered with tiny hairs. They are acrid and spicy in taste.

Cumin is used for seasoning and in the preparation of liqueurs. Bread is also made with cumin seeds. Wild cumin is sometimes used in certain cheeses, such as Munster cheese.

CUP. TASSE – Receptacle made of china or metal in various shapes and sizes, provided with a handle.

CUP-BEARER. ÉCHANSON – Official charged with the duty of pouring wine for a king or other great personage.

The title of senior cup-bearer or bouteiller de France was a purely honorary one under Louis XIV. This officer had no duties though there were twenty-four gentlemen under his command.

The armorial bearing of this office showed two silver-gilt bottles engraved with the arms of the king, supporting the arms of the holder of the office. His functions fell gradually into disuse, until finally they were exercised only at coronations, ceremonial feasts, at Communion Supper on Maundy Thursday, etc. The office itself was sometimes left vacant. The last bouteiller de France under the old monarchy was the marquis de Lamermar, appointed in 1702.

The Échansons de Paris was founded after the Second World War. Its aim is to publicise good wine.

CURAÇAO – Liqueur made from the rind of Seville oranges and brandy or gin.

CURCUMA – Indian plant whose yellowish rhizome has an acrid and bitter flavour and smells of saffron and ginger. Powdered, the rhizome is used in curry powder and English mustard.

CURD. CAILLÉ – Precipitate or coagulum formed in milk subjected to the action of rennet or acidified by lactic ferments. It is a result of the precipitation of casein and contains varying proportions of butter, depending on whether or not the milk has previously been skimmed. When curd is obtained by the action of rennet, the serum still contains a considerable proportion of casein, which can be precipitated by a second coagulation. The serum of milk curdled by acidification contains very little casein.

Curd can be eaten as it is or with cream. Curdling is the first operation in the manufacture of cheese (q.v.).

CURÉ – See CHEESE.

CURLEW. COURLIS – Wader, a marsh bird which is not highly esteemed from the culinary point of view. Cooked in the same way as plover (q.v.).

CURNONSKY – Maurice Edmond Sailland, the future Curnonsky, was born in Angers on 12 October 1872. After a secondary school education, he went on to study literature at the Sorbonne. The attractions of journalism speedily enticed him away from a university career, and in 1892 he began to frequent newspaper offices and literary circles. He made friends wherever he went.

Curnonsky at 80 years of age (Keystone)

On the advice of one of these friends, Alphonse Allais, the young Sailland decided to choose a pseudonym. It was the period of Franco-Russian entente. "Why not Sky?" someone suggested. He replied, 'Cur non Sky?' The pseudonym had been found.

Simon Arbellot, his biographer, gives the following description of the life and career of this unrivalled prince-elect of gastronomes.

'Tracing Curnonsky's life through the early part of the century means reliving all the gay ostentation of the boulevard, and breathing again the perfumed air of what is called la belle époque. He was to be found wherever imagination triumphed over conformity. P. J. Toulet and Jean de Tinan were friends of his; Willy invited him into his circle and Curnonsky was later to become one of his favourite collaborators. Everyone knew that the old master humorist, author of so many licentious novels, had the knack of surrounding himself with young intellectuals who had fun ghosting for him. Un petit vieux bien propre is attributed to Curnonsky; Toulet is supposed to have written a part of Maugis en ménage; and the two together wrote a great many now-forgotten works signed 'Willy', the titles of which have a strong fin de siècle savour: le Bréviaire des courtisanes, le Métier d'ami, Jeu de prince, etc.

Curnonsky was to be found wherever there was a meeting of minds. Léon Daudet, in his Souvenirs, gives us a picture of him as a regular visitor to Weber's, joining in the debates of Forain, Maxime Dethomas, Adrien Hébrard, Maurice de Fleury, while the slight, vaguely disturbing shadow of Marcel Proust hovered in the background. He was also to be found at Maxim's conversing with Feydeau and Maurice Bertrand. He used to join Paul Fort occasionally in the evenings at the Closerie des lilas, but secretly he preferred the poetry of George Fourrest and Raoul Ponchon to symbolism.

'One day he yielded to the temptations of travel and distant horizons. On his return he wrote the account of the African expeditions of the duc de Montpensier. He was to become a skilful "biographer" of this hunting prince. He moved on to China where the cuisine of the country left an indelible imprint on his mind; he proclaimed it to be the best of the world.

'This somewhat bohemian way of life was, nonetheless, marked by a considerable literary output. Novels, short stories, an anthology, collections of anecdotes made the name of Curnonsky a familiar one in the press and in the publishing world. For Dramet he wrote Une riche nature, for Charles Barret, Un homme qui a bien tourné.

'Writing was his passion. And his masters? First and foremost was La Bruyère, whose advice he loved to repeat to his young friends: "If you wish to say it is raining, then say it is raining." Then Anatole France (the Anatole France of Jacques Tournebroke rather than of M. Bergeret), for the clarity of his old-fashioned, methodical style. I have heard Curnonsky cry out in indignation at the sight of a solecism. Language was no mere form of words to him.

'Then came the gastronomic period, together with prince-dom and public acclaim. Fifty or so academies and clubs fought for his presidency and solicited his presence at their feasts. "Cur" had always loved his food. The Anjou wine and the rillands of his childhood had trained his appetite, and while the rue Jacob period – so discreetly touched on by Madame Colette – seems to have been somewhat disappointing in this respect, the Maxim and Weber era followed closely on its heels. Later, with the collaboration of an epicure and great amphitryon, Marcel Rouff, Curnonsky undertook what amounted to a tourist crusade. It was to this cause that he began to devote all his time. La France gastronomique (32 volumes, interrupted at the twenty-eighth by the death of his collaborator) is a monument of erudition, and a tribute to the richness of our soil. There are also dozens of cookery books, each one no less a literary than a gastronomic delight.

'A public referendum in May 1927 crowned him Prince of Gastronomes, and there was no respite for him after that. He went from disnées to light snacks, inaugurations and enthronements, tête-vins and barbecues without a break. Wherever he went there was a table laid ready for him, the finest wines placed at his disposal.

'On 23 March 1928 he founded the Academy of Gastronomes, modelled on the Académie française, with forty seats and with symbolic titles ranging from Epicure to Talleyrand.

His friends joined him – Maeterlinck in Vergilius Maro's seat, Marcel Rouff in that of Honoré de Balzac. For himself he chose the seat of Brillat-Savarin, in whose honour he gave an address.

Curnonsky enjoyed a sprightly old age. Honoured and fêted wherever he went, he had the satisfaction of seeing his young disciples carrying on his good work and realising the idea that was so close to his heart, that of linking the route to the good restaurant to the interests of tourism. He died as the result of an accident in 1956.'

CURRENT. GROSEILLE – There are various types of currant, the best-known being redcurrants, whitecurrants and blackcurrants. Red and whitecurrants are cultivated in several regions of France, notably on the outskirts of Paris, and in the Meuse and Puy-de-Dôme districts. Blackcurrants are grown mainly on the Côte d'Or. In Dijon blackcurrants are used to make Cassis de Dijon, an internationally famous liqueur.

Red and whitecurrants can be eaten raw, as a dessert, but they are more commonly used in jellies, syrups and in various sweets. Red and whitecurrants are used at Bar-le-Duc to make a jelly which enjoys a great reputation.

Currant compote. COMPOTE DE GROSEILLES – Wash and clean the currants and put them in a bowl. Pour over them a boiling syrup (2 cups sugar plus 1½ cups water) boiled to 121° C. (250°F.).

Currant jam – See JAM, Jellies.

Currant juice for ices. JUS DE GROSEILLE POUR GLACES – Proceed as for strawberry ice mixture. (See STRAWBERRY.)

CURRY. CARI – Combination of spices, thoroughly dried, ground to a powder, and cooked slowly in clarified butter, vegetable oil or soured milk before adding the fish, meat, eggs or vegetables that are to be curried. The curry powders sold in grocery shops are usually a combination of fifteen or twenty herbs, seeds and spices. Those who really appreciate curry choose special combinations of spices to go with various dishes, some of which call for mild, subtle seasonings and others for hotter ones. The strength of a curry depends on how much chilli is used.

The principal ingredients of curry powder are allspice, anise, bay leaves, cinnamon, caraway, celery seed, cloves, coriander, cumin, curry leaves, dill, fennel, fenugreek (seeds and leaves), garlic, ginger, mace, mustard, nutmeg, pepper (white and black), paprika, poppy seeds, saffron, turmeric, mint, cubeb berries, sumach seeds, juniper berries, zedoary root, salt.

For the preparation of different curries see MUTTON, CHICKEN.

Bichique curry (Créole cookery). CARI DE BICHQUES – The bichique is a minute fish found near the island of Réunion. It is exported in tins and prepared as follows:

Cook a finely chopped onion in good quality fat or oil until golden. For a small tin of bichique add a large peeled and seeded tomato cut into tiny pieces, and 1 coffee-spoon Réunion saffron. Cover, and cook for a few seconds. Pound together in a mortar some ginger, 1 clove of garlic, a sprig of parsley, and salt. Mix with the ingredients in the pan. Carefully add the fish. Do not stir or they may break as they are very fragile. Leave to soak for 20 minutes. Cover the pan and put it in a moderate oven for 20 to 25 minutes. Serve with Rice à la créole (see RICE).

Bringelle curry (Créole cookery). CARI DE BRINGELLES – Cut some lean and fat pork into large cubes as for a stew. Brown them lightly in fat with finely chopped onion. Add 2 teaspoons saffron, parsley, thyme, garlic, a piece of well-crushed stem ginger and chopped tomatoes. Slice aubergines into rounds and dip them in water slightly seasoned with salt and vinegar. Drain thoroughly and put them in a saucepan with the pork. Moisten with a little olive oil and cover. Stir from time to time, crushing the aubergines with the spoon. Allow 2½ hours for cooking on a low flame. Serve when the sauce is thick.

CUSTARD. CRÈME—Custard is a mixture of beaten eggs and milk variously sweetened and flavoured, and cooked either over hot water or baked in the oven.

Caramel custard. CRÈME MOULÉE AU CARAMEL—Line a mould with caramel and fill it with a preparation of Vanilla custard (see below). Set the mould in a pan half-filled with hot water and cook slowly in the oven.

Caramel custard

Fried custard. CRÈME FRITE—Put 250 g. (9 oz., 2¼ cups) sifted flour in a pan with 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) fine sugar, 12 egg yolks, 4 whole eggs and a small pinch of salt. Moisten with 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) milk which has been boiled with a vanilla pod. Add 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter. Mix well and cook on the stove in the same way as French pastry cream (see CREAMS), stirring all the time. Spread out this cream on a buttered baking sheet in an even layer, about 5 mm. (¼ inch) thick, and leave to cool. Cut into pieces and dip in beaten egg and breadcrumbs.

Fry in deep boiling fat. Drain the pieces, dry them on a cloth, and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with liqueur.

Vanilla custard. CRÈME MOULÉE À LA VANILLE—Dissolve 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) sugar in ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) boiled milk. Add ½ vanilla pod, and leave to infuse for 20 minutes. Pour this, little by little, over 2 whole eggs and 4 egg yolks which have been beaten together in a basin. Mix well and strain. Remove the froth which forms on the surface of the cream.

Fill a charlotte mould with the mixture and cook in a bain-marie in the oven. Let it cool thoroughly before turning it out.

CUSTARD APPLE COROSSOL—Common name for a species of annona and its fruit. It sometimes attains a weight of 4 kg. (8½ to 9 lb.), though the tree that produces it is stunted and bare.

The fruit, which resembles a large pimento in shape, has a smooth green skin with a few hairy protuberances. The pulp is white, compact and full of black seeds the size of apricot kernels which, when the fruit is ripe, give off an agreeable odour. The taste is slightly acid. When crushed and mixed with four or five times its volume of water, the pulp produces a liquid similar to milk. After being sweetened and chilled it makes a pleasant drink.

CUSTARD MARROW. CHAYOTE—Vegetable, also known in France as brionne, that is the fruit of a climbing plant belonging to the same family as marrows. The custard marrow is a native of Mexico and the Antilles. Its cultivation has spread to other hot countries, notably Algeria.

The fruit of the custard marrow is a large green pear with deep ribbing. Its surface is somewhat spiny. The flesh is white, firm, homogenous, without smell or too pronounced a taste. It is prepared in many ways. Before cooking it must be blanched or cooked au blanc, like cardoons (q.v.), being first cut into quarters and trimmed into lozenge-shaped pieces.

Custard marrows

Custard marrows in béchamel sauce. CHAYOTES AU BLANC—Prepared in the same way as Custard marrows à la crème (see below) but moistened with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) in place of fresh cream.

Braised custard marrows au jus. CHAYOTES BRAISÉES AU JUS—Trim into lozenge shapes and blanch in boiling salted water. Drain. Put them in a buttered pan lined with strips of bacon rind and sliced carrots and onions. Season. Cover with a consommé from which not all the fat has been skimmed, and cook with the lid on. When the liquor is reduced to a glaze add a few tablespoons rich brown veal stock. Simmer. Drain the custard marrows and pour over them a sauce made by boiling down the liquor remaining in the pan, adding butter and straining through a sieve.

Custard marrows with butter. CHAYOTES AU BEURRE—Cut the custard marrows into large lozenge-shaped pieces. Cook in White court-bouillon for vegetables (see COURT-BOUILLON) keeping them firm.

Drain and dry the pieces, put them into a sauté pan or heavy frying pan in which 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) butter has been heated. Moisten with 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup)

CUTTING BOARD

veal or chicken consommé, or water. Cover and cook gently until cooked. Pour over them the liquor in which they have cooked, with a little butter added.

Custard marrows à la crème. CHAYOTES À LA CRÈME – Cook the custard marrows in the same way as for Custard marrows with butter. When nearly cooked cover them with fresh boiled cream and finish cooking with the lid on.

To serve, pour over them the cream in which they were cooked.

Custard marrows à la créole. CHAYOTES À LA CRÉOLE – Quarter the custard marrows, blanch them well in salted water. Cook 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onions in butter and oil (half and half). Add 3 tomatoes, peeled, seeded and coarsely chopped, a bouquet garni (q.v.) a minced clove of garlic, and the custard marrows. Cook with the lid on.

Serve in a border of rice, cooked in bouillon. Sprinkle the custard marrows with chopped parsley.

Custard marrow fritters. CHAYOTES EN FRITOT – Quarter the custard marrows and cook in White court-bouillon for vegetables (see COURT-BOUILLON). Drain and dry them. Put them in a marinade of olive oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Dip each piece in a light batter and deep-fry in boiling oil. Garnish with fried parsley.

Custard marrows used as a garnish. CHAYOTES POUR GARNITURES – Quartered custard marrows, cooked in butter or braised, can be used as part of a garnish for eggs, fish, small pieces of meat, fowl, etc.

When used to garnish eggs or fish, the custard marrows are cut up into large dice, blanched and cooked in butter.

To garnish pieces of meat or fowl, trim the custard marrows into large lozenge shapes, cook in butter or braise, and when they are nearly cooked, add the juices of the meat or fowl which they are to accompany.

Custard marrows au gratin. CHAYOTES AU GRATIN – Quarter the custard marrows, cook in White court-bouillon for vegetables (see COURT-BOUILLON) then simmer in butter. Arrange in a buttered gratin dish and sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour melted butter over them and brown in a moderate oven.

Custard marrows à la grecque. CHAYOTES À LA GRECQUE – Dice the custard marrows. Blanch in salted water and cook in a court-bouillon in the same way as Aubergines à la grecque (see AUBERGINE). Leave to cool in their liquor before serving. Use as an hors-d'œuvre.

Custard marrows à la martiniquaise. CHAYOTES À LA MARTINICAISE – Press boiled custard marrow in a cloth to extract the maximum of water, then pound the pulp together with bread dipped in milk. Cook finely chopped onion in butter, add the custard marrow mixture with a little salt and pepper, and milk. Smooth the surface with breadcrumbs and cook in a moderately hot oven. (Recipe taken from the Bulletin de la société d'horticulture d'Algérie.)

Custard marrows mornay. CHAYOTES MORNAY – Prepare in the same way as Custard marrows au gratin. The custard marrows are arranged in a dish on a layer of Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), covered with the same sauce, sprinkled with grated cheese and browned in the oven.

Custard marrow salad. SALADE DE CHAYOTES – Quarter the custard marrows crossways, trim and slightly hollow them out. Blanch in salted water, drain and dry them. Season with oil, vinegar, pepper and chopped herbs.

Stuffed custard marrows. CHAYOTES FARCIES – Halve the custard marrows crossways, trim and slightly hollow them out. Blanch in salted water, drain and dry them.

Simmer gently in butter. When nearly cooked, fill them with a mixture of pork forcemeat and dry duxelles (q.v.).

Arrange the forcemeat in the form of a dome. Put the custard marrows on a buttered gratin dish, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter, and brown gently in the oven.

Custard marrows prepared in this way can be served as a vegetable or used as part of the garnish of a particular dish.

Instead of pork forcemeat, they can be filled with one or other of the preparations indicated for various stuffed vegetables (see TOMATO, AUBERGINE, etc.).

CUTTING BOARD. PLANCHE À DÉCOUPER – Beechwood board used for cutting up meat, provided with a groove and a hole to catch the juices.

CUTTLEFISH. SEICHE, SÈCHE – Cephalopod mollusc with an internal shell (cuttlebone), secreting an inky liquid (sepia). The tough flesh becomes eatable if it is vigorously beaten. It was popular with the Romans and is still liked in certain countries, notably in Spain. Powdered cuttlebone was formerly used as an absorbent.

Cuttlefish is prepared like octopus.

CUVE – Large tun made of wood, cement or metal in which the grapes are pressed for wine and in which red wine is fermented.

CUVEAU – Small cuve.

CUVÉE – Product of a particular cuve. A cuvée can also be a mixture of grapes, either taken from different parts of a large vineyard, as in the Bordeaux district, bought from different growers under similar climatic conditions, as in Burgundy, or the product of different harvests in the same region, as in Champagne and on the slopes of the Rhône. The final result depends upon the quality of the vintage and the skilful balance of the mixture.

Dab

DAB. LIMANDE – Flat fish of the Pleuronectidae family, between 20 and 30 cm. (8 and 12 inches) long, with scales almost as rough as a file. It is oval and less elongated than the sole. Its right side, where the eyes are placed, is coloured, with a semi-circular lateral line running from head to tail; its blind side is white. The flesh is soft and easily digested. The American dab is not very different.

All recipes for plaice (q.v.) are suitable for dab.

DACE. DARD – Freshwater fish of the Cyprinidae family, also known in France as aubourg, gravelet or vandoise. It is caught in most of the rivers of central France but it is rather leathery to eat and is usually prepared en matelote.

DAGH KEBAB (Turkish cookery) – Pieces of shin veal skewered with slices of onions and tomatoes, grilled and sprinkled with thyme. It is served with pilaf of rice, okra (q.v.), or some other garnish.

DAHLIA – Ornamental plant, originally found in Mexico, which owes its name to the botanist Dahl of Antwerp. Dahlia tubers are edible and are similar to the Jerusalem artichoke in flavour. They are cooked in the same way as Jerusalem artichokes (q.v.).

DAIKON. DAÏKON – Large Japanese radish which can be eaten raw like the common radish, or parboiled and cooked like turnips.

DAISY. PÂQUERETTE – One of the commonest field flowers. Its young leaves and buds are eaten in salads.

DAME-BLANCHE (Cold sweet or dessert) – A kind of Plombières ice cream. (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.)

DAMPFNUDELN (German pâtisserie) – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fine sugar, 5 egg yolks, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) melted butter, 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) milk, 10 g. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  oz.) yeast, a small pinch of salt, lemon rind.

Method. Make a leaven with a quarter of the flour, the yeast and the milk, slightly warmed. Keep in a moderate temperature.

When the leaven has doubled in volume, mix in the melted butter, a little at a time, the salt, lemon rind, egg yolks, sugar and the rest of the flour.

Dredge with flour and roll out. Leave for 5 minutes. Cut into rounds with a pastry-cutter, put them on a floured cloth, and leave to rise in a moderate temperature for 1 hour. Baste with butter, sprinkle with fine sugar and bake in a slow oven.

Dampfnudeln are usually served with stewed fruit or jam. The rounds can also be filled with 1 teaspoon thick apricot purée flavoured with rum. Fold and seal, put them on a buttered baking sheet with the join downward, and bake.

DANDELION. PISSENI.IT – Weed with toothed or pinnated leaves and yellow flowers, gathered in the fields from November to March. There are improved varieties, such as plein coeur amélioré and très hâtif, which are cultivated.

Tender young dandelion leaves are eaten raw, in salads. They can also be cooked like spinach (q.v.).

Daikon

DARIOLE

Dariole moulds (Dehillerin. Phot. Larousse)

DARIOLE – Small cylindrical mould. The name also applies to the cakes baked in these moulds.

Line dariole moulds with Puff pastry (see DOUGH) folded and rolled out 6 times. Fill with Frangipane cream (see CREAMS) mixed with almonds and flavoured with kirsch or some other liqueur. Bake in a hot oven, and sprinkle with sugar.

DARNE – Thick slice of a large raw fish. This cut used to be called, a dalle (slab).

Darnes of fish can be poached, braised, grilled, or sautéed in butter. This is a typical recipe.

Darne of salmon à l'ancienne. DARNÉ DE SAUMON À L'ANCIENNE – Season with salt and pepper a darne of salmon weighing between 500 and 600 g. (about 1½ lb.) and place it in a buttered fireproof dish. Moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) white wine and the same quantity of concentrated fish stock. Add a small sliced onion, a bouquet garni and the trimmings and peelings of mushrooms, the mushrooms themselves to be used later for the garnish.

Bring to the boil on the stove, and then place in the oven. Cook for 20 minutes, basting from time to time. About 10 minutes before taking it out of the oven, add the peeled and trimmed mushrooms. Drain the salmon, and garnish with the mushrooms arranged at each end of the dish. Top each mushroom with a poached oyster, decorated with a strip of truffle tossed in butter. Surround the salmon with freshwater crayfish which have been tossed and cooked in a court-bouillon (q.v.).

Boil down the cooking stock of the salmon and thicken with egg yolks and butter. Add 1 tablespoon liqueur brandy and a touch of cayenne pepper. Pour some of this sauce round the salmon and serve the rest separately.

Dartois (Larousse)

DARTOIS – Small snacks served as an hors-d'oeuvre or light main course. For recipes see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

DARTOIS (Pâtisserie) – Make two layers of Puff pastry (see DOUGH). Fill the middle of one layer with almond cream and cover with the second layer. Brush the top with egg, leaving the edges untouched or the pastry will not rise during baking.

Lightly mark dividing lines at evenly spaced intervals to indicate where the pastry is to be cut later. Bake in a moderate oven, then sprinkle the top lightly with icing sugar and put back in the oven until the sugar forms a glaze on top. Cut into sections at once, following the lines marked out before baking.

The base of this cake may be made with flaky pastry trimmings. It need only be 2 to 3 mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) thick – the upper layer about 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick; or both layers may be of equal thickness of 4 mm. ( $\frac{1}{5}$  inch).

Cream for filling dartois. Pound finely in a mortar 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar with 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) blanched almonds, adding 2 eggs to prevent the mixture from becoming oily. Soften 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter to a paste, and add to the mixture. Add also a small glass of rum and, if desired, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) French pastry cream (see CREAM).

A good cream can be made by mixing ground almonds with French pastry cream, and flavouring the mixture with vanilla or rum. The greatest care must be taken to seal the layers of pastry as the cream boils during cooking and tends to ooze out.

Dates and date-palm

DATE. DATTE – The fruit of the date-palm was known to the Chaldeans in antiquity. It grows wild in the area bounded by the Euphrates and the Nile, and is cultivated in the desert oases of southern Algeria and Tunisia. The male and female principles grow on separate trees and artificial pollination is therefore necessary.

There are hard and soft dates, the latter being more highly prized. The best dates come from Tunisia, Algeria and western Asia. They are about the size of a thumb, with yellowish-red skin, and have a sweet flavour. Excellent dates are grown in South Carolina and Arizona (U.S.A.).

Since dates are a concentrate of sugar (73 per cent of their weight is rapidly assimilable sugar) they are full of nourishment. They contain appreciable quantities of phosphorus and calcium and are rich in Vitamins A and B. Some alcoholic drinks, including brandy, are made from dates.

Date fritters – See FRITTER, Sweet (dessert) fritters.

Stuffed dates (petits fours). DATTES FOURRÉES – Stone the dates, and stuff with almond paste flavoured with kirsch or rum, or with pistachio nut paste. Sprinkle with crystallised sugar.

DAUBE – Method of cooking meat. Although this method can be used for other meat, as well as poultry and game, the term daube without qualification means a cut of beef cooked en daube, that is, braised in red wine stock well seasoned with herbs.

Stuffed dates
(Scarnati)

The name daube à l'avignonnaise means a dish made with mutton cooked in red wine.

For different kinds of daube see BEEF, MUTTON, TURKEY, PHEASANT.

Old daubière (Larousse)

DAUBIÈRE – Casserole of stoneware, earthenware or tinned copper for the cooking of daubes.

DAUCUS – Plant whose aromatic seeds, used medicinally in former times, are now used in the preparation of some liqueurs.

DAUMONT (À LA) – Method of preparing large fish. The Daumont garnish (see GARNISHES) comprises quenelles, soft roe, mushrooms and freshwater crayfish tails, served with Nantua sauce.

DAUPHINÉ – The Dauphiné region stretches from the Alps to the Rhône Valley. In the north it borders on the Lyonnais district and the Bresse area, from which it is separated by the Rhône. In the south it adjoins Provence without any clear-cut geographical demarcation line. Its north-eastern border is Savoy on the edge of the high, mountainous Isère valley. The diversity of geographical and climatic conditions of this region, explains the variety of its produce. The Rhône Valley has a climate favourable to the cultivation of spring vegetables and fruit trees (especially peaches and apricots), and its sunlit slopes bear the famous Rhône vineyards. In the extreme south, olive trees are to be found. The valleys of the Alps provide rich pasture for rearing great numbers of cows which yield excellent milk. Here, too, are the groves from which the Lyons chestnuts are gathered. There are also hazelnut trees which yield an abundant crop. The honey from these upland pastures is highly prized. The lakes and rivers provide trout and crayfish. In some places truffles are found, and mushrooms are common in the woods.

Culinary specialties – Regional cookery shows a marked predilection for gratin dishes. These are made not only with macaroni and potatoes but also with chopped porridge, white beet, swedes, cèpes and crayfish tails.

Daubes are favourite dishes and those of Vienne enjoy a considerable reputation. Among the specialties of this region are grillades marinière; défarde; baby quails; thrush with juniper berries; thrush pâtés des Alpes; salmis of thrush; pickled thrush; the excellent pickled truffles de Nyons; and Chabeuil quails.

The dairy farms in these alpine pastures provide milk which is used to manufacture cheeses: Sassenage, Saint-Marcellin, Champoléon, Pelvoux, Briançon and the white cheese, tomme (a cheese made from fermented buttermilk). The characteristic regional pastry is the pogne, an immense tart filled in summer with fruit and in autumn with pumpkin. In the Drôme area, a pogne is a kind of brioche. The pogne of Romans enjoys an especially high reputation. Among the sweet specialties are Valence pognes and meringues, the honey tours of Gap, the sweetmeats of Voiron and the famous nougat of Montélimar.

Wines – The Rhône slopes produce some very highly reputed wines, such as those of Hermitage and Crozes; white and red Hermitage and the famous Clairette de Die.

DAUPHINE (À LA) – Name given to several different dishes. Most commonly it is used for a potato preparation made from duchess potato mixture and chou paste. This mixture is shaped into balls and deep-fried. (See POTATOES.)

DAUPHINOISE (À LA) – Method of preparing potatoes (q.v.).

DECANT. DÉCANTER – To pour any liquid from one container into another. Wine is decanted into a carafe to get rid of the deposit formed at the bottom of the wine bottle. Decanting has the added advantage of oxidising the wine.

Gastronomic map of Dauphiné

This operation must be carried out with great care, training a light on the carafe to make sure that the wine is clear, and allowing as little as possible of the residue to get in.

Butter is also said to be decanted when it is melted and purified by being transferred from one container to another.

DECIZE – See CHEESE.

DECOCTION. DÉCOCTION – Process of boiling a solid for a period in water. Clear soup is a decoction of meat. The decoction of vegetable matter has the disadvantage of sapping many of its nutritive properties and evaporating its volatile elements.

DECOMPOSITION. DÉCOMPOSITION – Destruction of a body by the disintegration of its elements.

DEEP-FRYING. FRITURE – Immersing foods in a large, deep pan of boiling fat. The French term for deep-frying is friture, a word also applied to the fat used in deep-frying.

In the great kitchens of a hotel or restaurant, deep-frying is almost always carried out successfully, but this cannot be said of home cooking, where more often than not the methods and ingredients used are quite unsuitable.

In hotel kitchens a large number of different fats are available. These are chosen with care and used lavishly. In private households, the fats are not always pure, and, for reasons of economy, the housewife uses her fats too sparingly. This is false economy. Deep-frying can only be successful if a great deal of fat is used. The more fat the less waste, since, where too little fat is used, it is absorbed into the food and the pieces stick to one another and become soggy. Food fried in abundant fat is crisp, firm and cooked all through. It is properly sealed at the outset and therefore does not absorb the fat.

There must be ample space in the cooking utensil which should be made in a single piece, of sheet-iron or hammered copper.

As it is often necessary to fry a number of things at the same time, it is desirable to have at least two such pans in the kitchen. One of these should be kept exclusively for fish. Other necessary equipment for deep-frying are grids, baskets and skimmers. The pan must be carefully cleaned each time it is used, inside and out. The fat should be strained and poured back into the pan for storage.

Fats for deep-frying. LA GRAISSE DE FRITURE – The best fat to use in all deep-frying is beef kidney fat (suet), clarified and purified with scrupulous care. This fat is odourless and can be heated up to 180°C. (350°F.) without burning. If it is carefully looked after, it can be used over and over again.

A little veal fat can be added if desired, but veal fat must not be used alone, since it deteriorates very quickly. An alternative household fat can be prepared by mixing ox kidney-fat with an equal quantity of lard or oil, but these mixtures, apart from being more expensive, cannot be heated to the same high degree without burning, nor can they be used again as much. Mutton fat should never be used in deep-frying, since it impregnates the food with a taste of tallow.

Among the fats which are suitable for frying certain special foods are olive oil, which is suitable for fish, fritters, rice and cream croquettes, etc; clarified butter which may be used in the preparation of delicately flavoured sweets; and groundnut (peanut) oil and cereal oils.

The cheaper vegetable oils include various types of coconut butter. They are quite suitable in certain cases, but are still a poor substitute for ox kidney fat.

The fat of duck, goose and other fat poultry, as well as lard, may be used with butter for browning or in the preparation of roux, but ox kidney is more efficient.

In his book, le Cuisinier praticien, Reculet says:

'The amount of fat used in frying must always depend upon the size of the object to be fried; the greater the quantity of liquid, the more it can hold the heat, and it is able to counteract the cooling caused by the immersion of the object and the moisture given off during cooking.

'In a busy kitchen it is desirable to have two lots of cooking fat, one white and one brown. The white fat is fresh or at least little used: it should be used for all deep-frying except for fish. The brown fat, darkened by long service should be used for fish, though good white fat is preferable in all cases.

'There are several signs to be seen when frying-oil becomes hot:

1. A slight tremor on the surface.
2. A strong characteristic smell.
3. A dry whitish vapour given off by the fat.

Test the heat of the fat by adding a drop of water to it or by dipping any substance other than purified fat into it. If the sound is sharp and high, the fat is hot enough for frying.'

Vegetables and fruit, which have a high proportion of water in them, are fried in moderately hot fat. This applies particularly to potatoes. Fish and other large foodstuffs are also deep-fried in moderately hot fat; they would not be cooked right through if they were sealed at once by contact with too intense a heat.

Very hot fat is used for foodstuffs which must be sealed instantly, for example, anything dipped in egg and bread-crumbs or batter. This also applies to precooked foods such as croquettes and very small foodstuffs which must be sealed immediately. Soufflé potatoes must be dropped into very hot fat after having first been cooked in moderately hot fat.

This was Brillat-Savarin's theory of deep-frying:

'Not all liquids exposed to the action of fire can absorb the same amount of heat. Thus, one may with impunity dip one's finger into boiling spirits of wine, where one would withdraw it hastily from brandy, and still more hastily from water, while any contact with boiling oil would cause an intensely painful blister, since oil can hold at least three times as much heat as water.

'It is as a result of these differences that hot liquids act in different ways upon the foodstuffs which are immersed in them. Those cooked in water are softened and reduced by boiling; soups and extracts are their by-products. Foods cooked in fat, on the other hand, are compressed; they take on a dark colouring, and in the end become charred.

'In the first case, water dissolves and absorbs into itself the inherent juices of the foods cooked in it; in the second, the juices are preserved intact because they are insoluble in oil. If fried foods eventually become desiccated it is because over-exposure to heat has evaporated all the moisture in them.

'These two methods of cooking are known by different names, and the process of boiling foodstuffs in oil or fat is known as frying.

'The virtue of good frying lies in a kind of shell formed round the food, which prevents the fat from penetrating it and seals the juices inside. These juices are thus cooked within the shell so that the full flavour of the food is preserved. The boiling liquid must have attained a sufficient degree of heat for its action to be instantaneous; to reach this point, it must be heated for quite a long time over a very hot flame.

Olive oil should be used only for very quick frying or for processes which do not require great heat. This is because olive oil, if heated for a long time, develops an unpleasant taste which it is difficult to eradicate.' (Physiologie du Goût.)

DEEP-FRYING BASKET

DEEP-FRYING BASKET. GRILLE – Wire utensil in which food is contained for deep-frying. Fried foods can be lifted out of the fat in this utensil.

Deer on display in shop window

DEER. CERF – Wild mammal whose flesh is tender up to one year, and from then on becomes more and more tough. It is particularly indigestible and even poisonous when the deer has been brought down after a long chase.

All methods of preparation given for the buck are applicable to the doe.

DEFUTUM – Latin term used by Apicius and found in ancient recipes to designate grape juice reduced by evaporation to a third of its volume. This juice was widely used in Roman cookery.

DÉGLAÇAGE – Technical term in French cookery for the operation of pouring any liquid into the pan in which food has been cooked in butter or other fat.

Wine is used for this purpose, heated and stirred in the pan so that all the concentrated juices are incorporated into it. White or brown stocks, cream, vinegar, or alcohol can also be used.

DÉGLACER – Technical term in French cookery for the dilution of the concentrated juices in a pan in which meat, poultry, game or fish has been roasted, braised or fried. White or red wine, Madeira or some other heavy wine, clear soup, stock and sometimes cream are used.

DÉGORGER – Term used in French cookery meaning to soak food for a variable length of time in cold water to free it from impurities. Thus, calves' heads and sweetbreads are soaked in water to make them very white.

The term is also used of the operation of clearing Champagne bottles of the impurities contained in the wine.

DÉGRAISSER – Term in French cookery meaning to skim off excess fat which forms on the surface of a liquid (clear soup, sauce, etc.). The term is also used to describe cutting away some of the fat which forms a coating on a joint of meat. All fat thus removed, whether from liquids or meat (except that of mutton or lamb) must be clarified. It can then be used for deep-frying.

DÉGRAISSIS – Term used in French cookery for the fat skimmed off clear soup, stock, or sauce. This fat, which must be clarified, is known in France as 'economy fat', and is used to fry certain vegetables, or as deep-frying fat.

DEHYDRATING. DÉSHYDRATER – Synonym for drying (q.v.).

DÉJEUNER – In France, the first meal of the day (breakfast) is called the petit déjeuner or premier déjeuner (i.e. little or first déjeuner) to distinguish it from déjeuner, which is taken in the middle of the day.

The institution of this midday meal dates back to the French Revolution. In the eighteenth century, the main meal of the day, dîner (dinner) was taken first at midday and later at 1 p.m. The déjeuner, taken upon waking, consisted of a soup or coffee with milk.

The Constituent Assembly began its deliberations at about midday, to rise at about 6 p.m. It was, therefore, necessary to change the dinner hour to 6 p.m., and since the members could not sit fasting, they were obliged to take a second breakfast at 11 a.m. This second déjeuner was more substantial than the first and included eggs and cold meat.

According to the Goncourt brothers, Edmond (1822–1896) and Jules (1830–1870), it was Mme. Handy who invented fork luncheons, by setting out cutlets, kidneys and sausages on a buffet in her café on the boulevards opposite the Comédie-Italienne, and pressing her clients to take these savouries with their meal.

Nowadays, in France, déjeuner has largely usurped the place of the original dîner. It includes the same dishes and is eaten later and later in the day.

The experts maintain that a substantial dinner does not necessarily cause a restless night, provided that there is a long enough interval between dinner and going to bed, and because too large a lunch makes work difficult in the afternoon, more and more people are following the British habit of having a substantial breakfast followed by a light lunch.

DÉLICE – This word, which in French strictly means a certain type of pastry, is nowadays misused by some pretentious maitres d'hôtel in the drawing up of their menus.

Having no precise culinary meaning, the word (which implies delectability), is exploited for its very vagueness, implying in advance that the dish offered is delectable, though, in fact, all it does is to put the wary patron on his guard.

DEMI – In English the term 'half' is used of a glass of beer holding approximately 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups).

In France, a demi is a glass of beer also holding about 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) which means that patrons get approximately three demis to a litre. (See TANKARD OR BEER-GLASS.)

DEMI-DEUIL (À LA) – This term (which, literally translated, means 'in half-mourning') is applied mainly to poached poultry and veal sweetbreads braised in a white sauce.

Food cooked in this way is dressed with suprême sauce and garnished with truffles.

DEMIDOFF – Name of a princely Russian family. Prince Anatole Demidoff, who married Princess Mathilde, daughter of King Jérôme Bonaparte (but was soon divorced), was one of the most celebrated gastronomes of the Second Empire.

Le petit déjeuner (Boucher)

For this reason, an elaborate method of preparing large poultry was called after him. (See CHICKEN, Chicken Demidoff.)

DEMI-ESPAGNOLE – By demi-espagnole, Carême means what today is called demi-glace (see SAUCE).

‘Pour half the grande espagnole into a saucepan with the same volume of good clear chicken soup to which have been added the trimmings of mushrooms and truffles.’ Carême adds instructions for the preparation of this soup:

‘This consommé is made with the carcasses and giblets of 2 chickens, moistened with good stock (too much salt must be particularly avoided). Next, add a carrot, a couple of onions, and, after having skimmed it carefully, let it simmer. About 2 hours later, strain it through muslin or sieve without pressure. Leave to stand, and strain thoroughly.

‘Put the saucepan on a strong heat and stir with a special espagnole wooden spoon until the liquid is bubbling all over. Move it to the corner of the stove; skim carefully and remove every trace of fat. In this state, leave it for a full 45 minutes. Skim off the fat, and replace the stock on the strong heat. Stir the espagnole with a wooden spoon to prevent it from boiling over, which will otherwise happen because of the very rapid boiling necessary to preserve as far as possible the essence which is the sauce.

When it is suitably reduced, strain through a cloth.’

DEMI-GLACE – Brown sauce made by boiling and skimming espagnole sauce and mixing in white stock, estouffade, or clear soup.

This sauce is usually flavoured with Madeira or sherry. (See SAUCE.)

DEMI-JOHN. DAME-JEANNE – Large earthenware or glass bottle.

DEMI-SEL – See CHEESE.

DEMI-TASSE – In France a demitasse can mean either a very small cup or a cup of black coffee.

DÉNERVER – Term in French cookery denoting the removal of tendons, membranes, gristle, etc. from meat, poultry, game, etc.

DENIER (EN) – Potato crisps are sometimes called en denier in France because they are cut in the shape of a coin. (See POTATOES.)

DENSIMETER. DENSIMÈTRE – Instrument designed to measure the density of liquids. Anometers and alcoholometers are densimeters constant in weight but variable in volume, made in the form of a hollow glass rod weighted with lead or mercury. The rod sinks into the liquid and the density is recorded by means of a scale marked on the side.

There are a great many types of densimeter for different types of liquid. These are usually sold with conversion tables indicating the allowances to be made for temperature, and enabling the readings to be converted to other scales.

DENSITY. DENSITÉ – Degree of consistence of a body or substance, measured by the ratio of the mass to the volume, or by the quantity of matter in a unit of bulk. In practice, this is the ratio of the weight of a volume of a body to the weight of the same volume of distilled water at a temperature of 4°C. (39.2°F.). The measuring of density with special instruments makes it possible readily to assess the alcohol content of a liquid, the sugar content of a syrup, etc.

DENT-DE-LOUPS (Wolves' fang) – Name given in France to several kinds of decorative motif used in the presentation of dishes:

1. Slices of sandwich bread cut into triangles and fried in butter or oil. These are used to garnish a number of different dishes.

2. Triangles cut out of strips of jelly, used to garnish cold dishes.

DENTEX. DENTÉ – Mediterranean fish. The common dentex can attain a length of up to 1 m. (40 inches); the large-eyed dentex grows to about 50 cm. (20 inches). Prepare as for sea bream (q.v.).

DENUTRITION. DÉNUTRITION – Nutritional disorder that occurs when deassimilation exceeds assimilation.

DE-OIL. DÉSHUILER – To remove excess oil from grain or flour, either by pressure or by some chemical process.

DERBY – Method of preparing large poultry (see CHICK-EN, Chicken à la Derby). It was devised by M. Jean Giroix when he was in charge of the kitchens of the Hotel de Paris at Monte-Carlo.

DERMATITIS. DERMATOSE – Skin infection. Such complaints have led to food restrictions because certain foods (strawberries, shellfish, etc.) cause skin eruptions in some people. These people ought to avoid whatever upsets them or endeavour to desensitise themselves but it is unnecessary to forbid such foods to all sufferers from skin disorders.

In most cases of dermatitis a moderate diet is generally prescribed; not too much meat or fatty foods and especially not too much bread. Sometimes a restorative diet is indicated. Each case must be treated according to the type of dermatitis the person has, how efficient his digestive processes are, and his general state of health.

DÉROBER – French term used in cookery for the removal of the skins of shelled broad beans.

It can also mean the peeling of potatoes and other vegetables.

M.-A. Désaugiers
(1772-1827)

DÉSAUGIERS – Marc-Antoine Désaugiers, a talented writer of satirical songs, was born at Fréjus (Var) in 1772 and died in Paris in 1827.

Désaugiers, immortal author of M. et Mme. Denis, can be numbered among the gastronomic poets, for he wrote a great many songs extolling the joys of the table. Some of these songs are still sung today, when, as in our forefathers' time, each guest at table takes his turn at singing a song over the dessert. He was secretary of the Caveau moderne, a French literary, gastronomic and also somewhat bacchanalian society. He wrote his will, in a manner of speaking, in the last couplet of his Chanson à manger (Eating Song).

*Je veux que la mort me frappe
Au milieu d'un grand repas;
Qu'on m'enterre sous la nappe
Entre quatre larges plats,
Et que sur ma tombe on mette
Cette courte inscription:
Ci-gît le premier poète
Mort d'une indigestion.*

I pray that death may strike me
In the middle of a large meal.
I wish to be buried under the tablecloth
Between four large dishes.
And I desire that this short inscription
Should be engraved on my tombstone
Here lies the first poet
Ever to die of indigestion.

DESESSARTS – One of the greatest actors of the Comédie-Française in his day. He was born at Langres in 1740 and died at Barèges in 1793. He was also a celebrated gastronome.

'Desessarts,' says Emile Deschanel in l'Histoire des comédiens, 'had an appetite worthy of his size, but he was also a connoisseur. He was very witty. A good dinner sent his spirits soaring. He would analyse elegantly the qualities of each dish, and, in order to describe them more vividly, would coin amusingly bizarre words.'

"If his fellow-diners were amiable and good trenchermen, the sybarite gaiety of Desessarts would express itself lyrically in poetic phrases such as "the boar, prince of the forests, whose ferocious pride is humbled when he is baked in a pâte"."

Desessarts was, like all gourmets, a splendid fellow. His talent was as straightforward as his character. Infectious gaiety mixed with bonhomie were distinctive traits both of his art and his disposition.

DESSICATION. DESSICATION – Process of drying or dehydrating foodstuffs. (See PRESERVATION OF FOOD.)

DESSERT – Last course of a meal. Nowadays, in France, dessert comprises cheese, sweet dishes (which were formerly served before the dessert) and fruit.

In former times at great banquets, dessert, which was the fifth course of the meal, was often presented in magnificent style. Large set pieces fashioned in pastry, described often and in great detail by Carême, whose accounts are accompanied by splendid illustrations, were placed on the table at the beginning of the meal. These owed more to architecture than to the art of cooking, and had a purely decorative function. Just before the sweet course, a multitude of sweets were elegantly arranged on the table with the set pieces, for every ceremonial table was laid in accordance with a detailed plan. The dishes had to harmonise with gold plate, crystal, magnificent baskets of fruit, and the tall candelabra: a magnificent spectacle.

Flowers are used today for table decoration. Fruit too, is often placed on the table before the beginning of the meal and this, too, contributes to its embellishment.

Sweets, hot or cold, are served as dessert after the cheese

Dessert (after Carême, le Confiturier royal)

Modern dessert in France
(Orfèverie Christoffe)

in France. Although less ostentatious than in former times, modern desserts are no less sumptuous or succulent.

DESSERTÉ – French term for food that has been prepared but not used. In certain French restaurants, such food (apart from a few items) belongs to the waiters.

DÉTREMPE – Technical term in confectionery meaning a mixture of flour and water to be used in the preparation of pastries.

For example, faire la détrempe du feuilletage is the term used for making the flour-and-water mixture of flaky pastry.

DEVILFISH. DIABLE DE MER – Anglerfish, found on the North American and European sides of the Atlantic. It is also sometimes known as sea-frog, miller's thumb, and bull-head.

In the U.S.A. it is known as goose fish, all-mouth monkfish, and fishing frog.

DEVILLED. À LA DIABLE – Name given to a method of preparation, especially suitable for poultry. The bird is slit open along the back, spread out flat, seasoned, and grilled. After cooking it is sprinkled with fresh breadcrumbs and browned under the grill.

DEXTRIN

Poultry cooked in this way should be served with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

DEXTRIN (British gum). DEXTRINE – Powdery substance, white or slightly yellowish, obtained by splitting starch. When mixed with water it forms a thick, viscous paste.

DEXTROSE – Scientific name for glucose, so called because in polarisation, it causes deviation to the right.

DIABETES. DIABÈTE – Serious nutritional disorder. There are two main types of diabetes; a mild form which does not prevent the sufferer from leading a normal life provided that he keeps to a special diet, and a severe form which requires medical treatment.

All diabetics require a special diet.

Cooking for diabetics. CUISINE DES DIABÉTIQUES – Once an intelligent cook knows the quantity of carbohydrates the diabetic is allowed (that is, floury and leguminous food) he can use the ration in many ways in order to vary the diet and make it pleasant and appetising. He will avoid thickened sauces and any food where flour or pulses are used in large amounts. Also to be avoided is the excessive use of salt, which would only increase the already pronounced thirst of the diabetic, and especially the use of sugars.

DIABLE – Cookery utensil made in the form of two porous earthenware pans, one of which fits onto the other as a lid. Some vegetables and fruit (potatoes, chestnuts) can be cooked in this type of pan without liquid.

In France a sheet-metal draught device for solid fuel cookers is also known as a diable.

DIABLE (À LA) – See DEVILLED.

DIABLOTINS – Slices of French bread about 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick, covered with a mixture of thick béchamel sauce flavoured with grated cheese and cayenne pepper, sprinkled with grated Parmesan cheese and browned. They are served with soup.

Chocolates sold in paper cases and accompanied by a motto are also called diabolins.

DIAPHRAGM. COFFRE – Part of the body of man or beast which contains the ribs. The French word coffre is applied to the carapace of certain shellfish.

DIASTASIS. DIASTASE – Ferment which develops in grain and tubers at the moment of germination. This liquefies the starch and turns it into sugar.

DICING. COUPER EN DÉS – Cutting various foodstuffs, for example, ham, artichoke hearts, truffles, mushrooms, etc. into cubes or squares.

DIEPPOISE (À LA) – Method of preparing seawater fish. Fish à la dieppoise is cooked in white wine, garnished with mussels and shelled freshwater crayfish tails, and masked with a white wine sauce made with the cooking stock of the fish and mussels (See BRILL, Brill à la dieppoise.)

DIET. RÉGIME ALIMENTAIRE – Methodical and reasoned use of food in health as in sickness.

DIETETICS. DIÉTÉTIQUE – The study of everything concerned with diet and all that relates to the therapeutic use of food. Dietetics can be defined as the art of nourishing oneself naturally. The importance of a sensible, regulated, balanced diet has been amply proved where health is concerned.

Demi-johns and diables (Nicolas)

The science of dietetics is relatively new and unfamiliar. It is still mainly applied to invalid diets, diets for chronic diseases such as diabetes, rheumatism, etc. and slimming diets. But it is just as important for dietetics to be used in the service of the healthy. To feed oneself badly means depriving the body of nutrients that it requires, or providing these in over-generous or insufficient amounts, practices which often lead to disease and disorders.

It is important, therefore, to know the body's quantitative and qualitative requirements, and to discover what percentage of vital elements are present in the various foods. With this knowledge it is possible to compile diets suited to various needs.

Food is made up of certain percentages of three energising elements: proteins, glucides and lipids. Proteids (proteins) are the basic constituents of all living cells. There is no life without proteins. They should account for 11 to 14 per cent of the total calorie intake. Carbohydrates produce the sugars. Carbohydrates should account for about half the food eaten daily. Lipids (fats) have an important role in the diet. A minimum of 40 g. (1½ oz.) should be consumed each day, 25 g. (1 oz.) of which should be animal fat.

Mineral salts such as sodium chloride, calcium, phosphorus, etc. are present in food and these, too, are indispensable elements, as are trace elements such as zinc, iron, copper, etc., and vitamins. Approximately 25 g. (1 oz.) mineral salts should be consumed daily, half of which should be sodium salts.

Vitamins play a very important rôle. The table below indicates the properties and sources of the principal vitamins.

Vitamins	Sources
A Vitamin of growth. Strengthens resistance to illness. Vital for the production of retinal pigment.	Butter, milk, cheese, eggs, carrots, spinach, cabbage, fish liver oil.
B <sub>1</sub> Metabolism of glucides. Factor of appetite and the balance of the nervous system. Lack of this vitamin causes beriberi.	Yeasts, wheatgerm, sugar, bread, meat, dried vegetables, green vegetables.
B <sub>2</sub> Vitamin of general equilibrium. Nutritional and metabolic regulator.	Cereals, liver, eggs, milk, fish, meat.
B Anti-pellagrous vitamin called nicotine acid. Essential for the release of energy from food.	Yeasts, cereal germ, dried vegetables, meat, fish.
B <sub>12</sub> Encourages the synthesis of proteins and helps in the growth and equilibrium of the red corpuscles.	Liver, fish.
C Anti-scorbutic vitamin. Aids vascular resistance and strengthens resistance to infection. Hastens the healing of scars. Lack of this vitamin causes scurvy.	Fruit, vegetables.
D Concerned with absorption and laying down of calcium and potassium in the bones. Important for children for bone formation and prevention of rickets.	Milk, butter, eggs, fish.

E Plays an important role in fertility, pregnancy, sterility and muscular balance in rats. Uncertain function in human beings.	Green vegetables, cereal germ, pork fat, meat, fat.
K Anti-haemorrhagic vitamin necessary for the coagulation of the blood. Its function is the formation of prothrombin.	Green vegetables, salads, fruit.

The problem that faces the dietitian is to calculate (according to the situation, temperament and tastes of the person concerned) the energy value (in calories) of a given food, as well as its richness in appropriate vitamins. It is then a case of combining the various foods so as to obtain a coherent, balanced, pleasant diet. In order to calculate calorie requirements we must bear in mind that:

- 1 g. protein produces 4 calories,
- 1 g. carbohydrate produces 4 calories,
- 1 g. lipids produces about 9 calories.

Each individual's needs, where calories are concerned, varies considerably according to the work he does, his age, the climate in which he lives, etc. As a general rule it is recognised that a man of average physical activity requires 2,800 calories daily, a woman, 2,200. Vitamin requirements are quantitative and qualitative.

DIGESTER. DIGESTEUR - Piece of apparatus which works on the pressure cooker principle. It can be hermetically sealed and is fitted with a safety valve, enabling food to be subjected to higher temperatures than that of boiling water. (See PRESSURE COOKER.)

DIGESTIBILITY. DIGESTIBILITÉ – The assimilability of foodstuffs into the digestive system. The layman recognises food as digestible if it produces no unpleasant sensation in the course of digestion. To the expert, digestibility is determined by the proportion of elements in food which can be thoroughly assimilated into the human organism.

This portion is variable in different foods and depends also upon the state in which they are eaten, upon the manner in which they are cooked, upon the amount eaten and upon the other foods eaten at the same time, and is assessed only on the basis of a perfectly healthy digestion.

Some foods, such as sugar, which leaves no residue, are completely digestible; with most other foods there is a proportion of waste.

In a normal mixed diet the proportion of digestible matter is 97 per cent in meat and eggs, 94 per cent in milk, 79 per cent in bread, 80 to 85 per cent in pulses and potatoes. 95 per cent of the fats in meat, eggs, and milk are digestible. 100 per cent of the carbohydrates in milk are digestible, 99 per cent in cereals in the form of flour or bread, 96 per cent in pulses and potatoes. About 10 per cent of wastage is a fair average, especially as most people eat more than is strictly necessary.

DIGESTIVE. DIGESTIF – That which promotes digestion.

The digestive juices are elements in the secretions of the digestive glands which cause foodstuffs to undergo changes which render them assimilable. The principle digestive juices are: ptyalin in saliva, pepsin and rennet in the stomach, amylase, trypsin and lipase in the pancreas; erepsin and invertin in the intestine.

Several of these juices are taken in the form of medicine to supplement deficiencies in the natural secretions. Apart from these there are, strictly speaking, no medicines helpful to the digestion. Bitter medicines increase the appetite; alkalines and acids neutralise excess acids or alkalis in the stomach, but are not, in the exact sense of the word, digestives. As for liqueurs taken after meals with coffee, from the medical point of view, they do not deserve the name digestive which is sometimes bestowed upon them.

DIJON – Capital of the ancient province of Burgundy; a town of high gastronomic repute that has many specialities. Among these the most famous are Dijon mustard; ginger-bread; cassis; jambon persillé (ham sprinkled with parsley); gras-doubles à la dijonnaise (tripe à la dijonnaise); beef à la bourguignonne; ferchuse; snails à la bourguignonne; meurette. There are many other special dishes which are described in detail under Burgundy (q.v.).

All sections of the gastronomic world meet at the international food fair held in Dijon every year. La Commanderie des cordons-bleus also has its headquarters in la ville des Ducs. (According to Curnonsky, the members of this commanderie would know how to make a dining-room out of a fireplace). A certain hotel in Dijon has wine taps in its bedrooms.

DILUTING. DÉLAYER – Adding liquid to another liquid or semi-solid substance.

DINATOIRE – French word for a midday dinner; a sort of late lunch substantial enough to render dinner unnecessary.

DINNER. DÎNER – Word derived from the low Latin dinēnare, disnare.

The ancient Greeks usually dined towards evening. In ancient Rome dinner or supper was taken at the ninth or tenth hour, (between 3 and 4 p.m.). The Roman dinner menu was made up as follows:

First course (gustatus). Eggs, various vegetables (probably seasoned with vinegar).

Second course (mensa prima). Various stews and roast veal.

Third course (mensa secunda). Pastries and various jams, fruit and sweetmeats.

Under Charles V (1337–1380), the main meal of the day was taken at 9 a.m. Under Louis XIII (1610–1643), dinner was served at midday. In the seventeenth century, it became customary to serve this meal after mass, between 11 a.m. and midday.

Under Louis XV (1715–1774), dinner became the main meal of the day, served at about two p.m. Nowadays the normal dinner hour is between 7 and 8 p.m., though in France it is commonly served much later than this and is often in the nature of supper.

DINOCHAU – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE TIMES.

DIPLOMAT. DIPLOMATE – Name given to several quite different dishes. (See PUDDING, Diplomat pudding, SAUCE, Diplomat sauce.)

DISH STAND. PORTE-PLAT – Basket used for carrying dishes. Also a metal or porcelain mat on which dishes are placed.

DISINFECTING. DÉSINFECTION – To purify or render aseptic by destroying harmful germs. Disinfecting is obligatory in contaminated areas, especially those where provisions are kept. In the case of foodstuffs which are in the least degree contaminated, chemical disinfectants are usually ineffectual and their use in such cases is condemned.

DISPENSARE – Name given in former times to a book of recipes.

DISSECTING. DISSECTION – Term sometimes used instead of jointing.

DISTILLATION – Process of separating the more volatile from the less volatile components in a liquid by vaporisation (through heating) followed by condensation (through chilling).

In industry, very large apparatus is used to distil fermented fruit juices or cereal decoctions in the production of commercial alcohol or spirits (q.v.).

DIURETIC. DIURÉTIQUE – Having the property of increasing the volume of urine. In the old Codex Pharmacopoeiae, the diuretic plants mentioned are the dried roots of smallage, asparagus, fennel, parsley and knee-holly.

DIVE – Old French word, short for divin (divine), now only used in the expression la dive bouteille (the divine bottle), a quotation from Rabelais' Gargantua.

DIVER or LOON. PLONGEON – Web-footed birds of the Gaviiformes order, similar to duck. The flesh is tough, oily, and fishy.

DOBULE – Common French name for the European chub, which is found in lakes, ponds, and rivers. This fish tastes a little like the féra (q.v.) and is cooked in the same way.

DOE. BICHE – The doe is the female of deer. The meat of this animal, when killed outside the mating season, is similar to that of the roebuck.

All methods indicated for venison are applicable to it. Doe meat should be marinated before preparing it for cooking.

DOE or ROEDEER. CHEVRETTE – See preceding entry.

DOG. CHIEN – Carnivorous domestic mammal whose meat is edible and is eaten in certain countries. In China there is a breed of dogs (Chow dogs) specially fattened for the table.

Dogfish

DOGFISH. AIGUILLAT – Common name for the fish of the Squalus acanthias species, also called the piked dogfish or spur dogfish. This fish is bluish grey on the back, dirty white on the belly, and has a horny spike in front which sometimes reaches 1 m. (39 inches) in length. It feeds on fish, shellfish, and molluscs, and has white, rather coarse flesh. Its liver oil is used in the treatment of animal skins; its own skin is used by turners for polishing wood and ivory.

Dogfish can be prepared by following the recipes given for cod (q.v.) and other large fish; its flesh can be made into a soup, which is thin but quite nutritive, especially if pasta products, cereals, or bread are added.

The name dogfish is given to other species of fish on both sides of the north Atlantic.

DOLIC. DOLIQUE – Group of pulses, several of which are edible. Among these the most important is the soya bean (q.v.).

DOLMAS or DOLMADES (Turkish cookery) – Dolmas are prepared by blanching vine leaves, draining them, and stuffing them with minced lamb and cooked rice. The leaves are rolled into balls and braised in very little stock with oil and lemon juice added.

Dolmas can also be made with cabbage leaves, fig leaves or the leaves of the hazelnut tree.

In Turkey, dolmas are often cooked in sheep-tail fat.

Dolma is also the term used in the Middle East for a dish of mixed stuffed vegetables (aubergines, tomatoes, artichoke hearts and courgettes).

DOM PÉRIGNON – A monk of the Abbey of Hautvilliers near Epernay, who achieved fame by discovering the process of making sparkling Champagne.

He gave his name to a celebrated Moët et Chandon Champagne.

DONKEY. ÂNE, ÂNON – Donkey's meat is tasty and superior in flavour to that of horse; it is used mainly in the manufacture of certain types of sausage. Wild donkey used to be considered choice venison in the Orient.

According to M. Alquier, donkey meat is less fatty and richer in albuminoids than equivalent cuts of beef.

The domesticated donkey is a descendant of the Nubian donkey.

Donkey meat, and that of donkey foals, was highly valued by the Romans. Maecenas, it is said, treated his guests to a stew of marinated donkey meat.

The Persians were great lovers of donkey meat. Thirty-two wild asses were served at a banquet given by Chah Abbas.

In France, in the sixteenth century, Chancellor Duprat had donkeys bred and fattened for his table. During the blockade of Malta by the English and the Neapolitans, the inhabitants, reduced to eating domestic animals like dogs, cats, rats, and donkeys, became so fond of donkey flesh that they preferred it to beef and veal. During the siege of Paris, donkey meat, as well as the flesh of other less edible animals, helped to appease the hunger of the besieged.

Culinary preparation of donkey meat is the same as for horsemeat or beef. The meat of young donkeys under two years old is very delicate and is used in making pâtés, which in quality rival those made of veal.

DORADE – See SEA BREAM.

DORMANT – Large silver or gold centrepiece which, in former times, stood on the dining-table. It was similar to an épergne.

DORURE (Gilding) – Term used in French cookery for beaten whole eggs or egg yolks, thinned with a little water, brushed onto pastry and other mixtures such as Duchess potato (see POTATOES) with a pastry-brush made of silk or feathers.

DOTTEREL. GUIGNARD – European bird of passage of the wader group. Its flesh is rather tasteless. All recipes for plover (q.v.) are suitable for dotterel.

DOUBLE-CREAM (Cheese) – See CHEESE.

DOUBLER – Term in French cookery, meaning to fold in two a layer of pastry, a cut of meat, or a fillet of fish. It also means to cover pastries on a baking sheet with another sheet to prevent overbaking by excessive heat.

DOUBLE SAUCEPAN (U.S. Double boiler). DOUBLE-FOND – Two saucepans which fit together. Food which must not come in contact directly with the heat of the cooker is placed in the upper saucepan. The lower pan contains water which is brought to the boil, thus heating the contents of the upper pan.

DOUGH, PASTRY, AND BATTER. PÂTE –

Brioche dough I. PÂTE À BRIOCHE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved flour, 400 g. (14 oz., 1¾ cups) butter, 10 g. (½ oz.) dried yeast, 6 eggs, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) fine sugar, 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) warm water.

The leaven. Put a quarter of the flour in a circle on the table, with the yeast in the middle. Dilute with a little water, moisten and mix, keeping the dough rather soft. Roll into a ball, make a crossways incision on the top, put into a small bowl, cover, and leave in a warm place for the paste to ferment and double its volume.

The dough. Put the rest of the flour in a circle on the table, add 4 eggs and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) warm water, mix, and knead the dough.

Add the sugar and salt dissolved in a few drops of water, soften the butter and add it to the dough.

Add the remaining 2 eggs, one by one, and mix the dough well.

Spread the dough on the table, indent, pour the leaven into the centre, and blend it in. Put the dough into a bowl, cover with a cloth, and leave in a warm place to rise.

5 or 6 hours later beat the dough, and keep in a cool place until needed.

Brioche dough II. PÂTE À BRIOCHE COMMUNE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved flour, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, 10 g. (½ oz.) yeast, 4 eggs, 1 teaspoon fine sugar, 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) warm water (or milk).

Method. Proceed as described in the recipe for Brioche dough I but keeping it rather firm.

When intended for pies to be served as an entrée, or for coulibiacs (q.v.), the sugar can be omitted, although the small amount of sugar indicated above is only meant to give a little colour to the dough.

Mousseline brioche dough. PÂTE À BRIOCHE MOUSSELINE – Prepare the dough as described in the recipe for ordinary Brioche dough I. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) softened butter per 450 g. (1 lb.) dough.

Shape the dough into a ball, put it into a well-buttered mould which has a band of greaseproof paper tied round it, taking care not to fill it above two thirds. Leave in a warm place until the dough rises to the top of the mould.

Bake in a slow oven.

Chou paste d'office (cream puff pastry). PÂTE À CHOU D'OFFICE – Put 1 litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) water, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, and 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt into a pan. Bring to the boil, remove from heat and add 625 g. (1 lb. 6 oz., 5 $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, pouring it all in at once. Mix well.

Return to the heat and cook, stirring with a wooden spoon, until the mixture dries and comes away from the sides of the pan. Remove from the heat and, stirring vigorously, add 12 or 14 eggs (depending on size), putting them in 2 at a time.

Ordinary chou paste (cream puff pastry). PÂTE À CHOU ORDINAIRE – Chou paste can be moistened with milk instead of water, and the eggs can be added one by one. Stir the mixture with a wooden spoon all the time.

Dumpling dough. PÂTE À DUMPLING – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 4 $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 300 g. (11 oz., 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) suet (shredded), 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) sugar, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt, 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) water.

Method. Put the flour in a circle on the table, put the suet in the middle, and add sugar, salt and water. Mix to a fairly stiff dough, shape into a ball, and keep in a cool place until needed.

Flaky pastry

Flaky pastry. FEUILLETAGE – Flaky pastry, the most delicate of all pastries, is said by some historians to have been invented by Claude Gelée, called le Lorrain, the famous seventeenth century painter. Others say it was invented by a chef called Feuillet who was chief pastry-cook to the house of Condé.

Carême praises Feuillet, who was undoubtedly a great pastry-cook, and in his Pâtissier Royal, Carême says, 'Richard spurred me on to work twice as hard by speaking to me often of the great Feuillet'. But Carême stops there, and nowhere in his learned treatises on pastry does he say that Feuillet was the inventor of flaky pastry. But Joseph Favre is definite on this subject. In his Dictionnaire universel de cuisine he says that Feuillet was 'the inventor of flaky pastry.'

It appears, however, from the study of documents of a much earlier date, that flaky pastry was known not only in the Middle Ages but also in ancient Greece. In a charter drawn up by Robert, Bishop of Amiens (1311), flaky-pastry cakes are mentioned.

Claude Gelée who, it is said, served a pastry-cook's apprenticeship, was therefore not the inventor of this delicious pastry. He merely brought it back into fashion in his own time.

Flaky pastry or puff pastry (modern recipe). PÂTE FEUILLETÉE, FEUILLETAGE – Prepare a flour-and-water paste in the following manner:

Put 500 g. (18 oz., 4 $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour on a board in a circle, making a well in the middle. Since flours differ, the exact proportion of water to flour is variable. Into the centre of this circle put in 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt and about 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) water. Mix and knead until the dough is smooth and elastic. Form into a ball and let it stand for 25 minutes.

Roll out the dough into a sheet about 20 cm. (8 inches) square and of even thickness throughout. Put 500 g. (18 oz., 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) kneaded butter in the middle of this dough. The butter should be kneaded on a lightly floured board. Fold the ends of the dough over the butter in such a way as to enclose it completely. Leave to stand for 10 minutes in a cold place.

Give 2 turns to this dough. This operation is called tourage in French and it is done in two parts:

1. Roll the dough with a rolling-pin on a lightly floured board in such a way as to obtain a rectangle 60 cm. (24 inches) long, 20 cm. (8 inches) wide, and 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick.

2. Refold the strip in three.

The second turn is done by rolling out the folded dough in the opposite direction, and so forth.

Give 4 more turns to the dough, leaving it to stand for 10 minutes between each operation. After having been given the 6 prescribed turns, the puff pastry is ready for use.

The purpose of turning and rolling is to spread the butter evenly in the dough.

During preparation, the dough should be kept in a cold place, but it should not be put directly on ice; this could cause the butter to harden and it would then not be easy to incorporate in the dough.

Flaky pastry or puff pastry (Carême's recipe). PÂTE FEUILLETÉE, FEUILLETAGE – 'Having put a litron (about 800 g., 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  lb., 7 cups) sieved flour on the board, place the tips of your fingers in the middle and spread it into a circle with an inside diameter of 10 cm. (4 inches); this operation is known as "making a well" because the flour, disposed in this manner, will have the water which is required for moistening it put in the middle.

'In the centre of this well, put 2 gros (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES) fine salt, 2 egg yolks, a piece of butter the size of a walnut and nearly a glass of water. Stir this mixture with the tips of your fingers (using the right hand only and keeping the fingers spread out) and, little by little, mix in the flour, adding a little more water if necessary so that the dough is moistened, has the right consistency and is slightly firm. Then work it a little, pressing with the hand on the board in such a way as to achieve, after a few minutes, a dough which is soft to the touch and as smooth as satin.

1. Water is poured on the salt in the middle of the well

2. Mixing flour and water

3. Method of putting butter on the paste

4. How butter is enclosed in the paste

5. Rolling out for the first time: the paste is rolled out in a rectangular sheet

6. Rolling out for the second time: the rectangle of paste is folded in three

7. Second turn: turn the paste before rolling it out

8. Making a mark on the paste to indicate that it has been given two turns

MAKING FLAKY PASTRY Cookery classes, Gaz de Paris (Larousse)

This dough should neither be too firm nor too soft. It is, however, better for it to be a little on the soft side rather than too hard.

'Roll the dough out in a rectangular sheet; put 400 g. (14 oz.,  $1\frac{3}{4}$  cups) butter in the middle and fold the edges of the dough over it. The butter should have been kneaded in a napkin to extract water and to make it supple and smooth. Make sure that it is entirely enclosed with an even thickness of dough all round. This should be done as quickly as possible. The dough should be folded in 3 layers of equal length. Roll out again to the same dimensions, turning it before rolling so that its former width becomes its length. Fold it again in the same way, and roll out so that it is 5 cm. (2 inches) longer than it is wide. Put it quickly onto a plate lightly sprinkled with flour and stand on crushed ice spread out to cover the same length and width as the pan. Cover the dough with a piece of paper, on which you stand a plate of crushed ice.

'After 3 or 4 minutes remove the top plate, turn the dough over and cover again. Begin the same operation all over again, after which you give the dough 2 turns as described above. Put the dough on ice again, turning it as carefully as before. Give another turn or two, depending on the use for which it is intended.

'Care should be taken to sprinkle the top and bottom of the paste with flour very sparingly when turning it, otherwise it goes grey in the baking.

'When the dough has been given the last turn, it should be used at once, being placed in the oven 4, 6 or, at the most, 8 minutes after the last rolling out. If it is ready 20 or 25 minutes before it can be put in the oven, it will be dull and tough.' (Le pâtissier royale.)

Flaky pastry or puff pastry made with oil (Carême's recipe). PÂTE FEUILLETÉE À L'HUILE – 'Proceed as described in the recipe for Pudding pastry or suet flaky pastry (see below), using oil, not lard. Add  $3\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) oil during the rolling and turning of flaky pastry. Then cut as usual.'

Semi-flaky pastry or rough puff pastry. PÂTE DEMI-FEUILLETÉE, DEMI-FEUILLETAGE – Cut out puff pastry into patties, vol-au-vent, etc., and collect the left-over pieces together into a ball.

This dough, also called rogneures, can be used for making boat-shaped tartlets, crostades, tartlets, etc.

Three-minute flaky pastry or puff pastry. PÂTE FEUILLETÉE EN TROIS MINUTES – Ingredients. 400 g. (14 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) butter,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) water.

Method. Mix the ingredients and give the dough 4 turns.

Viennese flaky pastry or puff pastry. PÂTE FEUILLETÉE À LA VIENNOISE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) butter, 2 egg yolks,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) water,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt.

Method. Mix half the flour with the yolks, water and salt. Mix the rest of the flour with a third of the butter, blending them with a knife.

Roll out the flour-and-water paste to a thin square sheet. Shape the butter-and-flour mixture into a square of a smaller size and put it on the other paste, enclosing it and folding the edges. Roll out as described in puff pastry recipes.

Flour-and-water paste. PÂTE À L'EAU – This is used for luting, or hermetically sealing, earthenware casserole and cocotte lids. It is made by mixing flour with enough warm water to obtain a soft paste. Use as indicated.

Leavened dough for tarts. PÂTE LEVÉE POUR TARTES – The best recipe for leavened paste for tarts is the same as for Brioche dough I.

A more ordinary dough can be made using 500 g. (18 oz.,

$4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 4 eggs,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons sugar, 10 g. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  oz.) yeast,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) milk and 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter.

Proceed as described in the recipe for Brioche dough I.

Fine lining paste or pastry dough I. PÂTE À FONCER FINE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 300 g. (11 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{3}$  cups) butter, 1 egg,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) water, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fine sugar,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt.

Method. Spread the flour in a circle on the board, make a well in the middle and put in the egg, butter, water, sugar, and salt. Mix these ingredients together and incorporate the flour, little by little.

Knead twice, roll the paste into a ball, wrap in a cloth, and keep in a cold place until ready for use.

Lining paste should always be made several hours before it is needed. The less it is handled the better, as it quickly becomes tough.

Ordinary lining paste or pastry dough II (tart pastry). PÂTE À FONCER ORDINAIRE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) water,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt.

Method. Proceed as described in the recipe for Fine lining paste.

Pastry dough for hot or cold pies – see PASTRY.

Pudding pastry or suet flaky pastry (Carême's recipe). PÂTE FEUILLETÉE À LA GRAISSE DE BOEUF – 'Remove skin and fibre from 450 g. (1 lb.) of suet, chop it up very finely and pound in a mortar with 1 tablespoon good olive oil. Add several more tablespoons oil, little by little, as you pound it. This gives it body and softens it, so that the suet becomes as soft and easy to work as butter.

'Proceed to use it in place of butter, in the same proportions.

'Lard can be used instead of oil and by using suet and lard in equal proportions, very good puff paste is obtained, very agreeable to the palate, but it must be eaten hot.'

This type of puff paste is suitable for entrée pies. (See TOURTES (PIES).)

Puff pastry – See FLAKY PASTRY.

Savarin dough I. PÂTE À SAVARIN – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) sugar,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt, 10 g. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  oz.) yeast, 6 to 8 eggs, 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) milk.

Method. Dissolve the yeast in about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) warm water, adding it to a third of the flour. Blend and leave to rise until the leaven more than doubles its volume.

Spread the rest of the flour in a circle on the board, make a well in the middle and add salt and two thirds of the eggs. Work the mixture by hand to give it more body, then add the rest of the eggs and the milk. Knead until the paste no longer sticks to the hands.

Add the butter quickly and pour in the leaven. Blend the mixture to make it smooth and, last of all, add the sugar. Put the dough in a bowl, cover with a cloth, and stand in a cool place. Leave until the following day.

A mould with a special border, called a savarin mould, is used for baking this cake. Butter the mould and half-fill it with the dough. Stand in a warm place and leave the dough to rise until it completely fills the mould. Bake in a hot oven from 20 to 35 minutes, according to the size of the mould.

Savarin dough II. PÂTE À SAVARIN – This is a shorter formula. The ingredients are identical.

Put the sifted flour in a bowl. Mix the leaven and the dough in the order described above. Add the melted butter, still warm, to the dough. Add the leaven and sugar, and use at once.

Savarin dough III. PÂTE À SAVARIN – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 375 g. (13 oz., generous  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) butter, 3 tablespoons fine sugar, 20 g. ( $\frac{2}{3}$  oz., 1 cake) yeast, 8 eggs, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons fine salt.

Method. Put the sifted flour in a bowl, make a well in the middle and put in the yeast. Moisten the yeast with the warm milk and stir. Add the eggs one by one, mixing the paste with the hands to blend well. Soften the butter, divide it into small pieces, and put them on the paste. Cover the bowl and stand in a warm place to ferment until the dough doubles its volume.

Add the salt. Knead the dough to blend in the butter and continue to do so until the dough acquires sufficient body to be lifted in one piece. Add the sugar and knead a few minutes longer to blend well.

Savarin dough IV. PÂTE À SAVARIN – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 350 g. (12 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) butter, 2 teaspoons sugar, 10 g. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  oz.) yeast, 7 eggs, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons fine salt.

Method. Prepare a leaven, using a quarter of the flour, the yeast and the warm milk. Put this leaven in a small bowl, cover, and stand in a warm place to ferment.

Mix the rest of the flour with half the butter, the eggs, and the salt. Blend well, kneading the paste. Add the leaven, the rest of the butter, which has been softened, and the sugar. Continue to knead the dough for a few moments.

Short pastry I. PÂTE SÈCHE SUCRÉE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, 3 eggs, 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) fine sugar,  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon orange blossom water or  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon orange extract.

Method. Proceed as described in the recipe for Fine lining paste or pastry dough I.

Short pastry II. PÂTE SUCRÉE – Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) sugar, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, 1 egg, a small pinch of salt, lemon peel or vanilla-flavoured sugar.

Method. Spread the flour in a circle, make a well in the centre and put in the sugar, well softened butter, salt, and egg. Mix these ingredients, with the exception of flour, into a soft paste. Incorporate the flour, kneading the paste as little as possible, only enough to make it hold together.

Leave for 2 hours, roll out, and cut as desired.

Baba batter. PÂTE À BABA – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 300 g. (11 oz., generous  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) butter, 7 eggs, 20 g. ( $\frac{2}{3}$  oz., 1 cake) yeast,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons sugar, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) raisins and sultanas (half and half), 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) warm milk,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt.

Method. Proceed as for Savarin dough. When the dough is made, add the raisins, sultanas and sugar. Pour into buttered baba moulds, filling only one third of the moulds. Bake in a hot oven, like savarins.

When cooked, pour over them sugar syrup flavoured with liqueur.

Batter for small tea biscuits. PÂTE À PETITS GÂTEAUX – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 300 g. (11 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sugar, 1 whole egg, 4 egg yolks, 1 tablespoon orange blossom water.

Method. Mix the dough in the usual manner, knead it twice, roll it into a ball, and leave it to stand in a cold place for 1 or 2 hours.

Roll out the dough to a thickness of 1 cm ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch). Cut into biscuits with pastry cutters. Put them on a baking tray and brush with beaten egg. Decorate with halved almonds, cherries and candied peel, and bake in a hot oven. When ready, remove from the oven, brush with a solution of gum arabic, or boiling milk mixed with sugar and boiled down to a syrupy consistency. Treated in this manner, the biscuits keep better.

Crêpe batter – See CRÊPES.

Crêpe batter (sweet). PÂTE À PANNEQUETS – Put 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sifted flour, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fine sugar and a pinch of salt into a bowl. Add 6 whole eggs. Stir the mixture with a wooden spoon until smooth. Dilute with  $7\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $1\frac{1}{3}$  pints,  $1\frac{2}{3}$  pints) boiled milk flavoured with vanilla, orange, or lemon, depending on the nature of the pancakes. Add 1 tablespoon butter heated to noisette colour (see BUTTER) and 1 tablespoon brandy or rum. Blend well.

Cussy batter. PÂTE À CUSSY – Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar, 150 g. (5 oz., scant cup) rice flour, 7 whole eggs, 65 g. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 5 tablespoons) butter, 1 tablespoon vanilla-flavoured sugar, a pinch of salt.

Method. Put the eggs, sugar, vanilla sugar, and salt into a basin. Whisk the eggs over a low heat. When the mixture is well whisked, add the rice flour and melted butter.

Batter for soufflé fritters. PÂTE À BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS – Prepare in the same way as Chou paste d'office, adding 4 teaspoons sugar for the proportions indicated in that recipe.

Batter for Vienna fritters. PÂTE À BEIGNETS VIENNOIS – Proceed as described in the recipe for Brioche dough using 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, 6 eggs, 20 g. ( $\frac{2}{3}$  oz., 1 cake) yeast,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt, 1 tablespoon sugar and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk.

Galette batter. PÂTE À GALETTE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 375 g. (13 oz., generous  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) butter,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  l. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{8}$  cup) water, 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 1 tablespoon) fine sugar and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt.

Method. Mix as described in the recipe for Fine lining paste. Roll the dough into a ball without kneading. Leave to stand in a cool place for 2 hours.

Give the dough 3 turns, leaving it to stand for 10 minutes between each turn. Leave to stand for a few minutes before use.

Batter for little salted galettes (biscuits). PÂTE À PETITES GAULETTES SALÉES – Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sifted flour, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) fine sugar and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt.

Method. Pour the flour on a board, make a well in the middle and put the sugar and salt into it. Add the butter, and the milk which has been slightly warmed. Knead all the ingredients together, roll into a ball, and leave to stand for 30 minutes.

Roll the dough out to  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) in thickness. Prick over the surface with a fork. Cut out with a 6-cm. (2-inch) round pastry-cutter. Put the galettes on a metal tray and bake in a hot oven for about 10 minutes.

Genoise batter. PÂTE À GÉNOISE – Ingredients. 375 g. (13 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sifted flour, 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) melted butter, 16 eggs, flavouring.

Method. Blend the sugar and eggs, and cook very slowly over low heat or over a pan of hot water. Whisk until the mixture makes a ribbon. Remove from heat. Stirring gently with a wooden spoon, add the flavouring, flour and melted butter, pouring the latter in a small thread. Put into buttered, floured tins and bake in a hot oven.

Genoise batter may be flavoured with vanilla sugar, vanilla extract, lemon or orange peel, or liqueur.

Gougère batter. PÂTE À GOUGÈRE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Ordinary chou paste. After adding eggs to the paste, finish off with 250 g. (9 oz., generous 2 cups) Gruyère cheese cut in very small dice.

Manqué batter. PÂTE À MANQUÉ – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar, 400 g. (14 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 300 g. (11 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) butter, 18 egg yolks, 16 stiffly beaten egg whites, 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) rum.

Method. Cream the yolks and the sugar in a bowl until the mixture becomes white and light. Add the rum and flour, and mix. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites, and pour in the butter, melted.

Butter à manqué moulds, dust with flour, pour in the mixture and bake in a moderate oven.

Mazarin batter. PÂTE À MAZARIN – Mixture of baba and brioche dough in equal proportions.

This paste is usually baked in plain Genoese cake tins.

Fine sponge cake or biscuit batter. PÂTE À BISCUITS FINS – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) fine sugar, 10 eggs (yolks and whites separated), 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour, 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) potato flour, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) vanilla-flavoured sugar, small pinch of salt.

Method. Blend the yolks with the sugar, vanilla sugar, and salt with a wooden spoon. When the mixture is quite smooth add the whites, whisked to a stiff froth, and then add the flour and potato flour.

Italian sponge cake or biscuit batter. PÂTE À BISCUITS ITALIENS – Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) lump sugar, 4 eggs (yolks and whites separated), 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour, salt.

Method. Put the sugar in a pan, moisten with ½ dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water, cook to hard ball degree (see SUGAR) and allow to cool to half its temperature.

Add the yolks, then the flour and salt, and fold in the stiffly beaten whites.

Ordinary sponge cake or biscuit batter. PÂTE À BISCUITS ORDINAIRES – Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar, 8 eggs (yolks and whites separated), 150 g. (5 oz., 1½ cups) sifted flour, salt.

Method. Proceed as described in the recipe for Fine sponge cake or biscuit batter.

Reims sponge cake or biscuit batter. PÂTE À BISCUITS DE REIMS – Ingredients. 12 eggs, 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) fine sugar, 175 g. (6 oz., 1½ cups) sieved flour, 1 tablespoon vanilla-flavoured sugar, small pinch salt.

Method. Put the sugar, 12 egg whites and 10 yolks into a bowl and whisk over a low heat until the mixture becomes firm and smooth. Add the flour and vanilla sugar. Mix with a wooden spoon.

Swiss sponge cake or biscuit batter. PÂTE À BISCUIT DE SAVOIE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) fine sugar, 175 g. (6 oz., 1½ cups) sieved flour, 175 g. (6 oz., 1½ cups) cornstarch (cornflour), 14 eggs (separated), 1 tablespoon vanilla-flavoured sugar.

Method. Blend the sugar and the egg yolks together in a bowl until the mixture forms a ribbon. Add the flour, cornstarch, vanilla sugar and stiffly whisked egg whites. Mix quickly.

Butter a baking tin, sprinkle with cornstarch and pour in the mixture, filling two thirds of the tin. Bake in a slow oven.

Sponge cake or biscuit batter, whisked over heat. PÂTE À BISCUITS SUR LE FEU – Break 12 eggs into a pan. Add 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) fine sugar and a small pinch of salt. Keeping the pan on the edge of the burner, whisk the mixture until it becomes very firm and smooth.

Still whisking, add 225 g. (8 oz., 1½ cups) potato flour.

Sponge fingers batter. PÂTE À BISCUIT À LA CUILLER – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) fine sugar, 375 g. (13 oz., 3½ cups) sieved flour, 16 eggs (separated), 1 tablespoon orange blossom water.

Method. Mix the egg yolks and the sugar in a bowl, creaming the mixture until it forms a ribbon. Add the flavouring, mix in the flour, and fold in the stiffly whisked egg whites.

Pour the mixture into a pastry-bag with a 1½-cm. (¾-inch) nozzle. Pipe the biscuits onto strong paper and sprinkle with plenty of fine sugar. Shake off the surplus sugar by lifting the ends of the paper.

Moisten the biscuits with a few drops of cold water (which will ensure beading) and bake in a very slow oven.

DOUILLET or COCHON AU PÈRE (Pig au père) – Popular dish of an earlier age. Pierre de Lune, esquire of the household of the Prince de Rohan (1734–1803) gives the following recipe:

‘Cut the pig into pieces. Blanch the pieces and interlard with pork fat cut partly from the outer layer and partly from the belly. Put them in a cloth and season with salt, pepper, whole cloves, nutmeg, bay leaves, green lemons and spring onions. Cook in a pot with stock and a little white wine. Make sure that the finished dish is highly seasoned. Leave to stand until lukewarm. Serve with slices of lemon.’

DOUZIL or DOUSIL – French word for the wooden spigot used to plug the hole in the vat from which the wine is extracted. (See CONFRÉRIES VINEUSES, la Confrérie des tire-douzils.)

DOVE. COLOMBE – See PIGEON.

DOYENNÉ – Variety of pear which melts in the mouth and is very sweet. (See PEAR.)

DRAFF. DRÊCHE – By-product of barley used in brewing. It is also used for fodder.

DRAGONET. DOUCETTE – Another name for corn salad (q.v.).

DRAINING. ÉGOUTTER – Draining off excess liquid from foodstuffs which have been washed, or blanched in boiling water and cooled under running water.

DRESSING (poultry, game, and fish). HABILLAGE – Poultry or winged game are dressed by being plucked, drawn, singed, trimmed, and trussed. The dressing of fish consists of scaling, gutting, and trimming.

DRINKING STRAW. CHALUMEAU – Hollow stem of straw, glass, metal, paper, or plastic used for drinking cold drinks.

DRIPPING PAN. LÊCHEFRITE – Rectangular pan, usually of metal, placed under food roasted on a spit. The juices of the roast drip into the pan.

DROMEDARY. DROMADAIRE – Camel (q.v.) with only one hump.

DRUM. ESTAGNON – Container in which liquids, especially oil, are transported.

DRUPE – French term for a fruit with a single stone.

DRYING. DESSÉCHER – Dehydrating a solid of any kind by putting it on the stove for a few seconds. Thus green vegetables boiled in salt water are dried or, more accurately, dehydrated when they are stood for a very short time over a hot flame to evaporate excess moisture absorbed by the vegetables during cooking. When they have been dried, the vegetables are tossed in butter.

In France, the term dessécher is also used of cooking panadas and dough on the stove.

The term ‘drying’ is not synonymous with ‘reducing’, which refers only to the process of boiling down certain liquids so that they are reduced in volume.

DUBARRY (À LA) – Garnish for meat which comprises small flowerets of cauliflower covered with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkled with grated cheese and bread-crumbs, and browned.

DUBLIN BAY PRAWNS (Italian, scampi). LANGOUSTINE – Common names for the Nephrops norvegicus. This shellfish, about the size of a prawn, is orange in colour with white-tipped claws and legs. It does not change colour in cooking.

They are prepared in the same way as shrimps and served as hors-d'oeuvre.

All recipes for freshwater crayfish, and shellfish generally, are suitable for Dublin Bay prawns, which can also be prepared à l'américaine or à la bordelaise.

Duchesse d'Angoulême pears

DUCHESSE – Winter pear which makes an excellent table fruit.

DUCHESSE (À LA) – Name given to various preparations, especially a method of preparing potatoes. (See POTATOES, Duchess potatoes.)

DUCHESSE MIXTURE – Purée of potatoes blended with egg yolk. It is made into Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) and into borders, savoury cases, etc.

DUCHESSES – Petits fours which are made as follows:

Pound in a mortar 60 g. (2½ oz., ½ cup) sweet almonds with the same quantity of hazelnuts, and blend with 1 egg white. Add 300 g. (11 oz., 1¼ cups) fine sugar, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) vanilla-flavoured sugar, and 50 g. (2 oz.) chocolate. Add to this mixture 3 egg whites and mix thoroughly. Pipe into little balls on a baking sheet. Bake in a moderate oven.

DUCK. CANARD – Web-footed water bird of which many species are known. Varieties of domestic ducks are bred, some for food, others because of the beauty of their plumage. Their ancestor is the wild duck (le canard sauvage), which is found in Europe, Asia, North America and North Africa.

In French classical cookery, Rouen and Nantes ducks enjoy the highest esteem. The different types of ducks raised in France for food include Duclair, a variety of Rouen duck; Barbary duck which, when mated with a Rouen duck, produces the mulard duck which is bred specially for the production of foie gras.

The Barbary duck (which in French is also called Canard d'Inde) is raised mainly in the southern and south-eastern regions of France. Its flesh is rather mediocre and is sometimes too musky to be eaten. The young birds are fairly good to eat, the old are tough and have a strong odour which, it is said, they develop after they have acquired their red wattles.

The Nantes duck is a magnificent bird with fine, delicately flavoured flesh. It is smaller in size than the Rouen duck. When fully developed, that is at 4 months, it hardly ever exceeds 2 kg. (4½ lb.) in weight, whilst the Rouen duck weighs about 2½ kg. (5½ lb.).

The Rouen duckling owes its reputation to the fine quality of its flesh and also to the method by which it is killed. It is smothered, not bled as are all other fowl (except guinea-fowl, which in the south-western part of France is often shot, like game). The fact that it loses none of its blood before being cooked makes the flesh of the Rouen duck stay red and gives it a special flavour much prized by connoisseurs.

Ducks which are killed without bleeding are rarely marketed in the U.S.A. Killed in this manner, they should be cooked the same day to avoid the development of dangerous toxins.

Other breeds of ducks raised for food are Aylesbury duck, a bird which has a certain similarity to the Rouen duck and which the English greatly appreciate; the black Cayuga, which is also called the Great American duck, and is a very large bird with delicate flesh; Peking duck, a small bird with yellow plumage and bright yellow feet and bill, which is excellent in quality.

In the U.S.A. domestic ducks are sold at about 2½ kg. (5½ lb.), ducklings at about 1½ kg. (4 lb.). Wild ducks are shot in large numbers during the hunting season. The most prized is the Canvasback.

The age and tenderness of ducks can be determined by the flexibility of their pinions and under-bill – these should be soft enough to be bent back easily.

Duck breeding. It is generally thought that the duck, being an aquatic animal, can only be raised in places situated near water or on river banks. This opinion is erroneous, as many poultry-breeders have proved.

The famous Rouen duckling is raised mainly around Yvetot, where you will not find a river or even a spring. The celebrated duck pâtés are made from the flesh of ducks raised a long way from running water.

In Languedoc and other parts of south-western France where big ducks are bred for the manufacture of foie gras, their flesh is preserved in fat, like that of geese. This preserved duck is esteemed by gastronomes even more than the confit d'oie (preserved goose). Mulard ducks are preserved in brine. The famous truffled terrines and pâtés are made from the livers of these ducks.

In French cookery, duck is always described as caneton (duckling).

Duckling d'Albuféra. CANETON D'ALBUFÉRA – 'Clean and truss 2 very young ducklings. Cut 12 pieces of uncooked Bayonne ham into heart-shaped slices. Melt 175 g. (6 oz., ¾ cup) best butter in a casserole, put in first the ham, then the 2 ducklings, and add a bouquet garni (q.v.), an onion studded with 2 cloves, and ½ wine glass of Madeira.

'Cover with a piece of buttered paper, bring to the boil, and put on a paillasse (q.v.) (a brick oven with glowing charcoal), with hot coals above and below the casserole, without the heat being too lively, so that the ducklings are cooked without being fried. After 20 minutes turn the ducklings and remove the onion and the bouquet garni. Leave for another 20 minutes, then drain the ducklings, remove trussing string and arrange on a serving dish. The birds should be a lovely colour. Garnish with the slices of ham. Skim off surplus fat from the pan juices, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Financière sauce (see SAUCE) and 100 g. (4 oz.) very small peeled mushrooms. Pour this sauce over the ducklings.' (From L'art de la cuisine française au XIX siècle.)

Duckling à l'alsacienne. CANETON À L'ALSACIENNE – Braise a Nantes duckling, arrange it on a serving dish, and surround with sauerkraut which has been braised separately with streaky bacon. Garnish the border of the dish with this bacon cut into rectangular pieces, and 6 smoked Strasbourg sausages poached in water.

Strain the braising liquor, spoon some over the duckling and serve the rest separately.

Ballottine of duckling (hot). BALLOTTINE DE CANETON – Bone a Nantes duckling and carefully remove all the flesh, leaving only the skin. Remove all sinews from flesh. Dice the fillets and chop the rest of the meat finely with an equal weight of fresh fat bacon, half of its weight of lean veal, and 75 g. (3 oz.) of panada (q.v.).

Pound the whole mixture in a mortar, adding 4 egg yolks. Season with salt, pepper, and spices. Rub this forcemeat through a sieve. Add 150 g. (5 oz.) uncooked foie gras (duck's liver) cut in large dice and briskly tossed in butter, 150 g. (5 oz.) diced truffles and the diced duck breast fillets. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy and blend well.

Spread the duck's skin on the table, on a piece of muslin which has been soaked in cold water and wrung out. Stuff the skin with the forcemeat and roll into a ballottine. Secure with string at both ends and in the middle.

Poach the ballottine in stock prepared by using a veal knuckle and the bones and trimmings of the duckling. Cook for about 1½ hours, unwrap, and glaze in the oven.

Garnish and spoon over a little of the braising liquor which has been boiled down and strained. Serve the rest separately.

Hot ballottine of duckling may be served with most of the garnishes (q.v.) indicated for braised or broiled poultry. The following are the most suitable: châtelaine, chipolata, forestière, godard, braised chestnuts, braised lettuce, or other vegetables braised or cooked in butter.

Ballottine of duckling (cold). BALLOTTINE DE CANETON – Make in the same way as hot ballottine, but a greater quantity of duck's liver and truffles are added to the forcemeat.

After cooking, unwrap the ballottine, then wrap once again in the same cloth very tightly, and put to cool under a press. To serve, unwrap, glaze with liquid aspic jelly, arrange on a dish, and surround with chopped jelly.

Duckling à la bordelaise. CANETON À LA BORDELAISE – Stuff a duckling with fine pork forcemeat mixed with the chopped duck's liver, a little shallot, garlic, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, blanched and chopped olives; seasoned with salt, pepper and spices; and bound with 1 egg.

Truss the duckling and fry in butter in a fireproof dish until it is golden on all sides. Add 500 g. (18 oz.) white, firm cèpes which have been trimmed, washed, lightly tossed in oil and seasoned with salt and pepper. Cook in a hot oven. When the duckling is done, remove trussing string and put back into the dish. Pour over 4 or 5 tablespoons thickened brown veal gravy, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve in the dish in which it was cooked.

Braised duckling with various garnishes. CANETON BRAISÉ – Truss a large Nantes duckling and put it into a braising pan on a foundation of fresh bacon rinds, 1 carrot and 1 medium-sized onion sliced and tossed in butter. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) of parsley, thyme and bay leaf. Season. Cook with the lid on for about 15 minutes. When the duckling is browned on all sides, moisten with 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) white wine.

Boil down, and add 3½ dl. (generous ½ pint, 1½ cups) slightly thickened brown veal or chicken stock. Bring to the boil on the stove, then cook in a hot oven for about 1 hour with the pan covered.

Drain the duckling, remove trussing string, arrange on a serving dish, and garnish. Boil down and strain the braising liquor, spoon a little of it over the duck and serve the rest separately.

Nantes braised duckling may be served with all the garnishes (q.v.) recommended for braised and broiled poultry. The garnishes most suitable for this dish are: fermière, languedocienne, macédoine, toulousaine.

Braised Nantes duckling

Braised duckling can also be accompanied by carrots, turnips, celeriac, cucumbers, small glazed onions, peas, tomatoes, etc., sautéed in butter or braised.

Casserole of duckling with various garnishes. CANETON EN CASSEROLE – Prepare like Chicken casserole. (See CHICKEN.)

Serve with bonnefemme, paysanne or some other garnish which should be cooked with the bird in a casserole.

Duckling à la chipolata. CANETON À LA CHIPOLATA – Braise the duckling. When it is nearly done, drain and remove trussing string. Put it back in the casserole with a garnish of 10 braised chestnuts, 10 small glazed onions, 10 lean rashers of blanched and lightly fried bacon, and 18 carrots cut down to the size of olives and glazed. Boil down the braising liquor, strain, pour over the duckling, and finish cooking. Add 10 small chipolata sausages cooked in butter. Serve the duckling surrounded with the garnish arranged in separate groups. Pour over the sauce.

Cold duckling. CANETON FROID – Duckling can be prepared in any manner suitable for cold chicken (see CHICKEN).

Duckling with olives. CANETON AUX OLIVES – Braise the duckling, cooking it until three quarters done. Strain the braising liquor, put the duckling back in it and add 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) stoned, blanched olives. Finish cooking on a slow heat.

Duckling can also be cooked with stuffed olives.

Duckling à l'orange or à la bigarade I. CANETON À L'ORANGE, À LA BIGARADE – Braise a Nantes duckling. Drain, remove trussing string and arrange on a serving dish. Pour over bigarade sauce prepared in the following manner. Strain the braising liquor into a small saucepan in which 2 lumps of sugar, moistened with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) vinegar, have previously been cooked to caramel degree. Boil down. Add the juice of 1 orange and ½ lemon. Boil down again and strain. Add the blanched and drained rind of 1 orange and ½ lemon shredded into a fine julienne (q.v.).

Duckling à l'orange or à la bigarade II. CANETON À L'ORANGE, À LA BIGARADE – Fry the duckling in butter, keeping it a little underdone. Drain, remove trussing string, and arrange on a serving dish.

Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) white wine. Add 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) clear veal stock or Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Add sugar and vinegar cooked to caramel degree, as described above, and allow to boil for a few moments. Add the juice of 1 orange, ½ lemon and finish off as described above.

Garnish with peeled slices of orange.

Sauce for Duckling à l'orange should be made of the rind of bitter oranges.

Duck pâtés. PÂTÉS DE CANETON – See PÂTÉ.

Duckling with peas I. CANETON AUX PETITS POIS – Brown together in butter 12 small onions and 200 g. (7 oz.) blanched, diced bacon. Remove these from the pan and in the same butter sear a trussed Nantes duckling. Brown it well on all sides, and drain.

Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white stock. Add 2½ dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) veal and chicken stock and put the duckling into this liquor. Add 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) fresh garden peas, the onions, pieces of bacon, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Season and add 1 teaspoon sugar. Simmer gently with the lid on. When cooked, drain the duckling, arrange on a serving dish, and surround with the peas. Boil down the pan juices and pour over the bird.

A lettuce shredded into a chiffonnade (q.v.), or left whole and tied with string, can be added to the peas. If left whole, it should be cut into quarters when serving, and arranged on the peas.

Duckling with peas (Scarnati)

Duckling with peas II. CANETON AUX PETITS POIS – Cook the duckling in a fireproof casserole, keeping it a little underdone.

Add 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) fresh garden peas, cooked à la française (see PEAS). Leave to infuse for a few moments without allowing to boil.

Roast duckling. CANETON RÔTI – Truss the duckling and roast it in the oven or on a spit. For cooking times see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts.

Duckling with sauerkraut. CANETON À LA CHOUROUTE – This is prepared in the same way as Duckling à l'alsacienne. Surround with sauerkraut braised in the usual manner. Garnish with pieces of streaky bacon (cooked with the sauerkraut) and saveloys, Strasbourg or Frankfurt sausages. Pour the liquor in which the duckling was braised over the bird.

Duckling with turnips (braised). CANETON AUX NAVETS – Brown a trussed Nantes duckling in butter. When it is brown on all sides, take it out of the pan and drain. Remove the butter from the pan and make a sauce of 1½ dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) dry white wine and 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) espagnole sauce (see SAUCE) or veal stock. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.). Place the duckling in the sauce and simmer gently.

Put the butter in another pan and add to it 3 or 4 small turnips, cut down to a uniform size. Season and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon sugar, which will enable them to be glazed more quickly. Cook on a brisk fire. Have ready 24 small onions, half cooked in butter.

When the duckling is half cooked drain it and strain the liquor. Put the duckling back into the pan and add the turnips, onions and sauce. Finish cooking in a slow oven.

To serve, garnish the bird and pour the sauce over it. Serve piping hot.

ROUEN DUCK. CANARD ROUENNAIS – See note under DUCK.

Ballotine of Rouen duckling. BALLOTTINE DE CANETON DE ROUEN – Prepare like Ballotine of duckling.

Rouen duckling à la bigarade. CANETON ROUENNAIS À LA BIGARADE – Prepare in either of the ways given for Duckling à l'orange.

Rouen duckling is rarely braised, but it can in fact be cooked in this manner and is excellent.

Rouen duckling au chambertin. CANETON ROUENNAIS AU CHAMBERTIN – Braise the duckling in liquor based on red wine. When it is nearly cooked, put it into another pan. Add 125 g. (4 oz.) pork or bacon cut in large dice, blanched and lightly fried, and 24 mushroom caps, peeled and tossed in butter.

Boil down the braising liquor in the other pan, strain, pour over the duckling and finish cooking in the oven with the lid on.

Rouen duckling in Champagne. CANETON ROUENNAIS AU CHAMPAGNE – Fry the duckling in butter. When nearly cooked, put it into an earthenware dish. Dilute the pan juices with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) dry Champagne, add a few tablespoons thickened brown veal stock, and pour over the duckling. Finish cooking in the oven with the lid on.

Chaud-froid of Rouen duckling. CHAUD-FROID DE CANETON DE ROUEN – Cook the duckling in the oven, keeping it a little underdone. Remove the legs and cut the breast fillets into strips. Using the carcase and the trimmings, roughly chopped, prepare a brown Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE, Compound sauces) and mix it with aspic jelly, flavoured with Madeira or other liqueur wine.

Coat the pieces of duckling fillets with this half-set sauce. Put on a grid to cool. Decorate with pieces of truffles, white of hard-boiled egg, and pickled tongue. Glaze with jelly.

Arrange in a dish in pyramid shapes. Garnish with chopped jelly and surround the border of the dish with jelly croûtons.

Rouen duckling en chemise I. CANETON ROUENNAIS EN CHEMISE – Remove the breast-bone of a Rouen duckling, stuff it as for Duckling à la rouennaise, and truss it. Roast as quickly as possible, for 8 to 12 minutes. Leave to get cold. Enclose the bird in a large pork bladder, previously soaked in cold water, placing the bird with the rump towards the opening of the bladder. Tie the opening with string. Poach in a clear braising stock for 45 minutes.

To serve, take the duckling out of the bladder and proceed as described in the recipe for Duckling à la rouennaise.

Rouen duckling en chemise II. CANETON ROUENNAIS EN CHEMISE – Remove the breast-bone, stuff the duck, and truss. Wrap in a cloth which has been soaked in water and wrung out. Tie like a galantine (q.v.). Poach in strong veal broth for 40 to 50 minutes.

Drain, unwrap, and serve surrounded with peeled orange quarters. Serve rouennaise sauce (see SAUCE) separately.

Rouen duckling with cherries. CANETON ROUENNAIS AUX CERISES – Truss the duckling and fry it in a pan with butter. When it is nearly cooked, put it into an earthenware dish with 250 g. (9 oz.) morello cherries, stoned. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira, add 1 or 2 tablespoons brown veal stock and pour over the duckling.

How to carve roast duck :

1. First cut off the legs
2. Place the bird on its back and cut vertically along the length of the breastbone
3. Cut off the breast meat in long thin slices
4. Repeat the operation on the other side
5. Finally cut off the two wings

(Larousse)

Simmer in the oven for a few minutes. Serve in the same dish.

Rouen duckling (cold). CANETON ROUENNAIS FROID – Rouen duckling, roast or fried, may be served cold garnished with watercress. It should be cooked longer than required for serving it hot.

Galantine of Rouen duckling. GALANTINE DE CANETON DE ROUEN – Prepare like Galantine of chicken (see GALANTINE) adding to the forcemeat a quantity of à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT).

Jellied Rouen duckling en daube. CANETON ROUENNAIS EN DAUBE À LA GELÉE – Prepare like Daube of pheasant in jelly (see PHEASANT).

Jellied strips of Rouen duckling à l'orange

Jellied strips of Rouen duckling à l'orange. AIGUILLETES DE CANETON DE ROUEN GLACÉES À L'ORANGE – Prepare the duckling as described in the recipe for Chaud-froid of Rouen duckling. Cut the breast fillets into thin strips, and coat with Chaud-froid sauce à l'andalouse (see SAUCE). Decorate with truffles and orange peel cut into little strips, and glaze with jelly. Keep in a refrigerator. Using the flesh of the legs, make a mousse as described in the recipe for Poultry mousse (see MOUSSE), adding diced truffles. Fill a dome-shaped mould with the mousse and put it on ice to set.

When well chilled, turn it out onto a croûton of crustless bread, spread with butter, on a dish. Cover with duckling strips which have been coated in chaud-froid sauce. Spoon a little half-set jelly on the bottom of the dish. Cut oranges into basket-shapes, scoop out the pulp, half-fill with port jelly, decorate with peeled orange sections and arrange round the mousse shape.

Decorate the top by spiking on a skewer topped by half an orange with a big truffle in it.

Chill in the refrigerator.

Rouen duckling Lambertye. CANETON DE ROUEN LAMBERTYE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Chicken Lambertye (see CHICKEN), replacing the chicken mousse in that recipe by duck mousse.

Set in brown Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE).

Rouen duckling mousse I. MOÛSE DE CANETON DE ROUEN – Prepare like Chicken mousse (see CHICKEN), replacing the chicken by duck.

Rouen duckling mousse II and mousselines. MOUSSE ET MOUSSELINES DE CANETON ROUENNAIS – Prepare as described in the recipe for Rouen duckling soufflé (see below), the mousse, in a charlotte mould, poached in the oven in a bain-marie (q.v.); and the mousselines, in small moulds, poached in the oven in a bain-marie.

Rouen duckling pâté. PÂTÉ DE CANETON DE ROUEN – See PÂTÉ.

Rouen duckling in port. CANETON ROUENNAIS AU PORTO – Truss a Rouen duckling and cook in butter, keeping it slightly underdone. Drain and arrange on a dish. Dilute the pan juices with 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) port, and add 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) thickened brown veal gravy. Bring to the boil, simmer for a few moments, add some butter and strain. Pour a few tablespoons of this sauce over the duck and serve the rest separately.

Rouen duckling can be prepared in the same way with Madeira, Frontignan, or sherry instead of port.

Pressed Rouen duckling. CANETON ROUENNAIS À LA PRESSE – Cook the duckling for 18 to 20 minutes. Remove the legs, which will still be raw. Make a few shallow incisions on the underside of the legs, season with salt, pepper, and a little pounded clove. Brush with butter and grill briskly.

Carve the breast into thin slivers. Arrange these on a dish standing on a hotplate in which 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) good red wine has been well boiled down. Season with freshly ground pepper.

Cut up the carcase, sprinkle with good red wine, and put it under a duck press. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy to the juice obtained, and pour over the sliced duckling. Scatter a few small pieces of butter on the slices. Heat on the hotplate without allowing the sauce to boil. Put the grilled legs at each end of the dish, and serve.

Duckling à la rouennaise. CANETON À LA ROUENNAISE – Fry 1 tablespoon chopped onion in 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped bacon fat, without allowing it to colour. Add the duckling's liver, together with 1 or 2 chicken livers (or ducks' livers, if available), cut into thin slices. Season with salt and pepper, sprinkle with spices and chopped parsley, and fry as quickly as possible. Leave until cold, pound in a mortar, and rub through a sieve. Stuff the duckling with this forcemeat, and truss it. Cook in a very hot oven for 20 to 30 minutes, depending on the size of the bird. Serve with Rouennaise sauce (see SAUCE).

To serve Duckling à la rouennaise, remove the legs, make a few shallow incisions in them, season and grill. Cut the breast into thin slivers and arrange them on the borders of a buttered dish. Fill the middle of the dish with the stuffing contained in the carcase and put the grilled legs at each end.

Chop the carcase into big pieces, put it under a duck press, sprinkling it with 2 or 3 tablespoons brandy and a dash of lemon juice. Add the juice thus obtained to some rouennaise sauce, blend, and pour some over the sliced duckling. Serve the rest of the sauce separately.

Salmis of duckling à la rouennaise. CANETON EN SALMIS À LA ROUENNAISE – Remove the breast-bone and truss the duckling. Put it into a very hot oven to stiffen and sear it. Leave until just warm, then wipe on a cloth.

Remove the legs, make a few shallow incisions on the undersides, season and grill them. Carve the breast into thin slivers and put them in rows on a buttered dish. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon finely chopped shallot, and season with crushed sea-salt, freshly ground pepper and spices.

Chop up the carcase, sprinkle with ½ glass red wine, and put it under a duck press. Pour the juice obtained over the sliced duckling.

Heat the dish for a moment on the stove and put under the grill to glaze the meat. Place the grilled legs one at each end of the dish, and serve at once.

Different restaurants have different ways of preparing Salmis of duckling à la rouennaise. Quite often it is no more than Duckling à la rouennaise.

In some restaurants in Rouen, whence this dish originated, the sliced duckling (cooked from 10 to 12 minutes) is covered with Red wine sauce (see SAUCE), spiced with shallots, flavoured with a tablespoon of brandy, and thickened with raw chopped duck liver.

In Duclair, the home of the famous ducklings, a different method is used. Bone the ducklings to the wing joints, put the liver inside the bird, trim and truss it, and roast on the spit for 20 to 22 minutes, depending on size.

Carve the breast into thin slices and arrange them on a dish around the carcass, which has been filled with the following purée: Fry a large chopped onion lightly in butter, sprinkle with port and Burgundy wine, boil down, add the duckling's liver pounded in a mortar and the blood from the carcass. Heat well.

Rouen duckling soufflé. CANETON ROUENNAISE SOUFFLÉ – This is very much a grand-style dish; it is excellent but rather expensive, as 2 ducklings should be used, the larger for serving and the smaller for making a forcemeat to stuff the other.

Truss the larger duck and roast in the oven, keeping it rather underdone. Remove the breast fillets and keep hot. Remove the breast-bone in such a way as to make the carcass hollow. Season the duck inside with salt, pepper, and spices, and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon brandy. Stuff the carcass with a forcemeat of 150 g. (5 oz.) uncooked foie gras, the ducks' livers, and the flesh of the second duck, prepared as described in Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Spread this forcemeat in the carcass, piling it up to give the duck its original shape. Cover with buttered paper and tie with string. Lay the stuffed duck in a roasting pan, sprinkle with melted butter and cook in a slow oven for 20 to 25 minutes.

Remove the paper. Arrange the duck on a dish and surround with tartlets baked blind and filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of truffles and mushrooms blended with concentrated Madeira sauce (see SAUCE). Place a slice of duck on each tartlet and top with a sliver of truffle, heated in butter. Serve with Rouennaise sauce or Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

The same forcemeat can be used for making Rouen duck mousses and mousselines. The former are prepared in charlotte moulds with a hole in the middle, the latter in small individual moulds. They are cooked in the oven in a bain-marie (q.v.).

The same composition can also be used for preparing Duck soufflé en timbale. Put the mixture into buttered soufflé moulds and bake in the oven like an ordinary soufflé (see SOUFFLÉS, Savoury soufflés).

Suprêmes of Rouen duckling. SUPRÊMES DE CANETON ROUENNAIS – Remove the breast fillets of a Rouen duckling. Cut each fillet into 2 or 3 pieces lengthways. Beat to flatten them slightly, season with salt and pepper, put in a buttered dish, and cook with the lid on, keeping them rather underdone.

Duck fillets prepared in this manner are served with various garnishes and sauces. They can be prepared à la bigarade, with shredded orange and lemon rind and bigarade sauce; with morello cherries, stoned and cooked in Madeira with concentrated Madeira-flavoured veal gravy blended with a little butter; garnished with mushrooms sautéed in butter; au chambertin, arranged on croûtons fried in butter, garnished with sliced mushrooms fried in butter and slices of truffles in chambertin sauce; au porto, arranged on croûtons fried in butter with port sauce poured over them; à la périgourdine, arranged on fried croûtons, spread with foie gras, garnished with slivers of truffles and served with Madeira, port or sherry sauce; with truffles arranged on croûtons fried in butter, garnished with thick slices of truffles sautéed in butter and served with Madeira sauce à l'orange. Also on croûtons fried in butter, garnished with orange rind shredded into julienne (q.v.) strips, surrounded with peeled sections of orange, and served with orange sauce.

Terrine of Rouen duckling. TERRINE DE CANETON DE ROUEN – Using duck flesh, fine forcemeat and truffles, prepare like Terrine of duckling (see TERRINE).

Timbale of Rouen duckling Voisin. TIMBALE DE CANETON ROUENNAIS VOISIN – This dish was one of the specialties of the famous Voisin restaurant which no longer exists. The recipe was as follows:

Roast a Rouen duckling, keeping it a little underdone. When it is quite cold, remove the breast fillets.

Chop up the carcass and the trimmings and use them for making a Salmis sauce (see SAUCE, Compound brown sauces). Strain the sauce, remove surplus fat, add to it an equal quantity of meat jelly, boil down, and strain through a muslin cloth.

Coat a timbale with this sauce. When it sets, put in a layer of sliced fillets of duckling (previously coated with the same sauce and left to set), alternating with slivers of truffles. Spoon some half-set jelly over each layer and continue in this manner until the timbale is filled with alternating rows of sliced duck and truffles.

Finish off with a slightly thicker layer of jelly. Put the timbale on ice or in a refrigerator and chill well.

Rouen duckling with truffles. CANETON ROUENNAIS AUX TRUFFES – This method of preparation is suitable only for fillets or suprêmes (breasts) of Rouen ducklings.

Cook the duckling in the oven, keeping it a little underdone. Cut the breast fillets into thick slices. Arrange these in a dish with thick slices of truffles which have been tossed in butter. Keep hot.

Chop the carcass and the parings into pieces, moisten with Madeira, port or sherry, and boil down. Add a few tablespoons concentrated Demi-glace (see SAUCE). Allow to boil for a few moments, then strain. Bring this sauce to the boil, add 1 tablespoon brandy which has been set alight, and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Pour the sauce over the duckling fillets.

WILD DUCKS. CANARDS SAUVAGES – Among the wild ducks used in cookery, the most popular, and the biggest, is the green-head or mallard, known in France as Canard sauvage or Un sauvage.

This duck, which has succulent flesh, is found in the vicinity of freshwater ponds and lakes from October to March. Its plumage varies, depending on sex, age, and season. The plumage of the male is green and red with touches of brown and grey. The female is brown.

The flesh of the other species of wild ducks, most of which are edible, is less delicate than that of the mallard. They include the pintail, the sheld-duck and the gadwell.

Other water game of the same family, which is defined by the generic term waterfowl, include the spoonbill or shoveller-duck, and the teal, a small but excellent bird.

Some waterfowl, for example, the pintail and teal are allowed as Lenten fare, whereas the mallard is considered as meat.

Wild duck à la bigarade. CANARD SAUVAGE À LA BIGARADE – Roast or fry the wild duck and prepare as Duckling à l'orange.

Fillets of duck à la bigarade (Plumerey's recipe). FILETS DE CANARD À LA BIGARADE – Remove the breast fillets and the legs of 2 wild ducks. Put them into an earthenware dish with salt, coarse-ground pepper, parsley, thyme, bay leaf, chopped shallots, lemon juice and  $\frac{1}{4}$  glass good oil. Keep them in this seasoning for 45 minutes before they are required, turning frequently.

Thread them on a skewer, without packing too tightly, sprinkle with the seasoning in which they were steeped, and put on a spit.

'As soon as you feel them becoming firm to the touch, take them off the skewer. Wash the fillets and put them one by one into a sauté pan in which a piece of game jelly the size of a walnut has been melted, with an equal amount of butter and the juice of  $\frac{1}{2}$  lemon. Arrange and serve with Bigarade sauce (see SAUCE).'

Wild duck au chambertin. CANARD SAUVAGE AU CHAMBERTIN – Roast or fry the duck, keeping it a little underdone. Prepare Chambertin sauce (see SAUCE), add to it some of the diluted pan juices left over from cooking the duck, and pour over the dish. Garnish with truffles and mushrooms.

Salmis of wild duck (Plumerey's recipe). SALMIS DE CANARD SAUVAGE – 'Cover a wild duck with a mirepoix (q.v.), wrap in a piece of paper and put to cook on a spit. After cooking for 30 minutes, unwrap, test to see if the duck is done, and cut up in the usual manner for a salmis.

'Put the joints into a casserole, together with the blood which comes out of them, making sure that it neither boils nor dries up, but keeps hot.

'Have some concentrated, thick Financière sauce (see SAUCE) ready in a bain-marie (q.v.). Put the bones and parings of the duck into a saucepan with  $\frac{1}{2}$  glass good red Bordeaux wine,  $\frac{1}{4}$  shallot, 1 clove, and a pinch of coarsely ground pepper. Boil down to half, add the financière sauce, and cook until it reaches the consistency of a salmis sauce. Strain, add 1 tablespoon olive oil and the juice of  $\frac{1}{4}$  lemon. Arrange the pieces of duck on heart-shaped croûtons, garnish with sliced truffles and mushrooms, and pour the sauce over.'

Salmis of wild duck à la minute (Plumerey's recipe). SALMIS DE CANARD SAUVAGE À LA MINUTE – Prepare the duck and cook on the spit, as described in the preceding recipe. While it is cooking, chop parsley, mushrooms and shallots very finely, toss them in a pan in butter with salt, pepper, and a little grated nutmeg. Moisten with  $\frac{3}{4}$  glass of white Chablis, boil down by half, and add a good tablespoon Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE). Remove from heat and add  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon of the best mustard.

'Take the duck off the spit, joint it, and put the pieces into a sauté pan, turning them gently. Put a little game jelly and a piece of butter the size of a small walnut into the pan. Serve the duck pieces with the sauce poured over.'

Wild duck à l'orange. CANARD SAUVAGE À L'ORANGE – Fry or roast the duck. Proceed as described in the recipe for Duckling à l'orange.

Wild duck in port. CANARD SAUVAGE AU PORTO – Fry or roast the duck and proceed as described in the recipe for Rouen duckling in port.

Wild duck à la presse. CANARD SAUVAGE À LA PRESSE – Roast the duck from 18 to 20 minutes. Proceed as described in the recipe for Pressed Rouen duckling.

Roast wild duck. CANARD SAUVAGE RÔTI – Roast the duck on brisk heat, either on a spit or in the oven.

Garnish with lemon and orange slices. Dilute the pan juices and serve separately.

Wild duck à la tyrolienne (Plumerey's recipe). CANARD SAUVAGE À LA TYROLIENNE – 'Stew cooking apples and add a little cinnamon and mace to infuse the hot apples. Truss the duck, stuff it with the stewed apples, and sew up the neck and the rump.

Duck press (La Tour d'Argent. Phot. Nicolas)

DUCK PRESS

Bring to the boil  $\frac{1}{3}$  glass vinegar with a piece of butter the size of a small walnut,  $\frac{1}{2}$  coffee-spoon fine sugar, and a little coarsely ground pepper. Baste the duck with this during cooking on the spit, placing a pan beneath it to catch the juices. Cooking should be completed in 30 to 35 minutes. Take the duck off the spit, remove trussing strings and arrange on a dish. Strain the pan juices into a saucepan, heat, add  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon redcurrant jelly, and pour this sauce over the duck.'

DUCK PRESS. PRESSE À CANARD – Kitchen utensil, different from a meat press, in that it serves the sole purpose of extracting the juices from the carcase of duck.

DUNAND – There were two master chefs of this name, father and son, of Swiss origin, who were equally famous. The elder Dunand joined the French army and became chef to the prince de Condé. His son succeeded him and became controller of this great household. When the prince emigrated in 1793 the younger Dunand followed him, and for twelve years was in charge of his kitchens.

Then, being a sick man and with a nostalgic longing to see Paris once more, he returned to France. Having re-established himself, he entered the service of Napoleon I, as chef. He remained in the service of the Emperor until he left for Saint Helena but, to his great sorrow, was unable to go into exile with his master on account of his health, and he retired to Switzerland. He left to the Lausanne Museum the Emperor's personal table-service, which had been presented to him by Napoleon.

It is claimed that we owe the invention of the dish known as Chicken sauté Marengo to Dunand the younger.

DUXELLES – The name derives from Uxel, a small town of the Côtes-du-Nord. Some believe that this dish was so-called because it was created by La Varenne, an official of the household of the Marquis d'Uxelles.

Duxelles of mushrooms. DUXELLES DE CHAMPIGNONS – Clean and trim 125 g. (4 oz.) mushrooms, or peelings and stalks, and chop them finely. Put them in a cloth and twist tightly to extract all liquid. Lightly brown in butter half a chopped onion. Add 2 chopped shallots, salt, pepper, nutmeg and the squeezed mushrooms. Stir over brisk heat until the mushrooms are cooked. Leave to get cold and keep in a cold place, covered with buttered paper.

EARTH NUTS. TERRE-NOIX – Tuberous root of a plant whose scientific name is Carum bulbocastanum. It is black outside and white inside, tastes like chestnut and is prepared in the same ways. The seeds of the plant are sometimes used in place of caraway.

EASTER EGGS – See EGGS.

ÉCHAUDÉ – Pastry made with dough which is first poached in water, then dried in the oven.

The invention of this pastry is attributed to Charles-Paul Favart (father of the French dramatist) who, in 1710, was established as a pastry-cook in the rue de la Verrerie in Paris. It is probable that Favart's 'invention' consisted merely of improving and altering the shape of this pastry and thereby bringing it into fashion, for it was known in France long before Favart's time. It is mentioned in a charter of 1210, where it is described as 'buns called eschaudati', a name given to it because hot water was poured onto the dough to make it rise.

Carême's recipe is as follows: 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) flour, 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ⅔ cup) oil, 1½ teaspoons salt, 2 dl. (⅓ pint, scant cup) water.

Mix and knead the dough, and leave to stand, wrapped in a cloth, for 2 hours. Divide into small pieces, shape into balls, and press three fingers into them to make them hollow. Poach in water. Drain and dry in a cloth, and leave to dry thoroughly for 2 hours.

Bake in a hot oven for 25 to 30 minutes.

ÉCHIRÉ – One of the best French butters, made in the commune of this name (Deux Sèvres).

Coffee and chocolate éclairs (Larousse)

ÉCLAIR – Small pastry made with Chou paste (see DOUGH) filled with French pastry cream (see CREAM) flavoured with vanilla, coffee, or chocolate, and iced with Fondant icing (see ICING).

Pipe the éclairs on to a baking sheet in the shape of fingers. Brush with egg and bake in a hot oven. When the éclairs are cold, slit them along one side, and fill them, using a forcing-bag, with French pastry cream flavoured with vanilla, coffee or chocolate. Ice the top of the éclairs with hot fondant icing, flavoured to blend with the filling.

Éclairs can also be filled with different mixtures, such as Crème Chiboust (see CREAM), Chantilly, purée of marrons glacés, or salpicons of various kinds of fruit blended in French pastry cream.

Small éclairs à la hollandaise. PETITS ÉCLAIRS À LA HOLLANDAISE – These éclairs are served as hors-d'œuvre.

Make the éclairs of unsweetened chou paste and pipe them onto a baking sheet; they should be smaller than ordinary éclairs – about 4 cm. (1½ inches) long. Brush with egg and bake in a slow oven. Leave until they are quite cold.

Fillet a large herring, soak to remove all salt and dry in a cloth. Pound in a mortar, adding 2 yolks of hard-boiled eggs, and 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter. Rub through a fine sieve. Add ½ tablespoon chopped chives and ½ tablespoon chopped parsley, and work to a smooth paste with a spatula. Slit the sides of the éclairs and fill them with this mixture, using a pastry forcing-bag. Brush the tops with melted butter and sprinkle with chopped yolk of hard-boiled eggs and chopped parsley.

ÉCUELLE – Deep dish used for serving vegetables.

EDAM – See CHEESE.

EEL. ANGUILLE – Snake-like fish with viscous and slippery skin. When caught in fast-flowing water its flesh is very delicate. It can be recognised by its light-brown skin, with shades of brown on the back and silver on the belly. The flesh of eels from a pool or stagnant water is slimy; the skin is dark brown on the back and dirty yellow on the belly.

Eels must be kept alive until the time of preparation. They should be kept in a fish pond or a large bucket of water which should be frequently changed. Eel's flesh is very nourishing, though a little heavy. It becomes more easily digestible if the layer of fat between the skin and the flesh is removed before cooking.

There are several varieties of sea eels, the best of which is moray. The conger eel is another sea eel which is chiefly used for bouillabaisse (q.v.) but it also makes excellent matelotes (q.v.).

Lamprey is similar to eel, and runs up rivers in spring. Its flesh is delicate in flavour and can be prepared in the same way as eel.

Eel in an aquarium

How to skin an eel

Before skinning the fish, kill it by banging the head hard against a stone. As soon as it is dead, hang it up on a hook by a string tied at the neck. Make a circular incision below the string. Turn the skin back all round the neck in such a way as to be able to hold it with a cloth and then tear the skin off.

Trim the eel and clean it by making a light incision along the belly. Cut off the head, which is thrown away, and cut the fish into slices or leave whole, as directed in the recipe.

Instead of skinning the eel whole, you can cut it into pieces. Grill them for a few moments under a brisk flame, turning them to catch the skin on all sides. Under the action of the heat the skin blisters and can be easily taken off. This method of skinning also has the advantage of removing the excess fat.

An eel weighing about 750 g. (1 $\frac{3}{4}$  lb.) can be cooked in the following way in a wine court-bouillon (white or red wine) with vegetables. Cut the eel into 6-cm. (2 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch) pieces, or leave whole, and cook in a well-buttered pan on a foundation of 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) each of chopped onions and carrots per litre (scant quart, generous quart) liquid. Press well to make the fish lie flat. Add a crushed clove of garlic and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Season with salt and freshly ground pepper. Cover the fish with the wine and cook slowly on the side of the stove.

Eel cooked in court-bouillon can afterwards be prepared à la bourguignonne, fried, grilled, à la tartare, en matelote, in a white or brown sauce, etc. Small eels, and fillets or cutlets intended for frying are not cooked first in court-bouillon.

Eel à l'anglaise. ANGUILLE À L'ANGLAISE – Cut a boned eel into 5-cm. (2-inch) pieces. Flatten, and marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice or vinegar, salt and pepper. Coat the pieces with egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry. Serve with Butter sauce (see SAUCE) to which a little anchovy butter has been added.

Ballottine of eel, or stuffed eel. BALLOTTINE D'ANGUILLE (ANGUILLE FARCIE) – This dish is served hot or cold. When hot, it can be served with the garnishes and sauces recommended for large braised fish. When cold, all the recipes given for cold fish can be applied to it.

Cold ballottine of eel is also called galantine of eel.

Cold ballottine or galantine of eel, or eel sausage, or stuffed jellied eel. BALLOTTINE D'ANGUILLE FROIDE, GALANTINE, SAUCISSON D'ANGUILLE, ANGUILLE FARCIE À LA GELÉE – Bone the eel and fill with stuffing and wrap as described in Hot ballottine of eel (see below). Poach gently in red or white wine court-bouillon (q.v.).

Drain and unwrap, then rewrap the fish in the muslin cloth, rinsed out. Tie with string, tightening it a little, and put under a press. Leave for 12 hours to get quite cold.

Unwrap the ballottine, dry, trim, and coat with jelly or Chaud-froid (see SAUCE). Serve and garnish as described in the recipe.

The fish stock for cold ballottine of eel is made with red or white wine. After the ballottine is cooked, the stock is clarified as described in the recipe for Fish jelly stock (see JELLY), and used for coating and garnishing the eel. When the ballottine is prepared only in jelly, serve completely covered in its jelly, the dish being placed on a larger one and surrounded by crushed ice.

Hot ballottine of eel. BALLOTTINE D'ANGUILLE CHAUDE – Prepare a large eel, flatten slightly, season with salt, pepper and spices. Fill with forcemeat, stuffing the fish so as to retain its shape. Wrap the ballottine in a muslin cloth and tie it at both ends and in 3 or 4 places in the middle.

Put onto the grill of a buttered fish kettle. Cover with white or red wine court-bouillon. Bring to the boil, cover the pan, and poach gently. Drain and unwrap the eel. Place in a fire-proof dish and glaze in the oven, basting frequently with the thickened pan juices.

The wine liquor for boiling ballottine of eel, which usually has diced vegetables sautéed in butter added to it, should be further strengthened by adding the bones and trimmings from other fish, if possible. After cooking the ballottine, the liquor should be used as a basis for the sauce which is to accompany it.

Stuffing for ballottine of eel will be found under Forcemeats with fish (see FORCEMEATS).

In addition to the recipes listed below for ballottine of eel all those given for large braised fish can be applied to it. The fish can be accompanied by a simple garnish such as mushrooms, various croquettes, macédoine of vegetables, potatoes prepared in various ways, rice pilaf, or risotto.

Ballottine of eel à l'ancienne. BALLOTTINE D'ANGUILLE À L'ANCIENNE – Stuff the eel with whitening forcemeat to which diced truffles have been added. Prepare as described above and poach in court-bouillon with white wine.

Drain, glaze, and arrange on a foundation of fish forcemeat or on a croûton of bread fried in butter. Surround with à l'ancienne garnish (see GARNISHES). Cover with Normande sauce (see SAUCE) diluted with the boiled down liquor in which the eel was cooked and finished with finely shredded mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables and Madeira.

Ballottine of eel à la bourguignonne. BALLOTTINE D'ANGUILLE À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Stuff the eel with a pike or whiting forcemeat mixed with chopped parsley. Prepare as described under Hot ballotine of eel and poach in a red wine court-bouillon. Drain, glaze, and arrange on a croûton of crustless bread fried in butter. Garnish à la bourguignonne (see GARNISHES) and cover with Bourguignonne sauce (see SAUCE) made with the liquor left over from cooking the fish.

Ballotine of eel à la gauloise. BALLOTTINE D'ANGUILLE À LA GAULOISE – Stuff the eel with pike or whiting forcemeat mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of truffles and mushrooms. Prepare as described in Hot ballotine of eel and poach in white wine court-bouillon. Drain, and arrange on a crustless croûton of bread fried in butter. Surround with artichoke hearts filled with carps' soft roes cooked in butter, and pastry boats filled with Crayfish tail ragout à la Nantua (see CRAY-FISH).

Boil down the liquor in which the eel was cooked, thicken with Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE), add butter, strain, and pour over the dish.

Bastion of eel,
after Carême

Bastion of eel. BASTION D'ANGUILLE – Bone 2 large eels, fill them with a pike or whiting stuffing and diced truffles. Wrap in a piece of muslin and tie with string. Cook in white wine and well-flavoured fish stock. Drain, unwrap, and cool under a press.

Cut the eels into pieces about 10 cm. (4 inches) long, and coat with Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) prepared with the liquor in which the fish was cooked. Decorate with truffles and small pieces of hard-boiled egg whites. Glaze with liquid jelly. Arrange on a bed of cooked rice or on buttered croûtons of bread, placing the pieces upright, next to each other. Garnish the border of the dish with halved hard-boiled eggs and jelly croûtons.

Poached fillets of sole, cooled under a press and cut to look like loopholes, can be used as decoration for bastions of eel. The holes should be filled in with truffles, jelly croûtons, and Montpellier butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). These dishes are prepared for grand occasions.

Eel à la bonne femme. ANGUILLE À LA BONNE FEMME – Place an eel of average weight, either cut in pieces or left whole and rolled into a ring, in a pan on a foundation of 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) chopped onion lightly fried in butter. Season with salt and pepper, add a bouquet garni and moisten with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) white wine. Poach gently, with the lid on the pan, for 25 minutes.

Drain the eel and arrange on croûtons of bread fried in butter. Garnish with diced potatoes fried in butter.

Boil down the pan juices by half, blend with 1 tablespoon kneaded butter, strain, and pour over the fish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Collared eel, cold. ROULADE D'ANGUILLE, FROIDE – Bone and stuff an eel, make into a ring, and proceed as described in the recipe for Ballotine of eel, cold.

Collared eel à l'angevine. ROULADE D'ANGUILLE À L'ANGEVINE – Skin and bone an eel and season with salt and pepper. Stuff with pike forcemeat bound with an egg and a salpicon (q.v.) of mushrooms and truffles. Reshape the eel, wrap it in rashers of bacon, make into a ring and tie with string.

Fry sliced onion and carrot lightly in butter. Put the eel in a pan on this bed of vegetables, together with a leek, a branch of savory and a large bouquet garni. Cover the fish with white Anjou wine (not too sweet). Bring to the boil and remove scum. Simmer gently for 35 minutes with the pan covered.

Drain the fish. Unwrap and put it into another pan with peeled mushrooms which have been tossed in butter. Make a white roux (q.v.) of 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) flour. Dilute with the strained pan juices, blend well, and add the parings of the mushrooms. Boil down on full heat, and add  $3\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) fresh cream. Simmer until the sauce reaches the desired consistency, and add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Collared eel à la bordelaise. ROULADE D'ANGUILLE À LA BORDELAISE – Stuff the eel with Fish forcemeat (see FORCE-MEAT) flavoured with anchovy butter to which has been added chopped parsley. Make the eel into a ring and poach in a red Bordeaux wine court-bouillon. Drain, arrange on a dish, and put a pyramid of cooked cèpes in the middle.

Thicken the pan juices with kneaded butter, strain, as indicated for thin Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE) and pour over the fish. Garnish with heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter.

Pieces of stuffed eel à la bordelaise are prepared in the same manner.

Collared eel à la royale. ROULADE D'ANGUILLE À LA ROYALE – Make a medium-sized eel into a ring, and poach in white wine court-bouillon with a mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables. Leave to get cold in its liquor. Drain, dry, and coat with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE). Fry in deep fat and drain.

Fill the centre with soft roes à la Villeroi. Surround with dressed crayfish cooked in court bouillon, alternating with bunches of fried parsley. Serve with Normande sauce (see SAUCE) to which chopped truffles have been added.

Eel coulibiac (Russian cookery). COULIBIAC D'ANGUILLE – Follow the recipe given for Coulibiac of salmon (see SALMON), replacing the salmon by boned, sliced eel.

Little eel coulibiacs. PETITS COULIBIACS D'ANGUILLE – See SALMON, Small coulibiacs of salmon.

Eel in cream with paprika, or à la hongroise. ANGUILLE À LA CRÈME, AU PAPRIKA, DITE À LA HONGROISE – Cut an eel into pieces and put them in a saucepan on a foundation of shredded onion lightly fried in butter. Sprinkle with paprika, add a bouquet garni and season.

Cover the fish with white wine and bring to the boil. Cover the pan and cook for 20 minutes. About 8 minutes before the end of cooking, add peeled mushrooms heads. Drain, arrange each piece of eel on a croûton of fried bread, and garnish with the mushrooms. Keep hot.

Boil down the pan juices by half and strain. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) thin Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint, scant cup) cream. Cook until the sauce coats the surface of a spoon. Add 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter, strain, and pour over the fish.

Eel à la diable. ANGUILLE À LA DIABLE – Make a medium-sized eel into a ring. Poach in white wine court-bouillon, and leave to cool in the liquor. Drain, dry, coat with mustard, sprinkle with melted butter, and dip in breadcrumbs mixed with a pinch of cayenne pepper. Sprinkle again with melted butter and grill gently.

Surround with a border of gherkins and half slices of decoratively cut lemon. Serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Eel à la fermière. ANGUILE À LA FERMIÈRE – Cut an eel into pieces and put them in a pan on a foundation of 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) of a fondue (q.v.) of vegetables. Season with salt and pepper. Moisten with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) white wine and add a bouquet garni. Bring to the boil, cover the pan, and cook for 25 to 30 minutes. Drain, and arrange the pieces of eel on fried croûtons of bread. Boil down the pan juices, thicken with cream, and pour over the fish.

Fricassée of eel. ANGUILE EN FRICASSÉE – Cut an eel into pieces of about 6 to 7 cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches), season with salt and pepper, and put into a well-buttered pan. Add 12 well-blanchéd onions and a bouquet garni. Moisten with water and white wine in equal proportions. Bring to the boil, cover the pan, and simmer for 25 to 30 minutes. About 5 minutes before the end of cooking add 10 sliced mushrooms.

Drain the fish, arrange on a shallow dish, and garnish with the well-drained onions and mushrooms. Strain the pan juices, add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) thin Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and boil down by half.

Add 2 egg yolks mixed with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) cream and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Strain, and pour over the fish. Garnish with heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter.

Fried eel. ANGUILE FRITE – Skin small eels, make light incisions on the backs, and twist into rings or figures of eight. Secure with skewers. Soak in milk, dredge with flour and fry in deep fat. Garnish with fried parsley and quarters of lemon.

Fried eel Only. ANGUILE FRITE ONLY – Slice an eel into fillets, flatten, season, dip in a light batter, and dry. Garnish with fried parsley and serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). The eel slices can be dipped in beaten egg and breadcrumbs instead of butter.

Gallantine of eel
arranged in a coil,
after Carême

Galantine of eel arranged in a coil. GALANTINE D'ANGUILLE EN VOLUTE – Bone a large eel. Stuff with Pike forcemeat à la crème (see FORCEMEAT) and with a salpicon (q.v.) of fillets of sole to which truffles have been added. Twist the eel, coiling it upwards into a dome shape, and secure with string to help it keep this shape. Cook in a well-flavoured white wine fish stock.

Drain, and leave to cool. Cover with Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) prepared with the liquor in which the fish was cooked. Decorate with truffles and hard-boiled egg white. Glaze with fish jelly. Serve on a bed of cooked rice, or on buttered bread croûtons.

Galantine of jellied eel. GALANTINE D'ANGUILLE À LA GÉLÉE – Another name for Cold ballotine of eel.

Grilled eel maître d'hôtel. ANGUILE GRILLÉE MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL – Prepare the eel as described for Eel à la diable, omitting the mustard. Cover with softened Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Grilled eel can be served with all the sauces recommended for grilled fish.

Eel à l'italienne. ANGUILE À L'ITALIENNE – Cut a medium-sized eel in uniform pieces, season, and fry briskly in oil to stiffen the fish. Remove from the pan, and in the same oil brown 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion. When nearly done, add 1 teaspoon chopped shallots and 125 g. (4 oz.) diced mushrooms or mushroom stalks. Put the eel back into the pan, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) tomato sauce. Simmer gently, with the lid on the pan, for 25 to 30 minutes. To serve, sprinkle with chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon.

Eel en matelote. ANGUILE EN MATELOTE – Cut a skinned eel into pieces and prepare as described for Matelote à la marinère or à la meunière (see MATELOTE).

Eel en matelote à la normande. ANGUILE EN MATELOTE À LA NORMANDE – Cut an eel into pieces and proceed as described for Matelote à la normande (see MATELOTE).

Eel à la meunière. ANGUILE À LA MEUNIÈRE – Cut small eels into 10-cm. (4-inch) pieces. Season, dredge with flour and fry in butter. Scatter chopped parsley on top, sprinkle with lemon juice, and cover with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Hot eel pie (English cookery). PÂTE CHAUD D'ANGUILLE À L'ANGLAISE – Cut trimmed fillets of eel into slices of about 5 cm. (2 inches). Blanch in salted water, drain, and leave to cool. Season with salt, pepper, and grated nutmeg, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Arrange the eel slices in a pie dish, alternating with layers of sliced hard-boiled eggs. Cover the fish with white wine, and add a few dabs of butter. Cover with Puff pastry (see DOUGH). Brush with beaten egg, crimp the edges, and make a hole in the middle of the pastry to allow steam to escape. Bake in a moderate oven for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours.

To serve, pour into the pie a few tablespoons thin Demi-glaze (see SAUCE).

Hot eel pie aux fines herbes, called à la ménagère. PÂTE CHAUD AUX FINES HERBES DITE À LA MÉNAGÈRE – Cut eel slices into 5-cm. (2-inch) pieces. Flatten lightly and season with salt, pepper and spices. Put in a dish and sprinkle with white wine, a little brandy and a dash of olive oil. Leave in a cool place to marinate for 2 hours.

Drain and dry the pieces, fry them briskly in butter, and sprinkle liberally with chopped shallots and parsley. Remove the pan from the heat and pour into it the marinade. Leave to stand until quite cold.

Line a pie dish with pastry. Cover with a layer of pike forcemeat with chopped parsley added. Place the eel pieces on top, alternating with layers of the forcemeat. Sprinkle each layer with the marinade and finish with a 2-cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch) layer of forcemeat. Sprinkle with melted butter and cover with pastry. Decorate the top with pastry cut in fancy shapes. Make an opening to allow steam to escape. Brush with egg, and bake in a moderate oven for 2 hours.

Before serving, pour a few tablespoons thin Demi-glaze (see SAUCE) through the opening into the dish.

Hot eel pie à la Nantua. PÂTE CHAUD D'ANGUILLE À LA NANTUA – Proceed as described in the recipe for Hot eel pie aux fines herbes, using eel slices studded with truffles, pike forcemeat flavoured with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), and crayfish tails.

Pour into the pie a few tablespoons thin Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with crayfish butter.

Hot eel pie with truffles. PÂTE CHAUD D'ANGUILLE AUX TRUFFES – Proceed as described in the recipe for Hot eel pie aux fines herbes, using slices of eel studded with truffles, and a mixture of pike forcemeat and diced truffles, alternating with thick slices of truffles.

Cold eel pie (English cookery). PÂTE FROID D'ANGUILLE À

Eel en matelote (Robert Carrier)

EFFERVESCENCE

L'ANGLAISE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Hot eel pie. Leave to cool for several hours before serving.

Cold eel pie à la ménagère. PÂTE FROID D'ANGUILLE À LA MÉNAGÈRE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Hot eel pie aux fines herbes. When the pie is quite cold, pour in through the opening in the pastry, liquid aspic jelly made from fish bones. Leave for 12 hours to get cold again.

Cold eel pie with truffles. PÂTE FROID D'ANGUILLE AUX TRUFFES – As Hot eel pie with truffles. Finish with fish aspic jelly based on truffle essence. Leave for 12 hours to get cold.

Eel à la piémontaise. ANGUILE À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Prepare a medium-sized eel, or eel slices, as described in the recipe for Grilled eel maître d'hôtel. Arrange on a foundation of Risotto à la piémontaise (see RICE). Surround with a border of Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Eel à la poulette. ANGUILE À LA POULETTE – Fry 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion gently in butter. Add eel slices, cooking them for a minute or two in the butter. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, and 1 tablespoon flour. Cover the fish with white wine and add a bouquet garni. Simmer gently, with the lid on the pan, for 25 to 30 minutes. About 10 minutes before serving add 12 peeled, sliced mushrooms. Serve the fish garnished with the mushrooms. Thicken the pan juices with egg yolks, as described for Poulette sauce (see SAUCE). Strain, pour over the fish, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Eel à la provençale. ANGUILE À LA PROVENÇALE – Fry 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion gently in oil, add eel slices and toss in the fried onion. Season with salt and pepper, add 4 peeled, deseeded, chopped tomatoes, a bouquet garni, and a little crushed garlic. Moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine. Simmer gently with the lid on the pan for 25 to 30 minutes. About 10 minutes before serving add 20 black olives. Simmer slowly. Sprinkle with chopped parsley just before serving.

Eel with risotto. ANGUILE AU RISOTTO. See Eel à la piémontaise.

Eel à la romaine. ANGUILE À LA ROMAINE – Cut a medium-size eel into 5-cm. (2-inch) pieces. Season with salt and pepper and fry briskly in butter. Add 350 g. (12 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) freshly shelled garden peas, a small lettuce shredded into a chiffonade (q.v.), 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) white wine. Cook slowly in an uncovered pan.

Just before serving, blend in  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon kneaded butter.

Eel on skewers à l'anglaise. ANGUILE EN BROCHETTE À L'ANGLAISE – Marinate eel pieces in oil, lemon juice, pepper, salt, and chopped parsley for 1 hour. Drain, dredge in flour, dip in egg, and roll in breadcrumbs. Thread on metal skewers, putting a slice of fat bacon between each piece of fish. Grill on a low flame.

Garnish with parsley, and half slices of decoratively cut lemon. Serve with Tartare sauce (see SAUCE).

Eel à la tartare I. ANGUILE À LA TARTARE – Cook eel slices in white wine courti-bouillon. Leave to cool in this liquor. Drain, dry, dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry. Garnish with fried parsley and serve with Tartare sauce (see SAUCE).

Eel à la tartare II. ANGUILE À LA TARTARE – Cook the eel as described above. Drain, dry, coat with melted butter, and roll in finely grated breadcrumbs. Sprinkle with melted butter and grill on a gentle heat.

Surround with a border of gherkins and half slices of decoratively cut lemon. Serve with Tartare sauce (see SAUCE).

Hot eel tourte. TOURTE CHAUDE D'ANGUILLE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Hot eel pie aux fines herbes, using a pie dish with slightly raised edges.

Cold eel tourte. TOURTE FROIDE D'ANGUILLE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Cold eel pie à la ménagère, using a pie dish with slightly raised edges.

Cold eel tourte Rabelais. TOURTE FROIDE D'ANGUILLE RABELAIS – Bone an eel, flatten it, and put it into a shallow dish with salt, pepper and spices. Sprinkle with a few tablespoons white wine, a little brandy, and olive oil. Leave for 1 hour to marinate in a cool place.

Stuff the eel with whiting forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT, Fish forcemeat II) in alternate layers with shelled crayfish tails, olives stuffed with anchovy fillets, and pieces of truffle. Line with pie pastry a pie dish which has slightly raised edges. Cover the pastry with a layer of whiting forcemeat mixed with chopped parsley. Reshape the eel and put it into the pie dish.

Fill the middle of the pie with small rolled fillets of sole, half of them stuffed with whiting forcemeat mixed with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), the other half with whiting forcemeat mixed with a purée of truffles. Cover the whole with a layer of whiting forcemeat aux fines herbes (see FORCEMEAT, Fish forcemeat II). Top the pie with pastry, seal the edges, and decorate with pastry cut in fancy shapes. Make an opening in the pie to allow steam to escape. Brush with beaten egg and bake in a moderate oven for about 1 hour. Leave to get quite cold. Pour in a few tablespoons fish aspic jelly.

Eel à la tyrolienne. ANGUILE À LA TYROLIENNE – Cook the eel as described in the recipe for Grilled eel maître d'hôtel. Arrange on a fondue (q.v.) of tomatoes. Garnish with onion rings fried in butter. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Eels au vert. ANGUILES AU VERT – Skin 2 eels and divide into 5-cm (2-inch) pieces. Fry 2 handfuls of spinach leaves, a few tarragon leaves, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) pounded parsley leaves, a pinch of burnet, and a few sage leaves in 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Toss the eel pieces in this mixture for a few minutes. Season with salt, freshly ground pepper, and a small pinch of powdered thyme and bay leaf.

Cover with 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) white wine. Bring to the boil. Simmer, with the lid on the pan, away from the direct heat, for 10 minutes. Bind with 3 egg yolks and a dash of lemon juice. Transfer to an earthenware dish and keep in a very cold place.

EFFERVESCENCE – The release of gas in a liquid.

EGG-HOLDER. OEUFRIER – Utensil used for soft-boiling eggs.

EGGNOG. LAIT DE POULE – Nourishing drink made from egg yolk mixed with  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sweetened water or milk, flavoured with orange-flower water, vanilla, or grated nutmeg, and laced with rum or brandy.

The Germans make a beer eggnog which they call biersuppe. This is prepared as follows:

Boil 2 litres ( $3\frac{1}{2}$  pints,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  pints) beer with 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sugar, a pinch of salt, a little grated lemon rind and a pinch of cinnamon. Add 8 egg yolks mixed with 1 tablespoon cold milk. Strain and chill. Just before serving add fried black bread croûtons and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) each of raisins and currants which have been cooked in 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) water and well drained.

EGGPLANT – See AUBERGINE.

EGGS. OEUFS – The eggs of fish, birds and even reptiles can all be used as food. Hens' eggs, however, are mostly used in cookery, and it is with them that the following article mainly deals. Eggs are very nutritious. They are often eaten raw, particularly in country districts.

Composition of eggs – The average weight of a hen's egg is 50 g. (2 oz.). The shell weighs about 12 per cent of the total weight of the egg and is made of a calcareous, porous substance which is pervious to air, water, and smells. It is lined with a delicate, pellucid membrane which separates itself from the shell at the larger end of the egg to form the air chamber. The size of this chamber is in inverse proportion to the freshness of the egg – the fresher the egg the smaller the chamber.

The albumen, or white of the egg, is a thick, viscous, transparent liquid, with a high percentage of water, and some mineral substances. Albumen is soluble in cold water, congeals at 70°C. (158°F.) and remains from then on insoluble. It forms about 58 per cent of the total weight of the egg.

The vitellus, or yolk of the egg (30 per cent of the total weight), is an opaque, soft substance which congeals in heat. The yolk is composed of albumins, fats containing vitamins, lecithins, nucleins, cholestins, and mineral substances including a ferruginous pigment called haematogen, which gives it its colour.

The composition of the egg varies with the breed of the hen and its diet – the latter also influences the flavour of the egg.

The best eggs come from free-range hens, which eat the right proportion of grain and vegetable matter.

Dietetically, the fresh egg is almost a complete food. It contains easily assimilable proteins, fats, Vitamins A, B, D and E (only Vitamin C is absent), an appreciable amount of iron, and a number of valuable mineral salts: magnesium, a minute quantity of calcium, sodium, potassium, manganese, copper, zinc, chlorine, iodine, fluorine, etc. The egg, being a bearer of life, also contains precious oligo-elements.

The table below shows that the average egg yolk weighing 18 g. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  oz.) supplies 6 times more calories than the white, which weighs 35 g. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  oz.).

COMPOSITION OF AN AVERAGE EGG

	Weight	Water	Albumen	Fats	Salts	Calories
Shell	7 g.
White	35 g.	30 g.	4.5 g.	0 g.	0.25 g.	10 g.
Yolk	18 g.	9 g.	2.9 g.	5.7 g.	0.25 g.	63 g.
Whole egg	60 g.	39 g.	7.4 g.	5.7 g.	0.50 g.	73 g.

From the tables of M. Alquier

Ostrich, turkey, peacock and duck eggs are bigger than chicken eggs; pigeon, guinea-fowl, pheasant, partridge, lapwing, plover and gull eggs are smaller. All these are of a similar composition except for duck and goose eggs, which are more oily.

Digestibility of eggs – Soft-boiled eggs, poached eggs, and eggs en cocotte are easily digested, unless served with a heavy garnish such as foie gras, truffles, mushrooms, etc.

The same applies to omelettes and scrambled eggs, although these, even without a garnish, are not as easily digested as those mentioned above.

Fried eggs are fairly digestible if they are not over browned in the butter or fat in which they are cooked.

Hard-boiled eggs take longer to digest than any of the others. A hard-boiled egg cut into very small fragments is more easily digested.

The average diet should not contain more than 2 or 3 eggs weekly (in whatever form they are served) and these should preferably be eaten at the midday meal.

Freshness of eggs – A fresh egg is heavy. When shaken, it should feel well-filled. As the shell is porous, the water which encloses the inner part of the egg evaporates. An egg loses a tiny fraction in weight every day. It is easy to gauge the freshness of an egg by plunging it into a 12 per cent solution of salted water (kitchen salt). If the egg is very fresh, it falls at once to the bottom of the water. If it is a few days old it floats. If it is bad it floats on top. This method does not apply to eggs that have been preserved in water and limestone, or other liquid.

Preservation of eggs – Eggs are preserved by the exclusion of air. They can either be dipped in a proprietary solution and then stored, or kept submerged in a solution of water-glass. Preserved eggs should not be used for boiling. Eggs can also be preserved by desiccation into powder.

BASIC EGG DISHES. MÉTHODES DE CUISSON DES OEUFs – In cooking and baking, only fresh eggs should be used.

Boiled eggs (hard). OEUFs DURS – Plunge the eggs into a pan of boiling water and boil for 8 to 10 minutes, according to size.

Drain the eggs and stand in cold water or under a cold tap. Peel them and use hot or cold, according to the recipe.

Boiled eggs (soft). OEUFs MOLLETS – Plunge the eggs into a pan of boiling water. Boil for 3 to 4 minutes. Shell them under cold water and keep warm in a pan of hot salted water until serving.

To test the freshness of an egg, plunge it into a 12 per cent solution of salted water: A fresh egg falls at once to the bottom; An egg 2 days old floats midway; An egg 4 days old rises to the surface; A 2-week old egg floats on top

Boiled eggs and garnished eggs en cocotte (Robert Carrier)

Drain the eggs and garnish them, or serve with sauce, according to the recipe. Soft-boiled eggs are served and garnished in the same way as poached eggs.

Eggs en cocotte, cassolettes or caissettes. OEUFS EN COCOTTE – This way of preparing eggs is a combination of eggs à la coque (see below) and poached eggs (see below).

Warm small round or oval dishes, made of china, earthenware, metal, or fireproof glass. Butter the dishes, or coat with a purée, according to the recipe. Use 1 or 2 eggs for each dish.

Place the dishes in the oven, in a pan half-filled with water. Leave for 6 to 8 minutes, according to the number of eggs in each dish. Salt the eggs when taking them from the oven.

Clean the outside of the dishes. Place them on a flat dish. Serve au naturel or garnished.

Eggs à la coque (boiled in their shells). OEUFS À LA COQUE – First method. Plunge the egg into boiling water. Leave a medium-sized egg for 3 minutes, a larger one, 30 seconds longer.

Second method. Plunge the eggs into boiling water. Boil for 1 minute. Remove from the heat, and leave in the hot water for 3 minutes.

Third method. Cover the eggs with cold water in a saucepan. Bring them to the boil and remove from the saucepan as soon as the water is boiling.

Fourth method. Steam the eggs, in special pans, for 3 minutes.

The times given above can be varied according to taste.

Fried egg and bacon

Fried eggs. OEUFS FRITS – There are 2 methods.

Fried. Cook 1 egg at a time in plenty of fat, oil, or butter. The white should cover the yolk.

Sautéed. Cook in a frying pan with fat, oil, or butter, on 1 side or both, and turn onto a dish or plate.

Heat oil in a small frying pan. Use enough to let the egg float. Break the egg into a cup and season with salt. Slide it into the hot oil and draw the white round the yolk with a wooden spoon to seal it.

Drain the eggs and garnish as shown for each recipe.

Eggs in a mould. OEUFS MOULÉS – This dish belongs to the grande cuisine, but can easily be prepared at home.

Coat the insides of dariole moulds with butter. Add chopped parsley, ham, truffles, etc. according to the recipe. Break the eggs into the lined moulds.

Cook in a bain-marie for 8 to 12 minutes. Leave in the moulds for a few minutes before taking out.

Place on slices of fried or toasted bread. Moulded eggs can also be served on tartlets or round croustades (q.v.), on artichoke hearts, or as shown in the recipe chosen. Garnish and serve with a suitable sauce.

Either simple or fluted moulds can be used.

Omelette

Omelette – It is less difficult to prepare an omelette than it seems. For success, observe the following points:

The flame must be very high.

Use an absolutely clean frying pan, in which nothing else is ever cooked.

Beat the eggs lightly and only at the last moment.

Do not use too much butter or fat.

Have confidence in yourself.

For 4 people use the following quantities.

Lightly beat 8 eggs. Season with salt and freshly ground pepper.

Heat 35 g. (1½ oz., 3 tablespoons) butter in the frying pan and add the eggs. Cook over a high flame. Mix with a fork. Shake the pan so that the omelette is evenly cooked. Fold it over once and turn it upside down with 1 quick movement, onto a warmed dish.

Garnish the omelette and serve with a sauce from the omelette recipes in this section.

Poached eggs. OEUFS POCHÉS – Fill a pan with salted water – ½ teaspoon salt to 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) water. Add 1 tablespoon vinegar. Bring to the boil. Break the eggs into the liquid exactly on the spot where it is bubbling. Simmer gently for 3 minutes.

Drain the eggs, one at a time, with a skimmer. Put each one separately into fresh water. Trim the eggs by removing the blisters (with fresh eggs this should hardly be necessary). Leave them in a dish of hot, salted water until they are served.

Drain and dry the eggs. Place them on fried or toasted slices of bread, according to the recipe. They can also be served on croustades, in tartlets, or on a bed of rice, semolina, potatoes, artichoke hearts, etc.

Garnish and cover with a sauce according to the recipe chosen.

Scrambled eggs. OEUFS BROUILLÉS – Well-made scrambled eggs are delicious, but they should be cooked with care – they must be smooth and creamy. They can be garnished in various ways.

First method. Use the following quantities for 4 people. Melt 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter in a small frying pan with a heavy bottom, or a small saucepan. Break 8 eggs and beat together lightly, as for an omelette. Season them and add to the butter in the pan. Cook over a low heat, stirring constantly with a wooden spoon.

When the eggs are cooked, remove them from the stove and add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, cut into small pieces. Mix well and keep hot in a bain-marie until serving.

Garnish according to the recipe chosen.

Second method. Use a double saucepan. Half-fill the bottom pan with warm water. Cook eggs and butter in the smaller pan, stirring with a wooden spoon.

When the eggs are cooked, add a little more butter, cut into small pieces.

2 or 3 tablespoons fresh cream can be added to scrambled eggs after they are cooked.

They can be served in small or large croustades (q.v.) made from puff pastry; in timbales (q.v.) made from plain pastry; in cassolettes (q.v.); in hollowed-out vegetables; or in metal or china pie dishes.

Eggs sur le plat, or shirred eggs. OEUFS SUR LE PLAT – For this simple way of cooking eggs special dishes are used, which are either for individual portions (1 or 2 eggs) or for cooking several at once.

For two eggs coat the dish with  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon butter. Heat on the stove. Break the eggs into the dish and pour melted butter on the yolks. Cook in the oven for as long as is liked and when ready, sprinkle with fine salt.

Garnish or cover with a sauce according to the instructions given alphabetically below.

EGG DISHES. LES DIVERS APPRÊTS D'OEUFS.

Eggs à l'africaine (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À L'AFRICAINNE – Arrange the cooked eggs in a circle on a layer of couscous (q.v.).

Peel and dice aubergines, sauté them in oil and add to the ring.

Peel and dice sweet peppers and cook in a consommé. Make a Tomato sauce (see SAUCE), add the peppers and pour it over the eggs.

Eggs à l'agenaise (sur le plat). OEUFS À L'AGENAISE – Sauté chopped onions in goose fat. When cooked, add garlic and chopped parsley. Cook the eggs sur le plat on a bed of this onion mixture.

Garnish with peeled, diced aubergines, sautéed in goose fat.

Aladdin eggs I (sur le plat). OEUFS ALADIN – Bake the eggs in ovenproof dishes on a foundation of onions sautéed in butter until soft.

Garnish with Sweet peppers à l'orientale (see PEPPERS) and saffron-flavoured Risotto (see RICE). Surround with a border of Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Aladdin eggs II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS ALADIN – Arrange the cooked eggs in a circle on a layer of saffron-flavoured Risotto (see RICE).

Garnish with Sweet peppers à l'orientale (see PEPPERS) and mask the eggs with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) spiced with a pinch of cayenne.

Eggs à l'alsacienne I (fried). OEUFS À L'ALSACIENNE – Arrange the fried eggs on a layer of braised sauerkraut, alternating them with slices of ham. Surround with a border of Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à l'alsacienne II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À L'ALSACIENNE – Arrange the cooked eggs in a dish on a layer of braised sauerkraut. Garnish with thin slices of cooked ham. Cover with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à l'alsacienne III (sur le plat). OEUFS À L'ALSACIENNE – Cook the eggs sur le plat in goose fat. Garnish with 1 tablespoon braised sauerkraut and a slice of ham. Surround with a border of Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Ambassadrice eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS AMBASSADRICE – Make croustades (q.v.) with puff pastry and garnish with a salpicon (q.v.) of truffles and foie gras, blended with concentrated Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira. Put the cooked eggs on the croustades and mask them with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with asparagus tips blended with butter.

Ambassadrice eggs II (en cocotte). OEUFS AMBASSADRICE – Line the cocottes with Foie gras purée (see PURÉE) and sprinkle with chopped truffles. Break the eggs into the lined dishes and cook in a bain-marie. When the eggs are cooked, take them out, garnish with asparagus tips, and surround the yolk with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) to which sherry has been added.

Ambassadrice eggs III (sur le plat). OEUFS AMBASSADRICE – Cook the eggs sur le plat in the usual way. When ready, garnish with a salpicon of foie gras, truffles, and asparagus tips. Surround with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) with sherry added.

Amélie eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS AMÉLIE – Arrange the eggs on puff pastry croustades garnished with a fine mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables (cooked in butter until they are soft) and with Madeira wine poured into the pan after the vegetables have been taken out.

Mask the eggs with a Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with morels cooked in cream.

Amélie eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFS AMÉLIE – Cook the eggs in ovenproof dishes on a mirepoix of vegetables with Madeira. Garnish with morels cooked in cream.

Eggs à l'américaine I (fried). OEUFS À L'AMÉRICAINNE – Fry the eggs in butter. Garnish with 2 slices grilled or fried bacon and  $\frac{1}{2}$  grilled tomato.

Eggs à l'américaine II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À L'AMÉRICAINNE – Arrange the cooked eggs on fried bread or croustades. Garnish with pieces of Lobster (or spiny lobster) à l'américaine (see LOBSTER). Pour Américaine sauce (see SAUCE) over the eggs.

Eggs à l'américaine III (sur le plat). OEUFS À L'AMÉRICAINNE – Break 2 eggs onto 2 pieces of Lobster (or spiny lobster) à l'américaine (see LOBSTER) in a buttered ovenproof dish. Bake in the oven. Surround with Américaine sauce (see SAUCE).

Anchovy eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS AUX ANCHOIS – Arrange the cooked eggs on bread fried in butter on both sides, or on puff pastry croustades.

Mask with Anchovy Sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish each egg with a desalted anchovy fillet.

Anchovy eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFS AUX ANCHOIS – Desalt and dice 1 anchovy per egg. Put them into a buttered ovenproof dish and break the eggs onto them. Cook in the oven and decorate with more anchovy fillets.

Anchovy eggs III (fried). OEUFS AUX ANCHOIS – Fry the eggs in oil. Arrange each one on an oval piece of bread, fried in butter on both sides. Garnish with anchovy fillets, arranged criss-cross. Sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Eggs à l'ancienne I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À L'ANCIENNE – Arrange the cooked eggs on a mound of rice, cooked in meat stock. Cover with Veloute saucé (see SAUCE). Put 1 teaspoon of julienne (q.v.) of truffles blended with thick Madeira sauce (see SAUCE) between the eggs.

Eggs à l'ancienne II (cold). OEUFS À L'ANCIENNE – Mask soft-boiled eggs or poached eggs with White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) to which Madeira has been added. Decorate with truffles and glaze with jelly. Serve in a dish lined with a layer of chicken jelly.

Separate the eggs with slices of pickled tongue cut into fluted half-circles. Cover with thin jelly. Add chopped jelly to the middle of the dish. Keep cold until serving.

Eggs à l'andalouse I (sur le plat). OEUFS À L'ANDALOUSE – Cook the eggs sur le plat in oil in a dish which has been rubbed with garlic. Peel and dice sweet peppers and cook them in oil. Add them to Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) and garnish the eggs with the mixture.

Eggs à l'andalouse II (fried). OEUFS À L'ANDALOUSE – Fry the eggs in oil. Arrange alternately with grilled tomato-halves in the shape of a crown.

Garnish with sweet peppers and onion rings fried in oil.

Eggs à l'anglaise I (sur le plat). OEUFS À L'ANGLAISE – Break 2 eggs over a slice of grilled bacon in a buttered ovenproof dish. Cook in the oven.

Eggs à l'anglaise II (fried). OEUFS À L'ANGLAISE – Fry the eggs in butter. Cut them with a round biscuit-cutter, leaving only a thin rim of white round the yolk. Arrange on rounds of bread, toasted, or fried in butter.

Surround with veal stock, or serve the stock separately.

Eggs à l'antiboise. OEUFS À L'ANTIBOISE – Roll 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) nonats (q.v.) in flour, and sauté in butter. When they are brown, add 1 tablespoon diced Gruyère cheese and a little garlic.

Break 4 eggs into the same pan and cook them in the oven. Turn upside down onto a hot dish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Eggs à l'anversoise I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À L'ANVERSOISE – Serve the cooked eggs on bread fried in butter on both sides. Garnish with hop shoots cooked in butter. Mask with Cream sauce or Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à l'anversoise II (sur le plat). OEUFS À L'ANVERSOISE – Garnish the cooked eggs with 1 tablespoon hop shoots cooked in butter or cream. Surround with a border of boiling cream.

Apicius eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS APICIUS – Serve the cooked eggs on grilled mushrooms. Garnish with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH). Mask the eggs with Normande sauce (see SAUCE). Put 1 tablespoon of a salpicon, made from truffles cooked in butter, between each egg.

Archduke eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS ARCHIDUC – Arrange the cooked eggs on bread fried in butter on both sides, or on croustades of puff pastry. Coat with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) to which paprika and chopped onion cooked in butter have been added. Garnish with diced truffles sautéed in butter.

Archduke eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFS ARCHIDUC – Break the eggs into an ovenproof dish lined with chopped onions which have been softened in butter and seasoned with paprika. Cook in the oven and garnish with diced truffles cooked in butter. Surround with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) seasoned with paprika.

Argenteuil eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS ARGENTEUIL – Arrange the cooked eggs on pieces of bread fried in butter on both sides, or on puff pastry croustades.

Mask with White asparagus purée (see PURÉE), to which Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) has been added in the proportion of 3 to 1. Garnish with white asparagus tips cooked in butter.

Argenteuil eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFS ARGENTEUIL – Break the eggs into a buttered ovenproof dish with 1 tablespoon fresh cream. Cook in the oven. Garnish with white asparagus tips cooked in butter.

Argenteuil eggs III (sur le plat). OEUFS ARGENTEUIL – Line an ovenproof dish with White asparagus purée (see PURÉE). Break the eggs into it. Cook in the oven.

Garnish with green asparagus tips cooked in butter. Surround with Velouté sauce or Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Argenteuil eggs IV (cold). OEUFS ARGENTEUIL – Mask the soft-boiled or poached eggs with a Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with green asparagus tips and glaze with aspic jelly.

Make a salad of white asparagus tips seasoned with jellied Mayonnaise (see SAUCE). Arrange on a dish with eggs and chopped aspic in the middle.

Armenonville eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS ARMENONVILLE – Arrange the cooked eggs on oval pieces of toast made from unsweetened brioche dough. Mask with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) to which sherry has been added. Garnish with small carrots cooked in cream, and asparagus tips sautéed with butter.

Auber eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS AUBER – Stuff halved tomatoes with Chicken forcemeat (see FORCE-MEAT) mixed with chopped truffles. Put 1 cooked egg on each half.

Mask the eggs with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with tomato paste and finished with a julienne of truffles cooked in sherry.

Auber eggs II (cold). OEUFS AUBER – Mask the eggs with a White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) to which Tomato essence (see ESSENCE) has been added. Decorate with truffles and glaze with jelly.

Hollow out some tomatoes and fill with diced breast of chicken and truffles bound with mayonnaise made with gelatine. Put 1 soft-boiled or poached egg on each tomato. Arrange in a crown, and garnish with jelly.

Eggs with aubergines I (sur le plat). OEUFS AUX AUBERGINES – Line the ovenproof dish with diced aubergines sautéed in butter. Break the eggs onto the aubergines, and cook in the usual way for eggs sur le plat.

Eggs with aubergines II (fried). OEUFS AUX AUBERGINES – Fry the eggs in oil. Arrange them in a ring alternating with slices of aubergine, cut lengthwise and fried in oil, or grilled. Garnish with fried parsley.

Eggs with aubergines à la sicilienne (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS AUX AUBERGINES À LA SICILIENNE – Cut the aubergines in half lengthwise. Score the pulp. Salt them and leave to sweat for 1 hour. Fry in oil.

Remove the pulp without tearing the skins and dry the pulp on the stove. Mix it with twice its volume of Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Coat the bottoms of the aubergines with 1 tablespoon of this purée. Add 1 poached egg to each half. Arrange them in a buttered gratin dish and cover the eggs with the remaining purée, to which fresh cream has been added. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Brown in a hot oven.

Augier eggs (sur le plat). OEUFS AUGIER – Line a buttered dish with a purée made of sweetbreads and chopped chervil. Break the eggs onto the purée. Surround the yolks with a ring of fresh cream. Bake in the oven.

Aurora eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À L'AUORE – Arrange the cooked eggs on pieces of bread fried in butter on both sides, or on puff pastry croustades. Mask them with Aurora sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped hard-boiled egg yolks. Surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Aurora eggs II (stuffed, hard-boiled). OEUFS DUR À L'AUORE FARCIS – Cut the hard-boiled eggs lengthwise. Remove the yolks. Mix two thirds of the yolks with an equal weight of thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and butter. Season and add chopped herbs. Stuff the eggs with this mixture, heaping it into a dome.

Arrange the eggs on a gratin dish masked with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle them with grated cheese and pour on melted butter. Brown in a hot oven. Remove from the oven, sprinkle with the remaining chopped hard-boiled yolks, and surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à l'auvergnate (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À

EGGS

L'Auvergnate – Cook some cabbage in meat stock. Strain, and sauté in butter or lard. Arrange the cooked eggs on the cabbage, alternating with rounds of sausage, fried in butter.

Cover with concentrated veal stock to which butter has been added.

Babinski eggs (sur le plat). OEUFS BABINSKI – Garnish the cooked eggs with cork-shaped chicken croquettes and 1 tablespoon morels in cream. Surround with concentrated veal stock, to which butter has been added.

Bachaumont eggs (en cocotte). OEUFS BACHAUMONT – Butter the cocottes and line them with celeriac purée. Break the eggs onto the purée and cook in the oven in a bain-marie (q.v.).

Remove from the oven, season, and surround with Cream sauce (see SAUCE), mixed with chopped chervil.

Eggs and bacon I (sur le plat). OEUFS AU BACON – Break the eggs into an ovenproof dish lined with thin strips of bacon which have been lightly browned in butter. Pour the fat from the bacon over them and bake in the oven.

Eggs and bacon II (fried). OEUFS AU BACON – Fry the eggs in oil. Arrange in a ring, alternating with rashers of bacon, grilled or fried in oil. Garnish with fried parsley.

Bagration eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS BAGRATION – Serve the cooked eggs in a flan case baked blind. Garnish with diced macaroni cooked in water, bound with cream, and mixed with diced truffles. Mask with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Bagration eggs

Bagration eggs II (in moulds). OEUFS BAGRATION – Line a buttered dariole mould with macaroni which has been cooked in water. Arrange the macaroni in a spiral. Spread Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) on the macaroni and break in the eggs. Cook in a bain-marie.

Unmould onto small round croustades and mask with Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Add to each egg a round slice of truffle cooked in butter.

Balmoral eggs (en cocotte). OEUFS BALMORAL – Line cocotte dishes with a layer of vegetable mirepoix (q.v.). Break the eggs onto the mirepoix and bake in the oven in a bain-marie.

Remove from the oven, season, and garnish with 1 tablespoon diced mushrooms fried in butter and blended with concentrated veal stock.

Bamboche eggs (fried). OEUFS BAMBOCHE – Fry the eggs in oil, and arrange in a circle on a macédoine (q.v.) of vegetables blended with cream. Garnish with thin strips of fried salt cod, as described for Salt cod à la bamboche (see COD, Salt cod).

Banville eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS BANVILLE – Cook artichoke hearts in court-bouillon (q.v.) and sauté them lightly in butter. Arrange the cooked eggs on the artichoke hearts and mask them with Chivry sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with thickened Chicken forcemeat à la crème (see FORCEMEAT).

Eggs à la béarnaise (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA BÉARNAISE – Make small oval cakes using Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES). Bake in the oven until golden brown and arrange 1 cooked egg on each one. Coat them with concentrated veal gravy to which butter has been added. Serve with Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la Beauharnais (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA BEAUHARNAIS – Cook artichoke hearts in butter and garnish with Beauharnais sauce (see SAUCE). Arrange 1 egg on each. Coat with reduced Demi-glace (see SAUCE), to which butter has been added.

Eggs à la Beaumont (poached). OEUFS À LA BEAUMONT – For 10 eggs use 10 oval croustades made from left-over puff pastry, and  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) thin Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

'Cook and trim 3 large artichoke hearts. Cut them into small squares and stew them gently in butter. Sieve one third of the stewed artichoke hearts. Mix the purée with the Béchamel sauce. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter.

Cook 175 g. (6 oz.) green asparagus tips in salt water. (In order to have the correct weight of asparagus tips, 400 g. (14 oz.) asparagus will be required.) Drain, but do not rinse in cold water. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Dress with butter. Mix in the rest of the artichoke hearts.

'Poach the eggs which should be absolutely fresh. Drain them and plunge into lukewarm water. Then drain again and dry on a cloth. Trim the eggs and arrange them in a circle on individual croustades. Cover them with the sauce and put some chervil on each egg. Garnish with the artichokes and asparagus tips arranged in the centre of the circle.' (Philéas Gilbert.)

Eggs à la béchamel. OEUFS À LA BÉCHAMEL – See Eggs with cream sauce (below).

Belle-Hélène eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS BELLE-HÉLÈNE – Make oval croquettes from left-over poultry meat. Dip them in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in butter. Put 1 soft-boiled or poached egg on each. Mask the eggs with Colbert butter (see BUTTER, compound butters). Garnish with asparagus tips. Surround with a ring of Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la belleilloise (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA BELLEVILLOISE – Line an ovenproof dish with chopped onion softened in butter. Put the eggs on the onions and garnish with 2 slices of grilled andouillette (q.v.). Bake them and when cooked surround the eggs with a ribbon of Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la bénédictine (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA BÉNÉDICTINE – Arrange the cooked eggs on a mixture of salt cod pounded with garlic, oil, and cream, and mixed with chopped truffles. Mask with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Béranger eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS BÉRANGER – Line a flan case, baked blind, with a layer of thick Onion soubise (see PURÉE). Put the cooked eggs on this layer and mask them with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle grated cheese over the pie and pour melted butter over. Brown in the oven.

Bérangère eggs (en cocotte). OEUFS BÉRANGÈRE – Line buttered cocottes with a thin layer of forcemeat made from poultry and truffles. Break the eggs into the cocottes and cook in the usual way. When the eggs are cooked, garnish with 1 tablespoon of ragoût made from cocks' combs and kidneys, blended with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Bercy eggs (sur le plat). OEUFS BERCY – Bake the eggs in the usual way. Garnish with a small grilled or fried sausage. Surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Berlioz eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS BERLIOZ – Brown in the oven oval croustades, made from Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES). Fill the croustades with a salpicon of truffles and mushrooms blended with a thick Madeira sauce (see SAUCE). Put the cooked eggs on the garnished croustades.

Mask the eggs lightly with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE). Fill the middle of the dish with cocks' combs fried à la Villeroi.

Bernis eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF BERNIS – Make round croustades, with a small rim, from puff pastry. Garnish them with a layer of chicken purée. Arrange the cooked eggs in the croustades.

Mask the eggs with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with green asparagus tips blended with butter.

Bernis eggs II (cold). OEUF BERNIS – Mask poached eggs in White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with truffles and glaze with jelly.

Line a dish with a layer of Chicken mousse (see CHICKEN). Arrange the eggs on the mousse, leaving space between each egg for a bunch of green asparagus tips. Spoon half-set jelly over the whole dish. Serve very cold.

If it is more convenient to serve the eggs in individual dishes, small cassolettes or shell dishes made from metal, crystal or china, can be used.

Bizet eggs (in moulds). OEUF BIZET – Butter individual dariole moulds and line with finely chopped pickled tongue and truffles. Break the eggs into the moulds and poach them in a bain-marie.

Cook artichoke hearts in butter. Unmould the eggs and put 1 on each artichoke heart. Mask with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE). Put a slice of truffle on each egg.

Eggs à la bohémienne (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF À LA BOHÉMIENNE – Make croustades from puff pastry and garnish them with purée of foie gras. Put the cooked eggs on the purée. Cover them with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Cut lean ham into matchsticks and heat them in Madeira. Put the ham on the eggs and surround with a ring of light veal jelly.

Bonvalet eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF BONVALET – Hollow out rounds of bread, brown them in butter, and place the cooked eggs in the hollows.

Mask with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and surround with a ribbon of thick tomato-flavoured Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) piped through a paper forcing-bag. Put 1 slice of truffle, heated in butter, on each egg.

Eggs à la bordelaise I (sur le plat). OEUF À LA BORDELAISE – Break the eggs onto a bed of chopped Cèpes à la bordelaise (see MUSHROOMS) and cook as usual.

Eggs à la bordelaise II (fried). OEUF À LA BORDELAISE – Fry the eggs and oval croûtons in oil. Arrange the eggs on the croûtons, and garnish with Cèpes à la bordelaise (see MUSHROOMS).

Eggs as a border I (with various garnishes). OEUF EN BORDURE – Hard-boil the eggs and cut them into quarters, thick rounds, or halves.

Butter a plain ring mould. Arrange the eggs with the yolks facing outward. Fill the mould, using a forcing-bag, with forcemeat made of meat, fish or vegetables. Press the forcemeat down to avoid empty spaces. Cover with a lid and cook in a bain-marie in a low oven.

Turn the mould out onto a dish so that the ingredients all come out together. Do not remove it too soon.

Fill the middle with a garnish such as creamed or sautéed mushrooms; a macédoine of vegetables; asparagus tips or other green vegetables in butter or cream; spinach leaves or spinach purée; sautéed aubergines; etc.

Spoon Cream sauce (see SAUCE) over the border.

Eggs as a border II. OEUF EN BORDURE – Cut hard-boiled eggs into thick round slices. Bake a flan case and arrange the eggs round the edges of the flan, alternating them with

Eggs as a border to spinach round slices of ham; pickled tongue; calves' brains sautéed in butter; aubergines or courgettes (zucchini) sautéed in butter; or with any garnish that goes well with hard-boiled eggs.

Fill the middle of the flan with one of the garnishes described in the previous recipe. Cover the eggs with Cream sauce (see SAUCE) or any other suitable sauce.

Eggs as a border III (cold). OEUF EN BORDURE – Cut hard-boiled eggs into halves, quarters or thick rounds. Put them into ring moulds lined with white jelly, and decorate with pieces of truffle, pickled tongue, lean ham, or any suitable garnish. Fill with half-set jelly. Leave to set on ice.

Eggs as a border IV (cold). OEUF EN BORDURE – Line a plain ring mould with jelly. Decorate with the whites of hard-boiled eggs, truffles, etc.

Use a forcing-bag to fill the ring with stuffing made from the yolks of the hard-boiled eggs sieved with purée of foie gras, in the proportion of 3 to 1. Fill the mould with half-set jelly. Leave to set in the refrigerator.

Turn the mould out onto a dish. Put a buttered croûton in the centre of the mould. Sieve together the yolks from halved hard-boiled eggs and some foie gras. Stuff the whites with this mixture and heap the eggs in a pyramid on the croûton. Decorate with truffles and spoon jelly over them. Garnish with jelly triangles.

In France these eggs are also called jellied eggs à la française.

Eggs à la bourguignonne (poached). OEUF À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Boil 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) red wine, a pinch of salt, a pinch of pepper, a small handful of parsley, a twig of thyme, a fragment of bay leaf and a crushed clove of garlic, for a few minutes.

Strain, and poach 6 fresh eggs in the wine.

Drain the eggs and arrange them on croûtons fried in butter. Cover the eggs with Bourguignonne sauce (see SAUCE) made by blending kneaded butter into the red wine in which the eggs were cooked.

Alternatively, arrange the eggs on croûtons made from round slices of bread, fried in butter. Garnish with sautéed mushrooms and small glazed onions. Cover with Bourguignonne sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la bretonne I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF À LA BRETONNE – Arrange the cooked eggs on croûtons, fried in butter. Cover them with Bretonne sauce (see SAUCE).

Alternatively, arrange the eggs in hollowed out croûtons, fried in butter (or in croustades or tartlets), and filled with white bean purée. Cover with concentrated veal gravy to which butter has been added.

Eggs à la bretonne II (sur le plat). OEUF À LA BRETONNE – Bake the eggs sur le plat in the usual way. When they are cooked, surround them with a ribbon of Bretonne sauce (see SAUCE).

Alternatively, force through a forcing-bag, a thick purée of white beans along the edge of a buttered dish. Break the eggs into the dish and fry them in the usual way.

Brillat-Savarin eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Bake a flan case blind. Garnish with morels sautéed in butter. Put the cooked eggs on the mushrooms and mask with concentrated Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) to which sherry and butter have been added. Dress the centre of the dish with buttered green asparagus tips.

Brillat-Savarin eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFS BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Bake the eggs sur le plat in the usual way. Garnish them with morels sautéed in butter, and asparagus tips. Surround them with sherry-flavoured Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Brillat-Savarin eggs III (en caissettes). OEUFS BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Butter small ovenproof china dishes. Garnish them with 1 tablespoon sautéed morels. Break the eggs onto them and bake in the oven in a bain-marie.

Garnish with asparagus tips, and surround with a ribbon of Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), flavoured with sherry.

Brimont eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS BRIMONT – Fill a large puff pastry croustade with mushrooms cooked in cream. Put the cooked eggs on the mushrooms and mask with thick velouté sauce made from chicken stock with Madeira and cream added. Garnish the centre of the dish with small round chicken croquettes. Put a slice of truffle on each egg.

Eggs à la bruxelloise I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA BRUXELLOISE – Arrange the cooked eggs on hollowed-out croûtons (which have been browned in the oven) or in tartlets (baked blind). Garnish with chopped chicory cooked in butter and bound with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Coat with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la bruxelloise II (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA BRUXELLOISE – Break the eggs onto halved, braised chicory in ovenproof dishes and cook them in the usual way. Surround them with a ribbon of Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Cardinal eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS CARDINAL – Garnish tartlets (baked blind) with spiny lobster blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Put the cooked eggs on the lobster and mask with Cardinal sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish each egg with a slice of truffle.

Cardinal eggs II (in moulds). OEUFS CARDINAL – Butter dariole moulds and sprinkle them with lobster coral. Break the eggs in the moulds and cook them in a bain-marie. Empty the moulds into tartlets garnished with a mixture of lobster and Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Mask with Cardinal sauce (see SAUCE). Heat sliced truffles in butter and put one on each egg.

Carême eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS CARÊME – Arrange the cooked eggs on artichoke hearts cooked in butter. Garnish with a ragoût of sweetbreads, truffles and mushrooms.

Mask with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), one third of which should be veal stock, with cream and Madeira added.

Cut slices of pickled tongue with a fluted biscuit-cutter and put 1 slice on each egg.

Carême eggs II (in moulds). OEUFS CARÊME – Line small hexagonal moulds with pickled tongue and diced truffles. Break the eggs into the moulds and steam them. Garnish, and mask with sauce as in the recipe above.

Carême eggs III (cold). OEUFS CARÊME – Poach the eggs and trim them so that little of the white remains. Line small hexagonal moulds with jelly and decorate them with truffles and pickled tongue cut into small pieces. Put the eggs into the moulds. Fill the moulds with Madeira-flavoured jelly. Chill on ice.

Unmould the eggs and put each one on an artichoke heart which has been cooked in court-bouillon and masked with jelly. Arrange the eggs around an aspic of sweetbreads and truffles made in a conical mould.

Cook small mushrooms in court-bouillon. Mask them with White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with lozenge-shaped pieces of truffle. Put a decorated mushroom on each egg.

Eggs à la carmélite (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CARMÉLITE – Bake a flan case blind. Garnish with Mussels in cream (see MUSSEL). Arrange the cooked eggs on the mussels; garnish with White wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Carmen eggs (sur le plat). OEUFS CARMEN – Bake the eggs sur le plat in the usual way. Cut them with a round biscuit-cutter, leaving only a narrow ribbon of white round the yolk. Deep-fry croûtons in oil. Cover each croûton with a slice of ham sautéed in a frying pan. Put 1 egg on each slice of ham. Mask the eggs with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE), seasoned with paprika and with butter added.

Carnavalet eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS CARNAVALET – Arrange the cooked eggs in a circle on Subrics of spinach (see SPINACH). Garnish the middle of the dish with a macédoine of vegetables blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Mask the eggs with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la catalane (fried). OEUFS À LA CATALANE – Fry halved tomatoes and thinly sliced aubergines in oil. Use a separate frying pan for each vegetable. When they are cooked, mix the vegetables together and season with salt and pepper. Add garlic and chopped parsley and arrange on a dish.

Cook the eggs in a frying pan and slide them on to the vegetables.

Eggs à la charcutière I (fried). OEUFS À LA CHARCUTIÈRE – Fry the eggs in lard. Arrange them on a dish in the shape of a crown, alternating them with grilled Pork crépinettes (see CRÉPINETTES). Garnish with fried parsley and serve with Charcutière sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la charcutière II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CHARCUTIÈRE – Arrange the cooked eggs on small Pork crépinettes (see CRÉPINETTES) which have been fried or grilled. Cover with concentrated Charcutière sauce (see SAUCE).

Chartreuse eggs (in moulds). OEUFS EN CHARTREUSE – Cut carrots and turnips into tiny balls. Dice French beans. Cook these vegetables, and green peas, separately in salt water. Drain the vegetables, toss them in melted butter, and line buttered moulds with them. Break the eggs into the moulds and cook in a bain-marie.

Make round croûtes, hollow them out, and bake until golden. Fill them with well-drained braised cabbage.

Unmould the eggs and put them on the cabbage in the croûtes, separating each egg from the next with a slice of cooked sausage. Mask with concentrated veal stock to which butter has been added.

Eggs au chasseur I (sur le plat). OEUFS AU CHASSEUR – Garnish cooked eggs with sautéed chicken livers. Surround with a ribbon of Chasseur sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Finely sliced mushrooms can be added to the chicken livers.

Eggs au chasseur II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS AU CHASSEUR – Bake tartlets blind and fill them with sautéed chicken livers. Arrange the cooked eggs on the livers and cover with Chasseur sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Chateaubriand eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS CHATEAUBRIAND – Cook artichoke hearts in butter. Fill with thick Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE). Arrange the eggs on the hearts, and mask with concentrated veal stock to which butter has been added.

Eggs à la châtelaine I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CHÂTELAINE – Bake tartlets blind. Garnish with Chestnut purée (see PURÉE) mixed with a quarter of its weight of Onion soubise (see PURÉE). Arrange the eggs on the purée and cover with a poultry Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la châtelaine II (cold). OEUFS À LA CHÂTELAINE – Mask the soft-boiled or poached eggs with Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with pickled tongue and truffles, and glaze with jelly.

Arrange the eggs in a dish lined with a jellied chestnut mousse. Cover with a thin layer of half-set jelly.

Eggs à la Chaville (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA CHAVILLE – Line the ovenproof dish with 1 tablespoon salpicon of mushrooms cooked in butter. Break the eggs into the dish and cook in the usual way. Garnish the cooked eggs with 1 tablespoon Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) to which chopped tarragon has been added.

Chénier eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS CHÉNIER – Make a Rice pilaf (see PILAF) and add saffron. Make it into small cakes and put 1 egg on each. Garnish with sliced aubergines fried in oil. Mask with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la chevalière (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CHEVALIÈRE – Bake a flan case blind. Arrange the eggs around the edge, and garnish the centre of the flan with a ragoût made of cocks' combs, kidneys, and mushrooms, blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Spoon Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) over the eggs. Dip cocks' combs in egg and breadcrumbs and fry them. Put 1 comb between each egg and 1 slice of truffle on each egg.

Eggs à la Chevreuse (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA CHEVREUSE – Pipe a layer of puréed French beans round the edge of a buttered ovenproof dish. Break the eggs into the middle of the dish. Sprinkle with grated cheese and bake.

Eggs à la Chimay (stuffed). OEUFS À LA CHIMAY – Cut hard-boiled eggs lengthwise. Remove the yolks and pound them, adding an equal quantity of dry duxelles (q.v.). Stuff the halved egg whites with this mixture.

Arrange the stuffed eggs in a buttered dish and cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour melted butter over and brown in the oven or under a grill.

Eggs with chipolatas (sur le plat). OEUFS AUX CHIPOLATAS – Line an ovenproof dish with chopped onions softened in butter. Break the eggs onto the onions. Put a grilled chipolata sausage on either side of each yolk and pour melted butter over the dish. Cook in the oven. Surround with concentrated veal stock.

Eggs à la Chivry (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CHIVRY – Arrange the cooked eggs on fried croûtons. Garnish with green asparagus tips cooked in butter. Cover with Chivry sauce (see SAUCE).

Choron eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS CHORON – Make oval croûtons with a deep groove round the edge and deep-fry them in butter. Put the cooked eggs on the croûtons and mask with Cream sauce to which Tomato sauce has been added (see SAUCE).

Pipe a ribbon of thick Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) into the groove round the croûtons. Garnish with small green peas cooked in butter.

Eggs à la Clamart (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CLAMART – Bake tartlets and fill them with Peas à la française (see PEA). Arrange the cooked eggs on the peas and cover with Cream sauce (see SAUCE) to which Green pea butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) has been added.

Eggs à la Clarence (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CLARENCE – Bake tartlets and fill them with a julienne (q.v.) of pickled tongue, truffles, and mushrooms. Arrange the cooked eggs in the tartlets and cover with Réforme sauce (see SAUCE) to which butter has been added.

Garnished eggs en cocotte

Eggs en cocotte with cream. OEUFS EN COCOTTE À LA CRÈME – Put 1 tablespoon boiling cream in the cocottes and break in the eggs. Add a nut of butter to the yolk. Bake in the oven in a bain-marie.

Eggs en cocotte à la duxelles. OEUFS EN COCOTTE À LA DUXELLES – Line buttered cocotte dishes with dry duxelles (q.v.). Break the eggs into the cocottes and bake in the oven in a bain-marie. Remove from the oven and surround the yolks with concentrated veal gravy to which butter has been added.

Eggs en cocotte in gravy. OEUFS EN COCOTTE AU JUS – Cook as for Eggs en cocotte with tarragon (see below) leaving out the tarragon and reducing the veal gravy until it is very concentrated.

Eggs en cocotte au naturel – Cook as described under Eggs en cocotte (see EGGS, Basic egg dishes).

Eggs en cocotte with Parmesan cheese. OEUFS EN COCOTTE AU PARMESAN – Cook as for Eggs en cocotte with cream. Sprinkle grated Parmesan cheese over the eggs and pour melted butter over. Bake in the oven in a bain-marie.

Eggs en cocotte à la périgourdine. OEUFS EN COCOTTE À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Break the eggs into cocottes lined with a purée of foie gras. Put a nut of butter on the yolks. Bake in the oven in a bain-marie. When cooked, surround the yolks with a ring of Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs en cocotte à la rouennaise. OEUFS EN COCOTTE À LA ROUENNAISE – Cook as for Eggs en cocotte à la périgourdine, using a gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) instead of purée of foie gras. Surround with a ring of Wine sauce (see SAUCE) to which butter has been added.

Eggs en cocotte à la strasbourgeoise. OEUFS EN COCOTTE À LA STRASBOURGEOISE – Line the cocottes with chopped truffles, add the eggs, and cook in the oven in a bain-marie. Garnish each cocotte with a knob of foie gras sautéed in butter. Surround with concentrated Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) to which Madeira and butter have been added.

Eggs en cocotte with tarragon. OEUFS EN COCOTTE À L'ESTRAGON – Cook the eggs as described under Eggs en cocotte (see EGGS, Basic egg dishes). When the eggs are cooked, pour a ring of concentrated veal gravy flavoured with tarragon round the yolks. Garnish with blanched tarragon leaves, arranged in a star. The cocottes can be lined with chopped tarragon, if desired.

Eggs en cocotte à la tartare. OEUFS EN COCOTTE À LA TARTARE – Mince raw beef finely. Add chopped chives and season with salt and pepper. Line the cocottes with this mixture and break in the eggs. Pour a ring of fresh cream round the yolks. Bake in the oven in a bain-marie.

Colbert eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS COLBERT – Arrange the cooked eggs in croustades garnished with a macédoine of vegetables blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Mask the eggs with Colbert butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Comtesse eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS COMTESSE – Bake tartlets and garnish them with a salpicon of truffles and mushrooms. Arrange the cooked eggs on top and mask with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with sherry. Put 1 slice of truffle on each egg.

Condé eggs I (sur le plat). OEUFS CONDÉ – Pipe a border of puréed red beans onto a buttered ovenproof dish. Grill or fry two slices of lean bacon and arrange them in the bottom of the dish. Break the eggs on top and cook in the usual way.

Condé eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFS CONDÉ – Bake the eggs as in the recipe above and when cooked garnish with 2 small chicken croquettes. Surround with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs Conti I (sur le plat). OEUFS CONTI – Line a buttered ovenproof dish with 1 tablespoon lentil purée. Break the eggs into the dish and bake in the usual way. 2 thin slices lean bacon, sautéed in butter or grilled, can be added.

Eggs Conti II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS CONTI – Line a pie dish with a thin purée of lentils and arrange the cooked eggs on the purée.

Eggs à la coque – See EGGS, Basic egg dishes.

Egg côtelettes (hard-boiled). OEUFS EN CÔTELETTES – Dice the whites and yolks of hard-boiled eggs and blend with a thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) to which raw yolks of egg have been added. Chill.

Divide this mixture into 50-g. (2-oz.) pieces and shape into cutlets. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry. Arrange in a circle on a dish. Put a frill on each cutlet and garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) or other suitable sauce.

Egg côtelettes (cutlets) can also be served with other garnishes, such as green vegetables with butter or cream, macédoine, tomato fondue, risotto, and different kinds of pasta or purées.

The mixture for egg cutlets may be varied. Diced mushrooms and truffles may be added, or if a meat mixture is preferred, diced ham or diced pickled tongue.

Egg cutlets can be cooked in clarified butter instead of being deep-fried.

Eggs with cream (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA CRÈME – Break the eggs into individual buttered ovenproof dishes. Surround with fresh cream and cook in the usual way.

Alternatively, the cooked eggs can be surrounded with a ribbon of Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs with cream sauce (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CRÈME – Put cooked eggs on croûtons fried in butter, and cover with Cream sauce (see SAUCE). This recipe is also called Eggs à la béchamel.

Eggs à la Crécy I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CRÉCY – Arrange the cooked eggs in a pyramid on a foundation of Carrot purée (see PURÉE). Cover with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la Crécy II (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA CRÉCY – Spread 1 tablespoon Carrot purée (see PURÉE) on the bottom of small buttered ovenproof dishes and break in the eggs. Cook and then surround with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la créole (fried). OEUFS À LA CRÉOLE – Fry the eggs in oil and arrange on grilled courgette halves. Fill the centre of the dish with Rice à la créole (see RICE). Pour Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) over the eggs.

Eggs à la cressonnière I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA CRESSONNIÈRE – Arrange the cooked eggs in a pie dish lined with Watercress purée. Cover with Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Bake in the oven, or with concentrated veal stock to which butter has been added.

Eggs à la cressonnière II (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA CRESSONNIÈRE – Pipe a border of thick Watercress purée (see WATERCRESS) onto a buttered ovenproof dish. Break in the eggs. Surround the yolks with Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Bake in the oven.

Egg croquettes (hard-boiled). OEUFS EN CROQUETTES – Prepare the croquette mixture as for Egg côtelettes binding with White or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

When cold, form the mixture into eggs, or other shapes. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato or Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Daudet eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS DAUDET – Arrange the cooked eggs on puff pastry croustades covered with chopped breast of chicken. Cover with puréed truffles bound with rich White sauce (see SAUCE).

Daumont eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS DAUMONT – Arrange the cooked eggs on large mushrooms cooked in butter and garnished with a salpicon of crayfish tails à la Nantua. Cover with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE). Put a sliver of truffle on each egg.

Delmonico eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS DELMONICO – Coat the cooked eggs with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with chopped truffles, and put them on a croustade of noodles filled with lambs' sweetbreads, mushrooms, and truffles, blended with concentrated Madeira sauce (see SAUCE). Glaze in the oven.

Demi-deuil eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS DEMI-DEUIL – Arrange the cooked eggs in a puff pastry shell filled with mushrooms in cream. Cover with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with diced truffles blended with concentrated Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la diable (fried). OEUFS À LA DIABLE – Fry the eggs in sizzling (nearly brown) butter. Turn them without breaking the yolks. Arrange on a very hot dish. Sprinkle with brown butter and a dash of heated vinegar.

Eggs à la Diane (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA DIANE – Arrange the cooked eggs on hollowed-out slices of bread, fried in butter and garnished with puréed game. Cover with Salmis sauce (see SAUCE) to which diced truffles and butter have been added.

Dino eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS DINO – Arrange the cooked eggs in tartlets lined with finely shredded breast of chicken and cèpes (or small cultivated mushrooms) mixed with cream. Top with Curry sauce (see SAUCE).

Duchess eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA DUCHESSE – Arrange the cooked eggs on oval potato cakes which have been baked golden. Boil down veal stock, add butter to it and pour over the eggs.

Duxelles eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA DUXELLES – Arrange the cooked eggs on oval croûtons cooked in butter and garnished with thin slices of ham tossed in butter. Cover with Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE) with butter added. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Easter eggs. OEUFS DE PÂQUES – Hard-boiled eggs with dyed or painted shells; or sweets made of sugar, chocolate etc., shaped like eggs, which are offered at Easter.

We may owe Easter eggs to the Phoenicians. They believed that night, the beginning of everything, begot an egg from which came love and the human race. Towards Easter the sun reaches the Equator, the long nights pass, the primeval egg breaks, and mankind is re-born.

In the past at Easter people were content simply to exchange dyed or decorated hens' eggs.

The most popular colour for Easter eggs is bright red. In Germany and some parts of France eggs used to be hidden in the garden and children would search for them, rejoicing when they found them in a green nest.

Hard boiled eggs can be dyed in the following ways.

Coral red. Boil salted water for 45 minutes with a dash of lemon juice, a sachet containing 150 g. (5 oz.) cochineal for 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) water, and 50 g. (2 oz.) alum. Cook the eggs in this, keeping them on the boil for 12 minutes. Drain, dip in cold water and dry.

Dark maroon. Cook the eggs, as described above, in water mixed with 250 g. (9 oz.) camwood, and 1 teaspoon each of alum and salt.

Green. Cook the eggs, as described above, in water mixed with spinach which has been scalded, drained and pounded in a mortar.

Yellow. Cook the eggs, as described above, in salted water mixed with yellow onion peel, a pinch of saffron, and a dash of lemon juice.

Modern vegetable dyes make colouring eggs a simple process.

Eggs à l'écarlate I (cold). OEUF À L'ÉCARLATE – Cover soft-boiled or poached eggs with half-set jelly, to which chopped pickled tongue has been added. Arrange the eggs on slices of pickled or smoked tongue. Cover with jelly.

Eggs à l'écarlate II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF À L'ÉCARLATE – Arrange the cooked eggs on croûtons fried in butter. Cover with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) to which butter has been added. Sprinkle with diced, smoked, or pickled tongue.

Eggs à l'écarlate III (sur le plat). OEUF À L'ÉCARLATE – Put 1 tablespoon concentrated Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) into a buttered heatproof dish. Break in the eggs, and sprinkle with finely diced pickled or smoked tongue. Bake until the white is set.

Edward VII eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF EDOUARD VII – Place the cooked eggs on Risotto (see RICE) mixed with diced truffles, alternating the eggs with slivers of pickled or smoked tongue cut in the shape of cocks' combs and heated in sherry. Cover the eggs with concentrated veal stock with butter added, and garnish each with a slice of truffle.

Elisabeth eggs (stuffed). OEUF ELISABETH – Cut off the ends of hard-boiled eggs so they look like barrels. Take out the yolks without breaking the whites.

Rub the yolks through a fine sieve. Mix with an equal quantity of thick Artichoke purée (see PURÉE). Add chopped truffles, and season. Fill the eggs with this mixture, piling it up on top.

Place each egg on an artichoke heart which has been stewed in butter. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter. Brown the top. Arrange the eggs in a crown on a dish. Fill the centre with a Ragoût of truffles (see RAGOÛT) cooked in Madeira.

Esau eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF ESAU – Arrange the cooked eggs in a pyramid on Lentil purée (see PURÉE). Garnish with heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter. Pour concentrated veal stock, with butter added, over the eggs.

Alternatively, arrange the eggs on a croustade of crustless bread, fried, hollowed out, and filled with lentil purée. Cover with concentrated veal stock with butter added.

Eggs à l'espagnole I (cold). OEUF À L'ESPAGNOLE – Cover the cooked eggs with meat jelly to which tomato jelly has been added. Decorate each with a ring of blanched onion. Garnish with a pinch of chopped parsley, and cover with half-set jelly. Arrange the eggs on buttered rounds of toast. Surround with small de-seeded tomatoes dressed with oil, vinegar, salt, and pepper, and filled with diced sweet green pimientos seasoned à la vinaigrette.

Eggs à l'espagnole II (fried). OEUF À L'ESPAGNOLE – Fry the eggs in oil. Arrange them in a crown, alternating with halved tomatoes fried in oil. Fill the centre of the dish with onion rings fried in oil. Pour a ring of Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with a salpicon of sweet pimientos round the eggs.

Eggs à l'espagnole III (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF À L'ESPAGNOLE – Arrange the cooked eggs on tomatoes cooked in oil and filled with a salpicon of sweet pimientos. Fill the centre of the dish with onion rings fried in oil. Cover the eggs with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with red Spanish peppers.

Eggs à l'espagnole IV (sur le plat). OEUF À L'ESPAGNOLE – Line a fireproof dish with 1 tablespoon chopped onion lightly fried in butter and seasoned with red Spanish pepper. Break in the eggs and cook in the usual way. Garnish with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) mixed with diced sweet pimientos cooked in butter.

Favart eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF FAVART – Arrange the cooked eggs in small tartlet cases filled with a salpicon of calves' sweetbreads, truffles and mushrooms, blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Fill the middle with large truffled quenelles. Cover with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la flamande I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF À LA FLAMANDE – Arrange the cooked eggs on a layer of chicory (U.S. Belgian endive) cooked in butter. Cover with Allemande or Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Alternatively, arrange the poached eggs on croûtons fried in butter. Put a head of chicory cooked à la flamande between each egg. Boil down the cooking liquor from the endives, add cream, and bring to the boil. Add fresh butter and pour over the eggs.

Eggs à la flamande II (sur le plat). OEUF À LA FLAMANDE – This name usually means the same as Eggs à la bruxelloise, but poached, soft-boiled, or fried eggs, garnished with hop shoots cooked in butter or cream are also called Eggs à la flamande.

Florentine eggs (soft-boiled, poached, or sur le plat). OEUF À LA FLORENTINE – Arrange the cooked eggs in gratin dishes on a layer of spinach cooked in butter. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and brown in a hot oven.

Eggs à la forestière I (poached). OEUF À LA FORESTIÈRE – Arrange the cooked eggs on croustades filled with morels fried in butter and mixed with fried, diced bacon. Cover the eggs with Chateaubriand sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Eggs à la forestière II (sur le plat). OEUF À LA FORESTIÈRE – Garnish the ovenproof dishes with diced, blanched bacon, lightly fried in butter. Break in the eggs and put 1 tablespoon morels, fried in butter, on each side. Cook in the oven and then season. Pipe Chateaubriand sauce (see SAUCE) round the edges.

Georgette eggs (poached). OEUF GEORGETTE – Partly hollow out a baked potato and put in 1 tablespoon Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH). Add a poached egg and cover with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter. Brown the top in a hot oven.

Grand Duke eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUF GRAND-

Florentine eggs (Robert Carrier)

DUC – Arrange the cooked eggs on oval croûtons fried in butter (or on puff pastry shells) with a sliver of truffle on each. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter. Brown the tops in a hot oven. Garnish with diced truffles and asparagus tips.

Grand Duke eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFs GRAND-DUC – Cover the eggs in their dishes with a light Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter. Cook in a hot oven. Garnish with diced truffles and asparagus tips.

Eggs au gratin (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFs AU GRATIN – Prepare like Mornay eggs (see below).

Halévy eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFs HALÉVY – Arrange the cooked eggs in tartlets baked blind. Garnish with a salpicon of chicken blended with velouté sauce. Cover half with allemande sauce, half with tomato sauce, to which butter has been added.

Hard-boiled eggs with endive. OEUFs DURS SUR CHICORÉE – Arrange the hard-boiled eggs on braised endive cooked in stock or cream. Cover with concentrated veal stock or a light Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Hard-boiled eggs with various garnishes. OEUFs DURS AVEC GARNITURES DIVERSES – Shell the hard-boiled eggs and heat them in salted boiling water. Drain and dry them. Arrange and garnish them as shown in the various recipes.

Hard-boiled eggs on a macédoine of vegetables. OEUFs DURS SUR MACÉDOINE DE LÉGUMES – Arrange the hard-boiled eggs on a macédoine of vegetables blended with butter or cream.

Hard-boiled eggs on various purées. OEUFs DURS SUR PURÉES DIVERSES – Hard-boiled eggs can be served with a purée of asparagus, carrots, celery, mushrooms, chicory, lettuce, chestnuts, sorrel, sweet potato, or Jerusalem artichokes.

Hard-boiled eggs with watercress. OEUFs DURS À LA CRESSONNIÈRE – Arrange the hard-boiled eggs on a bed of Watercress purée (see WATERCRESS). Cover with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs in cups à la hollandaise. OEUFs EN TASSE À LA HOLLANDAISE – Butter 3 teacups and coat the insides with grated cheese. Add a layer of diced ham to each cup and pour in 1 egg whisked as for an omelette. Cover with a layer of ham and top with a thick layer of cheese. Cook for 12 minutes in a bain-marie. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à l'italienne I (fried). OEUFs À L'ITALIENNE – Fry eggs in oil and arrange in a crown on a round dish. Alternate with thin slices of ham sautéed in butter. Pour Italian sauce (see SAUCE) over the eggs.

Eggs à l'italienne II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFs À L'ITALIENNE – Fry slices of crustless bread in butter and spread with a salpicon of chopped ham blended with a Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Arrange the cooked eggs on top and pour Italian sauce (see SAUCE) with butter added, over the eggs. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Eggs à l'italienne III (sur le plat or en cocotte). OEUFs À L'ITALIENNE – Line buttered fireproof dishes or cocottes with in a bain-marie

lean, chopped ham. Break in the eggs and cook in the usual way. Pour a ring of Italian sauce (see SAUCE) round the eggs.

Jeannette eggs (en cocotte). OEUFS JEANNETTE EN COCOTTE – Line a cocotte with a layer of chicken Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Break in the eggs and cook in the usual way. Garnish with asparagus tips. Surround with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Jellied eggs à la française. OEUFS GLACÉS À LA FRANÇAISE – See Eggs as a border IV.

Jellied tarragon eggs, also called à la Chartres. OEUFS À L'ESTRAGON À LA GELÉE, À LA CHARTRES – Line moulds shaped like half an egg, or dariole moulds, with white tarragon-flavoured meat jelly. Decorate with blanched tarragon leaves. Arrange the eggs (poached or soft-boiled) in the moulds and fill them with jelly. Leave on ice to set.

Turn the eggs out and arrange them in a crown formation. Fill the centre with chopped jelly. Decorate with jelly croûtons.

Alternatively, decorate the cooked eggs with tarragon leaves and glaze with jelly. Arrange them in a deep dish on thin slices of cooked ham. Cover with half-set jelly. Chill on ice before serving. This is the method most often used in restaurants.

Poached or soft-boiled eggs can also be arranged in individual cassolettes lined with thin slices of ham and filled with jelly.

Jockey-club eggs (sur le plat). OEUFS JOCKEY-CLUB – Cook the eggs sur le plat. Trim with a cutter, leaving only a thin band of white. Place the eggs on grilled croûtons spread with purée of foie gras and arrange in a crown formation. Fill the middle of the dish with sliced calf's kidney sautéed in Madeira. Top each egg with a sliver of truffle.

Egg kromesgies (hard-boiled). OEUFS EN CROMESQUIS – Prepare an egg croquette mixture, as for Egg côtelettes, adding truffles and mushrooms. Bind with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE), allowing  $3\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) for 500 g. (18 oz.) salpicon. Leave the mixture to cool.

Divide into small portions and make them into oval or cork-shaped cakes. Dip in a light batter and fry in deep fat. Drain, and season with fine salt. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Egg kromesgies à la polonaise. OEUFS EN CROMESQUIS À LA POLONAISE – Prepare the mixture as above and divide into small portions when cold. Shape into rectangles. Wrap each one in a thin crêpe (pancake). Dip in a light batter and fry in deep fat. Serve with Tomato or Piquante sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la languedocienne (fried). OEUFS À LA LANGUE-

DOCIENNE – Fry the eggs in oil. Arrange each on a slice of aubergine fried in oil. Fill the middle of the dish with garlic-flavoured Tomato fondue. Dot with Noisette butter (see BUTTER. Compound butters).

Eggs à la lorraine (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA LORRAINE – Line a buttered ovenproof dish with thin rashers of grilled bacon and slivers of Gruyère cheese. Break in the eggs. Pour a ring of fresh cream round the yolks and bake in the oven.

Lucullus eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS LUCULLUS – Arrange each cooked egg on an artichoke heart cooked in butter and garnished with a salpicon of lambs' sweetbreads, truffles, and mushrooms, bound with concentrated Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Cover the eggs with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) to which coarsely diced truffles have been added. Put diced foie gras which has been seasoned with salt and pepper and tossed in butter in the centre of the dish. Alternate the eggs with cocks' combs à la Villeroi.

Eggs à la maraîchère (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA MARAÎCHÈRE – Line an ovenproof dish with 1 tablespoon chiffonnade (q.v.) of lettuce, sorrel, and chervil, tossed in butter. Break in the eggs. Add a thin rasher of bacon sautéed in butter. Bake in the usual way.

Marianne eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS MARIANNE – Arrange the cooked eggs on de-seeded tomato halves cooked in butter and filled with thick Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Top each egg with a slice of black Madagascar potato cooked in butter, and coat with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) mixed with dissolved meat jelly.

Marivaux eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS MARIVAUX – Garnish a flan case, baked blind, with a salpicon of mushrooms and truffles. Arrange the cooked eggs in the flan. Pour concentrated Madeira-flavoured Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) with butter added, over the eggs.

Masséna eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS MASSÉNA – Place each cooked egg on an artichoke heart cooked in butter and garnished with thick Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE). Top each with a slice of poached marrowbone fat. Surround with Marrow sauce I (see SAUCE) and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Massenet eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS MASSENET – Put the cooked eggs into croustades made of Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES) and filled with a salpicon of French beans dressed with butter. Cover with Marrow sauce I (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Eggs à la ménagère (fried). OEUFS À LA MÉNAGÈRE – Fry the eggs in butter. Arrange them on a bed of stock pot vegetables, sliced and sautéed in butter. Surround with a ring of Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Meyerbeer eggs (sur le plat). OEUFS MEYERBEER – Garnish cooked eggs with grilled lamb's kidney. Surround with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la milanaise (fried). OEUFS À LA MILANAISE – Fry the eggs in oil. Arrange in a dish on a bed of Macaroni à la milanaise (see MACARONI), and surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Mirette eggs (poached). OEUFS MIRETTE – Poach the yolks only. Place each in a tartlet case baked blind and garnished with a salpicon of chicken breast and truffles blended with Madeira-flavoured thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Pour Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) over the eggs.

Miroir eggs. OEUFS MIROIR – Another name for eggs sur le plat.

Monselet eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS MONSELET – Arrange the cooked eggs on artichoke hearts cooked in butter. Cover with chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), mixed with one third of its volume of veal stock and the same quantity of cream, flavoured with sherry and boiled down. Garnish with diced truffles cooked in butter, and small potato croquettes.

Montrouge eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS MONTROUGE – Arrange the cooked eggs in tartlet cases baked blind, and garnished with Mushroom purée (see PURÉE). Cover with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Montrouge eggs II (sur le plat or en cocotte). OEUFS MONTROUGE – Butter the ovenproof dishes and pipe a border of Mushroom purée (see PURÉE) through a forcing bag. Break in the eggs. Surround the yolks with fresh cream. Bake in the oven.

Alternatively, break the eggs into a cocotte lined with Mushroom purée (see PURÉE). Surround the yolks with fresh cream. Cook in the oven, in a bain-marie.

Mornay eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS MORNAY – Arrange the cooked eggs in a fireproof dish on a layer of Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) or on croûtons fried in butter. Cover with Mornay sauce. Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter. Brown the top in the oven.

Mornay eggs sur le plat

Mornay eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFS MORNAY – Break the eggs into an ovenproof dish lined with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Cover with the sauce. Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and brown in the oven.

Eggs à la Nantua I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA NANTUA – Arrange the cooked eggs in tartlets filled with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH). Cover with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE). Top each egg with a sliver of truffle.

Eggs à la Nantua II (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA NANTUA – Fill a buttered ovenproof dish with crayfish tails. Break in the eggs and cook in the oven. Put a sliver of truffle on each yolk. Cover with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs with noisette butter (sur le plat). OEUFS AU BEURRE NOISETTE – Heat the butter in a flameproof dish until light brown or noisette. Break the eggs into the heated butter and bake in the usual way.

Eggs à la normande (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA NORMANDE – Arrange the cooked eggs on puff pastry crostades, filled with a salpicon of mussels, mushrooms and shrimps' tails, bound with Normande sauce (see SAUCE). Put a poached and debearded oyster on each egg. Cover with Normande sauce. Top each egg with a sliver of truffle.

Omelette – See under separate heading at the end of this section.

Eggs opéra (sur le plat). OEUFS OPÉRA – Garnish the cooked eggs on one side with sliced chicken livers sautéed in Madeira, and on the other with asparagus tips. Surround with a ring of boiled-down veal stock, with butter added.

Eggs à la parisienne (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA PARISIENNE – Break the eggs into ovenproof dishes lined with chicken forcemeat mixed with pickled smoked tongue, truffles, and chopped mushrooms. Cook in the usual way. Surround with a ring of Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Parmentier eggs I. OEUFS PARMENTIER – Bake 4 large potatoes in the oven. Halve them and scoop out the pulp, taking care not to break the skin. Blend the pulp with butter and cream, and season. Line the potato skins with this pulp, and break 1 egg into each half. Sprinkle with cream and bake in the oven.

Alternatively, prepare the potatoes as described above, and put a poached egg into each potato half. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter and brown the top in the oven.

Parmentier eggs II (sur le plat). OEUFS PARMENTIER – Butter an ovenproof dish and line with diced potatoes, fried in butter. Break in the eggs. Surround with a ring of cream and cook in the oven.

Eggs à la Polignac (in moulds). OEUFS À LA POLIGNAC – Break the eggs into buttered individual dariole moulds, with a sliver of truffle in each. Cook in a bain-marie. Unmould the eggs onto croûtons fried in butter. Top with Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) mixed with dissolved meat jelly.

Eggs à la portugaise I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA PORTUGAISE – Arrange each cooked egg on a tomato half which has been cooked in oil. Cover with Portugaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la portugaise II (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA PORTUGAISE – Break each egg into a buttered ovenproof dish on 1 tablespoon Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Cook in the oven.

Princess eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS PRINCESSE – Arrange the cooked eggs on croûtons or in puff pastry crostades. Cover with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with asparagus tips and chicken breasts shredded into julienne strips. Top each egg with a sliver of truffle.

Eggs à la printanière I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA PRINTANIÈRE – Arrange the cooked eggs on a puff pastry base covered with a printanière (q.v.) of vegetables dressed with cream. Prepare Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) with Printanier butter added. Pour over the eggs. Garnish with asparagus tips in butter.

Eggs à la printanière II (cold). OEUFS À LA PRINTANIÈRE – Arrange the eggs (soft-boiled or poached) on a bed of macédoine (q.v.) of vegetables dressed with mayonnaise strengthened with gelatine. Garnish with green asparagus tips. Decorate the eggs with tarragon leaves. Cover with half-set jelly.

Eggs à la provençale I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA PROVENÇALE – Arrange each cooked egg on a halved tomato cooked in oil. Cover with clear, garlic-flavoured Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Garnish with coarsely diced aubergines fried in oil. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Eggs à la provençale II (sur le plat). OEUFS À LA PROVENÇALE – Rub individual ovenproof dishes with garlic and line them with slices of aubergines fried in oil. Break in the eggs and bake in the oven. Pour a ring of Provençale sauce (see SAUCE), round the yolks.

Eggs à la provençale III (fried). OEUFS À LA PROVENÇALE – Fry the eggs in oil and arrange each one on a halved tomato fried in oil. Garnish with slices of aubergine, fried in oil, and fried parsley.

Eggs à la provençale IV (fried). OEUFS À LA PROVENÇALE – Spread thinly sliced aubergines, fried in oil, on a dish. Alternate with halved tomatoes, pressed, seeded, and fried in oil. Arrange fried eggs on this layer, and sprinkle with sizzling butter to which 1 tablespoon chopped parsley mixed with chopped garlic has been added.

Eggs à la provençale V (glazed in jelly). OEUFS À LA PROVENÇALE – Coat the eggs (soft-boiled or poached) with tomato-flavoured, gelatine-strengthened mayonnaise. Decorate with tarragon leaves and glaze with jelly. Arrange each egg on a halved tomato, which has been seeded, steeped in oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, stuffed with diced potatoes and aubergines, and dressed with garlic-flavoured mayonnaise. Arrange the eggs in a crown and garnish with chopped parsley.

Rachel eggs (fried). OEUFS RACHEL – Fry the eggs in butter. Trim with a round pastry-cutter, leaving only a thin band of white.

Arrange each egg on a slice of bread fried in butter. Cover with Marrow sauce (see SAUCE). Top with a thin slice of marrow.

Eggs à la reine I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA REINE – Arrange the cooked eggs in tartlets filled with Chicken purée (see PURÉE), and cover with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la reine II (sur le plat or en cocotte). OEUFS À LA REINE – Butter the ovenproof egg dishes or cocottes and pipe a border of Chicken purée (see PURÉE) through a forcing-bag. Break in the eggs. Surround the yolks with thick chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) with cream. Cook in the oven.

Eggs à la romaine (fried). OEUFS À LA ROMAINE – Fry the eggs in oil. Toss chopped spinach in Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and mix with diced anchovies. Arrange the eggs on top, and sprinkle with more noisette butter.

Rossini eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS ROSSINI – Arrange each cooked egg on a slice of foie gras sautéed in butter. Top with 2 slices of truffle tossed in butter. Cover with Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Alternatively, arrange the eggs in puff pastry tartlets lined with coarsely diced foie gras. Garnish with slivers of truffles. Boil down a Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), add butter, and pour over the eggs.

Rossini eggs II (sur le plat or en cocotte). OEUFS ROSSINI – Break the eggs into buttered ovenproof dishes or cocottes lined with a salpicon of foie gras and truffles. Bake in the oven. Surround with concentrated Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) with butter added.

Rothomago eggs (sur le plat). OEUFS ROTHOMAGO – Line the ovenproof dishes with slices of ham tossed in butter. Break in the eggs and cook in the usual way. Garnish with grilled chipolata sausages. Surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la royale (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA ROYALE – Arrange the cooked eggs on puff pastry cases filled with a salpicon of truffles blended with concentrated Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Cover with chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with puréed truffles diluted with cream and flavoured with Madeira.

Eggs à la Saint-Hubert (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA SAINT-HUBERT – Arrange the cooked eggs in a pie dish on a layer of minced venison or any other game. Cover with game Poivrade sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with puff pastry crescents or heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter.

Scotch eggs I (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À L'ÉCOSSAISE – Arrange the cooked eggs on puff pastry croûtes covered with Salmon purée (see PURÉE). Cover with Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate each egg with a sliver of truffle.

Scotch eggs II (cold). OEUFS À L'ÉCOSSAISE – Make a forcemeat using finely minced cooked ham, 2 to 3 pounded anchovy fillets and enough fresh breadcrumbs to give 'body'. Season with salt, pepper, and mixed spices. Bind with raw egg and blend well. Shell hard-boiled eggs and coat each with the forcemeat. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry in hot fat.

Scrambled eggs – See EGGS, Basic egg dishes.

Scrambled eggs à l'américaine. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À L'AMÉRICAIN – Add to the scrambled eggs, diced bacon fried in butter. Garnish with rashers of grilled bacon and halved grilled tomatoes.

The same name is used for scrambled eggs with sliced lobster or spiny lobster à l'américaine. Recipes for these dishes will be found under Scrambled eggs à l'armoricaine (see below).

Scrambled eggs à l'ancienne. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À L'ANCIENNE – Add mushrooms and diced truffles tossed in butter, to the scrambled eggs. Arrange in a flan case baked blind. Garnish with cocks' kidneys in sherry-flavoured Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) with cream. Surround with cocks' combs à la Villeroi and sherry-flavoured Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Scrambled eggs à l'antiboise. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À L'ANTIBOISE – Arrange scrambled eggs in a deep ovenproof dish, alternating with sliced courgettes sautéed in oil, and with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Finish with a layer of eggs. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter. Brown in a hot oven.

Scrambled eggs Argenteuil. OEUFS BROUILLÉS ARGENTEUIL – Garnish the scrambled eggs with white asparagus tips, half cooked in salted water and then simmered in butter. Surround with Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with croûtons fried in butter.

Scrambled eggs à l'arlésienne. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À L'ARLÉSIENNE – Scramble the eggs with garlic-flavoured Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Cook courgettes in butter. Halve them, remove the pulp and mix the chopped pulp with the scrambled eggs. Fill the halved courgette skins with the scrambled egg mixture and put them in a buttered fire-proof dish. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter. Brown the top. Surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Scrambled eggs à l'armoricaine. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À L'ARMORICAINE – Arrange the scrambled eggs in a deep dish, alternating with a salpicon of Lobster or Spiny lobster à l'américaine (see LOBSTER). Put slices of lobster or spiny lobster on the eggs and surround with American sauce (see SAUCE).

Scrambled eggs with artichokes. OEUFS BROUILLÉS AUX ARTICHAUTS – Mix the scrambled eggs with cooked artichoke hearts, sliced or diced, and sautéed in butter.

Garnish with sliced artichoke hearts sautéed in butter, and bread croûtons fried in butter. Surround with concentrated veal stock.

Scrambled eggs à la Bercy. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À LA BERCY – Arrange the scrambled eggs in a deep dish. Garnish with chipolata sausages, grilled or cooked in butter. Surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Scrambled eggs with cèpes. OEUFS BROUILLÉS AUX CÈPES – Sauté sliced cèpes in butter or oil. Add them to the scrambled eggs. Arrange in a deep dish, with the cèpes in the middle. Garnish with croûtons fried in butter. Surround with concentrated veal stock.

Scrambled eggs with chicken livers. OEUFS BROUILLÉS AUX FOIES DE VOLAILLE – Heap the scrambled eggs on a heated dish. Garnish with sliced chicken livers, sautéed in butter and bound with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Scrambled eggs Clamart. OEUFS BROUILLÉS CLAMART – Mix the eggs with Peas à la française (see PEA). Garnish with more peas.

Scrambled eggs with crayfish. OEUFS BROUILLÉS AUX ÉCREVISSES – Prepare as Scrambled eggs with shrimps (see below) using crayfish tails and Nantua sauce (see SAUCE).

Scrambled eggs 'l'échelle'. OEUFS BROUILLÉS 'L'ÉCHELLE' – Prepare scrambled eggs with cheese. Butter an earthenware dish and line it with croûtons of crustless bread fried in butter. Cover with thick slices of truffles heated in butter and seasoned with salt and pepper. Put the eggs in the dish.

Smooth the surface and sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter. Brown the top.

Scrambled eggs à l'espagnole I. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À L'ESPAGNOLE – Fill halved, seeded tomatoes, cooked in oil, with scrambled eggs and a salpicon of sweet peppers. Garnish with onion rings fried in oil.

Scrambled eggs à l'espagnole II. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À L'ESPAGNOLE – Garnish the scrambled eggs with diced tomatoes cooked in oil and mixed with a salpicon of sweet pimientos. Top with onion rings fried in oil.

Scrambled eggs à la forestière. OEUFS BROUILLÉS À LA FORESTIÈRE – Garnish the scrambled eggs with morels fried in butter with chopped shallot and diced lean bacon. Top with a mound of morels. Surround with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Scrambled eggs Georgette. OEUFS BROUILLÉS GEORGETTE – Bake large potatoes. Scoop out three-quarters of the pulp and fill with scrambled egg. Garnish with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH).

Scrambled eggs with ham or bacon. OEUFS BROUILLÉS AU JAMBON, AU LARD MAIGRE (OU BACON) – Add to the scrambled eggs, diced ham or bacon, blanched and lightly fried. Top with slices of lightly fried ham or rashers of bacon.

Scrambled eggs Saint-Hubert. OEUFS BROUILLÉS SAINT-HUBERT – Garnish the scrambled eggs with game purée bound with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), based on concentrated game stock.

Scrambled eggs with a salpicon of lobster, spiny lobster or other shellfish. OEUFS BROUILLÉS AU SALPICON DE HOMARD (DE LANGOUSTE ETC.) – As Scrambled eggs with shrimps (see below) using a salpicon of the shellfish indicated. Serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE) with white wine. Finish with the butter appropriate to the particular shellfish.

Scrambled eggs with shrimps. OEUFS BROUILLÉS AUX CREVETTES – Add peeled shrimps' tails, heated in butter, to the scrambled eggs. Garnish the top with a mound of shrimps' tails heated in butter or in Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE). Surround with croûtons fried in butter. Pour a ring of shrimp sauce round the eggs.

Scrambled eggs with truffles. OEUFS BROUILLÉS AUX TRUFFES – Prepare the scrambled eggs in the usual manner. When cooked, add the truffles, diced and tossed in butter. (Either fresh or canned truffles can be used.) Heap on a warm platter and garnish with slices of truffles and croûtons cut to look like wolves' teeth.

Séigné eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS SÉIGNÉ – Place each cooked egg on half a braised lettuce. Cover with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE). Top each egg with a sliver of truffle.

Eggs with shrimps I (shirred). OEUFS AUX CREVETTES – Bake the eggs in a buttered ovenproof dish with 1 tablespoon shrimp tails. Surround with Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs with shrimps II (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS AUX CREVETTES – Line tartlets, baked blind, with shrimps blended with Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE). Arrange the eggs on this mixture and cover with the sauce.

Eggs with shrimps III (cold). OEUFS AUX CREVETTES – Coat dariole moulds with fish aspic jelly (see ASPIC). Line the sides with shrimps' tails. Pour over liquid jelly to set them. Place a soft-boiled egg in each mould. Fill with jelly and chill on ice.

Unmould the eggs onto grilled croûtons spread with Shrimp butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Arrange in a crown. Garnish with diced potatoes and shrimps' tails. Dress with mayonnaise strengthened with gelatine.

Decorate the top of each egg with three shrimps' tails arranged to look like a plume. Surround the croûtons with fish aspic jelly.

Snow eggs (Nicolas)

Snow eggs. OEUFS À LA NEIGE – Whisk egg whites and add sugar, as for a meringue. Take as much of the meringue mixture as 1 tablespoon will hold, which will give them an egg shape, and drop spoonful by spoonful into a saucepan of boiling milk sweetened with sugar and flavoured with vanilla. Poach the eggs, turning them so they cook evenly. When they are firm, drain in a fine sieve.

Use the milk left to make Custard cream (see CREAMS). Leave to cool.

Arrange the eggs in a dish and pour the custard over them.

Eggs à la soubise (hard-boiled). OEUFS DURS À LA SOUBISE – Arrange hard-boiled eggs on Onion soubise (see PURÉE). Cover with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Spanish eggs – See Eggs à l'espagnole.

Stanley eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS STANLEY – Arrange the cooked eggs in tartlet cases baked blind and filled with Onion soubise (see PURÉE). Cover with Curry sauce (see SAUCE).

Tarragon eggs (shirred). OEUFS À L'ESTRAGON – Break the eggs into a buttered ovenproof dish containing 1 tablespoon tarragon-flavoured veal stock. Cook until the whites are set. Surround with more stock. Decorate with blanched tarragon.

Tarragon eggs, also called eggs à la Chartres (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À L'ESTRAGON, À LA CHARTRES – Arrange the cooked eggs on croûtons fried in butter. Cover them with tarragon-flavoured veal stock. Decorate with tarragon leaves, blanched and well drained.

Eggs à la tripe, also called eggs à la béchamel soubisée (hard-boiled). OEUFS À LA TRIPE, À LA BÉCHAMEL SOUBISÉE – Cut hard-boiled eggs into quarters or thick round slices. Arrange in a pie dish. Cover with Soubise sauce (see SAUCE).

Verdier eggs (stuffed). OEUFS VERDIER – Sieve hard-boiled egg yolks and mix with cooked foie gras. Stuff the halves of egg white with this mixture.

Arrange in a gratin dish on a layer of sliced onions cooked in butter, blended with 1 tablespoon Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), and seasoned with curry.

Cover with béchamel sauce mixed with a julienne of truffles. Sprinkle with Parmesan. Brown in a hot oven.

Victoria eggs (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS VICTORIA – Arrange the cooked eggs in puff pastry cases lined with a salpicon of spiny lobster, or lobster, and truffles, bound with Victoria sauce (see SAUCE). Top each egg with a slice of lobster and a slice of truffle.

Eggs à la Villeroi (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA VILLEROI – Small cooked eggs are used for this dish. Coat with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) and leave to get cold. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry. Arrange in a crown. Garnish with fried parsley and serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs à la Zingara (soft-boiled or poached). OEUFS À LA ZINGARA – Arrange the cooked eggs on oval croûtons fried in butter and covered with a thin slice of lean ham. Coat with Zingara sauce (see SAUCE).

OMELETTE – The etymology of this word is uncertain. It may have been derived from amelette, a corruption of alemette, derived from alemelle or alumette.

The name ova mellita was used by the Ancient Romans for eggs beaten with honey and cooked in an earthenware dish. This derivation seems more logical.

Recipes for sweet (dessert) omelettes will be found at the end of this section. The recipe for basic omelettes appears under EGGS, Basic egg dishes.

Filled omelettes. OMELETTES FOURRÉES – Omelettes, before being folded, can be filled with various mixtures (force-meat, purée, salpicon), as indicated in individual recipes. The garnish should be hot, and folded carefully into the omelette.

Flat omelettes. OMELETTES PLATES – These are cooked in butter or other fat, and made flat like a thick pancake.

Garnished omelettes. OMELETTES GARNIES – The garnish, as indicated in individual recipes, can either be added while the eggs are being beaten, or put in the omelette when folding it. In addition to the inside filling, a little of the garnish is usually put on top of the omelette.

Agnes Sorel omelette. OMELETTE AGNÈS SOREL – Fill the omelette with sliced mushrooms which have been sautéed in butter and bound with Chicken purée (see PURÉE). Decorate the top with slices of pickled or smoked tongue. Boil down some veal stock, add butter, and pour round the omelette.

Omelette Albina – Add diced truffles to the eggs during beating. Cook the omelette in the usual way and fill with thick Chicken purée (see PURÉE). Pour Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with cream round the omelette.

Omelette à l'alsacienne – Cook the omelette in goose fat, and fill with braised, well drained sauerkraut. Cover the omelette with thin slices of ham and surround with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Anchovy omelette. OMELETTE AUX ANCHOIS – Rub the fillets of desalted anchovy through a sieve, and add to the beaten eggs. Cook the omelette as usual. Cut desalted anchovy filets into thin strips and place on top.

Omelette André-Theuriet – Fill the omelette with morels à la crème. Serve garnished with asparagus tips lightly cooked in butter, and with slivers of truffle tossed in the same butter. Surround with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Archduke omelette. OMELETTE ARCHIDUC – Add chopped onion, lightly fried in butter and seasoned with paprika, to the seasoned beaten eggs before cooking. Garnish with slivers of truffle heated in butter, and surround with a paprika sauce.

Omelette Argenteuil – Fill the cooked omelette with white or green asparagus tips lightly cooked in butter, and put 1 tablespoon asparagus tips on top. Surround with Allemande sauce or Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Artichoke omelette. OMELETTE AUX ARTICHAUTS – Add to the eggs, when beating, artichoke hearts which have been half-cooked then sliced and sautéed in butter. Cook. Garnish with a few of the artichoke hearts. Serve with concentrated veal stock with a little butter added.

Omelette with asparagus tips. OMELETES AUX POINTES D'ASPERGES – Mix diced asparagus tips, which have been tossed in butter, into the beaten eggs. Garnish the cooked omelette with asparagus tips and sprinkle with melted butter.

Aubergine omelette. OMELETTE AUX AUBERGINES – Place slices of fried aubergine on the cooked omelette and surround with Demi-glace sauce or Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Bacon omelette. OMELETTE AU BACON – Add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) diced bacon, lightly fried in butter, to the beaten egg. Garnish the cooked omelette with thin rashers of cooked bacon.

Omelette à la Bérey – Add chopped finest herbes to the beaten egg. Garnish the cooked omelette with grilled or sautéed chipolata sausages, and surround with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la bigourdane – Fill the omelette with diced truffles and diced foie gras. Serve with Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Bone-marrow omelette. OMELETTE À LA MOELLE – Flat. Garnish the cooked omelette with slices of bone-marrow fat, poached in salt water and drained. Spoon a little liquid meat jelly over each slice of marrow and serve with Marrow sauce (see SAUCE).

Fluffy. Fill the omelette with a salpicon of bone-marrow fat bound with marrow sauce. Garnish with slices of marrow which have been poached in salted water and drained. Serve with marrow sauce.

Omelette à la bouchère – Fill the omelette with diced bone-marrow fat, poached and bound with liquid meat jelly. Put a row of poached marrow slices on top, and spoon liquid meat jelly over the omelette.

Omelette à la bruxelloise – Cook very small Brussels sprouts in salted water until three-quarters done. Drain, dry, and fry in butter. Stir the sprouts into beaten eggs before making the omelette. Surround with concentrated veal stock.

Carrot omelette – See Omelette à la Crécy.

Omelette with cèpes. OMELETTE AUX CÈPES – Add sliced cèpes (which have been fried in butter or oil) and chopped parsley to the beaten eggs. Top the cooked omelette with cèpes.

Omelette chasseur – Fill the omelette with sautéed chicken livers mixed with sliced mushrooms. Garnish the cooked omelette with the same ingredients. Serve with Chasseur sauce (see SAUCE) and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Omelette à la châtelaine – Fill the omelette with braised and mashed chestnuts bound with concentrated veal stock. Serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette with chervil. OMELETTE AU CERFEUIL BULBEUX – Add chopped turnip-rooted chervil, cooked in butter, and some chopped chervil, to the beaten eggs.

Chicken liver omelette. OMELETTE AUX FOIES DE VOLAILLE – Fill the omelette with sliced chicken livers which have been sautéed briskly in butter and bound with concentrated Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Top the cooked omelette with chicken livers, as above, and serve with Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette Choisy – Fill the omelette with Chiffonade of lettuce with cream (see LETTUCE). Serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette Clamart – Fill the omelette with Peas à la française (see PEA) keeping the mixture rather thick. When serving, put 1 tablespoon of the mixture on top of the cooked omelette.

Courgette omelette. OMELETTE AUX COURGETTES – Flat. Cut the courgettes in thin slices and sauté in butter. Beat the eggs with chopped parsley, season with salt and pepper, and pour over the marrows in the pan.

Fluffy. Fill the omelette with the diced courgettes sautéed in butter or oil and mixed with chopped parsley.

Omelette à la Crécy – Fill the omelette with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) thick Carrot purée (see PURÉE). Decorate the top with a row of sliced carrots cooked in butter. Serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette with croûtons. OMELETTE AUX CROÛTONS – Flat. Fry diced bread in butter. Beat the eggs with chopped parsley and pour over the croûtons. Make the omelette as a pancake.

Fluffy. Fry diced bread in butter and add to the eggs while beating them, together with chopped parsley. Make the omelette in the usual way.

Omelette Diane – Add seasoned sliced mushrooms, fried in butter, to the beaten egg. Fill the omelette with a salpicon of partridge or any other winged game, and truffles, bound with concentrated Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on game fumet (q.v.). Garnish the cooked omelette with a row of truffle slices tossed in butter. Serve with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) based on game stock.

Diplomat omelette. OMELETTE DIPLOMATE – Make a flat omelette with 3 eggs. Cover with a layer of lobster and truffle salpicon bound with Béchéamel sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with lobster butter and brandy.

Top this omelette with another 3-egg omelette, keeping it creamy. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with lobster butter. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter, and brown in a hot oven.

Omelette Du Barry – Boil cauliflower flowerets in salted water. Drain, and fry in clarified butter. Pour in the eggs, beaten with chopped chervil and seasoned with salt and pepper. Make a pancake omelette and serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la duxelles – Fill the omelette with duxelles (q.v.) mixture to which diced ham has been added. Serve with tomato-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la fermière – Add to the beaten eggs 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) of a paysanne (q.v.) of vegetables composed of sliced carrots, onions and celery, lightly fried in butter and seasoned with salt, pepper, and chopped parsley.

Fry 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) diced lean ham lightly in butter, pour the egg mixture over, and make a flat omelette.

Omelette à la flamande – Fill the omelette with shredded chicory (U.S. Belgian endive) cooked in butter and bound with cream. Serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette Feydeau – Make a creamy omelette, keeping it rather liquid. Fill with Mushroom purée (see PURÉE).

Omelette Feydeau

Place a row of soft-boiled eggs on the cooked omelette. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with a julienne of truffles. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and brown the top.

Omelettes aux fines herbes – Add to the beaten eggs, chopped parsley, chervil, tarragon, and spring onion or chives. There should be enough of these herbs to make the omelette green.

Omelette à la florentine – Fill the omelette with leaf spinach cooked in butter. Serve with a light Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and brown quickly.

Omelette à la forestière – Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) diced lean bacon, fried in butter, to the beaten eggs. Fill the omelette with morels which have been sautéed in butter, bound with concentrated veal stock, and sprinkled with chopped parsley. Serve with veal stock to which has been added a little butter.

Omelette à la gasconne – Add to the beaten eggs diced unsmoked ham, thinly sliced onions lightly fried in butter, chopped garlic and parsley. Make a flat omelette.

Omelette à la grecque – Add to the beaten eggs chopped onion lightly fried in butter, and diced sweet pimentos. Make 2 flat omelettes, spreading a layer of mutton hash between them. Serve with garlic-flavoured Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) and sprinkle with chopped parsley and Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Ham omelette. OMELETTE AU JAMBON – As Bacon omelette, using diced lean ham.

Omelette with hop shoots. OMELETTE AUX JETS DE HOUBLON – Fill the omelette with hop shoots à la crème. Serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Hungarian omelette. OMELETTE À LA HONGROISE – Fry diced unsmoked lean ham lightly in butter. Add an equal quantity of diced onions, also fried in butter. Season with paprika. Add this mixture to the beaten eggs and make a flat pancake. Serve with Hungarian sauce (see SAUCE).

Japanese omelette. OMELETTE À LA JAPONAISE – Fill the omelette with Chinese artichokes cooked in butter and sprinkled with chopped parsley. Serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la jardinière – Cook carrots, turnips, French beans, peas, potatoes, etc. in water or stock. Drain, and fry lightly in butter. Add to the beaten eggs and make a flat omelette. Garnish with cooked asparagus tips and cauliflower flowerets, and serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la jurassienne – Add scalded, diced lean bacon, lightly fried in butter, and chopped spring onions to the beaten eggs. Fill the omelette with sorrel which has been cooked in butter.

Kidney omelette. OMELETTE AUX ROGNONS – Sauté diced calf's or lamb's kidneys in butter and bind with Madeira-flavoured, concentrated Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Lobster omelette. OMELETTE AU HOMARD – Prepare as Shrimp omelette (see below), using a salpicon of lobster bound with Lobster sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la lorraine – Add to the beaten eggs diced lean bacon sautéed in butter, shredded Gruyère cheese, and chopped spring onion. Make a flat omelette.

Omelette Louis Forest – Beat the eggs with diced truffles cooked in butter, and make 2 flat omelettes. Spread one of them with slices of fresh foie gras sautéed in butter, and cover with the second omelette. Spoon over 1 tablespoon concentrated, Madeira-flavoured veal stock, and sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Omelette à la lyonnaise – Add to the beaten eggs finely chopped onions, lightly fried in butter, and chopped parsley. Make a flat omelette. Sprinkle on the omelette a few drops of vinegar heated in the same pan, and pour over it Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Omelette Maintenon – Fill the omelette with a salpicon of chicken, truffles, and mushrooms, bound with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) diluted with cream. Keep the omelette creamy when cooking it. Cover with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) with onion, sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter, and brown in the oven.

Omelette à la ménagère – Cut left-over pieces of beef into dice and fry lightly in butter. Add an equal quantity of diced onion, also cooked in butter. Beat the eggs with chopped parsley, season with salt and pepper, mix with the other ingredients, and make a flat omelette.

Omelette Mistral. Fry diced aubergines in oil. Fry diced tomatoes lightly in butter, add chopped parsley and a pinch of garlic, and mix with the aubergines. Add this mixture to the beaten eggs and make a flat omelette.

Omelette Monselet – Fill the omelette with a salpicon of artichoke hearts and truffles à la crème. Garnish with slivers of truffles heated in butter. Serve with Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette Montbry – Beat the eggs with grated horseradish, chopped spring onions, parsley, and seasoning. Make 2 flat omelettes. Spread one with a salpicon of celeriac bound with Cream sauce (see SAUCE) and seasoned with paprika. Cover with the second omelette. Spoon light Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) over them, sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter, and brown under the grill or in a hot oven.

Omelette with morels. OMELETTE AUX MORILLES – Add to the eggs (while beating them) morels sautéed in butter, and chopped parsley. Make a flat omelette.

Omelette with morels à la crème. OMELETTE AUX MORILLES À LA CRÈME – Fill the omelette with morels à la crème and serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette mousseline – Mix 6 egg yolks with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cream and season with salt and pepper. Add the stiffly whisked whites and fold into the mixture. Make a flat omelette.

Mushroom omelette. OMELETTE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) sliced mushrooms, sautéed in butter, to the beaten eggs. Make a flat omelette and decorate with a row of mushroom slices.

Omelette à la nancéienne – Flat. Beat the eggs with chopped onion lightly fried in butter, and chopped parsley. Make 2 flat omelettes. Put slices of black pudding, lightly fried in butter, on 1 omelette and cover with the second. Pour over them concentrated veal stock, and sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Fluffy. Beat the eggs with lightly fried chopped onion and chopped parsley. Fill with pieces of fried black pudding. Serve with boiled-down veal stock to which a little butter has been added.

Cheese mousseline omelette

Omelette à la Nantua – Fill the omelette with crayfish tails bound with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with crayfish tails and slivers of truffles. Serve with the sauce.

Omelette à la niçoise – Mix the eggs with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE), chopped parsley, and a pinch of garlic. Make a flat omelette and garnish with anchovies arranged in a criss-cross pattern. Sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Omelette à la normande – Fill the omelette with a ragoût of shrimps' tails and mushrooms bound with Normande sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with debearded oysters poached in their own liquid, and slivers of truffles. Serve with normande sauce.

Okra omelette à la créole. OMELETTE AUX GOMBOS À LA CRÉOLE – Add to the eggs, while beating them, diced onions, peeled and diced sweet pimentos – both of which have been cooked in butter – and chopped parsley. Fill the omelette with okra cooked in butter and mixed with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) flavoured with a pinch of garlic. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la parisienne – Add chopped onion and chopped mushrooms, both sautéed in butter, to the beaten eggs. Cover the cooked omelette with chipolata sausages cooked in butter or grilled. Serve with concentrated veal stock to which a little butter has been added.

Omelette Parmentier – Fry diced potatoes, cooked or raw, in butter and add chopped parsley. Mix them with the beaten eggs for a flat omelette or use them to fill a fluffy omelette.

Omelette à la paysanne – Add to the beaten eggs chopped sorrel and sliced potatoes, both lightly fried in butter,

Omelette à la nancéienne together with pounded parsley and chervil. Make a flat omelette.

Polish omelette. OMELETTE À LA POLONAISE – Fill the omelette with mutton hash bound with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Garnish with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Portuguese omelette. OMELETTE À LA PORTUGAISE – Fill the omelette with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) and serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Potato omelette – See Omelette Parmentier.

Princess omelette. OMELETTE PRINCESSE – Add green asparagus tips cooked in butter to the beaten eggs. Garnish with truffle slices heated in butter and serve with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la provençale – Cook peeled, seeded, and diced tomatoes in butter or oil. Season with salt and pepper and a pinch of garlic. Beat the eggs with pounded parsley and make a fluffy omelette, filling it with the tomato mixture.

Omelette à la romaine. Fry chopped onion lightly in butter and add chopped parsley. Make 2 flat omelettes. Spread one with leaf spinach cooked in Noisette butter (see BUTTER) and mixed with diced anchovy fillets. Cover with the second omelette.

Spoon Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) over the omelettes, sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter, and brown under the grill or in a hot oven.

Omelette Rossini – Add a salpicon of foie gras and truffles to the beaten eggs. Garnish the flat omelette with slices of foie gras and slivers of truffles. Serve with Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la rouennaise – Fill the omelette with duck liver purée. Serve with red wine, boiled down and blended with meat jelly and butter.

Omelette à la royale – Make a small omelette using eggs mixed with truffle purée and fill it with a ragoût of cock's-combs and kidneys, mushrooms, and truffles, bound with Velouté sauce mixed with cream. Make a second, larger omelette with eggs mixed with fresh cream and seasoned with salt and pepper. Fold it over the smaller omelette and garnish with small slices of foie gras and slivers of truffles. Serve with port-flavoured Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la Saint-Flour – Add to the eggs, while beating them, chopped onions and scalded, diced bacon, both lightly fried in lard. Make 2 flat omelettes. Spread one with a layer of braised, mashed cabbage and cover with the second omelette. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la Saint-Hubert – Fill the omelette with a purée of game-meat bound with thick Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock. Garnish with sliced mushrooms lightly fried in butter and serve with demi-glace sauce.

Omelette with salsify and Brussels sprouts, called à la maraîchère. OMELETTE AUX SALSIFIS ET AUX CHOUX DE BRUXELLES, DITE À LA MARAÎCHÈRE – Slice salsify, cook in court-bouillon, cut into dice, toss in butter, and bind with thick Velouté sauce. Fill a fluffy omelette with this and garnish with small potatoes and Brussels sprouts sautéed in butter. Serve with concentrated Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) to which butter has been added.

Omelette de Savarin (according to Frédéric) – Philéas Gilbert relates that Frédéric, chef de cuisine to an archbishop, had many discussions with the directeur de la table, about Frédéric's Lenten mortification dish which was an omelette filled with soft roes and tunny fish.

The roes were cut into thin slices and cooked à la meunière. The tunny was dried in a cloth, cut into a coarse salpicon, seasoned, and simmered in butter. The eggs were beaten ad mixed with thick cream. The tunny and roes were mixed in a shrimp sauce and seasoned. The omelette was filled with this sauce and garnished with slices of truffle or circled with fried frogs' legs.

Omelette à la savoyarde – Fry sliced potatoes and add the beaten eggs, mixed with shredded Gruyère to the pan. Make a flat omelette.

Sea-food omelette. OMELETTE AUX FRUITS DE MER – Beat the eggs with chopped parsley and chervil, season with salt and pepper, and make 2 flat omelettes.

Cover one with a ragoût of mussels, shrimps, cockles, and other shellfish, bound with Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE). Top with the second omelette, and pour Cream sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Shrimp butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) over them. Glaze under the grill or in a hot oven.

Shrimp omelette. OMELETTE AUX CREVETTES – Fill the omelette with peeled shrimps' tails bound with Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE). Serve with the same sauce.

Sorrel omelette. OMELETTE À L'OSEILLE – Add to the beaten eggs, 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sorrel shredded into a chiffonade and lightly fried in butter. Make a flat omelette.

Spanish omelette. OMELETTE À L'ESPAGNOLE – Add to the beaten eggs, sweet pimentos, diced or shredded into julienne strips and cooked in butter, chopped parsley, and a pinch of garlic. Make a flat omelette.

Spinach omelette. OMELETTE AUX ÉPINARDS – Sweat leaf spinach in butter and mix with the beaten eggs. Make a flat omelette.

Spiny lobster omelette (crawfish omelette). OMELETTE À LA LANGOUSTE – Make as Shrimp omelette, using a salpicon of spiny lobster bound with a sauce flavoured with Spiny lobster butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Spring onion omelette. OMELETTE À LA CIBOULETTE – Add chopped spring onions to the beaten eggs and make a flat omelette.

Sweetcorn omelette. OMELETTE AU MAÏS À LA CRÈME – Fill the omelette with Fresh corn in cream (see CORN) and serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Sweet pimento omelette. OMELETTE AUX PIMENTS DOUX – Add to the beaten egg coarsely shredded sweet pimentos (green, yellow or red) cooked in oil. Fry the flat omelette in oil.

Sweet potato omelette. OMELETTE AUX PATATES – Prepare as Omelette Parmentier using sweet potatoes fried in butter.

Swiss omelette. OMELETTE À LA SUISSE – Add Emmenthal cheese and cream to the beaten eggs. Make a flat omelette.

Omelette à la Talleyrand – Add to the beaten eggs, diced onions lightly fried in butter and seasoned with a pinch of curry powder. Make a flat omelette and garnish with slices of calves' sweetbreads dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and sautéed in butter. Serve with Cream sauce.

Tomato omelette. OMELETTE AUX TOMATES – Prepare like Omelette à la provençale but omit the garlic seasoning.

Truffle omelette. OMELETTE AUX TRUFFES – Add to the beaten eggs, diced truffles lightly tossed in butter. Garnish the flat omelette with slivers of truffle tossed in butter. Serve with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira and truffle essence.

Tunny omelette (Brillat-Savarin's recipe). OMELETTE AU THON – Wash and blanch soft carps' roes in slightly salted boiling water for 5 minutes. Drain and chop finely. Chop up a piece of tunny and add to the roes, together with a small, finely chopped shallot. Sauté the mixture in best butter, blending well.

Heat a second piece of butter with parsley and chopped spring onions. Pour this mixture onto a warmed dish intended for the omelette, sprinkle with lemon juice, and keep warm. Beat 12 fresh eggs and add the roe and tunny mixture to them. Make a long, thick omelette and transfer it to the prepared dish. Serve very hot. This recipe is also called Omelette du curé.

Two-coloured omelette. OMELETTE PANACHÉE – Beat 3 eggs with thick spinach purée or tomato pulp, and make an omelette, keeping the interior semi-liquid.

Make another omelette, using 6 eggs. When folding, put the smaller omelette inside it. Surround with White, Brown, or Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Omelette à la verdure – Add to the beaten egg a chiffonade of sorrel and lettuce tossed in butter, chopped parsley, chervil, and tarragon. Make a flat omelette and sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER).

Omelette viveur – Cook 2 diced artichoke hearts in court-bouillon, drain, and fry briskly in clarified butter. Remove from the pan and fry 2 tablespoons blanched, diced, celeriac in the same butter. Drain.

Fry 75 g. (3 oz.) diced fillet of beef seasoned with salt and paprika, in the same butter. Put the artichokes and celeriac back into the pan and mix. Beat the eggs with chopped parsley and chervil and pour into the pan with the other ingredients. Make a flat omelette.

SWEET (DESSERT) OMELETTES. OMELETTES D'ENTREMETS –

Omelette à la Célestine – Three small omelettes, filled with apricot jam, arranged in a row on a dish, sprinkled with fine sugar and glazed in a hot oven.

Omelette à la dijonnaise – Beat the eggs with sugar, finely crushed macaroons, and double cream. Make 2 flat omelettes. Spread one with a thick layer of French pastry cream (see CREAM) mixed with ground almonds and flavoured with blackcurrant jam, and cover with the second omelette. Spoon meringue on the top and sides. Sprinkle with icing sugar, glaze in a very hot oven, and serve with blackcurrant jam.

Frangipane omelettes. OMELETTES À LA FRANGIPANE – Beat 10 eggs with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fine sugar, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) melted butter, and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) cream. Add a small pinch of salt.

Make 10 small flat omelettes. When cooked, put them on a baking sheet, spread each with a layer of Frangipane cream (see CREAM), fold, cut off the ends, sprinkle with fine sugar, and glaze in a very hot oven.

Tomato omelette and bacon

Norwegian omelette or Baked Alaska (Robert Carrier)

Jam omelette. OMELETTE AUX CONFITURES – Prepare like Jam and fruit omelette (see below) replacing the fruit by thick jam.

Jam and fruit omelette. OMELETTE À LA CONFITURE ET AUX FRUITS – Beat the eggs with fine sugar, adding a pinch of salt. Cook in butter in the usual way. When folding the omelette, fill with the desired fruit which is usually cooked en compote in vanilla-flavoured syrup, drained, bound with a jam suitable for the fruit, and flavoured with liqueur. Sprinkle with fine sugar and glaze under the grill or in a hot oven.

Liqueur omelette flambée. OMELETTE AUX LIQUEURS FLAMBÉE – Rum omelette is the most common of these omelettes. Beat the eggs with fine sugar, add a pinch of salt, and cook the omelette in butter, keeping it semi-liquid inside. Sprinkle with fine sugar and pour warmed rum over it. Set it alight when serving.

Armagnac, Calvados, Cognac, whisky, kirsch and other spirits and liqueurs made from various fruits can be used instead of rum.

Normandy apple omelette. OMELETTE À LA NORMANDE – Beat 10 eggs with sugar and fresh cream. Peel and cut 3 cooking apples into slices. Cook the apples in butter and vanilla-flavoured sugar. Add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) fresh double cream, and flavour with 2 tablespoons (3 table-spoons) Calvados. Make the omelette and fill with the apple mixture. Glaze under the grill and serve with double cream.

Norwegian omelette (U.S. Baked Alaska). OMELETTE À LA NORVÉGIENNE – The invention of the omelette à la norvégienne is attributed to an American-born physicist, Benjamin Thompson. But Baron Brisse, writing in 1866, states that a French chef learnt the secret of ice being baked in the oven from a Chinese colleague who came to Paris with a Chinese Mission. He describes the delicate operation:

'Chill the ice cream until hard, wrap it in a very light pastry crust and put in a hot oven. The pastry is baked before the ice can melt. This phenomenon is explained by the poor conductivity of certain substances. Gourmets can thus give themselves the double pleasure of biting through piping-hot crust, and cooling the palate on contact with the ice cream.'

Alternatively, put a piece of Genoa cake 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) thick on an ovenproof dish, sprinkle with liqueur and put the ice cream on top. Enclose the entire cake with a layer of meringue and sprinkle with icing sugar. Bake in a very hot oven so that the meringue quickly becomes golden brown, but not long enough for the heat to penetrate through to the ice cream.

Norwegian omelette with pineapple. OMELETTE À LA NORVÉGIENNE À L'ANANAS – Proceed as described in the preceding recipe, using as a filling pineapple ice cream and pineapple cooked in syrup.

Omelette Reine Pédaque – Beat the eggs with fine sugar, fresh cream, and ground almonds. Make 2 flat omelettes. Spread one with a thick layer of apple purée mixed with fresh cream and flavoured with kirsch. Put the second omelette on top and cover the whole with a layer of meringue. Sprinkle with icing sugar and put in a very hot oven until the meringue is golden brown, and has set.

Soufflé omelette. OMELETTE SOUFFLÉE – Blend 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar and 6 egg yolks with vanilla flavouring or grated lemon or orange rind. Mix until the mixture turns white and forms a ribbon.

Whisk 8 egg whites into a very stiff froth and fold gently into the above mixture. Butter an ovenproof dish and sprinkle it with fine sugar. Pour in the omelette mixture (having reserved a little) and smooth it with the blade of a knife. Decorate the omelette by piping the reserved mixture on it through a forcing-bag. Sprinkle with very fine sugar and bake in a hot oven.

Strawberry omelette. OMELETTE AUX FRAISES – Make an omelette with eggs beaten with sugar, a pinch of salt, and a little cream. Steep strawberries in rum, or kirsch, and sugar, and fold them into the omelette. Sprinkle with fine sugar and glaze under the grill. Surround with crushed strawberries sprinkled with sugar and flavoured with liqueur.

Omelette with sugar. OMELETTE AU SUCRE – Beat the eggs with sugar and a small pinch of salt. Flavour the omelette with grated orange, lemon or tangerine rind, sprinkle with fine sugar, and glaze the omelette under the grill.

FISHES' EGGS. OEUF DE POISSONS – Eggs of certain kinds of fish are used for food. The most highly esteemed are those of the sturgeon and sterlet, which are used for preparing caviare. Other edible fishes' eggs include those of the shad, of which the Americans are very fond, and those of fresh or pickled herring which are delicate in taste.

The eggs of various shellfish are also edible.

REPTILES' EGGS, TURTLE EGGS. OEUF DE REPTILE, OEUF DE TORTUE – Reptiles' eggs are very little used in European cookery. They are, however, much prized by the Arabs and the Indians who are particularly fond of the cayman's eggs. Turtle eggs are mainly used for soup.

EGGPLANT – See AUBERGINE.

EGG-TIMER. SABLIER – Small glass utensil made of two bulbous glass containers narrowing in the middle, where they communicate by means of a very small opening. One of the containers has a fixed quantity of sand which passes into the other when the egg-timer is turned upside down. It takes 3 minutes to do this – the usual time allowed for soft-boiling an egg.

EGLANTINE, DOG-ROSE. EGLANTIER – Wild rose-bush. The hips are red, ovoid, and elongated, and contain about a dozen small hairy ossicles.

Hip pulp has astringent properties, and is used to make jam. Dog-rose hip preserve is still sometimes used for chronic diarrhoea. It is prepared by steeping the hips, with the seeds and hair scraped out, in white wine, and cooking the pulp in  $1\frac{1}{2}$  times its weight in sugar.

EGYPT. ÉGYPT – Egyptian cuisine is influenced to a certain extent by that of Europe (especially in the luxury hotels) but its principal source of inspiration is Oriental. Present day Egyptian gastronomy is as good, if not better, than that of many European countries.

The staple diet of Egyptians is bread made from maize flour. Vegetables are highly esteemed and there are plenty of varieties to choose from. Rice is served both as a dish in its own right (such as the popular rozzette) and as a garnish.

A vegetable called foul médames, seasoned with mint, is considered by the Egyptians to be their national dish. Molokheya soup, with its special herb seasoning, is the national soup.

Green soup consists of a highly seasoned rabbit or chicken stock garnished with finely chopped green leaf vegetables. It is eaten with rice and tomato sauce.

Charcoal-grilled mutton is the favourite meat in Egypt. Since bullocks are used for farm work, their flesh is very tough and only suitable for stews.

The bamia is another much appreciated vegetable. Then there are sweet potatoes (sold in the streets in winter just as roast chestnuts are in Paris, London and Vienna). Potatoes and Jerusalem artichokes are also available as, in fact, are most of the vegetables cultivated in Europe.

Egg-timers (Maison et jardin. Phot. Nicolas)

There is a delicious variety of giant crayfish fished in the Red Sea (known by the Italian name, gambari) and batarekh, a kind of local caviare.

The most typical cakes are the marzipan baklava and konafa; they are Syrian in origin.

The most widely cultivated Egyptian fruit is the date, of which there are fifteen varieties. There are excellent large, sweet, limes, and sugar cane. The latter is sold in special shops, the juice being extracted on the spot for the customer. Egypt, unlike other countries, does not use this juice to make rum. There are also oranges, mandarins, grenadines, mangoes, bananas, etc.

EGYPTIAN LOTUS. NELUMBO – Aquatic plant, also known as Nile lily. This magnificent plant, which was the sacred lotus of ancient Egypt, is now no longer found on the Nile, but it still grows in India and China. Its leaves and roots are edible and its fruit contains up to thirty kernels which are very delicate in flavour.

EIDER – Species of wild duck.

ELDERBERRY GOURILOS. MOELLE DE SUREAU – After paring away the woody outer casing, green elderberry stalks can be cooked in the same way as artichoke stalks or endive stumps.

ELECTRICITY. ÉLECTRICITÉ – A form of energy which is only apparent to our senses when it has been converted into chemical, calorific, illuminative, mechanical, or other energy.

Electricity was first used as a culinary aid during a dinner given under the French Restoration, when chickens were served that had been killed neither by wringing their necks nor slitting their throats, a fact that excited the curiosity of the guests when they were told. Upon hearing that the fowls had been electrocuted, they suddenly found a fine, distinctive flavour in the flesh.

Domestic fowls are no longer electrocuted, but electricity has come into use in the kitchen as a motive power for driving labour-saving devices, and as a heating medium. Electric cookers are clean and highly efficient, with sophisticated temperature control, and offer maximum precision in the preparation of food.

The development of electrical household equipment has made necessary the installation of high voltage electrical points in the kitchen. The installation of these points should be entrusted only to qualified electrical experts. There should be no plugs near water inlets; flex should be channelled through tubes or insulated in other ways (all connections should be carefully insulated, certain types of equipment should be earthed, etc.). Loose lengths of flex should be avoided; it is better to increase the number of electrical points, so that the various pieces of equipment can be plugged in as close as possible to their area of use. The strength of the power-feed must be sufficient to allow for any increase in the number of electrical appliances used at one time.

Modern electrical equipment, with its high level of efficiency, is usually safe, but it is advisable to buy from reliable manufacturers whose goods are quality-tested and guaranteed.

Household and kitchen aids can be divided into two categories: a basic machine that operates a number of appliances, or a number of appliances each with its own motor. In large-scale catering (restaurants, institutions, etc.) autonomous pressure cookers, griddles, deep-friers, etc., are used. Appliances like beaters, mixers, mincers, whisks, slicers, etc. help to cut time and labour costs. These, however, cannot entirely take the place of manual labour:

they are useful aids, no more. And not all machines are equipped with a sufficient number of speed variants.

ELEPHANT. ÉLÉPHANT – Elephant meat is edible but leathery. The trunk and feet are regarded as great delicacies in some Asian countries.

ELIXIR. ÉLIXIR – Liquid manufactured by dissolving various elements in alcohol or wine containing a high proportion of alcohol. The old Codex Pharmacopoeia included a large number of formulae for elixirs. The present Codex includes only 6, among which are the following:

Elixir of cola. ÉLIXIR DE COLA – 50 g. (2 oz.) fluid extract of cola, 100 g. (4 oz.) 60° proof alcohol, 100 g. (4 oz.) plain syrup and 750 g. (1½ lb.) Lunel wine.

Elixir of Garus. ÉLIXIR DE GARUS – Steep 1 g. vanilla and ½ g. saffron in 1 kg. (2½ lb.) spirit of Garus for 2 days.

Infuse 20 g. (¾ oz.) maidenhair fern in 500 g. (18 oz.) boiling water for 30 minutes. Add 200 g. (7 oz.) distilled orange-flower water and 1 kg (2½ lb., 4½ cups) white sugar. Mix well. Add the spirit to this syrup. Leave to cool and filter.

Elixir of Grande-Chartreuse. ÉLIXIR DE LA GRANDE-CHARTREUSE – Steep the following for 8 days in 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) alcohol: 650 g. (scant 1½ lb.) each of fresh melissa leaves and hyssop leaves, 300 g. (11 oz.) angelica leaves, 150 g. (5 oz.) cinnamon pod, 50 g. (2 oz.) each of mace and saffron. Distil. Add 1260 g. (2¾ lb., 5½ cups) white sugar.

ELK. ÉLAN – Wild ruminant found in northern Europe. The elk is now the largest stag in existence, and its flesh is edible. All recipes for stag and fallow deer are suitable for elk.

EMBPONPOINT – This word once indicated a degree of corpulence in which fat was proportionate to size, but it is now commonly used as a euphemism for slight obesity. Connoisseurs of good food are usually proud of their embonpoint although whatever their weight might be they never admit to being fat.

ÉMINCÉ – Dish made with left-over meat. Thinly sliced, it is placed in an ovenware dish and covered with a sauce, such as bordelaise, mushroom, chasseur, Italian, piquante, Robert, Tomato, etc.

These slices of meat must be heated only in the sauce poured over them; they must not boil, especially if roast meat is used. Beef, roebuck, mutton, or lamb are most commonly used for this dish but it is sometimes made with poultry.

Émincés of beef with bordelaise sauce. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF SAUCE BORDELAISE – Arrange the slices of meat in a dish and garnish with strips of poached beef bone-marrow. Cover with Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Émincés of beef chasseur. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF CHASSEUR – Arrange slices of beef on a dish and cover with boiling Chasseur sauce (see SAUCE).

Émincés of beef à l'italienne. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF À L'ITALIENNE – Proceed as for Émincés of beef chasseur, covering the meat with Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Émincés of beef à la lyonnaise. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF À LA LYONNAISE – Proceed as for Émincés of beef chasseur, covering the meat with Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Émincés of beef with mushrooms. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Arrange the slices of beef on a dish. Put whole or sliced mushrooms, tossed in butter, on top of the slices. Cover with boiling Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Émincés of beef with piquante sauce. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF SAUCE PIQUANTE – Proceed as for Émincés of beef chasseur, covering the meat with Piquante sauce (see SAUCE).

Émincés of beef with poivrade sauce. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF SAUCE POIVRADE – Proceed as for Émincés of beef chasseur, covering the meat with Poivrade sauce (see SAUCE).

Émincés of beef with Robert sauce. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF SAUCE ROBERT – Proceed as for Émincés of beef chasseur, covering the meat with Robert sauce (see SAUCE).

Émincés of beef with tomato sauce. ÉMINCÉS DE BOEUF SAUCE TOMATE – Proceed as for Émincés of beef chasseur, covering the meat with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

After being covered with the sauce indicated, émincés of beef can be garnished in various ways. The garnishes most suited to these dishes are: sauté potatoes; green vegetables tossed in butter or cream; braised vegetables; purées of pulses and chestnuts; pasta of various kinds; rice pilaf and risotto.

Émincés of mutton or lamb. ÉMINCÉS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU – Proceed as for émincés of beef, using left-over roast or braised mutton or lamb.

Émincés of pork. ÉMINCÉS DE PORC – Proceed, using slices of left-over pork, as for émincés of beef.

Émincés of poultry. ÉMINCÉS DE VOLAILLE – Make with thin slices of roast or poached left-over poultry. All methods of serving émincés of beef are suitable for émincés of poultry. They can also be covered with white sauces, such as cream sauce, curry, suprême, ravigote, hongroise.

Émincés of roebuck. ÉMINCÉS DE CHEVREUIL – Proceed, using slices of left-over roast roebuck, as for émincés of beef.

This dish, and other ground game, can be covered with all sauces especially suitable for ground game, e.g. grand veneur, romaine.

Émincés of veal. ÉMINCÉS DE VEAU – Prepared, à brun, like émincés of beef, à blanc, like émincés of poultry.

ÉMINCER – Term used in French cookery meaning to slice meat, vegetables or fruit very finely. Carrots and turnips are finely sliced for a paysanne preparation, mushrooms when they are to be sautéed in butter. Finely sliced potatoes, apples, etc. are also said to be émincé.

EMMENTHAL – See CHEESE.

EMPOTAGE – Term in French cookery referring to all the ingredients put in a braising pan.

EMPOTER – Term meaning to put various ingredients in a stockpot or braising pan.

EMULSION. ÉMULSION – Liquid of milky appearance containing minute drops of oil or fat in more or less stable suspension.

Emulsions have greater stability when the liquid is slightly alkaloid and proteid, with a somewhat viscous consistency. Milk, for instance, is an emulsion of cream globules.

The name emulsion is also given in cookery to a mixture of oil or butter with egg yolks, such as mayonnaise or hollandaise sauce.

Plain almond emulsion or milk of almonds. ÉMULSION SIMPLE D'AMANDES, LAIT D'AMANDES – 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) blanched sweet almonds, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) white sugar, 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) distilled water (Codex formula).

Pound the almonds with the sugar and a little water to the consistency of a smooth paste. Dilute with the rest of the water and rub through a sieve.

EN-CAS – Term meaning 'in case' which is used in France to describe a meal (usually a cold meal) kept ready in case of need.

In the old châteaux, a table was always laid in readiness for unexpected guests. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the en cas de nuit was the name given to a light meal kept in readiness near the king's bedchamber. It consisted of three loaves of bread, two bottles of wine and a flask of water. According to an anecdote dating from the time of Louis XIV, the great king once shared his en-cas with Molière in order to teach his courtiers a lesson after they had refused to allow the famous dramatist to sit at their table.

ENDIVE AND CHICORY

- |                                   |                                    |
|-----------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| 1. Louviers endive (U.S. chicory) | 2. Barbe-de-Capucin (wild chicory) |
| 3. Chicory (U.S. Belgian endive)  | 4. Endive (U.S. chicory, escarole) |

ENDIVE (U.S. CHICORY). CHICORÉE – Genus of plant cultivated for its leaves. These are eaten in salads, but can be braised or stewed in butter as indicated in the following recipes.

There is confusion about the names endive and chicory. In England endive usually means the curly-leaved salad plant, generally called chicory in the U.S.A. What the French and Americans call endive or Belgian endive is called chicory in England. For the sake of clarity we are giving preference to the English usage.

Endive has very little nutritive value.

Endive with béchamel sauce. CHICORÉE À LA BÉCHAMEL – Braise in beef stock or cook in salted boiling water. Add several tablespoons Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and some fresh butter to the cooked endive.

Braised endive au gras. CHICORÉE BRAISÉE AU GRAS – Remove any hard leaves. Cut the rest from the stump. Wash the leaves in several clean lots of water, drain and blanch them for 10 minutes in rapidly boiling salted water. Drain, put under the cold tap, press the water from the endive and chop it up finely.

Make a white roux (q.v.) For 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) endive use 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) flour seasoned with salt, pepper, sugar and grated nutmeg, and moistened with 6 dl. (1 pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) consommé, or white stock. Add the endive. Bring to the boil on the top of the stove and then cook, covered, in the oven for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours.

Buttered endive. CHICORÉE AU BEURRE – Braise in beef stock or cook in boiling salted water. Add to the cooked endive 50 to 75 g. (2 to 3 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter for every 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) of vegetable.

Endive with cream. CHICORÉE À LA CRÈME – Cook in the same way as Buttered endive. Finish with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) fresh cream.

Endive à la flamande. CHICORÉE À LA FLAMANDE – Trim and wash the endive. Blanch, drain, and cook it whole in butter. Finish in the same way as for Endive with cream.

Endive au gratin. CHICORÉE AU GRATIN – Put the braised endive in a fireproof dish and cover with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour melted butter over it, and brown gently in the oven.

Endive au jus. CHICORÉE AU JUS – Braise the endive in beef stock on a foundation of sliced root vegetables (carrots, onions, etc.). Strain the boiled-down liquor and add to it several tablespoons rich veal stock.

Endive loaf. PAIN DE CHICORÉE – Combine 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) braised endive with 3 beaten eggs. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Mix well. Pour into a buttered mould. Cook in the oven in a bain-marie for 25 minutes. Leave to cool for a few moments before turning it out onto a dish. Cover with Allemande sauce or Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Endive au maigre. CHICORÉE ÉTUVÉE AU MAIGRE – Blanch the endive, put it in a colander under the cold tap, drain, and dry it. Put it in a casserole with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter for every 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) endive. Season. Moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) water, and cook in the oven, covered, for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours.

A white roux (q.v.) of flour and butter can be added.

Endive purée. PURÉE DE CHICORÉE – Rub braised or stewed endive through a sieve. Add Béchamel sauce, thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), rich veal stock, or fresh butter.

To improve the consistency of this purée, add a third or a quarter of its weight of potato purée.

Endive salad. SALADE DE CHICORÉE – See SALAD.

Endive soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE CHICORÉE – Cook 250 g. (9 oz.) endive in beef stock or au maigre (in butter and water), and sieve. Combine with 3 egg yolks; season with salt, pepper, and nutmeg; and add 3 well-whisked egg whites.

Pour into a buttered soufflé dish. Smooth the surface and cook in the oven at 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6) for 15 to 18 minutes. Serve at once.

Endive soufflé with Parmesan. SOUFFLÉ DE CHICORÉE AU PARMESAN – Made in the same way as Endive soufflé. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) grated Parmesan to the soufflé.

Little endive soufflés (hot hors d'œuvre). PETITS SOUFFLÉS DE CHICORÉE – The same as above. Put the mixture into individual soufflé dishes and cook in the oven at 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6) 8 to 10 minutes.

Endive subrics. SUBRICS DE CHICORÉE – Prepared with braised endive in the same way as Subrics of spinach (see SPINACH).

ENDIVE GOURILOS. MOELLE DE CHICORÉE – The stumps of curly endive are often called moelles in France, but they are also known as gourilos.

Blanch in salt water containing lemon or vinegar, and drain well. Prepare in various ways: in butter or cream in a covered pan; fried; in fritots (q.v.); grilled; à la grecque (q.v.); curried; sautéed, etc. (See GOURILOS.)

ENGLISH COOKERY – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.

ENTOLOMA. ENTOLOME – Mushroom of the agaric family characterized by its pink spores and lamellae. The blackish-blue entoloma is poisonous and causes gastroenteritis accompanied by epigastric pains and vomiting.

ENTOMOPHAGOUS. ENTOMOPHAGE – Word of Greek origin meaning insect-eating. The ancient Athenians ate grilled cicadas. Even today many peoples, including the Arabs and the Egyptians, enjoy grasshoppers. The Chinese, too, eat certain insects, caterpillars, etc.

Piece of entrecôte from rib of beef
(Boucherie Bernard. Phot. Larousse)

ENTRECÔTE – Term which literally means ‘between the ribs’. It is used of a steak taken between two ribs of beef.

The term also applies to a slice taken from the contrefilet or faux filet of beef, but a true entrecôte is that cut between the ribs. It is usually grilled or fried. For various recipes, see BEEF.

ENTRECUISSÉ – Term in French cookery for the fleshy thigh of poultry or winged game. This is to distinguish it from the lower half of the leg or ‘drumstick’.

ENTRE-DEUX-MERS – Name given to the area of Bordeaux situated between the Garonne and the Dordogne, stretching to the south-eastern boundary of the Gironde département and overlapping the Lot-et-Garonne département.

The appellation Entre-Deux-Mers is reserved for the white wines, which are gradually becoming drier. The red wines have a right to the appellation Bordeaux or Bordeaux Supérieur.

ENTRÉE – The course which, in a full French menu, follows the relevé or intermediate course which, in its turn, follows the fish (or whatever dish may be served in place of it). In other words, the entrée is the third course, not the first, as it would seem to be.

It is usually a dish served with a white or brown sauce, but can also be a cold dish. At a large formal dinner, several entrées, all different from one another in character, are usually served.

Mixed entrées, that is to say composite dishes, can also be served.

Mixed entrées. ENTRÉES MIXTES – Under this heading there is an infinite variety of dishes, the chief of these being casseroles of rice with various garnishes; hot pâtés made with poultry, game, meat, offal (variety meats), fish and shellfish; pies; savoury tartlets and vol-au-vent. These are served after the principal entrées.

ENTRELARDER – French culinary term for slices of meat cooked with alternate layers of pork fat.

ENTREMETS – Literally ‘between dishes’. In old French the term covered all the dishes which followed the roast, and included not only sweets but vegetables.

In the fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, entremets meant not only food but also entertainment in the middle of the meal, provided by buffoons, minstrels, troubadours, acrobats, dancers, and other performers.

Nowadays, the word means sweets (desserts), which, in France, are served after the cheese. Recipes are given under their names in alphabetical order.

Most sweets served nowadays fall into one of the following categories:

1. Batter sweets (crêpes, fritters, etc.).
2. Cooked creams and custards.
3. Egg sweets (sweet omelettes, etc.).
4. Fruit sweets (cooked or raw).
5. Ices and ice creams.
6. Meringue sweets.
7. Pastry sweets (tarts, pies, flans, etc.).
8. Puddings.
9. Rice and semolina sweets.
10. Whipped cream sweets.

EPERGNE. MÉNAGÈRE – Table-centre of glass, porcelain or metal bowls attached to an ornamental metal stem. In France, epergnes are still used as hors-d'œuvre sets for serving gherkins, salted cucumbers, small pickled melons, capers, and other delicacies. They are also used for serving stewed fruit or iced petits fours.

ÉPIGRAMME – An épigamme of lamb consists of two cuts, both cooked ‘dry’. These two pieces are a slice of breast and a cutlet or chop, dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and grilled or fried. Instructions for the preparation of épigammes are given under LAMB.

Philéas Gilbert explains the origins of the term épigamme as follows:

‘It was towards the middle of the eighteenth century. One day a young marquise overheard one of her guests at table remark that when he was dining the previous evening with the comte de Vaudreuil, he was charmingly received and, furthermore, had had a feast of excellent epigrams. The marquise, though pretty and elegant, was somewhat ignorant of the meaning of words.

‘She later summoned Michelet, her chef.

“‘Michelet,” she said to him, “tomorrow, I shall require a dish of épigammes!”

‘The chef withdrew, pondering the problem. He looked up old recipes, but found no reference to anything of the kind. None of his colleagues had ever heard of the dish. But no French master chef is ever at a loss. Since he could discover nothing about the dish he set about to invent one. Next day, inspiration came and he created a most delicate dish.

‘At dinner, the guests fell into ecstasies over the dish put before them and, after complimenting the lady of the house, desired to know its name. The chef was called. With perfect composure he replied, “Épigammes of lamb à la Michelet”.

‘Everyone laughed. The marquise was triumphant, though she could not understand the amusement of her guests. From that moment, the culinary repertoire of France was enriched by a name still used to this day.

‘But whereas this name was originally used for slices of breast of lamb dipped in breadcrumbs, fried in butter and arranged in a circle round a blanquette of lamb, by the end of the eighteenth century it had been completely transformed into what it is today, cutlets and slices of breast, dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and fried in butter or grilled.’

EPILEPSY. ÉPILEPSIE – Ancient doctors, in particular Hippocrates, recognised the importance of diet in the treatment of this disease, and since then all kinds of conflicting diets have been concocted. Some definite conclusions can be drawn from certain facts, however.

Epileptics are hearty, sometimes voracious eaters; cutting down on food therefore diminishes the number of epileptic fits.

A vegetarian diet, or particularly a milk diet lessens the frequency of fits in the majority of cases.

These claims, however, are not true for all epileptics.

ÉPINE D'HIVER – Name of a winter pear, tender and fragrant to eat.

ÉPINÉE – French regional name for chine of pork.

EPIPHANY. ÉPIPHANIE – Epiphany or Twelfth Night (known in France as the Feast of the Kings) is celebrated on 6 January. In France it is an occasion for great feasting.

Twelfth-Night cake, the symbolic cake containing the traditional bean (or favour) is eaten on Twelfth Night. It is made either of risen dough in the shape of a ring, or flaky pastry in the shape of a galette, according to the region.

ÉPOISSES – See CHEESE.

ÉPONGER – Term in French cookery for the process of drying parboiled or boiled vegetables by putting them on a cloth after draining, to get rid of all surplus moisture.

Some deep-fried foods are drained in a cloth. This process is also known as éponger.

ERDBEERKUCHEN (German pastry) – A German strawberry tart. See TART, Fruit tart à l'allemande.

ERMITAGE (Wine) – This name is sometimes written with an 'H' (Hermitage). The wine, which is made in the Drôme département, enjoys a great reputation. There are both red and white Ermitage wines, made from grapes grown on the slopes of l'Ermitage in the commune of Tain on the left bank of the Rhône.

There are different types of soil in this area, and the vineyard is divided into three sections or mas, each very different in geological structure from the others. The mas de Bossard is a granite slope, the mas de Méal is alluvial soil, and the mas de Greffieux is clay.

Ermitage wine is perfect only when made from grapes from all three sections of the vineyard.

White Ermitage wine is a fine golden yellow. It has a fairly strong bouquet. The red wine, when it is young, is of a faded purple colour. It should be left to mature for a while, otherwise it tastes slightly bitter.

ERMITE – The name given in France to a very old wild boar which is also known as solitaire. The meat of old wild boar is leathery. Only young boar is eaten. In France, a young boar is known as a marcassin or bête rousse. (See WILD BOAR.)

ERVY – See CHEESE.

ERYTHRIN. ÉRYTHRIN – The generic name for several varieties of fish, rather thick and rounded in body with large heads.

Three or four varieties are to be found in the lakes and rivers of hot countries. This fish is excellent to eat. It is cooked in the same way as sea perch.

ESCABÈCHE – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre. Word of Spanish origin. In Belgium it is escavèche, in North Africa, scabèche.

ESCALOPE or COLLOP – Slices of meat or fish of any kind, flattened slightly and fried in butter or some other fat.

In former times the term was used of a dish of sliced meat, for instance, sliced mutton would be called une escalope de mouton.

Veal escalopes are generally cut from the fillet (U.S. round) or the best end of neck (U.S. rib) or the topside or silverside (U.S. rump).

ESCAROLE. SCAROLE – Variety of salad plant with wide, curled, dark green leaves which are sometimes blanched by being surrounded with earth or being cultivated in cellars in the dark.

Escarole is chiefly eaten raw in salad, but can also be cooked in a great many ways. All the methods of preparation given for endive (q.v.) and chicory (q.v.) are applicable to this plant.

Auguste Escoffier in front of a sugar model of Grosvenor House, London

ESCOFFIER, AUGUSTE – Auguste Escoffier was born at Villeneuve-Loubet, a charming little town in the Alpes-Maritimes, in 1847. He began his career at the age of twelve, and became a very great cook.

In 1890, in association with Ritz and Echenard, two masters of the hotel business, he opened the Savoy Hotel in London, and remained in this illustrious establishment until 1898 when, for personal reasons, he gave up the direction of the Savoy kitchens to take charge of those of the Carlton Hotel, then one of the most famous in Europe.

As a reward for all he had done to enhance the prestige of French cooking throughout the world, Escoffier was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in 1920, and Officer of the Legion in 1928.

Escoffier's culinary career was brilliant. He was regarded as the emperor of the world's kitchens, a title conferred upon him by the Emperor William II, who spent some time on the steamer Imperator of the Hamburg-America Line, which Escoffier had joined to take charge of the imperial kitchens. In the course of a conversation with Escoffier, the Emperor, congratulating him, said: 'I am the Emperor of Germany, but you are the Emperor of chefs.'

Escoffier retired in 1921. He was then seventy-four years of age and had practised his art for sixty-two years. In all the history of cookery, there is no other example of such a long professional career. He died in February 1935, nearly eighty-nine years old.

The culinary writings of Escoffier are works of authority. The best-known are le Guide culinaire, written in collaboration with Philéas Gilbert and Émile Fétu; le Livre des menus; les Fleurs en cire; Ma cuisine; le Riz; le Carnet d'Épicerie.

It was Escoffier who, in 1893, honoured the Australian singer, Nellie Melba, by creating the peach dish that bears her name. He also invented the dodine au Chambertin and the chaud-froid Jeannette, the latter named after a ship that was trapped in the Polar ice. Many delicate culinary creations are associated with his name.

ESPAGNOLE SAUCE – One of the basic brown sauces. It is also called sauce-mère (mother-sauce) which indicates that it can be used as a basis for a large number of derivative brown sauces.

This is Carême's recipe for what he called petite-espagnoles.

'Take a deep saucepan. Put in 2 slices of Bayonne ham. Place on top a noix of veal and 2 partridges. Add enough stock to cover the veal only. Boil down the liquid rapidly. Move the pan to a cooler part of the stove to extract all the juice from the contents.

When the stock is reduced to a coating on the bottom of the pan, remove it from the stove. Prick the noix of veal with the point of a knife so that its juice mingles with the essence. Put the saucepan back on the stove on a low heat and leave for about 1 hour. Watch the essence as it gradually turns to a clear red colour.

'To simplify this operation, scrape off a little of the essence with the point of a knife. Roll it between the fingers. If it rolls into a ball, the essence is perfectly reduced. If it is not, it will stick the fingers together.

'Remove the saucepan from the stove and put it aside for 15 minutes for the essence to cool. It will then dissolve more readily. Fill the saucepan with clear soup or stock and heat very slowly. As soon as it comes to the boil, skim it, and pour 2 ladles into a roux.'

For the preparation of this roux:

'Melt 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter and add to it sieved flour to make a rather liquid roux. Put it on a low heat, stirring from time to time so that little by little the whole of the mixture turns a golden colour. When adding the liquid, do not forget that the roux must not be on the stove while you are mixing in the first spoonfuls of stock; but it should be put on later, so that it may be added boiling hot to the rest of the stock.

'When the 2 ladles of stock are poured into the roux, stir so as to make the mixture perfectly smooth. Now pour it into the saucepan with the veal noix. Add parsley and spring onions, seasoned with  $\frac{1}{2}$  bay leaf, a little thyme, 2 chives, and mushroom trimmings. Leave to simmer, stirring frequently. After a full hour skim off the fat. 30 minutes later skim off the fat again.

'Strain through a cloth into a bowl, stirring from time to time with a wooden spoon so that no scum forms on the surface, as easily happens when the sauce is exposed to the air.' (Extract from le Pâtissier royal; Traité des entrées chaudes.)

Nowadays, a shoulder of veal is used instead of a noix, and partridge is not used in the stock. (See SAUCE, Espagnole sauce. See also DEMI-ESPAGNOLE.)

ESPRIT-DE-VIN – 84° proof alcohol.

ESQUIRE TRENCHANT – A servant or high dignitary officiating at ceremonial banquets. In former times, in great households, the esquire trenchant (or écuyer trenchant) was second to the major-domo in rank. In lesser households, the two offices were combined.

ESSAI or ESSAY – The essai at the French royal courts was the ceremony of tasting the king's food and drink. The cups which were used for tasting wines etc. were also called essais.

The fear of poison in the Middle Ages gave rise to a complicated ceremonial attending the sovereign's meals. In France, this was minutely regulated by court etiquette, which continued with slight modifications up to the Revolution, to be revived under the Empire.

The knife, fork, spoon, salt cellar, spices, and napkin were locked in the cadenas (q.v.) or nef (q.v.).

The maître d'hôtel rubbed all the cutlery and the dishes with balls of breadcrumbs which he made sure were eaten by the squires of the pantry, who, previously, had subjected the servants who had handed them the dishes to the same ordeal.

For drinks, the ceremonial was equally complicated. When the king called for a drink, the cup bearer made a sign to the wine butler and his assistant. The first of these brought the wine in a flagon, and the king's glass, covered; the second brought a silver jug full of water. The cup bearer took the glass and uncovered it; the wine butler poured in the wine, then the water. The cup bearer poured some of this watered wine into two little silver-gilt cups. He drank from one; the wine butler drank from the other. Only then did the cup bearer proffer the cup, now covered once more, across the table to the king. He did not uncover it until the very moment that the king was about to drink.

The same ceremonial took place for the queen. By special favour, Louis XIV bestowed the same prerogative upon the dauphine (the wife of the heir to the throne).

ESSENCE – A liquid, usually oily and volatile, extracted by the distillation of vegetable substances in water: essence of anise, cinnamon, lemon, oranges, roses, etc.

Essences are used in aromatherapy to combat various complaints. Fifteen of these appear in the Codex.

Anchovy essence. ESSENCE D'ANCHOIS – A commercial product which is used in the preparation of Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and to flavour certain sauces, stuffings, salads, etc.

Bitter almond essence. ESSENCE D'AMANDES AMÈRES – A product which is made and sold commercially.

Chervil essence. ESSENCE DE CERFEUIL – Proceed as for Tarragon essence, using chervil in place of tarragon.

Coffee essence. ESSENCE DE CAFÉ – Pour 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) boiling water on 200 g. (7 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) ground coffee placed in a filter. Pour the resulting liquid through the filter again. Cool and bottle it. Use to flavour creams, mochas, etc.

Fish essence. ESSENCE DE POISSON – For 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups), put in a saucepan: 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) bones and trimmings of sole, whiting, brill or other white fish, 1 small sliced onion, 100 g. (4 oz.) mushroom trimmings, a sprig of parsley, and a few drops lemon juice. Moisten with 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) strained fish stock and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine.

Bring to the boil. Skim. Boil steadily for 30 to 35 minutes. Strain through muslin. Boil down to half its volume.

This essence, which is fairly rich, is used for poaching fish. It can also be used in the preparation of sauces to be served with fish.

Game essence. ESSENCE DE GIBIER – Game stock boiled down to the consistency of thick meat jelly.

Garlic essence. ESSENCE D'AIL – Pour boiling white wine or vinegar onto crushed cloves of garlic, strain and boil down.

Mushroom essence. ESSENCE DE CHAMPIGNONS – The liquid, greatly concentrated, in which mushrooms have been cooked. It is used to flavour sauces.

Onion and shallot essence. ESSENCE D'OIGNON, D'ÉCHALOTE – Infuse finely sliced onions or shallots in white wine or vinegar.

Parsley essence. ESSENCE DE PERSIL – Proceed as for Tarragon essence.

Tarragon essence. ESSENCE D'ESTRAGON – An infusion of fresh tarragon in white wine or vinegar, strained and reduced.

Tomato essence. ESSENCE DE TOMATES – Rub 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) very ripe raw tomatoes through a fine sieve. Boil the pulp until it is reduced to half its volume. Pass through a sieve, pressing hard with a spoon. Boil this pulp until it thickens to a syrupy consistency. Rub through muslin.

Cooked in this way, tomato pulp makes a kind of jelly which can be kept for several days. It is used as an additional ingredient for sauces, stuffings, and other mixtures.

Truffle essence. ESSENCE DE TRUFFES – Truffle peelings infused in Madeira or any other heavy wine.

ESTAMINET – Name given in former times in France to cafés where patrons were permitted to smoke.

Nowadays, the word is used of a basement tavern.

ESTOUFFADE – Name applied both to a dish whose ingredients are slowly stewed, and to a clear brown stock used to dilute sauces or to moisten braised meat and ragoûts.

ESTOUFFAT – Languedoc dialect form of the word étuvée (dish stewed very slowly). In that region it is mainly used to designate a stew of haricot beans and pork.

ÉTOUFFÉE – Method of cooking food in a tightly closed vessel with very little liquid or even without liquid, often called à l'étuvée.

ÉTOURDEAU – Name given in some parts of France to a young capon.

ÉTUVÉE – Method of cooking food. (See ÉTOUFFÉE.)

ÉTUVER – To cook food in a covered pan, without liquid. This method is suitable for all kinds of meat, poultry, vegetables, and fruit. A little butter, fat or oil should be added.

EUPHORISM. EUPHORISME – Euphorism is a new art of living that aims to encourage the expansion of the human personality through physical and moral equilibrium. In its attempt to cultivate an optimistic outlook of joie de vivre and good humour, euphorism depends to a large extent on gastronomy.

Doctor Pierre Vachet, a disciple of this philosophy, believes that gastronomy has an important rôle to play in the pursuit of happiness. Like art, it has its rules; whether it proposes a simple country meal or a sumptuous banquet, the taste buds and the mind must be equally satisfied.

The gourmet generally knows very well how to blend the delights of the palate with visual and mental stimulation. The pleasure it gives him to taste wines and savour the chefs-d'œuvre of French cuisine can be likened to the joy other people derive from listening to a beautiful symphony or gazing at a fine painting.

The author of Maladies de la vie moderne declares: 'Taste and flavours are precious elements of euphorism for, when properly applied, our sense of taste adds greatly to our physical and psychic pleasure.

'The sense of taste should therefore be educated and cultivated to a great extent in order to develop the taste buds, so that we learn to appreciate each separate flavour of whatever we consume. By analysing the qualities and defects of food, by knowing how truly to savour a wine, we shall acquire through practice a much wider range of sensory resources.

'Only by this kind of education and discipline can gastronomy take its rightful place in the epicurism of modern times, euphorism.'

There is a Euphorists' Club.

ÉVENT – French name for the deterioration which is caused, especially in wine, by too long exposure to the air. The taste of évent is the washy flavour in wine which has lost its aroma through oxidation.

EVERLASTING PEA. JAROSSE, JAROUSSE – Popular name for the cultivated vetch. In France, it is also sometimes called Auvergne lentil.

EW. BREBIS – The flesh of a ewe, when young, is used as ordinary mutton (q.v.).

In some regions of south-western France, ewe's meat is pickled in the same way as pork.

EW. AIGUIÈRE – Vessel for containing water for service at table. The word aiguière comes from Old French aigue (water).

The ewer goes back to antiquity. Its main features have not changed much. In general, it is a vessel of elongated form, with base, handle and spout. Gold, precious stones, and the finest enamels were used for the ewers on the tables of the French nobility in past centuries. One of the most beautiful examples is in chased silver and was part of the treasure discovered in 1830 at Berthonville, near Bernay, in the Eure. It is kept in the museum of medals in the French Bibliothèque Nationale.

EXCELSIOR – See CHEESE.

EXOCOETUS. EXOCET – This fish, commonly known as flying fish, is edible. It is prepared in the same way as mackerel (q.v.).

EXTRACT. EXTRAIT – Product obtained by evaporating animal or vegetable juice. The cooking stock of meat, boiled down to a coating in the pan, is an extract.

The extracts most commonly used are those of beef, veal, poultry and game.

Extracts of fish are called essences or fumets. The term can be extended to cover concentrated vegetable essences which are made from root vegetables and from mushrooms, tomatoes, and truffles.

Among the vegetable extracts used in the kitchen is soya sauce which, if added to coulis (q.v.), ragoûts (q.v.), and other meat or vegetarian dishes, enhances their flavour without destroying their own particular taste.

Chicken extract. GLACE DE VOLAILLE – Boil down clear chicken stock in the same way as indicated in the recipe for Meat extract (see below).

Fish extract. GLACE DE POISSON – See ESSENCE, Fish essence.

Game extract. GLACE DE GIBIER – Boil down clear game stock in the same way as for Meat extract (see below).

Meat extract. GLACE DE VIANDE – Boil down to half its volume 10 litres (9 quarts, 11 quarts) brown stock. Remove all fat, leaving the stock as clear as possible. Strain through muslin, and boil down further. Strain, and repeat the procedure until the stock coats the back of a spoon. Each time it is strained, transfer the stock to a smaller saucepan, and reduce the heat as the stock thickens.

Pour the extract into little jars and keep in a cool place.

Meat extracts (commercially prepared). EXTRAITS DE VIANDE DU COMMERCE – These extracts, which are manufactured commercially, are mainly used in household kitchens.

FAGOUE – Name given in the French tripe-trade to the pancreas, and sometimes to calves' sweetbreads.

FAÏENCE – Opaque type of pottery which is whitish in colour or tinted. The earthenware is covered with tin glaze (lead glaze made opaque by the addition of tin ashes) so that the colour of the earthenware is completely masked. This pottery takes its name from the Italian town of Faenza.

Very little is known about the origins of faïence pottery, but from the very earliest times a brilliant, vitreous lead glaze, coloured by means of metallic oxides, was known to potters. It is to be seen in the hypogeum of Ancient Egypt, on its vases, funeral images, and also on the glazed bricks which decorated the walls of Nineveh and Babylon.

The ancient mosques of Asia Minor have preserved for us the magnificent craftsmanship of the Persians, who passed on their skill to the Arabs.

From the thirteenth century there were important centres for the manufacture of faïence in Spain, at Malaga and Majorca, which gave its name to the Italian majolica. Up to the seventeenth century the most famous factories were in Valencia. But it was mainly through the discovery of tin glaze by Luca della Robbia towards the middle of the fifteenth century, that the ceramic industry was able to develop, first at Faenza and then in various other Italian towns, notably Urbino, Gubbio, Druta, Durante, Venice, Milan and Turin.

In France, in the sixteenth century, faïence pottery called Henry II faïence was made, the most important being the very individual pieces made by Bernard Palissy. During the same period Italian potters tried to introduce the faïence industry into France. The Conradi, coming from Savona, settled at Nevers. Early abortive attempts to make faïence in Rouen were made in the sixteenth century, but it was only in the seventeenth century that this town produced the beautiful specimens which remain one of the glories of the French faïence industry. These were very fashionable in the eighteenth century and were copied everywhere, both in France and other countries. Moustiers, from the end of the seventeenth century, made famous faïence pieces in the style of Tempesta, or copied from Bérain and from Bernard Toro. At Strasbourg, in the eighteenth century, the Hannong family created a style which was quickly adopted by the factories of Lunéville and Niederwiller. In Paris, Saint-Cloud, Meudon, Lille, and Marseille, there were also a large number of less important factories.

Outside France, some of the finest work was produced at Delft in Holland, which was, for a long time, the most active centre of the faïence industry in Europe.

Fine pottery, called clay pottery, made its appearance towards the middle of the eighteenth century, and this industry was most fully developed in England, in the towns of Leeds and Burslem. In France, this type of pottery was made especially at Pont-aux-Choux, Paris, Lunéville and Orléans.

With the advent of porcelain, faïence became less sought-after and less highly-prized. But modern faïence manufacturers have given a new lease of life to this type of pottery.

FAISANDAGE – French term for red meat in the condition which, in England, is known as 'high'. It is derived from faisan (pheasant).

When it is fresh, pheasant is tough and without much flavour. It grows tender and its aroma develops after it has been hung, the length of time depending upon the temperature. Nowadays, pheasant is no longer hung, as advocated by Montaigne, 'until it develops a marked smell'.

In Brillat-Savarin's time, pheasant was not considered fit for the gastronome's table except in a state of complete putrefaction. This authority recommends, in effect, that it should be kept, unplucked, until its breast turns green, so that for roasting on the spit it has to be held together by a slice of bread tied on with ribbon.

Apart from a few sportsmen in love with tradition, most people have today abandoned these excesses.

Winged game and ground game, when hung for a certain length of time, acquire a flavour similar to that of pheasant.

This habit of hanging meat until it is high is properly reprehended by those concerned with hygiene, and also by the true gastronome.

FAISANDEAU – Young pheasant.

FAISELLE. FAISELLE – Osier or pottery basket used for draining cheese. Also the table on which the apple residue is drained after the brewing of cider.

FALCON. FAUCON – Bird of prey, trained to hunt on the wing. According to Tournefort, the French botanist and traveller, (1656–1708), it is delicate to eat and need not be hung.

FALERNIAN WINE. FALERNE – Campagna wine celebrated in verse by the poet Horace.

FALLOW-DEER. DAM – Wild ruminant, somewhat rare in France. It is known as a fawn up to eight months. It loses its horns twice before it is fully grown. A fully grown fallowdeer can be recognised by the palms between the branches of its antlers. The female of the fallow-deer is called a doe.

The meat of young fallow-deer is very delicate. That of the full-grown animal is leathery and must be steeped in a marinade.

All recipes for roebuck (q.v.) are suitable for fallow-deer.

Roast haunch of fallow-deer à l'anglaise. HANCHE DE DAIM RÔTIE À L'ANGLAISE – The haunch of fallow-deer (venison) is highly prized in England and is hung for quite a long time until it is high.

It keeps very well for several days if care is taken to hang it in a room well aired by a draught. Before hanging, the venison should be rubbed all over with a mixture of flour and pepper. The purpose of the flour is to keep out the damp and that of the pepper is to keep away the flies.

Before impaling the venison on the spit, trim it and coat with ordinary flour-and-water paste. Wrap it, coated with this mixture, in thick paper secured with several lengths of string.

Roast for 4 hours, basting frequently.

(Care must be taken not to cut the fat off the venison. The fatter it is the better.)

Ten minutes before removing the roast from the spit, unwrap it and scrape off the flour-and-water paste. Pour melted butter over the venison and sprinkle with salt and flour. Put it closer to the fire so that it is well browned.

With roast haunch of venison, it is usual to serve boiled French beans or chestnut purée, and redcurrant jelly. Haunch of stag is cooked in the same way, but is less highly prized than that of fallow-deer.

FANCHETTE or FANCHONNETTE (Confectionery) – This gâteau, which was very popular in the past, is scarcely ever made today. This is a pity because it is excellent. It is made in a deep, round baking tin similar to that used for hot pâtés.

Line a baking tin with flaky pastry dough which has been rolled out and folded into 3 upon itself, 6 times. Fill this crust with a cream which is made like French pastry cream, with the following ingredients: 12 egg yolks, 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) powdered sugar, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) flour, 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) fresh thick cream, 1 tablespoon vanilla-flavoured sugar, a pinch of salt.

Bake the gâteau in a slow oven. When it is cold, cover with meringue. Decorate the top with meringue piped through a forcing bag. Sprinkle with sugar. Brown in the oven. Serve warm.

Coffee, chocolate, or almond cream, etc. may be substituted for vanilla cream.

FANES – Name given in France to the stalks, green or dry, of plants not cultivated for fodder.

The fanes of some pot vegetables are edible. Turnip stalks (turnip tops) can be cooked like spinach, but only if they are tender. An excellent soup is made from radish tops.

FANTAISIE – In France, the word fantaisie must appear on the label of synthetic products (fantaisie liqueurs, jams etc.). Fantaisie bread in France is bread sold by the piece and not by weight.

FAR – Porridge made from hard-wheat flour. The term is also used for a flan (tart) made in Brittany.

FARCI – Dish made in the south of France. It is cooked in stock and prepared in different ways. In its most usual form, the farci is cabbage stuffed with sausage meat or some other forcemeat, wrapped in muslin (U.S. cheesecloth) and cooked in stock.

Farci can also be prepared à la niçoise (see SOUFASSUM).

It can also be made by stuffing a breast of veal with forcemeat, cooking it in the liquid of a pot-au-feu (q.v.).

FARINACEOUS. FARINEUX – Containing flour or with a high starch content. Cereals, pulses, and potatoes are usually referred to as farinaceous foods.

FARINADA (Genoese cookery) – Gruel made from the flour of large white peas. When cooked it is poured onto an oiled board, cut into equal-sized pieces, and served as it is.

FARO – Belgian beer, only slightly fermented. It is relatively sour and often has sugar added to it.

FAR POITEVIN – A kind of farci (q.v.) made in Poitou from green vegetables and herbs (sorrel, green cabbage, white beet tops, lettuce). These are shredded raw, mixed with chopped pork fat, blended with cream and eggs, flavoured with chopped chives and parsley, highly seasoned, and wrapped in green cabbage leaves and lettuce leaves (put in a net). It is then cooked in a hotpot containing fresh and salt pork and flavoured with vegetables.

FASÉOLE – Species of haricot (U.S. shell) bean, cultivated in southern regions. Prepared in the same way as Fresh white haricot beans (see BEAN).

FAT. GRAISSE – Greasy substance which softens at a low temperature. It is found in animal tissue and in some vegetable substances.

There are fats in almost all muscular animal tissue. Fat also surrounds many animal organs. It forms deposits equal to at least a thirtieth of the weight of the whole body.

There are three principal constituents in fat: stearin, olein and margarine. Stearin is solid at normal temperatures, olein is liquid, margarine has intermediate consistency.

Fats have the highest calorific value of all foods and they are usually cheap, but two factors prevent their being the most valuable of all. They produce a feeling of satiety more rapidly than other foods, and the system can only tolerate a limited amount of fat (toleration point varies from individual to individual).

The normal diet must contain a proportion of natural fats: an average of 75 g. (3 oz.) daily for an adult.

In very cold countries a far greater amount is needed.

Economy fat. GRAISSE D'ÉCONOMIE – All fats produced in the preparation of pot-au-feu, and dripping of various kinds, should be carefully collected and preserved.

Once they are clarified, they can be used in the cooking of a variety of dishes.

Clarification of economy fat. Carefully skim off all the fat on the surface of the stockpot. Strain it through a fine sieve into an earthenware bowl. Leave it to get cold overnight. Next day, prick the layer of fat in 2 places and pour off, through the holes, all the liquid which is underneath the congealed fat.

Separated from its liquid, the fat can be used in the cooking of vegetables (it is especially recommended for braised cabbage) but, unless clarified, cannot be used for frying.

When fat is to be used for frying, process as follows:

Melt the fat in a saucepan first over low heat, then over a higher flame. Keep on the boil until it stops giving off steam. As soon as the steam stops rising, remove the pan from the stove; otherwise the fat will burn and acquire a bitter flavour. Strain through a fine sieve or muslin. Pour into an earthenware bowl and store in a cool, dry place.

This fat can be further improved by the addition of a third of its weight of lard.

Frying fat. GRAISSE À FRITURE – Generally made from clarified beef kidney fat (suet).

FATTENING. ENGRAISSEMENT – Fattening is the process of preparing animals for slaughter by increasing their weight and improving the quality of their flesh. This is made more nourishing and flavoursome by the penetration of fat between the muscles, and inside the muscles themselves.

FAUBONNE – A thick soup made with purée of white haricot (U.S. shell) beans with a plain julienne of vegetables added. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS.)

FAUVES (Wild animals) – French hunting term used especially of animals of the deer family, such as stag, fallow-deer, chamois, and roebuck, as opposed to black game such as boar, and red game such as fox.

FAUX FILET or CONTRE-FILET – See BEEF, Contre filet.

FAVEROLLES – Name used in the south of France for all kinds of haricot (U.S. shell) beans. These are also called faverottes and favoies in this region.

FAVRE – Joseph Favre was not only one of the greatest nineteenth-century chefs, but also one of the finest writers on culinary matters. He was the author of the Dictionnaire universel de cuisine et d'hygiène alimentaire, a work in four volumes, which contains not only a large number of recipes, but a very interesting history of cookery.

Joseph Favre was also the founder of the first Academy of Cookery. His bust was moved to l'Académie culinaire de France in 1953.

FAWN. FAON – The young of a roe-dee, hind or fallow-dee. For the preparation of fawn, see ROEBUCK.

FEDELINI – Italian pasta in the form of narrow ribbons. All recipes for macaroni (q.v.) are suitable for fedelini.

FENDANT (Wine) – Name of a Valais vine, cultivated in the Vaud Canton in Switzerland, said to be a variety of Chasselas. Wine made from Fendant grapes has a strong aroma and is very heady.

FENNEL. FENOUIL – Aromatic flowering umbelliferous plant of Italian origin which is now widely cultivated. It has a slight flavour of aniseed.

The edible part of this plant is the very fleshy bulbous stem at the base of the leaf stalk. This stem, which in French cookery is called fenouil tubéreux, and which the Italians, who are very fond of it, call finocchio, is cooked like celery. It can be eaten raw or cooked. In England it is called Florence fennel.

Both the bulbous stem and the leaves of the fennel plant are used in cookery to flavour a large number of dishes. Fennel is an excellent condiment.

Sprig of fennel

Bulbous stem of fennel

Fennel with bone-marrow. FENOUIL À LA MOELLE – Braise in meat stock (see below). Complete cooking as for Cardoons with marrow (see CARDOON).

Fennel braised in meat stock. FENOUIL AU GRAS – Trim the fennel stems. Parboil for 5 minutes in boiling salt water. Cool under running water. Drain, and dry in a cloth. Quarter them or, if they are small, leave whole. Put them in an ovenproof dish lined with pork skin, and sliced onions and carrots. Moisten with a few tablespoons rather fat stock. Bring to the boil. Cover the pan and cook slowly in the oven.

Fennel in cream. FENOUIL À LA CRÈME – Fennel stems, simmered in butter or braised in meat stock as indicated above, can be put into a cream sauce and simmered for a few minutes before serving.

Fennel au gratin. FENOUIL AU GRATIN – Cook the fennel stems in butter or braise in meat stock. Put them in a buttered ovenware dish, sprinkle with grated cheese, and pour on melted butter. Brown in the oven.

Fennel in gravy. FENOUIL AU JUS – Braise in meat stock. Simmer for a few minutes in concentrated brown veal stock.

Fennel à la grecque. FENOUIL À LA GRECQUE – Proceed as indicated for Artichokes à la grecque. (See ARTICHOKE.) Fennel prepared in this way is served as an hors-d'oeuvre.

FENNEL-PEAR or FENOWLET. FENOUILLET – Variety of pear which tastes slightly of aniseed. Three varieties are grown in France: fenouillet gris, fenouillet gros, and the fenouillet rouge.

FENNEL-WATER. FENOUILLETTE – Liqueur made commercially, obtained from fennel seeds.

FENUGREEK. FENUGREC – Unusual Asiatic herb with slightly bitter aromatic seeds sometimes used in making curry.

FÉRA – Breed of salmon found in Lake Geneva and several other lakes in Switzerland, Bavaria, and Austria.

This fish is similar to the laveret, but the two differ in shape. The féra's body is more compact, its scales are larger, and its jaws, sloping obliquely back, are somewhat truncated.

The colouring of the féra varies with the season, the age of the fish, and its habitat. It is easy to distinguish the different varieties because the white féra is found in very deep waters; the black féra in waters of average depth; the blue féra, which is really a young féra, has a bluish rather than greenish shimmer on the upper part of its body.

Féra

The Lake Geneva féra is the most highly prized. It is generally thought that the best Lake Geneva féra are those caught on the sandbank called the Travers where the water is very shallow and which forms a barrier across the lake near the port of Geneva. This fish, which fills out very rapidly by feeding on a winged insect called the caddis-fly, is very fat, white, and extremely delicate. The fishermen of Geneva sell it under the name of Féra du Travers.

Féra à la meunière – Scale, gut, and wash the féra. Dry thoroughly and season with salt and pepper. Dip in flour and cook in fresh butter over a moderate heat.

Baste frequently with the cooking butter. When cooked, drain the fish and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Pour on a few drops of lemon juice and the cooking butter, piping hot. Serve at once.

FERCHUSE – Culinary speciality of Burgundy. In former times it was traditionally made on the day when the pig was killed. Its name ferchuse is a corruption of fressure (pluck) (q.v.).

Use a large saucepan with a heavy base. Melt in it 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) fresh chopped pork fat. Bring to the boil, put in all the pork pluck (heart, liver, and lungs) cut into pieces and seasoned with salt, pepper, and spices.

Brown the pluck very quickly. When browned, sprinkle with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) flour. Mix well, stirring with a wooden spoon, and cook until the flour is golden. Moisten with 2 parts red wine and 1 part of water or stock. There should be enough liquid to cover the pluck completely.

Bring to the boil. As soon as the liquid is boiling steadily, add 8 chopped shallots, 6 crushed cloves of garlic, and a large bouquet garni. Simmer slowly for 1 hour, then add 6 large, chopped onions which have been browned in lard, and 10 or 12 large, quartered potatoes. Continue to simmer for a further 45 minutes.

FERMENT – The agent, living or not, that induces fermentation.

FERMENTATION – The chemical change induced by the action of bacteria.

Alcoholic fermentation. FERMENTATION ALCOOLIQUE – See ALCOHOL, WINE, BEER.

Fermentation of milk. FERMENTATION LACTIQUE – See MILK, CHEESE.

Putrid fermentation. FERMENTATION PUTRIDE – See PUTREFACTION.

FERMIÈRE (À LA) – Special method of preparing braised or pot-roasted meat, with a garnish of carrots, turnips, celery, and onions cooked slowly in butter until very tender. (See FONDUE, Végétale fondue.)

FERN. FOUGÈRE – The young shoots of certain ferns (such as the male fern and bracken) are edible and can be served like male hop-flower stalks.

FESTIVE COOKERY. CUISINE CALENDRAIRE – Customs closely linked to certain days of the year, to religion or to legend, give plenty of opportunity for celebrations; and these, naturally enough, call for special food. Many so-called 'festive' dishes are similar to those eaten throughout the year; some belong de rigueur to certain occasions and may not be so popular at other times. This chapter includes specialities served in particular circumstances (such as the grain or grape harvest) as well as those offered on fixed and moveable feast days.

It would be impossible to include all traditional cuisine in the space at our disposal – that would require several volumes. Readers may expand the list for themselves, by noting the recipes of festive dishes they discover in their travels.

We have drawn largely from the Manuel de folklore contemporain (A. et J. Picard et Cie, Paris) by A. Van Gennep (no longer available), and Vieux Dictons de nos campagnes (New Editions of la Toison d'Or, 1952) by G. Bidault de L'Isle. We cannot speak too highly of these works.

Epiphany (6 January). ÉPIPHANIE – The Romans used to vote with beans, and it was with beans that they chose the traditional 'king of the feast' at the Saturnalian banquets: the king being the one who drew the bean. This pagan ceremony persisted but in a slightly different form – the bean being placed in the Twelfth-Night cake.

About a century ago there was controversy over the origin of this ceremony. Some maintained that the idea itself was blasphemous. Since no-one came forward with a better explanation, the bean was hastily replaced by a small china doll which was meant to represent the Child Jesus whom the Magi had come to adore on this day of Epiphany.

The custom had its detractors long before this. On 30 December 1972 a motion of censure proposed by the citizen Scipion Duroure encouraged the councillors of the municipality of Paris to pass a decree declaring that from 6 January 1793, the feast called fête des Rois (feast of the Magi) would be called fête des Sans-Culottes (feast of the Extreme Republicans) – and the bean continued to be drawn.

And so all over France and in many other countries besides, the tradition of the Twelfth-Night cake continues. It takes different forms according to the region. The gâteau of Savoy, for instance, is a brioche or fruit cake; that of Verviers has cinnamon and candied sugar among its ingredients. The flaky pastry gâteau belongs to Paris. It used to be made by the bakers, but the pâtisseries resented this, and parliament was on the side of the pâtisseries since butter and eggs were used to make it. All the same the bakers eventually won the day and, up to about 1914, they continued to sell the famous gâteau on 6 January.

Saint Vincent (22 January) – Since the body of Saint Vincent was transferred first to Burgundy and then to Champagne, this saint has, naturally enough, become the patron saint of the vine growers. At one time the people of Burgundy never let his day pass without holding a gargantuan 'pig feast'. The Chevaliers du tête-vin revived this custom in 1934.

At Ligny-le-Châtel, in Yonne, it used to be the custom to offer a figure made of pastry (the mirlouzé) along with the consecrated bread on this day.

In the region of Mâcon, the feast of Saint Vincent consisted of a dish called couques which was made of haricot beans cooked in goose fat, and a variety of fritters made with bread, brioche, or apples. Sometimes there were thick pancakes called matefaims.

Saint Charlemagne (28 January) – This was once a festival day for schoolchildren – especially for those at boarding school. A great banquet used to be held. (The young prince, son of Napoleon III presided over the one held at the lycée Louis-le-grand in 1868) and 'champagne' that consisted solely of bubbles was drunk! An address was given in Latin to which nobody listened, and next day, classes were presided over by sick or slumbering teachers, satiated once again for the year.

Candlemas (2 February). LE CHANDELEUR – Candlemas is the Feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary; the one on which the virginal candle (la chandelle) is lit in remembrance of the presentation of Jesus at the temple of Jerusalem, in accordance with the law of Moses. In Roman times a pagan festival called Lupercalia was held near this date. Gelasius, who was Pope in 472, replaced this festival by Candlemas. Since Candlemas fell just as winter ended and spring began, the food was flour-based (old wheat to encourage the new). Fritters were served (butter and oil rouligneaux) and pancakes galore.

The pancake custom goes back a long way. The Ménager de Paris cites that, in the fourteenth century, the rule for a good pancake batter was that it be 'ni clère ni espoisse' (neither too thin nor too thick). And for superstition's sake, one had to toss the pancake higher than the kitchen cupboard while holding a coin in the hand.

At Montbard, biscuits are made from a mixture of flour and fat formed into human shapes whose features are marked with five haricot beans. These are called mariottes or marionnettes.

The feast of omelettes (10 February). LA FÊTE DES OMELETTES – This is how the villagers celebrate the return of the sun at Andrieux in the Hautes-Alpes. The valley in which this village lies is bereft of the sun's rays for about a hundred days a year. On 10 February the reappearance of the sun is the signal for general rejoicing. All the inhabitants busily prepare omelettes. At 10 a.m. these are carried to the square. The most venerable and aged of the inhabitants preside over the succeeding ceremony at which everyone dances the farandole holding their omelette pans in their hands. The whole gathering then goes to a stone bridge and the omelettes are placed on the parapets. When the sun peeps over the horizon about midday, the omelettes are offered to it. Home then, where every household makes and eats its own 'sacred' omelette in thanksgiving.

1st April – The sun happened to be in the constellation of Pisces on this date and the idea of poisson d'avril (April fish or fool) was born. Since 1 April was once the first day of the year, gifts were exchanged, particularly sweetmeats in the form of fish. These were the forerunners of the chocolate fish that we know today, which are just as characteristic of Easter as chocolate Easter eggs.

Saint Mark (25 April) – In the Baux de Provence, ring-shaped biscuits called toques are blessed and eaten.

Shrove Tuesday and Carnival. MARDI GRAS ET CARNAVAL – Depending upon when Easter Day falls, Shrove Tuesday is celebrated somewhere between 2 February and 9 March. Carnival begins on 6 January and can therefore last for anything between twenty-eight and sixty-six days. In the olden days it was particularly on Shrove Tuesday, the last day before Lent, that Carnival reached its height. The fattened ox with its accompanying traditions was one of the biggest attractions of the festival. Nowadays, in Burgundy and Dauphiné, Carnival delicacies are pancakes, fritters or bugnes, milk gruel, snake-shaped gâteaux called fantaisies. Another Burgundy speciality is cheese which is cooked in the cinders.

It's Mardi Gras
You mustn't go
I'll make you pancakes
And you will eat them-o!

In Champagne, pig's trotter always used to be eaten; its ear in Ardèche. In Touraine, it used to be leg of goat; in Limousin, a stuffed rabbit; in Quercy, an enormous vol-au-vent filled with jointed chickens and accompanied by salsify (sauce) in the Confolens region, they used to feast upon stuffed breast of veal.

In Provence, the last big meal before Lent had to be an aïoli.

Pies and flans used to be eaten in Hérault.

In Nivernais, the Shrove Tuesday meal was:

Clear soup with pasta
Boiled beef and vegetables
Coq au vin or chicken in white sauce
Roast turkey or goose
Salad seasoned with garlic and nut oil
White goats' milk cheese with cream
Prune tart
Burnt marc brandy (indispensable)

And all over France, people feasted themselves on pancakes, fritters, waffles, and various biscuits and cakes.

In Les Landes, the cook knew that her cruspets were perfectly baked when, if she sharply rapped the terrine containing them with her knuckles, it broke.

There were also cornious, merveilles and bottereaux (fried biscuits). In Touraine, there were russeroles (small fried yeast biscuits).

The faverolles of Sainte-Menehould were made with butter, flour and eggs.

In Marne, they ate the defeated fighting cockerels; and in the Ardennes, a gigantic omelette marked the end of the egg-eating period.

In Sologne, they made beugnons (pasta browned in a frying pan) or slices of white bread dipped in frying batter.

The gâteaux of Reims were four-horned.

In Alsace, at Ossenbach and elsewhere, slices of dried apples and pears were served with bacon or ham. The same dish was called séchu in Territoire-de-Belfort.

In the Côte-d'Or and in Isère, a cheese soup began the meal.

Lent. CARÊME – No eggs, no fat, no meat. Lent is symbolised by the cod and the herring, two fish that could be conserved in various ways. In Bordeaux, this period of penitence began on a merry note by one journeying to Caudéran to eat the lous limacs cendrés (snails cooked in the ashes).

At Uslades, in Ardèche, a special dish was created for Lent: pieces of a cheese called Sarrasoune, and pieces of other varieties of cheese, were placed in an earthenware jar with salt, vinegar and mustard and set aside to ferment for three weeks. The result was a rather sticky mess with a very strong flavour.

One had to become slowly accustomed to the rigours of the long period of fasting, during which even eggs were forbidden under the Ancien Régime. The first Sunday of Lent offered some alleviation, and resulted in the küchlis of Alsace (crown-shaped gâteaux), the bugnes of Beaujolais, and carpe brandonnière (enjoyed by the inhabitants of Mareuil in Touraine as well as those of Saône-et-Loire).

In Franche-Comté and French Switzerland, there were the piquerés, picrés or piconés (peas fried in pork fat) which the young married couples offered to their guests. These appear again in Yonne, under the name of guernaulée or grôle.

A dish of peas cooked first in water, then sautéed in lard, is variously called dimanche au Piquerey, au Picoué, dé Pwé, des Boïdges, des Piquérés, etc.

In Vermenton, échaudés and a pint of wine were distributed.

Mid-Lent. LA MI-CARÊME – Halfway through Lent was the signal for celebrations everywhere, accompanied by drinking sessions and feasts.

In Alsace, girls made special gâteaux which they distributed to the young men; in Hazebrouck, nuts were tossed into the streets. (These nuts, it was said, had the miraculous power of curing toothache.)

Palm Sunday. LES RAMEAUX – Or the first Sunday in Spring, because the blossom appears on the boxwood and the first spring flowers are ready to be picked. In provincial France the children attend Mass bearing a large branch of boxwood hung with ribbons, chocolates or candies, apples or prunes, croquets (little crisp almond biscuits), candied fruit or waffles. In Brittany and Anjou, the branches are laurel or rosemary.

In the Nice region, the branches used to be decorated with candied fruit (apple, pear, orange) and little biscuit men. These biscuit figures are also found in Auvergne where they are called bougeois. In Savoy they are animal-shaped. In Dauphiné, besides these figures, there are tortilles which are crown-shaped gâteaux. In Sarlat, the biscuit figures are called colombes and their features are marked with aniseed. In Ardèche they are called patins, suisses, or estèves. Elsewhere, gâteaux, sweetmeats, and 'red' eggs abound. In Aveyron, we find star-shaped biscuits called chaudels, along with aniseed dwarfs and biscuit figures. S-shaped or crown-shaped pâtisseries are the specialities in Perpignan. In Creuse, it is a cock; in Aubusson, a rosary of meringues with a ribbon threaded through them.

The cornus, cornudos, and cornuelles found in Limousin, Angoumois, and Périgord are triangular biscuits. In Berry, there are marmottes (little round biscuits). In Bergerac, around the year 1890, the branches were decorated with sardinoux (tiny salted fish); and in Quercy, real fish were served with the fouaces (girdle cakes).

Maundy Thursday. JEUDI SAINT – In Alsace, nothing but green vegetables are eaten in the home. But almost everywhere else this is the day where children (particularly choir boys) go from door to door collecting eggs and pennies.

Good Friday. VENDREDI SAINT – The most traditional dish is still cod; but in Selongey, on the Côte-d'Or, lentils have to be eaten to wash away one's sins; while in Alsace, bretzels crunched in unison by young engaged couples are a pledge of eternal love. Eggs 'gathered' on Good Friday were considered almost everywhere to have special qualities.

In Lorraine and in the Meuse valley, lasagne and other pasta are cut into lozenges and dipped in vinegar; or they become the tâtelats or tâtelots of Moselle by being cooked in water and seasoned with vinaigrette.

Easter. PÂQUES – The searching for eggs on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday was the preparation for the onslaught on hard-boiled eggs, pastries, and omelettes that marked the return to normal eating after Lent.

A long time before the advent of sugar-coated or chocolate eggs, it was the custom to dye and roll eggs. Children were told that Easter eggs were laid by hens, hares, or rabbits, depending upon the region.

However, there was other traditional Easter fare besides the indispensable omelettes. (In the Bray region, beechnut oil was set aside for making these.) Often it was roast kid or leg of mutton as in biblical days, but there were also parried ham or pork brawn in Burgundy; specially fattened roast sucking pig in the Metz region; dried saucisson in Gasconne; and saucisson omelette in Lauragais and Toulon.

In Ruffec and other Charentes provinces there are pies filled with minced meat. On Easter Saturday a pastry is made of flour, eggs, butter, and sugar. A large plate is lined with this, then a minced mixture of chicken or pigeon meat and hard-boiled eggs is placed upon it. This is covered with another layer of pastry. Before the pie is cooked, it is decorated by the daughter of the house with leaves, birds, and other simple shapes made of the leftover pastry. The pie is then glazed with yolk of egg and water and baked in the oven.

Pies, too, are served in Poitou; onion is added to those of Touraine.

In Louhans, a minced mixture of salt veal, chicken, and pork is the traditional filling for the pie.

In Southeraine (Creuse), the Easter pie is made of meat covered with halved hard-boiled eggs which give it a humped appearance.

The galette pacaude of Vendée (also called Easter bread) is made with bread dough kneaded with butter and eggs to make a brioche dough. Sugar and orange-flower water are added, and the paste is formed into a large loaf and cooked in a slow oven like a brioche.

There are many other varieties of Easter pâtisserie: cavagnats at Menton; cacavelli or campanili in Corsica; flaky pastry pies filled with juicy chunks of lamb in Aveyron, etc.

The well-known soupe dorée (slices of white bread dipped in a mixture of beaten eggs and milk, then browned in butter) belongs traditionally to Easter. It is called croûtes in certain parts of Savoy.

Pâté en croûte is still the Easter Monday dish in Loches and Ligueil. In Marseille, it is pickled pork omelette.

Ascension – The traditional cheese dance is performed on this day at Vic-sous-Thil on the Côte-d'Or. A cream cheese is placed in a large bowl and crowned with a bunch of lilac. When the dancer makes her final curtsy, the inn-keeper steps forward and smears her face with the cream cheese.

In the Montbéliard region, fritters and spiced milk curds (saizai) are the order of the day.

Curdled milk blended with the seeds of cultivated cardoons (caillebottes) used to be the Ascension Day dish in Vendée. The whey was cut crosswise and eaten with fresh milk and sugar.

Pentecost. PENTECÔTE – A haricot bean soup called 'the soup of the Holy Ghost' is the traditional dish in the village of La Croix in the Alpes-Maritimes. It is made in two enormous cauldrons, each containing 150 litres (33 gallons, 41½ gallons) soup, in a kitchen situated on the first floor of the church.

1 May – Roast pork and special gâteaux are offered on this day, in Burgundy. In Tours, everyone drinks the 'milk of May' to make them 'sweet and strong'.

Saint Isadore (10 May). SAINT ISIDORE – In Saint-Forgeux-l'Espinasse, the baker bakes 'Saint Isadores' which are large brioche figures 30 to 60 cm. (12 to 24 inches) high. These are exhibited in the church and later distributed.

Saint Phal (16 May) – At Viviers, in the Yonne, succulent duck pies are offered on this day. It is for this reason that the inhabitants are nicknamed 'ducklings'.

Corpus Christi. FÊTE-DIEU – Another type of cheese dance takes place on this day. A white cheese set in a bowl of cream is offered to the young girl who dances best.

15 August – At Ponts-de-Cé in Anjou, there is a net-fishing expedition. A banquet used to be held on this occasion at which everyone enjoyed a kind of fish stew laced with Anjou wine.

Harvest. MOISSONS – The harvest meal has always been a very important event. In Argonne, for example, at Pentecost, the master even used to offer a pre-harvest banquet to his future harvesters. The men who wielded the scythes, in particular, had a hard task before them out in the fields all day under the hot sun.

The following are a few examples of the kind of meals given. These, in a manner of speaking, formed part of their work contract in the Midi of France. There were five meals a day:

1. At 7 a.m. a crushed red anchovy spread on bread that had been dipped in oil and vinegar, along with a pickled onion or a piece of dry garlic-rubbed bread.

2. At 10 a.m. a hard-boiled egg and a piece of cheese.

3. At 1 p.m. lunch of soup followed by boiled vegetables or an onion omelette.

4. At 4 p.m. an enormous salad with a croûton of garlic-rubbed bread.

5. For supper, pork or mutton followed by an onion omelette called the moissonneuse (harvester) and soupo court (a meat ragoût mixed with rice).

In the Aude, lunch consisted of white lamb stew, or an omelette, or sheep's tripe.

In Seine-et-Marne a stew accompanied by cheese and salad was carried out to the fields at 11 a.m. In the evening there was charigot (a mutton ragoût served with potatoes).

In Doubs, at 4 p.m., there was the trempe which was a bowl of sweetened wine in which one dipped liches (strips) of bread.

Harvest festival. À LA FIN DES MOISSONS – There was always a meal to mark the end of the harvest but it was served under a variety of names – reboule, paulée, passée, berlot, pochée, barbatto. Fritters and offal were served in Creuse and in Somme; sausages in Alsace and in Franche-Comté; cured knuckle of pork in the Massif Central; boiled beef in Normandy; jugged rabbit in Marne, Beauce, Perche and around Nice; rabbit au sang in Cher; roast goose in Alsace, Touraine and Seine-et-Marne; preserved goose (confit d'oie) in the regions that specialise in it; roast cockerel more or less throughout Marne, Isère, Angoumois and Sologne. There was a lot of pasta served too: ravioli or meat pasties, lasagne, galettes (girdle cakes) and matafans, waffles and darioles.

In the Massif Central the dish of the day is patranque (a potato and cheese dish) and pountari (a meatless stuffing cooked in a casserole).

In the Meuse, there are cream or jam puffs and gouillates (thin pastry squares eaten with milk or vinaigrette).

October – In Burgundy, neighbours and friends meet to crack nuts and to drink the new wine as the evenings draw in. There is much singing and story-telling on such occasions.

In some parts of Yonne, a light meal used to follow the wine and nuts. Small, very spicy, dumplings called miottes were served along with girdle cakes and haricot beans.

Grape harvest. LES VENDANGES – It used to be the general custom to offer the grape-pickers a meal during the harvest. In the upper Rhine valley this consisted of a soup thickened with flour or potatoes, and white cheese mixed with munster or herbstkas. In the region of Ay and Epernay, the freshly butchered pig's head was kept for this meal. In Touraine, jugged rabbit with prunes was the speciality. In Beaujolais, there were chamoures (marrow flans).

The paulée, the meal that marked the termination of the grape harvest, is still the signal for gargantuan feasts, where the speciality of each region has pride of place.

1 November – In the centre of France, this evening was spent doing the pluche which consisted of peeling chestnuts, then boiling and eating them. In other places, they used to make and eat the milletée, a kind of mash made from millet grain cooked in milk. These traditions were usually linked with some superstition or other.

Martinmas (11 November) – In some country districts, the custom is to eat a roast turkey stuffed with chestnuts, or a fattened goose (it is the end of the fattening period for these fowl). And the rue aux Oyers, aux Oues, and aux Ours (by deformation), used to be close to the abbey of Saint-Martin-des Champs. The Dijon gastronomic fair used to begin on 11 November.

North of the French border, in Flanders and in the Rhineland, the cornes de Saint-Martin (crescent-shaped gâteaux) were offered on this day.

Christmas Eve. LA VEILLÉE DE NOËL – The hearty Provençal supper becomes a meatless meal on Christmas Eve. It varies from district to district in Provence.

It can be cauliflower; cod in raïto (cod, fried with wine sauce and capers); cardoons and chards in white sauce; snails; grey mullet with olives; celery à la poivrade; or omelettes with artichokes and fresh pasta.

But the highlight is the thirteen desserts: nougat des capucins made with figs, with nuts, and with honey; white nougat; the fougasse (girdle cake made with oil and orange-flower water); apples; pears; prunes; almonds; hazelnuts; the calissons of Aix; the biscotins; the casse-dents of Allanch, etc., washed down with hot wine and ratafi liqueur. Thirteen desserts, therefore, but not necessarily the same ones everywhere. And why thirteen? Simply in memory of the Last Supper which Christ shared with his twelve disciples.

Le réveillon (midnight feast) – Begins on return from Midnight Mass. (Réveillon means literally 'a new awakening').

The fasting of Christmas Eve, the length of the services (everyone used to attend laudes and matins before the three masses) and the (more often than not) long distance to cover coming and going, used to be justification enough for the réveillon. Also this was, materially speaking, the most important festival of all, the one that lent its name to all great rejoicings. On royal occasions, when large distributions of food were made to the people, the latter showed their delight by crying 'Noël! Noël!'

In Armagnac, a stew is served.

In Alsace, there is sauerkraut and goose liver.

In Nivernais, a pig is slaughtered, and everyone tucks into the puddings while they wait for the girdle cakes.

In Poitou, there is poultry and game; partridges, capons, small game birds, herons, leverets, hutch rabbits, pheasants, etc.

In Provence, those who are still hungry after the 'big supper' find a turkey, stuffed with chestnuts, waiting for them on their return from church.

In Touraine, a pig is slaughtered and there are quantities of black and white puddings followed by rillons (potted pork), cutlets, and finally the fouace (girdle cake).

In Roussillon, like everywhere else, oysters and foie gras take the place of honour at the beginning of the meal, followed by the local ham and a roast turkey nestling beside a roast hare. The glowing Muscat, Banyuls and Rancio wines add gaiety to the feast. For dessert, there is pineapple bread, then the tourrous (the nougat of the region), the rosquilles of Amélie-les-Bains, and the grebilles (crisp biscuits). All these are highly esteemed varieties of local pâtisserie.

Roast goose is eaten in the south-west; turkey almost everywhere else.

In the United States, Britain, and Canada, on Christmas Day there is roast beef, or a goose, or a turkey, with plum pudding and mince pies. At one time the royal Christmas dish was roast swan followed by plum pudding. Boar's head is served at Oxford.

In Austria, carp, potato chips, and pear flans are served at the réveillon. Then there is roast turkey or goose with apples, accompanied by a grilled noodle dish containing honey and poppyseeds for the midday meal on Christmas day.

In Denmark, there is hot rice sprinkled with cold milk, wheaten beer bread, ham and cod with horseradish sauce.

In Spain, there is almond soup and besugo (sea bream baked in the oven).

In Hungary, a substantial supper consisting of roast sucking pig and poppyseed cake is eaten before midnight mass.

In Switzerland, the Christmas patties are like apple turnovers except that they are made with pears.

Christmas cakes and biscuits. Cakes and biscuits have always been an integral feature of every feast day, to such an extent that they have taken on a ritual character, their shape and composition conforming to the solemnity of the occasion.

There are the Flemish quegnolles; the cochelins of the Beauce; the nourolles and aguignettes of Normandy; the noulets and cornabeaux of Berrichon; the calendau of Provence – and many others.

In Champagne, there is the bourde. This ritual gâteau used to be in the shape of a human figure and was eaten at Christmas time; now it is rectangular with two horns at either end. Bakers still make biscuits that are vaguely human-shaped. At Christmas, godparents used to give bourdes to their godchildren up to the period of their first Communion. These were placed in the children's shoes or under their pillows for them to eat when they awoke. The bourdes become quegnols in Châlons, cogneux in Lorraine, and burdins in Argonne. One Christmas in Moirement is described in the following few lines:

Early in the morning I baked for him
I made him a little burdin
Which is as big as our pitcher
I added a little lard
Because I hadn't enough butter

The gingerbread in Champagne takes the form of a Father Christmas, or of his ass. And all stuff themselves with waffles.

In Brittany, the black and white puddings and the cockerel make up the main part of the meal. But the fouaces (girdle cakes in the shape of a star, freshly made that morning) or the nolets topped with a cross, are still the most traditional of the delicacies. Best-known of all is the far, the cake that someone once said had the robustness of a nation.

At one time it was the custom to distribute among one's friends small gâteaux called nieulles. A huge loaf called pain de calandre was kneaded the night before and divided amongst the family, after a small piece had been cut off and marked with three or four crosses. This was kept as a remedy for all ills.

In Creuse, this loaf is made on Christmas Eve and a carefully prepared gâteau is put into the oven with it. This gâteau is said to have special properties and is put aside to be used in case of illness of man or beast. The belief is that all one has to do is to take a small piece to the ailing person in order to cure him immediately.

In Roussillon, the godfathers give their god-daughters a pineapple loaf called a tortell. Legend has it that Joseph gave this loaf to the Catalan shepherds who hastened to the stable at Christmas time.

FEUILLANTINE – Puff-pastries made with flaky pastry dough rolled out and folded into 3 upon itself 6 times. These pastries are cut out of the dough in strips 5 cm. (2 inches) long and 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) wide. They are brushed with white of egg, sprinkled with granulated sugar and baked in a moderate oven.

Feuillantines are served with afternoon tea and also, instead of wafers, with ice cream.

FEUILLE DE DREUX – See CHEESE.

FEUILLETON – Preparation made from thin slices of veal or pork, beaten flat, spread with layers of stuffing, and laid one on top of the other. When it has been built up, the feuilleton is wrapped in thin slices of pork fat or pork caul, and braised in the usual way.

Feuilleton of veal à l'ancienne. FEUILLETON DE VEAU À L'ANCIENNE – For a feuilleton weighing 2 kg. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  lb.), cut 10 thin slices from the noix or sous-noix (U.S. loin) of veal. Flatten these with a beater to make them rectangular in shape. Season with salt, pepper, and a pinch of spices.

Cut a very thin slice of pork fat rather larger than the slices of veal. Spread a slice of veal with fine pork stuffing to which has been added a third of its weight of à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) and a third of its weight of dry duxelles (q.v.), which has been bound with egg. Lay the slices of veal one on top of the other, spreading each with stuffing and ending with a layer of stuffing. Cover with a thin slice of pork fat. Fold the edges of the lower slice of pork fat so that they cover the sides of the feuilleton. Fold the edges of the upper slice over those of the lower slice. Tie the feuilleton neatly into shape. Put it in a buttered stewpan lined with bacon rinds and sliced onions and carrots. Add a bouquet garni. Cover, and simmer for 20 minutes. Moisten with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) white wine. Boil down. Add  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) brown veal stock. Boil down to a concentrated jelly. Moisten with 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) good stock. Cover, and cook in the oven for  $1\frac{3}{4}$  hours, basting frequently.

Drain the feuilleton. Untie and put it on a serving dish. Pour on a few tablespoons of the fat of the braising stock. Glaze in the oven, basting frequently. Surround with a Bourgeoise garnish (see GARNISHES) or garnish with braised celery, chicory, lettuce, cucumbers, etc.

Remove the fat from the braising stock. Strain and, if necessary, boil down. Pour a few tablespoons of this stock over the meat and serve the rest separately.

To ensure that the feuilleton is perfectly rectangular in shape it can be boxed in with thin rectangular pieces of white wood laid on the top, bottom, and sides, and kept in position with string.

This dish can also be made with different mixtures, stuffings, and salpicons. It can be braised in Madeira instead of white wine.

Feuilleton of cold veal in jelly. FEUILLETON DE VEAU FROID À LA GELÉE – Prepare and cook the feuilleton as for Feuilleton of veal à l'ancienne. Cool under a weight. Trim and put it on a bed of well-set jelly in a bowl. Pour over it enough half-set jelly to cover it (the jelly having been enriched with the braising stock diluted with unthickened meat juice). Chill on ice.

Feuilleton of veal à la périgourdine. FEUILLETON DE VEAU À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Prepare the feuilleton as indicated for Feuilleton of veal à l'ancienne, spreading the slices of meat with a stuffing made of two-thirds foie gras and one-third fine stuffing with diced truffles added. Braise in Madeira. Garnish with strips of truffle and slices of foie gras sautéed in butter.

Using the same method, feuilletons of pork or large poultry can be served hot or cold. Poultry feuilletons can be braised in white stock and served with a sauce and garnish especially suitable for poultry entrées.

FEUILLETTE – Cask roughly equivalent to the English quarter-cask, with a capacity of between 114 litres (25 gallons, 31 gallons) and 140 litres (31 gallons, 39 gallons). The ordinary feuillette holds between 133 litres (29 gallons, 36½ gallons) and 135 litres (29½ gallons, 37 gallons), and the large feuillette holds up to 140 litres (31 gallons, 39 gallons). The Burgundy feuillette only holds between 112 litres (24½ gallons, 30½ gallons) and 114 litres (25 gallons, 31 gallons).

FIASQUE – Wine flask (fiasco in Italian) with a wide base and long neck. It is usually wrapped in straw.

FIATOLE – Flat broad Mediterranean fish. It is striking in appearance with golden-yellow bars and spots on its leaden grey skin. It is fairly delicate to eat. All recipes for turbot (q.v.) are suitable for this dish.

FIÉLAS – Name given in Provence to the conger eel (q.v.), which is one of the ingredients of bouillabaisse. It can be stewed, cooked en matelote, etc. in the same way as eel.

FIELDFARE. LITORNE – Large type of thrush with greyish head-feathers. It is less delicate than the true thrush. All recipes for thrush (q.v.) are suitable for fieldfare.

FIELD-POPPY OIL. HUILE D'OEILLETTE – Edible oil obtained by pressing the seeds of the white poppy.

This oil is also known in France as white oil and olivette. It has the same culinary uses as olive oil.

FIG. FIGUE – Fruit of the fig tree.

There are three types of fig, the white fig, the purple fig, and the red fig. These three types are subdivided into a large number of varieties.

French figs are grown in the Midi, mostly in Var. The best-known varieties are buissonne, bellone, bourjasotte, célestine col de dame, dauphine violette. These figs are exported fresh between June and November.

The fig is also grown throughout the whole of the Mediterranean basin. Algeria is the principal supplier of dried figs.

Branch of fig tree with fruits

Besides being the sweetest of all fruits, the fig contains appreciable quantities of Vitamins A, B, and C. It has laxative and digestive properties (although if eaten when under-ripe there is a risk of its causing an irritation of the mouth and lips). Figs are more nourishing when dried and, like prunes, are improved by soaking for twenty-four hours before use.

Fresh figs are usually eaten raw in their natural state. They can be served as hors-d'œuvre with raw ham in the same way as melon.

Figs can also be cooked in various ways. All recipes for apricots (q.v.) are suitable for figs.

A fermented drink is made from figs, and also a spirit which is highly prized by the Arabs.

In central Europe roast figs are used to flavour coffee, as chicory is in France.

Corsican anchoyade. ANCHOIADE CORSE – Pound some peeled fresh figs with a pinch of garlic, and desalted anchovy fillets. Spread the resulting paste on slices of bread moistened with olive oil. Cover with chopped onions.

Dried figs. FIGUES SÈCHES – In the south of France, figs are preserved by drying in the sun. Very ripe autumn fruit is used. The figs, spread out on hurdles, are exposed to the sun. They have to be turned over several times during the drying and, before they are completely dried, are slightly flattened. Treated in this way, figs will keep a very long time.

Dried figs are eaten as they are. They can also be stewed, like all other dried fruits, and are used in various sweets and pastries.

Fig fritters. BEIGNETS DE FIGUES – Peel and quarter the figs. Steep them for 30 minutes in brandy or some other liqueur, and sugar. Dip them in light batter and deep-fry. (See FRITTERS.)

Leg of wild pig with figs. CUISSOT DE MARCASSIN AUX FIGUES – Draw the sinews from the meat, wipe it, thread it with lardoons, and place it in a cooked marinade for 10 days. Wipe the meat and roast with herbs until cooked but slightly rare.

Make a caramel. Add half marinade, half vinegar to the residue in the roasting pan. Boil this down and poach some fresh figs in it. Drain these and arrange around the roast leg of pork. Continue to reduce the liquid, add kneaded butter, and serve this sauce separately.

Fig marmalade – See MARMALADES.

Pork stew with green figs. DAUBE DE PORC AUX FIGUES VERTES – Brown a fillet of lean pork in lard with chopped onions. Add 1 glass water, and a bouquet of parsley, thyme, and bay leaf. Season with salt and pepper. Simmer for 1 hour.

Poach small green figs in water. Crush a pimento in the juice of 1 lemon. Add this to the pork. Simmer for 1 or 2 minutes and then serve the pork surrounded by the figs.

Stewed figs. COMPOTE DE FIGUES – See COMPOTE.

Fig tart. TARTE AUX FIGUES – See TART.

Fig wine or figuette. VIN DE FIGUE, FIGUETTE – Medicinal drink made from dried figs.

FILBERT. AVELINE – Another name for the hazelnut. The filbert tree, which produces these nuts, is a variety of the common hazel tree. They are called this because they are ripe about Saint Philbert's day – 22 August.

Recipes for filbert nuts will be found under HAZELNUT.

FILLET. FILET – Undercut of the sirloin of beef. A cut taken from the fleshy part of the buttocks of other animals. For methods of preparation see BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, PORK.

Filet mignon – Small cut of meat taken from the end of the beef fillet. Filets mignons are grilled or sautéed. (See BEEF.)

This term is also applied to fillet of lamb (q.v.), mutton (q.v.), veal (q.v.), and pork (q.v.).

Filletts of fish. FILETS DE POISSON – Fish cut lengthwise off the central bone before cooking, e.g. fillets of sole, whiting, etc.

Filletts of poultry and winged game. FILETS DE VOLAILLES ET DE GIBIERS DE PLUME – In France a filet as applied to game or poultry is, in the strict sense:

1. The under part of the breast of poultry and winged game.
2. The breasts themselves of poultry or game, cut off before cooking and prepared in various ways. They can be used whole or when they are too fat, as in the case of turkeys, cut into thin slices.

The breasts of poultry and game are more often known in cookery as suprêmes.

FILLETTE – Name for a small wine bottle used mainly for Anjou wines. Its capacity is about  $\frac{1}{3}$  litre (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cups).

FINANCIÈRE (À LA) – Method of preparing meat and poultry. Financière garnish (which is also used to fill pies and vol-au-vent) consists of cocks' combs and cocks' kidneys, quenelles, lambs' sweetbreads, mushrooms, olives and strips of truffles.

FIN DE SIÈCLE – See CHEESE.

FINE – Liqueur brandy (spirit of wine). The appellation must be followed by the name of the region whence it comes. (See COGNAC, Fine Champagne.)

FINES HERBES – This term is sometimes used to mean chopped parsley rather than a mixture of herbs and thus an omelette aux fines herbes contains only chopped parsley in addition to the usual seasoning.

Actually, fines herbes should be a mixture of herbs, such as parsley, chervil, tarragon, and chives.

FINTE – Fish somewhat similar to the shad. Like the shad, it returns to the rivers to spawn, but about a month later. It differs from the shad in shape, being rather more elongated, and unlike the shad it has very sharp teeth in both jaws. The finte is prepared in the same way as the shad (q.v.).

FIRECREST or FIRE-CRESTED WREN. ROITELET – Small singing bird which is prepared like lark (q.v.).

FIREDOG. LANDIER – Large kitchen andiron.

In his Dictionnaire raisonné du mobilier français, de l'époque carolingienne à la Renaissance, Viollet Le Duc defines antique firedogs and describes their uses in the kitchens of our ancestors:

'Stoves divided into several compartments were much less frequently used in kitchens than they are today. The food was cooked over the open fire. It will be readily understood that, in view of the great heat of the fire, it was impossible to use it for certain dishes which had to be stirred during cooking or which were prepared in small cooking pots.

'Stoves filled with live charcoal were propped on fire-dogs away from the hearth and at a convenient height for working. They made cooking very much easier. The kitchen staff even ate their food off these little stoves and kept themselves warm at the same time.

'Kitchen firedogs were simple in design, though they were forged with great care. Those designed for living apartments were often very richly ornamented with scroll work. Few firedogs made before the fifteenth century have much artistic merit.'

FISH. POISSONS – Most fish are edible and the fish world presents an enormous source of food. The most nourishing fish are river eels and lampreys, then come salmon, salmon trout, mackerel, turbot, fresh herring, and the conger eel. Among the least nourishing, although they are by no means to be despised, are bream, sole, and lemon sole.

Fish contains the same proportion of protein as meat. It has approximately the same food value and contains significant amounts of Vitamins B and D. It is rich in phosphorous and iodine, deficient in calcium, and contains less iron than meat.

The water content of all fish is much the same – 75 per cent. The albuminoids also vary little from species to species – they constitute about 18 per cent. The fats are found in more variable quantities. There are fish very rich in fat content, such as eel (26 per cent); fish fairly rich in fats such as lamprey (12.5 per cent), shad (8.42 per cent), mackerel (8.31 per cent), sturgeon (7.91 per cent), and herring (6 per cent); and lean fish such as pike, ray and bream.

Fish (Nicolas)

Fish for bouillabaisse (French Government Tourist Office)

The flesh of fish, therefore, does not differ greatly in content from the flesh of land animals: it may perhaps contain slightly less nitrogenous substances, but the fat content and the proportion of mineral is substantially the same, in particular that of phosphorated compounds. Owing to the fact that fish (particularly lean fish) is easily digestible, it is an excellent food for children and expectant mothers but it must be fresh, not oily, and served grilled, in soup, or baked.

From the practical point of view, it is interesting to note the quantity of waste of a whole fish. Thus carp, fresh cod, and sole carry 50 per cent waste, bass 47 per cent, perch and trout 44 per cent, small frying fish (such as gudgeon and smelts) from 40 per cent to 30 per cent, and the fresh sardine only 20 per cent.

Fish is subject to speedy decay by bacterial action and often causes food poisoning if it is not absolutely fresh.

At the market, the freshness of fish can be recognised by the firmness of the flesh; a clean fresh smell, without any suggestion of anything musty, unpleasant, sweetish or pungent; bright eyes, which should stand out and not be embedded in the orbits; bright scales and bright red gills.

Flat fish. POISSONS PLATS – There are two kinds of flat fish: fish flattened vertically (such as ray or skate) the upper, exposed side being dark and the underside white; and fish flattened laterally, which are the real flat fish, the white and dark sides representing the flanks, the back and the belly being represented by the flattened sides; the two eyes are both on the same side (the coloured side). Depending on the position of the eyes, flat fish are classified into dextral species, if the eyes lie on the right side of the head, and sinistral species, if they are on the left. The anus is always visible on the underside. Plaice, flounder, sole, and lemon sole are right-sided; while sardine, turbot, and brill are left-sided.

Poisonous fish – The flesh of certain varieties of fish, generally those inhabiting tropical seas, is permanently poisonous; other species, such as grey gurnard, carp-bream, garfish, etc., become poisonous at certain times.

Venomous fish – These fish, the flesh of which is often excellent, must not be confused with fish mentioned in the preceding paragraph. Venomous fish have dorsal fins armed with spines which are grooved and provided with poison glands. These can cause very painful and even dangerous wounds if they are handled without due precaution as, for instance, in the case of the weever or sting-fish.

Recipes for different fish are listed in their alphabetical order.

Fish mousse. MOUSSE DE POISSON – Ingredients. 1 kg (2½ lb.) fish (net weight), 4 to 5 egg whites, 1½ litres (2½ pints, 5¼ cups) fresh thick cream, 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon white pepper, pinch of spices.

Method. Season the fish with salt, pepper, and spices, and pound in a mortar as finely as possible. While pounding, add the egg whites a little at a time. Rub the mixture through a fine sieve.

Put it in a pan and leave to stand on ice (or in a cool place) for 2 hours. Add the cream, a little at a time, stirring with a wooden spoon.

Fill a mould three-quarters full with the mixture. Stand in water and poach in a moderate oven. When cooked, leave to stand for a few seconds before turning out.

Appropriate garnishes are: cancalaise; various species of mushrooms sautéed in butter; shrimps; dieppoise; freshwater crayfish; Joinville; Nantua; marinière; mussels; normande; green peas in butter; asparagus tips in butter; princesse; trouvillaise; Victoria.

Recipes for all the garnishes are given under GARNISHES. Fish mousses are covered with one or other of the following sauces (q.v.) to blend with the garnish selected:

aurore, cardinal, cream, shrimp, curry, diplomate, parsley, lobster, Joinville, marinière, Nantua, normande, ravigote, riche, vénitienne, Victoria, white wine.

Fish roes on toast. CROÛTES AUX LAITANCES – Poach roes in a little butter and lemon juice, and place on rectangles of bread fried in butter. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs which have been fried in butter. Squeeze lemon juice over and put in a hot oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

FISH KETTLE (Fish boiler). POISSONNIÈRE – Kitchen utensil intended for cooking fish. It usually contains a removable grid which makes it possible to take out the fish without breaking it.

FISSURELLE – Species of gasteropod mollusc in a conical shell similar to that of the limpet or barnacle. It has radiating ribs and is perforated at the tip. Fissurelles live in temperate and tropical waters and there are about a hundred different types. The Greek fissurelle, called Saint Peter's ear, is very common in the Mediterranean.

All recipes for octopus (q.v.) are suitable for this mollusc.

Fissurelle

Fistulina hepatica

FISTULANE – Common French name for a headless mollusc also known as gastrochère. Its shell is tubular. Fistulanes are cooked in the same way as cockles (q.v.).

FISTULINA HEPATICA. FISTULINE HÉPATIQUE – A somewhat tasteless edible fungus which grows on the trunks of oak trees. It is commonly known in France as langue-de-boeuf (ox tongue) or foie-de-boeuf (ox liver). In U.S.A. it is known as liver fungus.

FLAKES. FLOCON – Name given to certain cereals, flattened in a rolling-mill and used (in France) as a garnish in soups or as an ingredient of porridges.

FLAKY PASTRY. FEUILLETAGE – See DOUGH.

FLAMANDE (À LA) – Name of a hotpot and of a garnish, which is used especially for large cuts of meat served as an intermediate course. It consists of braised cabbage, carrots, diced belly of pork, and potatoes. (See GARNISHES.)

The name à la flamande is also applied to a method of preparing asparagus (q.v.).

FLAMBER – To sprinkle a dish with spirits which are set alight just before serving.

FLAMICHE – Legrand d'Aussy (a French scholar, 1737–1800), thus described the flamiche as it was made in his day: 'It is a kind of galette made with baker's dough. It is rolled out with a rolling-pin and put in the oven while the wood is burning. As soon as it has been thoroughly heated, it is taken out of the oven and spread with butter. It is eaten as soon as it comes out of the oven.'

Nowadays the name flamiche is given to a kind of leek tart made in Burgundy and Picardy.

To make this tart, line a buttered tart tin with pastry, fill with sliced white leeks which have been cooked slowly in butter until very tender, blended with yolks of egg and well seasoned. Cover with a thin layer of lining pastry. Press the edges together and crimp them. Brush with egg and bake in a very hot oven.

In some parts of France, this tart is made with a mixture of flour, egg yolks, yeast, sugar, and rum or brandy.

FLAMINGO. FLAMANT – Wader with webbed feet. The Romans considered it a delicacy though it is now less highly prized. It is cooked in the same way as bustard (q.v.).

FLAMIQUE – A form of flamiche made in some parts of northern France.

FLAMRI – A semolina pudding, usually served cold, covered with a purée of raw red fruit. Boil  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) white wine with the same quantity of water. Gradually pour into it 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) fine semolina. Mix. Simmer gently for 25 minutes. To this 'porridge' add 300 g. (11 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{3}$  cups) fine sugar, 2 whole eggs, a pinch of salt and 6 stiffly whisked egg whites. Pour the mixture into a buttered mould, put it in a pan of hot water, and bake. Leave to cool.

Turn out the pudding and pour over it a purée of sweetened raw red fruit (strawberries, redcurrants, raspberries).

FLAMUSSE (Burgundian pastry) – Flan made of lining pastry filled with a cheese-flavoured cream blended with eggs.

FLAN – Pastry preparation whose name comes from the metallurgical term flan (a metal disc). The flan has been in existence for many centuries. The Latin poet Fortunatus (530–609 A.D.) mentions it. He says that Saint Radegonde, as an exercise in mortification, made flans but ate only the coarse outer crust of rye or oatmeal dough.

A flan is an open tart filled with fruit, cream, etc.

Flans can be served as hors-d'œuvre or as a light main course, and as such have a savoury filling. They are also served as a sweet. Recipes for savoury flans and some sweet flans are given below. Recipes for sweet flans are also given under TART. (In U.S.A. a flan is known as a tart or pie.)

Flan cases – Made in the same way as tart cases, and are either baked blind (unfilled) or with the indicated filling.

How to prepare flan cases

Flan cases are made of short pastry, fine lining or ordinary pastry, sweet pastry, semi-flaky pastry, or with left-overs of puff pastry.

Apple flan Grimaldi. FLAN AUX POMMES GRIMALDI – Cut 4 big cooking apples into quarters and cook them in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain and arrange in a flan case (U.S. pie shell) filled with rice, prepared in the following manner:

Bake the flan case blind in a flan ring. When ready, fill with cooked sweetened rice, mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of candied orange peel shredded very finely, flavoured with Curaçao, and with 1 tablespoon butter added to it.

Put the well-drained apple quarters on this rice, sprinkle with crushed macaroons and castor sugar and glaze in the oven.

This flan is served hot, accompanied by Curaçao-flavoured Custard cream (see CREAM).

Flan à la bordelaise – Bake a flan case blind. Fill with a coarse salpicon of beef bone-marrow mixed with diced, lean, cooked ham and blended with very thick Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate the top, alternating strips of poached and drained, bone-marrow with fresh mushrooms which have been sliced and sautéed in oil. Sprinkle with toasted breadcrumbs. Pour on melted butter. Brown quickly in a very hot oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Flan à la bourguignonne – Bake a flan case blind. Fill with a mixture prepared as follows: Simmer 10 sliced white leeks in butter, without browning. When very tender, add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) enriched with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fresh cream, boiled and strained. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour on melted butter and brown in the oven.

Brillat-Savarin flan. FLAN BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Bake blind a flan case made of Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Fill this crust with very creamy scrambled eggs and truffles. Decorate the top with strips of seasoned truffle dipped in melted butter. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan. Pour on melted butter. Brown in a very hot oven.

Carrot flan à la flamande. FLAN DE CAROTTES À LA FLAMANDE – Fill an unbaked flan with finely chopped carrots, boiled in a little water with butter, sugar, and flavouring to taste. Moisten with a few tablespoons custard, slightly thickened with potato flour or arrowroot.

Bake in a moderate oven. Just before it is cooked sprinkle with icing sugar and return to the oven until it is evenly glazed. This flan can be served hot or cold.

Cheese flan. FLAN AU FROMAGE – Line a flan ring, standing on a buttered baking sheet, with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Fill with a mixture prepared as follows: Boil  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) thick fresh cream with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Add 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour and mix on the stove to obtain a rather thick cream.

Take the pan off the heat and add to the cream 4 egg yolks and 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) grated Gruyère cheese. Blend into the mixture the whites of the eggs, beaten to a very stiff foam. Bake the flan in a hot oven.

Other types of cheese, such as Cantal, Dutch cheese, Parmesan, etc., can be used for this flan.

Selection of flans (Dehillot. Phot. Larousse)

Cheese flan Juliette Récamier. FLAN AU FROMAGE JULIETTE RÉCAMIER – Stand a flan ring on a buttered metal baking sheet. Line with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Fill the bottom of the flan with beef bone-marrow dipped in concentrated veal stock and flavoured with chopped parsley and shallot cooked in white wine until all the moisture has evaporated. Season with salt, pepper, and grated nutmeg.

Fill the flan half-full of cream made like French pastry cream (see CREAM) but unsweetened, with grated cheese and a little fresh cream added. Bake in a moderate oven.

As soon as the flan is ready, turn it out and place on an ovenware dish. Decorate the top with a few tablespoons very soft scrambled eggs flavoured with cheese. Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown as rapidly as possible.

Chicken liver flan Chavette. FLAN DE FOIES DE VOLAILLE CHAVETTE – Make a flan case with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) and bake blind.

Prepare a ragoût of chicken livers cut into thick pieces. Season with salt and pepper, and sauté quickly in sizzling butter. Drain the livers and keep hot. In the same butter, sauté 150 g. (5 oz.) sliced mushrooms. Season. Drain and keep warm with the chicken livers.

Pour 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) Madeira into the pan in which the livers and mushrooms have been cooked. Boil down. Add  $3\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) thin Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) fresh cream. Add to this sauce the pieces of liver and mushrooms and cook until fairly thick. Strain the sauce through a sieve and put the livers and mushrooms back in it. Keep hot without bringing to the boil.

Scramble some eggs (they should be rather soft). Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) grated Parmesan and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Put the chicken livers and mushrooms at the bottom of the flan. Cover with the scrambled eggs. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour on melted butter and brown in a very hot oven.

Freshwater crayfish flan à la Nantua. FLAN D'ÉCREVISSES À LA NANTUA – Bake a flan case blind. Fill with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH) mixed with truffles. Brown quickly in a very hot oven.

All shellfish flans, with shrimps, crabs, lobsters, and spiny lobster are prepared in this way. The truffles can be omitted.

Flan à la financière – Bake a flan case blind. Garnish with a ragoût à la financière thickened with concentrated Demi-glace (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs. Brown in the oven.

Flan à la florentine – Bake a flan case blind. Fill with a layer of spinach (cooked whole, drained, squeezed, coarsely chopped, and simmered in butter). Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour on melted butter and brown in a hot oven.

Leek flan with cheese. FLAN DE POIREAUX AU FROMAGE – Stand a large flan ring on a buttered baking sheet. Line with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) and bake blind. Remove the flan ring. Place the flan on an ovenware dish. Line the flan with a few tablespoons Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Arrange on top a few white leeks, parboiled for a very short time and simmered in butter. Cover with mornay sauce enriched with butter. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan, pour on melted butter, and brown in the oven.

This flan can also be made with small onions instead of leeks. The onions must be well glazed first.

Raspberry cream flan. FLAN AUX FRAMBOISES À LA CRÈME – Remove the stems from the raspberries. Cover with sugar. Put a layer of French pastry cream (see CREAM) flavoured with vanilla on a baked flan case. Cover with raspberries and a small amount of raspberry jelly.

Flan à la reine – Bake a flan case blind. Fill with chicken Salpicon à la reine (see SALPICON). Sprinkle with toasted breadcrumbs and brown in a very hot oven. Decorate the top of the flan with strips of truffle.

Rice flan – See RICE.

Flan à la Sagan – Bake a flan case blind. Line the bottom with a salpicon (q.v.) of mushrooms and truffles blended in cream and seasoned with curry powder. Arrange slices of calves' brains sautéed in butter on top, with a strip of truffle on each slice. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with curry. Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour on melted butter, and brown in a hot oven.

Seafood flan. FLAN AUX FRUITS DE MER – Bake a flan case of Fine lining paste or Flaky pastry (see DOUGH). Fill with a seafood ragoût (oysters, mussels, freshwater crayfish tails, cockles, and other shellfish). Blend in rather thick Normande sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with toasted breadcrumbs, pour on melted butter, and brown in a hot oven.

Shellfish flan. FLAN DE CRUSTACÉS – Using cooked lobster, crayfish, or some other shellfish, and a sauce appropriate to the fish chosen, proceed as indicated in the recipe for Fresh-water crayfish flan à la Nantua.

Sole flan à la normande. FLAN DE SOLES À LA NORMANDE – Fillets of sole prepared à la normande arranged as a border in a flan crust. Cover with Normande sauce (see SAUCE) and garnish as indicated for Fillets of sole à la normande (see SOLE).

Fish flans of all kinds can be made in the same way. Fillets of fish are first poached in white wine or cooked in butter and arranged as a border in the flan. Any meatless garnish can be put in the flan and covered with a sauce appropriate to the garnish used.

FLANDERS. FLANDRE – The cookery of this northern province has much in common with that of Artois and Picardy.

Culinary specialties – Baby chitterlings of Cambrai and Armentières; smoked tongues of Valenciennes; craquelots of Dunkirk (herrings smoked with the leaves of the hazelnut tree); soupe verte (green soup); Flemish hotpot; poule au blanc (chicken in white sauce); rabbit with prunes; tartine de beurre.

Among the best-known sweets and pastries are: apple pâté of Avesnes; craquelins of Roubaix; carrés of Lannoy; kokeboterom of Dunkirk (small buns made with eggs and butter, sweetened and decorated with raisins); red plum tarts; couques; bêtises from Cambrai.

Good cheeses are made in French Flanders. Those of Bergues, Mont-des-Cats and Marolles (a very pungent cheese) are the best known.

Beer is the local drink, and good quality spirits are distilled from juniper and beetroot.

FLANGNARDE – This flan, which is sometimes called flognarde, is made in Auvergne and Limousin.

Put 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) flour in a bowl. Break 3 eggs into it. Add a very little salt. Sweeten. Mix to a smooth paste, adding  $\frac{3}{4}$  litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints) milk, boiled and cooled. Flavour with vanilla or grated lemon rind.

Pour through a strainer into a deep buttered ovenware dish. Dot with small pieces of butter and bake in a hot oven. Serve hot or cold.

FLANK. FLANCHET – Cut of beef between the fat section and the breast. (See BEEF.)

FLATTEN. APLATIR – Action which renders a piece of meat (entrecôte, rump steak, escalope, cutlet, noisette, etc.) thinner by beating it with a beater or mallet. Flattening meat makes it easier to cook and makes it more tender.

FLAVOURING. PARFUM – Before the eighteenth century, flavourings very different from those in use today were employed often excessively. As well as the simple aromatic plants, such as thyme, bay leaf, savoury, coriander, aniseed, marjoram, and sage, more exotic aromatics like essence of roses or other flowers, benzoin, amber, etc., were quite common.

These aromatics are now only used in very small doses in the preparation of sweet courses, in pastry-making and confectionery.

Liqueur wines such as Madeira, Frontignan, port, sherry, etc. are widely used nowadays for flavouring.

Various brandies (Cognac, Armagnac, Calvados, etc.) are used for flavouring sauces and gravies and for bringing out the taste of preparations such as game stews, salmis, shellfish à l'américaine or à la bordelaise, woodcock flambe, pressed wild duck, etc.

The purpose of seasoning is to give relish to food. Information relative to aromatic plants and their uses in the kitchen will be found in the entry entitled CONDIMENTS.

FLETCHERISM. FLETCHÉRISME – Doctrine established by Horace Fletcher, American industrialist, who restored his gravely failing health by following an extremely austere diet (after having read Gornaro's book on the subject). He claimed to have discovered the 'golden key to health' in mastication pushed to its extreme limits: not swallowing a mouthful of food until it was reduced to the state of a liquid pap and had lost all its flavour.

FLEUR DE DECAUVILLE – See CHEESE.

FLEUR DE FARINE – Pure wheaten flour.

FLEURON – Small flaky pastry motif used to decorate certain dishes and the top of pâtés in pastry crust.

FLEURS DE VIN – Little whitish or bluish flakes, caused by the development of mycoderma vini, which appear in wines on the turn. The appearance of these flakes generally precedes acid fermentation.

FLOATING ISLAND. ÎLE FLOTTANTE – Cut into thin layers a stale Savoie (sponge) cake. Steep the slices in kirsch and maraschino. Spread each one with apricot jam and sprinkle with chopped blanched almonds and dried currants.

Build up the cake into its original shape by laying the slices one on top of the other. Ice with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with vanilla. Decorate with almonds, chopped pistachio nuts, and currants. Pour chilled vanilla-flavoured custard over the cake.

The pulp of strawberries, raspberries, or redcurrants, sieved and sweetened, may be used instead of custard.

FLORENTINE (À LA) – Method of preparation used mainly for fish and eggs, set on a bed of spinach cooked in butter, covered with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkled with grated cheese, and browned.

FLOUNDER. FLET, FLÉTAN – Common name for a fish of the same family as the brill, dab, lemon sole, sole, and turbot. While these others never leave the sea, flounders, though also saltwater fish, are often found in fresh water. They are even caught in the River Seine between Pont-de-l'Arche and Les Andelys.

The flounder is oval in shape, covered with tiny scales. They vary in colour from greenish brown to blackish yellow, with yellow, orange, or reddish markings.

In France, the flounder is sometimes known as flandre (or flondre) de rivière or de picard. In former times it was incorrectly called flétan (halibut) which is in fact, a quite different fish, found in northern waters.

In northern countries of Europe, especially Norway, flounders are preserved by drying and smoking. All recipes for brill (q.v.) and turbot (q.v.) are suitable for flounders.

The flounder plays an important part in American cookery, often taking the place of sole and turbot which are not found in American waters and, having to be imported, are rather expensive.

Flounder

FLOUR. FARINE – Flour is the finely ground and bolted meal of wheat and other cereals, including rye, buckwheat, rice oatmeal and maize (corn), but since wheat, with its content of gluten, is best for breadmaking, the word flour generally connotes wheat flour. The milling of grain for flour dates back to prehistoric times. What for centuries was the hard domestic job of producing flour that could be made into bread, has developed through the ages into a large industry. There is evidence that wheat or corn was crushed and used as food at least 6000 years ago; the pounding stones used for this purpose have been discovered in archaeological diggings in the British Isles, Switzerland, and elsewhere.

The Romans invented slightly conical millstones (querns) which were turned by hand or by slave and beast. Once the grain was crushed, the flour was bolted through horsehair sieves to produce different grades of flour. The invention of the water-propelled mill dates from about the time of the birth of Christ, and it was also at this time that flat millstones were used in preference to conical shapes.

Windmills first appeared in Europe about 1300 and were widely used until the invention of the steam engine in 1760. From then on rapid advances were made, culminating in roller mills, invented and perfected in Switzerland between 1834 and 1836. The roller system, with many modern mechanical improvements, is still in use in all large commercial mills.

Flour (Nicolas)

The wheat kernel is composed of three parts; endosperm, germ or embryo, and bran. The object of milling is to separate the endosperm from the bran and germ, because white flour is derived from the endosperm which generally comprises 84 per cent of the kernel, as opposed to the 2 per cent content of germ and 14 per cent content of bran. Modern commercial milling of wheat first cleans the grain by means of air blasts and disk separators. After this the wheat is moistened and allowed to 'temper', a process which hardens the bran and makes the separation more complete.

Separation is accomplished by alternated reductions (rollings at varying tensions), and purifications (classifications by mechanised winnowing and sifting of the endosperm particles, the bran chips and the germ). The results of these successive reductions and purifications are blended into various standard and commercial blends (patents and clear grades) depending on the amount of germ and bran left in the endosperm flour. Freshly milled white flour is pale yellow but becomes white with ageing. To hurry this process most mills use a chemical agent which is rigorously controlled by the government. Vitamin content lost in this process is usually replaced.

Dietitians blame modern milling processes for causing the loss of certain essential elements of wheat. The proteic layer is one. It contains three times more protein substances, nine times more fatty substances, and ten times more mineral salts than the farinaceous kernel of grain. Then there are the vitamins, diastases, enzymes, which accumulate in the husks. The same applies to the wheatgerm, which contains in its very small volume, substances of immense nutritional value. The great elasticity of the wheatgerm prevents it being crushed in the course of modern milling processes, and it is consequently discarded with the other waste matter.

Graham flour is unbolted wheat meal ground from the whole kernel. Whole wheat, wholemeal or entire wheat contains all of the kernel except a portion of the bran.

FLOURING. FARINER – To sprinkle fish or other food lightly with flour.

To dip in flour small pieces of meat, usually escalopes and cutlets of veal, and lamb cutlets, before dipping in egg and breadcrumbs and frying in butter.

FLOUTES (Alsation cookery) – Quenelles made with mashed potatoes.

FLUKE. CARRELET – See PLAICE.

FLUORINE. FLUOR, FLUORURES – Under normal conditions, man absorbs small quantities of fluorine with his food, the most valuable source being drinking water. Children who drink water that is deficient in fluorine are much more susceptible to dental caries than children who live where the drinking water contains not less than 1 mg. fluorine per litre. Foods richest in fluorine are fish and tea. Small amounts of it are present in meat, egg, cow's milk, and fresh vegetables.

FLûTE – The long French roll popular in the Paris region. The flûte à potage is a long French roll used for making croûtes served with broths and hotpots.

FLUTE. CANNELER – The operation of cutting vegetables, fruit, and the edges of some sweet courses in a decorative manner. Vegetables, mushrooms, and lemons can be decoratively cut with kitchen knives or with special tools. Circles of pastry cut with a fluted-edged pastry-cutter are said to be cannelés. The same term is used for the operation of marking the sides of a cake with a small knife, although this is more often called chiquetage (pinking).

FOGOSCH – This Hungarian fish is a pike-perch (q.v.).

FOIE GRAS – Preparations made from the livers of fattened geese and ducks were known in the ancient world.

The goose was regarded by the Romans not only as a sacred animal (from the time when a goose saved the Capitol), but also as a succulent one, for its meat and liver were highly prized by gourmets of the period.

The Romans used various methods of fattening ducks and of causing a considerable swelling of the liver.

Scipio Metellus, a Roman gastronome, had the idea of plunging the still warm livers in a bath of milk and honey, where they were left for several hours. When taken out of the milk, the livers were considerably swollen.

In cookery the name foie gras is used only of goose or duck liver fattened in a special way. The livers of Toulouse and Strasbourg geese sometimes weigh 2 kg. (4½ lb.).

Foie gras is regarded as one of the greatest delicacies available. 'The goose,' says C. Gérard, author of L'Ancienne Alsace à table, 'is nothing, but man has made of it an instrument for the output of a marvellous product, a kind of living hothouse in which grows the supreme fruit of gastronomy.'

This 'fruit' is foie gras, from which are made the succulent potted products and pâtés of Strasbourg, Toulouse, Périgueux, Nancy, etc.

The finest foies gras comes from geese reared in Alsace and south-western France. Toulouse foies gras are greatly sought after. Duck foie gras is also very delicate, but has a tendency to disintegrate in cooking. Other European countries besides France produce very good goose foie gras, notably Austria, Czechoslovakia and the Duchy of Luxembourg.

The quality of foie gras can be judged primarily by its colour and also by texture. It should be creamy-white, tinged with pink, and very firm.

Foie gras aspic – See ASPIC.

Foie gras en Bellevue – Line a plain mould with jelly. Decorate with strips of truffle and the whites of hard boiled egg. Cover these with a second layer of jelly. Leave on ice until thoroughly set. Add slices of poached foie gras or slices of potted foie gras with truffles. Fill the mould with half-set jelly. Chill on ice.

Foie gras en brioche (hot) – Season truffles and pour brandy over them. Take a large, very firm foie gras which will not disintegrate in cooking. Stud it with the truffles, and season with spiced salt. Pour brandy over it and leave to steep for several hours in this seasoning.

Wrap the foie gras in a piece of pork caul (or in very thin slices of pork fat) and cook in a slow oven for 18 to 20 minutes. Leave to cool. Put it in a buttered baking tin lined thickly with unsweetened Brioche dough (see DOUGH). Cover with a layer of dough. Tie a strip of buttered paper round the tin to prevent the dough from overflowing during baking. Leave to rise in a warm place.

Bake in a hot oven for 50 minutes to 1 hour. To test whether the foie gras is cooked, drive in a long skewer. If the skewer comes out quite clean, the foie gras is ready. Turn out the brioche and serve.

Foie gras en brioche (cold) – Proceed as for Foie gras en brioche (hot). Leave to cool before serving.

Foie gras en chausson – Proceed as for Foie gras en brioche. Stud the foie gras with truffles and cook for 18 to 20 minutes. Put it on a rather stiff layer of Brioche dough (see DOUGH). Roll in a scroll shape. Bake in the oven. Serve hot or cold.

Foie gras en cocotte or en casserole – Trim a large, firm

foie gras and stud with truffles seasoned with Spiced salt (see SALT) and sprinkled with brandy. Season the foie gras with spiced salt, pour on brandy and leave to steep for 12 hours.

Brown the foie gras in very hot butter. Put in an ovenware dish. Moisten with the cooking butter mixed with Madeira or any other heavy wine and concentrated thickened brown veal stock. Cover the dish and seal with a strip of paste. Cook in a slow oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour, according to the size of the foie gras. Serve in the cooking dish.

Foie gras cutlets, croquettes and kromesgies. CÔTELETES, CROQUETTES, CROMESQUIS DE FOIE GRAS – These different preparations, which are served as hot hors-d'œuvre or as a light main course, are made from salpicon (q.v.) of liver, with diced truffles added, in the same way as chicken cutlets, croquettes and kromesgies (see CHICKEN).

Foie gras 'eggs' (cold). OEUF DE FOIE GRAS FROIDS – Foie gras mousse (see MOUSSE) shaped in little egg-shaped moulds. A truffle is placed in the middle of each mousse which is coated with jelly when it is quite cold and covered with brown or white Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE).

The 'eggs' are built up into a pyramid or put in a nest of butter piped through a forcing-bag.

Escalopes of foie gras Cambacérès – Sauté slices of foie gras in butter. Put each one on an artichoke heart cooked in butter and filled with a salpicon of mushrooms in cream.

On top of each escalope arrange 2 thick strips of truffle. Dilute the cooking butter with Madeira, thicken with Demi-glace (see SAUCE), flavour with Truffle essence, and pour over the dish.

Escalopes of foie gras en chaud-froid – Slices of foie gras (plain or truffled) covered with white or brown Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with truffles, whites of hard-boiled eggs, pickled tongue, and jelly.

The escalopes can be served in individual paper cases, or in silver, porcelain, or glass shells; each on a bed of chopped jelly. They can also be arranged in a circle on a bed of set jelly in a bowl, and covered with jelly.

Escalopes of foie gras with grapes. ESCALOPES DE FOIE GRAS AUX RAISINS – Sauté slices of foie gras in butter. Drain and put each on a slice of bread fried in butter. Decorate with peeled grapes. Dilute the cooking juices with Frontignan or other heavy wine. Boil down, add a few tablespoons thickened brown veal stock, and boil again. Cover the escalopes with this sauce.

Escalopes of foie gras with grapes and truffles (cold). ESCALOPES DE FOIE GRAS AUX RAISINS ET AUX TRUFFES – Cook the foie gras in its own fat. Cut in slices. On top of each slice place a wide strip of truffle, dipped in jelly so that it will stick to the escalope. Glaze with jelly.

Arrange the escalopes in a circle in a bowl. In the middle, heap a dome of fresh peeled grapes which have been steeped in a little liqueur brandy. Cover the dish with clear jelly flavoured with port or other heavy wine. Chill thoroughly on ice or in the refrigerator.

Escalopes of foie gras Montrouge – Sauté slices of foie gras in butter. Arrange in a circle, each on a slice of bread fried in butter. Pile thick Mushroom purée (see PURÉE) in the middle of the dish. Cover the escalopes with their cooking juices diluted with Madeira and veal stock.

Escalopes of foie gras Richelieu – Dip slices of foie gras in egg and breadcrumbs. Sauté in clarified butter. Arrange in a circle on a dish, and pour over them diced truffles in melted butter flavoured with a little Madeira or other heavy wine.

Escalopes of foie gras à la romaine – Sauté slices of foie gras in butter. Arrange on rounds of bread fried in butter. Cover with Romaine sauce (see SAUCE). Serve with rice cooked in butter.

Escalopes of foie gras with truffles. ESCALOPES DE FOIE GRAS AUX TRUFFES – Sauté slices of foie gras in butter. Arrange on rounds of bread fried in butter. Cover with slices of truffle heated in the butter in which the escalopes have been cooked. Dilute the cooking juices with Madeira or other heavy wine and Demi-glace (see SAUCE), and pour over the dish.

Foie gras à la financière – Stud a foie gras with truffles. Season with Spiced salt (see SALT). Pour on brandy and leave to steep for a few hours in this seasoning. Wrap the foie gras in pork caul or thin slices of pork fat. Cook in a braising stock, adding Madeira, for 40 to 45 minutes.

Drain, and serve on slices of bread fried in butter. Surround with Financière garnish (see GARNISHES) to which the braising stock, concentrated and strained, has been added.

Foie gras loaf (hot). PAIN DE FOIE GRAS – This dish is more a soufflé than a loaf and is usually described as such on restaurant menus. (See MOUSSE, Foie gras mousse (hot).)

Foie gras loaf in jelly. PAIN DE FOIE GRAS À LA GELÉE – Poach a large fat liver in Madeira-flavoured jellied stock. Cool, drain, and cut one lobe into slices.

Remove fat from the liquor in which the liver was poached, and add to it an equal quantity of jellied stock based on concentrated truffle stock. Add a small glass of fine Champagne brandy, boil down the liquor by half, and bind with a liaison of 4 egg yolks. Heat, incorporate 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter and proceed as described in the recipe for Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE).

When just warm, add to it 2 leaves (1 teaspoon) gelatine soaked in warm water, and the rest of the liver rubbed through a fine sieve. Blend without stirring too much.

Coat a mould with clear jelly. Decorate the walls of the mould with slivers of truffles. Fill with the liver composition in layers, alternating them with layers of the sliced liver and slivers of truffles. Cover with a layer of jelly. Leave to set on ice or in the refrigerator.

Serve on a buttered crustless croûton, or plain. Garnish with jelly croûtons.

Foie gras medallions. MÉDAILLONS DE FOIE GRAS – Slices of foie gras are sometimes called medallions. They can be served hot or cold (see Escalopes of foie gras).

Foie gras mousse (cold). MOUSSE DE FOIE GRAS – Rub cooked foie gras through a fine sieve. Put in a bowl with 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) melted jelly and 4 dl. (½ pint, scant 2 cups) Chicken velouté (see SAUCE) to every litre (1½ pints, generous quart) purée. Work this mixture gently on ice. Season. Add 4 dl. (½ pint, scant 2 cups) partly whisked fresh cream.

Put the mixture in a mould lined with jelly and decorated with truffles and the whites of hard-boiled eggs. Fill only to within 1 cm. (½ inch) of the top. Cover the mousse with a layer of jelly. Chill in the refrigerator.

Turn out onto a buttered slice of bread or onto a serving dish. Surround with chopped jelly and make a border of jelly cut out with a pastry-cutter.

Foie gras mousse (hot) – See MOUSSE.

Foie gras mousselines (cold). MOUSSELINES DE FOIE GRAS – Use the same mixture as for Foie gras mousse (cold). Put into little cups and decorate with truffles. Glaze with jelly.

Diced truffles may be added to the mixture.

Foie gras pancakes à la Périgourdine. PANNEQUETS DE FOIE GRAS À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Make thin unsweetened pancakes. Fill them with foie gras mixed with chopped truffles and flavoured with a little Armagnac. Roll the pancakes into scrolls, trim at each end, and halve them. Put them on a buttered dish, sprinkle lightly with fried breadcrumbs, and warm for a few minutes in the oven.

Foie gras with paprika (cold). FOIE GRAS AU PAPRIKA – Stud the foie gras with truffles. Season with salt and paprika, and pour brandy over. Wrap it in a piece of pork caul and poach in Madeira. When cooked, drain and leave to cool. Unwrap, press into shape in a cloth. Cover with Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with paprika. Decorate with strips of truffle, and green and red sweet peppers, cut into rings and poached for a few seconds in jelly.

Glaze the foie gras with jelly. Put it in a dish and cover with clear jelly flavoured with port or other heavy wine.

Parfait of foie gras (cold) – Name given to several preparations which differ quite considerably from one another.

In former times a parfait of foie gras was a mousse of foie gras in jelly. Nowadays it is a whole foie gras, studded with truffles, poached in a Madeira-flavoured jellied stock, cooled and served in jelly.

Some writers on cookery describe as a parfait a pâté of foie gras in pastry crust which differs from an ordinary pâté de foie gras, only because instead of the empty pockets on the surface (which appear when the pâté is cold) being filled with butter or goose fat, they are filled with jelly.

Pâté of foie gras de Périgueux (old recipe) – 'To 1 kg. (2½ lb.) truffles add 12 foies gras; 1½ kg. (3¼ lb.) pork fat; parsley; spring onions; and mushrooms, all chopped. Make the pâté of chopped pork fat covered with a layer of sliced truffles, seasoned with fine salt and fine spices and fines herbes; next, another layer of pork fat, and on top of that a layer of foie gras seasoned as indicated above, and mushrooms, parsley, and spring onions. Continue building up the pâté in the same order until all the ingredients are used. Cover the whole with slices of pork fat. Cook and leave to cool.' (Dictionnaire portatif de cuisine, Paris, 1767.)

Truffled pâté of foie gras. PÂTÉ DE FOIE GRAS TRUFFÉ – Ingredients. 2 firm foies gras, 1 kg. (2½ lb.) pork and foie gras forcemeat, 400 g. (14 oz.) truffles, 1 kg. (2½ lb.) pastry dough, pork fat, bay leaf, thyme, salt, pepper, spices, brandy, Madeira.

Method. Stud the foie gras with truffles, peeled and quartered or, if small, left whole. Season with Spiced salt (see SALT) and sprinkle with brandy. Leave to steep in brandy and Madeira for 2 hours.

Line a pâté mould (a hinged round or oval mould) with the pastry dough (made with butter or lard). This must be made in advance and left to stand for a long time.

Line the bottom and sides of the mould with part of the stuffing. Put in the foie gras, pressed close together. Cover with a domed layer of stuffing. On top of this lay a slice of pork fat, half a bay leaf, and a small sprig of thyme. Cover the pâté with a layer of dough and seal the edges. Decorate the top with decorative pastry motifs shaped with pastry-cutters (lozenges, leaves, crescents, etc.) or strips of plaited dough. In the middle put 3 or 4 round pieces of dough shaped with a fluted pastry-cutter. Make a hole in the middle of these for the escape of steam during baking. Brush with egg. Bake in a fairly hot oven.

Cool. When it is luke-warm pour into it either half-melted lard, if it is to be kept for some time, or if it is to be used at once, Madeira-flavoured jelly.

Pâté de foie gras must be made at least 12 hours before using. The mould can be lined with a stuffing made entirely of foie gras instead of with pork and foie gras stuffing.

Small truffled pâtés of foie gras (old recipe). PETITS PÂTÉS DE FOIE GRAS AUX TRUFFES – ‘Take foies gras and stud with truffles. Make a foie gras stuffing especially for the purpose. Prepare little individual pâté moulds. Put the stuffing at the bottom, a piece of foie gras on top and a truffle at each side. Cover with stuffing. Finish, brush with egg, and put them in the oven. When they are ready, uncover them, pour a little essence into them and serve.’ (Le Cuisinier gascon, Amsterdam, 1747.)

Potted foie gras with truffles. TERRINE DE FOIE GRAS AUX TRUFFES – Cut a large foie gras in half. Trim the halves (the trimmings are used to make the forcemeat), and stud them with large pieces of truffle. Season the foie gras with Spiced salt (see SALT). Pour brandy over it and steep for 1 or 2 hours in this seasoning.

Line an ovenware dish with thin slices of pork fat. Put in it a fairly thin layer of a forcemeat made with 375 g. (13 oz.) lean pork, 450 g. (1 lb.) fresh pork fat, the trimmings of the foie gras – about 200 g. (7 oz.), 150 g. (5 oz.) diced or chopped truffles flavoured with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Madeira or brandy and seasoned with 4 teaspoons spiced salt. Put half of the foie gras on top of this forcemeat. Cover with another layer of the truffled forcemeat. Put the other half of the foie gras on top and cover with the remainder of the forcemeat. Press down well to flatten all the ingredients. Cover with a thin slice of pork fat. On top of this put half a bay leaf and a small sprig of thyme. Cover the dish and seal with flour-and-water paste. Cook in the oven, standing in a pan half-full of hot water, for 45 minutes to 1 hour, according to the size of the dish.

Leave to cool under a light weight until the following day. Next day, turn it out (this can be more easily done if the dish is first stood for a few seconds in hot water). Remove the slices of fat covering the potted foie gras. Dry the foie gras with a cloth, pressing a little so as to make the forcemeat quite firm. Before replacing it, line the bottom of the dish with a layer of lard mixed with goose fat (which was exuded in cooking). Pour a similar mixture of fat, almost cold, over the foie gras. Leave to chill in the refrigerator for at least 10 hours. Serve as it is in the cooking dish.
