It is advisable to prepare potted foie gras (and other potted preparations containing foie gras) at least 24 hours before using.

To make it easier to serve in individual portions, potted foie gras is made in restaurant kitchens in rectangular earthenware, porcelain, or metal dishes.

Potted foie gras with truffles à la façon périgourdine. TERRINE DE FOIE GRAS TRUFFÉ À LA FAÇON PÉRIGOURDINE – Soak a large, firm foie gras overnight in cold water. Drain and dry in a cloth.

Make several incisions in the lobes of the foie gras, and put into each a piece of truffle. Season with salt and spices.

Line a terrine completely with thin slices of fresh pork fat. Put the foie gras into it and press well down. Cover with a thin layer of lean and fat pork, chopped together and seasoned. Pour on a few tablespoons brandy, and on top of the whole mixture pour a little luke-warm melted goose fat.

Cover the terrine, and seal the edges with flour-and-water paste. Place in a pan half-full of hot water and cook in a hot oven for about 1 hour. Leave the foie gras under a light weight until quite cold. Pour on a few tablespoons of goose fat, and when this is quite set, add a little melted lard. Cover the terrine. Seal with a strip of gummed paper. Keep in a cool, dry place.

Preserved potted foie gras in goose fat. CONSERVE DE FOIE GRAS AU NATUREL EN TERRINE – Season the foie gras with spiced salt. Steep in brandy for a few hours. Dry and poach in clarified goose fat. Drain, and put in a terrine just large enough to hold it. Cover with goose fat. Leave until quite cold. Pour over it a thin layer of melted lard and leave to cool. Cover the terrine, and seal the edges with a strip of gummed paper.

Prepared in this way and kept in a dry, cool place, foie gras will keep for a very long time.

Quenelles of foie gras – See QUENELLE.

Foie gras rissoles. RISSOLES DE FOIE GRAS – Cut a layer of Flaky pastry dough (see DOUGH) into small shapes with a fluted pastry-cutter. In the middle of each one put 1 tablespoon salpicon of foie gras with diced truffles added, seasoned and flavoured with a little brandy.

Roll the pastry into scrolls, carefully sealing the edges. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Foie gras shells in jelly. COQUILLES DE FOIE GRAS À LA GELÉE – A method of serving in shells potted foie gras, cooked in its own fat. The shells are cut out with a shell-shaped scoop or a tablespoon can be used instead. To prevent the foie gras from sticking, dip the scoop or spoon in hot water before cutting. Decorate with chopped jelly.

Foie gras soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE FOIE GRAS – Rub through a fine sieve 300 g. (11 oz.) carefully trimmed raw foie gras which has been pounded in a mortar with 3 egg whites. Put the mixture in a bowl and work on ice, incorporating about 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) thick fresh cream little by little. Add 3 or 4 stiffly whisked egg whites. Fill a buttered soufflé dish with the mixture, stand in a pan of water, and cook for 30 to 35 minutes.

Serve with Périgueux sauce, Madeira sauce (see SAUCE) or with Truffle essence (see ESSENCE).

Foie gras soufflé can also be made with purée of cooked foie gras.

Foie gras Souvarov – Season a firm foie gras, steep in brandy, and brown in very hot butter. Put it in an oven-proof dish with large quartered truffles. Pour on a little Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with Truffle essence (see ESSENCE). Cover the dish and seal with a strip of paste. Cook in a moderate oven for 40 to 50 minutes according to the size of the foie gras. Serve in the cooking dish.

Foie gras tart à l'ancienne. TOURTE DE FOIE GRAS À L'ANCIENNE – Roll out a layer of Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) and cut it in a round shape. Cover the middle with a layer of Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) mixed with a little Foie gras purée (see PURÉE) and chopped truffles, leaving a border of 3 to 4 cm. (1½ inches).

Top with thick slices of raw truffle. Cover with a thin layer of the stuffing, and finally, with a lid of rolled-out pastry. Seal the edges. Make a hole in the pastry and decorate with pastry motifs, or score with shallow criss-cross lines. Brush with egg, and bake in the oven for 45 to 50 minutes. When the tart is ready, pour in through the hole in the middle, a few tablespoons concentrated Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Truffle essence (see ESSENCE). This tart can also be made with Flaky pastry (see DOUGH).

Foie gras tart with truffles (cold). TOURTE DE FOIE GRAS AUX TRUFFES – Using Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) make the tart as indicated for Foie gras tart à l'ancienne. When it is cold, pour into it (through the hole in the centre) a few tablespoons Madeira-flavoured jelly.

Tinned foie gras in goose fat. CONSERVE DE FOIE GRAS AU NATUREL – Put very firm foies gras, seasoned and steeped for 2 hours in brandy, into oval tins, adding a little goose fat. Seal. Stand them in water and boil steadily for 1½ hours for tins weighing 1 kg. (2 lb.), and 1 hour for tins weighing 500 g. (1 lb.).

Drain, leave to cool, dry thoroughly, and keep in a cool, dry place.

Truffled foie gras in Madeira (hot). FOIE GRAS TRUFFÉ AU MADÈRE – Stud a foie gras with truffles and leave to steep in brandy. Wrap the foie gras in a piece of pork caul or thin slices of pork fat, and put it in a small braising dish lined with fresh pork skin and sliced onions and carrots, which have been tossed in butter. Cover, and simmer for 7 to 8 minutes. Moisten with 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) Madeira. Simmer for several minutes. Add 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) concentrated brown veal stock. Cook in the oven for 45 minutes.

Drain and unwrap the foie gras. Strain, skim all fat off the stock, and pour over the foie gras.

Truffled foie gras in Madeira (cold). FOIE GRAS TRUFFÉ AU MADÈRE – Proceed as for Truffled foie gras in Madeira (hot). When cooked, drain, unwrap the liver, and put it in a terrine just large enough to hold it. Strain the cooking stock and pour it over the foie gras. Leave to cool for 12 hours. Skim off the layer of fat which will have formed, and serve in the terrine.

When Truffled foie gras in Madeira is to be served cold, the veal stock must be of a kind that will readily set into a jelly.

Truffled foie gras in port (cold). FOIE GRAS TRUFFÉ AU PORTO – Proceed as for Truffled foie gras in Madeira (cold), using jelly flavoured with port. Even when ruby port is used, the jelly should be amber-coloured.

FOLLE-BLANCHE – Name of a vine bearing white grapes, which grows in the Charentes region. The wine made from these grapes is of rather poor quality, but it is used in the distillation of brandy.

FONDANT – See ICING.

FONDANTS (Croquettes) – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

FOND-DE-PLAT – French term for an oval or round piece of wood which is placed on the bottom of a plate to form a raised base for cold dishes.

It is generally covered with foil and masked with a jelly or savoury butter, depending upon the dish.

FONDS – French term for stock. (See STOCKS, FUMET.)

FONDS DE PÂTISSERIE – Term for various sweet pastry bases used in French pâtisserie.

FONDUE – This name applies to a variety of different dishes. It can be a cheese sauce, originally from Switzerland, the recipe for which follows under Cheese fondue I.

It is also used for a dish of scrambled eggs with cheese, an original recipe of which can be found in Brillat-Savarin's Physiologie du goût. (See Cheese fondue II.)

Certain vegetable preparations are also called fondue. The vegetables are cooked for a very long time in butter, lard, or oil until they are reduced to pulp, i.e. become fondues. Different vegetable fondues can be used as constituent elements in a great many dishes.

Burgundy fondue. FONDUE BOURGUIGNONNE – This contemporary dish has nothing to do with Burgundy; it is a Swiss creation. A mixture of butter and oil is placed in a fondue dish which is set over its own individual heater on the table. Cubes of steak are served separately. With the aid of a fondue fork, each person plunges a steak cube into the smoking butter and oil mixture, cooking it to his taste, then dips it into one of a variety of sauces before eating it.

Carrot fondue. FONDUE DE CAROTTES – Gently cook very finely sliced or shredded carrots in butter, in a covered pan. Season with salt and a pinch of sugar.

Cook the carrots until they are reduced to a pulp. To avoid them being fried in the butter add a few drops of water or bouillon from time to time.

Celery fondue. FONDUE DE CÉLÉRI – Cook sliced or diced celery or celeriac gently in butter, adding a few drops water or bouillon. Season. Cook until the moisture has completely evaporated.

Cheese fondue I. FONDUE DE FROMAGE – This dish originated in the French-speaking part of Switzerland. It consists of grated cheese melted in white wine, seasoned with pepper, and flavoured with a little kirsch.

The Valais fondue contains no butter, no eggs, no flour or starch of any kind, and no chemical products in its original form. It is prepared in a small casserole and served on a hot plate or trivet. Each person round the table dips a piece of bread spiked on the end of his fork into the dish.

The Fribourg (Freiburg) fondue is prepared with Vacherin cheese, which is a soft cheese made in the Savoy from cows' milk.

A century ago, M. Victor Tissot gave Edmond Richardin the genuine recipe for this fondue with Vacherin.

'Take 1 kg (2¼ lb.) fresh white Vacherin cheese; cut it into small cubes and place these in an earthenware or enamelled iron pot. Heat over a low flame, stirring frequently with a fork made of new wood. Try not to be distracted by the delicious aroma of the melting cheese. When the cheese begins to simmer and is rosy and cream-like in consistency, it is ready to eat. Place it in the centre of the table.

'Connoisseurs have small cubes of fresh bread ready on their plate in advance. These are speared with a fork, then plunged and turned in the fondue. Once a forkful is well coated with the smoking cream, it is removed and eaten, washed down with white wine.

'In this way the fondue is kept nicely warm and there is none of the bother of transferring it from one receptacle to another.

'1 kg. (2¼ lb.) Vacherin cheese is sufficient to make ample fondue for four persons. It is a very nourishing dish.'

Cheese fondue

The Neuchâtel fondue has Gruyère cheese as a basis. For this dish stale and fresh cheese are mixed.

Cheese fondue II (Brillat-Savarin). FONDUE AU FROMAGE BRILLAT-SAVARIN – This is the name the author gives to a dish of scrambled eggs with cheese in his book Physiologie du goût. The following is a translation of the original recipe.

'Recipe of fondue as found in M. Trollet's papers. He was bailiff of Mondon in the Canton of Berne.

'Weigh the number of eggs which you want to use. This number depends on how many people are going to eat with you.

'Take a piece of good Gruyère weighing a third and butter weighing a sixth of the weight of the eggs.

'Break the eggs and beat them well in a casserole. Add the butter and the grated cheese.

'Put the casserole on a hot stove and stir with a wooden spoon until the mixture has suitably thickened and is smooth. Add a very little or hardly any salt, depending on the age of the cheese. Add a good portion of pepper, which is one of the distinguishing characteristics of this ancient dish. Serve on a lightly heated dish.'

Chervil tuber fondue. FONDUE DE CERFEUIL TUBÉREUX – Prepared in the same way as Celery fondue.

Chicory fondue. FONDUE D'ENDIVES – Cook finely minced chicory gently in butter in a covered pan. Season.

This fondue is served as a garnish for egg and fish dishes as well as cuts of meat and poultry, and vegetable dishes.

Fennel tuber fondue. FONDUE DE FENOUIL TUBÉREUX – Prepared and used in the same way as Celery fondue.

Leek fondue. FONDUE DE POIREAUX – Shred or cut into fine slices the white part of leeks and cook gently in butter until very soft. Season.

Used in sauces, stuffings, and stews, or as a garnish for eggs, fish, meat, poultry, and vegetables.

Mushroom fondue. FONDUE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Mince the mushrooms, bind with cream, and brown in the oven.

Onion fondue. FONDUE D'OIGNONS – Cook finely chopped onions gently in butter in a covered pan without allowing them to colour. To prevent the onions becoming fried, moisten them from time to time with water or stock. Season.

Sorrel fondue. FONDUE D'OSEILLE – Prepared in the same way as Sorrel chiffonnade (see CHIFFONNADE).

Equipment for Swiss fondue (Nicolas)

It is used in thick and thin soups, and as a garnish for eggs, small cuts of meat, and poultry.

Sweet pepper fondue. FONDUE DE PIMENTS DOUX – Cook finely chopped sweet peppers gently in butter or oil until soft. Season.

Use in hot and cold sauces, in different kinds of stuffings, with soft eggs, in omelettes, with hot or cold fish, with shellfish, meat, poultry, and vegetables.

Tomato fondue. FONDUE DE TOMATES – Cook 1 chopped onion in butter or in a butter and oil mixture. When the onions begin to colour, add 6 peeled, seeded, and chopped tomatoes. Season with salt and pepper. Add 1 grated clove of garlic. Cook gently until the liquid of the tomatoes has almost disappeared. Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon chopped parsley.

Tomato fondue is used for many dishes, mainly for those à la provençale, à la portugaise, or à la madrilène. It is used as a garnish for eggs, and for vegetables such as mushrooms, small vegetable marrows, aubergines, artichoke hearts, etc. When made with oil, and chilled, tomato fondue is often used in the preparation of cold hors-d'œuvre.

FONTAINEBLEAU – Town well known in the gastronomic world because of its famous grapes, which are found in and near Thomery (see GRAPES), and also because of its succulent cream cheese, which is eaten as a dessert.

FONTINA – See CHEESE.

FOOD PROCESSOR – A powerful time-saving appliance operated by electricity and equipped with a variety of cutting gadgets for pureeing, emulsifying, chopping, slicing, shredding, and whipping. Originated in France under the trade name of Cuisinart, similar food processors are now manufactured in England, Germany, and the United States.

FOOL – Fruit purée. Fruit of almost any variety is cooked with very little water and passed through a fine sieve. The pulp is sugared and kept cool – on ice if possible. Whipped cream is added to the pulp in the proportion of 2 to 1, mixed gently and served in sherbet glasses.

FORCE (Wine) – French term for incompletely fermented wine kept in small reinforced casks to develop a 'sparkle' just as Champagne wine develops it in bottles.

FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS. FARCES – Forcemeats or stuffings, which are a mixture of ingredients minced or chopped and spiced, are among the preparations most widely used in cooking. They are often made from charcuterie, and are used in pâtés, potted preparations, galantines, and ballotines, to stuff or garnish eggs, fish, poultry, game, meat, vegetables, etc.

Forcemeats are also used in the making of forcemeat balls, borders, mousses, moulds, etc.

Forcemeats or stuffings can be made with or without meat, though all of them derive from 5 basic forcemeats. These are:

1. Pork forcemeat.
2. Veal and fat forcemeat, known as godiveau.
3. Fine forcemeat, with cream.
4. Forcemeat made of special ingredients, with or without meat.
5. à gratin forcemeat.

Forcemeats are given substance by the addition of various panadas (see below).

Most forcemeats made of meat, poultry, or game, are bound with eggs.

Panada for forcemeats or stuffings. PANADE – Preparation made with various flours or bread, usually boiled in water, milk, or stock, and used to bind stuffings or forcemeats.

Panadas are added to stuffings in the proportion of 2 parts basic ingredients to 1 part panada.

The panada should not be added to the forcemeat or stuffing until it is completely cold. To speed up the cooling process, spread out the forcemeat on a buttered dish. Cover with buttered paper to prevent a crust forming through exposure to the air. For the preparation of various panadas see PANADA.

FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS MADE WITH BEEF, VEAL, PORK, GAME, AND POULTRY. FARCES DE CHAIR DE VEAU, DE PORC, DE GIBIER, DE VOLAILLE –

Beef forcemeat for agnolotti. FARCE DE BOEUF POUR LES AGNOLOTTI – This forcemeat is made of 500 g. (18 oz.) beef braised in red wine.

When completely cooked, remove the beef, chop, and add to it 250 g. (9 oz.) cabbage, chopped and braised, and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) grated Parmesan cheese. Season with salt, pepper, and spices.

Strain the sauce in which the beef was braised, and use it for serving with agnolotti.

Chicken (or other poultry) forcemeat. FARCE DE VOLAILLE – Prepare like Veal and pork forcemeat (see below) using the following ingredients: 250 g. (9 oz.) chicken (or other poultry meat, such as turkey, pigeon, duck, guinea-fowl), 100 g. (4 oz.) lean veal, 100 g. (4 oz.) pork, 450 g. (1 lb.) fresh bacon, 2 eggs,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) brandy and 5 teaspoons Spiced salt (see SALT).

This forcemeat can also be prepared using only the meat of fowl and fresh bacon.

Forcemeat for galantines, pâtés and potted preparations. FARCE POUR GALANTINES, PÂTÉS, TERRINES –

Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz.) lean veal, 500 g. (18 oz.) fresh pork fat, 2 eggs, 2 tablespoons Spiced salt (see SALT),  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) brandy.

Method. Dice the veal, pork, and pork fat and pound in a mortar with the seasoning and brandy. Add the eggs and mix well. Rub through a fine sieve. Stir until very smooth.

Game forcemeat. FARCE DE GIBIERS – Prepare like Chicken (or other poultry) forcemeat, replacing chicken by game meat.

Game forcemeat for pâtés and potted preparations. FARCE DE GIBIER POUR PÂTÉS ET TERRINES – Using whatever game is indicated in the recipe, proceed as for Chicken (or other poultry) forcemeat.

To render this stuffing more delicate, the trimmings of fresh foie gras are added to it. It can also be enriched by the addition of à gratin game stuffing (see below) and Game fumet (see FUMET).

À gratin calves' liver forcemeat for borders and hot pâtés. FARCE À GRATIN DE FOIE DE VEAU POUR BORDURES ET PÂTÉS CHAUDS –

Ingredients. 300 g. (11 oz.) trimmed calves' livers, 250 g. (9 oz.) fat belly of pork, 75 g. (3 oz., 3 cups) mushroom peelings, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped shallots, 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 4 teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon pepper,  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon ground cloves, a small sprig of thyme,  $\frac{1}{2}$  bay leaf,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) white wine, 3 egg yolks.

Method. Brown the diced belly of pork in 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Remove the pork from the pan, and, in the same butter, brown very quickly the diced calves' liver. Put the diced pork back in the pan. Add the mushroom peelings and shallots, seasoning and spices. Sauté the mixture on a very hot flame for 2 minutes. Take the calves' liver out of the pan. Dilute the juices with the white wine, boil down and add to the liver. Pound in a mortar, adding the rest of the butter and the egg yolks. Mix well. Rub through a sieve. Mix with a wooden spoon until it is very smooth.

The mixture is added to forcemeats for pâtés and potted products. It is also used in the preparation of borders and poultry or game moulds. Truffle peelings may be added to this forcemeat and pounded with the calves' liver. A little concentrated Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE) can also be added.

À gratin forcemeat for canapés and croûtons. FARCE À GRATIN POUR CANAPÉS ET CROÛTONS – Heat in a pan 150 g. (5 oz.) grated fresh pork fat. When it is very hot, put in 300 g. (11 oz.) trimmed chicken livers, 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 2 tablespoons) chopped shallots, 25 g. (1 oz., 1 cup) mushroom peelings, a sprig of thyme,  $\frac{1}{2}$  bay leaf. Season with salt, pepper, and a little spice. Brown the livers quickly over a very hot flame to seal them.

Leave to cool. Pound in a mortar and rub through a sieve, or reduce to a purée in an electric blender. Keep in an earthenware container in a cool place, and cover with buttered paper. Prepared in this way, the forcemeat will keep for several days.

It is spread on the croûtons of fried bread which are used as a base for small roast game birds, or served with salmis and civets.

À gratin game forcemeat. FARCE À GRATIN DE GIBIER – Proceed as for À gratin calves' liver forcemeat, using the following ingredients:

250 g. (9 oz.) livers of various types of game, 100 g. (4 oz.) belly of pork, 250 g. (9 oz.) young rabbit meat, 50 g. (2 oz.) foie gras, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, 3 egg yolks, Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE) made with Game fumet (see FUMET), seasoning and spices as for À gratin calves' liver forcemeat, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira.

This stuffing is used for the same purposes as À gratin calves' liver forcemeat. It is especially used for hot pâtés and game pies.

À gratin poultry liver forcemeat. FARCE À GRATIN DE FOIES DE VOLAILLE – Proceed as for À gratin calves' liver forcemeat, substituting an equal quantity of trimmed poultry livers for the calves' livers. This is used for pâtés and potted preparations.

Mousseline forcemeat. FARCE À LA CRÈME, DITE MOUSSELINE – Ingredients. 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) boned veal, poultry, or game, trimmed and with all gristle, tendons, etc. removed, 4 egg whites,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  litres ( $2\frac{3}{4}$  pints,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  pints) thick fresh cream, 3 teaspoons salt,  $\frac{3}{4}$  teaspoon white pepper.

Method. Pound the meat finely in a mortar. Season. Add the egg whites a little at a time, pounding well. Rub through a fine sieve. Stir vigorously with a wooden spoon. Keep it cool, on ice if possible, for 2 hours. Then add the cream a little at a time, stirring well, on ice if possible.

Use for fine forcemeat balls, mousses and mousselines.

Panada forcemeat with butter. FARCE À LA PANADE ET AU BEURRE – Ingredients. 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) veal or poultry, boned and trimmed, with all gristle and tendons removed, 500 g. (18 oz.) panada, 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) butter, 4 whole eggs, 8 yolks, 2 teaspoons salt,  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon white pepper, pinch grated nutmeg.

Method. Dice the veal or poultry. Pound in a mortar with seasoning. Take out of the mortar and put in the panada. Add butter. Put back the meat and pound vigorously.

Add the eggs and the yolks, one at a time. Rub the forcemeat through a fine sieve. Work well with a wooden spoon until very smooth. This forcemeat may be made in an electric blender.

It is used for forcemeat balls, borders, moulds, and to stuff poultry, etc.

Panada forcemeat with butter (game). FARCE À LA PANADE ET AU BEURRE (GIBIER) – Proceed as for the above recipe using boned and trimmed game.

This stuffing is used for forcemeat balls, borders, moulds, and to stuff game birds.

Panada forcemeat with cream (fine). FARCE (FINE) À LA PANADE ET À LA CRÈME – Ingredients. 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) veal or poultry, boned and trimmed, with all gristle and tendons removed, 400 g. (14 oz.) Bread panada (see PANADA), 4 egg whites,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  litres ( $2\frac{3}{4}$  pints,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  pints) double cream, 1 teaspoon salt,  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon white pepper, pinch grated nutmeg.

Method. Pound the meat or poultry with the seasoning and the egg whites, adding a little at a time. Add the panada. Pound vigorously until the ingredients are thoroughly mixed. Rub through a fine sieve. Keep on ice for 1 hour. Add, a little at a time, a third of the cream, stirring with a wooden spoon. Add the rest of the cream, partly whipped.

This forcemeat may be prepared in an electric blender and is used for fine forcemeat balls.

Forcemeat for pâté of foie gras or potted foie gras. FARCE POUR PÂTÉ OUTERRINE DE FOIE GRAS – Ingredients. 375 g. (13 oz.) lean pork, 450 g. (1 lb.) fresh pork fat, 250 g. (9 oz.) fresh foie gras, 4 teaspoons Spiced salt (see SALT), 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) brandy.

Method. Pound the meats finely in a mortar. Add the seasoning and the brandy. Rub through a sieve.

Périgourdine forcemeat. FARCE PÉRIGOURDINE – Make with breadcrumbs steeped in clear soup or milk, and chopped fresh pork or chopped ham or pork fat. Add chopped parsley and garlic and bind with egg yolks. Season with salt, pepper, and spices. Wrap in white cabbage leaves.

The stuffed cabbage, rolled into a large ball, is wrapped in muslin (U.S. cheesecloth) and braised.

This forcemeat is also used to stuff pot-roasted chicken. The liver and blood of the chicken are added to it.

Pork forcemeat, fine. FARCE FINE DE PORC – Make with lean pork and pork fat in the same way as Pork forcemeat, ordinary (see below) and rub the mixture through a sieve. It is used for the same purposes as ordinary pork forcemeat.

Pork forcemeat, ordinary. FARCE DITE CHAIR À SAUCISSES – Mix equal quantities of finely minced lean pork and pork fat. Season with Spiced salt (see SALT).

Used for crêpinettes, sausages, stuffed vegetables, etc.

Poultry forcemeat for pâtés and potted preparations. FARCE DE VOLAILLE POUR PÂTÉS ET TERRINES – Ingredients. 575 g. ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) poultry, 200 g. (7 oz.) veal, 900 g. (2 lb.) fresh pork fat, 3 eggs, 50 g. (2 oz., 3 tablespoons) Spiced salt (see SALT),  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) brandy.

Dice the poultry, veal, and fat. Pound finely in a mortar with the seasoning. Add the eggs and the brandy. Mix well. Rub through a sieve.

Forcemeat for poached, braised, or roast poultry. FARCE POUR VOLAILLES POCHÉES, BRAISÉES, RÔTIES – This stuffing is usually made with sausage meat, with chopped parsley added. Sometimes chopped onion, cooked slowly in butter until very soft, and breadcrumbs are added.

Forcemeat for truffled poultry. FARCE TRUFFÉE – Dice 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) fresh pork fat and 250 g. (9 oz.) raw foie gras. Pound in a mortar. Add the cleaned peelings from 800 g. to 1 kg. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  lb to  $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) truffles. Season with salt, pepper, and a pinch of spices. When the mixture is very smooth, take it out of the mortar and cook gently over a very low flame. Rub through a fine sieve.

Slowly melt 500 g. (18 oz.) of this truffled fat. Add to it the peeled truffles (the peelings having been used, as indicated above, to flavour the pork fat), quartered if large or whole if small. Season with salt, pepper, powdered thyme, and bay leaf. Poach on a low heat for 8 to 10 minutes. Leave the truffles to cool, covered. When they are quite cold, add them to the rest of the pork fat. Add a little brandy and mix thoroughly.

Quenelle forcemeat I. FARCE À GODIVEAU À LA GRAISSE, À

FORCEMEATS

LA GLACE – Ingredients. 1 kg. (2½ lb.) lean veal with gristle and tendons removed, 500 g. (18 oz.) well-dried beef suet, 8 whole eggs, 4 teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon white pepper, pinch grated nutmeg, 800 g. (1¾ lb.) chopped ice, or failing this, 7 dl. (1½ pints, 1½ pints) iced water.

Method. Mince the veal and the suet separately. Add the seasoning. Still keeping them separate, pound the veal and the suet. Then put them together and pound to a fine paste. Add the eggs, one by one, still pounding. Rub through a fine sieve. Spread the mixture out on a plate, and leave it on ice till the next day.

Pound the stuffing once more in the mortar, adding the ice, broken into small pieces and put in gradually. Mix well. Test the forcemeat by poaching a small piece. Add a little iced water if it is too firm; a little white of egg if too soft.

This stuffing is made into forcemeat balls which are served in vol-au-vent or pies, or used to garnish large cuts of meat or poultry.

Quenelle forcemeat II. FARCE À GODIVEAU À LA CRÈME – Ingredients. 1 kg. (2½ lb.) trimmed noix or loin of veal, 1 kg. (2½ lb.) beef suet, 4 whole eggs, 3 yolks, 7 dl. (1½ pints, 1½ pints) fresh cream, 4 teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon pepper, pinch nutmeg.

Method. Pound the chopped veal and suet in a mortar separately, then mix them. Add the seasoning, the eggs and yolks, one by one, mixing vigorously. Rub through a fine sieve and spread it out well on a board. Leave on ice until the next day.

Pound the stuffing once more in the mortar, adding the cream a little at a time.

Test the forcemeat as indicated in the preceding recipe, adjusting the consistency if necessary. This forcemeat is used in the same way as Quenelle forcemeat I.

Quenelle forcemeat balls. FARCE À GODIVEAU – These balls can be piped through a forcing-bag, but they are usually rolled by hand and poached in salt water.

They can also be poached dry, as follows:

Pipe the forcemeat through a forcing-bag onto buttered paper laid on a buttered baking sheet. Put the balls fairly close together. Cook in a moderate oven for 7 to 8 minutes. When little pinkish beads of fat begin to appear on the surface, the balls are ready.

Take them out of the oven. Overturn on a board or marble slab, peel off the paper, holding it at one corner. Use as required.

Veal forcemeat for borders, large stuffed forcemeat balls, linings (for the presentation of hot entrées). FARCE DE VEAU POUR BORDURES, GROSSES QUENELLES FOURRÉES, FONDS DE PLAT – Ingredients. 1 kg. (2½ lb.) lean veal, 300 g. (11 oz.) Flour panada (see PANADA), 5 whole eggs, 8 yolks, 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) very thick, cold Béchal sauce (see SAUCE), 3 teaspoons salt, ¾ teaspoon white pepper, pinch grated nutmeg.

Method. Pound the veal finely in a mortar with seasoning. Take it out of the mortar and put the panada in its place. Pound until it is very creamy. Add the veal and pound thoroughly. Add the eggs and yolks, one at a time, then the béchal sauce. Rub through a sieve. Work with a spatula until it is very smooth.

Veal and pork forcemeat. FARCE DE VEAU ET DE PORC – Chop 300 g. (11 oz.) round of veal, 250 g. (9 oz.) lean pork and 250 g. (9 oz.) fresh fat bacon.

Pound together in a mortar, add 2 whole eggs and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) brandy, season with Spiced salt (see SALT) and rub through a sieve.

FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS MADE WITH FISH.
FARCES DE POISSONS, CRUSTACÉS:

Anchovy forcemeat I. FARCE AUX ANCHOIS – Make a white roux of 1 tablespoon butter and 2 tablespoons flour. Moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) boiling milk. Cook for a few minutes over a very hot flame, stirring with a wooden spoon. When very thick, remove from the stove.

Add 1 whole egg, 2 yolks, and the fillets of 4 desalted anchovies. Rub through a fine sieve. Cook for a few seconds, stirring. Rub through a fine sieve.

This stuffing is used as a filling for savoury tarts, dartois, small pâtés, pies, etc.

Anchovy forcemeat II. (Carême's recipe). FARCE D'ANCHOIS – 'Soak 275 g. (10 oz.) anchovies to remove the salt; clean and bone them. Toss for 2 minutes in 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter, seasoned with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) finest herbes, a pinch of nutmeg, and a very little Spiced salt (see SALT).

'When the mixture is cold, pound the fillets of anchovy with 175 g. (6 oz.) Bread panada (see PANADA). Add the cooking butter with the finest herbes. Pound this mixture for 5 minutes, add 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter (crayfish butter or some other kind) and 3 egg yolks. Mix well.'

This mixture is used mostly for stuffing large fish. It can also be used to stuff vegetables, artichoke hearts, mushrooms, tomatoes, etc. to provide a Lenten dish.

Freshwater crayfish forcemeat. FARCE D'ÉCREVISSES
Proceed as for Prawn or shrimp forcemeat (see below).

Cream fish forcemeat (Lenten). FARCE À LA CRÈME (MAIGRE) – Proceed as indicated for veal or poultry Mousseline forcemeat, using fish instead of meat. Pike, whiting, or some other suitable fish may be used.

Fish forcemeat I. FARCE DE POISSON – Ingredients. 1 kg. (2½ lb.) pike (or other white-fleshed fish), 400 g. (14 oz.) Frangipane panada or Rice panada (see PANADA), 4 egg whites, 4 teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon pepper and a small pinch of grated nutmeg.

Method. Prepare as Quenelle forcemeat II.

Fish forcemeat II. FARCE DE POISSON – Chop finely 300 g. (11 oz.) whiting or other white fish. Add 200 g. (7 oz., ¾ cups) breadcrumbs, soaked in milk and squeezed, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, 1 tablespoon chopped blanched chives, 1 tablespoon chopped chervil and parsley. Season with salt, pepper, and nutmeg. Bind with 2 eggs. Mix thoroughly.

Mousseline forcemeat for fish mousses and mousselines. FARCE MOUSSELINE POUR MOUSSES ET MOUSSELINES DE POISSONS – Ingredients. 1 kg. (2½ lb.) skinned and boned pike, whiting, sole, salmon, or trout, 4 egg whites, 1¼ litres (2¼ pints, 2¼ pints) fresh cream, 1½ teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon white pepper, pinch grated nutmeg.

Method. Pound the fish in a mortar with the seasoning. Add the egg whites, a little at a time. Rub the mixture through a fine sieve. Stir on ice until very smooth and leave on the ice for 2 hours. Add the cream, a little at a time, stirring gently with a spatula.

This mixture is used for light fish quenelles, mousses, and mousselines, and also for stuffing large braised fish.

Panada forcemeat with butter (Lenten). FARCE À LA PANADE ET AU BEURRE (MAIGRE) – Proceed as for veal or chicken Panada forcemeat with butter using pike, whiting, or some other suitable fish.

This is used for plain fish quenelles, borders, moulds, and for stuffing large fish.

Panada forcemeat for fish and shellfish mousses. FARCE POUR MOUSSES DE POISSONS ET DE CRUSTACÉS (À LA PANADE) – Proceed as for Mousseline forcemeat for fish mousses, using the following ingredients: 1 kg. (2½ lb.) boned and skinned fish, 450 g. (1 lb.) Frangipane panada (see PANADA), 4 egg whites, 1½ litres (2¼ pints, ¾ pints) cream, salt, pepper, grated nutmeg.

The addition of the panada to this forcemeat gives it body, but makes it less delicate in flavour. It is used for the same purposes as Mousseline forcemeat for fish mousses.

Pickled herring or sardine forcemeat. FARCE DE HARENGS SAURS, DE SARDINES – Use fillets of pickled herring or sardines, as for Anchovy forcemeat I.

Pike forcemeat à la lyonnaise, or Godiveau lyonnaise. FARCE DE BROCHET À LA LYONNAISE, DITE GODIVEAU LYONNAISE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.) skinned and boned pike, 500 g. (18 oz.) trimmed and minced beef suet, 500 g. (18 oz.) Frangipane panada (see PANADA) 4 egg whites, 2½ teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon pepper, pinch nutmeg.

Method. Pound the fat, the panada, and the egg whites in a mortar. Add the pike and the seasoning. Work the stuffing vigorously with the pestle. Rub through a fine sieve and work with a spatula until the mixture is very smooth. An electric blender can be used.

This forcemeat is used for large fish balls known as quenelles lyonnaises. To make these, shape the forcemeat in a spoon and poach in salt water. Simmer for 10 minutes in the sauce to be served with them, usually a meatless Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE) containing mushrooms, stoned olives, truffles, and other small delicacies.

When pike quenelles are served with a thick sauce such as Nantua, lobster, shrimp, white wine or any other white sauce suitable for fish and shellfish, they should simply be poached in salt water. After draining and drying them in a cloth, serve them on bread fried in butter, on artichoke hearts, or on flaky pastry. Garnish, and cover with the sauce indicated in the selected recipe.

Prawn or shrimp forcemeat. FARCE DE CREVETTES – Pound in a mortar 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) prawns or shrimps with 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter. Rub through a fine sieve. Add to this mixture half its volume of yolks of hard-boiled eggs, rubbed through a fine sieve. Mix well.

This mixture is used for cold hors-d'œuvre.

Shellfish cream forcemeat, fine. FARCE FINE DE CRUSTACÉS À LA CRÈME – Proceed, using shellfish, as indicated for Mousseline forcemeat for fish mousses.

This is used for quenelles.

MISCELLANEOUS FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS. FARCES DIVERSES –

Brain forcemeat – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Forcemeat for fish. FARCE POUR POISSONS – Soak 250 g. (9 oz., 4½ cups) breadcrumbs in milk and squeeze them. Beat in a bowl. Add 75 g. (3 oz., ½ cup) finely chopped onion, cooked slowly in butter until very soft, 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) chopped shallot, cooked in white wine until all the moisture has evaporated, 100 g. (4 oz., 2 cups) chopped raw mushrooms, which have been squeezed (or 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) dry duxelles), and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Bind with 2 whole eggs. Season with salt, pepper, and grated nutmeg.

According to the nature of the dish for which the forcemeat is to be used, a touch of garlic may be added.

Forcemeat à la provençale for fish. FARCE POUR POISSONS À LA PROVENÇALE – Cook slowly 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) finely chopped onions in 4 tablespoons (½ cup) oil until very tender. Add a finely chopped clove of garlic and 150 g. (5 oz., 2½ cups) chopped raw mushrooms. Brown for a few seconds.

Remove the pan from the stove and add 250 g. (9 oz., 4½ cups) freshly grated breadcrumbs, 1 tablespoon chopped chives, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and chervil, and 3 chopped hard-boiled eggs.

Season with salt, pepper, and grated nutmeg.

Forcemeat of various fungi and mushrooms, cèpes, culti- vated mushrooms, morels, St. George's mushrooms, etc. FARCE DE CHAMPIGNONS DIVERS – Proceed, using one or other of these fungi, first tossed in butter, as for Truffle forcemeat (see below). These forcemeats are used in the same way as truffle forcemeat.

Garlic forcemeat – See GARLIC.

Ravioli forcemeat – See RAVIOLI.

Sage and onion forcemeat (English cookery). FARCE À LA SAUGE – Used to stuff poultry, especially duck and goose. Bake 2 large onions in their skins in the oven. Leave to cool. Skin and chop them.

Mix with 150 g. (5 oz., 2½ cups) breadcrumbs, which have been dipped in milk and squeezed, and 150 g. (5 oz.) cooked and chopped beef suet. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped sage, season with salt and pepper, and mix thoroughly.

Truffle forcemeat (Carême's recipe). FARCE AUX TRUFFES – 'Chop 150 g. (5 oz.) black truffles, and toss them for a few minutes in 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter seasoned with Spiced salt (see SALT) and a touch of nutmeg. Drain the truffles on a plate, and pound 75 g. (3 oz.) Bread panada (see PANADA).

'When the truffles are cold, put them in the mortar and pound them with the panada for a few minutes. Add the butter in which the truffles were cooked, and pound together until the mixture is perfectly smooth. Mix in 3 egg yolks.'

This forcemeat is used for stuffing poultry and winged game, and for meat or fish paupiettes (q.v.). It is also used in various hot pâtés.

Stuffings for vegetables (various). FARCE POUR LÉGUMES – Used to stuff vegetables such as aubergines, small vegetable marrows (courgettes or zucchini), tomatoes, artichoke hearts, etc. It is really a thickened Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE) to which is added the pulp of the vegetables, scooped out after they have been cooked in oil.

Yolk of egg stuffing. FARCE DE JAUNES D'ŒUFS – Cold. Rub the yolks of 10 hard-boiled eggs through a fine sieve. Add 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter softened to a paste. Season with salt and white pepper, and mix.

This is used as a spread in cold hors-d'œuvre, especially for Canapés à la russe (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre). It is also used as filling for halved hard-boiled eggs, artichoke hearts, and small barquettes or tartlets served as garnishes with cold dishes.

Hot. Rub the yolks of hard-boiled eggs through a sieve. Season. Mix with half their weight of thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) passed through a fine sieve.

This stuffing is used mainly to fill hard-boiled eggs prepared au grain (see EGGS, Eggs à la Chimay). A teaspoon of dry duxelles (q.v.) and chopped parsley is added. It is also used to stuff vegetables which are then sprinkled with breadcrumbs, basted with melted butter and browned, and to fill small vol-au-vent, barquettes, tartlets, etc.

FORCING. FORÇAGE – Process of growing vegetables and fruit under glass in order to ripen them before their time. These products are then called 'forced' products.

The distinguishing quality of these fruits and vegetables is their rarity and their high price. Good cooks seldom buy them, preferring to use these products in their proper season.

FORCING-BAG (U.S. Pastry-bag). POCHE – Funnel-shaped bag which can be fitted with nozzles (French douilles) of different shapes and sizes. These nozzles are made with large or small apertures which can be plain or fluted, so that creamy mixtures can be piped in a wide range of decorative designs.

FORELEG HAM. JAMBONNEAU – The French word

FORESTIÈRE (À LA)

jambonneau which is sometimes translated as foreleg ham, or picnic ham in the U.S.A., refers to the portion below the ham or shoulder of both fore and hind legs of the pig. (See HAM.)

FORESTIÈRE (À LA) – Method of preparation of small cuts of meat and poultry, garnished with morels, lean larding bacon cut in large pieces, and diced potatoes fried in butter. (See GARNISHES.)

FORK, FOURCHETTE – Table utensil designed to pick up meat and other food. It is of very ancient origin as it is mentioned in the Old Testament. It was first used as a ritual instrument to grip pieces of meat destined for sacrifices; later it was used in the kitchen. According to the eleventh century Italian scholar, Damiani, forks were introduced into Venice by a Byzantine princess and thence spread through Italy. They are mentioned in 1379 in an inventory of the French king, Charles V; and Edward II of England's favourite, Piers Gaveston, is recorded as having eaten a pear with a fork in the early fourteenth century. However, eating with forks did not become fashionable until the seventeenth century.

Renaissance forks

In the seventeenth century, use of the fork, which was originally two-pronged, then three-pronged, and later four-pronged, spread from Italy and Spain into France and England. An English traveller named Thomas Coryate is credited with bringing the use of the fork to England after a trip to Italy in 1608.

While in Paris in 1612, Coryate remarked that the fork was used in good society, though not yet amongst the common people. Hérouard in the Journal of Louis XIV speaks of the Dauphin beating the table with his fork and spoon.

Modern forks are made in many sizes and many metals, as well as in plastics and woods. Etiquette varies as to the proper way of holding and using a fork, and in which hand.

FORK LUNCHEON. DÉJEUNER À LA FOURCHETTE – A meal taken towards the middle of the day.

FOUNTAIN. FONTAINE – Term employed in pastry-making to describe placing flour on the board in a circle.

The various ingredients used to make the pastry are then placed inside the 'fountain'.

FOURDERAINE – Home-made liqueur which used to be common in the north of France and is still sometimes found there. The hedge sloes used in making it are picked after the first frost, when they are ripe. This liqueur is prepared in the same way as cassis.

FOURME – See CHEESE.

FOUR MENDICANTS. QUATRE MENDIANTS – Dessert made up of figs, raisins, hazelnuts, and almonds, whose colours recall those of the four mendicant Orders.

FOUR RED FRUITS. QUATRE FRUITS ROUGES – Strawberries, cherries, redcurrants and raspberries.

FOUR SPICES. QUATRE ÉPICES – A much used mixture, for which, formerly, each purveyor had a special formula. The most usual is the following:

125 g. (4 oz.) white pepper, 10 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) powdered cloves, 30 g. (1 oz.) ginger, 35 g. (generous 1 oz.) grated nutmeg.

FOUR YELLOW FRUITS. QUATRE FRUITS JAUNES – Oranges, lemons, bitter oranges, and citrons.

FOX. RENARD – Animal ranking as vermin. Its flesh is very tough and with an extremely unpleasant 'wild' taste, but it is sometimes eaten after the animal has been skinned and the flesh soaked in running water or boiling water.

FRANCE – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY, WINE.

FRANCHE-COMTÉ – Mountainous region in the western part of the Belfort Gap, surrounded by regions abundant in edible products and famous wines. In the north are Lorraine and Alsace; in the south Savoy, including the Bugey, which is a great centre of fine cuisine. To the west it borders on Burgundy, Bresse, and Champagne. To the east its immediate neighbour is Switzerland. The geographical position of Franche-Comté has influenced its inhabitants to be great gastronomes.

A variety of excellent foods is produced in this province. In Franche-Comté and the Jura, the beef cattle are famous for their well-flavoured meat and high-quality milk, from which cheese and other dairy products are made. In the orchards of Franche-Comté, excellent fruit, particularly stone fruit, is grown. This part of France has an abundant variety of game. In the rivers, streams, and ponds, numerous kinds of fish are found in great quantities. The inhabitants cook them in delicious ways, notably in succulent stews. Known for their delicacy are Saulon carp, red mullet, pike from Ognon, Doubs and Dessoubs trout, and Breuchin salmon trout the flesh of which is very well flavoured. In the Breuchin there are also good crayfish.

Cheeses from Franche-Comté include Septmoncel, which some knowledgeable people consider a rival to Roquefort, Comté cheese, which is a kind of Gruyère, Fromagère, and Fromage fort.

Franche-Comté (French Government Tourist Office)

Gastronomic map of Franche-Comté

Culinary specialties – Foremost among the specialties are maize porridge, potée franc-comtoise, which is prepared like potée (q.v.) from other regions but has Morteau sausage added to it; frog's leg soup; panada, a dish like a soup with bread and butter boiled to a pulp; cherry soup; and a whole range of soups made with fresh vegetables.

All charcuterie is excellent in Franche-Comté and can be bought in Paris and many other large towns. It includes smoked ham, mainly from Luxeuil; different kinds of sausages including caraway sausage from Montbozon; and stuffed tongue from Besançon.

The most famous dishes to be found in Franche-Comté are fish stews made from freshwater fish with white or red wine, onions and herbs; meat braised in wine, cooked very slowly in a covered casserole to preserve all the meat juices; pike quenelles of Vesoul; jugged hare à la franc-comtoise;

cheese fondue; pain d'écrivisses; marrow au gratin; cheese potatoes; morels on toast; onion tourte; pancakes called matefaim; ramekins; fritters; flamuse, cheese tart specially made in Burgundy; sèche, flat bread made with eggs and sugar; craquelins of Baume-les-Dames; almond pastry and biscuits of Montbozon; viqes of Montbéliard; malakoff of Dôle; quiche comtoise; galette de goumeau of Saint-Amour; gaufres de chanoinesses of Baume-les-Dames; chestnut cakes; pain d'épice of Vercel and Dole; paste made from quinces growing in Baume-les-Dames; bilberry and whortleberry jam from Melisey.

Wines and liqueurs – Franche-Comté (and particularly the département of Jura) produces excellent white, red, and rosé wines, not to mention the celebrated yellow wine, which is a speciality of the region, and straw wines (vins de paille) which are difficult to find outside Jura and Hermitage.

FRANCILLON SALAD

The yellow wine is made from the Savagnin grape. The distinctive nutty flavour (goût de jaune) demands strictly controlled and highly specialised methods of vinification, fermentation, and conservation. The best yellow wine is that of Château-Chalon.

Straw wine is so-called because the grapes are sun-dried on straw mats before being pressed.

The Jura appellations are:

Yellow wines. Arbois, Côtes du Jura, Château-Chalon, Étoile.

Straw wines. Arbois, Côtes du Jura, Étoile.

Red and rosé wines. Arbois, Côtes du Jura.

White wines. Arbois, Côtes du Jura, Étoile.

Some well-known liqueurs are also made in Franche-Comté. The kirsch of Fougerolles is particularly well known.

FRANCILLON SALAD – Title of a Japanese salad, the recipe for which was given by the younger Alexandre Dumas in a play Francillon performed at the Comédie-Française. The recipe for this salad, of mussels, potatoes, and truffles, will be found under SALAD.

FRANCOLIN – Wild bird resembling a partridge, found in warm countries, especially in Sicily and Greece. Its flavour is something like that of partridge (q.v.), and it is prepared in the same way.

FRANGIPANE – Mixture of flour, egg yolks, butter, and milk, which is cooked like a chou (cream puff) pastry. Used in poultry and fish forcemeat.

FRANGIPANE CREAM – Cream used in the preparation of different desserts or sweets and cakes, made like French pastry cream (see CREAM).

Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar, 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sifted flour, 4 whole eggs and 8 egg yolks,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  litres ( $2\frac{3}{4}$  pints,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  pints) milk boiled and flavoured with vanilla, 50 crushed macaroons, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, a pinch of salt.

Method. Put the sugar, sieved flour, and salt into a heavy saucepan with a flat bottom. Add the eggs and yolks. Mix all the ingredients thoroughly and add the milk very gradually. Cook slowly, stirring all the time, for 2 to 3 minutes. Add the butter and the crushed macaroons. Mix.

FRANKENTAL – Black grape also known as Black Hamburg, originating in Germany. The fruit is very large and juicy, and is often included in gift baskets of fruit.

FRASCATI – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

FRASCATI (À LA) – Garnish for meat dishes with consists of thin slices of foie gras, asparagus tips, mushrooms, and truffles. (See GARNISHES.)

FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION OF FOOD.

FRAUDE ALIMENTAIRE – Deception in the manufacture and sale of food products. Fraud occurs when the type and origin of the food product does not correspond to the name under which it is sold (for example, pâte de foie gras containing other than goose or duck liver) or when the quantity of goods is not as specified. (See also ADULTERATION.)

Fraudulence in such matters is nothing new, and it has always been the duty of the authorities to try to uncover it and stamp it out. When the corporations were in command and free trade did not exist, the legislator at that time had no scientific means of investigation and had to limit himself to preventive measures. All secret work was forbidden and consequently all night work was forbidden. It was forbidden to keep a variety of products in the same shop. Distinctive trademarks and certain symbols were compulsory on manufactured products. Offenders were severely punished.

Since 1888, various laws have defined the repression of fraudulent practices in the marketing of goods. Acts and decrees have been, and continue to be passed to protect drink and food produce.

In France, from the Middle Ages onwards, quality and quantity were under strict surveillance. River ports, markets, and shops were all controlled. Thus in 1577 Henri III ordered all bakers to keep a pair of scales and legitimate weights in their windows, workrooms, and carts, so that each customer might check the weight of his bread himself. In the eighteenth century, the Police Code added that the scales had to be hung sufficiently high to preclude the possibility of the seller tipping it with his thumb.

Fraudulent practices were severely reprimanded: penalties included the confiscation of goods, demolition of ovens, a fine or an amende honorable, and, in the Middle Ages, public flogging.

In 1431, if a cookshop proprietor sold a cat for a rabbit, he was condemned to go to the banks of the Seine in the busiest part of the day and shout an apology to the crowd while throwing the offending cat into the river. The butchers were forbidden to buy pigs nourished on human blood. It was forbidden to sell reheated meat, to keep meat more than two days in winter and one and a half days in summer, to sell meat by lamplight or candlelight (such lights made it easier for discoloured, putrid meat to be passed off as rosy and fresh). A regulation in 1399 controlled the time of day during which candles might be used.

On 22 June 1351 some suspect meat was confiscated in the master butcher Bardel's shop in rue Baudet-Saint-Antoine. The Corporation, outraged that one of their members should have disgraced himself, demanded that he be condemned. He was accused as a poisoner and was taken to the pillory in Les Halles where he was subsequently put to death. One hundred and twenty-seven bareheaded Paris butchers witnessed the execution of their confrère.

FREEZING – See PRESERVATION OF FOOD.

FRENCH CULINARY AND TABLE SLANG.

ARGOT DE CUISINE ET DE TABLE – Slang, wrote Gaston Esnault in his Dictionnaire historique des argots français (Larousse) is 'a collection of non-technical spoken words that appeal to a social group. The group – corporative, schoolboy, fashionable society – is, he specifies, a more or less coherent one, adding, 'Slang varies from profession to profession'.

It is therefore only right and fitting that the culinary profession should have its own brand of slang.

The table is la carante. Then the food, in other words la fripe, la croûte, la briffe, la cuistance, la béquetance, la jaffe, la graine, la tortore, la daronge, le frichti arrives. Everyone has un estome (stomach), and one has to eat in other words, claper, croquer, tortorer, cacher, grainer, claboter, clapoter, claquer, gousser, morfiler, morfier, to live. And if la jaffe is good then on se morfale, on fircote, on se bégale (one enjoys oneself).

Bread and wine are placed on the table first. Bread, or le gringue, l'artifaillie, la brèque, le brigeitcn, le brignollet. Wine, or le sirop, le pivois, le jaja, le pive, le tutu, le busard, le picrate, le pichtegom. If it is a robust red wine it is le coaltrair; if it is a fine light wine, it is le coulange. It can be rouquin (red) or beaujolpif and will be in a bottle, that is to say la betterave, la boutanche, la rouille. If it is in litres, it is le kil or kilo and on le pictera (it will be quaffed with a right good will). If it is a bottle of champ (Champagne) it becomes a roteuse. It is drunk in un guindal, un bennard or un glasse.

The appetite begins with l'apéro (the alfa of the good old days has gone – l'alfa being the absinth (la verte) of la Belle Époque). From la bouillante (soup) we move on to la barbaque or bidoche, le saciflard (saucisson), also called du bits, then came les navarins (turnips), les loubiats (haricot beans), then le calendo (Camembert) which is un rême (cheese), then le caoua (coffee) which, being black, can also be called biffi. At last it is time for la consolante, a bottle of wine drunk before leaving (or after the coup de feu). (Slang used by restaurant chefs around 1910. Taken from the Dictionnaire of Gaston Esnault).

FRENCH CULINARY NAMES. APPELLATIONS CULINAIRES

– Information of the origin of certain culinary names is scattered throughout this volume. Here are a few more. The list is far from complete, and even the facts given here may be far from exact since most of it is based on hearsay. Curnonsky, for instance, had enormous difficulty in finally proving that homard à l'américaine (and not à l'armoricaine) was created by the chef Pierre Frayssé (native of Sète) for his restaurant called Peter's, in Paris, on his return from America. On the other hand, it is still a mystery who the Suzette was to whom a maitre d'hôtel (from Paris or Monte-Carlo?) dedicated the crêpes. And was she really dining with the Prince of Wales when they were created for her?

Here then are a few more culinary terms:

Abrantès – The governor of Paris, Junot, duc d'Abrantès, had one of the best chefs of his time. This was Richard (who has a variety of chafing dish called after him). He created a number of dishes à la d'Abrantès as a tribute to his master.

Anna – Adolphe Dugléré, then head chef of the Café Anglais, invented Anna potatoes for the famous courtesan Anna Deslions.

Artois (À la d') – The calves' sweetbreads so called were invented by the Count of Artois, future Charles X.

Aurore – This was the Christian name of Brillat-Savarin's mother, to whom the author of Physiologie du goût dedicated some recipes.

Bagration – During the period of the Restauration (Restoration) (and what more suitable name for this epoch when French cuisine was at its peak!), the Princess Bagration had none other than Marie-Antoine Carême as her chef. He dedicated certain dishes to her, as he had done to Talleyrand.

Bellevue – Madame de Pompadour loved to please the palate of Louis XV; it was a finer one than that of his forebear, Louis XIV. She owned the château of Bellevue. Some of the recipes she devised were called after the château; some after herself.

Bénédictine, chartreuse, carmelite – Name for dishes prepared as they would have been in a monastic cell. Partridge or pheasant, for example, are cooked inside a mass of vegetable or herbs, or even wrapped in paper. Recipes are given under the appropriate headings.

Berry (À la) – The dish of fillets of young rabbits à la Berry owes its creation to the greedy and scandalous Duchess of Berry, favourite daughter of the Regent.

Bourdaloue (À la) – Invention of a pâtissier at the shop, la Belle Époque which was (and still is) situated in rue Bourdaloue, Paris. The specialities devised by its original owner are still sold there today.

Bresolles – Ragoût invented on the battlefield by the valet of the Marquis of Bresolles during the Seven Years' War.

Cardinal (À la) – It was Mazarin, a discerning man if ever there was one, who inspired the dishes thus named.

Chantilly – Name given to a number of preparations (and in particular to the cream of this name) by Vatel, when he was master chef to the Condé household.

Clamart (À la) – For a great many years, the petits pois eaten in Paris, and particularly at Court, came from the market gardens of Clamart in the suburbs.

Condé (À la) – Name given to certain preparations by Feuillet, master chef of the Condé household during the Restoration.

Conti (À la) – Name given to several recipes created by the chefs of the Prince of Conti.

But it was the Princess of Conti who 'invented' the loin of mutton that bears her name, the famous loin gourmandé de persil (gourmandised with parsley) that is mentioned in le Bourgeois gentilhomme.

Cussy (À la) – Louis de Cussy, one of the wittiest gourmets of the early nineteenth century was prefect of the palace under Napoleon I. and the chef dedicated some recipes to him.

Duroc (À la) – Véry, who owed much in his early days to the protection of Marshal Duroc and . . . to the love of Madame Véry, could hardly do less than dedicate a few recipes to his benefactor.

Frangipane (À la) – We owe this pastry cream to César Frangipani, an Italian nobleman. Catherine de Médicis introduced it into France.

Gérard (À la) – Gérard was assistant to Madame de Pompadour's chef. He called one of his creations after himself because he considered it too common to bear the name of such a personage as Madame de Pompadour. It was manchon de veau à la Gérard.

Maintenon (À la) – The marquise, who was a very good cook (she invented an oven when she was still the widow Scarron), created côtelettes en papillotes for her royal lover. They still bear her name.

Marengo – It is said that chicken Marengo was invented on the battlefield itself by Bonaparte's cook, a Swiss called Dunant.

Around the same period, a Parisian restaurateur used to serve a veal and tomato ragoût (the veal being first tossed in olive oil) in his restaurant La Grâce de Dieu. When news of the victory was circulated by the Paris stock exchange the humble restaurateur christened his veal dish veau Marengo.

Raymond Oliver, who runs the Grand Vefour (where Bonaparte used to dine occasionally with Josephine) maintains that it was not Dunant who created the dish. He assures us that chicken Marengo is of a more recent date and was served in Talleyrand's home nearing the end of Talleyrand's life. When his guests, entranced with the dish, begged him for the recipe, Talleyrand declared, 'To win victory at Marengo, Bonaparte had to sacrifice, in extremis, his friend Desaix; to make a success of this recipe, the tomato must be sacrificed at the very last moment. These two gestures have something in common, hence the name poulet Marengo'.

There are a few who think that this dish was concocted at an even later date, at Marengo in Algeria.

Melba – It was while he was working at the Savoy in London, that Escoffier invented his celebrated pêche Melba for the famous Australian singer Dame Nelly Melba (who loved her food). It was first served at a dinner given by the Duke of Orléans to celebrate the singer's triumph in Lohengrin. Escoffier conjured up a dish of a swan of ice, bearing peaches on its wings and resting on a bed of vanilla cream ice. Later he omitted the swan and sprinkled the peaches with raspberry syrup.

Montmorency (À la) – Cherry preserves. Once the only variety used was the 'Montmorency' type, a fresh, practically unsweetened cherry which it was said had been brought from Asia by Lucullus.

Orléans (À la) – Quince marmalade and other preserves have been named thus to commemorate Monseigneur de Jarente's, Bishop of Orléans', great love of food.

Père Faby (by distortion Fabri) – A Jesuit born in the diocese of Belley (mentioned by Brillat-Savarin) who was particularly fond of becfigues (warblers). He was a great gourmet.

Reine (À la) – The gourmandise of Marie Leczinska gave birth to a whole host of recipes (vol-au-vent, chicken, consommés) all with the name à la reine.

But the creator of potage à la reine was Margot, the first wife of Henry IV.

Robert (À la) – The sauce Robert which Rabelais made such a fuss about was, it seems, invented by Robert, chef to the Abbot of Saint-Germain-des-Prés in the Middle Ages.

Salmis – Ought we really to attribute the salmis de bécasse (salmis of woodcock) to the Prince of Salm, who used to lodge in what is now the Palais de la Légion d'honneur? No. Salmis is a Gascon ellipsis of two Latin words: salsa (feminine of salsus, which means salted and is the root of the word 'sauce') and mista (feminine of mistus, past participle of miscere which means 'mixed up') so the exact definition of salmis is a 'mixed up sauce'.

Soubise (À la) – Sauce invented by Constant, head chef of the Soubise household.

Villeroy (À la) – Chickens à la Villeroy are attributed to the Marshal of Luxemburg, Duchess of Villeroy.

Xavier (À la) – Soup invented by Louis Stanislas Xavier of France, Count of Provence, the future Louis XVIII.

FRIANDISE – French word for a delicacy when referring to pâtisserie or sweetmeats.

This word is often used to describe iced petits fours.

FRICANDEAU – Rump (topside) of veal. Also describes a dish made of loin of veal (noix de veau) larded, braised, or roasted (see VEAL, Noix de veau).

The name is also applied to slices or filets of fish, mainly those of sturgeon and fresh tunny (tuna fish), braised in a fish stock.

FRICASSÉE – In modern French usage, the word fricassée applies almost exclusively to a method of preparing poultry in a white sauce.

In earlier times the term denoted various kinds of stew made with white or brown stock, not only from poultry but from meat, fish and vegetables.

A fricassée of poultry is prepared in very much the same way as a blanquette (q.v.), a dish usually made with veal or lamb.

Fricassée of chicken à la berrichonne. FRICASSÉE DE POULET À LA BERRICHONNE – Brown in butter 250 g. (9 oz.) new carrots, whole if they are small, quartered if they are large. Remove them from the pan and brown the pieces of a jointed chicken in the same butter. Add 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) boiling water or white stock, the carrots and a bunch of mixed herbs. Season. Cover and cook for 30 minutes.

Pour off the chicken stock, add to it 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) cream and 2 egg yolks with a small pinch of fine sugar and 1 tablespoon vinegar. Mix well and pour the sauce over the chicken.

Warm the chicken in the sauce without bringing it to the boil.

Fricassée périgourdine – Name given in Périgord to the vegetables of a pot-au-feu. Before this is quite cooked, the vegetables are removed, drained, sliced, browned in butter or oil, sprinkled with flour, moistened with a little stock, and put back in the pot-au-feu to finish cooking.

The same name is given to a mixture of aromatic vegetables cooked in butter or oil with garlic and ham. This fricassée is used in various soups.

FRINGALE (Hunger pang) – This word comes from the ancient Norman faim-valle which meant faim de cheval, or a sudden hunger.

FRINOT – See CHEESE.

FRITOT – Type of fritter made with small pieces of poultry, lamb or veal sweetbreads, brains, or calves' heads.

Soak the pieces of meat for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice (or vinegar), and mixed chopped herbs. Dip in a light batter and fry in deep fat.

Drain the fritters. Season with salt and garnish with fried parsley and quartered lemons. Serve with a sauce, usually Tomato.

A number of recipes are given under the heading Fritot in the section devoted to Hot hors-d'œuvre (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE).

Small pieces of meat and poultry prepared à la Villeroi are also called fritots.

FRITTER. BEIGNET – Food dipped in batter and fried in smoking-hot, deep fat (lard, oil, clarified butter, or vegetable fat). The batter for coating varies according to the nature of the food. (See BATTER.)

Another variety of fritter is made of a paste like chou paste and called soufflé fritters or pets de nonne.

A third variety is made of yeast dough, similar to brioche dough (see Vienna fritters below).

Cream fritters and fritters made of waffle batter (see WAFFLE), can be used like croustades (q.v.) for garnishes.

FRITTERS FOR HORS-D'ŒUVRE AND SMALL ENTRÉES. BEIGNETS POUR HORS D'ŒUVRE ET PETITES ENTRÉES – These fritters, the recipes for which are given below, should be served with tomato or other sauce.

Fritters

Anchovy fritters I. BEIGNETS D'ANCHOIS – Trim and desalt anchovy filets. Spread them on one side with hard-boiled egg yolks rubbed through a sieve and mixed with a little butter and chopped parsley. Roll them up, dip in a light batter, and deep-fry. Garnish with fried parsley.

Anchovy fritters II. BEIGNETS D'ANCHOIS – Desalt, trim, and dry anchovy filets. Sandwich them, two by two, with finely pounded fish forcemeat flavoured with anchovy purée and mixed with a little chopped parsley. Dip into batter and deep-fry.

Artichoke fritters. BEIGNETS D'ARTICHAUTS – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

Aubergine fritters. BEIGNETS D'AUBERGINES – Peel the aubergines, cut into slices, and marinate for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Moulds for fritters:

(Dehillerin. Phot. Larousse)

Beef fritters. BEIGNETS DE BOEUF – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

Brain fritters (lamb's or calf's). BEIGNETS DE CERVELLES D'AGNEAU, DE VEAU – Cook the brains in court-bouillon (q.v.). Cut into small slices and marinate in oil, lemon juice, and chopped parsley. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Brussels sprout fritters. BEIGNETS DE CHOUX DE BRUXELLES – Half-cook, Brussels sprouts in salted water, drain, dip in cold water, dry, and marinate in oil, lemon juice, and chopped parsley. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Cardoon or chard fritters. BEIGNETS DE CARDONS, DE CARDES – Cardoons or chards cooked, marinated and prepared as described for Aubergine fritters.

Cauliflower or broccoli fritters. BEIGNETS DE CHOUX-FLEURS, DE BROCOLIS – Divided into flowerets, marinated, and cooked as for Mushroom fritters (see below).

Celery fritters. BEIGNETS DE CELERI – Cook, marinate, and prepare as described for Aubergine fritters. Celeriac or ordinary celery may be used.

Chicken fritters. BEIGNETS DE VOLAILLE – Chicken left-overs, poached or braised and cut into small slices. Marinate in oil, lemon juice, and chopped parsley. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Chicken liver fritters. BEIGNETS DE FOIES DE POULETS – Cut the livers into a salpicon (q.v.), brown briskly in butter, add diced mushrooms, also tossed in butter, and blend with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). When the mixture is cold, divide into small pieces and roll into balls.

Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Chicory fritters. BEIGNETS D'ENDIVES – Braise the chicory, dry well, and cut in two lengthways. Marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, and chopped parsley. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Courgette (zucchini) fritters. BEIGNETS DE COURGETTES – As Aubergine fritters.

Egg fritters. BEIGNETS D'OEUF – Prepare a salpicon (q.v.) of hard-boiled eggs, mushrooms, and truffles (and lean ham, if liked) and blend with thick Béchamel sauce, or thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) if meat is being used. Spread the mixture on a metal sheet and allow it to cool, then divide into small pieces. Roll into balls. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Egg fritters à la duxelles. BEIGNETS D'OEUF À LA DUXELLES – Cut hard-boiled eggs into slices. Spread them with 1 teaspoon duxelles (q.v.). Sandwich them, two by two. Dip them in batter and deep-fry.

Egg fritters à la reine. BEIGNETS D'OEUF À LA REINE – Make a flat, thin omelette. Allow it to cool, and then cut it into square or lozenge-shaped pieces. Put 1 tablespoon chicken purée bound with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with chopped truffles on each piece. Sandwich the pieces, dip in batter and deep-fry.

Fish fritters (pickled or smoked fish). BEIGNETS DE POISSONS MARINÉS, FUMÉS – Prepare as described for Anchovy fritters II. Fritters can be made of different kinds of fish, such as herring filets, smoked eel, sardines in oil, smoked salmon, tunny in oil, etc.

Fish, shellfish, and seafood fritters. BEIGNETS DE POISSONS, CRUSTACÉS, COQUILLAGES, FRUITS DE MER – Recipes for various kinds of fish fritters will be found under the heading HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

Foie gras fritters à l'ancienne. BEIGNETS DE FOIE GRAS À L'ANCIENNE – Make thin unsweetened pancakes. Spread with Foie gras purée (see PURÉE) mixed with diced truffles and flavoured with brandy. Roll the pancake into scrolls. Cut these into 2 or 3 pieces. Dip in light batter and deep-fry.

Foie gras and truffle fritters. BEIGNETS DE FOIE GRAS AUX TRUFFES – Prepare a salpicon (q.v.) of cooked foie gras and truffles, blended with concentrated, Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Allow to cool. Divide into small pieces and wrap each in a piece of pig's caul or a very thin slice of salt pork, previously soaked in cold water. Dip in batter and deep-fry. Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Jerusalem artichoke fritters. BEIGNETS DE TOPINAMBOURS – Cook, marinate, dip in batter, and deep-fry.

Meat fritters. BEIGNETS DE SALPICON DE VIANDES – Prepare a meat salpicon and blend with a sauce, white or brown, depending on the type of meat chosen (cooked meat left-overs – lamb, beef, mutton, pork, veal, poultry). Add diced truffles and mushrooms. Spread on a metal sheet and allow to cool. Divide into small pieces, roll each into a ball, dip in batter and deep-fry.

Calf's mesentery fritters. BEIGNETS DE FRAISE DE VEAU – Cook the calf's mesentery in a court-bouillon (q.v.), drain, dry, marinate, and prepare like Brain fritters.

Mushroom fritters. BEIGNETS DE CHAMPIGNONS – Prepare a salpicon of mushrooms, adding diced ham if desired. Blend with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), divide into small pieces, roll into balls, dip in batter, and deep-fry.

Oyster fritters à la normande – See OYSTERS.

Potato fritters I. BEIGNETS DE POMMES DE TERRE – Bind a salpicon of boiled potatoes with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Spread on a dish and leave until cold. Divide into small pieces and shape into balls. Dip in a light batter and fry in deep-fat.

Potato fritters II. BEIGNETS DE POMMES DE TERRE – Grate or mince raw potatoes, dry well, and season with salt, pepper, and grated nutmeg. Bind with egg yolks. Divide into small pieces, dip in a light batter, and deep-fry.

Salsify fritters. BEIGNETS DE SALSIFIS – Cook the salsify, cut into little pieces, marinate, dip in batter, and deep-fry.

Sorrel fritters. BEIGNETS D'OSEILLE – As for Spinach fritters (see below).

Spinach fritters I. BEIGNETS D'ÉPINARDS – Steep spinach leaves for a few minutes in oil, lemon juice, salt, and pepper. Press four leaves together at a time, dip them in light batter, and deep-fry.

Spinach fritters II. BEIGNETS D'ÉPINARDS – Prepare a Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) and put a thin layer on large spinach leaves, previously steeped in oil, lemon juice, salt, and pepper. Roll up, dip in batter, and deep-fry.

Sweetbread fritters (lamb's or calf's). BEIGNETS DE RIS D'AGNEAU. DE VEAU – Braise the sweetbreads in a court-bouillon. Marinate them for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, and chopped parsley. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Tomato fritters. BEIGNETS DE TOMATES – Cut tomatoes into quarters, remove seeds, marinate, dip in batter, deep-fry.

Tongue fritters (ox or calf's). BEIGNETS DE LANGUE DE BOEUF, DE VEAU – Cook and cool the tongue and cut into small slices. Marinate, dip in batter, and deep-fry.

Truffle fritters. BEIGNETS DE TRUFFES – Cut raw truffles into thick slices and steep in brandy with salt, pepper, and spices. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Vegetable-marrow (squash) fritters – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

Vine tendril fritters. BEIGNETS DE VRILLES DE VIGNE – Steep the tendrils in oil, lemon, salt, and pepper. Taking a few at a time, dip in batter and deep fry.

SWEET (DESSERT) FRITTERS. BEIGNETS D'ENTREMETS –

Acacia blossom fritters. BEIGNETS D'ACACIA – Cut off the stalks, sprinkle the bunches of blossoms with sugar, pour over a little rum or brandy, and leave to steep for 30 minutes. Dip in batter and fry in deep, sizzling-hot fat. Drain, sprinkle with sugar and serve on a paper doyley.

Apple fritters. BEIGNETS DE POMMES – Core the apples and peel them. Cut them across in slices about 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick. Steep for 30 minutes in brandy, kirsch or rum. Drain, dip in batter, and deep-fry. Drain, put on a baking tray, sprinkle with fine sugar, and glaze in a very hot oven.

Apricot fritters. BEIGNETS D'ABRICOTS – Halve the apricots and steep in sugar and liqueur.

Finish cooking as described in the recipe for Crystallised fruit fritters (see below).

Banana fritters. BEIGNETS DE BANANES – Peel the bananas and divide in half lengthways. Steep in sugar and liqueur.

Finish as described in the recipe for Crystallised fruit fritters (see below).

Blossom and flower fritters. BEIGNETS DE FLEURS – Divide acacia, elder, and marrow blossoms, lilies and violets, into bunches, or, depending on their nature, snip off stalks and separate into petals. Steep in sugar and liqueur for 30 minutes, and finish cooking as described in the recipe for Acacia blossom fritters.

Cherry fritters. BEIGNETS DE CERISES – Stone the cherries. Steep them in sugar and kirsch or cherry brandy.

Finish as described in the recipe for Fresh fruit fritters (see below).

Cherry soufflé fritters. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS AUX CERISES – Make the fritters as described in the recipe for Soufflé fritters I (see below). After cooking, garnish with stoned cherries cooked in syrup combined with a little cherry jam and flavoured with kirsch.

Chestnut fritters. BEIGNETS DE MARRONS – Prepare vanilla-flavoured Chestnut purée (see CHESTNUT). Taking pieces the size of a walnut, wrap them in leaves of unleavened bread (Matzos) dipped in water. Dip in batter and finish as described in the recipe for Fresh fruit fritters (see below).

Cold fritters, called Krapfuns. BEIGNETS FROIDS, DITS KRAPFUNS – Prepare and deep-fry the fritters as described in the recipe for Vienna fritters (see below).

As soon as they are cooked, drain them and drop into a hot, light syrup, flavoured as desired. When they are well steeped, strain and serve cold.

La marchande de beignets. Painting by Gerard Dou

Cream fritters. BEIGNETS DE CRÈME – Prepare a Custard cream (see CREAMS). Spread on a buttered metal baking sheet in a layer 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) thick. Leave to cool.

Dip in batter and finish off as described in the recipes for Crystallised fruit fritters or Fresh fruit fritters (see below). Cream fritters are sometimes coated with egg and bread-crumbs before frying. In that case they go into the category of croquettes. They are also called fried creams.

Fritters à la créole. BEIGNETS À LA CRÉOLE – Slit and stone dates, and stuff them with sweetened rice mixed with finely chopped orange peel and flavoured with Curaçao.

Wrap each date in a very thin piece of Vienna fritter dough. Proceed as described in the recipe for Vienna fritters (see below).

Fritters à la Creppazi. BEIGNETS À LA CREPPAZI – Prepare large, thin, sweet pancakes (see CRÊPE). Coat with a light layer of French pastry cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with kirsch and mixed with crushed macaroons.

Put the pancakes on top of each other until the layer is about 5 mm ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick. Cut into 5-cm. (2-inch) square pieces, dip in batter and finish as described in the recipe for Fresh fruit fritters (see below).

Crystallised fruit fritters. BEIGNETS DE FRUITS GLACÉS – Cut up peeled apricots, pineapple, peaches, pears, and apples, into slices.

Dust with sugar, sprinkle with brandy, kirsch, rum, or any other liqueur, and leave to steep for 30 minutes. Drain, dry, dip in batter, and deep-fry in smoking-hot fat.

Drain, dry in a cloth, arrange on a baking tray, sprinkle with fine sugar, and glaze either in a very hot oven or under a grill.

Currant fritters. BEIGNETS DE GROSEILLES – As Strawberry fritters (see below).

Date fritters. BEIGNETS DE DATTES – Stuff stoned dates with very thick French pastry cream (see CREAMS), flavoured with kirsch or some other liqueur.

Dip in light batter and deep-dry. Drain the fritters and dust with fine sugar.

Fig fritters. BEIGNETS DE FIGUES – Peel and quarter the figs. Steep them for 30 minutes in brandy and sugar. Dip in light batter and deep-fry.

Fresh fruit fritters. BEIGNETS DE FRUITS NON GLACÉS – Use cherries, strawberries, raspberries, redcurrants, tangerines, and oranges. Stone and hull the berries, and divide the oranges and tangerines into segments.

Sprinkle with sugar and leave to steep in liqueur for 30 minutes. Drain, dip in batter, and deep-fry. Drain, dry, and sprinkle with fine sugar.

Fruit jelly fritters I. BEIGNETS DE MARMELADES – Spread the jelly in a thin layer on a moist baking sheet. Cool. Cut into shapes and finish as described in the recipe for Fresh fruit fritters.

Fruit jelly fritters II. BEIGNETS DE MARMELADES – Wrap the fruit jelly in pieces of unleavened bread (Matzos) soaked in water.

Finish as described in the recipe for Fresh fruit fritters.

Mont-Bry fritters. BEIGNETS MONT-BRY – Prepare sweetened semolina as for a dessert and spread it on a buttered metal sheet in a layer 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick.

Cool and cut into small rectangles. Coat with thick apricot jam mixed with a fine salpicon of walnuts and figs, and flavoured with rum. Dip in batter and deep-fry.

Nanette fritters. BEIGNETS NANETTE – Cut a stale brioche into slices. Spread with French pastry cream (see CREAMS) mixed with a salpicon of crystallised fruit steeped in kirsch. Sandwich the slices and steep in kirsch.

Dip in a light batter and finish as described in the recipe for Crystallised fruit fritters or Fresh fruit fritters.

Peach fritters. BEIGNETS DE PÊCHES – Divide ripe peaches in half, peel, and sprinkle with sugar and kirsch, rum, or brandy. Leave to steep in a cool place for 1 hour.

Dry, dip in batter, and fry in very hot deep fat. Drain the fritters, put them on a baking tray, sprinkle with fine sugar, and glaze in a hot oven.

Pear fritters. BEIGNETS DE POIRES – Proceed as described in the recipe for Apple fritters.

Pineapple fritters. BEIGNETS D'ANANAS – Cut the pineapple in slices, divide each slice in half, sprinkle with sugar, and steep in liqueur.

Finish as described in the recipe for Crystallised fruit fritters.

Plum fritters. BEIGNETS DE PRUNES – Steep halved green-gages or plums for 1 hour in kirsch, brandy, or rum, and sugar.

Drain, dip in batter, and fry in deep fat.

Drain the fritters. Sprinkle with fine sugar and glaze in a hot oven. They may also be prepared without glazing.

Plum fritters à l'agenaise. BEIGNETS DE PRUNES À L'AGENAISE – Soak stoned, halved greengages in liqueur and sugar, stick them together to make whole fruit again, and coat with kirsch-flavoured plum purée. Dip in batter, fry in deep fat, and sprinkle with fine sugar.

Polenta fritters. BEIGNETS DE POLENTA – Using sweetened polenta cooked in milk, prepare as Rice fritters (see below).

Raspberry fritters. BEIGNETS DE FRAMBOISES – Remove stems, sugar lightly, and sprinkle with a little kirsch. Drain, dip in batter, and fry in very hot fat. Drain, sprinkle with sugar, and serve.

Rice fritters. BEIGNETS DE RIZ – Prepare sweetened rice, as for a dessert course. Spread in a thick layer on a flat tin, and cool. Cut into small pieces. Dip in light batter and finish off as described in the recipe for Cream fritters.

Rice fritters with various fillings. BEIGNETS DE RIZ FOURRÉS – Prepare the fritters as described in the preceding recipe, filling them with jam, jelly or a salpicon of various fruit.

Rice cream fritters. BEIGNETS DE RIZ À LA CRÈME – Prepare sweetened rice, spread it in a layer on a flat tin, and leave to cool. Cut into round pieces 4 cm. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches) in diameter. Sandwich these circles together with a layer of a rather thick French pastry cream (see CREAMS).

Dip in batter and fry in very hot fat. Drain, and sprinkle with sugar.

Semolina fritters. BEIGNETS DE SEMOULE – Prepare sweetened semolina and proceed as described in the recipe for Rice fritters.

Shrove-Tuesday fritters (Alsatian cookery). BEIGNETS DE MARDI-GRAS – Prepare a noodle paste with the addition of butter. Roll out to a thickness of 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch). Cut into shapes with a pastry cutter, and deep fry in sizzling oil, drain. Sprinkle with sugar mixed with cinnamon.

Soufflé fritters (Larousse)

Soufflé fritters I (or Pets de nonne). BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS (PETS DE NONNE) – Mix 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) water, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt, and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar and bring to the boil, in a saucepan. Remove from the heat. Pour in 625 g. (1 lb. 6 oz.,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour. Mix well. Put the saucepan back on the heat, stirring with a wooden spoon until the mixture comes away from the sides of the saucepan and becomes slightly oily. Remove from heat and add 12 eggs, one at a time, stirring vigorously.

Drop spoonfuls of the paste, one at a time, into hot, but not boiling, deep fat, then gradually increase the temperature of the fat.

When the fritters are golden, remove them from the fat and sprinkle with fine sugar. Fill as indicated in individual recipes, with various custards, creams, jams, etc.

Soufflé fritters II. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS – Prepare 250 g. (9 oz.) Chou paste (see DOUGH) without sugar. Divide the paste into portions the size of a small walnut. Drop one after the other into hot but not boiling fat.

Cook until the paste has risen and the fritters are crisp on the outside and golden coloured. Drain well on a cloth, and season.

Strawberry fritters. BEIGNETS DE FRAISES – Hull the strawberries and steep them in liqueur. Finish as described in the recipe for Fresh fruit fritters.

Stuffed fritters, called surprise fritters. BEIGNETS FOURRÉS, EN SURPRISE – Prepare the fritters as described in the recipe for Soufflé fritters II.

Drain, make a small slit on the side and fill them, using a forcing-bag, with French pastry cream (see CREAMS), jam, fruit purée or salpicon, as indicated.

Tangerine or orange fritters. BEIGNETS DE MANDARINES, D'ORANGES – Divide the tangerines or oranges into sections, trim them, steep in sugar and liqueur and finish as described in the recipe for Fresh fruit fritters.

Vienna fritters or Dauphine fritters. BEIGNETS VIENNOIS, BEIGNETS DAUPHINE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, 6 eggs, 20 g. ( $\frac{2}{3}$  oz., 1 cake) yeast,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk.

Method. Mix the ingredients to make a paste as described in the recipe for Brioche dough, ordinary (see DOUGH). Roll out the pastry to a thickness of  $\frac{1}{2}$ -cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch). Place spoonfuls of the filling indicated: cream, custard, salpicon of fruit, etc., regularly spaced on the pastry. Moisten the edges of the pastry and cover with a second piece of rolled-out pastry of the same size and thickness as the first. Stamp out the fritters with a round cutter, about 5 cm. (2 inches) in diameter. Lay them on a baking tray covered with a cloth sprinkled with flour. Leave to rise in a warm place for 30 minutes.

Drop the fritters into very hot deep fat and cook until they are well done and acquire a golden colour.

Drain, and sprinkle with fine sugar.

FRITTO-MISTO (Italian cookery) – In France this dish is called 'friture à l'italienne'.

It is prepared from pieces of calves' head; brain; spinal bone-marrow (of sheep and calves); testicles; lambs' feet; rice and egg croquettes; fried bread; slices of sautéed calves' liver.

Some are dipped in flour-and-egg batter, others in egg and breadcrumbs. They are fried in deep fat or sautéed in butter. Fritto-misto, prepared in this way, makes an unusual and tasty luncheon dish.

FROG. GRENOUILLE – Web-footed amphibian of which there are about 20 species. Among those to be found in France are the green or common frog, the rusty or mute frog, so-called because the male has no voice-box. In the United States there is a very large species called the bull frog or bellowing frog. This creature is twice the size of the types indigenous to Europe.

Frog meat, which is no more than a titbit, is easily digestible.

The frogs eaten in France usually come from central Europe. They are very muscular, and plumper than the local varieties, but French frogs, especially those of Sologne and the Dombes, have more delicate flesh and a subtler flavour. The quality of the frogs of the Dombes fully justifies their being more expensive.

Preparation. Skin the frogs and remove the breast, retaining only the legs, which alone are edible. Cut off the feet. Skewer the legs and immerse them in very cold water. Change the water every 2 hours to whiten and swell the flesh. Dry the legs thus prepared and cook them according to one or other of the recipes set out below. Usually 3 pairs per serving are allowed.

Frogs' legs à l'anglaise. GRENOUILLES À L'ANGLAISE – Season the frogs' legs with salt and pepper. Flour them and dip in egg and breadcrumbs. Sauté in butter. Arrange them on a bed of Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Serve with boiled potatoes.

This dish is called à l'anglaise, because this is the name given to food which is dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and then fried.

Frogs' legs à la béchamel. GRENOUILLES À LA BÉCHAMEL – Season the frogs' legs with salt and pepper. Put them in a frying pan with a little butter and 1 tablespoon white wine. Cover, and cook over a high flame.

Add a few tablespoons thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with some fresh cream. Simmer for a few moments. Add 1 tablespoon butter.

Frogs' legs as a border, au gratin. GRENOUILLES EN BORDURES, GRATINÉES – Prepared like Frogs' legs à la Mornay (see below), but served as a garnish.

Frogs' legs in cream. GRENOUILLES À LA CRÈME – Cook the frogs' legs as for Frogs' legs à la béchamel. Boil some fresh cream and pour over the frogs' legs. Boil down and serve.

Curried frogs' legs. GRENOUILLES À L'INDIENNE – Sauté the frogs' legs in butter. Serve them in a border of curried rice, with Curry sauce (see SAUCE) poured over.

Fried frogs' legs. GRENOUILLES FRITES – Soak the frogs' legs in a marinade for 30 minutes, as for Frogs' legs fritters (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre), and proceed in the same way as for that recipe.

The frogs' legs may also be dipped in flour and fried in the usual way.

Frogs' legs fritters. BEIGNETS DE GRENOUILLES – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

Frogs' legs à la lyonnaise. GRENOUILLES À LA LYONNAISE – Season the frogs' legs and dip them in flour. Sauté in butter over a very high flame. When they are well browned, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) finely chopped onion lightly browned in butter. Sauté the frogs' legs and onions together. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. Serve with a sauce made by heating a little vinegar in the cooking butter.

Frogs' legs à la meunière. GRENOUILLES À LA MEUNIERE – Season and flour the frogs' legs, and sauté them in butter. Arrange them in a serving dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Squeeze a few drops of lemon juice over and pour on the cooking butter, which has been heated until it turns brown. If necessary, add a little fresh butter. Serve at once.

Frogs' legs à la Mirepoix. GRENOUILLES À LA MIREPOIX – Season and flour the frogs' legs, and sauté in butter. When they are cooked, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) vegetable mirepoix (q.v.) which has been slowly cooked in butter until tender.

Cook over a very high flame and mix well. To serve pour 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) concentrated meat stock over the mixture and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Frogs' legs à la Mornay. GRENOUILLES À LA MORNAY – Cook the frogs' legs gently in a little white wine, butter, and lemon juice. Drain and dry them with a cloth.

Serve them on an ovenproof dish lined with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) and surrounded with a border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Cover with Mornay sauce to which the pan juices have been added. Sprinkle with cheese and pour on melted butter. Brush the border with beaten egg yolk. Brown in the oven or under the grill.

Frogs' legs à la niçoise. GRENOUILLES À LA NIÇOISE – Proceed as for Frogs' legs à la mirepoix, substituting Tomato fondue à la niçoise (see TOMATO) for the mirepoix.

Frogs' legs with chopped parsley. GRENOUILLES AUX FINES HERBES – Season the frogs' legs with salt and pepper. Dip in flour and sauté in butter over a high flame.

When they are cooked and well browned, sprinkle with chopped parsley. Squeeze the juice of a lemon over them and pour on the butter in which they have been cooked.

Frogs' legs à la poulette. GRENOUILLES À LA POULETTE – Cook the frogs' legs gently in a little white wine, with butter and a squeeze of lemon juice. Season with salt and pepper. Add a small onion and a bouquet garni (q.v.). As soon as the liquid comes to the boil, add peeled, sliced mushrooms. Cover and simmer.

Drain the frogs' legs and mushrooms. Strain the stock and boil it down. Thicken with egg yolks and cream, as for Poulette sauce (see SAUCE). Put the frogs' legs and mushrooms back in the sauce and heat. Add 1 tablespoon fresh butter, chopped parsley, and a squeeze of lemon juice.

Frogs' legs prepared in this way can be served in a pie crust or a vol-au-vent. They are then called timbales or vol-au-vent of frogs' legs à la poulette.

Frogs' legs sautéed à la provençale. GRENOUILLES SAUTÉES À LA PROVENÇALE – Sauté the frogs' legs in butter or oil, as for Frogs' legs à la lyonnaise. Add a little crushed garlic and chopped parsley.

Dried fruits (Larousse)

Citrus fruits

FROMAGE D'ITALIE – Dish made from pig's liver. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

FROMAGE GLACÉ – In former times, plain ices moulded into conical shapes were called fromage glacé in France.

The name fromage bavarois was used for the cold sweet made from a mixture of custard and whipped cream, now called bavarois (see BAVARIAN CREAM).

FROMAGER – To add grated cheese to a sauce, stuffing, or any kind of dough; or to sprinkle it over food to be browned in the oven. The cheeses most commonly used for this purpose are Parmesan and Gruyère.

FROMENTEAU – Variety of table grapes.

FRONTIGNAN – Small town of the Hérault district which has given its name to a heavy type of Muscatel wine.

FRUIT – Botanically speaking, fruit is the ovary of any growing plant. In current usage, however, 'fruit' refers only to those which may be eaten as dessert.

Some fruits, in fact, are eaten as vegetables, for example, aubergines, pumpkins, marrows, gourds, cucumbers, olives, tomatoes, etc.

In terms of calories some of the commoner fruits have little food value, except for those with a high starch, oil, or sugar content. However, it is from fruit that we get, in a form which is readily assimilated, essential minerals as well as all the precious health-giving vitamins. Also, because of its water content, fruit is an excellent thirst quencher.

Dried fruit. FRUITS SECS – Included under this heading are naturally dry fruits such as almonds, hazelnuts, walnuts, etc., rich in fats and albumen. Artificially dried fruits (apricots, cherries, figs, apples, pears, prunes, raisins, etc.) are eaten without further preparation. All these provide very concentrated nourishment. When they are soaked and cooked, although they have not quite all the qualities of fresh fruit, they provide a useful substitute.

Fruit ices. GLACES AUX FRUITS – The basic syrup consists of 4 cups sugar to 2 cups of water boiled for 5 minutes and cooled. This gives an approximate density of 18° to 22° when measured on a saccharometer. To this cold syrup various fruit pulps or juices are added.

Fruit juices. SUCS (JUS) DE FRUITS – Fruit juices, obtained by cooking fruit with a little water, or by squeezing it, are very popular especially as drinks for persons suffering from feverish illnesses.

Fruit juices are also extracted commercially. Most of these are excellent, especially those sterilised by some means other than boiling. They have considerable food value, comparable with that of milk.

Fruit mould. PAIN DE FRUITS – Coat a charlotte mould with a thick layer of jelly (made of the same fruit as the mixture to be used in the centre).

When this has set, fill the middle of the mould with a fruit bavarois mixture (see BAVARIAN CREAM) prepared in advance but without adding any cream. Cover with a layer of jelly. Chill on ice.

Pickled fruits. FRUITS CONFITS AU VINAIGRE – Pour vinegar into glass or stone pickling jars; add enough fine sugar to turn the mixture into a syrup which is sharp without being too sour. Add the fruit to be pickled. After a few weeks the fruit will be thoroughly impregnated with the syrup and will be ready for eating.

Pickled fruit may be used for the same purpose as fruit preserved in brandy, but is more commonly served as a condiment.

Fruit salad. FRUITS RAFRAÎCHIS – Ingredients for 10 people. 6 peaches, 6 apricots, 6 greengages, 3 ripe pears, 2 apples, 4 bananas, 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) raspberries, 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) white and black grapes (mixed), 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) small strawberries, 24 fresh almonds, 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) kirsch and/or maraschino, 5 or 6 tablespoons fine sugar.

Method. Peel the peaches, pears, and apples and cut them into little pieces. Peel the bananas and cut them into strips. Stone the apricots and greengages and cut them up.

Mix all this fruit in a bowl. Add two-thirds of the strawberries and raspberries. Decorate with two-thirds of the grapes. Sprinkle the sugar on top and pour on the liqueur. Gentle shake the dish so that the various fruits are properly mixed. Put the bowl into a larger bowl containing crushed ice. Leave for 1 hour.

Transfer the fruit salad to a glass bowl (or a special double container). Surround with crushed ice. Decorate the top of the fruit salad with the remaining strawberries, raspberries, grapes, and blanched and halved almonds.

The ingredients of a fruit salad vary according to the season. All kinds of fruit may be used, such as pineapples, oranges, nectarines, mirabelle plums, cherries, etc. It may also be made from fruit preserved in syrup.

Instead of sweetening it with sugar, syrup may be poured onto the fruit salad, and any liqueur may be used for flavouring. Fruit salad can be served as a dessert course or as a salad course.

Fruit salad à la créole. FRUITS RAFRAÎCHIS À LA CRÉOLE – Macédoine of fruit made from bananas, pineapples and oranges finely sliced, sprinkled with rum and sugar and left to stand in ice. It is served in a glass bowl (or a special double container) on a bed of pineapple ice cream. Pour on lightly whipped sweetened fresh cream flavoured with rum. Decorate the top with orange segments and blanched pistachio nuts.

Fruit salad with kirsch. FRUITS RAFRAÎCHIS AU KIRSCH – Use all the fruits in season: strawberries, cherries, peaches, apricots, grapes, almonds, etc., with stalks, stones, skins removed. Some are sliced, others left whole.

Sprinkle with sugar, mix without bruising, pour kirsch over, and place in a larger bowl full of crushed ice.

Instead of sugar, the fruit salad may be sweetened with a very heavy syrup.

Fruit salad à la maltaise. FRUITS RAFRAÎCHIS À LA MALTAISE – Macédoine (q.v.) of fruit made from oranges, bananas, cherries, and pineapples, left to soak with sugar and Curaçao.

Serve in a glass bowl or special double container on a bed of orange ice cream. Cover with whipped cream. Decorate with segments of orange.

Fruit salad à la normande. FRUITS RAFRAÎCHIS À LA NORMANDE – Make a macédoine (q.v.) of fruit from russet or tart apples, fresh pineapple, and bananas. Soak this mixture in sugar and Calvados.

Serve in a glass bowl or special double container. Cover with lightly beaten fresh cream which has been sweetened with sugar and flavoured with calvados.

Fruit salad à l'occitanienne. FRUITS RAFRAÎCHIS À L'OCCITANIENNE – Place sliced pears, black and white grapes, and peeled figs cut into slices, in a bowl. Sprinkle with sugar and pour on Blanquette de Limoux (q.v.) and a little brandy. Surround the bowl with ice mixed with a little kitchen salt, so that the fruit may be slightly congealed.

Cover with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) and decorate with grapes.

Fruit salad Tsarina (Czarina). FRUITS RAFRAÎCHIS TZARINE – Put mixed fruit, whole or sliced, soaked with sugar and kummel, on top of a layer of pineapple ice cream. Cover with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with kummel. Decorate with crystallised violets and lozenge-shaped pieces of angelica.

Fruit sauces – See SAUCE, Dessert sauces.

Sugar-coated and marzipan fruit. FRUITS DÉGUISÉS – Small fruit (strawberries, blackcurrants, cherries, gooseberries, plums, etc.), either fresh or preserved in brandy, coated with Fondant icing (see ICING).

Marzipan fruits are a kind of petit four (q.v.) made from very thick fruit purée mixed with almond paste, or sometimes with concentrated jam. These are moulded into the shape of various fruits and covered with caramel sugar.

FRUIT IN DIETETICS – The discovery of vitamins has highlighted the importance of fruit in the diet. It must be borne in mind, however, that digestive upsets frequently occur when raw fruit is eaten in conjunction with a meat diet.

Fruit salad

Fruit contains the following elements in variable proportions:

- Water (85 per cent average for juicy fruit).
- Organic acids (principally malic and citric acids).
- Carbohydrates.
- Proteic substances.
- Practically no lipids except in olives, almonds, and walnuts.
- Mineral salts.
- Vitamins.
- Aromatic essences (which give each fruit its particular flavour).

FRUITARIAN. FRUGIVORE – A person who lives exclusively on fruit and vegetables, believing that man should feed only on that which can be eaten in the natural state in which it grows.

FRUITERY. FRUITERIE, FRUITIÈRE – Special storage place for fruit. Fruitière is the name given to a cheese factory usually situated in the mountains near pastures.

FRUIT KERNEL. NOYAU – Soft part within hard shell of nut or stone fruit.

Fruit kernel liqueur. CRÈME DE NOYAUX – Liqueur which has fruit kernels as a basis. (See LIQUEUR.)

FRUIT STONE CRACKER. ÉNOYAUTEUR – Implement for cracking the stones of certain fruits, such as cherries, without crushing them completely.

FRUMENTY. FROMENTÉE – Porridge made from wheat flour.

FRYING – See DEEP FRYING; CULINARY METHODS, Sautés.

FRYING PAN. POÊLE – Shallow pan with a long handle, used for frying food.

A fish frying pan is oval in shape, and a pan for roasting chestnuts is perforated on the bottom.

FUCHSINE – Dye sold in the form of purple scales, rather sweet in taste and somewhat unpleasant in smell. It is sometimes used as artificial colouring for wines and foodstuffs.

FULBERT-DUMONTEIL – Jean-Camille Fulbert-Dumonteil was a French writer and a great gastronome. Born at Vergt in the Dordogne in 1830, he wrote charming articles on the art of cookery which were published in the form of a chronicle in various journals, notably the old Figaro. These were collected in one volume under the title la France gourmande.

FUMET – Name given to a number of different liquids which are used to flavour or give body to stocks and sauces. Fumets are prepared by boiling foodstuffs of one kind or another either in stock or in wine.

Fumets should not be confused with essences, extracts, or concentrates.

Chicken fumet. FUMET DE VOLAILLE – Chicken broth, made by boiling down chicken stock (see STOCKS).

This fumet is used to add flavour to various poultry dishes which are served with a sauce.

Fish fumet. FUMET DE POISSON – Stock made from the bones and trimmings of fish, the flesh being prepared separately. This fish stock is very much boiled down. It is used with white wine in the cooking of certain fish, and also in the preparation of special white or brown fish sauces.

For the preparation of fish fumet, see STOCKS.

Game fumet. FUMET DE GIBIER – Game stock made with the carcasses and trimmings of different game boiled down to a concentrated consistency.

Mushroom fumet. FUMET DE CHAMPIGNONS – This fumet is prepared by almost completely reducing the cooking liquid of cultivated mushrooms. It is used to improve the flavour of certain sauces.

Pâté fumet – See PÂTÉ.

Truffle fumet. FUMET DE TRUFFES – Fumet used to enhance the flavour of certain sauces. Truffle peelings are simmered in Madeira or any heavy wine. The fumet is usually made when the truffles themselves are being used for some other purpose.

Vegetable fumet. FUMET DE LÉGUMES – This fumet is prepared by almost completely reducing a stock made from a variety of vegetables such as carrots, onions, leeks, celery, etc.

GADELLE – Name used in western France for the red-currant, which is called gade in Normandy.

GAILLAC – The white wines of this small town in the Tarn district enjoy a wide reputation. Some are sold in Paris as young wines; others are processed like Champagne and become perlant, pétillant, or mousseux, according to how 'bubbly' they are.

The vineyards of Gaillac (French Government Tourist Office)

GALANTINE – Dish made from boned poultry or meat, stuffed, and pressed into a symmetrical shape. Galantines are cooked in a gelatine stock.

The term probably derives from the words geline or galine which in old French meant chicken, for this dish was first made with poultry, and later, towards the end of the seventeenth century, with other types of bird, cuts of meat, and even fish. A sous-pressé of fish was a form of galantine.

Nowadays, galantines are made from other meats besides poultry, but strictly the word 'galantine' without qualification denotes galantine of poultry.

There are many ways of preparing this cold dish.

Galantine of chicken I (Carême's recipe). GALANTINE DE POULARDE À LA GELÉE – The forcemeat. 'Chop 250 g. (9 oz.) veal with 500 g. (18 oz.) fat bacon and 225 g. (8 oz.) cooked ham. Mix in 4 teaspoons Spiced salt (see SALT), 2 egg yolks, and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped herbs with the same quantity of truffles. Mix well and place in an earthenware dish.

'Peel 750 g. (1½ lb.) very ripe truffles. Cut each truffle into quarters. Take a good red pickled tongue. Skin it and cut it lengthwise into 6 slices. Cut 500 g. (18 oz.) raw fat ham into thick fingers or use fresh pork fat or calf's udder.

The chicken. 'Singe, pluck, and bone a medium-sized plump chicken, and open it out on a cloth. Cut away half the meat of the breast and thighs. Use the pieces thus removed to line the bird wherever there is so little flesh that the skin is almost showing through, so that the flesh may be evenly distributed. Season with an appropriate amount of spiced salt, that is 2 teaspoons spiced salt per 500 g. (1 lb.) boned flesh.

'Spread half the forcemeat on the chicken, and lay half the truffles, tongue, and ham fat on top, making sure that the colours present a mottled effect. Season lightly with spiced salt. Cover the whole with half the remaining forcemeat and lay on top the truffles, the fat, and the pickled tongue, with a little added seasoning. Cover with the remaining forcemeat.

'Now fold the chicken back to its original shape, sewing it up with a trussing needle so that all the garnish is contained in the bird, which should be moulded into a round or slightly oval shape.

'Wrap slices of fat bacon round the chicken. Fold a piece of muslin round the whole, tying both ends tightly with string. Tie a piece of string round the middle to keep it in shape.

'Brown strips of fat bacon in a casserole. Place the galantine in it and surround with 4 onions, 4 carrots, a large bunch of parsley and spring onions. Season with thyme, laurel, basil and 4 cloves. Add the bones of the chicken, and 4 knuckles of veal or 2 calf's feet, enough stock or chicken broth to cover the galantine, then 1 glass dry Madeira or good white wine and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) old brandy. Cover the whole with a piece of buttered paper and start to cook over a high flame. Then simmer slowly for 3 hours and remove from the stove.

'An hour later, carefully lift the galantine out of the casserole. Lay it breast downwards on a slightly curved earthenware platter and squeeze it gently, still wrapped in the muslin, to remove any moisture left in it.

'Cover with a lid and place on top a 3½ kg. (8 lb.) weight, in order to flatten and spread the chicken.

'Next, strain the jelly through a fine sieve. Remove all fat and leave it to settle for 15 minutes. Clarify by one of the methods described under JELLY.

'When the galantine is cold, uncover it, dry it gently with a cloth, and remove all string. Cover it very carefully all over with a white glaze.

'Place on an entrée dish. Arrange a rosette of jelly on the top, surround with chopped jelly and then with rounds of jelly cut with a pastry cutter 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) in diameter, and serve.'

Galantine of chicken II. GALANTINE DE POULARDE – For the galantine. 1 chicken weighing 2 kg. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  lb.), 250 g. (9 oz.) finely minced pork, 250 g. (9 oz.) finely minced veal, 150 g. (5 oz.) each of fat bacon, lean cooked ham, and pickled tongue, 150 g. (5 oz.) truffles, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) pistachio nuts, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) brandy, 2 eggs, salt, pepper, spices.

For the stock or jelly. 2 calf's feet, 500 g. (18 oz.) fresh bacon rind,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  kg. ( $5\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) fleshy knuckle of veal, 2 carrots, 1 onion, 2 leeks, 1 bouquet garni (q.v.), 5 litres ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  quarts,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  quarts) white stock, 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) Madeira, salt.

Singe and pluck the bird. Remove the feet and pinions. Slit the chicken along the back and with a small very sharp knife bone it without tearing the flesh. (This operation, which at first sight seems awkward, is actually fairly simple. It is necessary only to follow the joints of the chicken and to work inwards towards the carcass, shaving off the flesh as close to the bone as possible. This first boning operation separates the carcass from the body of the chicken, leaving them both whole.) Now remove the bones from the legs and wings, still being careful not to tear the skin.

Spread out the bird on the table and cut away the breast and the greater part of the fleshy portions of thighs and wings. Cut these pieces into squares, which will be used for the salpicon (q.v.) or meat ragoût in which the galantine is served.

The forcemeat. This is made of finely chopped lean pork and veal in equal quantities.

Pound in a mortar, seasoning it with salt, pepper, and spices. (To obtain a very fine forcemeat, rub the mixture, after pounding, through a sieve.)

The salpicon. Place in an earthenware dish the lean pieces cut away from the chicken, the fat bacon, the cooked lean ham, and the pickled tongue (all cut into squares), the diced truffles, and the blanched pistachio nuts. Add the forcemeat, the 2 eggs and the brandy. Mix thoroughly, adding seasoning if necessary.

Preparation of the galantine. Knead all the forcemeat into a ball and lay it on the chicken, which should be well spread out on the table. (From time to time, the hands should be dipped in water to make it easier to work the forcemeat.) Spread the forcemeat evenly over the chicken, forming it into a rectangular shape. Fold over the parts of the chicken skin which project at the sides and ends.

Dip a coarse linen cloth in water and wring it out, then spread it flat on the table. Place it so that a flap about 25 cm. (10 inches) wide hangs over the edge of the table. Place the galantine lengthwise on this cloth, about 10 cm. (4 inches) from the edge of the table, breast upwards. Wrap the galantine in the cloth as tightly as possible. Tie both ends of the cloth securely. Tie the galantine with string in 3 places to keep it in shape.

Method of cooking. The stock is made from the ingredients listed above. For the method of preparation see JELLY. To the ingredients listed, add the carcass and giblets of the chicken, with the exception of the liver.

Cook the stock for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours, then lay the galantine in the stock and simmer gently for  $1\frac{3}{4}$  hours. Remove the galantine. Let it stand for 15 minutes before unwrapping it. Remove the cloth, rinse in lukewarm water and wring thoroughly. Spread it on the table and carefully wrap the galantine in it as before, taking care to keep the slit part of the chicken underneath. Tie up the galantine. Press it on a slab, covering it with a wooden board with a weight on top. Allow to cool for at least 12 hours.

It can be kept for several days if it is stored in a cool place.

The galantine is served garnished with its own jelly, which must be clarified by the usual method (see JELLY).

OTHER GALANTINES – Galantines of other poultry may be prepared by the same method as that indicated for galantine of chicken. Galantines may also be made of various game birds such as pheasant, partridge, grouse, hazel-grouse, etc., altering the ingredients of the stuffing.

The recipes for the various galantines are given in alphabetical order under the name of each game bird.

Galantines may be prepared according to the method used by pork butchers. Instead of being wrapped in a cloth, they are put in special rectangular metal or earthenware moulds. To improve the flavour of these galantines, a certain amount of foie gras may be added to the stuffing. Diced foie gras may also be added to the salpicon.

Galantine of eel,
after Carême

Galantine of jellied eels. GALANTINE D'ANGUILLE À LA GELÉE – Prepare the eel according to the instructions for Cold ballotine of eel (see EEL). Cook it in a fish stock, drain, and allow to cool under a weight. Unwrap the galantine and cover with the half-set jelly. Place it on a long dish, and garnish with chopped jelly made from the eel stock.

GALATHÉE – Species of shellfish similar to freshwater crayfish. The parent species of this shellfish, the galathée grêle, is common on the European shores of the Atlantic and in the Mediterranean. Galathée is prepared as indicated for lobster (q.v.) and crayfish (q.v.).

GALAZYME, GALACTOZYME – Frothy milk, slightly fermented and with a very small alcoholic content. (See KÉFIR.)

GALETTE (French Twelfth-Night cake) – Cake made from flaky pastry. The galette is the symbolic cake eaten on Twelfth Night in most of the provinces north of the Loire, notably in the region of Paris.

South of the Loire, especially in the south of France, the Twelfth-Night cake is made from yeast dough in the form of a crown. In both cakes, the symbolic bean is baked in the dough. This is not always, as it used to be, a real bean, but is sometimes a small porcelain model either of a baby emerging from a bean or of some other figure. (See FESTIVE COOKERY.)

Flaky pastry galette. GALETTE FEUILLETÉE – Roll out flat some flaky pastry dough and cut from it a round piece 15 to 18 cm. (6 to 7 inches) in diameter. Place this on a slab. Crimp the edges and brush over with egg; mark out the top in lozenge-shaped segments. Bake in a hot oven.

Small orange galettes. PETITES GALETES ORANGINES – Sieve 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) flour onto a table. In the centre place 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar, 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter, a pinch of salt, the zest of 2 oranges rubbed on lumps of sugar and 6 egg yolks. Mix and work the flour into the mixture. Knead into a ball and allow it to stand for a few hours in a cool place.

Roll out the dough to a thickness of  $\frac{1}{4}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch). Cut into rounds with a fluted cutter 5 cm. (2 inches) in diameter. Place them on a buttered baking sheet, brush with egg beaten with a pinch of sugar, and bake in a hot oven for 6 to 8 minutes.

Galette de plomb – Ingredients. 300 g. (11 oz.,  $2\frac{3}{4}$  cups) sieved flour, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, 1 whole egg, 1 yolk, 1 teaspoon fine sugar, 2 teaspoons table salt, 1 to 2 tablespoons milk or cream.

Method. Sieve the flour onto a marble slab or table, and make a well in the centre. Dissolve the salt and sugar in 1 tablespoon milk or cream and pour into the well. Knead the butter until it is malleable, cut it up into very small pieces and dot these about in the circle of flour.

Work the butter and the flour until the mixture is very short. This is done by rubbing the hands together with the mixture of flour and butter between them. Continue to shorten the dough in this way until the butter is entirely broken up into very small particles. Spread out the dough. Beat the egg and yolk as for an omelette and pour over the dough. Work it in the same way as before, pressing the hands more and more tightly together as the kneading proceeds.

The ingredients in the dough should moisten it sufficiently to hold it together. The pastry should be fairly limp. If it is a little too firm, add a second tablespoon milk or cream. (The amount of moistening required may vary with the type of flour used.)

When the dough is thoroughly kneaded, cover with a damp cloth, and put it in a cool place for 30 minutes. Then flatten it on the table with the palm of the hand, flour it lightly, and fold into three. Roll into a ball. Flatten it into a round shape about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (1 inch) thick. Crimp the edges with the back of a knife.

Place on a lightly buttered baking sheet and surround with a buttered tart ring. Brush the top with the beaten egg and trace on it either lozenges or rosettes. This last is the characteristic design for the Galette de plomb.

Bake for 20 to 25 minutes in a moderate oven. The Galette de plomb is eaten lukewarm or cold.

Potato galettes. GALETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE – These can be made either with potatoes prepared as for Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) or with potatoes cut into thin discs. They are used as a garnish for various dishes, and are sometimes served topped with small pieces of meat, poultry, or fish.

Rich galette. GALETTE FONDANTE – Ingredients. 300 g. (11 oz.,  $2\frac{3}{4}$  cups) flour, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 1 egg and 1 yolk, 1 teaspoon salt, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fresh cream, vanilla.

Work the flour with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) of the butter, then add the eggs, cream, salt, vanilla, and sugar. Leave to stand for 10 minutes.

Knead the dough and add the remaining butter. Roll out and fold the dough 4 times as is done for Flaky pastry (see DOUGH). Brush with egg and lattice it with a knife. Cook in a hot oven and sprinkle, while hot, with powdered sugar.

Savoury galettes. GALETTES SALÉES – Knead 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sieved flour with 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter, 8 tablespoons ( $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) cold milk and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt. Leave to stand for 2 hours.

Roll out very thinly on a floured table, prick with a fork and cut into rounds 5 cm. (2 inches) in diameter. Place them on a buttered baking sheet and brush with milk to which salt has been added. Bake in a hot oven for 6 to 8 minutes.

As soon as the galettes are out of the oven, brush them again with salted milk.

GALICIEN – This sweet, which is a type of cake, was created in Paris at the old Pâtisserie Frascati, once situated on the corner of the boulevard de Richelieu and the rue de Richelieu. This pastry shop was built on the site of what was, during the years between 1796 and 1799 (the Directory) one of the most famous gaming-houses in Paris.

Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar, 375 g. (13 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sifted flour, 16 eggs.

Method. Whisk the sugar and eggs in a pan, on the edge of a low flame. After the mixture has tripled in volume carefully stir in the sieved flour. Pour the mixture into a large, shallow, sloping-sided cake tin. Bake in a hot oven. Leave to cool.

Slice the cake across. Spread on each half a layer of Butter cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with pistachio nuts. Put the two halves together, exerting a little pressure to join them firmly. Spread the cake with apricot jam. Ice with Pistachio icing (see ICING) and decorate with more of the pistachio-flavoured butter cream, using a forcing-bag. Sprinkle with finely chopped pistachio nuts.

GALICHONS – Also called calissons. Little iced cakes made with pounded almonds, a speciality of Aix.

GALINGALE. SOUCHE – Common name of the plant Cyperus whose tubers are edible and known in French as amandes de terre.

GALL. FIEL – Secretion of the liver commonly called bile in humans. It is a very bitter greenish substance. The gall bladder is attached to the liver. In drawing poultry or winged game, the gall bladder must always be removed with the greatest care to avoid it breaking and giving a bitter flavour to the bird. Only pigeon liver contains no gall.

GALLIMAUFREY. GALIMAFRÉE – A chicken stew from mediaeval cookery. Taillevent, in his book le Viandier, gives the following recipe:

‘For gallimaufrey, take roast chickens or capons, cut them into sections, and afterwards fry them in bacon or goose fat. Add wine and verjuice, ground ginger, salt, and, to thicken it, treacle-mustard.’

Gallimaufry (old recipe) – ‘Take a leg of mutton freshly cooked, and chop it as finely as possible in a dish of onions. Stew these ingredients with a little verjuice, butter, and ground white ginger, all mixed together and seasoned with salt.’

The word gallimaufry is now used in a disparaging sense, and means a badly cooked stew made from scraps.

GALL NUT. NOIX DE GALLE – Orientals eat a fleshy gall nut as big as a lady-apple that grows on a species of sage.

In other regions an edible type of gall nut grows on ground ivy.

GALLON – Liquid measure used in most English-speaking countries. It is equivalent to about 4½ litres (U.S. gallon equals 3¾ litres).

GAMACHE – There is an episode in Don Quixote in which the hero and his faithful Sancho attend the wedding feast of a wealthy farmer called Gamache. The extraordinary number of dishes served at this repast has led to the word gamache being used to describe any similarly bountiful meal.

GAMAY – Village in Burgundy which has given its name to a vine. The Petit gamay is one of the most prolific vines in Burgundy. Although this vine is not of as fine a quality as the Pinot, Gamay grapes are much sought after for their yield, which is always fairly high. The grapes of the Gamay vine are sometimes used with those of the Pinot, but the Pinot are used by themselves in the best wines.

In districts to the west of the Côte d'Or and in the Beaujolais, Mâconnais, and Lyonnais districts, the grapes of the Gamay vine make wines of excellent quality. (See BURGUNDY.)

GAMBRA – Type of partridge of central European origin. All the recipes for partridge (q.v.) may be used in the preparation of this bird.

GAME. GIBIER – The term game applies to all wild animals and birds which are hunted and eaten.

Gibier, the French word for game, comes from gibecer which, in old French, meant hunting. Gibecer in turn derives from the Latin adjective gibbosus, meaning hunchback. This word was used to describe the various animals killed in the chase because, to carry home the game they killed, huntsmen were equipped with a bag, pouch, or box which they usually carried on their backs. Thus equipped, they had the appearance of hunchbacks. From this arose the word gibecer, followed by its derivative gibecière for the huntsman's bag or pouch. From the word gibecière it was an obvious step to the word gibier, 'that which was carried', and it was not long before the word was firmly established in the language.

Game can be divided into three categories.

1. Small birds, not larger than the quail or the thrush.

2. Game proper which can be subdivided into winged game (woodcock, partridge, pheasant, etc.) and ground game (wild rabbit and hare).

3. Large game or venison (roebeek, deer, and wild boar).

'Game,' writes Brillat-Savarin, 'is a healthy, warming, and savoury food, fit for the most delicate palate and easy to digest. In the hands of an experienced cook, game can provide dishes of the highest quality which raise the culinary art to the level of a science.'

'There is game of all sorts. Certain types of game from Périgord will not have the same flavour as similar game killed at Sologne. Whereas a hare killed near Paris will make dull eating, a leveret from the Haut Dauphiné or the Burgundy district will be more deliciously flavoured than any other of its kind.'

In Britain there is a closed season for most game, i.e. a period when game may not be shot and killed. Several birds are protected all the year round, including blackbird, bustard, cygnet, heron, lapwing, lark, rail, swan, and swift.

Digestibility of game – Generally speaking, dieticians advise against the consumption of game, especially if it has been hung for too long. It can be extremely toxic and may cause food poisoning if putrefaction is advanced.

Fresh game should be eaten in moderation. It is important to remember that the quarry is shot down when moving fast and that there is a possibility of its muscular activity causing lactic acid to form in the flesh. The gun pellet wounds increase the toxicity of this acid, which encourages the spread of putrefaction. The latter begins almost immediately in the flesh of animals killed after a long struggle.

Game fowl left uncleaned is particularly toxic and indigestible.

The habit of marinating larger game in an effort to preserve it, reduces only very slightly the spread of microbes.

Game fumet – See FUMET.

GAME BAG

GAME BAG. CARNIER – Bag or net used to hold game.

GAME CHIPS. CROUSTILLES – Potatoes sliced very thinly and fried. They are served hot or cold.

GAMMELÖST – See CHEESE.

GANDER. JARS – See GOOSE.

GANGA – Hazel-grouse found in the Pyrénées.

GANTOIS (Flemish pastry) – Sieve 200 g. (7 oz.,  $1\frac{3}{4}$  cups) flour onto a table. Place in the centre 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) refined brown sugar, 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 2 medium-sized eggs, 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon,  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon ground cloves, a pinch of salt, and  $\frac{1}{4}$  teaspoon bicarbonate of soda.

Knead, and when the flour and other ingredients are thoroughly mixed, work the dough with the palm of the hand. Leave to stand in a cool place for 1 hour.

Divide the dough into 5 parts and roll them out into rounds  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick. Place on a buttered baking sheet and bake in a moderate oven until golden brown. Leave to cool on a wire cake tray.

Spread each with a thin layer of greengage jam and place them one on top of the other. Trim, and cover the whole completely with concentrated apricot jam. Mix 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) fine sugar, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) blanched and ground almonds, the finely diced candied peel of 1 orange (approximately 2 tablespoons), and 1 egg white.

Cover the cake with this mixture, sprinkle sugar over it and brown in the oven. Leave to cool before serving.

GAPERON – Cheese from Limagne which can be eaten from September to July.

GARBANZOS or GARVANCE – Spanish name for chick-peas.

These peas have rather a tough pulp and should be prepared like other dried vegetables by soaking overnight in cold water. Serve them with or without meat in the same way as haricot beans.

Garbanzos are an essential ingredient of olla podrida, a stew that is one of the most characteristic dishes of Spain.

GARBURE – Broth of the Béarnais district. The name also applies to many other broths and soups. Their common characteristics are the slices of bread covered with various savoury spreads, browned in the oven or simmered in fat in the stockpot, and served with the soup.

Simin Palay in his book la Cuisine en Béarn writes:

'Where does this term come from? The root is surely garbe (a sheaf or bunch). It is a bunch of vegetables which provides the basic stock of the garbure: cabbage, thyme, garlic, parsley, marjoram, French beans, peas . . . Moreover (in Béarn), the term garburatye is used for any collection or mixture of fresh green vegetables.

'Boil water in an earthenware pot glazed on the inside – cast iron or iron pots spoil the delicacy of the flavour. When it is boiling, throw in potatoes, peeled and cut into thick slices. Add other fresh vegetables in season: haricot or broad beans, peas, or French beans. Season with salt and pepper. Red pepper may be used in place of white. Flavour with garlic, a sprig of thyme, parsley or fresh marjoram. Leave to cook, making sure that the water is constantly on the boil. Shred tender green cabbage as finely as possible into strips, cutting across the width of the leaves, after having removed such portions as are too tough.

'Once the rest of the ingredients are thoroughly cooked, throw the cabbage into the boiling stock. Cover the pot to keep the cabbage leaves green and, 30 minutes before serving, put in a piece of pickled meat: lou trébuc; the fat adhering to this will be sufficient. If pork is used, a little goose fat will enhance the flavour. Cut stale wholemeal bread into thin slices and add to the stock and vegetables.

'The mixture must be thick enough for the ladle to stand up in it when set in the centre of the tureen.

'It is possible to make a good garbure without trébuc, but in that case it is necessary to put in the cold water a piece of ham bone, or a sausage, or, at the very least, lean bacon (thin flank). White cabbage may be used instead of green cabbage.

'For an everyday garbure, it is usual to make do with a piece of bacon or ham, or bacon chopped with crushed garlic.

'According to season, a few slices of pink swede or roast chestnuts are added. In winter, dried beans only being available, these have to be cooked in advance. They must be drained after cooking, as their water would destroy the characteristic flavour of the garbure. To thicken the broth, the beans are sometimes crushed and rubbed through a sieve.

'The meat is served separately from the broth, either by itself or with the vegetables, like the boiled beef of a hotpot. Some cooks brown the trébuc in a pan before putting it in the stock. In this case the necessary fat must be added, but the fat in which the trébuc was browned should not be used.

'A good goudale (q.v.) is an indispensable finish to every garbure.'

made with wire-mesh

GARDE-MANGER – Storage place, cool and well-aired, in large eating-houses, where the food required for the preparation of meals is kept. There are ice chests or refrigerators in which are stored meat, poultry, game, fish, and other provisions.

The cold buffet is prepared here, and all the preparatory work done on raw foodstuffs, such as boning and jointing meat, drawing and trussing poultry, and gutting fish.

The name is also used in France to designate the man whose special duty it is to supervise this part of the work of a large kitchen.

The word can also mean an ordinary larder.

GARDEN WARBLER. BECFIGUE – Bird found in great numbers in the south of France, particularly in Provence. It is called béguinette locally. Its French name becfigue dates back to the fig harvest in Roman times.

The garden warbler was greatly praised by Brillat-Savarin. He said that this bird, 'gets at least as plump as robins and ortolans, and nature has given its flesh a slight bitterness and a unique flavour which are so exquisite that they engage, gratify, and stimulate all the degustatory powers. If the garden warbler were the size of a pheasant it would certainly be worth the price of an acre of land.'

There are a number of recipes for preparing these little birds in addition to the recipes given for ortolans (q.v.).

Garden warblers à l'arlésienne. BECFIGUES À L'ARLÉSIENNE – Fill the middle of a round loaf of bread which has been hollowed out like a croustade (q.v.), buttered and baked in the oven, with St George's agarics (see AGARIC), briskly sautéed in butter.

On the mushrooms put 6 drawn and trussed warblers. Season with salt and pepper. Sprinkle with melted butter. Cook quickly in a very hot oven and serve in the bread croustade.

Garden warblers in the manner of Father Fabri. BECFIGUES À LA FAÇON DU PÈRE FABRI – Put a piece of foie gras the size of a walnut, studded with a piece of truffle, inside each warbler. Brown briskly in sizzling butter.

Line an ovenproof dish with a layer of à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) and put the birds on this, pressing them down into the forcemeat. Cover them with a few tablespoons of a fine salpicon (q.v.) of mushrooms tossed in butter. Sprinkle with a few drops of fine Champagne brandy and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) melted butter. Cook in a hot oven.

Garden warblers à la landaise. BECFIGUES À LA LANDAISE – Wrap each warbler in a vine leaf and a thin rasher of bacon, and put them on metal skewers, 3 birds to a skewer, separated from each other by croûtons of bread lightly fried in butter.

Place them in a long fireproof dish, season with salt and pepper, sprinkle with butter or foie gras fat. Cook quickly in a hot oven. When cooked, pour over the birds a little Armagnac, previously heated, with fresh peeled grapes and 1 teaspoon dissolved meat jelly added to it.

Garden warbler à la piémontaise. BECFIGUES À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Heat butter in a sauté pan and lightly brown blanched, drained, and shredded rashers of bacon. In the same fat, sizzling hot, cook the warblers.

Arrange the birds in a pie dish or timbale on a foundation of smooth risotto (q.v.) with truffles. Dilute the pan juices with a little Madeira, add a few tablespoons thickened brown veal stock and pour over the birds.

Garden warblers à la polenta (called à la romaine). BECFIGUES À LA POLENTA, À LA ROMAINE – Put a fairly stiff layer of polenta (q.v.) with cheese into an ovenproof dish. With the back of a wet spoon press as many hollows in this layer of polenta as there are birds. Into each hollow put a garden warbler which has been briskly tossed in butter.

Pour over the birds the butter in which they were browned, adding a little flamed brandy to it. Cook in a very hot oven and serve in the same dish.

Roast garden warblers. BECFIGUES RÔTIS – Prepare like Roast ortolans (see ORTOLAN).

GARFISH. ORPHIE – The garfish, or sea eel, has dry, lean flesh, poisonous at certain times. Prepare like eel (q.v.).

GARGOTE – French term for a third-rate restaurant, with its proprietor being called the gargotier. Gargote is also used colloquially to describe bad cooking.

GARLIC. AIL – Perennial plant, distinguished by its strong smell, cultivated for its bulb. It is also called poor man's theriac and herbe aux aulx ('garlic herb'). In country districts some people consider garlic as a very powerful anthelmintic and also as an antifebrile.

Aristophanes wrote that the athletes used to eat garlic before their exercises at the stadium. Virgil said that garlic is the right food to maintain the strength of harvest reapers. Pliny, the naturalist, maintained that garlic is a cure for consumption. Celsius cited it as a cure for fever. Hippocrates classed garlic among the sudorific drugs and adds: 'garlic is hot, laxative, and diuretic, but it is bad for the eyes.' Dioscorides made a strong case in its favour as an anthelmintic (a cure for intestinal worms).

The prophet Mohammed said: 'In cases of stings and bites by poisonous animals, garlic acts as a theriac. Applied to the spot bitten by viper, or sting of scorpion, it produces successful results.' In Cayenne garlic is used against bites of certain snakes.

In his Eléments d'histoire naturelle published in 1792, Millin claimed that 'garlic is a preventive against the plague'. Bernardin de Saint-Pierre said: 'Garlic, the smell of which is so dreaded by our little mistresses, is perhaps the most powerful remedy in existence against the vapours and nervous maladies to which they are subject.'

In the sixteenth century, certain doctors, says Dr Félix Brémont in his Dictionnaire de la table, 'condemned themselves to constant carrying of several cloves of garlic in their pockets to protect themselves, and their patients, from the bad air and epidemic diseases.'

Garlic

Garlic butter. BEURRE D'AIL – This butter, which is used in sauces, forcemeats, or in the preparation of cold hors-d'œuvre, is made by pounding together 4 cloves of peeled, blanched and drained garlic and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fresh butter. Pass the mixture through a fine sieve.

Garlic capons. CHAPONS À L'AIL – Crusts of bread rubbed with raw garlic, seasoned with oil, vinegar, salt, and pepper, and added to green salads.

Garlic forcemeat. FARCE D'AIL – Used for the preparation of cold hors-d'œuvre and various other dishes. Pound equal quantities of yolks of hard-boiled eggs and blanched cloves of garlic in a mortar. Add to this mixture half its volume of fresh butter, blend, and rub through a fine sieve.

Grated garlic. AIL RÂPÉ – Garlic is usually grated or pounded in a mortar. It is added to a great number of dishes. When added as a condiment to ingredients fried in butter, cooking fat or oil, do not allow it to fry, as this would render the dishes too pungent. Add it just before serving.

The expression pointe d'ail means the very small quantity of grated garlic which can be held on a point of a knife.

Garlic oil. HUILE D'AIL – Blanch and drain 15 cloves of garlic, and pound in a mortar to a fine paste. Add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) olive oil. Sieve through a muslin cloth.

This oil is used for seasoning salads. It can also be made by adding grated garlic to olive oil, which is then sieved through a cloth.

Powdered garlic. POUDRE D'AIL – Dry peeled garlic cloves slowly in an oven. When they are quite dry, pound them in a mortar and put to dry once again in the oven. Pound them again until they are reduced to a fine powder. Pass through a sieve. Pound the pieces left in the sieve and sift once more.

Put this powder into jars, seal, and keep in a dry place.

Garlic purée. PURÉE D'AIL – Blanch cloves of garlic and cook them in butter in a covered pan. Add a few tablespoons very thick Béchal sauce (see SAUCE). Blend and pass through a sieve.

This purée is used in certain sauces and forcemeats.

Garlic sauce. SAUCE À L'AIL – Name sometimes used to describe aioli (q.v.).

Garlic soup. SOUPE À L'AIL – This soup, the recipe for which will be found under SOUPS AND BROTHS, is very popular in the south of France.

Garlic toast. RÔTIE À L'AIL – Speciality of the south-west of France.

Lightly toast slices of wholemeal bread. Spread them with Garlic purée, sprinkle with grated breadcrumbs and olive oil, and brown briskly in the oven.

GARNISHES. GARNITURES – Garnishes are numerous and important to French cuisine. They are sometimes named after the man who originated them, or after an occasion, or after a place, etc.

Garnishes consist of various trimmings added to a dish or placed around meat, chicken, fish, etc., or served at the same time on a separate dish. Some garnishes are complicated and are made only by professionals; others are easily produced in the domestic kitchen.

Garnishes must always blend with the flavour of the basic dish. They may consist of one or several elements, and are termed simple or composite.

Simple garnishes. These consist of a single element, most commonly a vegetable, braised, sautéed, or bound with butter; a cereal (rice, etc.); or a farinaceous food (tart, croûton, etc.).

Composite garnishes. These are made from a number of ingredients, varying according to the basic dish. The ingredients must blend in flavour with the main dish and with one another.

Certain composite garnishes are often called ragoûts (financière, Godard, Toulouse, etc.). The various parts of these are generally arranged separately around the dish but they may also be mixed.

ARRANGEMENT OF GARNISHES. DRESSAGE DES GARNITURES –

For large cuts of meat, poultry, game – If there is no risk of their being spoilt by the stock or gravy of the main dish, the garnishes should be disposed round the main dish in separate groups.

The main meat should never be completely hidden by the garnish. If the meat is small, it is advisable to raise it on a croûton of fried bread or some other foundation.

This type of arrangement, being somewhat complicated, should be used only for formal banquets where dishes are presented to each guest and served by a waiter, and is only appropriate to certain garnishes made up of a large number of ingredients, such as financière, Godard, Toulouse, or Tortue.

To facilitate serving, large hot joints are often served to the guests already carved. Gravy and garnishes are served separately at the same time. Certain vegetable garnishes are always served separately. This applies especially to purées of vegetables or dried vegetables, to green vegetables in butter, which would become limp in the stock or gravy of the main dish, and to pastas and cereals (rice, semolina, etc.).

The stocks, gravies, and sauces appropriate to each garnish are listed under the various garnishes. The dressing should be very lightly sprinkled over the main dish. The remainder is served in a sauceboat.

Garnishes set out round the main dish should not be sprinkled with dressing, especially those made of fresh vegetables with butter, those served au gratin, or any deep-fried garnish.

Braised vegetables only should have the dressing poured over them.

For meat served in individual portions: cutlets, escalopes, noisettes, medallions, small fillets, fillet steaks, suprême of chicken, sautéed chicken – Apart from certain special dishes, to which attention is drawn under the appropriate heading, these small cuts of meat may be served with any of the garnishes indicated for large cuts.

It is advisable to prepare the garnishes in smaller shapes and quantities so that they may be in better proportion to the individual portions.

All the garnishes should be placed around or along the sides of the main dish. If sautéed, these portions should be served with their own cooking liquid. For grills it is preferable to serve a separate sauce.

The garnishes of individual portions may be served with sauce or not, according to the principles applicable to large cuts.

For cold dishes – Details of the ingredients and arrangement of garnishes for these dishes are given under the heading COLD FOODSTUFFS.

The quantities of garnish to be used depend upon the main dish, but they vary also according to the menu as a whole. The various ingredients of a composite garnish must be sufficient in number to serve all the guests. The quantities used in the preparation of garnishes, whether simple or composite, should be calculated at approximately 100 g. (4 oz.) for each guest.

For soups and broths – These garnishes may consist of a single item or may be composite. Some, such as tapioca and other similar ingredients, are cooked in the soup itself. Others are prepared separately and added to the soup at the last moment, or, where appropriate, served separately.

SIMPLE GARNISHES. GARNITURES SIMPLES –

For meat dishes –

Artichokes. Hearts or quarters: stewed; braised; sautéed. Hearts: stuffed, sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; puréed.

Artichokes, Jerusalem. Sautéed; in cream.

Aubergines. Stuffed, sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned in cream.

Broad beans (fresh). In butter; in cream; puréed.

Brussels sprouts. Sautéed.

Cabbage (green or red). Braised; stuffed with forcemeat and rolled into balls; stuffed with small slices of meat and rolled into sausages.

Carrots (glazed). In gravy; with Vichy sauce.

Cauliflower. Sautéed; coated with Mornay sauce; in florets sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned.

Celery or celeriac. Stewed; braised.

Cèpes. À la bordelaise; with chopped herbs; à la provençale; with cream.

Chestnuts. Stewed; braised.

Corn on the cob. In butter; in cream.

Cucumbers. Cut pear-shaped, stewed in butter; in thick slices, stuffed.

Endive. Braised; in butter; in cream.

Fennel (bulbous). Braised; stewed.

French beans. In butter; in cream; puréed.

Fungi. Cultivated mushrooms, chanterelles, morels, flap-mushrooms, St George's agaric, orange-milk agaric, etc. Sautéed, and cooked in various other ways.

Gourd (pumpkin). Quartered: stewed in butter; braised; stuffed; cooked in cream.

Hop panicles. In butter or cream.

Kidney beans (fresh or dried small). In butter or cream; puréed.

Ladies' fingers. In cream; in gravy.

Lentils. In butter; puréed.

Lettuce. Braised; stuffed.

Macaroni. Prepared in various ways.

Mixed beans. Mixture of French beans and small kidney beans, fresh or dried.

Noodles and other pasta of the same type. Prepared in various ways.

Onions. Glazed; stuffed.

Peas. À la française; cooked with lettuce leaves; à la paysanne; purée St Germain.

Potatoes. Boiled; Anna; croquettes; fondantes; fried in various ways; covered with breadcrumbs and browned; fried with minced onions previously browned; shaped as nuts and browned in butter; parisienne; sprinkled with parsley.

Red beans. À la bourguignonne; in gravy; puréed.

Rice. Cooked in fat; curried; pilaf; risotto croquettes; in cream.

Spinach. Whole leaves or as a purée; in butter; in cream; in stock.

Tomatoes. Stuffed in various ways, sprinkled with cheese and/or breadcrumbs and browned; grilled; sautéed.

Turnips. Glazed; stuffed.

White beans. In butter; à la bretonne; in cream; in stock; à la maître d'hôtel; puréed.

For poultry –

Artichokes. Hearts or quartered whole artichokes: stewed, braised, or sautéed for pot-roasted poultry; sautéed or cooked in a casserole for drumsticks or breasts of poultry.

Hearts: in cream for pot-roasted, poached, or sautéed poultry, for drumsticks or breasts of poultry; stuffed for braised or pot-roasted poultry; braised in white stock for poached poultry.

Cèpes. For braised or pot-roasted poultry, sautéed chicken or chicken casserole, for drumsticks or breasts of poultry.

Chestnuts. Braised or stewed for braised or pot-roasted chicken, for braised or pot-roasted young turkey, for pot-roasted pigeon.

Lettuce. Braised for braised, pot-roasted, or poached chicken, braised or pot-roasted young turkey, braised or pot-roasted pigeon.

Mushrooms. Cooked in a white stock for poached poultry, for drumsticks or breasts of poultry; cooked in a brown stock for braised, pot-roasted, sautéed, or casserole poultry, drumsticks or breasts of poultry, pot-roasted pigeon, pot-roasted guinea-fowl.

Noodles and other pasta. For braised or pot-roasted poultry, sautéed or casserole chicken, pot-roasted turkey.

Pilaf. With pot-roasted poultry, sautéed or casserole chicken, drumsticks or breasts of poultry, pot-roasted turkey.

Rice. Cooked in fat, for poached poultry.

Risotto. For braised or pot-roasted poultry, chicken sautéed or cooked in a casserole, drumsticks or breasts of poultry.

Turnips. Glazed for braised poultry or braised or pot-roasted Nantes duckling.

Vegetables (various). Glazed carrots in gravy or à la Vichy; cauliflower sprinkled with cheese and/or breadcrumbs and browned; Sauerkraut; braised fennel; broad beans in butter or cream; glazed turnips; glazed onions; French beans in butter or cream; peas cooked in various ways; salsify sautéed or in cream; sautéed tomatoes; Jerusalem artichokes in butter, etc. All these vegetables may be served with braised, pot-roasted, or poached poultry, sautéed chicken or chicken casserole, cutlets, breasts, or fillets of chicken.

Young corn on the cob. In butter or cream for braised, pot-roasted, or poached poultry, sautéed chicken, cutlets, breasts, or fillets of poultry, pot-roasted guinea-fowl.

GARNISHES FOR EGGS. GARNITURES POUR OEUFS –

Like all other basic foods, eggs, especially soft-boiled or poached in the ordinary way or in moulds, may be served with a great variety of garnishes. Detailed recipes for those garnishes and instructions for setting them out on the dish are to be found among the recipes for egg dishes (see EGGS).

GARNISHES FOR FISH. GARNITURES POUR POISSONS –

Braised fish, whole or in thick slices, is garnished according to the instructions set out for main meat dishes.

Poached fish (fish cooked in a court-bouillon), whole or sliced, is invariably garnished with boiled or steamed potatoes and fresh parsley. The dressing is a sauce of some kind, served separately. To this standard garnish are sometimes added further ingredients such as very small fried fish, minute croquettes, or shells filled with various garnishes, etc.

Small fish, or fillets poached in a little court-bouillon, are served with various garnishes, simple or composite. Details of these garnishes are given with the recipe for the fish in question.

Small fish and their garnishes are normally covered with sauce prescribed for them, unless they are fried à la meunière or sprinkled with cheese or breadcrumbs and browned.

Grilled fish, whole or sliced, is garnished as a rule with boiled potatoes, slices of lemon cut with a fluted knife, and fresh parsley. Some types of grilled fish have special garnishes. Details of these are given with the recipe for the fish in question.

Fried fish is invariably garnished with fried parsley and halved or quartered lemons.

COMPOSITE GARNISHES. GARNITURES COMPOSÉES –

À l'africaine – Black potatoes (potatoes whose pulp is dark bluish in colour – see POTATOES), cut to look like marbles, blanched in salt water, and cooked in butter; braised courgettes (zucchini).

Serve with rice cooked in fat stock lightly flavoured with saffron.

Agnès Sorel – Salpicon (q.v.) of pickled tongue, mushrooms, and truffles, with little mounds of white rice.

Uses. For calves' sweetbreads; poached or braised poultry; vol-au-vent; hot pâtés; savoury tarts.

À l'ancienne II – Little savoury nests made of fried Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) filled with a mixture of diced calves' kidneys sautéed in butter, and diced mushrooms, bound with thickened veal gravy; stuffed braised lettuce; small potato balls browned in butter; French beans in butter.

Sauce. Braising liquor or pot-roast juices.

Uses. For large braised or pot-roasted cuts of meat, especially loin and saddle of veal.

Garnish à l'ancienne round a saddle of veal

À l'ancienne III – Small pastry boats garnished with a salpicon of soft roes blended with Normande sauce (see SAUCE); truffles trimmed to look like olives; mushrooms; freshwater crayfish cooked in a court-bouillon.

Sauce. Reduced pan juices of the main dish blended with a Madeira-flavoured Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock and cream, to which a fine vegetable mirepoix is added.

Uses. For baked or poached fish.

À l'anglaise I – Carrots cut in 5-cm. (2-inch) lengths and medium-sized onions cooked with leg of lamb; mashed turnips also cooked with leg of lamb, drained and mashed.

Sauce. Butter sauce (see SAUCE) with capers in vinegar added, served separately.

Uses. For poached leg of lamb.

À l'anglaise II – Carrots and turnips cut in 5-cm. (2-inch) lengths, cooked with chicken; celery hearts also cooked with chicken; French beans and cauliflower, boiled.

Sauce. Butter sauce (see SAUCE) with capers in vinegar added, served separately. (See CHICKEN, Chicken à l'anglaise.)

À l'Anversoise – Hop shoots in cream; potatoes cut to look like olives deep-fried in butter. Or small artichoke hearts stewed in butter and filled with hop shoots in cream; chicory (endive) à la flamande.

Sauce. Juices from the roast or clear veal stock.

Uses. For large or small cuts of meat; poultry.

Armenonville – Small Anna potatoes (see POTATOES); morels in cream; and tartlets filled with a salpicon of cocks' combs and kidneys.

Uses. For small pieces of meat; calves' sweetbreads.

À la banquière – Chicken quenelles; mushrooms; shredded truffles.

(According to the nature of the main dish, the ingredients of this garnish are either prepared separately or mixed in a ragoût.)

Sauce. Banquière sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For calves' sweetbreads and poultry poached or braised à blanc; vol-au-vent.

Béatrix – Morels sautéed in butter; glazed carrots; braised quartered artichokes; browned new potatoes.

Sauce. Diluted meat juices from the cooking pan.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

À la Beauharnais – Very small artichoke hearts filled with Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) to which tarragon purée has been added; small potato balls browned in butter.

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish diluted with Madeira and veal stock, together with chopped truffles.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Garnish Béatrix (Debillot. Phot. Larousse)

Beauvilliers – Small spinach kromeskijs (prepared by filling pancakes with spinach, rolling them up, cutting them in rounds, dipping them in batter and frying them in deep fat); small tomatoes stuffed with cooked brain purée, browned with breadcrumbs; salsify cut into rounds, sautéed in butter.

Sauce. Braising stock.

Uses. For large cuts of braised meat.

À la bénédictine – Very small tartlets or pastry boats garnished with Brandade of salt cod (see COD, Salt cod) with chopped truffles added.

Sauce. White wine sauce (see SAUCE) if accompanying fish; Cream sauce for eggs.

Uses. For fish or coddled or poached eggs.

À la Berrichonne – Braised cabbage; small onions; chestnuts; rashers of lean bacon.

Uses. For meat, principally mutton, served in big cuts. *

À la Biarrotte – Grilled cèpes and cakes of Duchess potato (see POTATOES) used as a foundation for meat.

Uses. For meat served in small portions.

Bonne-femme I – Potatoes trimmed into small ovals, small onions, lean larding bacon and mushrooms, cooked with chicken.

Uses. For poultry.

Bonne-femme II – Thinly sliced mushrooms cooked with fish.

Uses. For fish.

À la bordelaise I – Cèpes à la bordelaise (see MUSHROOMS); potatoes cut to look like olives and cooked slowly in clarified butter.

Sauce. Juices of the roast.

Uses. For large joints.

À la bordelaise II – Small quartered artichokes stewed in butter; raw, thinly sliced potatoes sautéed in butter; fried onion rings; fried parsley.

Sauce. Pan juices of main dish diluted with white wine and veal or chicken stock.

Uses. For jointed poultry.

À la boulangère – Thinly sliced or quartered potatoes and thinly sliced onions, cooked with the main dish.

Sauce. Juices of the roast.

Uses. For shoulder, leg, and other cuts of mutton and lamb; occasionally for poultry.

À la bouquetière I – Glazed carrots and turnips trimmed into very small ovals or shaped with a ball-scoop; peas and diced French beans, boiled separately and blended with butter; cauliflower divided into florets and boiled, covered with Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE) or melted butter; new potatoes browned in butter.

Dispose these vegetables round the main dish in separate groups.

Sauce. Juices of the roast.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

À la bouquetière II – Very small artichoke hearts simmered in butter, filled alternately with carrots and turnips; buttered French beans; small bunches of asparagus tips, held upright by a ring of carrots; cauliflower divided into florets and covered with Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE); potatoes cut to look like olives and sautéed in butter.

Sauce. Juices of the roast.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

À la bourgeoise (sometimes called à la mode) – Glazed carrots cut in ovals, and onions, both cooked with the meat. Sometimes braised fresh vegetables such as celery, lettuce, etc., are added.

Sauce. Braising liquor of the main dish.

Uses. For large braised cuts of meat, notably beef rump braised à la bourgeoise (see BEEF), but this garnish may be used with braised ox tongue, veal (noix de veau), or leg of lamb or mutton.

À la bourguignonne I – Small glazed onions; whole or quartered mushrooms sautéed in butter; diced, blanched, and browned salt (pickled) pork.

Sauce. Bourguignonne sauce (see SAUCE). This garnish, generally served with braised meat, should be added to the main dish a short time before it is completely cooked.

Uses. For large cuts of meat, especially beef.

À la bourguignonne II – The same as the previous garnish, but without the pork.

Sauce. Red wine sauce made with vegetable or fish stock with a little fresh butter added.

Uses. For braised fish.

À la brabançonne I – Braised chicory; Potato fondantes (see POTATOES).

Sauce. Reduced veal stock.

Uses. Large cuts of meat.

À la brabançonne II – Little tartlets garnished with Brussels sprouts simmered in butter, covered with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; potato croquettes.

Sauce. Reduced veal stock.

Uses. For large pieces of meat.

Brancas – Anna potatoes (see POTATOES) cooked in individual moulds and turned out; Chiffonade of lettuce with cream (see LETTUCE) quite dry.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock or a Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For small cuts of meat; white meat especially poultry.

À la bretonne I – Dry white beans or small kidney beans, cooked in meat stock and blended with Bretonne sauce (see SAUCE).

Sauce. Roast pan juices or veal stock flavoured with tomato.

Uses. For large cuts of meat (especially leg of lamb) pot-roasted or roasted.

À la bretonne II – Breton white bean purée (see PURÉE).

Sauce. Juices of the roast.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

À la bretonne III – Leeks, onions, celery and mushrooms, cut in thin strips and cooked slowly in butter until they are very tender, and added to the main fish dish before it is fully cooked.

Sauce. Made with a Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and cream.

Uses. For baked or poached fish.

Brillat-Savarin – Little nests made of Duchess potatoes (see

GARNISHES

POTATOES) fried and hollowed to hold a salpicon of foie gras and truffles blended into a concentrated Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE). Asparagus tips can be arranged on top.

Sauce. Thin demi-glaze sauce for large cuts. Stock of the main dish flavoured with white Malaga wine, a third veal stock and two-thirds chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), for small cuts.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

À la bruxelloise – Brussels sprouts in butter; Potato fondantes (see POTATOES) or potatoes cut to look like olives and cooked slowly in clarified butter.

Sauce. Clear veal stock or thin Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

Camérani – Small tartlets filled with Foie gras purée (see PURÉE); shredded truffles; slices of pickled tongue shaped as cocks' combs; Macaroni à l'italienne (see MACARONI).

Sauce. Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) to which the reduced pan juices have been added.

Uses. Poultry and poached calves' sweetbreads.

À la cancalaise – Lenten garnish of oysters and shrimps' tails in Normande sauce (see SAUCE).

À la cardinal – Fish garnish of little coquilles cardinal; mushrooms; slices of truffle.

Little carrot timbales. PETITS PAINS DE CAROTTES – Buttered custard cups or dariole moulds filled with carrots prepared as for Carrot timbale (see CARROT). Cook in a moderate oven in a pan of hot water or bain-marie.

Castiglione – Large mushrooms filled with risotto mixed with chopped lean ham, sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; rounds of aubergine sautéed in butter (to be used as canapés); strips of poached bone-marrow.

Sauce. Stock of the main dish flavoured with white wine to which chopped shallots and veal stock have been added. Butter should be added to this sauce after it has been reduced.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

À la catalane – Aubergine, coarsely diced, sautéed in oil; Rice pilaf (see PILAF).

Sauce. A Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with tomato.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Cavour – Small baked rounds of polenta (q.v.) made with cheese (to be used as canapés); large grilled mushrooms filled with purée of chicken liver; shredded truffles.

Sauce. Veal stock flavoured with Marsala or tomato.

Uses. For small cuts of meat, especially sautéed escalopes (U.S. cutlets) of veal and breaded calves' sweetbreads.

À la chalonaise – Small tartlets garnished with cocks' kidneys blended with concentrated Velouté sauce (see SAUCE); cocks' combs à la Villeroi; slices of truffles; mushrooms.

Sauce. Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For poultry; calves' sweetbreads poached or braised in a white stock.

Chambord – Large and small fish quenelles; mushrooms; fillets of sole; soft roes sautéed in butter; truffles cut to look like olives; freshwater crayfish cooked in a court-bouillon; small fried croûtons.

Sauce. Red wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large braised fish.

À la chanoinesse – Very small carrots in cream mixed with coarsely chopped truffles. Arranged as a filling for tartlets.

Sauce. Pan juices diluted with sherry and veal stock.

Uses. For calves' sweetbreads; Suprême of chicken (see CHICKEN); coddled or poached eggs.

À la châtelaine – Artichoke hearts filled with chestnut purée mixed with rice, sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; braised lettuce; potato balls browned in butter.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock or diluted pan juices of the main dish.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Chervil leaves. PLUCHES DE CERFEUIL – All traces of stalk and fibre should be removed from the leaves of chervil. Most soups with a base of whole or puréed vegetables should have chervil added – 1 teaspoon to every litre (scant quart, generous quart) soup. Because of the very delicate aromatic flavour of this herb, the leaves must be added to the soup at the last moment, when the soup is off the boil.

Uses. For soup.

Chiffonnade – Finely shredded lettuce leaves and sorrel stewed slowly in butter. This chiffonnade is used in many different soups.

À la chinonaise – Small rolls of green cabbage stuffed with sausage meat and braised; potatoes sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Sauce. Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Chipolata – Braised chestnuts; small glazed onions; chipolata sausages; mushrooms.

Sauce. Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) or the braising stock of the main dish.

Sometimes lean bacon, coarsely diced, blanched, and browned in butter with braised carrots, is also served.

Uses. For large cuts of meat or poultry.

Choron – Potato balls browned in butter; artichoke hearts filled with peas (or asparagus tips) and simmered in butter.

Sauce. Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with tomato, arranged in a ring round the main dish.

Uses. For small cuts of meat, fried or grilled.

Chou paste balls. PROFITEROLES – Using Chou paste (see DOUGH) in a forcing-bag with a round nozzle, squeeze out onto a baking sheet little balls each the size of a nut. Bake in a moderately hot oven for 20 to 25 minutes.

Stuff the balls with a purée or whatever other ingredient is appropriate, according to the recipe for the soup in which they are to be served, and heat them up.

Uses. For soup.

À la Clamart I – Artichoke hearts filled with peas in butter; potato balls browned in butter.

Sauce. Veal stock blended with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large or small cuts of meat.

À la Clamart II – See St Germain garnish II (below).

À la Clermont – Rolls of green cabbage stuffed and braised; rectangular slices of salt (pickled) pork cooked with the cabbage; potatoes.

Sauce. Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) or the braising liquor.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Cocks' kidneys as garnish. ROGNONS DE COQ – Wash in several waters 100 g. (4 oz.) firm, white cocks' kidneys. Put them into a small saucepan with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) water, a pinch of salt, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter and a few drops of lemon juice.

Start cooking over a good heat. As soon as the liquid begins to boil turn the heat very low and continue cooking, covered, for 10 to 12 minutes, taking care to avoid boiling.

Use according to the recipe.

À la Conti – Small croquettes of purée of lentils (rolled into balls); potatoes cut to look like olives, fried in butter.

Sauce. Pan juices diluted with Madeira and Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Crêpes – Place in an earthenware dish 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour and 1 teaspoon table salt. Add 2 whole eggs, mix well, and dilute the mixture with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) boiled milk.

Make pancakes and use them as appropriate. Clear soup may be used instead of milk in the preparation of this garnish.

Uses. For soup.

Croûtes garnished and browned à l'ancienne. CROÛTES GARNIES ET GRATINÉES À L'ANCIENNE – Cut a long French loaf into slices 3 to 4 cm. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches) thick. Scoop out three quarters of the bread to make nests. Brush with butter or fat from a pot-au-feu. Toast lightly in the oven. Chop or sieve the vegetables from the pot-au-feu, add grated cheese, and garnish the bread with little mounds of this mixture. Place these croûtes on a baking sheet and sprinkle with grated cheese. Moisten with a few drops of the fat, and brown.

Uses. For clear soup.

Croûtons – Dice slices of sandwich loaf into cubes approximately  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) across. Fry them in clarified butter just before serving.

Uses. For soups. Allow 50 g. (2 oz.) fried bread for every litre (scant quart, generous quart) soup.

À la Cussy – Artichoke hearts filled with mushroom purée, sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; cocks' kidneys; shredded truffles.

Sauce. Sauce flavoured with Madeira or port.

Uses. For small cuts of meat; poultry, whole or jointed.

À la Daumont – Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH) (in scallop shells or pastry boats); large fish quenelles (see QUENELLES), decorated with truffles; fillets of sole decorated with truffles cut in fancy shapes; slices of truffle; mushrooms cooked in court-bouillon.

Sauce. Normande sauce (see SAUCE) with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Uses. For large baked fish.

À la Dauphine – Dauphine potatoes (see POTATOES).

Sauce. Roast pan juices or clear veal stock.

Uses. For large or small cuts of meat.

À la demi-deuil – Food prepared à la demi-deuil is covered with a Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) and garnished with truffles.

Uses. For poached poultry and veal braised à blanc.

À la dieppoise – Mussels (shelled) in white wine; tails of freshwater crayfish, grey or pink (shelled); mushrooms.

Sauce. White wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For fish poached in white wine.

Dubarry – Cauliflower shaped into balls, masked with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) sprinkled with grated cheese and browned.

Uses. Large or small cuts of meat.

Garnish Dubarry (Debilloit. Phot. Larousse)

À la duchesse – Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) in different shapes according to the nature of the main dish.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock or roast pan juices.

Uses. For large or small cuts of meat.

Duroc – New potatoes (very small), browned in butter.

Sauce. Chasseur sauce (see SAUCE) cooked in the pan used for the main dish.

Uses. For small cuts of meat and poultry, sautéed.

Duxelles – Chopped mushrooms browned in butter and oil mixed with chopped onions and shallots, moistened with white wine, with chopped parsley added.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Favart – Chicken quenelles seasoned with chopped tarragon, tartlets of rich pastry filled with a salpicon of mushrooms (cèpes) in cream.

Sauce. Thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) of chicken with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Uses. For poultry; veal; sweetbreads.

À la favorite – Small artichokes (or quarters of artichokes) braised; lettuces stuffed and braised; mushrooms cooked in butter and filled with mixed diced vegetables; small Anna potatoes (see POTATOES) baked in individual moulds and turned out.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock, Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) or the diluted pan juices of the main dish.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

À la fermière – Artichoke hearts filled with a fondue (q.v.) of mixed vegetables; braised lettuces.

Sauce. Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

À la financière – Chicken or veal quenelles; cocks' combs and kidneys; mushrooms; shredded truffles. Stoned and blanched olives, and freshwater crayfish are sometimes added.

Sauce. Financière sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat; calves' sweetbreads; poultry; vol-au-vent, etc.

Garnish à la flamande round a fillet of beef

À la flamande – Green cabbage stuffed, rolled up, and braised; carrots and turnips trimmed into large oval shapes and glazed; potatoes. Diced pork fat and slices of sausage cooked with the cabbage are sometimes added.

Sauce. Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), veal stock, or the diluted pan juices of the main dish.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

À la forestière – Morels sautéed in butter; potato balls browned in butter. Sometimes salt (pickled) pork, diced, blanched, and fried in butter is added.

GARNISHES

Sauce. Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), reduced veal stock, or the diluted pan juices of the main dish.

Uses. Large and small pieces of meat; poultry.

À la française – Small nests made from Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) hollowed out, dipped in egg and bread-crumbs, fried, and filled with diced mixed vegetables; bunches of asparagus tips; braised lettuces; florets of cauliflower coated with Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Sauce. Thin Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) or clear veal gravy.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

A Frascati garnish round a fillet of beef

Frascati – Large baked mushrooms, some filled with a salpicon of truffles, others with buttered green asparagus tips; small slices of foie gras sautéed in butter.

Sauce. Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with port.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

À la gauloise I – Tartlets filled with cocks' kidneys; cocks' combs fried à la Villeroi; mushrooms; truffles.

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish diluted with white wine.

Uses. For small cuts of meat; jointed poultry.

À la gauloise II – Pastry boats filled with a salpicon of truffles and mushrooms à la crème; potato croquettes; fresh-water crayfish cooked in a court-bouillon.

Sauce. Matelote sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large baked or poached fish.

Glazed carrots for garnish – See CARROTS.

Glazed Italian marrow (zucchini) garnish – See ITALIAN MARROW.

Glazed onions for garnish. OIGNONS GLACÉS – Skin small, uniform-sized onions. Fry them very lightly in butter in a shallow pan. Sprinkle with a little sugar and season.

Moisten with stock (or water, if the garnish is required for a Lenten dish) so that the liquid does not quite cover them. Simmer gently with the lid on the pan until the liquid has completely disappeared.

If, after this reduction of liquid, the onions are not yet cooked, add a few tablespoons of hot stock, finish cooking and glaze, without stirring them.

Godard – Large decorated quenelles; small poultry or veal quenelles with truffles; sheep's sweetbreads, braised and glazed; cocks' combs and kidneys; small truffles, whole or cut to look like olives; mushroom caps.

When this garnish is for a substantial second course, calves' sweetbreads stuffed with bacon and braised may be substituted for the sheep's sweetbreads. (For fuller information, see CHICKEN, Chicken à la Godard.)

Sauce. Godard sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large cuts of meat; poultry.

Gorenflot – Braised coarsely shredded red cabbage; rounds of Saveloy sausage cooked with the cabbage; Potatoes à la ménagère (see POTATOES).

Sauce. Braising stock.

Uses. For large braised cuts of meat.

Gouffé – Little nests of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) fried and hollowed out to hold morels cooked in cream; asparagus tips in butter.

Sauce. Stock of the main dish blended with Madeira and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

Gratin dauphinois. Gratin of potatoes à la dauphinoise. GRATIN DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA DAUPHINOISE – Slice thinly 1 kg. (2½ lb.) potatoes. Season with salt and pepper and put them in an ovenproof dish previously rubbed with garlic and butter. Sprinkle grated cheese on the potatoes, spread out in the dish in even layers.

Pour over this a mixture of 2 eggs and 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) boiled milk, a little salt, and a dash of grated nutmeg. Sprinkle with grated cheese and dot the top with butter.

Bring to the boil on the stove and complete the cooking in the oven for about 40 minutes. Serve in the baking dish.

The garlic and grated nutmeg may be omitted if desired, though, strictly speaking, they form an essential seasoning of this dish.

Gratin of potatoes à la savoyarde. GRATIN DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA SAVOYARDE – Prepared as for Gratin dauphinois, substituting clear stock for the milk.

Helder – Potato balls browned in butter; Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE), traced in a circle on the meat; thick Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) placed in the middle of the béarnaise sauce.

Sauce. Meat juices of the main dish blended with reduced veal stock.

Uses. For small sautéed cuts of meat.

Henry IV – Artichoke hearts filled with Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) with concentrated veal stock added; potato balls browned in butter; shredded truffles.

Sauce. Stock of the main dish blended with Madeira and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

À la hongroise I – Large florets of cauliflower coated with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), seasoned with paprika, sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned under the grill; potato fondantes (see POTATOES).

Sauce. Thin Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

À la hongroise II – Nests of Duchess potato (see POTATOES) garnished with florets of cauliflower coated with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), to which is added chopped onion simmered in butter and seasoned with paprika.

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish blended with cream, seasoned with paprika and thickened with a little Velouté sauce or Béchal sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

À la hongroise III – Rice pilaf; diced tomatoes simmered in butter.

Sauce. Hongroise sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For poultry, poached or sautéed.

Japanese garnish – See JAPONAISE (À LA).

À la jardinière – Glazed carrots and turnips in small oval shapes (or rounded with a ball-scoop); peas; French beans; small kidney beans in butter – all disposed round the dish in separate groups.

Florets of cauliflower, coated with Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE) or melted butter are sometimes added.

Sauce. Pan juices or clear veal stock.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

Jessica – Tiny artichokes cooked in butter, stuffed with a salpicon of bone-marrow with shallots; morels sautéed in butter; Anna potatoes (see POTATOES) baked in individual moulds.

Sauce. Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) increased by a third with concentrated veal stock and Truffle essence (see ESSENCE).

Uses. For Suprême of chicken (see CHICKEN); veal escalopes (U.S. cutlets); coddled or poached eggs.

Joinville – Salpicon of shrimps, truffles and mushrooms, blended into Velouté sauce or Normande sauce (see SAUCE); sliced truffles.

Sauce. Normande sauce with Shrimp butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Uses. For baked fish.

Julienne – Shred into matchstick strips, carrots, turnips, leeks, onions, and celery. Cook them in butter until tender. Add clear meat stock. If a vegetarian soup is required, water is added instead of stock. To this mixture add shredded cabbage and lettuce hearts, fresh peas, and 1 or 2 tablespoons shredded sorrel.

Uses. For soup.

À la languedocienne – Cèpes sautéed in butter or oil; diced or sliced aubergines fried in oil; potatoes cut to look like olives and cooked slowly in clarified butter.

Sauce. Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with tomato.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat; poultry.

À la lorraine – Red cabbage braised in red wine; Potato fondantes (see POTATOES).

Sauce. Diluted Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) or braising stock; in addition, Horseradish sauce (see SAUCE) served separately, or grated horseradish.

Uses. For large cuts of meat, particularly braised cuts.

À la lyonnaise – Medium-sized stuffed onions, braised; Potato fondantes (see POTATOES).

Sauce. Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Macédoine – Mixture of vegetables which have been cooked in water separately, drained, and tossed in butter; carrots and turnips diced or shaped with a ball-scoop; diced French beans; small kidney beans; peas, etc. Cauliflower florets may be added.

Sauce. Juices of the roast or clear veal stock.

Uses. For large or small cuts of meat.

Maillot I (also called Porte-Maillot) – Glazed carrots and turnips in small oval lengths (or shaped with a ball-scoop); French beans in butter; braised lettuces. These vegetables, arranged round the dish in separate groups, are sometimes interspersed with little glazed onions and knobs of cauliflower sprinkled with melted butter.

Sauce. Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira.

Uses. For large cuts of meat, especially ham.

Maillot II – Coarsely shredded carrots and turnips, simmered in butter in a covered pan; French beans in butter.

Sauce and uses. As Maillot I.

Maillot garnish round a ham

À la maraîchère – Carrots trimmed into large oval lengths and glazed; small glazed onions; thick slices of stuffed and braised cucumber; quartered artichokes which have been simmered in butter in a covered pan.

Sauce. Strained braising liquor, with all fat removed.

Uses. For large braised cuts of meat.

À la maréchale – Asparagus tips in butter; sliced truffles. Ingredients prepared à la maréchale are dipped in a mixture of two thirds breadcrumbs and one third finely chopped truffles.

Sauce. Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) or Chateaubriand sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For Suprême of chicken (see CHICKEN); escalopes (U.S. cutlets) of veal; sweetbreads; sometimes filets of fish.

À la Marigny – Small artichoke hearts filled with corn kernels in cream; potato balls, browned in butter.

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish diluted with white wine and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

À la marinière – Shelled mussels cooked in white wine; shelled tails of freshwater crayfish.

Sauce. Marinière sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For fish.

Marivaux – Oval nests made of Duchess potato (see POTATOES), browned in the oven, filled with a mixture of finely chopped carrots, celery, artichoke hearts, and mushrooms – which have all been simmered in butter in a covered pan and blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) – sprinkled with Parmesan cheese and breadcrumbs and browned; French beans in butter.

Sauce. Thin Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) or thickened veal stock.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

À la marocaine – Little mounds of rice pilaf, lightly seasoned with saffron (to be used as canapés); diced baby marrows (U.S. zucchinis) sautéed in oil; braised sweet peppers stuffed with chicken forcemeat.

Sauce. Pan juices diluted with tomato juice.

Uses. For noisettes of mutton or lamb.

À la mascotte – Sliced artichoke hearts sautéed in butter; potatoes trimmed into small oval lengths, browned in butter; sliced truffles.

Ingredients prepared à la mascotte are usually served in a deep pie dish or in earthenware dishes.

Sauce. Pan juices diluted with white wine and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For small cuts of meat; poultry.

Massena – Artichoke hearts garnished with strips of poached bone-marrow.

Sauce. Marrow sauce (see SAUCE) prepared by diluting the juices in which the marrow has been cooked.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Massenet – Anna potatoes baked in individual moulds and turned out (see POTATOES, Anna potatoes for garnish); small artichokes filled with a salpicon of bone-marrow; French beans in butter.

Sauce. Meat juices of the main dish or a Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira.

Uses. For large or small cuts of meat.

Matelote – Small glazed onions; mushrooms; small croustons fried in butter.

Sauce. Matelote sauce (see SAUCE) with red wine.

Uses. For fish.

Matignon – Artichoke hearts stuffed with a matignon (q.v.), sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; stuffed braised lettuces.

Sauce. Madeira sauce or Port wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

GARNISHES

Melba – Very small tomatoes filled with a salpicon of chicken, truffles, and mushrooms, blended in Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; braised lettuce.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock flavoured with port.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Mentonnaise – Thick slices of small vegetable marrows stuffed with tomato-flavoured rice; small cooked artichokes simmered in butter in a covered pan; potatoes cut to look like olives and cooked slowly in clarified butter.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock or Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

Mikado – Small mounds of curried rice to be used as canapés; tartlets filled with soya bean shoots in cream.

Sauce. Curry sauce (see SAUCE) with soya added.

Uses. For suprêmes of chicken, escalopes (U.S. cutlets) of veal.

Milanaise I – Macaroni à l'italienne (see MACARONI); cooked ham in dariole moulds.

Sauce. Veal stock flavoured with tomato.

Uses. For large pieces of meat.

Milanaise II – Semolina gnocchi (cut in lozenges and rectangles) sprinkled with cheese and browned.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock flavoured with tomato.

Milanaise III – Macaroni à l'italienne (see MACARONI); cooked ham, pickled tongue, mushrooms, and truffles, cut into strips and blended in concentrated veal stock flavoured with tomato, making a coarse julienne.

This julienne is either mixed with the macaroni or arranged in a circle round it.

Uses. For small cuts of meat especially veal cutlets (U.S. chops) in breadcrumbs.

Mirabeau – Stoned olives; anchovy fillets; blanched tarragon leaves. Watercress and occasionally matchstick potatoes are also included in this garnish.

Sauce. Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Uses. For small cuts of meat especially grilled steaks.

À la moderne – Chartreuse (q.v.) of vegetables in dariole moulds; stuffed, braised lettuces; small potatoes.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock with butter added.

Uses. Large cuts of meat.

Mont-Bry – Little cakes of spinach with Parmesan cheese; cèpes in cream.

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish blended with white wine and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Montpensier – Green asparagus tips in butter; sliced truffles.

Sauce. Stock of the main dish blended with Madeira and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For small cuts of meat; jointed chicken.

Nanette – Small artichoke hearts cooked in butter in a covered pan, filled with Lettuce chiffonnade with cream (see CHIFFONNADÉ); mushrooms simmered in butter and filled with a salpicon of truffles blended with a concentrated Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish flavoured with Marsala and blended with chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE); cream and white chicken jelly.

Uses. For lamb cutlets (U.S. chops); escalopes (U.S. cutlets) of veal; calves' sweetbreads.

Nantua – Freshwater Crayfish tails ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH), arranged in shells, pastry boats, or tartlets, or set on a dish surrounding fish cooked in white wine. Shredded truffles are sometimes added.

Sauce. Nantua sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For fish.

Nichette – Grilled mushrooms filled with grated horse-radish; ragoût of cocks' combs and cocks' kidneys, blended in Marrow sauce (see SAUCE).

Sauce. Marrow sauce.

Uses. For small cuts of meat; suprêmes.

À la niçoise I – Small skinned tomatoes, simmered in butter; very small braised vegetable marrows (courgettes or zucchini); small artichokes stewed in butter; potato balls browned in butter.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock flavoured with tomato, or pan juices of the main dish flavoured with tomato.

Uses. Large and small cuts of meat; poultry.

À la niçoise II – Small tomatoes simmered in butter with a little chopped garlic; French beans in butter; new potatoes browned in butter, or potatoes cut to look like olives and cooked slowly in clarified butter.

Sauce and uses. As above.

À la niçoise III – Tomato fondue à la niçoise (see TOMATO); blanched green or black olives; anchovy fillets; capers.

When served with baked fish, the fondue is cooked in the same dish as the fish; for grilled fish, it is prepared separately.

Uses. For fish.

Ninon – Nests of Duchess potato (see POTATOES) filled with a salpicon of cocks' combs and kidneys blended in Velouté sauce (see SAUCE); asparagus tips in butter.

Sauce. Marrow sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Nivernaise – Carrots trimmed in small oval lengths; small glazed onions.

Sauce. Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) or, if the main dish is braised, the braising stock.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Normande – Oysters, trimmed and poached; mussels; shrimps; mushrooms; shredded truffles; freshwater crayfish cooked in a court-bouillon; fried breaded gudgeon; bread croûtons fried in butter.

Sauce. Normande sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For fish. See SOLE (Sole à la normande).

Olives for garnish – See OLIVES.

À l'orientale I – Small tomatoes stuffed with rice lightly flavoured with saffron; okras (ladies' fingers) cooked in butter; sweet peppers, skinned and simmered in butter in a covered pan.

The large cuts of meat served with this garnish must not be either interlarded or wrapped in bacon.

Sauce. Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) with butter.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

À l'orientale II – Rice pilaf turned out of little conical moulds; cooked okra; small tomatoes stuffed with a tomato salpicon.

Sauce and uses. As above.

À la paloise – Potato balls browned in butter; French beans in cream.

Sauce. Paloise sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For small cuts of grilled meat.

À la parisienne I – Potatoes à la parisienne (see POTATOES); braised lettuce.

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish diluted with white wine and veal stock.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat; poultry.

À la parisienne II – As above, using quartered artichokes instead of lettuce.

Parmesan Génoise. GÉNOISE AU PARMESAN – Mix in a bowl 2 egg yolks seasoned with a little grated nutmeg, 2 stiffly beaten egg whites, 35 g. (1½ oz., 6 tablespoons) sieved flour, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) grated Parmesan cheese.

Spread the mixture 7½ cm. (3 inches) thick on sheets of paper on a buttered baking tin. Bake in a very slow oven and allow to cool. Cut into shapes.

Uses. For soup.

Pasta and cereals (soup garnish). PÂTÉS DIVERSES – 60 g. (2½ oz.) Italian pasta or vermicelli should be used for each litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) soup. Cooking time varies from 8 to 14 minutes, according to the size and quality of the pasta used.

80 g. (3¼ oz.) pastina or pasta beads should be used for each litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) clear soup. Cooking time is 22 to 25 minutes.

Use approximately 70 g. (2½ oz.) tapioca, sago, or salep to 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) clear soup. Cooking time is 20 minutes.

50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) rice should be used for every litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) clear soup. After pouring boiling water over it, the rice should be cooked in the clear soup for 25 minutes.

À la persane – Rounds or long slices of aubergines sautéed in oil; onion rings fried in oil; Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) with peppers (to decorate the other garnishes).

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish or mutton or lamb stock flavoured with tomato.

Uses. Cutlets (U.S. chops) and noisettes of mutton or lamb.

À la piémontaise – Croquettes of risotto (mixed with a salpicon of truffles, mushrooms, pickled tongue, and ham) shaped to look like corks.

Sauce. Thin tomato sauce.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

À la portugaise – Tomatoes stuffed with duxelles (q.v.); potatoes cut to look like olives and cooked slowly in clarified butter.

Sauce. Veal stock or Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with tomato.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Prince Albert – Whole truffles simmered in butter in a covered pan.

The fillet of beef prepared according to this recipe is stuffed with foie gras (see BEEF, Fillet of beef Prince Albert).

Sauce. Juices of the main dish flavoured with Madeira or port; thickened veal stock.

Uses. For fillet of beef.

À la princesse – Asparagus tips in butter or cream; diced or sliced truffles.

Sauce. Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For poultry; calves' sweetbreads; small vol-au-vent; tartlets.

Printanier – Cut carrots or turnips in dice or fine strips about 2½ cm. (1 inch) long. Blanch the vegetables and cook them in clear stock. When they are almost cooked, add peas and French beans which have been boiled and well drained. Asparagus tips and young kidney beans may also be added.

Uses. Add to boiling clear soup.

À la printanière – New carrots and turnips cut in small oval lengths, cooked in white stock, and tossed in butter; peas; asparagus tips in butter.

Sauce. Clear veal stock.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat; poultry.

À la provençale – Aubergines cut in chunks, stuffed with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE), sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; French beans in butter; potatoes cut to look like olives and cooked slowly in clarified butter.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock flavoured with tomato and chopped tarragon.

Uses. For large and small cuts of meat.

Quenelles – Little balls about the size of a white bean, rounded or fluted. According to the recipe followed, they may be made of fine poultry, game or fish forcemeat. (See QUENELLES.)

Pipe through a forcing-bag and arrange in a buttered pan. Ten minutes before serving, cover with boiling salt water and simmer slowly. If no other garnish is used, 35 to 40 of these balls should be added to every litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) clear soup. If other garnishes are used, 20 quenelles per litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) will be sufficient.

Sometimes the balls are shaped in a teaspoon and sometimes stuffed with a brunoise (q.v.) of vegetables.

Uses. For soup.

Rachel – Slices of bone-marrow, poached, drained, grilled, and set on top of a piece of meat, which itself is set on artichoke hearts simmered in butter.

Sauce. Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For small pieces of grilled meat.

Ravioli – Prepare the ravioli as described in the recipe for ravioli (q.v.), but make very small. Fill them with chicken, foie gras, or any other delicately flavoured forcemeat. Simmer and drain.

Uses. Add to clear soup.

Régence – Large quenelles decorated with truffles, small chicken quenelles, slices of foie gras sautéed in butter, cocks' combs, mushrooms, thick slices of truffles (or truffles cut in ovals). For detailed instructions for the preparation of this dish see CHICKEN, Chicken à la régence.

Sauce. Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For cuts of white meat, calves' sweetbreads, poultry, savoury flans and tarts, vol-au-vent.

Régence garnish round veal sweetbreads

Réjane – Nests made of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES), fried, hollowed-out and filled with leaf spinach in butter; quartered artichokes simmered in butter; slices of poached and drained bone-marrow.

Sauce. Braising stock.

Uses. For braised veal sweetbreads.

Renaissance – A variety of spring vegetables, disposed round the dish in individual groups. They are separately glazed, braised, tossed in butter or fried, as appropriate.

Sauce. Gravy of the roast or clear veal gravy.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Richelieu – Medium-sized stuffed tomatoes, sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; braised lettuce; potatoes cut as for small chips and cooked slowly in clarified butter, or new potatoes fried in butter.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock or a rather liquid Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

À la romaine – Individual spinach timbales with anchovies; individual Anna potatoes for garnish (see POTATOES) turned out of small moulds.

Sauce. Thin tomato sauce or thickened veal stock flavoured with tomato.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Romanov – Cucumber stuffed with duxelles (q.v.), sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned; Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) filled with a salpicon of celeriac and mushrooms in a Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkled with grated horseradish.

Sauce. Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira.

Uses. Garnish for large and small cuts of meat.

Rossini – Thick slices of truffle; slices of foie gras sautéed in butter.

Sauce. Stock of the main dish blended with Madeira and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Royale – This garnish for soup is prepared either from a flavoured consommé (q.v.) thickened with eggs, or from a purée of some kind, also thickened with egg.

Fill small dariole moulds with the chosen ingredients and cook in a bain-marie (q.v.) until firm. When completely cold, turn out of the moulds and dice neatly or cut into lozenges, squares, rounds, stars, leaves, etc.

Uses. Royales are used as garnishes for clear soups.

The measures given below are for 1½ litres (2¾ pints, 3¼ pints) clear soup.

Royale of asparagus tips. ROYALE DE POINTES D'ASPERGES – Boil 75 g. (3 oz.) asparagus tips in salt water and add 5 or 6 leaves young spinach. Drain, add 1½ tablespoons (2 tablespoons) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) consommé, and rub through a sieve. Blend in 4 egg yolks and cook as for other royales.

Royale of carrots, called à la Crécy. ROYALE DE CAROTTES, DITE À LA CRÉCY – Cook 1 sliced carrot, seasoned with salt and a little sugar, in butter. Add 2 teaspoons Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cream, and sieve. Blend in 4 egg yolks. Pour into a buttered mould and cook in a bain-marie in a moderate oven until firm.

Royale of celery. ROYALE DE CÉLERI – Cook in butter in a double saucepan 75 g. (3 oz., ¾ cup) finely shredded stick celery. Add 1 tablespoon Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) consommé, and blend in 4 egg yolks.

Royale of chicken purée. ROYALE DE PURÉE DE VOLAILLE – Pound to a fine pulp 50 g. (2 oz.) cooked white meat of poultry. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cream, and strain. Blend in 4 egg yolks. Poach as for other royales.

Royale of game purée. ROYALE DE PURÉE DE GIBIER – Pound to a fine pulp 50 g. (2 oz.) flesh of ground game (hare or roebuck) or of winged game (partridge or pheasant). Add 1½ tablespoons (2 tablespoons) Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) consommé, and strain. Blend in 1 whole egg and 2 yolks. Pour into a mould and poach like other royales.

Plain royale. ROYALE ORDINAIRE – Put a large pinch of chervil into 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) boiling consommé and leave it to infuse for 10 minutes. Beat together 1 whole egg and 2 yolks. Blend the eggs slowly into the stock. Strain, skim, and pour into a buttered mould. Cook as for other royales.

Royale of fresh pea purée. ROYALE DE PURÉE DE POIS FRAIS – Blend 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) fresh pea purée with 4 tablespoons (¾ cup) consommé. Season with salt and a little sugar. Blend in 1 whole egg and 2 yolks. Pour into a mould and poach like other royales.

Royale of tomato purée. ROYALE DE PURÉE DE TOMATES – Dilute 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) concentrated tomato purée with 4 tablespoons (¾ cup) consommé. Season with salt and sugar, thicken with 4 egg yolks and poach as for other royales.

Sagan – Risotto as a foundation, adding mushrooms stuffed with purée of brain mixed with a salpicon of truffles.

Sauce. Stock of the main dish blended with Madeira and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For escalopes of veal (U.S. veal cutlets); veal sweetbreads; suprêmes of chicken.

Saint-Germain I – Thick purée of green peas, served separately.

Sauce. Clear veal stock.

Uses. Large and small cuts of meat.

Saint-Germain II – Artichoke hearts simmered in butter and garnished with purée of green peas. This garnish is sometimes referred to as Clamart.

Sauce and uses. As above.

Saint-Saëns – Fritters of truffles and foie gras; cocks' kidneys; asparagus tips.

Sauce. Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Truffle essence (see ESSENCE).

Uses. For suprêmes of poultry.

À la sarde – Cork-shaped croquettes of rice cooked with cheese; mushrooms sautéed in butter; French beans in butter.

Sauce. Thin tomato sauce or veal stock flavoured with tomato.

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

À la sarrasine – Small buckwheat cakes, browned in butter; little rice tartlets, filled with fondue (q.v.) of tomatoes with sweet peppers added. Place 1 or 2 fried onion rings on each tartlet.

Sauce. Thin Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For large cuts of meat.

Sauerkraut. CHOUROUTE – Wash and drain the sauerkraut; squeeze it dry and simmer in clear soup or white stock.

Semolina gnocchi (Hungarian cookery). GNOCCHI DE SEMOULE – Work 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter in a bowl with a spatula. During this process add 1 egg, 65 g. (2½ oz., scant ½ cup) semolina and 2 teaspoons flour. Season with salt and a pinch of grated nutmeg. Work vigorously with the spatula until the mixture is slightly frothy. Leave to stand for 1 hour.

Make large oval balls shaped with a tablespoon and put them into a buttered pan. Add boiling water and leave to simmer for 20 minutes.

Uses. For soup.

Serge – Very small quartered cooked artichokes simmered in butter; coarsely shredded ham simmered in Madeira.

Ingredients prepared à la Serge are dipped in a mixture of breadcrumbs mixed with chopped truffles and mushrooms.

Sauce. Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Truffle essence (see ESSENCE).

Uses. Escalopes of veal (U.S. veal cutlets); calves' sweetbreads.

Spun eggs. OEUF FILÉ – For 1 litre (1¼ pints, generous quart) soup, beat 1 egg and strain it through muslin. Put it in a fine strainer held over a frying pan containing boiling consommé. Move the strainer backwards and forwards over the stock. Drain the threads of egg thus prepared and add them to the soup.

Uses. For soup.

À la strasbourgeoise – Braised sauerkraut; thin rectangles of salt (pickled) pork cooked with the sauerkraut; slices of foie gras sautéed in butter.

Sauce. Boiled-down pan juices of the main dish.

Uses. For braised or pot-roasted poultry.

À la sultane – Canapés of chicken forcemeat (shaped like cutlets) on which chicken suprêmes are placed; very small tartlets filled with purée of truffles with pieces of blanched pistachio nut on top; cocks' combs.

Suprêmes prepared à la sultane are dipped in a mixture of breadcrumbs and chopped truffles.

Sauce. Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) very slightly seasoned with curry powder.

Uses. For suprêmes of chicken.

Tomatoes. TOMATES – Peel small, very firm tomatoes, remove liquid and pips, dice the flesh into squares 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) across and add these to boiling consommé. Leave to simmer for 7 minutes and drain.

Uses. Add to soup.

Tortue – Little veal quenelles; stoned olives; mushrooms; sliced truffles and gherkins; freshwater crayfish cooked in a court-bouillon; fried egg yolks; heart-shaped pieces of fried bread; small pieces of tongue and calves' brains.

Sauce. Tortue sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For veal.

À la toscane – Thick diced macaroni mixed with a purée of foie gras; coarsely diced truffles sautéed in butter.

Ingredients prepared à la toscane must be dipped in a mixture of breadcrumbs and grated Parmesan cheese.

Sauce. Thickened veal stock.

Uses. For escalopes (U.S. cutlets) of veal; calves' sweetbreads; breasts of chicken.

À la toulousaine, also called à la Toulouse – Chicken quenelles; cocks' combs and kidneys; braised lamb or calves' sweetbreads; mushrooms; shredded truffles.

The elements of this garnish are arranged in separate groups and sometimes include chicken livers sautéed in butter.

Sauce. Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For calves' sweetbreads; poultry; savoury pies; tarts; vol-au-vent.

À la trouillaise – Shelled shrimps; mussels; mushrooms.

Sauce. Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE).

Uses. For fish.

Truffles. TRUFFES – This garnish is very occasionally added to soups.

Shred fresh truffles into fine strips, or dice them into small squares. Put these in the boiling soup at the last minute. The heat of the soup is sufficient to cook the truffles.

À la tyrolienne – Tomatoes cut into quarters and cooked slowly in butter until very tender; onion rings fried in oil.

Sauce. Reduced veal stock with butter added.

Uses. For grilled cuts of meat or poultry.

À la Valenciennes – Rice cooked in meat stock (or plain boiled rice) mixed with a salpicon of sweet peppers.

Sauce. Pan juices of the main dish diluted with white wine or tomato-flavoured thickened veal stock.

Uses. For small cuts of meat or poultry.

À la Valois – Thinly sliced potatoes and slices of artichoke hearts sautéed together in butter, served in the terrine in which the meat is cooked.

Sauce. Pan juices with white wine added and veal stock with butter added.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

Au vert-pré – Matchstick potatoes; watercress.

Sauce. Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Uses. For small cuts of meat and poultry, grilled.

Victoria – Small tomatoes stuffed with purée of mushrooms; quartered artichokes simmered in butter.

Sauce. Meat juices of the main dish blended with Madeira or port and thickened veal stock.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

À la viennoise – Whites and yolks of hard-boiled egg, chopped separately; anchovy fillets; stoned olives; rounds of lemon with rind and skin removed; capers; chopped parsley. All these ingredients are arranged round the dish in separate groups.

Sauce. Brown butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Uses. For small cuts of meat or poultry.

This garnish is especially suitable for cutlets (U.S. chops) and escalopes (U.S. cutlets) of veal; breasts of poultry, dipped in breadcrumbs and sautéed in butter. It can also be served with fillets of fish, chiefly brill (U.S. flounder) and sole.

Vladimir – Cucumbers cut in small oval lengths and simmered in butter; very small vegetable marrows (courgettes, *zucchini*s) coarsely diced, sautéed in butter.

Sauce. Stock of the main dish blended with sour cream, seasoned with paprika, and with grated horseradish sprinkled on top.

Uses. For small cuts of meat.

GARUM – Type of condiment, much used as a spice in ancient Roman cookery. It was probably pickling brine derived from salting seawater fish – scomber or mackerel in particular – and squeezing them to extract the liquid.

The best known, extracted from scomber, was called garum nigrum. It was put in little pots, as mustard is nowadays, and each guest flavoured it to his own liking, one with vinegar (oenogarum), another with water (hydrogarum), another with oil (oleogarum).

The garum piperatum was, as its name indicates, strongly flavoured with pepper.

GASCONY. GASCogne – Ancient province which once included the Landes, Basque, Chalosse, Condomois, Armagnac, Comminges, Couserans, Lomagne, Astarac and Bigorre districts and part of the Bordelais and Bazadais districts. It has always been a land of high gastronomic repute.

The inhabitants have maintained the cult of good eating in the départements which have been formed within the boundaries of Gascony – Hautes-Pyrénées, Gers, Landes, part of the Basses-Pyrénées, Haute Garonne, Lot-et-Garonne and Tarn-et-Garonne.

Gallimaufry was created in this region. This is the dish for which Taillevent, master chef of King Charles VII, gave the recipe, and the name of which, no-one quite knows why, has become a synonym for a bad stew.

Culinary specialities – The good things of this province are many. They include the hams of the Landes and of Ossau, eaten raw like those of Parma, or used in fricassés of various kinds; goose livers and duck livers; buntings; preserves of goose and of pork; the savoury oysters of Cap Breton; and the potted meats and pâtés and truffled foie gras of the Gers, the Landes and the Lot-et-Garonne.

Nor must we forget Madarin wine and the rich and heady Armagnac.

GASTRONOME – Slightly pedantic term, dating back to the beginning of the nineteenth century, signifying experts in gastronomy. Genuine connoisseurs in matters of good food are satisfied with the name gourmand which, though normally translated as 'greedy', has no derogatory overtones in French.

The true gastronome, while esteeming the most refined products of the culinary arts, enjoys them in moderation, and, for his normal fare, seeks out the simplest dishes. While he is not himself a practitioner of the culinary art, he knows enough of its methods to be able to pass judgment on a dish and to recognise the ingredients of which it is composed.

GASTRONOMIC ASSOCIATIONS. GASTRONOMIQUES (ACADÉMIES, ASSOCIATIONS, GROUPEMENTS) – The Académie des Gastronomes was founded by Curnonsky in 1927. It admits forty members, consisting of gourmets, lovers of good food, culinary writers, and amphitryons. Each occupies the seat of a former great gourmet and upon election is called upon to deliver an address in honour of his predecessor.

But the Académie des Gastronomes was not the first of its kind. Without going so far back as the ancient confréries, the earliest of the modern associations is the Club des cent founded in 1912 by the gourmand-journalist Louis Forest. The Club des cent is a very active body with its own confidential (and very severe) personal guide. It awards diplomas, but rarely. It awards a substantial gastronomic literary prize annually.

The Académie des psychologues du goût is called the 'Jockey club of eating' and was founded in 1922. It counts many ambassadors among its members.

The Académie Rabelais groups together writers, painters, and designers interested in food.

The Association amicale des amateurs d'authentiques andouillettes (A.A.A.A.) is the most rigid and most exclusive (five members) of the gastronomic associations. Its members believe in simple, substantial and wholesome fare. A rare diploma, designed by Henry Monier, is awarded to the most outstanding amphitryons of the A.A.A.A.

The Association des gastronomes amateurs de poisson (1937) is the fish lovers' association.

The Association des gastronomes régionalistes (1924) is the association of gastronomes interested in regional cookery.

The Belle Table was founded by the engraver and painter Georges Villa. It concerns itself as much with the décor of the table as with the food served thereon.

The Club de la casserole, founded by René Lasserre, is the gourmet club of fashionable Paris. Its insignia is a tiny saucepan key ring. Its formal galas, which include fashion shows of haute couture, coiffures, furs and jewels, attract many of the leading personalities of stage and screen. The grand finale of a typical gala is the release of doves.

At the Club des gourmettes, the conversation is of cooking, and the members really know what they are talking about.

The Club Prosper-Montagné is where restaurateurs, pâtisseries, charcutiers, and similar foregather.

The Club des purs cent is a splinter group of the Club des cent and numbers about fifty gourmets.

The Commanderie des cordons-bleus, in Dijon, awards diplomas to the best restaurateurs.

The Compagnie des gentilshommes de gueule (1928) organises monthly informal dinners presided over by a cultured and refined speaker.

The Confrérie de la pochouse extol this eminent regional dish of Verdun-sur-le-Doubs.

The Échansonnes de France is an association of female gourmards reluctant to leave all there is to say about wine to men alone.

The Fin Palais (1927) is an association of gourmand lawyers.

The Galants de la verte marennes wed their oysters to the whole range of white wines of the territory.

The Société de gastronomie médicale groups together the medical gourmets.

The Taste-Moungettes of Comminges extol the haricot beans of the region, indispensable ingredient of the cas-soulet, the Luchon pistache and several other dishes.

GASTRONOMIC CALENDAR. CALENDRIER GASTRONOMIQUE – Below, month by month, is the best period of the year to eat the following in France:

Meat. VIANDES DE BOUCHERIE – All the year round. Beef, mutton, veal.

Sea fish: bass, brill (rare), cod, sea bream, smelt, gurnet (rare), mackerel, plaice, ray, sardines, sole (rare), salmon trout, turbot.

September. Freshwater fish: eel, bream, pike, carp, grayling, perch, tench, river trout.

Sea fish: bass (rare), brill (rare), cod, sea bream, smelt, gurnet (rare), plaice, ray, sole, salmon trout (rare), turbot (rare).

October. Freshwater fish: eel, barbel, bream, pike, carp, gudgeon, grayling, perch, tench, river trout (rare).

Sea fish: bass (rare), brill (rare), sea bream (rare), smelt, gurnet (rare), herring, dab, cod, plaice, ray, sole, salmon trout (rare), turbot (rare).

November. Freshwater fish: eel, barbel, bream, pike, carp, gudgeon, grayling, perch, tench.

Sea fish: bass (rare), brill, gilthead (rare), smelt, gurnet, herring, dab, whiting, cod, plaice, ray, sole, salmon trout (rare), turbot (rare).

December. Freshwater fish: eel, barbel, bream, pike, carp, gudgeon, grayling, perch, tench.

Sea fish: bass (rare), brill, sea bream (rare), smelt, sturgeon, gurnet, herring, dab, whiting, cod, mullet, plaice, ray, sole, salmon trout (rare), turbot.

Crustaceans. CRUSTACÉS – January, February, March. Lobster, crayfish.

April and May. Lobster, crayfish, crab, prawns, shrimps, freshwater crayfish.

June, July, August. Crab, prawns, shrimps, freshwater crayfish.

September. Lobster, crayfish, crab, prawns, shrimps, freshwater crayfish.

October, November, December. Lobster, freshwater crayfish.

Molluscs. MOLLUSQUES – January, February, March, April, September, October, November, December (that is to say the months with an 'r' in their name). Oysters, mussels.

GASTRONOMIC CUSTOMS. USAGES GASTRONOMIQUES – Gastronomic customs vary according to the period and the country.

The narrow-minded person admits as orthodox only the methods and seasonings to which he is accustomed, and considers those who have a different conception of the art of eating quite barbarous.

In some places it is quite usual to add sugar to a salad. Heresy! Abomination! exclaim certain French authorities, who nevertheless think it nothing out of the ordinary to add slices of sweet beetroot to a salad of mâche (lamb's lettuce or corn salad). In Germany and in England, sweet cooked fruit is often served with the meat, and the same critics denounce this depraved taste; yet they would permit a garnish of chestnut purée (which is nothing but a purée of fruit much sweeter than some cooked apples or cranberries), or seasoning a haunch of venison with redcurrant jelly, or regaling themselves with caneton à l'orange or cailles aux racines or other savoury dishes garnished with sweet fruits.

In any case gastronomic usages are not the same everywhere in France, and the description of each province found in this dictionary in alphabetical order shows this clearly.

GÂTEAU

Not only are the culinary preparations different but the way the food is served and the arrangement of the meals vary. Thus in Flanders it is the established custom to serve soup at the beginning of the principal meal of the day. In other regions the habit of drinking a trou de milieu or, in Normandy, a trou Normande, has persisted.

The trou de milieu consists of serving, in the middle of the meal, generally before the service of the roast, small glasses of spirituous liqueurs of various kinds; Cognac, Armagnac, marc, quetsche, Calvados, kirsch, etc. In the south-west of France, where this custom used to be traditional, the young daughter of the house offered the guests these liqueurs placed on a great silver tray.

In modern practice, although the custom of the trou de milieu still persists in some parts, the sorbet, still made with a base of liqueur or liqueur wine, has for the most part taken its place.

GÂTEAU – See CAKE.

GAUDES – The name given in Franche-Comté, Burgundy, and other districts to a kind of maize flour porridge or pudding somewhat similar to the Italian polenta, or to hasty-pudding.

Franche-Comté gaudes. GAUDES DE FRANCHE-COMTÉ – Pour into a saucepan containing 3½ litres (3 quarts, 7½ pints) salted boiling water, 500 g. (18 oz., 3 cups) maize flour which has been mixed in cold water to a smooth consistency. Mix well. Cook this pudding, stirring constantly with a large wooden spoon, until it is thick. Add 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter. Serve hot.

Sometimes this pudding, after it is cooked, is poured into small bowls where it is left to cool. It is then cut into slices which are heated in butter and sprinkled with fine sugar.

The gaudes may also be served cold, in which case the maize flour mixture is poured into moulds. When the gaudes have cooled, they are turned out of the moulds and eaten with olive.

GAULOISE (À LA) – Name used for a garnish consisting of cocks' combs and kidneys which is served with clear soup (see SOUPS AND BROTHS).

It is used, too, for a garnish served with large and small vol-au-vent or pies, having cocks' kidneys as its chief ingredient, with pickled tongue and truffles added. This filling is blended in Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira.

The name is used for little cakes made of Genoa cake mixture (see CAKE, Genoa cake) cooked in special moulds (moules à diplomates), spread with apricot jam and grilled chopped almonds.

GAYETTES (Provençal cookery) – Type of flat sausage made of pork liver and fresh bacon encased in pork caul and cooked in the oven.

They are generally served cold, as an hors-d'œuvre. (See PORK, Pork liver gayettes.)

GAZELLE – Antelope found in northern and western Asia and in central Africa.

The meat of the gazelle is very good to eat. It should first be left in a mild marinade. All the recipes appropriate to roebuck (q.v.) and venison (q.v.) are suitable for gazelle.

GAZPACHO (Spanish cookery). GASPACHO – Soup-salad made of fresh cucumber, tomatoes, sweet peppers, and slices of bread moistened with water.

Soak the skinned, sliced, and deseeded tomatoes, and the sliced, deseeded peppers in a dressing prepared as follows: Pound in a mortar 2 cloves of garlic. Season with salt, pepper, and a little cumin. Blend with oil and vinegar; add a little finely sliced shallot, chopped chervil and a cup of iced water.

Leave to soak for 30 minutes. Ten minutes before serving, add thinly sliced cucumber, slices of bread, more water, if necessary, and cubes of ice. Serve very cold.

GEANS CHERRIES. GUIGNES – Species of red, black, or white cherry. They are firm and fairly sweet.

Geans are mainly used in France to make a liqueur called Guignolet, which is a speciality of the town of Angers.

GEBIE – Small shellfish, whitish in colour, found in French coastal waters. It can be cooked like shrimps, and is used mainly as bait for large fish.

GELATINE. GÉLATINE – Amorphous, colourless solid, without smell, which swells in water. When mixed in hot water, it forms a viscous substance which turns to jelly when the mixture is cold, provided that it has not been allowed to boil for too long.

Gelatine is produced by the action of heat upon a substance contained in bones, cartilage and tendons. It is used in the preparation of jellies.

Leaf gelatine. GRÉNÉTINE – A pure and transparent form of gelatine used in pharmacy and cookery.

GÉLOSE. GÉLOSE – Synonym of agar-agar. A viscous substance extracted from certain marine algae. Much used in Japan in the preparation of fruit and other jellies.

GENDARME – French popular name for pickled herring. This name is also given to a type of sausage, dry and very hard, which is made in Switzerland and bears some slight resemblance to a herring in appearance.

GENEVOISE SAUCE – Sauce, originally called Génoise, served only with fish. It is flavoured with red wine. (See SAUCE.)

GENISTA (Broom). GENÊT – Botanical name for a number of plants of the broom family. They have butterfly-like flowers. Broom buds are sometimes pickled in vinegar and used as a substitute for capers.

GENOESE. GÉNOISE – Génoise was the name of a sauce served only with fish cooked in a court-bouillon (salmon and salmon trout in particular). Nowadays, this sauce is called Genevoise.

In confectionery, cakes made from a Genoese mixture are called Genoese cakes.

Genoese cake I. PÂTÉ À GÉNOISE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) fine sugar, 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved flour, 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) butter, 16 eggs, a pinch of salt, 1 vanilla bean.

Gazelle
(Grün)

Method. Put the sugar, eggs, salt, and vanilla bean in a pan and whisk over very gentle heat. When the mixture begins to foam and rise well up in the pan, remove from the stove and continue whisking until it is cold. Still beating the mixture, add the flour, using a dredger, and the butter, which should be melted and tepid.

Pour into baking tins and bake in the oven at 190°C. (375°F., Gas Mark 5) for 40 to 45 minutes.

Genoese cake II. PÂTE À GÉNOISE À L'ANCIENNE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) fine sugar, 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved flour, 175 g. (6 oz., 1 cup) sweet almonds, 25 g. (1 oz., 2½ tablespoons) bitter almonds, 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) butter, 12 eggs, small pinch of salt.

Method. Blanch and pound the almonds to a fine powder in a mortar. Put in a bowl and mix in 2 eggs. Add the sugar, flour, and 5 whole eggs. Beat with a wooden spoon for 5 minutes. Add 5 egg yolks, the melted butter, and the remaining whites, beaten.

Put the mixture into buttered baking tins and bake in a hot oven.

Apricot Genoese cake. GÉNOISE À L'ABRICOT – Bake a Genoese cake. Slice it horizontally into 3 layers of equal thickness. Rub apricot jam through a sieve and flavour it with kirsch. Spread on 1 layer of cake. Cover with the middle slice. Spread with apricot jam. Set the last slice carefully on top of the other. See that the edges of the cake fit together as neatly as possible.

Spread the top and sides of the cake with apricot jam, and ice it with a Fondant icing (see ICING) flavoured with kirsch.

The cake may be sprinkled with blanched and chopped pistachio nuts or with chopped browned almonds, and decorated with crystallised fruits or Royal icing (see ICING).

Genoese cake with chocolate filling (Kollar)

Genoese cake with chocolate filling. GÉNOISE FOURRÉE AU CHOCOLAT – Slice a Genoese cake horizontally into 3 layers of equal thickness. Spread a layer of Chocolate butter cream (see CREAMS) on 1 slice of cake. Cover with another slice. Spread with the butter cream. Lay the last slice on top of the others. Press gently to stick the three parts firmly together. Spread the top and sides with apricot jam and sprinkle with chocolate hundreds and thousands.

Genoese cake with mocha cream. GÉNOISE FOURRÉE AU MOKA – Made like Genoese cake with chocolate filling. Instead of chocolate butter cream, coffee butter cream is put between the layers. Apricot jam is then spread on the top and sides of the cake and it is iced with mocha Fondant icing (see ICING).

Genoese cake with filling à la normande. GÉNOISE FOURRÉE À LA NORMANDE – Slice a round Genoese cake horizontally into 2 layers of equal thickness. Moisten the halves with Calvados. Spread one half with thick apple jam mixed with half its weight of French pastry cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with Calvados. Place the other half of the cake on top. Spread apricot jam over the cake and ice with Fondant icing (see ICING) flavoured with Calvados. Decorate with quartered apples cooked in syrup, halves of almonds, and lozenges of angelica.

GENTIAN. GENTIANE – General name given to several species of plants. The large gentian or yellow gentian, as well as other flowers of this family, are used in the preparation of certain apéritifs. Gentiane, a digestive liqueur, is distilled from the gentian in France and Switzerland, and has a distinctive taste much prized in these countries.

The large, bitter-tasting root of the gentian is treated either by soaking or infusion.

GEOPHAGIST (Earth-eater). GÉOPHAGE – Certain American Indians in times of scarcity used to eat a type of clay soil. This soil has no food value, and serves only to create an illusion of satiety.

In different parts of Asia, Africa, and America, there are whole tribes of geophagists. The yellow races are especially addicted to this peculiar custom, although it has been observed in several peoples belonging to other ethnic groups. Geophagists are to be found in almost all latitudes.

In Java and Sumatra, the clay which provides food for the inhabitants undergoes some preparation in advance. According to Hekmeyer, it is mixed into a paste with water after all foreign bodies (such as sand and stones and other hard matter) have been removed. It is then rolled out into thin cakes and baked in an iron pan over a charcoal fire.

GEORGETTE – Name for certain foods, especially potatoes, which are stuffed with a ragoût of freshwater crayfish tails.

GERMON – Another name for tunny (tuna) sometimes also called white tunny, because of its resemblance to that fish.

The common germon, which is to be found in the Mediterranean, has white flesh which makes quite good eating. All recipes suitable for tunny (tuna) may be used for germon. In U.S.A. the Pacific coast albacore is a white-meat tunny (tuna fish).

GÉROMÉ – See CHEESE.

GEX – See CHEESE.

GHERKIN. CORNICHON – Gherkins are very young fruits of certain varieties of cucumber. They are gathered green, preserved in vinegar, and used as a condiment.

Gherkins in vinegar (cooked). CORNICHONS AU VINAIGRE (À CHAUD) – Trim and rub the gherkins and soak them in salt for 24 hours. Drain in a sieve, and wipe them well with a cloth, one by one.

Put them in a large basin and cover with vinegar which has been boiled in a copper pan. Leave for 10 hours. Put the vinegar back to boil, adding some fresh vinegar. Allow ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) for 3 litres (5¼ pints, 6½ pints) boiled vinegar. Pour the boiling vinegar on the gherkins.

The next day, drain the gherkins, put them in jars or pots, with small white onions, chillis, sprigs of thyme, fragments of bay, tarragon sprigs, and cloves, and cover with the vinegar. Seal the pots or jars hermetically and keep in a cool place.

Gherkins in vinegar (uncooked). CORNICHONS AU VINAIGRE (À CRU) – Rub the gherkins with a cloth, or brush them, to remove the down which covers them. Steep in a basin of sea-salt. Leave for 24 hours. Drain, wash them in vinegar water, drain again, and wipe them one by one.

Arrange them in a glass jar or in a stoneware pot, adding small white onions, chillis, sprigs of thyme, fragments of bay leaf, tarragon sprigs and cloves. Cover with wine vinegar. Seal the pots hermetically, and keep in a cool place.

Gherkins prepared in this way can be kept for 4 to 5 weeks.

Fresh salt gherkins à la russe. CORNICHONS FRAIS SALÉS À LA RUSSE – Wash 24 fresh gherkins in lukewarm water without trimming them. Leave to cool in a large basin of cold water. Drain and wipe them. Put in a jar in layers with blackcurrant leaves and sprays of fennel between.

Put shavings of horseradish and a layer of blackcurrant leaves on the last layer of gherkins, which should reach 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) below the top of the receptacle. Press the leaves down. Boil salt water, cool, and pour over the gherkins. Leave to soak for 24 hours.

Gherkins are used as an hors-d'œuvre in Russia.

GIBLETS. ABATIS – The head, neck, heart, pinions, feet, gizzard, and liver of poultry, as well as cocks' combs and kidneys.

The giblets of turkeys and large chickens are used for making ragoûts, and improving the taste of stocks and clear soups.

Cocks' combs, and kidneys and livers of fowl are used for certain classic garnishes such as financière, Toulouse, and ambassadrice, and other dishes of a similar type.

The livers of geese and ducks are not considered as giblets. These are expensive delicacies and require special preparation.

Chicken giblets (Scarnati)

Methods of preparing poultry giblets – The giblets of turkeys and geese are those most frequently used for ragoûts. Before being used, giblets should be thoroughly washed and trimmed. Singe the neck, head, and pinions, and remove all feathers. Scald the feet, peel off the outer skin which covers them, and pare off the end of the spurs. Slit the gizzard on the curved side, open it and remove the inner bag, taking care not to break it, as it is full of grit. Remove the gall bladder from the liver and trim off the upper part of the heart. The pinions, neck, and head of turkeys, geese, and ducks should be scalded to make plucking easier. Plunge them into boiling water and pluck immediately.

The giblets of various kinds of poultry are all prepared in a similar manner. Recipes are therefore given only for turkey giblets, which are the biggest. Depending on how tender the giblets are, it will be sufficient to increase or decrease the period of cooking.

Only stocks made of the same kind of meat as that which forms the basis of the ragoût should be used; otherwise use water. A chicken ragoût should be moistened with chicken or veal stock, but never with lamb or mutton stock.

In addition to the recipes given below, all those given for lamb, mutton, veal or chicken ragoûts can also be applied to giblets. (See RAGOÛTS.)

The livers of duck, turkey, goose and chicken should not be added to the various giblet ragoûts earlier than 10 minutes before removing from the heat.

These livers are used separately, sautéed, cooked on skewers, in pilaf or risotto, or prepared in other ways. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

Duck and chicken giblets. ABATIS DE CANARDS ET DE POULETS – Prepared in the same ways as turkey giblets (see below).

Giblet soup – See SOUPS AND BROTHS.

Turkey giblets à l'anglaise. ABATIS DE DINDE À L'ANGLAISE – Ingredients. One large set (or 2 small sets) giblets: head, neck, pinions, gizzard, liver, feet – 700 to 800 g. ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb.) – 2 medium large onions, 2 large potatoes, a bouquet garni (a sprig of parsley, thyme and half a bay leaf), 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, 1 tablespoon chopped chervil, salt, pepper.

Method. Scald the head, neck, pinions and feet, and remove all feathers. Slit and clean the gizzard, remove the gall bladder from the liver, cut up the giblets into uniform pieces. Slice the onions and potatoes.

Put half the onions and the potatoes into a shallow pan, and sprinkle with half the chopped parsley. Put the pieces of giblets, except the liver, on this layer of vegetables. Cover with the rest of the onions, potatoes and chopped parsley. Put the bouquet garni in the middle, season with salt and pepper, and pour in enough water to cover.

Boil fast on a high flame. Then draw the pan to the edge of the burner, cover, and keep it simmering moderately but continuously for 45 minutes. Ten minutes before serving add the liver.

Serve the giblets in a shallow dish, and sprinkle with chopped chervil.

Turkey giblets bonne femme. ABATIS DE DINDE BONNE FEMME – Ingredients. One large set (or 2 small sets) giblets – 700 to 800 g. ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb.), 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, 100 g. (4 oz.) lean unsalted bacon, 100 g. (4 oz.) small onions, 24 small new carrots or 3 large carrots cut to size of new carrots, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) flour, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, a bouquet garni, 1 clove of garlic,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  litres ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  pints,  $2\frac{3}{4}$  pints) water, salt, pepper.

Method. Follow the instructions given in the recipe for Turkey giblets à la bourgeoise (see below).

Turkey giblets à la bourgeoise. ABATIS DE DINDE À LA BOURGEOISE – Ingredients. One large set (or 2 small sets) giblets – 700 to 800 g. ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb.), 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, 100 g. (4 oz.) lean unsalted bacon, 100 g. (4 oz.) small onions, 24 small new carrots or 3 large carrots cut to size of new carrots, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) flour, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, a bouquet garni, a clove of garlic,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  litres ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  pints,  $2\frac{3}{4}$  pints) water, salt, pepper.

Method. Prepare the giblets as indicated in the recipe for Turkey giblets à l'anglaise. Blanch and dice the bacon. Peel the onions and new carrots, peel and chop the clove of garlic.

Heat the butter in a shallow pan. Add the bacon, brown it lightly, and remove it. Fry the onions until golden. Drain and put with the bacon.

Brown the giblets, except the liver, on a high flame, turning with a spoon to ensure even cooking. Add the chopped garlic and sprinkle with the flour. Stir to blend, and as soon as the flour begins to brown, moisten with the white wine and boil down for a few minutes. Complete the moistening with enough water or stock to cover.

Add the bouquet garni, bacon, onions and carrots. Add salt and pepper. Cover the pan and as soon as it begins to boil fast reduce the heat and leave to finish cooking on moderate heat for 45 minutes. Ten minutes before serving, add the liver. Arrange the giblets in a shallow dish and add the garnish. Pour the sauce over.

Turkey giblets à la bourguignonne. ABATIS DE DINDE À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Ingredients. One large set (or 2 small) turkey giblets – 700 to 800 g. (1½ lb.), 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, 100 g. (4 oz.) desalted lean bacon, 100 g. (4 oz.) small onions, 100 g. (4 oz.) cultivated mushrooms, 1 tablespoon flour, ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) red wine, a bouquet garni, a clove of garlic, ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) water or stock, salt, pepper.

Method. Follow the instructions given in the recipe for Turkey giblets à la bourgeoise.

Turkey giblets chasseur. ABATIS DE DINDE CHASSEUR – Season the giblets with salt and pepper and fry them in a shallow pan, using oil and butter in equal proportions. Drain, and keep hot.

In the same pan put 100 g. (4 oz.) thinly sliced mushrooms and cook on a high flame. Add 2 chopped shallots, moisten with half a glass white wine, and boil down.

Add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) and 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) thickened brown veal stock. Put the giblets into this sauce. Reheat without boiling and add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon.

The dish should not be too thick. The tomato sauce is sufficient to give it the desired consistency.

Turkey giblets with chipolata sausages. ABATIS DE DINDE À LA CHIPOLATA – Ingredients. One large set (or 2 small sets) turkey giblets – 700 to 800 g. (1½ lb.), 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, 5 or 6 blanched and glazed small onions, 24 chestnuts, peeled and three-quarters cooked in stock with a pinch of sugar and 1 tablespoon butter, 8 cooked chipolata sausages, 50 g. (2 oz.) desalted, diced and browned bacon, 1 tablespoon flour, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) white wine, a bouquet garni, 1½ litres (2¼ pints, 2½ pints) water, salt, pepper.

Method. Follow the instructions given in the recipe for Turkey giblets à la bourgeoise. The cooked chestnuts should not be added to the ragoût until 15 minutes before serving.

Turkey giblets à l'écoissaise. ABATIS DE DINDE À L'ÉCOSSAISE – Follow the recipe for Turkey giblets bonne femme with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) Brunoise garnish made up of finely shredded carrots, celery and onions half cooked in butter, and hulled barley, previously soaked in warm water and cooked in salted water for 35 minutes.

Turkey giblets à la fermière. ABATIS DE DINDE À LA FERMIÈRE – Follow the recipe for Turkey giblets à la bourgeoise but replace the garnish given for that recipe by 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) Végétale fondue (see FONDUE).

Fricassée of turkey giblets (early French recipe). ABATIS DE DINDE EN FRICASSÉE AU BLANC – Prepare turkey giblets, put into a saucepan with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter, a bouquet garni of parsley, a scallion, 1 clove of garlic, 2 cloves, thyme, bay leaf, basil, and some mushrooms. Add a pinch of flour, moisten with water or stock, season with salt and coarsely ground pepper, and cook. Boil down and thicken the sauce. Remove the herbs, add gradually 3 egg yolks blended with 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) cream, without bringing to the boil. A dash of vinegar or lemon juice may be added to the roux before binding the sauce.

Turkey giblets fried in batter. ABATIS DE DINDE EN FRITOT – Cook the giblets in stock. Drain, and leave to cool. Soak for 30 minutes in a marinade of 1 tablespoon oil, a few drops vinegar or lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Coat the giblets in batter made from 75 g. (3 oz., ¾ cup) flour, 1 tablespoon oil, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) warm water, salt, pepper, and 1 stiffly whisked egg white added after the mixture has been left to stand.

Fry the giblets in smoking-hot deep fat. Drain, sprinkle with fine dry salt, and garnish with fried parsley and quarters of lemon. Serve with tomato sauce.

Turkey giblet ragoût (basic method). ABATIS DE DINDE EN RAGOÛT À BRUN – Cut the neck, pinions and gizzard into pieces; also the feet, if they are being used.

Put the giblets into a shallow pan in which butter has been heated. Cook, stirring from time to time. Sprinkle with flour and brown lightly. Add a little crushed garlic. Moisten with stock or water and a little white wine. Add a bouquet garni. Bring to the boil, season, cover the pan with a lid and cook for 30 to 35 minutes. Strain the giblets, trim them, and carefully remove all bone splinters. Put the boned giblets back in a clean pan.

Garnish with blanched and lightly fried vegetables, according to the recipe chosen. Sieve the juices left in the pan, remove surplus fat, add tomato purée, and pour over the giblets. Bring to the boil, cover, and finish cooking in the oven; 10 minutes before serving, add the liver. Take care not to break the giblets or vegetables when serving.

The moistening of brown giblet ragoûts is usually done with veal or chicken broth and light stock. They could also be moistened with water, supplemented by a small quantity of tomato purée.

Turkey giblets with turnips. ABATIS DE DINDE AUX NAVETS – 'Take 2 sets of turkey giblets. Open the gizzards to empty them; scald the pinions and the necks, pluck them and singe them, cut into pieces and wash under a running tap, then drain. Put a piece of butter with 225 g. (8 oz.) bacon cut into large dice into a saucepan; when it is fried, put in the giblets to colour them a little. Sprinkle with a little flour and moisten with stock or water. Add an onion stuck with 4 cloves, salt, pepper, and a bouquet garni. Cut the turnips to look like large olives, put them with some butter and sugar into a saucepan to brown lightly. Moisten with the sauce in which the giblets were cooked, add the turnips to the giblets, boil down the sauce to the desired consistency. Simmer gently to allow fat to rise, which should then be removed. Taste to see if there is enough salt, remove the bouquet and the onions stuck with cloves. Serve hot.' (From La Grande Cuisine simplifiée, by Robert, Paris, published by Audot, 1845.)

Giblets can be prepared in the same manner with mushrooms, celeriac, artichoke hearts, cucumbers etc.

Turkey livers. FOIES DE DINDES – All recipes for chicken livers are suitable for the livers of turkeys.

Turkey livers are sometimes very large and delicately flavoured. They are similar to duck and goose livers and the same methods of preparation can be applied to them.

Young pigeon livers. FOIES DE PIGEONNEAUX – Usually the pigeon liver, which contains no gall, is left inside the bird if it is to be braised, stewed, pot-roasted or roasted.

All recipes for chicken livers are suitable for pigeon livers.

GIGOT, MANCHE DE – Small metal appliance attached to the bone or 'handle' of the leg of mutton after cooking, to keep it steady while carving.

GIGUE

GIGUE – See HAUNCH.

GILD. DORER – Some types of pastry and other preparations are brushed with egg (gilded or glazed) before browning in the oven.

GIMBLETTE – See RING-BISCUIT.

GIMLET. FORET – Steel point used to penetrate wood and casks. Also used by wine waiters to uncork bottles.

GIN – Spirit, distilled from grain (barley, wheat, oats) and flavoured with juniper berries.

Ginger in root form, preserved and powdered
(Fauchon. Phot. Nicolas)

GINGER. GINGEMBRE – Root-stock of a tropical plant which grew originally in Bengal and Malabar. It is sold in two forms. Grey ginger has the stronger smell and comes in tubercles 4 to 10 cm. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 4 inches) long and 1 to 2 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) thick, covered with a greyish-yellow skin and well-defined rings. White ginger is sold skinned and cut up into smaller pieces.

It is used as a condiment. Jam is also made with ginger.

GINGER BEER – See BEER.

GIRAFFE. GIRAFE – Ruminant African mammal. Its flesh is edible.

GIRAUMON – West Indian pumpkin. Its flesh is sweet and delicate, sometimes with a musky flavour. It is eaten raw in salads like cucumber, or cooked with other types of gourd and pumpkin. (See GOURD, PUMPKIN.)

GIRDLE (U.S. GRIDDLE). GALETTOIRE – Flat iron pan without an edge or with a very shallow edge, used for baking pancakes of wholemeal flour called galetons, drop scones or girdle cakes (U.S. griddle cakes).

GIRELLA. GIRELLE – Small, graceful sea-fish. It is beautifully coloured and has no scales.

The common girella is violet with an orange stripe; the red girella, a rich scarlet; the Turkish girella, green with turquoise blue stripes. These are all Mediterranean fish.

Girella is used mainly in bouillabaisse (q.v.), but it can be served fried. Its flesh is fairly delicate.

Girella

GIZZARD. GÉSIER – Third digestive pouch in birds. In birds of prey, it has a membranous lining. In grain-eating birds, it is very muscular and thick.

GJETÖST – See CHEESE.

GLAÇAGE – There is no single English equivalent for this word. It is used for several quite distinct operations for which there are various terms in English.

In its proper sense, glacer means to freeze a liquid until it turns to ice. Thus a creamy or other mixture may be put in a freezer with salt, saltpetre and natural ice to make une glace, that is to say an ice cream or water ice. (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.)

But glaçage is also used for browning or glazing in a very hot oven. A braised cut of meat, poultry or game is glacé (browned or glazed) by being subjected to intense heat in the oven after basting in its own stock. Meat is said to be browned if served hot, and glazed (with jelly) if served cold.

Glaçage is used for glazing when it is applied to fish, eggs or anything else covered with a white sauce. It can also mean glazing in the sense of sprinkling sweets and confectionery with icing sugar and subjecting them to intense heat. This last form of glaçage is also applied to carrots, turnips and onions. The term is applied also to the icing of cakes.

GLACE DE VIANDE – See MEAT.

GLACIÈRE – The term glacière has two meanings; ice box or refrigerator, or a sugar-dredger.

GLASS AND GLASSES. VERRE, VERRERIE – Ever since glass was invented it has been used to make receptacles to contain and store drinks and foodstuffs. Glass utensils were used side by side with the pottery which had served the same purpose since ancient times. Glass, which by its transparency allowed the liquid inside to be seen, was preferred for flagons containing drinks and for drinking vessels because it afforded pleasure to the eye at the same time as the pleasure to the palate. There exist, in museums and private collections, bottles, carafes and drinking vessels of every period and every country.

When glass-makers were sufficiently masters of their technique to be able to seek artistic effects, objects made of glass sometimes became purely ornamental.

The shape of the glass is so very important for the full appreciation of wine, that each region has produced the shape that best enhances its particular wine. As a general rule, the glass should be as fine as possible, roomy (it must never be filled to the brim), with bombé shoulders so that the wine has ample room to develop its aroma. Champagne, on the other hand, should be served in narrow glasses to prevent the bouquet from being dissipated. A flute glass or, better still, a tulip glass is the most suitable.

GLAZES. GLACES – Glazes are stocks reduced to a syrupy consistency used as a finish for certain sauces in order to enhance their flavour and improve their consistency.

A  demi-glace sauce is one obtained from the combination of Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE), light brown stock, and Madeira.

GLUCOMETER. GLUCOMÈTRE, GLYCOMÈTRE – Graduated hydrometer used for the instantaneous assessment of the sugar content of liquids. Special glucometers are used for measuring the sugar density of wines and syrups.

GLUCOSE – A sugar found in its natural state in many fruits, and in particular in grapes.

It is made industrially by heating starch with various acids. This produces first dextrins and then an impure form of glucose itself. Two forms of glucose are used commercially, viscous and semi-solid. Glucose has many industrial uses, notably to increase the sugar content of wine and beer. It is also used in the manufacture of syrup and jam. French law lays down that when glucose is used in this way the fact must be indicated on the label.

GLUTEN – Albuminous substance in flour.

When flour is kneaded under running water, a paste is first formed, then – the starch having been gradually washed away – a greyish elastic dough is produced. This is the gluten. It is because of its gluten content that flour can be made into bread. Ordinary bread contains about 7 per cent gluten.

Gluten dough, bread and biscuits. PAINS, PÂTÉS, BISCUITS DE GLUTEN – These products, manufactured especially for diabetics, have a quantity of gluten added. Gluten bread still retains an average of 40 per cent of starch while potatoes contain only 23 per cent. These products are not recommended, except in very mild cases of diabetes, since they contain such a high proportion of starch. In cases where the starch content has been appreciably reduced, the product no longer bears any real resemblance to bread.

GLUX – See CHEESE.

GLYCERINE. GLYCÉRINE – Colourless, sweetish, syrupy liquid, a by-product of soap manufacture. It can be extracted from most fats.

Glycerine can be used in industrial confectionery without injury to health. It is also regarded as a valuable substitute for sugar in the sweetening of diabetic foods.

GNOCCHI – This dish, made from flour or semolina, can be prepared in two ways, either from Chou paste (see DOUGH) made with milk, or from a semolina porridge.

Gnocchi can also be made from potatoes. These various dishes, of Italian or Austro-Hungarian origin, can be served as a hot hors-d'œuvre or as a separate course.

Gnocchi au gratin (Austro-Hungarian cookery) – Make a Chou paste (see DOUGH) in the usual way, using milk instead of water. When it is ready add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) grated Parmesan for every 450 g. (1 lb.) paste.

Poaching gnocchi with the aid of a forcing-bag
(Maison Desmeuzes)

GOAT

Put the paste in a large forcing-bag with a round nozzle. Force it through by pressing with the hand. The gnocchi are dropped into a pan of boiling salted water, each one the size of a small walnut. Simmer for a few minutes. As soon as the gnocchi rise to the surface of the water, drain them and put on a cloth to dry.

Place them in a gratin dish lined with a layer of Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Cover with the same sauce. Sprinkle grated cheese on the top and pour on melted butter. Brown in a slow oven.

Potato gnocchi (German cookery). GNOCCHI DE POMMES DE TERRE – Boil 1 kg. (2½ lb.) potatoes. Drain, and dry in the oven. Rub them through a fine sieve. While still hot, add to this purée 2 whole eggs, 2 yolks, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, 150 g. (5 oz., 1¼ cups) flour. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Mix.

Divide the mixture into pieces the size of a walnut and roll into balls. Flatten them gently, pressing on them with the back of a fork so that they have ridges along the top. Simmer in salted boiling water. Drain, and place them in a dish in layers, sprinkling grated cheese on each layer. Pour melted butter over and brown in the oven.

Gnocchi à la romaine – Shake, through a dredger, 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) semolina into 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) boiling milk. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Mix well and cook for 20 minutes.

Remove from the stove and add 2 egg yolks. Spread out evenly on a moistened slab so that it is about 1 cm. (½ inch) thick. Leave to cool. Cut into shapes.

Put the gnocchi in a buttered dish lined with grated Gruyère or Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle with the same cheese. Pour melted butter over and bake in a slow oven.

Goat with kid

GOAT. CHÈVRE – Goats are raised especially for dairy production. Goats' meat, when the animal is still too young for breeding, has an agreeable flavour although it is tougher than mutton. As a rule, only animals which are old and worn-out by milking are slaughtered. The meat is as nutritive as mutton, but its smell is disagreeable. Goat is eaten in Spain, in Italy and in the South of France. In the high mountains goats' meat is dried in the open air; this is the bindenfleisch of the Canton des Grisons. Male goats' flesh can be eaten only when the animals are very young, from six weeks to four months.

GOAT'S BEARD. BARBE-DE-BOUC – Wild salsify, of which several varieties are known. The tender shoots of some are eaten like asparagus, the roots of others are prepared like scorzonera (see SALSIFY).

There is a variety of goat's beard cultivated in Belgium called witloof, which in France is called endive.

GOBLET. Gobelet – Wide-mouthed drinking vessel which used to be made of silver or silver-plate.

Antique goblets are often exquisitely engraved. Small silver wine-tasters are also called gobelets in French, though the more usual name for them is tête-vin (wine-taster).

The goblet service. SERVICE DU Gobelet – At the French court, 'serving the goblet' was one of the most important ceremonies of the royal household. The master of the goblet, who was the head functionary of the royal kitchens, was in sole charge of the household bread, fruit and linen for the royal table.

GOBY. Gobie – Fish known in France as the goujon de mer. It is to be found in all the oceans, and some kinds are also found in large rivers. This tiny fish, which has very delicate flesh, is usually eaten fried, like river gudgeon.

GODARD – Garnish for certain meat dishes served as a second course, and for poultry entrées. (See GARNISHES.)

GODIVEAU – Delicate forcemeat from which quenelles are made.

The etymology of this word is uncertain. Scheler suggests that it comes from the old French verb goder which means to make godinettes. Lacam believes that godiveau is derived from the old word godebillaux. He says that formerly godebillaux meant a pie filled with meat balls made of chopped veal and béatilles (titbits) such as cocks' combs and kidneys, lambs' sweetbreads, etc., made into a stew.

Godiveau forcemeat can be prepared in different ways (see FORCEMEATS OR STUFFINGS, Quenelle forcemeat). In addition to the recipes given elsewhere, here is the one given by Carême for this forcemeat.

Godiveau with chives (Carême's recipe). GODIVEAU À LA CIBOULETTE – 'Trim 450 g. (1 lb.) fillet of veal and 675 g. (1½ lb.) suet. Chop the veal finely and mix in the fat. After all of it has been chopped, add 4 teaspoons spiced salt, a pinch of nutmeg, and 4 eggs. Chop for several minutes.

'Pound the godiveau in a mortar, remove from the mortar and place it on ice or in a cool place for 2 hours. Divide the mixture into 2 parts and pound each part separately, moistening little by little with pieces of washed ice, each the size of an egg. This will make the godiveau very firm and smooth.

'Put it in a large bowl and pound the rest in the same way, putting it in the bowl when it is ready, with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and 1 tablespoon chives chopped very fine. This mixture is used like forcemeat.'

Carême goes on to explain the rôle played by the ice in this preparation:

'Ice helps in binding and giving body to the godiveau, which is what gives it its desirable smooth softness.'

GODWIT. BARGE – Marsh bird, also found along river banks and near the sea shore, commonly called oyster-catcher or cricket-teal.

The two varieties, the black tailed godwit and the bar tailed godwit are found in Europe. In America there are the large marbled godwit and the small Hudsonian godwit.

All recipes given for woodcock (q.v.) can be applied to godwit.

GOÉLAND – Colloquial French name for large seagulls. The flesh of this bird, which is oily, leathery and unpleasant in flavour, used to be eaten as Lenten fare. Its eggs are edible. It is prepared in the same way as bustard, cooked like domestic goose or duckling.

GOÉMOM – Type of seaweed.

GOGUES (Angevin cookery) – Chop finely equal quantities of onions, spinach, beet and lettuce. Season with salt and leave for 12 hours. Next day cook the vegetables in lard until they are very soft.

Dice fat bacon equal in weight to the mixed vegetables. Cook the bacon a little, and add it to the vegetables. Season with pepper, salt and allspice. Add enough pig's blood to make a thin mixture.

Mix thoroughly and wrap in thin pieces of beef, 20 cm. (8 inches) long. Secure the ends. Simmer the gogues in salt water for 2½ hours. Drain and leave to cool.

When the gogues are quite cold, slice them and toss in butter, browning them slightly on both sides.

GOGUETTE – Old name for a flat sausage made from highly spiced pork stuffing.

GOLD. OR – Precious non-rusting metal sometimes used in the Middle Ages in thin leaves for wrapping certain pâtés and roast birds. Gold is still used for this purpose in the Far East.

GOOD KING HENRY (Allgood, English mercury). BON-HENRI – Plant commonly found in wild places, frequently growing against walls. It is also called wild spinach. The leaves are cooked like spinach. They should be cooked in two waters and the first, green and bitter, should be thrown away. The young shoots are sometimes eaten like asparagus.

GOOSE. OIE – All the species of geese which are used as food in Europe are the issue of the wild goose.

In France two varieties of geese are raised, the petite and the grosse. The smaller goose (petite) weighs about 3 kg. (6½ lb.) on average. After methodical fattening they attain the weight of 5 kg. (11 lb.) and are excellent roasting birds. This common goose can be treated in any way suitable for poultry, especially turkey.

The big goose (grosse) is a heavy bird, weighing 5 kg. (11 lb.) on the average and reaching 10 to 12 kg. (22 to 26½ lb.) after fattening.

Geese of this type are found mainly around Toulouse, where they are bred, and in the Garonne basin. The bird is usually called the Toulouse goose; the Strasbourg goose is a species of the same breed. This bird carries its body almost perpendicularly; its behind, called 'artichoke', drags on the ground even before the fattening process. The skin covering its breast is loose and slack, forming a lappet, or wattle, which constitutes a fat store. It is this variety of goose that is used in the south-west of France for the confit d'oie.

The Toulouse geese also provide the livers which are made into the famous pâtés de foie gras with truffles, produced in Toulouse, in the Gers, the Landes, in Strasbourg and other parts of France. This variety, however flavoursome its flesh, is used only for making confit d'oie and cannot be treated by any of the culinary methods applied to the common goose.

The confit and various other specialities made of preserved goose of the Toulouse species are excellent, but the most delicate part of this bird is, of course, the liver, especially when an intensive cramming, coupled with total immobilisation, have enlarged this organ to the state of complete fatty degeneration.

For many centuries the goose was considered the best of poultry. In Paris, rôtisseurs principally sold roast geese, hence the name of oyers by which they were, for many years, described in their statutes.

In England the goose has always been greatly appreciated. On Michaelmas Day it was the custom to serve roast goose, prepared in the traditional English way, stuffed with sage and onions. This tradition goes back to the sixteenth century and Alfred Suzanne in his book la Cuisine Anglaise, described its origins as follows:

'The 29th September, Michaelmas Day, is the anniversary of a great naval victory won by the English against the Spaniards. Queen Elizabeth was at table when the news of the sinking of the Spanish Armada was brought to her.

'The principal dish that day was roast goose, to which the Queen, it was said, was particularly partial, and in an excited outburst of patriotism and . . . gourmandism, she decreed that this glorious occasion be commemorated by serving roast goose on that day every year.'

The flesh of adult geese is rather tough and requires prolonged cooking, usually braising, but the flesh of young goose is tender and delicate. In northern France, where the common goose is more appreciated than in the south, it is customary to expose the birds to cold for a time during winter, to make the flesh tender.

In his book l'ancienne Alsace à table, Charles Gérard wrote:

'The bird itself is nothing, but the art of man has turned it into an instrument which produces marvellous results, a kind of living greenhouse in which the supreme fruit of gastronomy is grown.'

The foie gras is indeed the 'supreme fruit of gastronomy', especially when prepared as it is in Strasbourg or Toulouse, but the flesh of a young goose, or gosling, as the bird is called up to 7 months old, is not to be despised, and a great many gastronomes rank it highly. A young goose, like duck, can be recognised by the pliability of its underbill.

Goose à l'alsacienne. OIE À L'ALSACIENNE – Stuff the goose with sausage meat. Truss it for roasting and pan-roast it in butter. Garnish with sauerkraut (q.v.) braised separately, with cooking juices added. Alternate the sauerkraut with pieces of lean bacon and poached Strasbourg sausages. Dilute the pan juices with white wine and veal stock and pour over the goose.

Male (right) and female goose

Toulouse geese

Goose à l'anglaise (English style). OIE À L'ANGLAISE – Stuff the goose with the following:

Bake 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) unpeeled onions in the oven and allow to cool. Peel and chop, adding to them an equal weight of soaked and pressed crustless bread. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt, a pinch of pepper, a little grated nutmeg and 3 tablespoons (scant ½ cup) chopped sage.

Truss the goose and roast in the oven or on a spit. Arrange on a dish, spoon over some of the diluted pan juices, and serve with apple sauce, cooked without sugar or only very slightly sweetened.

Ballottine and galantine of goose. BALLOTTINE, GALANTINE D'OIE – Prepare like Galantine of chicken (see CHICKEN) using boned goose, fine pork or chicken forcemeat, truffles, pickled tongue and ham cut in dice or thin strips.

Ballottine of goose is usually served cold, the liquor in which it was cooked being made into jelly. It can also be served hot accompanied by a garnish.

Goose à la bourguignonne. OIE À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Prepare as for Chicken à la bourguignonne (see CHICKEN).

Braised goose with various garnishes. OIE BRAISÉE – Prepare like Braised turkey (see TURKEY).

Goose à la chipolata. OIE À LA CHIPOLATA – Prepare, pan-roasted or braised, as Turkey à la chipolata (see TURKEY).

Civet of goose. CIVET D'OIE – Prepare like Civet of hare (see HARE) using goose cut into uniform pieces.

Confit d'oie I – Bleed the goose, pluck and singe it and leave until quite cold before cutting. Slit open the back completely, clean out the bird and remove the liver, taking care not to damage it. (The liver can be used separately for making terrines and pâtés.) Divide the goose into 4 pieces. Leave intact the bones connected to these pieces in order to prevent the flesh losing its shape too much during cooking.

Salt the pieces of goose, put them into a large earthenware pot and leave in a cold place for 24 hours.

When they are thoroughly impregnated with salt, take them out, brush off the salt and wipe with a cloth.

Cook in clarified goose fat. When the fat has solidified, cut it into small pieces, put into a deep pot, moisten with a few tablespoons of water, and add a muslin bag containing several cloves of garlic, a few cloves, and some peppercorns, and heat. Do not put the pieces of goose in until this is three quarters melted. Cook on a moderate heat for about 1 hour.

Test with a big needle to make sure the goose is done. The juice which comes out should be perfectly clear, which indicates that the cooking is complete.

Drain the pieces of goose and remove the carcass bones. Put a thick layer of the fat in which the goose was cooked, clarified and strained, into a big earthenware jar, glazed on the inside. When the fat is completely solid, put in the pieces of goose, so that they do not touch the wall of the jar. Cover with warm goose fat.

Leave for 2 days. Strain into the pot some hot fat to seal any holes. When this is well congealed, pour a layer of lard over it, and when this is set, put a circle of greaseproof on top, pressing it down to make it adhere. Cover the top of the jar with a double thickness of paper and tie with string.

Confit d'oie prepared in this way will keep for a very long time. It can also be canned, the cans being placed in boiling water.

Confit d'oie II – Cut the goose into quarters and rub whole surface with spiced salt, prepared by mixing 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) salt, 6 g. (¼ oz.) saltpetre, 4 crushed cloves, 2 pounded bay leaves, a good pinch of pounded thyme.

Put the pieces of goose into an earthenware pot, glazed on the inside. Cover with spiced salt. Leave to steep in this seasoning for 24 hours.

Take the pieces of goose out, shake off surplus salt, and wipe the pieces carefully. Put them into a big pot in which goose fat has been left to melt slowly. Cook on low heat for 1½ hours.

Test the pieces of goose with a thick straw, which should penetrate the flesh easily. Drain the quarters, put them into the earthenware jar. Strain the hot fat over them, making sure the meat is covered completely. When quite cold and the goose fat has become congealed, pour a layer of lard, about 1 cm. (½ inch) thick, over the surface. The lard is denser in consistency and this operation will ensure that the confit will keep for a long time. Store in a cool, dry place.

When taking pieces of goose out of the jar for use, care must be taken to see that the remaining pieces are completely covered by the fat.

Confit d'oie is one of the specialties of Languedoc and Gasconne, and an essential ingredient for the garbure (q.v.), the most characteristic of Béarn dishes.

'Leg of preserved goose,' says Simin Palay, 'is a dish which is always ready should a relative or a guest arrive unexpectedly. An old country saying assures us:

*'Lou qui a coêche d'auque a hourrup de bi,
Que pot embita parent ou bes'*

which means:

'He who has a goose leg and a little wine can safely invite relatives or neighbours.'

In Languedoc confit d'oie is used for the preparation of cassoulet (q.v.). It can also be served on its own, hot or cold, with or without garnish. Here are some recipes for serving it hot:

Confit d'oie, Basque. CONFIT D'OIE À LA BASQUAISE – Heat the quarters of goose in their own fat, drain, and garnish with cèpes cooked in a mixture of oil and goose fat in equal proportions, and mixed with chopped parsley and garlic.

Confit d'oie à la béarnaise – Heat the pieces of goose in their own fat, and drain. Garnish with thin slices of raw potato fried in goose fat and sprinkled with 1 tablespoon chopped parsley mixed with a pinch of pounded garlic.

Confit d'oie with green cabbage. CONFIT D'OIE AUX CHOUX VERTS – Prepare green cabbage as described in the recipe for Braised cabbage (see CABBAGE). When nearly done, add a piece of goose coated with the fat. Arrange the piece of goose on a dish, surround with the cabbage, and garnish with boiled potatoes.

Confit d'oie with kidney beans. CONFIT D'OIE AUX HARICOTS BLANCS – Add the pieces of goose to beans cooked à la bretonne (see BEANS), simmer for a few minutes and serve in a timbale.

Confit d'oie with lentils. CONFIT D'OIE AUX LENTILLES – Cook 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) lentils with the usual aromatics. Drain, and simmer with a few tablespoons thickened brown veal stock. Add the pieces of goose about 25 minutes before serving. Heat gently with the pan covered.

Confit d'oie with peas, or à la landaise. CONFIT D'OIE AUX PETITS POIS, DIT À LA LANDAISE – Remove the surplus fat covering a piece of confit d'oie.

Melt some goose fat in an earthenware casserole and fry in it 8 small onions and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) diced Bayonne ham. Add 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) freshly shelled peas. Cook for 5 minutes. Sprinkle in 1 tablespoon flour, cook for a few moments, stirring with a wooden spoon, moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water and season with a little salt and 1 teaspoon sugar. Add a bouquet garni consisting of parsley, chervil, tarragon and bay leaf. Cook with a lid on for 40 minutes. Put in the piece of confit d'oie and finish cooking, with the casserole covered, for 25 minutes.

Confit d'oie à la périgourdine, à la sarladaise – Prepare as Confit d'oie à la béarnaise with a garnish of sautéed potatoes (sliced raw and fried in goose fat) mixed with slivers of truffles.

Goose en daube Capitole. OIE EN DAUBE CAPITOLE – Stuff the goose with a fine forcemeat mixed with foie gras and diced truffles. Truss and braise in the usual way. When the goose is nearly done, strain the braising liquor through a fine strainer.

Remove trussing string and put the goose back into the pan with 250 g. (9 oz.) small mushrooms, 250 g. (9 oz.) stoned blanched olives, and 250 g. (9 oz.) small chipolata sausages tossed in butter. Pour in the braising liquor and finish cooking in a low oven.

Goose à la flamande. OIE À LA FLAMANDE – Braise the goose in the usual manner. Garnish à la flamande (see GARNISHES). Boil down the braising liquor, strain and pour over the goose.

Goose frittons or grattons. FRITTONS, GRATTONS D'OIE – Name for the residue which remains in the pot after goose fat melts.

Minute fragments of flesh, which are trimmed off the quarters of goose while preparing confit d'oie, are sometimes added to this residue.

The frittons are drained, pressed to extract all the fat contained in them, seasoned with salt and then left to get cold. Frittons are eaten as hors-d'œuvre. They can be pressed into a block by moulding them in a bowl or other receptacle.

Goose giblets and pinions. ABATIS, AILERONS D'OIE – Prepare in any of the ways given for turkey giblets (see GIBLETS).

Goose livers. FOIES D'OIE – Livers of roasting geese are prepared as for livers of all other poultry. They can be cooked on skewers, sautéed with mushrooms, in Madeira, with truffles, pilaf, risotto, etc. They can be used as a garnish for eggs prepared in different ways, or with various entrée dishes.

They are also used for preparing à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Foie gras, that is, liver of fattened geese, can be prepared in innumerable ways, both hot and cold. (See FOIE GRAS.)

Goose pâté, cold. PÂTÉ FROID D'OIE – Using goose meat prepare like Chicken pâté, cold (see PÂTÉ, Cold pâtés).

Goose pâté, hot. PÂTÉ CHAUD D'OIE – Prepare, using goose meat, like Chicken pâté, hot (see PÂTÉ, Hot pâtés).

Goose ragoûts. RAGOÛTS D'OIE – Use goose meat cut in uniform pieces.

These ragoûts can be garnished in various ways. They can be made à la bourgeoise, à la chipolata, with celeriac, with turnips, chestnuts, olives, etc. (See RAGOÛT.)

Goose ragoût à la bonne femme. RAGOÛT D'OIE À LA BONNE FEMME – Cut a medium-sized goose into uniform pieces. Season with salt and pepper and put the pieces into a sauté pan in which 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) clarified butter (or goose fat) have been heated. Add a big onion and a carrot, cut into quarters. Brown the pieces of goose and the vegetables well.

When the pieces of goose are well browned, sprinkle in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour and fry, stirring the ragoût on the fire. Add a small crushed clove of garlic, moisten with half a glass of white wine and add 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) stock. Add a bouquet garni, and cook for 40 minutes, keeping the pan covered.

Drain the pieces in a sieve placed over a bowl. Trim them and put into the cleaned pan. Add 250 g. (9 oz.) small onions, lightly tossed in butter, 250 g. (9 oz.) lean bacon cut into small pieces, scalded and lightly fried, and 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) quartered potatoes. Skim off surplus fat from the sauce, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Tomato purée (see PURÉE) and pour it over the goose. Put on the stove for a moment, cover the pan and cook in a hot oven, without stirring, for 45 minutes.

Roast goose. OIE RÔTI – This method of cooking is suitable only for a very young and tender goose. It can be roasted in the oven or on a spit, and should be left a little underdone.

Roast goose à l'anglaise is stuffed with sage and onions.

Smoked breast of goose. POITRINE D'OIE FUMÉE – This preparation, which is made in Alsace and in Germany, can be found in shops, cooked ready for use. It is eaten cold, like smoked ham, and is also a garnish for sauerkraut.

Stuffed goose necks. COUS D'OIE FARCIS – This makes an excellent hors-d'œuvre and is eaten as a sausage. It is prepared in various regions of south-western France when confit d'oie is being made.

Bone the necks, leaving a good deal of the skin covering the breast attached to them. Using the flesh taken off the bones, make a forcemeat, adding some minced pork, mixed with a small quantity of goose liver and diced truffles. Season and stuff the necks. Cook them in goose fat, and keep in earthenware jars as pieces of confit d'oie.

Goose tongues. LANGUES D'OIE – In Béarn, the tongues of big geese, which are used for making confit, are cooked on a grill.

Goose à la mode de Visé, also called à l'instar de Visé (Flemish cookery). OIE À LA MODE DE VISÉ, À L'INSTAR DE VISÉ – Cook a young goose that has not yet started laying, in white stock spiced with 2 bulbs of garlic. Drain, cut into pieces, sprinkle with goose fat, and simmer in a sauté pan with the lid on.

Prepare a Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), mixing flour with goose fat for the roux (q.v.) and using the liquor in which the goose was poached. Keep on simmering the velouté for an hour; it should be rather thick. Make a liaison with 4 egg yolks as for Chicken fricassée (see CHICKEN). Strain the sauce, add to it a few tablespoons cream and 1 good tablespoon Garlic purée (see PURÉE), using the garlic cooked with the goose.

Drain the pieces of goose dry and put into the sauce. Heat well and serve heaped on a dish.

GOOSEBERRY. GROSEILLE – Large berry, green in colour or streaked with red. In French one variety of gooseberry is called groseille à maquereau because it is used in the preparation of a sauce which, traditionally, is served with mackerel.

In France, gooseberries are mainly grown in Normandy and other northern districts.

GORENFLOT (Pâtisserie) – Name of a sweet made of baba (q.v.) dough baked in a hexagonal mould. This cake was first made at the Maison Bourbonneaux in the middle of the nineteenth century. It was called Gorenflot by its creator, in memory of the hero of Alexandre Dumas' play la Dame de Monsoreau.

GORGONZOLA – Italian cheese (see CHEESE).

GOUDALE – A garbure (q.v.) to which red or white wine is added. Simin Palay, in his la Cuisine en Béarn, says that a goudale is the traditional conclusion to every garbure. When the bread and vegetables of this broth have been eaten, the diner pours into his plate a generous cup of red or white wine, mixes it with the soup left at the bottom of the plate, and drinks it.

The goudale is considered in Béarn to be a sovereign remedy for illness, if a local proverb is to be believed:

'Goudale pla adoubado,

'Tiro un escut de la pocho deu medecin.'

('A well-made goudale keeps a coin from the doctor's pocket.')

GOUFFÉ – Jules Gouffé was one of the greatest chefs of the nineteenth century.

Born in Paris in 1807, he had a talent for cookery from his early youth. His father, an established pastry-cook in the Saint-Merri quarter, taught him the basic principles of cookery. It was then that Carême, hearing of the talent of the young Gouffé – who at 17 was already showing promise in the decoration and presentation of set pieces – took him into his kitchens in the Austrian Embassy in Paris. Carême turned him into a model craftsman, a celebrity of his day.

In 1840, Jules Gouffé set up on his own in the Faubourg Saint-Honoré; his restaurant became one of the best in Paris. In 1855 he retired, but went back to work in 1867, encouraged by those famous gourmets, Dumas the elder and Baron Brisse. This pair of epicures offered him the post of head chef at the Jockey Club. It was at this time that Gouffé began work on his Livre de cuisine, a magnificent book which deserves a place in every library of cookery, side by side with the works of Carême, Plumerey, Urbain Dubois, Emile Bernard, Escoffier, etc.

A few lines from the master's preface will suffice to show the importance of his work:

'Having, from my earliest youth, embarked upon a career of cookery, I saw much, observed much, practised much in every sense of the word. I am not one of those who declare that French cookery – that part of our national heritage of which we have reason to be proud – is lost today and that it will never recover. The good and true things never die. No doubt there may be periods of decline, but sooner or later, with hard work, intelligence and good will, there must be a recovery.

'If, thanks to the reforms and the methods which I propose, I find that in a few years' time everyone, whatever his rank in society, is eating as well as he possibly can; that, on the one hand, household cookery is at last being carried out with care, economy and comfort; and on the other hand the grande cuisine goes forward under progressive conditions, with that good taste and brilliance which is so appropriate to a century of enlightenment and luxury like our own; then I shall have truly attained the goal which I have set myself... I shall feel myself well paid for all my pains.'

In 1872, Jules Gouffé published le Livre de pâtisserie, then le Livre des conserves.

In 1875 le Livre des soupes et des potages was published. This was the crowning point of a whole lifetime devoted to remarkable work in the field of cookery.

Gouffé died at Neuilly in 1877.

GOUGELHOF or GOUGELHOPF – See KUGELHOPF.

✓ GOUGÈRE (Burgundian pastry) – This pastry, which is said to have originated at Sens, is made not only in Burgundy but also at Troyes, in Champagne, and in other districts of France.

The dough. Place in a thick, flat-bottomed saucepan 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) water, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter, and 1 teaspoon salt. As soon as the water is boiling, move the saucepan away from the flame and add 200 g. (7 oz., ¾ cups) sieved flour. Mix, then dry the dough over a high flame, stirring it with a wooden spoon, like Chou paste (see DOUGH) until it comes away easily from the sides of the saucepan.

Remove the pan from the stove and beat into the mixture 5 whole eggs, one by one, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) finely diced Gruyère cheese, and a pinch of white pepper.

Making the cake. With a tablespoon, scoop out pieces of dough, each the size of an egg. Put them straight into a buttered pie dish, one against the other in a circle. Smooth the circle on top and round the inside with the back of a spoon. Brush with beaten egg. Sprinkle with very finely diced cheese. Bake in a slow oven.

The more usual way to serve a gougère is cold, but it may also be served hot as hors-d'œuvre.

GOUGNETTES (Lot cookery) – Type of doughnut. Prepare a dough from 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) flour, 5 eggs, 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) sugar and 10 g. (½ oz.) dried or compressed yeast. Leave to rise for about 1 hour.

Roll out the dough on a floured table. Shape flattened dough into small thin loaves, and cut them into 5-cm. (2-inch.) pieces.

Fry the pieces in very hot fat. Drain the gougnettes when they are crisp and evenly browned. Sprinkle with sugar.

GOULASCH (Hungarian cookery) – Goulasch (sometimes called gulyas) is a kind of beef stew made with diced onions and seasoned with Hungarian paprika. Several kinds of goulasch are made in Hungary, and recipes for them are given under BEEF.

Goulasch soup (Hungarian broth). GOULASCH (POTAGE) – Dice coarsely 350 g. (12 oz.) beef sirloin, trimmed and with all fat removed. Brown in butter in a casserole with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) finely chopped onion. Season with salt and a large pinch paprika. Add a little cummin and a small crushed clove of garlic.

When the meat is well browned all over, sprinkle 1 tablespoon flour over it. Mix and let it cook for 1 to 2 minutes, but without allowing it to brown. Add 1½ litres (2½ pints, 2¾ pints) consommé. Bring to the boil and cook slowly for about 3 hours.

An hour before serving, add to the broth 2 diced potatoes. Serve with bread croûtons fried in butter.

GOURD. COURGE – Name given to many species of the Cucurbitaceae family including summer and autumn pumpkins (yellow gourds), vegetable marrows, various summer squashes, Canada or cushaw, Quaker or Japanese squashes (or pumpkin).

Different varieties of gourd:
Pumpkin, squashes, vegetable marrow

Gourds are one of the oldest vegetables known to man although it is doubtful if any of those grown today could be identified with the original species. The word gourd is reserved in North America for the decorative inedible variety. Winter and summer squash as well as pumpkin are grown on a very large scale. Winter squash can often be used in place of pumpkin.

GOURILOS – Gourilos are the stumps of endive. When fully grown and tender, they make a delicately flavoured vegetable.

They can be prepared à la grecque as an hors-d'œuvre; or as a vegetable in butter or cream, in gravy, fried, gilled etc.

Method. Trim and wash the stumps. Boil them in salt water until tender.

Drain and leave to cool. Dry them and cook according to the following recipes.

Gourilos in butter. GOURILOS AU BEURRE – Blanch 12 gourilos. Place in a frying pan with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) water. Cover and cook for 40 minutes. Arrange in a dish and pour on the butter in which they have been cooked, to which has been added a tablespoon water or white stock.

Gourilos in cream. GOURILOS À LA CRÈME – Cook as for Gourilos in butter. When they are ready, add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) hot fresh cream. Simmer for 8 minutes. Arrange the gourilos in a dish and pour on the cream.

Endive gourilos. GOURILOS FRITS – Blanch the gourilos, drain, leave to cool, chill and dry them. Steep them in oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper for 25 minutes. Coat them with a thin frying batter and fry in deep fat. Drain. Sprinkle with salt.

Gourilos in gravy, bone-marrow sauce, velouté sauce or other sauces. GOURILOS AU JUS, À LA MOELLE, AU VELOUTÉ – Proceed as in recipes for cardoons (q.v.) or celery (q.v.), using any of these sauces.

Grilled gourilos. GOURILOS GRILLÉS – Blanch the gourilos and soak in oil and lemon juice as for Fried gourilos. Grill them under a low flame, moistening them with oil from time to time.

Gourilos à la grecque. GOURILOS À LA GRECQUE – Blanch the gourilos and prepare as for Artichokes à la grecque (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE).

GOURMAND, GOURMANDISM. GOURMAND, GOURMANDISE – Many people take the word 'gourmandism' to be synonymous with 'gluttony'.

Brillat-Savarin is sternly critical of this interpretation.

'Authorities who thus interpret gourmandise have completely forgotten social gourmandise which combines the elegance of Athens, the luxury of Rome and the delicacy of France. Such gourmandise orders with discernment, supervises with wisdom, savours with enthusiasm, judges with profundity. It is a precious attribute which may well be esteemed a virtue, for it is the source of our purest delights.

'Gourmandise . . . is a passionate, rational and habitual preference for all that flatters the palate.

'Gourmandise is the enemy of excess; every man who gives himself indigestion or gets drunk, runs the risk of no longer being a true gourmand.

'Delicacy (friandise) is an essential part of gourmandise, for delicacy is the same kind of discrimination applied to delicate titbits such as preserves, pastries and sweets. . . .

From the social point of view, the advantages of gourmandism are innumerable. 'It is gourmandise,' continues Brillat-Savarin, 'which stimulates the transport from pole to pole of wines, spirits, sugar, spices, pickles, savouries, indeed provisions of every kind, down to eggs and melons.

'It is this which affords a livelihood to the industrious multitude of cooks, confectioners, pastry-cooks and other diversely named purveyors of food, who, in their turn, rely for the satisfaction of their needs on workers of all kinds. This gives rise, always and everywhere, to a wealth of economic activity, of which even the most lively mind cannot calculate the extent nor assess the value.' (Physiologie du goût.)

The gourmand
(Collection of J.-J. T. de Lusse)

GOURMET – Formerly, the word gourmet was never used in the inexact sense which is current nowadays.

The gourmet, whose full title was courtier-gourmet-piqueur, was not a gourmand, in other words a connoisseur of good things, but rather a sworn official, charged with the duty of tasting wines and spirits. Gourmets-piqueurs were once part of a confraternity. Nowadays they are organised into syndicates.

GOURNAY – See CHEESE.

GRAHAM BREAD. PAIN DE GRAHAM – Wholemeal bread made from a mixture of different cereal flours. This bread was invented in 1840 by an American, Silvester Graham.

GRAIN – Small weight used in former times. It weighed approximately  $\frac{1}{20}$  g.

GRAMOLATES or GRAMOLATAS – Sherbet made from a granité (q.v.) mixture. (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.)

GRAND MAÎTRE – Under the old French monarchy, the grand maître, who was also called souverain maître de l'hôtel du roi was chief of all the officers of the royal kitchens.

GRAND VENEUR SAUCE – Brown sauce, served with ground game and venison. (See SAUCES, Brown sauces.)

GRANITÉS – Type of sherbet. No Italian meringue is added to this mixture, as is done with ordinary sherbet mixture. (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.)

GRAPE. RAISIN – Fruit of the vine.

The stem of the grape bunch, which is more or less woody according to the species, contains a little free acid and tannin. The seeds contain a tannin, a resinous substance, an essential oil and volatile acids which come into play later in the development of the bouquet.

The pulp is held in place by very thin membranous cell walls (hardly  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent of the weight of the fruit) so thin that the weight of the juice is just about equal to that of the pulp; it consists mainly of sugar in proportions which vary according to the type of plant and the year, sometimes rising as high as  $23\frac{1}{2}$  per cent of sugar in weight, corresponding to 15 per cent of alcohol in volume. In a good year most choice types give comparable figures.

Chasselas grapes (Fauchon. Phot. Nicolas)

Dessert grapes. RAISINS DE TABLE – A few varieties of grapes listed according to their season: earliest first.

Angevine is the earliest variety of all, fruit pale yellow, flesh juicy and sweet; Saint-Jacques, with transparent yellow fruit, ripens very soon after; Cardinal is a red grape with a slightly musky flavour; Chasselas is the most popular cultivated variety and it alone accounts for more than half French production (there are numerous types of Chasselas grape); Admirable; Dattier; Alphonse Lavallée is deep blue in colour and cultivated extensively; Oeillade is a deep blackish violet; Muscat de Hambourg is purplish-black with plump oval fruit; Gros Vert, Servant, Olivette blanche, Muscat d'Alexandrie are all white grapes.

The great dessert grape producing regions of France are Vaucluse, Bouches-du-Rhône, Hérault, Gard, the valley of the Garonne, and the Moissac region which is particularly famous for its golden Chasselas.

For the varieties of grapes used for making wine (cépages) see VINE.

Keeping grapes. The system used at Thomery, for the Chasselas grape, consists of cutting off the bunch, with a piece of the main stem attached, before it is quite ripe, and soaking the thick stem in a bottle half filled with water.

Dried grapes. RAISINS SECS – Gathered when perfectly ripe, and dried in the sun. The principal commercial types in France are:

Raisins. Mainly from the Midi. Gathered very ripe, plunged into a wash of boiling water and ash, then dried in the sun on their stalks.

Sultanas. Large fruit, practically seedless and with a muscat flavour.

Currants. Mainly from the Greek islands. Small, seedless, washed with ash and stripped from their stalks.

Dried grapes are used in cookery, pastry-making and confectionery. They can still be used to make wine after being soaked.

Grape jelly. CONFITURE DE RAISINS – Like Currant jelly II (see JAMS AND JELLIES) using 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar to 500 g. (18 oz.) grape juice.

GRAPEFRUIT. PAMPLEMOUSSE – Citrus fruit the size of a very big orange, pale yellow in colour. The Chinese eat this fruit at the beginning of a meal as an apéritif, and this custom was copied by the Americans when they acclimatised the fruit in their country.

Cut the fruit in half horizontally with a very sharp knife (a special knife is used for this purpose), make a circular incision around the central cone and remove it. Slide the knife into each section of the fruit to loosen the pulp from the skin surrounding it. Sprinkle with fine sugar. It can be flavoured with liqueur and served on ice.

Preparing grapefruit (Claire)

GRAPPA – Piedmontese marc brandy in which a sprig of rue is infused.

GRASSHOPPER. SAUTERELLE – Orthopterous, herbivorous insect, often constituting a plague to agriculture. Grasshoppers are greatly relished by African natives who eat them in the most diverse forms, boiled, roasted, grilled, salted, dried and reduced to a paste. Moses permitted the Hebrews to eat four different species, described in Leviticus.

GRASS SNAKE. COULEUVRE – Non-poisonous snake. The common grass snake is sometimes eaten in France under the name of anguille des haies (hedge eel). It is prepared in the same way as Eel (q.v.).

GRATER. RÂPE – Utensil with a rough surface, pierced with holes, used to reduce to a coarse powder certain vegetables, fruits or other commodities (cheese, nutmeg, almonds, etc.).

GRATERON – Common French term for rennet.

GRATIN – The term means the thin crust formed on the surface of certain dishes when they are browned in the oven or under the grill.

It is extended to denote certain methods of preparation. Thus we speak of macaroni au gratin, sole au gratin. (See CULINARY METHODS.)

Gratin languedocien – Half cook in oil 4 peeled, sliced aubergines, seasoned with salt and pepper, and 12 halved seasoned tomatoes. Arrange them in alternate layers in a baking dish. Cover with a mixture of breadcrumbs and chopped garlic and parsley. Sprinkle with olive oil. Begin cooking on the top of the stove, then bake slowly in the oven until the top is well browned.

GRATTONS or GRATTERONS – Names given in certain regions of France, especially in the south-west, to the residue of the melted fat of pork, goose or turkey. It is sometimes called frittons, and is salted while still hot, and eaten cold as an hors-d'œuvre.

Grattons must not be confused with rillettes, which are prepared by pounding in a mortar a mixture of fat and lean pork which has been slowly cooked beforehand.

Grattons (speciality of the Ile Bourbon). GRATTONS À L'ÎLE DE LA RÉUNION (ÎLE BOURBON) – Take the skin from the back of a young pig, leaving on it 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) of fat. Cut it into 10-cm. (4-inch) squares. Score the fat without touching the skin with criss-cross lines, making little squares about 8 mm. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  inch) across. Put the pieces of skin in a pan with some melted fat. Leave them to cook very slowly for 3 to 4 hours. When the skin is tender and transparent, raise the heat and cook for a further 40 minutes, until the pieces of skin bubble up and become crisp. They should swell up like fritters. Remove them from the pan with a perforated spoon or skimmer and put them in a dish. Sprinkle with table salt. This dish should always be cooked uncovered.

GRAVENCHE – Fish of the salmon family found mainly in Lake Geneva. It closely resembles the fêra with which it is often confused. The fêra has a more curved back and lighter coloured scales.

The gravenche is usually much smaller than the fêra. Its flesh is fairly firm and delicate but has much less flavour.

All recipes suitable for fêra and river trout may be used for gravenche. (See FÉRA, TROUT.)

GRAVES – Les Graves is the name of the sandy and gravelly territory that lies in the département of the Gironde. The hills and plateaux of this region yield excellent wines.

The Graves or Graves of Bordeaux also occupy a strip of land, about 15 km. (9 miles) wide, running parallel to the Gironde between Bordeaux and Langon.

The red wines of Graves are full-bodied and lively. Their very delicate bouquet evokes the aroma of truffles and the perfume of the resin of the nearby pine forests. Like Médoc, the region has some outstanding wines.

Apart from Château Haut-Brion, classified premier cru in 1855, most of the Graves wines were classified in 1953 (decree of 18 October 1958). The classification is as follows:

Châteaux	Communes	White (W) or Red (R)
Bouscaut	Cadaujac	W and R
Carbonnieux	Léognan	W and R
Chevalier (Domaine de)	Léognan	W and R
Couhins	Villenave-d'Ornon	W
Fieuzal	Léognan	R
Haut-Bailly	Léognan	R
La Mission-Haut-Brion	Talence	R
La Tour-Haut-Brion	Talence	R
La Tour-Martillac	Martillac	W and R
Laville-Haut-Brion	Talence	W
Malartic-Lagravière	Léognan	W and R
Olivier	Léognan	W and R
Pape-Clément	Pessac	R
Smith-Haut-Lafite	Martillac	R

The white wines of Graves are dry and elegant with a delicate bouquet. They are an excellent accompaniment to seafood, shellfish, grilled fish, and subtle sauces. In the south of the region, the white wines are sweeter and lighter, more akin to Sauternes wines.

Grayling

GRAYLING. OMBRE COMMUN – Rare freshwater fish resembling trout, from which it differs by its bigger and more brilliant scales, smaller snout, an enormous dorsal fin of bluish-grey colour. Its sides are silvery, sometimes tinged with pink or purple and flecked with dark spots.

The flesh is very delicate and has a slight flavour of thyme. It is prepared like trout (q.v.).

GRECQUE (À LA) – Dishes à la grecque should be of Greek origin in their method of preparation, but in practice this is seldom the case. Though it sometimes happens that a dish called à la grecque on a restaurant menu really is of Greek origin, more often than not the name is given to dishes of French origin.

Among the dishes called à la grecque are Artichokes à la grecque (see ARTICHOKE) and other vegetables prepared in the same way.

GREENGAGE. REINE-CLAUDE – Plum with a yellowish-green skin, lightly tinted with red on the side of the fruit exposed to the sun. (See PLUM.)

GREENHOUSE, HOTHOUSE. SERRE – Building made of glass where plants are raised in artificial heat. The vegetables or fruit cultivated under glass have less flavour than plants grown in the open air.

GRENACHE – The word grenache is derived from the Italian word granaccio which means 'large seeds'. The Grenache grape accounts for much of the vine stock of the Côtes du Rhône wines of the south of France and the Mediterranean basin. It is used to make straight, unfortified sweet wines. The best-known appellations of Roussillon are all Grenache wines. The most important of these are Banyuls, Maury, Côtes-d'Agly, Rivesaltes.

GRENADIER – Fish thus named in France because of the shape of its head, which is reminiscent of a French Grenadier's cap. It is never more than 40 cm. (16 inches) long, and its white flesh is delicate. It is served poached, with half-melted Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters); boiled (hot or cold) with various sauces; à la boulangère, with sliced potatoes and onion rings.

GRENADINS – Small slices of fillet of veal (noix de veau) cut in the shape of triangles or rectangles which are interlarded with best larding bacon and braised.

Braised veal grenadins. GRENADINS DE VEAU BRAISÉS – Using fillet or under-fillet of veal, cut narrow thick escalopes. Flatten them gently, trim them, and stud them with thin strips of larding bacon or salt pork.

Grills (La Carpe. Phot. Nicolas)

Below: Electric toaster (Nicolas)

Brown in butter, fresh crackling (or bacon rind), a medium-sized onion, a carrot cut into thin slices, and the trimmings of the veal. Lay the grenadins flat in the pan and brown them lightly. Cover, and cook gently on a low flame for 15 minutes.

Moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine. Boil down the juices almost completely, and add a little water. Bring to the boil again, cover, and bake in a slow oven for about 45 minutes, basting from time to time.

Drain the grenadins and lay them on a dish. Strain the juices and pour a few tablespoons over the grenadins. Brown in the oven, basting frequently. Dilute the cooking juices in the pan with clear veal stock or consommé. Scrape the sides of the pan and stir the fragments into the gravy. Strain through a fine sieve. Remove fat and boil down if necessary. Pour over the grenadins.

Serve braised veal grenadins with all the garnishes suitable for veal chops, escalopes, fillet of veal or fricandeaux (q.v.). Grenadins are, in fact, small fricandeaux.

Among the garnishes best suited to this dish are bouquetière, bourgeoise, glazed carrots, braised celery, braised endive, chicory, spinach, fermière, jardinière, braised lettuce, macédoine, nivernaise, green peas, printanière, purée of fresh or dried vegetables, quartered artichokes, or artichoke hearts. (See GARNISHES.)

Poultry grenadins. GRENADINS DE VOLAILLE – The term grenadin includes slices of white meat of large poultry, especially turkey. This dish is prepared in the same way as Braised veal grenadins.

GRÉSILLER – To shrink or shrivel by heating. The real meaning of the word grésiller is to patter. It is applied also to foodstuffs which in cooking make a pattering sound like falling hail.

GRIBICHE – Cold sauce served with cold fish. It is an oily sauce made of the yolks of hard-boiled eggs, oil and vinegar, seasoned with mustard. To this mixture add capers, chopped gherkins, parsley, chervil and tarragon, and whites of hard-boiled eggs cut into short matchsticks. (See SAUCE, Cold sauces.)

GRIDIRON, GRILL. GRIL – Kitchen implement with a long history. It is a contemporary of the spit. The cooking of meat on a spit is far older than the preparation of foodstuffs in earthenware or bronze containers.

The metal gridiron was one of the first implements used by our remote ancestors for cooking meat.

GRIGNON – Piece of dry bread, baked very hard, which can be nibbled (grignoter). The name grignon is also given to the end crust of a long or round loaf. It is also called quignon.

GRILLARDIN – Name given by the French to the chef who, in large restaurants, is concerned entirely with the grilling (U.S. broiling) of various types of food.

GRILLETES – Old name for thin slices of fresh pork fried in butter or fat.

GRILLING (U.S. BROILING). GRILLADE – Method of cooking food by putting it on a gridiron over embers, or, in modern cookers, under a grill.

In former times grilling was done on an open wood or charcoal fire. Nowadays, food is grilled by gas or electricity.

GRILSE. SAUMONEAU – Name for a young salmon that has been only once to sea. Before that the salmon is called a parn.

All methods of preparation given for salmon (q.v.) are applicable to the young fish.

GRIMOD DE LA REYNIÈRE – Famous gastronome, born in Paris in 1758, died in 1838. His father, who was Farmer General, was himself the son of a pork butcher.

Grimod de la Reynière, barrister-at-law, did not devote much time to his profession. He preferred sessions at the table to sessions in the Palace of Justice. The first edition of his Manuel des Amphitryons came out in 1808, and the series Almanacs des Gourmands were published between 1803 and 1812. These books have since been republished several times and form an integral part of every gastronome's library.

'Grimod de la Reynière,' says Carême, 'was familiar with the ancien régime, and lived through the horrors of the Revolution. After the reign of terror, he considered it both necessary and wise to write his Manuel des Amphitryons, so as to instruct the new rich in the conventions and proprieties which they must observe.

'His Almanac des Gourmands is full of flashes of gastronomy and wit. Doubtless, he had some good influence on the science of cookery, but he played no part in the rapid progress which modern cookery has made since the renaissance of the art.'

Grimod de la Reynière set up a 'jury of tasters', who awarded a kind of academic certificate called légitimation to various dishes.

(1758–1838)

This jury of tasters met at intervals at the home of the gastronome, who lived in the Champs-Élysées. There, in solemn fashion, they tasted the dishes sent to Grimod de la Reynière by tradesmen who sought publicity by making known to their customers the judgement, always favourable, pronounced by this gastronomic Areopagus.

The jury of tasters, however, had to give up its sittings because some of its judgements aroused protest. Grimod de la Reynière was even accused of interested partiality.

GRIND. ÉGRUGER – To reduce to powder. This term is used especially of sea-salt ground in a mortar or mill.

GRISSINI – Long sticks of hard-baked bread varying in length from 25 to 75 cm. (10 to 30 inches).

Grissini, of Italian origin, can be bought at large bakeries.

GROG – Drink containing rum or some other spirit, lemon, sugar and hot water.

Old Grog was the nickname given to the English admiral Vernon because of the grogg coat he used to wear.

In 1740 he ordered his men to put water in their ration of rum, and thus a new beverage called 'grog' was invented.

GROS-BLANQUET – Variety of pear with a greenish-yellow skin. It is quite sweet, but rather gritty in texture.

GROSSETÊTE – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

GROUSE. TÉTRAS – Game bird of which there are several varieties.

The largest is the capercaillie, a superb creature, with very delicate flesh. Quite common in countries of northern Europe, it is rarely found in France. It is prepared like pheasant or ordinary grouse.

The black grouse, a bird about the size of the pheasant and cooked in the same way, the British red grouse or Scotch grouse, the French gelinotte (hazel grouse or hazel hen), and the ganga or pin-tailed grouse which is found in the south of France and Algeria, all belong to the same family. The last bird, whose flesh is extremely delicate, is the size of a good partridge. It is usually spit-roasted but may be prepared in any way suitable for the gelinotte.

This bird should not be confused with that from the same region called ganga-cata, or gelinotte des Pyrénées, which is equally good to eat, but smaller in size.

All these birds have very good flesh. But they have a pronounced pine flavour, the leg meat in particular, so normally the legs are not served.

In North America there are many species, including ruffed grouse (partridge), blue grouse, sage grouse, sharp-tailed grouse and prairie chicken.

This game is much prized in England and in U.S.A. It is scarcer in France, where it is known as gelinotte (hazel grouse or hazel hen), a bird of much poorer quality than the British or American grouse.

Young grouse is best roasted but may be cooked in the same way as hazel grouse (q.v.).

Marinated grouse (Roman cookery). TÉTRAS MARINÉ – 'Make a good marinade using white wine. After having skinned and cleaned out the bird, marinate it for 3 or 4 days.

'Bard it in bacon fat. Braise it, adding a good mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables lightly cooked in butter, a bouquet garni (q.v.), veal stock and the marinade.

'Allow to cool in its cooking liquid, remove all fat from this to clarify it, then boil it down to the point where it can be put in a border mould. When it is turned out, put the sliced meat of the grouse in the middle.

'Serve with slices of buttered toast.' (Recipe of B. Farrep.)

GRUYÈRE – Valley in the Swiss canton of Fribourg after which Gruyère cheese is named. (See CHEESE.)

GRYPHAEA. GRYPHÉE – Species of mollusc sold commercially under the name of Portuguese oysters.

GUAVA. GOYAVE – Fruit of the guava tree, a bush which grows in the tropical regions of America and Asia.

There are several species of guava, some are pear shaped, others orange shaped. One type is shaped like a fig.

The pulp of the guava is somewhat insipid. It is usually eaten raw, but can be stewed or made into jam, jelly or paste.

GUDGEON. GOUJON – Small fish found on the sandy bottom of the lakes and rivers of Europe. Gudgeon live in shoals. There are various kinds.

The parent species, the common gudgeon, is the one found in large numbers in the rivers of France. Another kind is found in the Somme, and another in the Danube. One species, gremille (pope), is found in almost all French rivers, especially the Seine and the Moselle, and is sometimes called in French, goujonnière or perche goujonnière.

The flesh of the gudgeon is very delicate. It is usually eaten fried, like the smelt.

Gudgeon en manchon. GOUJON EN MANCHON – Coat with egg and breadcrumbs the bodies of the gudgeon, leaving the heads and tails uncoated. Deep fry. These are used as a garnish for braised fish. Other small fish can be sprinkled with breadcrumbs before frying.

GUERBIGNY – See CHEESE.

GUÉRET – See CHEESE.

GUIGNETTE – Name given in some parts of France to the sand piper, a bird of the snipe family.

All recipes for snipe (q.v.) are suitable for this bird. In some parts of France the name guignette is applied to a mollusc, the littorine, found in French coastal waters.

GUINEA FOWL. PINTADE, PINTADEAU – Genus of bird of the Gallinaceae family which includes several species. It is a native of Africa and was known to the Romans, who called it Numidian hen or Carthaginian (Carthage) hen. The flesh of young guinea fowl is delicate and similar to that of pheasant.

Guinea fowl à la languedocienne (Robert Carrier)

The guinea fowl often figures on the menu of banquets and wedding receptions as 'Bohemian pheasant', a name which is somewhat exaggerated.

Guinea poult, which are found in the markets of France towards the end of July, are excellent. They can be prepared in any way suitable for pheasant or partridges.

Fully grown guinea fowls are prepared (hot or cold) in any way suitable for chicken.

Guinea fowl liver. FOIE DE PINTADES – All recipes for chicken livers are suitable for guinea fowl livers. These are also used as an ingredient in stuffings.

Guinea fowl

GUINEA PIG. COCHON D'INDE – Domestic rodent of South American origin. Its flesh is edible, but it is chiefly used for laboratory experiments.

GUINGUET – French expression used to describe mediocre, rather acid wine of low alcoholic content.

GUINGUETTE – Name given to a French suburban place of refreshment with music and dancing. Some etymologists believe that this name is derived from guinguet, a type of grape cultivated in the Paris suburbs. A rather sour wine was made from these grapes and this was mainly drunk in taverns on the outskirts of Paris.

GULL. MOUETTE – Sea-bird whose flesh is leathery with an unpleasant taste, but whose eggs are edible.

GULYAS – See GOULASCH.

GUM. GOMME – Term applied to a number of diverse substances which flow either naturally or by inducement from the stems of certain plants. When mixed with water these substances have adhesive properties. The stems of the plants exude gum when they are punctured by insects or when incisions are made in them.

One of these gums, gum tragacanth, is used in cookery, and also in the preparation of medicinal pastes and in the manufacture of syrup gum.

It is said that some resinous gums were used as condiments by the Romans.

Gum arabic. GOMME ARABIQUE – Product of secretion of various species of acacia trees. It is found in the form of yellowish or reddish fragments, soluble in water, contact with which gives them a viscous consistency. This property renders it useful in pharmaceuticals and cookery for the preparation of mucilages. Gum arabic is the basis of jujube, marshmallow and liquorice paste.

Syrup gum. SIROP DE GOMME – Crush 500 g. (18 oz.) gum arabic and soak for 24 hours in  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) cold water. Add to a syrup made with 2 kg. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  lb., 9 cups) sugar and 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) water boiled to 105°C. (220°F.). Boil the mixture, skim, and filter it when quite cool. Store in bottles.

GURNEAU – French name for a species of gurnet. It is found in the Mediterranean, in British coastal waters and in the Baltic.

All recipes for gurnet (q.v.) are suitable for this fish.

GURNET. GRONDIN – This European fish is often sold in France as red mullet, but erroneously, since though quite delicate in flavour, it cannot be compared with the true red mullet.

The gurnet is called grondin (grunter) in French because of the grunting sound it is said to make when it comes out of the water. It is quite different in shape from the true red mullet.

There are various types of gurnet. Among those to be found in France are the red gurnet, whose scales are a beautiful clear red or rose colour; the cuckoo gurnet, red in colour; the trigle lyre, whose back is a beautiful clear red with silvery and rose-coloured belly and sides; the grey gurnet, grey with whitish spots on back and flanks; the shining gurnet, also called the long-finned gurnet, which is the largest of the species – it can be as much as 60 cm. (24 inches) in length – coloured yellowish pink along the back, pinkish white on the belly. The shining gurnet, when its fins are outspread, has the appearance of a butterfly, with delicately tinted 'wings' ranging from blue to deep purple.

Gurnet is quite good to eat. Its flesh is white and flaky.

All recipes for red mullet (see MULLET) are suitable for gurnet, which can be fried, grilled or cooked in butter à la meunière (q.v.). They can be stewed or cooked in white wine, and they are used in bouillabaisse (q.v.).

GUYENNE – This vast province has been divided into the départements of the Gironde, Dordogne, Lot, Aveyron, Lot-et-Garonne and Tarn-et-Garonne.

The cuisine of this region is dominated by the truffles of Périgord and Lot, and garlic which is used liberally in most of the local dishes.

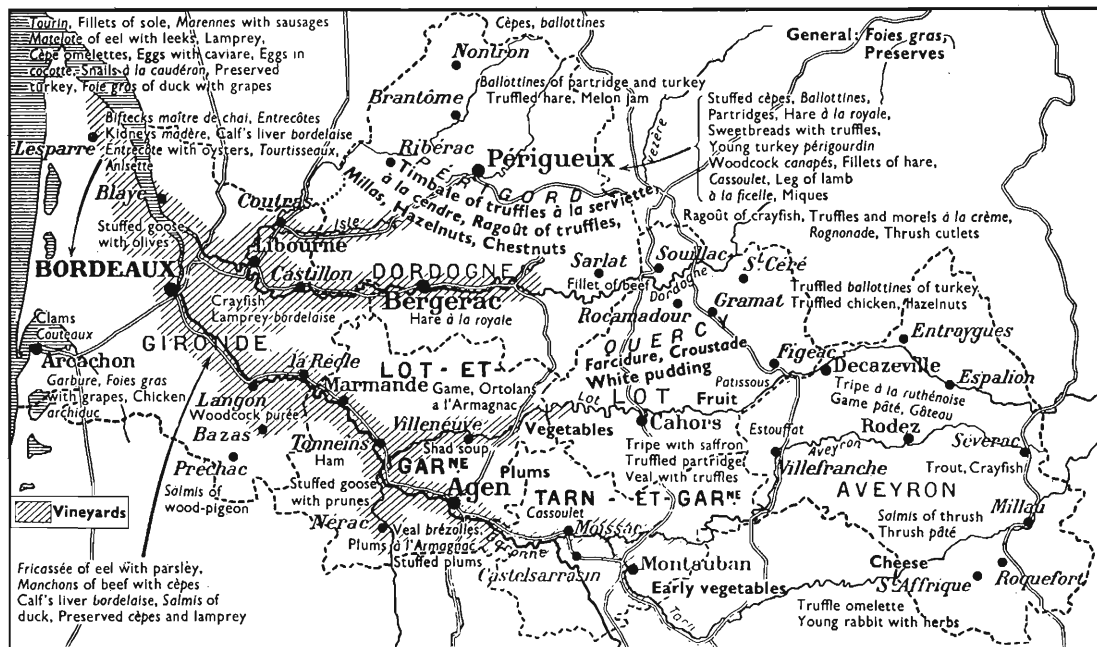

The products of the region include the celebrated Roquefort cheese; the truffles of Périgord and Lot; the geese and duck livers which are potted or made into pâtés; the confit d'oie of Montauban; the lamb of Pauillac; and all the succulent partridge, woodcock and thrush pâtés made almost everywhere here, but especially in the little town of Lomogne, a centre of delicious cooking.

Culinary specialities – Among the special local dishes of Guyenne those deserving of special mention are estouffat of haricot beans; lampreys à la bordelaise; tripe with saffron; tripe à la ruthénoise; leg of lamb à la ficelle; white pudding quercinois; stuffed chicken; potted truffles; cèpes à la bordelaise; millas girondin; Agen prunes; hearth-cake.

The broths and pots-au-feu include the garbure Gasconne and, no less delectable, the chaudeau and the tomato tourin.

Most famous of the fish dishes of Guyenne are matelotes of lampreys and eels and trout à la meunière. Exclusive to this region are oyster sausages; bunting en caisses; old fashioned galimaufry; foie-gras with grapes; jugged mountain hare; tripe à la landaise; leg of lamb à la gasconnade; stuffed chicken; alicuit of goose or chicken; stuffed goose hearts; roast wood pigeon; woodcock salmi, and, the dish extolled by Marcel Prévost, the Christmas estouffat.

Gastronomic map of Guyenne

Among the sweets of the district are tourtisseries, cruchade gasconne and lou pasti. The feuillantines of Gers and the gâteau à la broche must not be forgotten.

We end this list with a brief reference to the excellent red and white wines of the district (see BORDEAUX) and above all to the eau-de-vie of Armagnac (see GASCONY).

GYMNÈTRE – Species of fish which tastes rather like fresh cod.

The gymnètre faux, which is found in the Mediterranean, is about 45 cm. (18 inches) long, flat, silver in colour with red fins.

All recipes for cod (q.v.) are suitable for this fish.

HADDOCK. ÉGLEFIN, AIGLEFIN, AIGREFIN – Sea-fish of the cod family, but smaller than the true cod. This fish is also known in France as égrefin, morue noire (black cod), morue Saint-Pierre and in Newfoundland as âne or ânon.

Fresh haddock is white and delicate. All recipes for cod (q.v.) are suitable for fresh haddock.

Smoked haddock

Smoked haddock is very popular in England and the U.S.A. As soon as it is caught, the fish is split lengthwise, lightly rubbed over with salt, hung by the tail, and left to smoke for 24 hours. Smoked haddock keeps fresh for several days.

Cod and haddock, when they are fresh, lend themselves to a great number of culinary treatments and suitable recipes will be found under BASS, BRILL, EEL, WHITING, TUNNY, TURBOT.

Baked haddock

Baked haddock à l'irlandaise. AIGREFIN AU FOUR À L'IRLANDAISE – Stuff a haddock with suet. Truss in an S-shape and make light incisions on the sides. Put in a buttered baking pan, season with salt and pepper, and moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) Madeira. Cover with a buttered paper and bake in the oven, basting frequently. Untie the fish, arrange on a hot dish and sprinkle with the pan juices.

Serve with Oyster sauce or Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE).

Curried smoked haddock. HADDOCK À L'INDIENNE – Bone, skin and dice the fish. Cook chopped onion in butter and add the haddock. Cook for 5 minutes. Add a fairly thin Curry sauce (see SAUCE). Cover, and simmer for 10 minutes. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Grilled smoked haddock. HADDOCK GRILLÉ – Brush the fish with oil or melted butter and cook slowly under the grill.

Serve with melted butter and boiled potatoes, or with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Smoked haddock with paprika. HADDOCK AU PAPRIKA – Proceed as for Curried haddock, substituting Hungarian sauce (see SAUCE) for curry sauce.

Poached smoked haddock. HADDOCK POCHÉ – Simmer the fish in slightly salted boiling water, without allowing it to boil, for 6 to 10 minutes, according to its size. Haddock can also be poached in milk. Serve with melted butter and boiled potatoes.

HAGGIS (Scottish cookery) – Haggis may be regarded as the national dish of Scotland. When this dish is served at certain large banquets in Scotland, it is accompanied by an escort of pipers.

Here is the recipe given by Alfred Suzanne in his book la Cuisine anglaise.

'To make a haggis, take a sheep's stomach, clean thoroughly and turn inside out.

'Take the heart, liver and lungs of the sheep. Boil all these for 30 minutes in salt water. Take out the offal and mince it very finely, except for part of the liver which must be allowed to get quite cold so that it can be grated.

'Spread the mince on a table and season with salt, pepper, nutmeg, cayenne pepper and chopped onion. Add the grated liver, a handful of oatmeal and 500 g. (18 oz., 4 cups) chopped beef suet. Now fill the stomach with the mixture, a little more than half full, leaving plenty of space at the top to prevent it from bursting during cooking. Add a glassful of good gravy. Prick the haggis here and there with a large needle and sew up the opening. Place in a large pan with plenty of water and boil for 3 hours.

'It sometimes happens that the bladder bursts during cooking and spills out its contents. To avoid this, wrap the haggis in a napkin, as though it were a galantine, before putting it into boiling water.'

Haggis is normally served wrapped in a well-starched napkin and whisky is the traditional drink that goes with it.

HAKE – Sea-fish called merlan (whiting) in Provence, colin (cod) in Paris and saumon blanc (white salmon) on some French menus. Its flesh is tender, white, flaky and easy to digest. When dried, it is called merluiche (stockfish).

All recipes for cod (q.v.) are suitable for hake.

HALBRAN. ALBRAN – Name given to very young wild duck. When a little older it is called duckling, then duck. It is cooked like duck (q.v.).

HALCYON (kingfisher). ALCYON – The name of this bird comes from the Greek alkuon (formed of als, the sea, and kuon, one who nurses its young). According to a Greek legend the halcyon built its nest on the waves of the sea.

This bird, remarkable for its brilliant blue plumage, with varying shades of red on the breast, is the Australian version of our kingfisher, or laughing jackass. From Australia the species has spread to China and Japan.

The halcyons built their nests with the aid of a gelatinous substance secreted during the laying period by their crops. These nests are much esteemed by the Chinese. In their dried state they are imported into Europe and are greatly prized at the best tables, where they are known as birds' nests.

Halibut

HALIBUT. FLÉTAN – Large flat fish found in northern waters. The body is more elongated in shape than other flat fish, the eyes are on the right side, and the mouth is large. A halibut can be as much as 2 m. (6½ feet) long and weighs between 150 and 200 kg. (330 and 440 lb.).

The firm white flesh of halibut is greatly valued as food, and all recipes for brill (q.v.) may be used for this fish.

HALICOT OF MUTTON. HALICOT DE MOUTON – A mutton stew garnished with turnips, potatoes, onions, and, sometimes, with haricot beans. See MUTTON, Haricot or halicot of mutton.

HAM. JAMBON – Strictly, a ham is a leg of pork, salted and smoked. In current usage, however, the term is also applied to the shoulder of pig that is cured in the same fashion. This cut, though excellent, is nevertheless a good deal less delicate than the leg.

In French cookery the term jambon not only means ham but also applies to a leg of fresh pork. This cut can be cooked in a great many ways, either whole or divided into smaller cuts. It is also used as an ingredient for stuffing, and in various manufactured pork products (see PORK). A Ham Fair is held regularly in Paris and several other large French cities. This fair which, in former times, was held during the three days preceding Good Friday, and which was then called Foire du lard (the Bacon Fair), took place in the square in front of Notre-Dame. The canons leased the ground to the butchers and pork butchers. The site was changed several times. In 1813, the fair was transferred to the quai des Grands-Augustins, where it remained until 1832. It was moved to faubourg Saint-Martin, and in 1848 was transferred to the boulevard Bourdon. At the end of the Second Empire it was moved, for the last time, to the boulevard Richard-Lenoir, where it is still held today.

The salting and smoking of pork to produce ham is of French origin. It was the Gauls, great devotees of pig meat and efficient pig breeders, who first became renowned for the salting, smoking and curing of the various cuts of pork.

After salting, the Gauls subjected them for two days to the smoke of certain selected woods. They then rubbed them with oil and vinegar and hung them up, to dry and preserve them. The Gauls ate ham either at the beginning of a meal to sharpen their appetites, or at the end to induce thirst.

Many different kinds of salt and smoked ham are obtainable in France. Almost every region has its own local ham. Among the best known are the jambon de Bayonne, cured at Orthez, but known the world over as jambon de Bayonne. This ham is eaten raw, as an hors-d'œuvre. It is also used in cooking in various ways, but unlike York ham or other lightly smoked hams, it must not be boiled. Jambon de Bayonne is served with eggs cooked in various ways, and it also forms an ingredient of various sauces and ragoûts. The jambon de Toulouse is merely salted and dried. It is eaten raw like the jambon de Bayonne, and is also used in cooking.

There are a large number of salted and smoked hams called in France jambons de campagne. Among these are the hams of Brittany, Morvan, Burgundy, Montagne-Noir (Cévennes), Lorraine, Alsace, Touraine, Limousin, Auvergne, the Vosges, Savoy, etc. Almost all these hams are eaten raw, or may be used in cooking, like the jambon de Toulouse. Some may be boiled like York ham.

French cooking hams, similar to English cooking hams, are jambon blanc or jambon demi-sel, also known as jambon de Paris. This ham, which is either not smoked at all or only very lightly smoked, is sold by all French pork butchers under the name of jambon glacé.

The food value of ham is more or less equivalent to that of meat. However, salted or smoked raw ham is not to be recommended for fragile digestions, and more robust constitutions should not consume too much of it. Cooked ham, on the other hand, may be given to children and invalids. Home-cooked ham is best boiled in plenty of water to remove fats and toxic substances. Boiled ham bought commercially, tinted pink by the addition of potassium nitrate, is better avoided.

American hams (preserved). JAMBONS D'AMÉRIQUE – Excellent hams are cured in the U.S.A. However, almost all American hams exported to Europe, and particularly to France, are cooked and preserved.

English hams. JAMBONS D'ANGLETERRE – English hams are usually described on French menus as York ham, but a distinction must be made between the various methods of processing. This is indicated by their trade mark.

York ham, which is smoked (lightly or heavily), is usually boiled. It is served either hot or cold. When hot, a special sauce is served with it, flavoured with Madeira, sheery, port, etc. York ham can also be boiled and then baked in the oven, covered with brown sugar, spice and cloves.

Raw York ham, thinly sliced and sautéed in butter, is often served with eggs.

Baked York ham

German, Czechoslovakian and Hungarian hams. JAMBONS D'ALLEMAGNE, DE BOHÈME, DE HONGRIE – The best-known is Mainz ham which, like Westphalian ham, is mostly eaten raw, but may also be boiled whole and served before the main course. Other well-known German hams come from Hamburg, Gotha and Stuttgart.

The best Czechoslovakian ham is Prague ham; it is cooked whole, and makes a delicious prelude to the main course. It is served cold. Excellent smoked hams are made in Hungary.

Italian hams. JAMBONS D'ITALIE – The best-known Italian ham is Parma ham. This is usually eaten raw as an hors-d'œuvre and is one of the most delicate of hams. It can be used in cooking, though it must not be boiled, but cut into thin slices or diced and sautéed in butter or fat. Cooked in this way it can be served with eggs, various meat dishes, poultry or risottos.

There are other kinds of Italian ham which are either boiled whole and eaten hot or cold, or used in the same way as Parma ham.

Spanish hams. JAMBONS D'ESPAGNE – Asturias ham is the best-known Spanish ham. It is mild, very delicate in flavour, and is eaten hot or cold after having been boiled. It is also used in cooking like the hams of Bayonne and Toulouse.

Salted and smoked ham. JAMBON DE PORC SALÉ ET FUMÉ – Salted and smoked hams, whether of French or foreign origin, after having been boiled as described below, provide an intermediate course (remove) much prized by connoisseurs. These boiled hams are also served cold.

Boiled and cold hams of various kinds are to be found in all the pork butchers of Paris and the big provincial towns. In these shops are sold, apart from the jambon de Paris (jambon glacé), boiled hams boned and moulded with jelly, smoked hams boiled and cold, boiled rolled hams, Dijon hams, Dijon hams prepared with parsley, and the foreleg hams of Paris, Reims, Strasbourg, Nancy etc.

The curing of ham, which is now a great industry, involves two main operations, salting and smoking. The hams are either salted in brine, or dry salt, or rubbed over with dry salt, saltpetre and sugar and left for three days well covered with this mixture. They are then put into brine, washed, brushed and dried, and finally smoked in special chambers, starting with a light smoke which grows denser as the operation proceeds.

Poaching. Ham should be soaked in cold water for at least 6 hours before cooking. It is then scrubbed, boned at the chump end and put into cold water to cook, without any seasoning or aromatics.

Although ham cooked in this way is sometimes described as 'boiled', it should, in fact, be poached and so as soon as the water boils, reduce the heat and leave to poach, simmering very gently so that the water just shivers. Allow 20 minutes cooking time per 500 g. (1 lb.) of York, Hamburg or Paris ham. Czechoslovakian and Spanish hams require a little less cooking time.

If the ham is to be served cold, leave it to cool in the water in which it was cooked. If it is to be served hot, drain, remove the skin, and glaze.

Cold ham is served with jelly.

Hot ham is served with vegetables, most frequently spinach, and with Madeira or other wine sauce.

Glazing. Having poached the ham as described, remove the skin. Put the ham into a pan, sprinkle with sugar and brown in the oven or under the grill.

The sugar, upon caramelising, forms a light glaze on the surface of the ham, which not only makes its appearance more appetising, but also gives it a good flavour.

The ham can also be glazed by following the method given for braised meats (see CULINARY METHODS).

Jambonnière or braising pan for ham (Larousse)

Braising. Soak the ham as described above and poach very gently, so that boiling is hardly perceptible.

Remove the ham 40 minutes before it is completely cooked. Skin it and put into a braising pan. Add 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Madeira or any other liqueur wine (port, sherry, Frontignan, Lunel, Marsala etc.).

Cover with a lid and cook in the oven for between 45 minutes and 1 hour. Glaze the ham as described above. Arrange on a serving dish and put a paper frill around the knuckle. Garnish as described in the recipe, or serve the garnish and the appropriate sauce separately.

Garnishes and sauces suitable for York and other hams served hot. Alsacienne (Madeira sauce), berichonne (Madeira sauce), brabançonne (Madeira sauce), chipolata (Madeira sauce), braised celery or celeriac (Madeira sauce), glazed cucumbers in big chunks (Madeira sauce), chicory (Madeira sauce), leaf or chopped spinach (Madeira sauce), flamande (demi-glace sauce), hongroise (demi-glace sauce), macédoine

Ham glacé (Robert Carrier)

(demi-glace sauce), nivernaise (demi-glace sauce), noodles with noisette butter (Madeira, sherry or port sauce), garden peas or other green vegetable dressed with butter or cream (Madeira sauce, or wine-flavoured cream sauce), various fresh or dried vegetable purées (demi-glace sauce flavoured with Madeira or other liqueur wine), romaine (Marsala sauce). (See GARNISHES, SAUCE.)

Ham à l'alsacienne I. JAMBON À L'ALSACIENNE – Braise the ham and glaze it as described above. Garnish with braised sauerkraut, Strasbourg sausages and boiled potatoes.

Ham à l'alsacienne II. JAMBON À L'ALSACIENNE – Heat cooked, thinly sliced York ham in a few tablespoons of stock without allowing it to boil. Serve on a foundation of braised sauerkraut.

Garnish with Strasbourg sausages and boiled potatoes.

Ham à la bayonnaise. JAMBON À LA BAYONNAISE – Poach a well de-salted Bayonne ham in water until three quarters cooked. Take out of the pan, remove skin and trim off surplus fat on the surface only.

Put it into a pan and finish braising in Madeira. Glaze and arrange on a long dish. Serve with Rice pilaf (see PILAF), chopped tomatoes, small button mushrooms and little chipolata sausages fried in butter. Serve with Madeira sauce (see SAUCE) based on the braising liquor.

Burgundian ham with parsley (cold). JAMBON PERSILLÉ DE BOURGOGNE – This is an Easter luncheon dish in Burgundy. Wash and desalt the ham. Blanch it thoroughly, drain, skin, and cut into big pieces. Put these into a large pan with 500 g. (18 oz.) sliced veal knuckle, 2 calf's feet, boned, blanched and tied with string, and a big bouquet garni (q.v.) with, in addition to the usual herbs, chervil and tarragon, and 10 peppercorns (tied in a piece of muslin). Season with a little salt. Add enough dry white wine to cover all the meat. Bring to the boil on a high flame, reduce heat, cover, and simmer gently on a low heat, to obtain a very clear stock. This will be used for making the jelly to accompany the ham.

When the ham is well cooked, drain, flake with a fork and put into a salad dish, pressing it down well.

Strain the liquor. Add 1 tablespoonful tarragon vinegar. When it begins to coagulate, add 2 tablespoons (3 table-spoons) chopped parsley. Pour this jelly over the ham. Leave in a cool place until cold. It is advisable to prepare this dish the day before it is required.

Ham in Chambertin. JAMBON AU CHAMBERTIN – Cook a York or Prague ham in water until three quarters done. Drain, trim and skin.

Braise in a liquor based on Chambertin. When cooked, drain the ham and glaze.

Surround with small glazed onions and button mushrooms fried in butter. Strain the braising liquor and pour over the ham.

Cold ham. JAMBON FROID – Poach the ham in water and, if it is to be served whole, leave it to cool in its poaching liquor, then trim, remove skin, and cover with Aspic jelly (see JELLY).

If it is to be moulded, bone it, trim, remove skin, put into a special mould, and leave to cool under a press.

Cold ham mousse. MOUSSE FROIDE DE JAMBON – Pound finely in a mortar 500 g. (18 oz.) cooked lean ham adding 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) cold, thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Rub through a sieve.

Put this purée into a bowl, season, stand it on ice and stir with a wooden spoon for a few minutes, adding, little by little,  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) liquid jelly. Fold in 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) half-whipped cream. Pour into a jelly-lined mould and leave on ice to set.

Turn out onto a dish, or a buttered bread croûton, and garnish with jelly.

Ham mousse

Ham à la crème. JAMBON À LA CRÈME – Cook a York or Prague ham in salted water until two thirds done, skin, and braise in a Madeira mirepoix (q.v.). Drain and glaze.

Boil down the braising liquor by two thirds, and add 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fresh double cream. Boil down sauce by one third, strain, and serve with the ham.

Ham en croûte. JAMBON EN CROÛTE – See Prague ham in pastry à l'ancienne.

Ham glacé
Reine
Pédauque
(Larousse)

Ham glacé Reine Pédauque (cold buffet dish). JAMBON GLACÉ REINE PÉDAUQUE – Cut into thin slices the pope's eye (U.S. eye of the round) of a York ham, poached in Meursault wine and left until cold. Put the slices together again, sandwiching them with layers of Foie gras purée (see PURÉE) mixed with diced truffles, reshaping the ham into its original form. Coat with port-flavoured Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate with truffles, glaze with port-flavoured aspic jelly, and surround with jelly croûtons.

Ham with lettuce, chicory and endives. JAMBON AU LAITUES, AUX ENDIVES À LA CHICORÉE – Braise the ham in Madeira, garnish with halved braised lettuces (or chicory or endive) and serve with Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Ham à la maillot. JAMBON À LA MAILLOT – Desalt the ham, wrap it in a cloth, put in a large braising pan and cover with cold water. Simmer gently.

When the ham is cooked, drain and skin. Put it into a small braising pan with a grid, add  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups)

HAM

Madeira. Cover and simmer for 30 minutes. Glaze. Garnish with glazed carrots cut into balls, French beans, small onions glazed in stock, and braised lettuce. Arrange these vegetables in separate groups and serve with Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Ham in pastry, or ham turnover with foie gras and truffles.

JAMBON EN CHAUSSON, CHAUSSON DE JAMBON AU FOIE GRAS ET TRUFFES – Braise a ham in Madeira, port or sherry. When cooked, take out the pope's eye and the round, trim them, and cut each into 8 or 10 slices of uniform thickness.

Put these on an oval-shaped piece of rolled out Lining paste (see DOUGH) on a foundation of duxelles (q.v.) mixture and chopped truffles, alternating with layers of foie gras tossed in butter, and slivers of truffles. Cover the ham with a layer of duxelles mixture and chopped truffles, put another piece of rolled-out lining paste on top, seal, and pinch up the edges. Brush the top with beaten egg, make a few light incisions and a hole in the middle to allow steam to escape. Bake in a hot oven for about 45 minutes.

Pour a few tablespoons of Port sauce (see SAUCE) through the hole and serve the rest of the sauce separately.

Ham in pastry can be prepared with various garnishes, such as ragoût à la financière, ragoût à la Godard, morels fried in butter, spinach or any other braised vegetable.

Another variation is to place the ham and its garnish on a round piece of pastry, which is then folded over, forming the classic turnover.

Ham pie. PÂTÉ DE JAMBON – Using thin slices of ham, fine forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) and truffles, prepare as Veal and ham pâté (see PÂTÉ).

Prague ham in pastry à l'ancienne. JAMBON DE PRAGUE EN PÂTE À L'ANCIENNE – Poach the ham in water until it is two-thirds done. Drain, skin and glaze.

When cold, put it, glazed side down, on a big piece of rolled-out Lining paste (see DOUGH), spread with a layer of fine mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables which have been softened in butter and mixed with dried duxelles (q.v.) and chopped truffles.

Prague ham in pastry à l'ancienne

Enclose the ham in the pastry and seal the edges. Turn it over and put into a buttered baking tin, sealed side down. Brush the top with beaten egg, and decorate with fancy pieces of pastry. Make a hole in the middle to allow steam to escape and bake in a hot oven for about 45 minutes.

Pour into it a few tablespoons of Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE) through the hole in the middle.

Ham with sauerkraut. JAMBON À LA CHOUCROUTE – The same as Ham à l'alsacienne. Serve with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) or a sauce based on Alsatian wine.

Ham with spinach. JAMBON AUX ÉPINARDS – Braise the ham in Madeira. Serve with leaf spinach cooked in butter, or chopped spinach cooked in stock. Serve with Demi-glace or Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Ham in pastry (Robert Carrier)

York ham à la financière. JAMBON D'YORK À LA FINANCIÈRE – Braise the ham in Madeira. Glaze and surround with Financière garnish (see GARNISHES). Skim off surplus fat from the braising liquor, boil down, strain, and pour over the ham.

HAMBURGER STEAK, (Austro-Hungarian cookery). KEFTEDES – This dish is made from minced beef browned in butter or fat. Similar 'steaks' are made from minced veal, poultry and game. Here is a Hungarian recipe for hamburger steak: 1 kg. (2½ lb.) finely minced lean beef or veal, 10 rashers chopped bacon.

Mix the beef or veal with the bacon and add to it 200 g. (7 oz.) of crustless bread soaked in milk and squeezed out. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg.

When all the ingredients are well mixed, divide into pieces of equal weight. Shape each piece into a steak 7½ cm. (3 inches) in diameter and 2 cm. (¾ inch) thick. Flour, and fry in fat. When they are cooked, dip in concentrated meat stock. Serve with mashed potatoes or other vegetables.

Hamburger steak (German cookery). KEFTEDES DE BOEUF – Proceed as for Hamburger steak (also called à l'allemande) (see BEEF), but leave out the chopped fried onions.

Hamburger steaks à la berlinoise. KEFTEDES DE BOEUF À LA BERLINOISE – Mince finely 300 g. (11 oz.) lean beef and 75 g. (3 oz.) fat bacon or salt pork. Add 75 g. (3 oz.) soft bread soaked in milk and squeezed dry. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg and mix thoroughly.

Divide the mixture into 4 parts. Shape each piece so that it is round and flat. Dip in flour and fry in boiling lard. Brown the steaks well on both sides. Pour Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) over them to serve.

Game hamburger steaks. KEFTEDES DE GIBIER – Remove fat and sinews from the game. Mince finely, adding 1 tablespoon chopped onion browned in butter. Divide into pieces of equal size and pat into little round or oval shapes. Dip in flour and fry in butter. Serve with an appropriate sauce and garnish.

Poultry hamburger steaks. KEFTEDES DE VOLAILLE – Proceed as for Game hamburger steaks, substituting poultry for game.

HAMMERHEAD SHARK. MARTEAU – Type of porbeagle. Its flesh, which is oily and leathery, is salted and eaten in some parts of the world.

HANGING. MORTIFIER – Process for tenderising meat or game by leaving it to hang for a period.

Hang meat on a hook in a cool, well-ventilated, very dry place.

HARE. LIÈVRE – Wild rodent with dark flesh, highly flavoured and excellent to eat. The mountain hare is more delicate than that of the plains.

The male hare is called a buck and the female a doe. In France a young leveret up to 3 months is called a financier; up to 6 months a trois-quarts and at a year a capucin or lièvre fait. Young hares can be recognised by the fact that their ears tear easily and by a little rounded prominence on a bone under the leg joint which disappears as it grows older.

Hare can be eaten fresh, as soon as it is shot, or, if it is left to get cold, two or three days after killing, depending on the time of the year. It must never be eaten 'high'.

How to choose a hare. A hare is always tender in its first year. As it grows older its flesh becomes tough and stringy, but the female is still tender in its second year.

First-year hares can be recognised by their slender paws and by the smoothness of their coat which, in older hares, becomes slightly wavy and shows traces of greying.

In a young hare, the claws, hidden under the fur of the paws, are invisible. With age, the claws grow and project slightly beyond the fur.

French hares. The best are those of Beauce, Brie, Normandy, Champagne and Touraine.

The hares of northern France and Brittany are of inferior quality. This is due to the nature of the soil, which is poor feeding ground for hares.

The hares of Beauce, Brie and Champagne have golden coats, the colour of ripe corn.

The hares of Normandy and Touraine are usually small, with tan coats, darker than those of Beauce, Brie and Champagne.

The hares of Brittany are small, and have very dark tan coats mottled with black.

Many of the hares of southern France are of fine quality, especially those of Périgord and Gascony, though these are seldom to be found on sale in Paris.

English hares. Similar to those from Normandy.

German hares. Larger than the French varieties but inferior in flavour.

Hare à l'allemande. LIÈVRE À L'ALLEMANDE – For this dish the saddle and haunch of the hare are used. Roast the hare in the usual way and pour sour cream into the roasting pan. Strain the sauce through a fine sieve and serve separately. Sometimes this sauce is poured over the hare. (See also Saddle of hare à l'allemande below).

Ballotine of hare (cold). BALLOTTINE DE LIÈVRE – Made of slices of hare, lean ham, pickled tongue, pork fat, foie gras, truffles and hare stuffing, in the same way as Galantine of chicken (see GALANTINE).

Ballottine of hare à la périgourdine (hot). BALLOTTINE DE LIÈVRE À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Bone a young hare. Spread it on a cloth covered with thin slices of pork fat. Season with spiced salt and pour brandy over it. Cover with a layer of game stuffing made from the flesh of a leveret, with chopped truffles added. On top of this stuffing put alternate thin strips of hare, cut from the thighs and browned in butter, strips of foie gras and slices of truffles. Season and pour brandy over these ingredients. Cover with a layer of à gratin game stuffing (see FORCEMEAT). Fold the hare into a roll and tie with string. Braise it in a Madeira braising stock made from shin of veal, the bones and trimmings of the hare and the leveret, and the usual pot vegetables. Cook for 1½ hours. Drain the hare and remove the string. Brown in the oven. Boil down the braising liquor, strain, add shredded truffles and pour over the ballottine.

Civet of hare. CIVET DE LIÈVRE – Skin and draw a young hare. Collect the blood and put it aside with the liver, removing the gall bladder.

Joint the hare, cutting the body into 3 or 4 pieces. Put these in a dish, season with salt, pepper, thyme and powdered bay leaf. Add a sliced onion. Moisten with 2 or 3 tablespoons oil and 1 tablespoon brandy. Leave the hare in this marinade for 3 hours.

For a medium-sized hare parboil and then brown in butter 200 g. (7 oz.) lean bacon, cut into squares. Remove from the pan and, in the same butter, brown 2 quartered onions. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour. Cook, stirring with a wooden spoon until the flour is a golden colour.

Add the pieces of hare, well dried. Brown them in the roux, stirring. Moisten with enough red wine just to cover the hare. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.), to which has been added a clove of garlic. Cover the pan and simmer slowly for 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Drain the pieces of hare. Scrape off any fragments of skin or bone clinging to them. Clean out the saucepan and put in the hare. Add the fried bacon, 24 small braised onions and 24 small mushrooms tossed in butter. Add the marinade to the cooking stock. Strain and pour over the hare. Cover the pan and cook in a moderate oven for about 45 minutes.

A few minutes before serving, add the chopped liver to the civet. Thicken the sauce with the hare's blood mixed with 3 or 4 tablespoons fresh cream.

Garnish with slices of bread cut into the shape of hearts, fried in butter.

Civet of hare au chaudron. CIVET DE LIÈVRE AU CHAUDRON – Prepared in the same way as Civet of hare, except that the hare is cooked in a pot hanging from a hook in the chimney of an open wood fire. Also, the sauce is thickened with kneaded butter and flour – 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour for a young hare.

Garnish with blanched, coarsely diced belly of pork browned in butter, and small onions.

Civet of hare à la flamande. CIVET DE LIÈVRE À LA FLAMANDE – Brown pieces of hare in butter. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour, and cook for a few seconds, stirring with a wooden spoon.

Moisten with 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) red wine to which has been added the liver rubbed through a sieve, the blood, and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) vinegar. Season with salt and pepper. Add 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) brown sugar and a large bouquet garni (q.v.). Cover, and cook for 12 minutes. Add 4 onions finely sliced and tossed in butter. Complete the cooking in the oven, keeping the pan covered.

When the pieces of hare are cooked, drain, dry, and put them in a frying pan. Sieve the sauce with the onions, pour over the hare and simmer for a few minutes.

Surround the civet with slices of bread cut into the shape of hearts, fried in butter and spread with redcurrant jelly.

Civet of hare à la lyonnaise. CIVET DE LIÈVRE À LA LYONNAISE – Proceed as for ordinary Civet of hare, replacing the mushrooms by chestnuts cooked in stock and browned.

Hare cutlets. CÔTELETTES DE LIÈVRE – There are three different ways of preparing hare cutlets.

1. Make a croquette forcemeat using scraps of hare, mushrooms and truffles, blended with a thick brown or white sauce. Leave to cool. Shape into cutlets, and cook in clarified butter. Serve with a game sauce.

2. Chop finely the raw flesh of a hare. Add a quarter of its weight of bread, soaked and squeezed dry, and the same quantity of butter. Season well. Shape the mixture into cutlets. Flour them and fry in clarified butter.

Serve with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock.

3. Using raw hare, make a forcemeat with bread boiled to a pulp, and butter. Fill buttered cutlet moulds and poach. Serve on pieces of bread fried in butter. Garnish to taste. Pour over them a brown or white sauce based on concentrated game stock.

Fillets of hare. FILETS DE LIÈVRE – Fillet a raw saddle of hare so that the meat comes away in long slices. Remove the tendons. Interlard with best lardons. Season and put the fillets in a baking dish. Pour melted butter and a little brandy over them and bake in a moderate oven.

Serve each fillet on a slice of bread fried in butter. Garnish according to the recipe used. Mask with a sauce suitable for ground game.

The filets mignons, the slender strips of meat inside the saddle, can be prepared in the same way as the larger fillets. Usually, however, they are left with the larger fillets. Garnishes and sauces for Saddle of hare are suitable for fillets.

In some restaurants, special entrées are made with fillets of hare. They are folded into crescent shapes and cooked as indicated above. They are then presented on a foundation of Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) made from the remaining meat of the hare, and served with garnishes such as Financière, Périgourdine, Rossini, etc. (see GARNISHES). All these entrées, which are in the realm of grande cuisine, are served with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE), based on concentrated stock made from the bones and trimmings of the hare.

Fillets of hare en chaud-froid. FILETS DE LIÈVRE EN CHAUD-FROID – Stud the fillets with truffles. Fold into the shape of crescents. Simmer in Madeira and leave to cool. Mask with a brown or white Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated stock.

Decorate with truffles, the whites of hard-boiled eggs or other garnish. Glaze with jelly and pour over clear jelly flavoured with Madeira or some other heavy wine.

Fillets of hare in cream. FILETS DE LIÈVRE À LA CRÈME – Interlard the fillets. Steep them for 1 hour in a marinade of brandy, oil, salt, pepper and spices. Proceed as for Saddle of hare à l'allemande (q.v.).

Fillets of hare à la Lucullus. FILETS DE LIÈVRE À LA LUCULLUS – Decorate the fillets of hare with pickled tongue and truffles cut in the shape of cocks' combs and dipped in white of egg. Fold them into crescent shapes and simmer gently in brandy and butter.

Drain the fillets. Arrange them in a flaky pastry crust filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of truffles and foie gras blended with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock.

Fillets of hare sautéed with truffles. FILETS DE LIÈVRE SAUTÉS AUX TRUFFES – Cut the fillets into slices. Season, and brown them in butter, taking care that they keep their pinkish colour.

Drain. Toss 12 thick strips of truffle in the cooking butter, so that they are barely cooked. Put these on the slices of hare. Pour a little Madeira into the cooking pan and add a few tablespoons Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock. Pour over the pieces of hare.

Pâté of hare. PÂTÉ DE LIÈVRE – Bone a hare. Set aside the breast meat, the filets mignons and the loins. Remove the gristle from these parts and interlard them with best lardons. Season with Spiced salt (see SALT). Steep in a brandy marinade, adding equal quantities of fine strips of fresh ham (not smoked), fresh pork fat and quartered truffles.

Make a forcemeat with the rest of the meat as described in the recipe for Game forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Rub through a sieve. Bind with the hare's blood.

Grease a hinged mould with butter. Line with Pastry dough (see PASTRY). Cover the dough with thin slices of larding bacon. Line the bottom and sides with a layer of hare forcemeat. Alternate the meats, truffles, etc. on this foundation of forcemeat.

Cover with a layer of forcemeat. Continue to fill the mould with alternate layers of meat and forcemeat, finishing with a layer of forcemeat. Cover with a thin slice of pork fat. Put a layer of rolled-out pastry on top, pressing the edges of the dough together to seal. Flute the edges. Decorate the top with dough motifs and make a hole in the middle to allow the steam to escape during baking. Brush with beaten egg.

Bake in the oven, allowing 15 to 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) Leave the pâté to cool in the mould. When it is cold pour a few tablespoons of Madeira-flavoured meat jelly into it. If the pâté is to be kept for any length of time, substitute a mixture of butter and lard for the jelly.

Hare pâté must be made at least 24 hours before serving.

Potted hare. TERRINE DE LIÈVRE – Made from strips of hare, pork fat, foie gras, truffles and hare stuffing, in the same way as Potted duck (see TERRINE).

Roast legs of hare. CUISSES DE LIÈVRE RÔTIES – Remove the tendons from a hare's legs. Stud with best larding bacon to form rosettes, and roast them. Serve with Poivrade sauce

(see SAUCE) and Chestnut purée (see CHESTNUT).

All recipes for saddle of hare are suitable for the legs.

Saddle of hare. RÂBLE DE LIÈVRE – For a baron of hare the whole body of the hare from the base of the neck to the tail is used; but for the saddle alone, the portion of the trunk which ends at the top of the thigh is served.

This is one of the most delicate parts of the hare. Before cooking it remove all the thin membrane which covers the flesh.

The saddle is barded with a thin slice of pork fat or studded with truffles.

Saddle of hare is generally roasted and served with Poivrade sauce (see SAUCE) and Chestnut purée (see CHESTNUT), which are served separately.

Saddle of hare à l'allemande. RÂBLE DE LIÈVRE À L'ALLEMANDE – Interlard the saddle with best lardoons. Steep for 2 hours in a raw marinade (q.v.).

Put the marinated vegetables in a roasting pan. Dry the saddle of hare and lay it on top. Roast in a hot oven. When the saddle is almost cooked, take out the vegetables. Pour the marinade over the hare and add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) cream.

Place the saddle on serving dish, squeeze some lemon into the cream sauce, strain, and pour it over the hare. Serve with redcurrant jelly or unsweetened apple sauce.

Saddle of hare au chambertin. RÂBLE DE LIÈVRE AU CHAMBERTIN – Interlard the saddle. Roast in the oven, taking care that it retains its pinkish colour.

Fry a slice of bread and spread it with à gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Lay the saddle on top. Garnish with mushrooms cooked in butter, small strips of belly of pork, parboiled and fried in butter, and truffles cut into thick strips. Mask with Chambertin sauce (see SAUCE), to which the pan juices, diluted with red wine, have been added.

Saddle of hare, roast. RÂBLE DE LIÈVRE RÔTI – Interlard the saddle. Roast in a hot oven for 18 to 20 minutes, or on a spit, allowing an extra 2 to 5 minutes.

Garnish with a bunch of watercress and half a lemon. Make a border of alternate slices of lemon and beetroot cut with a fluted knife. Serve with the diluted cooking juices or a thin Poivrade sauce (see SAUCE).

Hare soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE LIÈVRE – Made with hare in the same way as Chicken soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ).

17th century terrine for preparing hare à la royale

Stuffed hare à la périgourdine or à la royale (Périgord cookery). LIÈVRE FARCI À LA PÉRIGOURDINE, À LA ROYALE – In the Périgord region this dish bears the high-sounding title of lièvre à la royale.

When drawing the hare, collect all the blood and set it aside to bind the stuffing, which will be used later.

Crush the paws of the hare and remove the tendons. Interlard the fillets and legs with best lardoons.

Chop the liver, heart and lungs. Add to this 200 g. (7 oz.) raw goose foie gras and 100 g. (4 oz.) fresh pork fat, 100 g. (4 oz.) bread soaked in stock and squeezed dry, 1 tablespoon chopped onion cooked very slowly in butter until tender and left to cool, a very little pounded garlic, 150 g. (5 oz.) chopped truffles and a pinch of chopped parsley. Bind this stuffing with the blood of the hare. Season well.

Stuff the hare with this mixture. Sew up the skin so as to hold the stuffing in and truss the hare. Braise in a little white wine for about 2 hours, basting frequently. Brown the hare in the oven. Drain and untie it. Add to the braising stock a few tablespoons Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Armagnac. Strain, and add 150 g. (5 oz.) shredded or diced truffles. Pour this sauce over the hare.

This dish is often braised in red wine.

Stuffed hare à la périgourdine (cold). LIÈVRE ÉTOFFÉ À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Bone a hare, slitting it along the back before drawing it, so that the skin of the belly remains intact. Draw it and cut off the legs and shoulders.

Set aside the liver, heart, kidneys and blood. Keep the blood in a bowl, with 1 tablespoon vinegar to prevent it from clotting.

Using the boned meat of the thighs and shoulders, some lean veal, fresh pork and pork fat, make a Game forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Add to this a quarter of its weight of à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT), made from the liver, heart and kidneys of the hare with an equal quantity of raw foie gras. Bind with 2 eggs. Season well. Add spices and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy.

Season the hare with Spiced salt (see SALT) and sprinkle with a little brandy. Put a layer of stuffing on top. In the middle of the stuffing lay alternate thin strips of lean veal browned in butter, thin strips of foie gras seasoned with spiced salt and moistened with brandy, lardoons of pork fat (or blanched salt pork) and pieces of truffle. Cover with a layer of stuffing. Add further layers of meat and stuffing.

Fold the hare into shape and sew it up. Wrap it in a cloth and tie it in the shape of a ballotine (q.v.). Cook in a strong game stock flavoured with Madeira. This stock should be prepared in advance, using the bones and trimmings of the hare, a knuckle of veal, fresh pork skin (or bacon rinds) and a boned and blanched calf's foot.

Simmer the hare very gently for about 1½ hours. When it is cooked, drain and unwrap it, then put it back in the cloth, wrapping it tightly. Cool under a weight. Next day, unwrap the hare. Glaze with jelly. Surround with jelly croûtons.

Stuffed hare à la périgourdine en cabessal or chabessal. LIÈVRE FARCI À LA PÉRIGOURDINE EN CABESSAL, CHABESSAL – Stuff a hare with fillet of veal, fresh pork and ham, seasoned with salt, pepper, spices, shallots and garlic. Sew up the skin. Bard the hare and braise in red wine. Tied into a ring, the hare is said to be en cabessal or chabessal. (The cabessal was the folded ring of cloth which women wore on their heads to support pails or jars of water.)

Bone the braised hare. Pound the liver with garlic and blend it into the sauce. Add the hare's blood and a little vinegar.

This method of preparing hare or leveret is popular in Périgord, and in the Aveyron region.

HARICOT OF MUTTON. HARICOT DE MOUTON – Mutton stew made with turnips and potatoes. (See MUTTON.)

HASH. HACHIS – A hash is usually made from left-overs of scraps of beef, mutton, pork, veal, poultry, fish or shell-fish, and is prepared in various ways.

Dice the meat very small, rather than mince it. In this way, it will taste better and look more appetizing. French hashes are usually blended with white or brown sauces. Hashes made from left-overs of roast or pot-roasted meat must not boil after the sauce has been added, but should only be warmed up over a low flame. Hashes made from boiled or braised meat should simmer on the stove for a time.

Hashes are piled inside a border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES), or sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned, or served in a border of pilaf or risotto.

Sometimes hash is served in a pie dish as a garnish with hard-boiled, poached or coddled eggs.

Boiled beef hash I. HACHIS DE BOEUF – Dice very finely 500 g. (18 oz., 4 cups) boiled beef scraps. Bind with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), cover and bring to the boil. Cook in the oven for 25 minutes. Stir from time to time and add a few tablespoons demi-glace if the sauce appears too thick.

Boiled beef hash II. HACHIS DE BOEUF – Slowly cook 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion in 1 tablespoon butter until very tender. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon flour. Brown. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) veal stock, season and bring to the boil, stirring all the time. Simmer for 15 minutes.

Dice the boiled beef very finely and add to the mixture. Proceed as indicated in the previous recipe.

Curried beef hash I. HACHIS DE BOEUF À L'INDIENNE – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below). Bind the diced meat with Curry sauce (see SAUCE). Serve in a border of rice. Serve with curry sauce.

Curried beef hash II. HACHIS DE BOEUF À L'INDIENNE – Cook 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion in 1 tablespoon butter until very tender. Sprinkle with 1 teaspoon curry powder and 1 tablespoon flour. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white stock or broth. Mix well. Cook for 15 minutes.

Add the finely diced beef. Serve in a border of rice with Curry sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef hash with herbs. HACHIS DE BOEUF AUX FINES HERBES – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below). Just before serving sprinkle with 1 tablespoon of chopped parsley and 1 tablespoon chopped chervil.

Beef hash à la hongroise. HACHIS DE BOEUF À LA HONGROISE – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below). Bind the diced meat with Hungarian sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef hash à l'italienne. HACHIS DE BOEUF À L'ITALIENNE – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below). Bind with Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef hash à la languedocienne. HACHIS DE BOEUF À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below). Add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and a little grated garlic.

Serve on a layer of sliced aubergines sautéed in oil or butter. Smooth the surface of the hash. Surround with a very thick Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and cheese. Pour melted butter over it and brown.

Beef hash à la lyonnaise. HACHIS DE BOEUF À LA LYONNAISE – Proceed as for Beef hash à la languedocienne, binding the diced meat with Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Serve with a border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Decorate the top with fried onion rings.

Beef hash à la parmentier. HACHIS DE BOEUF À LA PARMENTIER – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below). Serve in large, partly scooped-out baked potatoes. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs. Pour melted butter over; brown in oven.

Beef hash with poached eggs. HACHIS DE BOEUF AUX OEUFS POCHÉS – Proceed as for Boiled beef hash II.

Garnish with well-drained poached eggs. If desired, cover with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef hash à la polonaise. HACHIS DE BOEUF À LA POLONAISE – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below). Garnish with poached eggs and Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef hash à la portugaise. HACHIS DE BOEUF À LA PORTUGAISE – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below). Bind with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Cover the bottom of an ovenproof earthenware dish with slices of tomato tossed in butter or oil. Spread the hash over the tomatoes. Cover with a further layer of tomatoes cooked in the same way. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and season with a touch of garlic. Pour melted butter or oil over the top and brown in the oven.

Beef hash with potatoes. HACHIS DE BOEUF EN BORDURE – Proceed as for Roast beef hash (see below).

Pile the hash in a border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and grated cheese. Brush the border with beaten egg, pour on melted butter and brown.

Beef hash with mashed potatoes. HACHIS DE BOEUF À LA PURÉE DE POMMES DE TERRE – Mix 300 g. (11 oz.)  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) finely diced boiled beef with 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) Potato purée (see POTATOES). Season. Arrange in a buttered ovenproof earthenware dish. Cover with a thin layer of the potatoes. Smooth the surface, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and grated cheese, pour melted butter over and brown.

This hash can be prepared in the same way with purée of white or red haricot beans, lentils or split peas.

Roast beef hash. HACHIS DE BOEUF – Dice the beef very finely. Bind with boiling Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Heat in a double saucepan and serve in a pie dish.

Fish hash. HACHIS DE POISSONS – Use finely diced pieces of cooked fish (cod, turbot, brill, sole or salmon). Bind with vegetable-based Velouté, Béchamel, or any other sauce suitable for fish (see SAUCE).

Fish hash is often used as a filling for pastry boats, large or small vol-au-vent (q.v.), tartlets, etc.

Hash of ground game. HACHIS DE GIBIERS DE POIL – Made from left-overs of braised venison, or roast roebuck, deer or wild goat. Bind with a brown stock to which Espagnole sauce with game essence, Demi-glace sauce or Madeira, has been added (see SAUCE).

Hash of winged game. HACHIS DE GIBIERS DE PLUME – Made from left-overs of game, braised, pot-roasted or roast (pheasant, hazel grouse, partridge). These are cooked in white stock which is thickened with Allemande, Béchamel or Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), which has been boiled down with concentrated game stock. They can also be cooked in brown stock, to which Demi-glace, Madeira or Salmi sauce (see SAUCE) are added.

This hash is most commonly used as a filling for vol-au-vent, pies or tartlets, and can also be served on fried bread.

Lobster and shellfish hash. HACHIS DE HOMARD – Made from lobster or any other similar shellfish, finely diced, warmed up and mixed with Velouté, Béchamel or any other sauce suitable for fish and shellfish served hot (see SAUCE). Shellfish hash is used as a filling for pastry boats, large or small vol-au-vent, tartlets, etc.

Mutton or lamb hash. HACHIS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU – Use roast, braised or boiled left-overs of lamb or mutton. All recipes for beef are suitable for mutton or lamb hash.

Pork hash. HACHIS DE PORC – Made from left-overs of roast, braised or boiled pork. Use a suitable recipe for beef hash if a brown sauce is used, or use a white sauce and follow the recipe for Veal hash à l'allemande.

Poultry hash. HACHIS DE VOLAILLE – Use left-over pieces of braised, stewed, pot-roasted or roast poultry. This dish is usually made with a white sauce, as described in the recipe for Veal hash à l'allemande, but it may also be made with brown stock as described in the recipes for beef hash.

Poultry hash à blanc has Allemande, Béchamel, Cream or Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) added. It must be heated in a double saucepan.

Poultry hash, whether a white or brown sauce is used, is often served with poached or coddled eggs. It can be used as a filling for large or small vol-au-vent, tartlets and other pastry cases, and also as a stuffing for artichoke hearts or mushrooms. These are sprinkled with breadcrumbs and browned, and are served as a garnish for main dishes.

Sweetbread (veal or lamb) hash. HACHIS DE RIS DE VEAU, D'AGNEAU – This can be made with a white or brown sauce. Dice the sweetbreads very small and proceed as for veal or poultry hash.

Veal hash. HACHIS DE VEAU – Left-over pieces of braised, stewed, pot-roasted or roast veal can be prepared in a brown sauce like a beef hash or in a white sauce as below.

Veal hash à l'allemande. HACHIS DE VEAU À L'ALLEMANDE – Dice the veal very finely. Bind with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Heat in a double saucepan.

Serve in a pie dish or, if desired, in a pie crust or vol-au-vent.

Veal hash à la béchamel. HACHIS DE VEAU À LA BÉCHAMEL – Proceed as for Veal hash à l'allemande, using Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Veal hash with cream sauce. HACHIS DE VEAU À LA CRÈME – Proceed as for Veal hash à l'allemande (q.v.), using Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Veal hash à la Mornay. HACHIS DE VEAU MORNAY – Bind the hash with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Serve in a border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour on melted butter, and brown.

HÂTEREAU – Old French word for little balls of pork liver, similar to gayettes (q.v.).

Nowadays, this is the name given to a hot hors-d'œuvre or a light main course of small pieces of food, dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and fried, skewered and coated with a sauce.

HATTELLE or HÂTTELETTE – Old French words for small birds, giblets, etc., roasted on skewers. It is derived from hâtelet or attelet (skewer).

HAUNCH. CIMIER – Hindquarters of the ox and of certain wild animals. This word is applied particularly to deer.

For detailed recipes see ROEBUCK or VENISON.

The French also use the words gigue and cuissot to describe haunch of game.

HAUT-BRION – Bordeaux wine of great repute. The Château Haut-Brion, in the Pessac commune, is in the Graves and not the Médoc district. According to the list drawn up in 1855 by the Bordeaux Chamber of Commerce, this is the only Graves wine given a 'first growth' classification. The other first growth Bordeaux wines are Château-Lafite, Château-Margaux, and Château-Latour.

HAWFINCH. GROS-BEC – European seed-eating bird. It is known in France as gros-bec, casse-noix or pinson royal. It is usually roasted.

HAWKSBILL TURTLE. CARET – Aquatic tortoise, native of the warm American and Indian seas. It furnishes the valuable tortoiseshell of commerce; its flesh is not worth eating but its eggs are highly esteemed.

HAY BOX or FUELLESS COOKER. MARMITE NORVÉGIENNE – An ordinary pot, when its contents have been brought to the boil, is enclosed in an insulating box, embedded in materials which are poor heat conductors. In this way, the temperature drops very slowly, remaining at 70°C. (158°F.) even after five or six hours or, with the most up-to-date equipment, even longer. In this way, food can be cooked without supervision and without the use of fuel once it has been brought to the boil.

HAZEL GROUSE. GELINOTTE – Bird also known as wood grouse and ruffed grouse. Hazel grouse lives in woods. There are two species, one a native of Europe, the other of Asia. The common hazel grouse, which is on sale in France during the winter months, is a bird about the size of a partridge, whose plumage, reddish in colour, is speckled with brown, black, white and grey.

Hazel grouse

The hazel grouse, which was once very common in France, especially in Alsace, the Ardennes and the Pyrénées, is rarer nowadays, and the greater number of hazel grouse sold in France come from Russia and are frozen. The best come from Vologda, Archangel and Kazan.

The meat is white and tender, but tastes rather strongly of fir cones, which some people find unpleasant. This flavour can be made less strong by soaking the bird in milk for some time before cooking.

All the recipes given for partridge (q.v.) are suitable for hazel grouse.

Hazel grouse à l'allemande. GELINOTTE À L'ALLEMANDE – Truss a hazel grouse. Season. Brown the bird in 1 tablespoon butter in a covered saucepan. When it is three-parts cooked, drain, remove the breasts and cut them into thin strips. Put them back on the bird, taking care to restore it to its original shape.

Cover the hazel grouse with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with sour cream. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs, and pour on a little melted butter. Let it brown a little in the oven. Serve with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Casserole of hazel grouse à la polonaise. GELINOTTE EN CASSEROLE À LA POLONAISE – Stuff the hazel grouse with à gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) flavoured with 1 or 2 crushed juniper berries. Truss. Cook in butter in an earthenware casserole. After removing the string, pour over it 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) game stock or concentrated thickened veal stock and a little lemon juice. Add browned melted butter with a handful of freshly grated breadcrumbs fried in it.

Chaud-froid of hazel grouse. GELINOTTE EN CHAUD-FROID – Prepared in white or brown stock, as for Chaud-froid of partridge (see PARTRIDGE).

Hazel grouse à la crème. GELINOTTE À LA CRÈME – Wrap larding bacon round the hazel grouse and truss it. To lessen the taste of fir cones, soak it for 1 hour in milk before cooking.

Brown the bird in 1 tablespoon butter heated in a flame-proof earthenware casserole. Put the casserole in the oven, uncovered. Cook in a hot oven (220°C., 425°F., Gas Mark 7), basting frequently, for about 18 minutes.

HAZELNUT

Remove the bird from the casserole, take off the string and larding bacon, and put it back in the casserole. Pour over it 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fresh thick cream. Complete the cooking in a moderate oven (160°C., 325°F., Gas Mark 3), basting frequently.

Grilled hazel grouse. GELINOTTE GRILLÉE – Slit the hazel grouse along the back. Open it and remove most of the small bones. Gently flatten the bird, season it with salt and paprika, brush with melted butter, cover it all over with freshly grated breadcrumbs and cook under the grill on a gentle heat. Brown well on all sides.

Garnish with watercress and surround with a border of half-slices of lemon and slices of gherkin.

Serve either with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), with Diable sauce (see SAUCE) or with any sauce suitable for grilled poultry and wildfowl.

Hazel grouse à la hongroise. GELINOTTE À LA HONGROISE – Cook 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion seasoned with paprika in butter. Put the trussed hazel grouse in a casserole with the onion. Cook in the oven in gentle heat. When the bird is almost cooked, remove the string and put it back in the casserole, pouring over it 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) cream. Season with paprika. Complete the cooking, basting the bird frequently with the cream.

Hazel grouse loaf. PAIN DE GELINOTTE – This is prepared like Partridge loaf (see LOAVES, Winged game loaf).

Hazel grouse mousse, hot or cold. MOUSSE DE GELINOTTE – Made from fillets of hazel grouse in the same way as Quail mousse (see QUAIL).

Pâté of hazel grouse and potted hazel grouse. PÂTÉ, TERRINE DE GELINOTTE – Pâtés of hazel grouse or potted hazel grouse are prepared in the same way as pâtés of partridge and potted partridges (see PARTRIDGE).

Roast hazel grouse. GELINOTTE RÔTIE – Wrap the bird in larding bacon and truss. Cook in a hot oven for 15 to 18 minutes, and on the spit for 18 to 20 minutes. Add a little water to the roasting pan to make a gravy. Serve with the bird.

In England, bread sauce, fried breadcrumbs and potato crisps are usually served with this game.

Salmi of hazel grouse. GELINOTTE EN SALMIS – Prepared in the same way as Salmi of woodcock (see WOODCOCK).

Suprêmes of hazel grouse. SUPRÊMES DE GELINOTTE – Remove the breasts from an uncooked hazel grouse. Trim and bone them. Flatten them carefully, season with salt and pepper, and cook in butter. Lay them on a dish, garnish as indicated in the appropriate recipe, and serve with the sauce recommended.

All recipes given for cooking and serving suprêmes of chicken and game birds are suitable for suprêmes of hazel grouse.

HAZELNUT. NOISETTE – Fruit of the hazelnut or cobnut bush, which grows all over Europe. This nut is rich in oil and pleasant to taste. Hazelnuts are used in confectionery. Cultivated hazelnuts are called filberts.

Hazelnut butter – See BUTTER, Compound butters.

HEADY. CAPITEUX – Applied to wines which go to one's head, that is, wines which are rich in alcohol.

HEART. COEUR – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

HEARTH-CAKE. FOUACE – Old form of pastry like a galette of fine wheaten flour. It is made of unleavened dough and was originally baked under the ashes in the hearth. Hearth-cake is made in all the provinces of France.

Hearth-cake makers from Lerné have acquired a universal reputation, thanks to the novel Gargantua. In the sixteenth century the guild of hearth-cake makers consisted largely of inhabitants of the market town of Lerné. In almost all the houses there was an oven to cook the hearth-cakes. Some of these ovens, hewn in the rocks, still exist, going back to the eleventh century.

The fashion for Lerné hearth-cakes, of which the peasants from Chinonais were so fond, continued until the end of the eighteenth century.

E. Johanneau, who published an edition of the works of Rabelais with interesting commentaries, tells of his trip to Lerné in September 1821.

In this village he was given 'Galettes, called hearth-cakes, which have a high reputation in this part of the country.'

Since 1821, the trade in these cakes has become negligible at Lerné, and soon only their memory will remain. Since they have fallen into such undeserved disfavour, it is well to recall what Rabelais said about them:

'Notez que c'est viande céleste, manger à déjeusner, raisins avec fouache fraische.'

'It is heavenly fare to lunch on grapes and fresh-baked hearth-cakes.'

Hearth-cakes are still made in the Auvergne, but in quite a different way from these famous hearth-cakes.

Auvergne hearth-cakes. FOUACES D'AUVERGNE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) flour, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) yeast, 3 eggs, a small glass Cognac, a few drops orange-flower water, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk.

Method. Work all ingredients together in a bowl. Leave for 12 hours. Set out like a crown on buttered paper and brush with yolk of egg. Bake in moderate oven.

HEDGEHOG. HÉRISSON – Insect-eating mammal, regarded by some people as very good to eat.

HELDER – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

HELVELLE – Type of fungus which grows in Europe in damp grass, or in upland woods at the base of trees, especially fir trees.

Most types of helvelle are edible. They are sometimes called monks' morels, baby morels. The best of them is the crinkled helvelle, which tastes a little like the true morel.

HEMIONE. HÉMIONE – Wild animal found in Asia, akin to the donkey and horse. For suitable recipes, see DONKEY, HORSE.

HEMLOCK. CIGUË – Name of a number of poisonous plants of the Umbelliferae family. The poisonous qualities of some of these plants have been greatly exaggerated. The great hemlock (which might be confused with parsley) is in fact hardly poisonous. It seems improbable that Socrates should have been poisoned with the juice of this plant alone.

The little hemlock is distinguished from parsley and chervil, with which it could be confused, by its thicker and larger leaves which are marbled with black or violet on the lower side and on the edges, and particularly by the unpleasant smell which is released when the leaves are rubbed. Some poisonous effects are attributed to it, but as with the preceding species, its poisonous qualities are exaggerated.

HERB-BENNET. BENOÎTE – The roots of this plant, which gives out a smell of cloves, possess stimulating and tonic properties.

Its yellow leaves, picked before the appearance of the flowers, are sometimes eaten in salad.

HERB-IVY. IVE – Species of chive, used in the flavouring of salads and sauces.

HERBS. HERBES – A large number of aromatic plants used in the kitchen come under the general heading of herbs.

Among the most common are chervil, tarragon, chives and parsley. Herbs are also used as trimmings in salads. (See AROMATIC PLANTS, FINES HERBES.)

Herb broth. POTAGE AUX HERBES – Refreshing soup made with leeks and pot herbs. (See SOUPS.)

Pot vegetables or 'herbs'. HERBES POTAGÈRES – Generally, six vegetables only are included among the pot herbs. They are orach (rarely found), spinach, lettuce, sorrel, sea-kale, beet and purslane. All these vegetables are used in the preparation of soups and broths, but this list is a somewhat arbitrary selection, as there are many other vegetables equally suitable for the pot.

Turtle herbs. HERBES À TORTUE – Mixture of aromatic herbs of which the main ones are basil, marjoram, savory and thyme.

These herbs are used in the flavouring of turtle soup, and also in turtle sauce (see SAUCE, Tortue sauce) which is served with calf's head.

HÈRE – French term for a stag between eighteen months and two years old, from the time bumps appear on its forehead to the time when the antlers are fully formed.

HERMETICAL SEALING. HERMÉTIQUE – When a lid or stopper of a container fits so exactly that the container is rendered airtight, it is said to be hermetically sealed. Casseroles and saucepans can be made almost airtight by using flour-and-water paste to seal them.

HERMITAGE WINE – See ERMITAGE.

HERMIT CRAB. BERNARD-L'ERMITE – This shellfish has one particularly interesting characteristic. Nature having neglected to give it a hard shell except just round the middle, to protect itself from its enemies it creeps into shells of molluscs, abandoned by the rightful owner.

Hermit crab

Alexander Dumas the elder, writing about this crustacean in his Dictionnaire de la cuisine, says 'the Creator, who had started to dress him as a lobster, was disturbed, or became absent-minded in the middle of the job, and finished him dressed as a slug.'

'And so, to protect those parts of its body which are vulnerable and so tempting, as soon as it sees a shell which fits its size, it eats the owner of the shell and proceeds to take its place while it is still warm.'

Hermit crabs can be cooked in the same ways as shrimps (q.v.). Having been taken out of the shell, it is cooked in salted court-bouillon (q.v.) flavoured with thyme and bay leaf. It can also be cooked in sea water.

One can also, after having cleaned the hermit crab, sprinkle it with butter and cook it in its borrowed shell under the grill, or bake it on hot coals.

HERRING. HARENG – the common herring. Fish with bluish scales along its back and silvery sides and belly.

These fish, which are found in the North Sea, are prodigiously fertile. Every year, in March, they migrate from the polar seas to the French Atlantic coastal waters, or the Channel, where they congregate in immense shoals.

The herring fisheries in the Channel extend from Calais to the mouth of the Orne. The fishing season lasts from the middle of October to the end of December. Boulogne can claim to be the real centre of the French herring industry.

The fresh herring is among the most delicately flavoured of fish. It can be cooked in a great many different ways.

Herrings

How to prepare herrings – Dressing of fresh fish. Cut them through the gills, leaving the hard and soft roes. Scale, wash and dry thoroughly. According to the way in which they are to be cooked, slit them along the back or sides, fillet them or, if they are to be poached, braised or grilled, leave them whole.

Kippers and bloaters. Grill or fry them as they are.

Salt herrings. Fillet them. To remove the salt, soak them in milk or a mixture of equal parts of milk and water. Drain, dry and trim them, and cook according to the recipe.

Smoked herrings. Fillet, skin and trim them. Soak, if necessary, to remove salt. Cook according to the recipe.

FRESH HERRINGS. HARENGS FRAIS –

Deville grilled herrings. HARENGS GRILLÉS À LA DIABLE – Slit the herrings along back and sides. Season and coat them with mustard. Sprinkle with white breadcrumbs and oil, and cook slowly under the grill.

Serve with Mustard sauce or Ravigote sauce (see SAUCE).

Fillets of herrings à l'anglaise. FILETS DE HARENGS À L'ANGLAISE – Fillet and trim the herrings. Dip them in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry in boiling fat. Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) mixed with boiled, mashed, soft roes.

Fried herrings. HARENGS FRITS – Slash the herrings along the sides. Dip them in milk and flour and deep-fry in boiling fat. Drain them, and dry in a cloth. Season with salt and garnish with fried parsley and quartered lemons.

Grilled herrings. HARENGS GRILLÉS – Cut, scale and dry the herrings. Slash the sides. Coat them with oil or melted butter. Season and cook slowly under the grill. Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Mustard sauce (see SAUCE) or any other sauce suitable for grilled fish.

Herrings à la boulangère. HARENGS À LA BOULANGÈRE – Grease an oval flameproof earthenware dish liberally with butter. Lay 6 herrings in the dish and sprinkle with salt. Surround with 2 thinly sliced potatoes and 1 chopped onion, which have been lightly cooked in butter.

Season with salt, pepper, a little thyme and powdered bay leaf. Pour 2 to 3 tablespoons melted butter over the dish. Add enough water to cover. Bring to the boil and cook in the oven, basting from time to time. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve in the cooking dish.

Herrings à la meunière. HARENGS À LA MEUNIERE - Proceed as for Fêra à la meunière (see FÉRA).

Herrings in white wine. HARENGS ÉTUVÉS AU VIN BLANC - Cut the herrings into thick slices and put them in a buttered pan. Season with salt. Moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) white wine, season with salt and pepper. Dot with butter cut into small pieces. Bring to the boil over a high flame. Cover, and simmer for 8 to 10 minutes.

Drain the herrings, and place on a dish. Simmer the cooking liquor to evaporate some of the liquid, add a little butter, and pour over the fish.

Marinade of fresh herrings (hors-d'œuvre). HARENGS FRAIS MARINÉS - Steep 12 soft-roed herrings in salt for 6 hours and dry with a cloth. Put a layer of finely sliced onions and carrots in a flameproof earthenware dish with sprigs of parsley and thyme,  $\frac{1}{2}$  bay leaf, a few peppercorns and 1 or 2 cloves. Lay the herrings in the dish.

Pour over a mixture of equal parts of white wine and vinegar, which should not quite cover the fish. Put another layer of sliced onions and carrots on top. Cover the dish with oiled paper. Bring to the boil. When the liquid is bubbling, cover the dish and simmer slowly for 15 minutes.

Leave the herrings to cool in the stock.

Sautéed herrings à la lyonnaise. HARENGS SAUTÉS LYONNAISE - Slash the herrings along the sides. Season and dip in flour. Sauté them on one side in butter. Turn the herrings over and add 3 to 4 tablespoons finely chopped onions, previously lightly fried in butter.

Finish cooking the onions and herrings together and then put the herrings in a dish. Pour the butter and onions over. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. Pour 1 tablespoon of vinegar into the pan and heat in a little butter. Pour this over the fish.

Soft herring roes. LAITANCES DE HARENGS - Remove the soft roes from fresh herrings. Use any recipe indicated for carp soft roes (see SOFT ROES).

SALT HERRINGS. HARENGS SALÉS - In the Boulogne fishing industry herrings are either salted at sea or in port. Salt herrings are processed industrially by the following methods:

When the Boulogne herring fleet trawls in the North Sea from June to October, the trawlers are at sea for long periods at a time and the herrings are salted on board as soon as they are caught. They are put down with alternate layers of salt, in barrels which are then hermetically sealed.

Fishing vessels which operate in the Pas-de-Calais and the Channel ports put into port each day as soon as the nets are hauled in. The fish is transported from the boat to the salting sheds. After it has been mixed with salt in a long wooden trough it is thrown into cement vats. The salt mixes with the moisture from the herrings to form a brine with a salt-density of 25°. The fish must remain steeped in this brine for at least ten days, to ensure its preservation.

SMOKED HERRINGS. HARENGS FUMÉS - There are two ways of smoking fish, 'hot' and 'cold'.

In cold smoking, the fish is hung some way away from the fire and is smoked at a temperature of about 25°C. (77°F.).

In hot smoking, the fish is hung close to the fire and is partially cooked. Cold smoking is carried out almost exclusively in France, notably in Boulogne. The fuel used is always wood, preferably beech, and sawdust. Resinous wood is avoided, as it imparts an unpleasant flavour to the fish.

Hot smoking is scarcely ever used except in the preparation of bucklings, which are much in demand in Alsace.

Smoked herrings are processed in the following way:

The herrings are salted to a greater or lesser degree according to the type of smoked herring required. Pickled smoked herrings must be salted for at least eight days. Slightly salted or mild smoked herrings are made from fresh herrings salted for twenty-four to forty-eight hours. Bloaters are salted for a few hours only.

Once they are salted, the herrings are strung on rods threaded through their gills, and are put to drain on trolleys or racks, then set up in the smoking chimneys. In modern smokeries, the racks are fitted into the chimney, thus avoiding a great deal of handling.

When the herrings are in the chimney, a beechwood fire is lit. This produces a powerful draught, which dries the herrings, and at the same time draws off any excess oil. Next, the fire is damped with beech sawdust and chips. This causes the fire to send off a dense smoke which smokes the herrings and gives them their special flavour.

When the herrings have been sufficiently smoked, they are removed from the chimney and taken to the smokery workshops, where girls sort and grade them, and crate the sound ones according to size and quality.

Generally, very large herrings are crated in twenties, weighing from 4 to 5 kg. (8 $\frac{3}{4}$  to 11 lb.) according to season. Medium herrings are packed in batches of twenty-five, weighing from 3 $\frac{1}{2}$  to 4 kg. (7 $\frac{1}{2}$  to 8 $\frac{3}{4}$  lb.) Small herrings are also packed in batches of twenty-five and weigh from 3 to 3 $\frac{1}{2}$  kg. (6 $\frac{1}{2}$  to 7 $\frac{3}{4}$  lb.). Smoked herrings are also packed in wooden barrels which hold from sixty to a hundred fish, according to size.

Bloaters are made from herrings which are very slightly salted and smoked. They do not keep for any length of time, and should be eaten without delay, like fresh fish.

Kippers are lightly smoked herrings slit from top to bottom and opened out. In recent years, kippers have become very popular in France.

Fillets of fresh and salt herring are very much sought after. Skilled girls cut off the head and tail of the herring, slit it open, bone and skin it. In this way fillets are obtained of which every part can be eaten, and there is no waste. 200 g. (7 oz.) of fillets are packed in little wooden boxes, or parcels of 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) of fillets are made up.

Irish smoked herrings. HARENGS SAURS À L'IRLANDAISE - Wash and dry the herrings. Cut off the heads. Split the fish in half lengthwise and spread them out flat in a deep dish. Cover them with whisky and set light to them. When the whisky has all burnt away and the flame extinguished, the herrings are ready for eating.

Smoked fillets of herring in oil. FILETS DE HARENGS SAURS MARINÉS À L'HUILE - Fillet and trim 24 smoked herrings. Soak them in milk for 2 hours to remove salt. Drain, and dry them in a cloth. Put them in a pie dish in layers, with alternate layers of finely chopped onions, sprigs of thyme and broken-up bay leaves. Place the soft and hard roes of the herrings on top. Cover with olive oil, and leave them to soak for 24 hours.

Smoked fillets of herring with soft roes. FILETS DE HARENGS SAURS AUX LAITANCES - Fillet several smoked, soft-roed herrings. Remove the skin, and bone them as completely as possible. Cut each fillet into strips. Put them in a pan with enough milk almost to cover them. Leave to soak for 30 minutes, or longer if the herrings are very salty.

Rub the soft roes through a sieve, collecting the purée in a bowl underneath. Add 1 teaspoon mustard, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) oil (stirring it in a little at a time), and a little vinegar. Add further seasoning if necessary.

Drain the fillets and dry them in a cloth. Arrange them in hors-d'œuvre dishes. Pour the soft roe sauce over them and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

HIPPOCRAS – Spiced aromatic wine much enjoyed by our ancestors. It was so called because it was filtered through a bag of a type said to be invented by Hippocrates, the great physician who lived in the fifth century B.C.

Properly speaking Hippocras was a type of apéritif similar to the vermouths made nowadays, rather than a table wine. Our forebears, in fact, drank it before meals or, if it was served at table, at the end of the meal.

Arnaud de Villeneuve, famous thirteenth century physician, gives a number of different recipes for the spiced wine. In one recipe he recommends bringing the wine to the boil and putting in it a sachet containing, for 3 litres (5½ pints, 6½ pints) wine, 75 g. (3 oz.) each of the following spices: cubeb, cloves, nutmeg and raisins. Boil the wine until it is reduced by a third of its volume. Add sugar.

In another recipe, the wine is spiced with a mixture of cinnamon, ginger, paradise nuts, cloves, sugar and a pinch of musk.

Hippocras was drunk cooled or even iced whenever possible.

This wine remained popular for a very long time; it was still in fashion in the eighteenth century. Presents of it were made to the king and to foreign nobility.

Here is a more recent recipe for Hippocras:

Put 700 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) sugar in a saucepan with 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) water and the following spices: 4 teaspoons ginger, 2 cloves, ¼ of a nutmeg (ground), 1½ to 2 tablespoons cinnamon and the zest of 2 Seville oranges.

Boil this syrup for a few minutes. Add 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) of old wine (white or red). Leave the mixture on the stove until the surface turns white, then pour it into a large jug and leave to infuse for 30 minutes. Strain through muslin, and bottle.

HIPPOPOTAMUS. HIPPOPOTAME – Large amphibious pachyderm whose flesh is much sought after for food by the African natives.

HOAXES (Gastronomic). SUPERCHERIES GASTRONOMIQUES – By gastronomic hoaxes we mean the substituting of one product for another, or practical jokes and tricks of a similar nature. The various forms of falsification involving fraud are not dealt with here. Hoaxes intended to mystify and surprise are usually harmless; while commercial falsification is downright dishonest. The latter involves adding to or detracting from a wholesome, high-grade product and offering an inferior (or even harmful) one in its place for the purpose of illicit gain.

The gastronomic hoax may take several forms. It may be the jest of a host who takes unfair advantage of his guests before serving them with a proper meal; it may be to test the gastronomic skills of a particular guest in order to amuse the others; it may even be dictated by events with the tacit agreement of all; finally, it may be a practical joke, where the host mystifies everybody by suddenly producing from out of the blue some startling novelty (which may not be all that it appears to be)!

Jest of a host – Grimod de la Reynière sent out invitations for a luncheon party, a so-called 'Economists' luncheon', reserved for specialists in the business and agricultural world. When they arrived, the master of the house announced that he had gathered his guests together so that they could taste all sorts of breads (baked for varying lengths of time) and grain-based beverages.

Knowing the reputation of Grimod de la Reynière's table, the guests had fasted the day before. So one can imagine their surprise at this announcement. However, they set to with a will and greedily swallowed hot, warm and cold bread made variously of barley, wheat, chestnuts, maize, Jerusalem artichokes and potatoes. This they washed down with beer and spirits made from grain. They could hardly swallow another morsel when their host announced that it was time to proceed to the examination of other substances. At this point, a delicate feast was served, which only Grimod de la Reynière could enjoy (not having eaten anything beforehand). He did so in front of the bloated 'economists' who were satiated but not satisfied.

To test the palate and discernment of a guest – The most typical example is the meal served to Monselet. Monselet, famous journalist and staunch defender of gastronomy was considered to be anything but a connoisseur. Chavette, who ran the Brébant restaurant, one day took it into his head to invite Monselet to dinner. The menu was:

Swallow's nest soup

Brill

Izard cutlets

Capercaillie

Wines from Tokay, the Rhine, Cape of Good Hope, etc.

Monselet gave the highest praise to each of these dishes. Joseph Hémard describes how Chavette, looking stern and tragic, pointed an accusing finger at Monselet when the meal had ended:

'You have just, he jeered with a fiendish laugh, publicly admitted your ignorance. The swallow's nest soup was a purée of noodles and kidney beans; the brill was cod cooked on a fine comb (and to illustrate his point he showed him the carefully preserved backbone made of two yellow combs sewn together back to back); the izard cutlets were lamb cutlets marinated in bitters; the capercaillie was a small turkey sprinkled with a glass of absinth! The Clos-Vougeot was made by adding a spoonful of cognac and a flower of violet to an ordinary wine; the Tokay was nothing but a Mâçon with a little punch added; and as for the South African wine, it was simply a Chablis.'

'But . . .', Monselet protested timidly, 'I recognised the perfume of the little Rhine flower . . .'

'Which we obtained with a few drops of essence of thyme.'

Overcome, Monselet lowered his head. Then confronted by the unrestrained laughter of the other guests and their exhortations for penance, for an amende honorable, and other encouragements of that sort, he flung himself to his knees in front of Chavette, hands clasped, and entreated in a trembling voice:

'Mercy! Pray don't betray me! Don't spread this abroad! Save me from dishonour, I beg of you! I have children!'

The soirée probably concluded with much drinking and merriment. At all events, the secret does not seem to have been well kept. No more, in fact, than on yet another occasion when the same Monselet was the guest of the author of the Grand Dictionnaire de cuisine, Joseph Favre. The latter had written:

'Dear Maître, tomorrow at midday, there will be a fork luncheon party at the home of our friend Fulbert Dumonteil. I shall be doing the cooking.'

There was to be a fourth guest, the journalist, novelist and politician, Tony Révillon. The menu was as follows:

Burbot liver en caisse

Saucisson de Lyon – Isigny butter

Salmon escalopes, tartare sauce

New potatoes

Omelette à l'ombre gris

Dessert

It appeared to be quite an ordinary menu, apart from the ambergris.

Monselet started off by being late and lunch was already over when he eventually arrived at 4 o'clock. But, undismayed, the guests began again, for they were as eager as Favre that the plot should succeed. As he savoured the various dishes, Monselet discoursed knowledgeably upon each one. The omelette particularly delighted him; he could not find words enough to do it justice. Finally, Favre was unable to contain himself any longer and showed him the real menu. The result was catastrophic.

We must add that a few days previously the celebrated physiologist, Paul Bert, had received a number of crocodiles from Egypt which he planned to dissect in order to study their nervous system. Favre, who was present at the anatomy, declared that these reptiles were good to eat, so Paul Bert set aside two brains and a piece of tail for himself, while Favre carried away a whole tail, four brains and six eggs just about ready for laying.

And so it was that the crocodiles' brains became burbot livers; the escalopes of crocodile tail became escalopes of salmon; and the omelette of crocodile eggs became omelette à l'ambre gris.

To crown it all, Favre substituted ordinary horsemeat sausage for the saucisson de Lyon, and as for the Isigny butter, it was simply margarine.

Hoaxes dictated by events – At the time of the Continental System, beet sugar took the place of cane sugar (and still does). During the Second World War, grape sugar (which did not require coupons) was preferred to saccharin as a substitute for ordinary sugar. Certainly the most famous period under this heading was the Siege of Paris 1870–1871. Because of the lack of food people had to have recourse to substitutes, a number of which, as presented by the best chefs, gave some pleasant evenings to the fortunate few. The mutton-flavoured rat is famous, but the equally famous elephant pie was, in fact, made with mice. It seemed to be the general opinion that the zoological gardens possessed a whole troop of elephants (instead of only two) to provide the wherewithal to fill all the pies. And it was a bone, a mouse's bone, found in a pie dish that led to the discovery of what lay at the bottom of the affair. But it was very good. And that, after all, was the main thing.

And what about the conciergerie in Paris who, in 1917, raised a few chickens so that he could sell dozens of fresh eggs daily?

The practical joke – The prototype is certainly the 'bouribout', a dish invented comparatively recently by the humorist Henry Monier. He had discussed the dish with some of his journalist colleagues, gastronomes like himself, mentioning that there was no restaurant in Paris where it could be found. A restaurateur upon hearing this declared that he knew how to prepare it. The late Marius Richard described the event in his column, praising the marvellous dish eaten in the same restaurant. And they say that Monier himself was quite astonished to know that the 'bouribout' was nothing but a duck with cherries, otherwise known as canard à la Montmorency.

HOCCO – Type of gallinaceous bird of which there are a dozen species to be found in the equatorial regions of Central America. They are similar to the European turkey and have a delicious white flesh. A certain number are bred in the poultry-runs of France.

In his Souvenirs d'émigration, Brillat-Savarin mentions this kind of wild turkey and remarks upon its succulent flesh. It is cooked in the same way as turkey (q.v.).

HOG-FISH. RASCASSE – Fish oblong in shape and rather high backed, with a large and spiny head. It has spikes, whose prick is poisonous, on its dorsal fins. Its colouring is varied, but mostly greyish with black markings. The Provençal fishermen know the hog-fish under such names as scorpion, crapaud (toad) or diable de mer (sea-devil).

The flesh of the hog-fish is tough, and is not used other than for bouillabaisse or similar fish soups.

HOG'S FAT. PANNE – The fat which covers the pig's kidneys and filets. It is used for making fine forcemeats and black (blood) puddings. Rendered down it produces superior quality lard which in French is called axonge.

HOG'S HEAD CHEESE or PORK BRAWN. FROMAGE DE TÊTE DE PORC – A kind of galantine (q.v.) made from hog's head.

HOLLAND – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.

HOLLANDAISE SAUCE – Name of a hot sauce made with egg yolks and butter. It is served with eggs, fish and vegetables. (See SAUCE.)

HOLLY. HOUX – Evergreen shrubs. In some countries, notably Corsica, holly berries are roasted and powdered and are used to make a drink similar to coffee.

There is an excellent clear holly spirit produced in Alsace.

Butcher's-broom or knee-holly. HOUX-FRÉLON, PETIT-HOUX – European plant used in pharmacy. Its root has diuretic properties. The young shoots of the plant are edible and can be cooked in the same way as asparagus.

HOLLYHOCK. ALCÉE – Plant originating in Lebanon. It has an appreciable nutritive content. A nourishing starch flour is obtained from its roots.

HONEY. MIEL – Sweet liquid manufactured in the sac of the worker bee from the nectar secreted in certain flowers and introduced by the insect into the cells of the hive. Honey was the chief sweet food of ancient times when cane sugar was a rarity.

It is a particularly energising food, providing 300 calories per 100 g. The sugars it contains are completely assimilable by the body. Honey contains hardly any vitamins; only in the proportion of 2 mg. to 100 g.

Several grades of honey are sold commercially:

1. Virgin or superfine honey, extracted from the combs by exposure to the sun or gentle heat.
2. Common or yellow honey, extracted under greater heat.
3. Brown honey, extracted by pressure under heat.

Honey is a very rich and concentrated food. Its effect is similar to that of sugar but it is more readily assimilated. Apart from this, it is medically prescribed or prohibited in the same cases as sugar, and in particular is forbidden to diabetics. It is slightly laxative.

In diet, especially that of children, honey can take the place of sugar in almost all its uses, though there are people who find it indigestible.

Hocco

The quality, consistency, aroma and flavour of honey vary according to the type of flowers most widespread in the region where it is gathered. The best is made from the nectar of labiates (thyme, mother of thyme). Narbonne honey owes its distinctive flavour to the nectar of rosemary. The most highly reputed honey is that of Hymetus in Greece, and in France that of Narbonne, Gâtinais, Champagne and Savoy. Spring honey is superior to autumn honey.

Certain plants impart a distinctive flavour to honey which is sometimes unpleasant (for instance, honey gathered from pines, which has a resinous taste). Honey made from the nectar of poisonous plants such as belladonna can itself be poisonous.

HONGROISE (À LA) – Dishes prepared à la hongroise are cooked in a cream sauce seasoned with paprika. Eggs, fish, meat (other than pork products), poultry, etc., can be prepared à la hongroise. Recipes for these dishes are given in alphabetical order under appropriate headings.

HOP. HOUBLON – Hardy plant grown in many countries.

The cones of the female plant are used in the brewing of beer.

Hop shoots. JETS DE HOUBLON – In French cookery, the name jets de houblon is given to the edible flowers of the male plant, or panicles. The edible tip of the panicle is broken away from its woody stem in the same way as green asparagus tips.

Hop shoots are boiled in salt water, with a few drops of lemon juice. Once they are cooked they can be treated in a number of different ways:

In butter. Toss for a few seconds in butter.

In cream. Toss in butter and simmer in fresh cream.

In stock. Toss in butter. Simmer for a few seconds in concentrated brown veal stock.

Hop shoots may be served as a vegetable or a garnish with various dishes. In particular they are used as a garnish with eggs.

Branch of hop

In Belgium, where this vegetable is much prized, hop shoots, when they are served as a vegetable, are always garnished with poached eggs arranged in a circle on top and interspersed with croûtons of bread cut in the shape of cocks' combs and fried in butter.

In U.S.A. hop panicles or shoots are not sold in the market, but there are some large hop producing regions where they may be found.

HORN. CORNE – Little horn utensil, used to scrape up the remains of mixtures in mortars, in basins, or on marble slabs.

HORS-D'ŒUVRE – By definition, these snacks are additional to the menu. They should therefore be light and delicate, especially when served before a rather heavy menu consisting of a number of courses.

With a light luncheon, the hors-d'œuvre may be more substantial and nourishing.

There are two main types: cold hors-d'œuvre and hot hors-d'œuvre.

Cold hors-d'œuvre, usually served with luncheon, are of two kinds: those which can be bought ready for the table and those which require some preparation at home.

Formerly, hot hors-d'œuvre were called entrées volantes or petites entrées. They generally formed part of the dinner menu, and were served after the soup. Hot hors-d'œuvre can, however, be served at luncheon at the same time as cold hors-d'œuvre.

Nowadays, it is customary to serve a wide variety of hors-d'œuvre at the beginning of a luncheon.

France has also adopted a custom imported from Russia, of serving hors-d'œuvre in a special way; as zakouski, a kind of meal-before-the meal, entirely made up of hors-d'œuvre, washed down with liberal draughts of wine and liqueur. Formerly, in Russia, this was served in an ante-chamber adjoining the dining room.

In France, the custom has been somewhat modified. Under the name of zakouski or hors-d'œuvre à la russe, these snacks are arranged on trays and served to the guests at the table itself.

Presentation of cold hors-d'œuvre – These snacks must be presented elegantly.

Here are a few hints to help the hostess.

1. The dishes. Apart from special hors-d'œuvre sets, china or glass plates and dishes or antique gold or silver plate may be used. Old rustic-style plates, pottery or silver porringers, crystal bowls, etc., can be used very effectively.

2. The garnishes. Garnishes, though purely decorative, must all be edible. There is a great variety of such garnishes. Tastefully chosen and arranged, they give a very attractive appearance to the hors-d'œuvre. The most common garnish is parsley, which must be very green and curly. It can be used in sprigs or chopped.

Hors-d'œuvre can also be garnished with chervil, tarragon, watercress and lettuce hearts. As a contrast to these green-stuffs, half slices of lemon and beetroot can be used. Beetroot is served diced, cut into matchsticks and in other ways.

The decoration of hors-d'œuvre can be varied by using any of the following: capers, gherkins, red pomegranate seeds, hard-boiled eggs (halved, quartered or chopped), small pickled onions, large onions sliced into rings or chopped, small kidney beans, French beans, green peas, asparagus tips, boiled carrots and turnips, radishes, black radish, the leaves and stalks of leeks, yellow, red and green peppers, mushrooms, truffles, etc.

To achieve greater variety in form and colour, flowers can also be used. Nasturtiums (whose leaves are also edible), borage, violets, chrysanthemums and daisies all enhance the decorative effect.

Presentation of hot hors-d'œuvre – Unless otherwise stated under the entry relating to a particular item, hot hors-d'œuvre are served on a dish, a folded napkin or a paper doily, and garnished with fresh or fried parsley according to their nature. Fried hors-d'œuvre such as fritters, cromesquis croquettes, etc., may be served in nests of matchstick potatoes.

COLD HORS-D'ŒUVRE. HORS-D'ŒUVRE FROIDS – These usually consist of one or several ingredients, cut into dice, seasoned, with an oil and vinegar dressing or with a mayonnaise sauce. Compound butters, forcemeats, special purées and salpicons may also be added.

Hors-d'œuvre vegetables (Robert Carrier)

Some cold hors-d'œuvre: salad of ox muzzle, artichokes à la grecque, mushrooms, cucumber

The following are the most usual hors-d'œuvre.

Aceto-dolce – See Sour-sweet pickles below.

Allumettes – See Pastry straws below.

Anchovies. ANCHOIS – These must first be freed from salt.

For different mixtures (compound butters, stuffings, purées, salpicons, sauces, etc.). Wash the anchovies, soak them in cold water, cut into fillets, clean and dry them. The method of preparation after this varies according to the particular dish for which they are intended.

For hors-d'œuvre and different garnishes. Soak the anchovies and cut them into fillets as above. Scrape and clean them well to ensure that all the scales have been removed. Dry lightly in a cloth.

Cut the fillets into small strips or leave them whole, according to the dish for which they are intended.

Arrange anchovy fillets in a deep dish or terrine. Cover with olive oil. Put the lid on the dish and keep in a cool place. Use as indicated.

Anchovies and hard-boiled eggs I. ANCHOIS ET OEUFS DURS – Two thirds hard-boiled eggs and one third anchovy fillets cut into small dice. Season with oil, vinegar, salt, pepper and finely chopped herbs, or with mayonnaise.

Anchovies and hard-boiled eggs II. ANCHOIS AUX OEUFS DURS – Proceed as for Anchovies in oil (see below). Garnish with the yolks and white of hard-boiled eggs chopped separately, capers and chopped parsley.

The dressing, garnish and decoration of marinated anchovy fillets can be varied. Apart from the additional ingredients mentioned above, a variety of other items can be used, e.g. Lettuce chiffonnade (see CHIFFONNADE), olives, beetroot, lemon, chervil, tarragon, etc.

Anchovies à la grecque. ANCHOIS À LA GRECQUE – Put fresh anchovies, cleaned and dried in a cloth, into salt for 2 hours. Soak in cold water, and shake them individually to ensure that all the salt falls off. Sear for 1 minute only in smoking oil.

Drain the anchovies and arrange in layers in a terrine. Each layer should be sprinkled with thyme, sweet bay, coriander and pepper grains. Make Court-bouillon II (see COURT-BOUILLON) and pour, while still boiling, over the anchovies. Marinate them in this court-bouillon for 24 hours.

Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Sprinkle with the marinade, garnish with slices of peeled lemon and sprinkle with freshly chopped fennel.

In France this dish is also known as Escabèche d'anchois à la grecque.

Anchovies à la normande. ANCHOIS À LA NORMANDE – Arrange the marinated anchovy fillets on a salpicon (q.v.) of rennet apples seasoned with mayonnaise. Surround with a border of beetroot cut into very small dice. Dress with a thin trickle of oil.

Norwegian anchovies (kilkis). ANCHOIS DE NORVÈGE – These can be bought ready prepared. Arrange the anchovies on an hors-d'œuvre dish and surround with half slices of lemons cut with a fluted cutter, and with fresh parsley. Sprinkle with several tablespoons of their marinade.

Norwegian anchovies or kilkis can be used in all ways indicated for anchovies in brine.

Anchovies in oil. ANCHOIS À L'HUILE – Free anchovies from salt. Cut into thin strips. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish, in a pattern. Garnish with capers and chopped parsley. Dress with a thin trickle of oil.

Anchovy salads, various. SALADES D'ANCHOIS – Anchovy fillets in oil or with hard-boiled eggs accompanied by a salad.

Anchovy salad can be served with a great variety of dishes: Lettuce chiffonnade (see CHIFFONNADE), boiled potatoes cut into fine slices or dice, celeriac cut into a fine julienne (q.v.), etc.

These various additions are accompaniments; the anchovies dominate the dish.

Anchovy scrolls. PAUPIETTES D'ANCHOIS – Free anchovy fillets from salt, scrape, and dry in a cloth. Flatten the fillets and coat them with a thin layer of fish purée or any other mixture suitable for cold hors-d'œuvre. Roll the fillets into scrolls.

Arrange them in an hors-d'œuvre dish and garnish with the yolks and whites of hard-boiled eggs chopped separately, capers, and chopped parsley. Dress with a thin trickle of oil.

Bargeman's anchovy scrolls. PAUPIETTES D'ANCHOIS BATELIÈRE – Make anchovy scrolls and stuff them with tunny (tuna fish) purée blended with mayonnaise. Arrange them two by two in small baked barquette shells. Garnish with a salpicon made with hard-boiled eggs and gherkins, seasoned with mayonnaise. Arrange on a paper doyley and garnish with fresh parsley.

Monselet anchovy scrolls. PAUPIETTES D'ANCHOIS MONSELET – Fill anchovy scrolls with a stuffing made with the yolks of hard-boiled eggs. Arrange each scroll on a toasted canapé of bread covered with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Surround the scrolls with a ring of capers and put a small sprig of tarragon in each.

Arrange on a paper doyley and garnish with fresh parsley.

Anchovy scrolls à la niçoise. PAUPIETTES D'ANCHOIS À LA NIÇOISE – Fill anchovy scrolls with Tarragon butter (see BUTTER, Compound butter).

Hollow small raw tomatoes, marinate them and two-thirds fill each with a fish purée. Place the scrolls in the tomatoes on the foundation of fish purée.

Decorate to taste. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish and dress with a trickle of oil.

Vatel anchovy scrolls. PAUPIETTES D'ANCHOIS VATEL – Stuff anchovy scrolls with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) to which chopped tarragon has been added.

Make small patty cases of puff pastry. Fill these two-thirds with a salpicon of marinated tunny (tuna fish) and truffles seasoned with mayonnaise. Put 1 scroll on each patty, and a sliver of truffle on each scroll, topped with a dot of butter mixed with the yolk of hard-boiled eggs.

Arrange on a paper doyley and garnish with fresh parsley.

Artichokes. ARTICHAUTS – Small artichokes, quartered artichokes and hearts of artichokes, prepared according to the methods described under the heading ARTICHOKE, can be used as ingredients for a variety of hors-d'œuvre.

Artichokes

Artichokes Baron-Brise. ARTICHAUTS BARON-BRISSE – Cut the hearts of artichokes into thin slices and cook them lightly for a few moments in boiling oil, moving them around. Moisten with a few tablespoons of Tomato essence (see ESSENCE). Add lemon juice, salt, pepper, parsley and chopped chervil. Boil together for a few minutes.

Leave to cool. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish with rounds of peeled lemon.

Artichokes à la grecque. ARTICHAUTS À LA GRECQUE – Trim 20 small tender artichokes (see ARTICHOKE). Flavour with lemon and plunge one after the other into a liquid prepared as follows:

Boil together for 5 minutes in a casserole 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) water, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) olive oil, the juice of 1 lemon, a pinch of salt, 10 coriander seeds, 10 peppercorns, and a large bouquet garni composed of parsley, thyme, bay leaf, celery and fennel.

Cook the artichokes in this court-bouillon for 18 to 20 minutes. Take them out of the liquor and keep in a cool place. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish and serve as cold as possible – iced if desired.

This hors-d'œuvre keeps fairly well, particularly if the artichokes are put in a narrow pickling jar and kept in a very cool place. For a larger quantity (100 artichokes) see ARTICHOKE, Pickled artichokes à la grecque.

Artichokes à la poivrade. ARTICHAUTS À LA POIVRADE – Name given to a dish of small young artichokes eaten raw with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) strongly flavoured with pepper.

Artichoke à la vinaigrette. ARTICHAUTS À LA VINAIGRETTE – Another name for Artichokes à la poivrade.

Boiled artichokes, either hot or cold, accompanied by a Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE), are also served under this name.

Garnished artichoke hearts. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS GARNIS – Prepare and cook very small artichoke hearts (see ARTICHOKE).

Drain and dry them. Garnish with vegetable salad, asparagus tips, different salpicons (q.v.), etc.; dress with mayonnaise or vinaigrette sauce.

Artichoke hearts may be garnished with different purées and with caviare. Arrange the hearts in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Decorate with fresh parsley, hard-boiled eggs, chopped jelly, etc.

Artichoke hearts à la grecque. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA GRECQUE – Proceed as indicated for Artichokes à la grecque, using very small artichoke hearts or large hearts cut into slices.

Artichoke hearts à la tartare. FONDS D'ARTICHAUTS À LA TARTARE – Cook artichoke hearts in a white court-bouillon (q.v.); drain, dry and cut into slices. Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish with Tartare sauce (see SAUCE).

Garnish with a border of the yolks of hard-boiled eggs and chopped parsley, arranged in separate rows. Surround with half slices of cooked beetroot, cut with a fluted-edged knife.

Quartered artichokes. QUARTIERS D'ARTICHAUTS – Tender quartered artichokes are prepared as an hors-d'œuvre, following the instructions given for artichoke hearts and whole artichokes.

Assiette anglaise – Assortment of different kinds of cold meat, usually York ham; pickled tongue; entrecôte, fillet or roast beef; veal; pork, arranged on a plate.

Garnish with chopped jelly, watercress and gherkins.

Assiette anglaise is mainly served for luncheon.

Assorted hors-d'œuvre. ASSIETTE ASSORTIE, ASSIETTE VOLANTE – An assortment of different kinds of hors-d'œuvre, mainly salted items, cut into very small slices.

Barquettes – Small oval-shaped patties made of pastry, baked blind, garnished with different fillings (see BARQUETTES). Items which can be used as garnishes for pastry boats include anchovy in salpicon or anchovy scrolls, smoked eel, beetroot, special compound butters for hors-d'œuvre, caviare, pickled cucumber, prawns, shrimps, crayfish, foie gras, pickled herrings, lobster and crawfish, different vegetables in salpicon or cut into slices, poached mussels, olives, hard-boiled eggs, plovers' eggs, red and green peppers, different sausages, marinated tunny, tomatoes, truffles.

The following serve as decorations for these various pastry boats: capers, gherkins, beetroot, chopped jelly, hard-boiled eggs, fresh parsley, chervil, tarragon, lettuce.

The following are a few examples. All recipes given for filling patties, canapés and tartlets apply to barquettes, which are generally served on a paper doyley. On the menu they are often called frivolités, a name originally given them by Escoffier.

Bagration barquettes. BARQUETTES BAGRATION – Garnish the barquettes with a thin layer of cold Chicken purée (see CHICKEN). Cover this purée alternately with thin slices of breast of chicken and truffles. Spoon half-set jelly into the barquettes.

Beauharnais barquettes. BARQUETTES BEAUHARNAIS – Garnish the barquettes with a salpicon of breast of chicken and truffles. Cover this garnish with a layer of mayonnaise, to which a purée of tarragon and a little gelatine has been added. Decorate with tiny pieces of truffles and cover with jelly.

Barquettes à la cancalaise – Garnish the barquettes with a mousse made from whiting or other white fish. Poach, drain and trim some oysters. Lay these on the mousse in each barquette and spoon over some jelly.

Marivaux barquettes. BARQUETTES MARIVAUX – Fill the barquettes with a salpicon of shrimps and mushrooms, blended with gelatine-strengthened mayonnaise. Decorate with rounds of hard-boiled eggs and chervil. Coat with jelly.

Barquettes à la normande – Garnish the barquettes with a salpicon of fillets of sole, mussels and truffles.

Coat the barquettes with a white meatless Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE). Put 1 poached oyster and 2 shelled crayfish tails on each boat. Spoon over some jelly.

Beef, smoked. BOEUF FUMÉ – Cut the meat into very thin slices. Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish or on a plate, arranged flat or rolled into cornets. Garnish with parsley. Smoked beef is also used as a garnish for canapés.

Beetroot. BETTERAVE – Beetroot can be bought cooked in greengrocers' shops or it can be prepared at home. It is mainly used for salads.

Peel the cooked beetroot and cut it into thin slices. Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Beetroot cassolettes – See BETTROOT.

Beetroot à la crème. BETTERAVE À LA CRÈME – Cut the beetroot into fine matchsticks. Season with a Mustard cream sauce (see SAUCE). Serve in hors-d'œuvre dish.

Beetroot and hard-boiled eggs. BETTERAVE ET OEUFS DURS – Take equal quantities of cooked beetroot and hard-boiled eggs, both cut into dice. Season as for Anchovies and hard boiled eggs (see above).

Beetroot à la normande. BETTERAVE À LA NORMANDE – Cut beetroot and tart apples into slices and arrange alternately on an hors-d'œuvre dish. Surround with a ring of chopped chives. Season with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) made with cider vinegar.

Beetroot salad. SALADE DE BETTERAVE – This salad is served with a Vinaigrette or a Cream sauce (see SAUCE) as indicated above. Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish or in a salad bowl.

Bouchées – See Pâties below.

Brioche, small garnished. BRICHES MIGNONNES GARNIES – Take very small Brioche à tête (see BRIOCHE) scoop out three-quarters of the dough and fill with any of the garnishes usually served with tartlets and other similar preparations.

Cabbage, green. CHOUX VERTS – Prepare in the same way as Red cabbage, below.

Cabbage, red. CHOUX ROUGE – Trim and wash a medium-sized cabbage. Cut it into very fine small strips, put them into a dish and pour over 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) boiling vinegar. Mix well and leave for 5 hours. Drain and season with oil, salt and pepper.

Red cabbage can be blanched before it is steeped in the vinegar.

Canapés – Small garnished pieces of toast make a very attractive hors-d'œuvre. They can be served in two ways.

First method. Cut the crusts off a sandwich loaf and cut the bread into thin slices. Cut the slices into small pieces of various shapes and forms. Toast these on both sides without over browning.

When cool, spread on one side with a compound or plain butter, or any other suitable preparation, according to the kind of canapé desired. Garnish accordingly. Instructions for decorating can be found below. Arrange on a paper doyley, napkin, plate or dish.

Second method. Toast large slices of a sandwich loaf lightly on both sides. When cool spread with butter or any other suitable preparation. Garnish, and cut into canapés of various shapes. Decorate.

If a great many canapés of the same kind are to be served, the second method is recommended. The toast can also be made of black bread or with ordinary unsweetened brioche (baked in a rectangular tin if possible).

In addition to the recipes listed below, canapés may be prepared in many ways. Different kinds of meat, fish, vegetables, truffles, etc., cut into thin slices or made into salpicons, can be used as garnishes.

Decorate canapés with hard-boiled eggs, capers, gherkins, olives, beetroot, cucumber, truffles, mushrooms, parsley, chervil, tarragon, etc.

Preparation of various canapés: radishes, tomatoes, cucumber

Anchovy canapés – See ANCHOVY.

Aurora canapés. CANAPÉS À L'AURORE – Slice a round unsweetened brioche loaf, toast, and spread with yellow butter. Garnish with a thin slice of smoked salmon, put a round of beetroot in the middle, sprinkle with minced yolk of hard-boiled egg, and surround with a border of yellow butter.

Canapés à la bayonnaise – Slice a sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with parsley butter. Garnish with very thin slices of Bayonne ham.

Canapés à la bordelaise – Slice a sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with Shallot butter. Garnish with a salpicon of cooked cèpes and lean ham, and surround with a border of Paprika butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Canapés with caviare. CANAPÉS AU CAVIAR – Slice a sandwich loaf, brown loaf or unsweetened brioche; the slices should be round. Toast, and spread with Caviare butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) or with fresh butter. Surround with a fairly high border of caviare butter. Garnish the centre with fresh caviare. Sprinkle with a pinch of chives.

These canapés can also be made with pressed caviare, but they will not be so delicate.

Crayfish canapés. CANAPÉS AUX ÉCREVISSES – Follow the recipe for Shrimp canapés (see below), using Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and crayfish tails instead of shrimps.

Canapés à la danoise – Slice a dark rye loaf of rectangular shape, toast, and spread with Horseradish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), and garnish with thin strips of smoked salmon alternating with fillets of herring. Separate the strips of fish by a little fresh caviare, and surround with a border of chopped chives.

Harlequin canapés. CANAPÉS ARLEQUIN – Slice a sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with a compound butter. Garnish with chopped yolks and whites of hard-boiled eggs, smoked tongue, ham, truffles, parsley, etc. Surround with a thin border of compound butter.

These canapés can be garnished with a mixture of different preparations. The garnish is prepared last, so the left-overs of special canapés can be used up for this dish.

Herring canapés. CANAPÉS AUX HARENGS – Use the recipe for Anchovy canapés (see ANCHOVY), substituting Herring butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and fillets of herring for the anchovy.

These canapés can be garnished with different kinds of herrings.

Canapés à la hollandaise – Slice a sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with a purée of soft herring roes. Garnish with fillets of herring arranged in a criss-cross pattern. Fill each opening with chopped parsley.

Canapés Laguipière – Lozenge-shaped canapés of ordinary unsweetened brioche bread, toasted, and spread with Truffle butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with slices of breast of chicken, and decorate the points of the lozenges with chopped pickled or smoked tongue and chopped truffles. Surround with a border of yellow butter.

Canapés à la livonienne – Slice a rectangular rye loaf, toast, and spread with Horseradish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with slivers of herring fillets alternating with thin ribbons of tart apples. Brush lightly with oil and surround with a border of chopped chives.

Canapés decorated with hard-boiled eggs and green beans

Lobster canapés. CANAPÉS AU HOMARD – Follow the recipe for Shrimp canapés (see below), substituting Lobster butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and pieces of lobster.

Monselet canapés. CANAPÉS MONSELET – Trim slices of sandwich loaf into oval shapes, toast, and spread with yellow butter. Garnish with a border of small round slices of breast of chicken, alternating with equally small rounds of pickled or smoked tongue. Fill the centre with a salpicon of truffles and surround with a border of yellow butter.

Mont-Bry canapés. CANAPÉS MONT-BRY – Slice unsweetened brioche, toast, and spread with Herring butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with fillets of herring, alternating with evenly cut strips of beetroot and gherkins. Surround with a border of chopped yolks of hard-boiled eggs.

Canapés à la moscovite – Slice a square black rye loaf, toast, and spread with Horseradish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Surround with a border of butter mixed with the coral of spiny lobsters. Fill the centre with fresh caviare and decorate with shrimp tails.

Canapés à la nantaise – Slice sandwich bread thin and trim the slices into long oval shapes. Toast, and spread with Sardine butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with fillets of sardines in oil from which all the bones and skin have been carefully removed, and garnish with sardine butter in such a way as to make the canapés look like fish.

Canapés Ninon – Trim slices of sandwich bread into oval shapes, toast, and spread with Printanier butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with a border of small thin rounds of breast of chicken, alternating with rounds of truffles. Fill the centre with lean ham cut into very small dice.

Canapés à la parisienne – Slice a rectangular sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with butter mixed with pounded chervil. Garnish with small, thin slices of breast of chicken coated with gelatine-strengthened mayonnaise and decorated with truffles and tarragon leaves. Surround with a border of chopped jelly.

Canapés à la printanière – Trim slices of sandwich loaf into rounds, toast, and spread with Montpellier butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with leaves of watercress, alternating with thin round slices of carrots cooked in clear stock. Spoon over a thin layer of meat jelly and surround with a border of chopped yolks of hard-boiled eggs.

Canapés à la reine – Trim slices of unsweetened brioche into rounds, toast, and spread with Truffle butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with a salpicon of breast of chicken, decorate with lozenge-shaped slices of truffle, and surround with a border of yellow butter.

Russian salad canapés. CANAPÉS À LA RUSSE – Slice a sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with butter aux fines herbes. Surround with a border of yellow butter, fill the centre with Russian salad (see SALAD) decorate with truffles, and cover with a thin coat of jelly.

Shrimp canapés. CANAPÉS AUX CREVETTES – Slice a rounded sandwich loaf or cut out rounds from square slices. Toast, and spread with Shrimp butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with shrimps arranged in a rosette. Surround with a border of shrimp butter or with chopped parsley.

Smoked eel canapés. CANAPÉS À L'ANGUILLE FUMÉE – Slice a round sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with Mustard butter or with Horseradish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with thin slices of smoked eel, and surround with hard-boiled egg yolks and chives, chopped separately.

Canapés with spiny lobster. CANAPÉS DE LANGOUSTE – Follow the recipe for Shrimp canapés, using Spiny lobster butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and slices of spiny lobster or spiny lobster cut into dice.

Canapés with pickled tongue. CANAPÉS À L'ÉCARLATE – Slice a sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with Paprika butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with thin slices of pickled or smoked tongue or with tongue cut into very small dice. Surround with a border of paprika butter.

Canapés à la Veron – Slice a square black rye loaf, toast, and spread with Horseradish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with thin slices of Bayonne ham and surround with a border of hard-boiled egg yolks and parsley chopped up in equal proportions.

Watercress canapés. CANAPÉS AU CRESSON – Slice a sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with a butter made like Tarragon butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), substituting watercress leaves for the tarragon. Garnish with leaves of blanched watercress and surround with a border of chopped hard boiled eggs.

Canapés with York ham. CANAPÉS À LA YORKAISE – Slice a sandwich loaf, toast, and spread with Chivry butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with thin slices of York ham, and surround with a border of chopped parsley.

Carolines – Small éclairs made of unsweetened Chou paste (see DOUGH), garnished to taste with different preparations such as mousses or purées made of shrimps, prawns, crayfish, lobster, spiny lobster, foie gras, salmon, sole, poultry, game, etc. The éclairs are coated with a Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) in keeping with the filling, and glazed with jelly. Arrange them on a paper doyley.

Caroline éclairs can also be filled with salpicons blended with chaud-froid sauce, or with mayonnaise or jelly. They can also be garnished with fresh caviare.

Caviare – The word 'caviare' generally indicates fresh caviare, i.e. the roe of one of the members of the sturgeon family.

In Russia, the roe of other fish such as soudac, trout, salmon, perch, pike and sigui are prepared in the same way. These inferior products cannot be sold in France as caviare. Salted and pressed caviars are also on the market, but their flavour is not as good as that of the real caviare.

Fresh caviare is served in its original container surrounded by crushed ice, or in special containers also surrounded by ice. Caviare should be delicately handled. It is usually served with thin slices of rye bread lightly buttered, or with a Russian pancake called blini (q.v.).

Lemon and chopped chives are provided when serving caviare for each diner to help himself.

Caviare barquettes or tartlets. BARQUETTES, TARTELETTES AU CAVIAR – Use very small barquettes or tartlets. Garnish with fresh caviare. Serve on a paper doyley.

Small brioches with caviare. PETITES BRIOCHES AU CAVIAR – Use very small Brioche à tête (see BRIOCHE) made from unsweetened dough. Hollow out the brioches and fill with fresh caviare. Serve on a paper doyley.

Celeriac. CÉLÉRI-RAVE – Cut into dice, cook quickly, drain, season with oil and vinegar, mayonnaise or mustard.

Celery à la grecque. CÉLÉRI À LA GRECQUE – Trim and wash the celery, cut the hearts into quarters and prepare in the same way as Artichokes à la grecque (see above).

Cherries in vinegar, also called preserved cherries. BIGARREAUX AU VINAIGRE – Choose very firm white heart cherries. Cut their stalks by two-thirds.

Put them in an earthenware jar. Sprinkle with very small pieces of thyme and bay leaf. Pour over boiling vinegar seasoned with salt, and 2 cloves. Cover the jug with a lid and keep cool. Leave to infuse for 15 days.

Serve the cherries in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Sprinkle with the marinade.

Cherries preserved in vinegar are served separately as hors-d'œuvre or with cold or hot meat dishes.

Crayfish. ÉCREVISSES – Diced crayfish tails seasoned with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, or with a mayonnaise.

Cucumbers. CONCOMBRES – Dice fresh cucumbers, put them in a dish and sprinkle with salt. Serve seasoned with salt, pepper, vinegar and oil.

Cucumber à la grecque. CONCOMBRES À LA GRECQUE – Cut the cucumber into pieces and proceed as for Artichokes à la grecque (see above) but cook only for 10 or 12 minutes.

Cucumber salad. CONCOMBRES EN SALADE – Peel the cucumbers and cut them lengthwise into very thin slices.

Put them on a cloth, sprinkle with fine salt and leave them to render their liquor for 30 minutes. Drain, dry, and season with oil, vinegar, pepper, parsley and chopped chervil. Fresh cream may be added.

Cucumber stuffed with vegetable salad. CONCOMBRES FARCIS À LA PRINTANIÈRE – Cut a large cucumber into pieces and blanch in salted water. Drain, dry, and hollow out to give them the shape of cassolettes. Fill with a vegetable salad: carrots, turnips, diced French beans, and peas blended with thick mayonnaise. Sprinkle with oil and vinegar.

Éclairs à la Karoly – Stuff éclairs with a game purée, coat with a brown Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) and glaze over with jelly.

Eel. ANGUILE – For the general method of cleaning and cooking, see EEL. Various dishes which can be served as hot or cold hors-d'œuvre, particularly Eels au vert, are also described in the section EEL.

Commachio eel. ANGUILE DE COMMACHIO – This kind of salted and smoked eel is only used as hors-d'œuvre. Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish.

Eel à l'indienne. ANGUILE À L'INDIENNE – Proceed as for Eel à l'italienne (see below). Moisten with a court-bouillon seasoned with curry powder. Put into a terrine with the liquid. This dish must be completely cooled before it is served.

Garnish eels with quartered pimentos and thin slices of raw tomatoes which have been sprinkled with salt. Sprinkle the whole dish with the liquor in which the eel has been cooked.

Eel à l'italienne. ANGUILE À L'ITALIENNE – Cut an eel weighing 750 g. (1½ lb.) into 5-cm. (2-inch) pieces.

Thread the pieces, separated by bay leaves, on small wooden skewers. Put all the skewers in an oiled dish, season and sprinkle with oil. Cook for 12 minutes in the oven. Drain and remove the pieces of eel from the skewers. Arrange them in a terrine.

Put 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) vinegar and 1 dl. (6 table-spoons, scant ½ cup) water into the dish in which the eel has been cooked. Add a lump of sugar, 4 cloves and a pinch of salt. Boil this court-bouillon for 5 minutes, and pour over the eel. Cover the terrine, put into a very cool place, and leave for 2 or 3 days before serving.

Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish and cover with the jelly which has formed in the terrine.

Jellied eel in Chablis. ANGUILE AU VIN DE CHABLIS, EN GELÉE – Cut small eels into pieces and cook in concentrated fish stock prepared with Chablis. Drain the pieces and put into a small terrine. Clarify the liquid in which the eel has been cooked and pour over the dish. Cool on ice.

Eel marinated in red wine. ANGUILE MARINÉE AU VIN ROUGE – Proceed as described for Eel marinated in white wine (see below), but use red wine for the court-bouillon.

Eel marinated in vinegar. ANGUILE MARINÉE AU VINAIGRE – Proceed as described for Eel marinated in white wine (see below) but use vinegar instead of white wine for the court-bouillon.

Eel marinated in white wine. ANGUILE MARINÉE AU VIN BLANC – Cut the eel into pieces. Cook minced onions in butter until soft. Line a shallow pan with the onion and place the eel on them. Cover with Court-bouillon XII (see COURT-BOUILLON). Add a large bouquet garni. Cook for 20 minutes and cool the eel in its liquor.

Eel à l'orientale. ANGUILE À L'ORIENTALE – Proceed with eel, cut into pieces, as for Red mullet à l'orientale (see below).

Preparing sections of cucumber to be stuffed with vegetable salad

Smoked eel (Kiel). ANGUILE FUMÉE DE KIEL – Cut the eel into fillets or very thin slices. Garnish with fresh parsley and half slices of lemon cut with a fluted cutter.

Smoked eel canapés – See Canapés above.

Eel in verjuice. ANGUILE AU VERJUS – Cut the eel in pieces. Cook chopped onions gently in butter. Line the bottom of a flat pan with the onions and place the pieces of eel on top. Season. Add a bouquet garni. Moisten with verjuice and white wine in equal quantities. Finish the dish as for Eel marinated in white wine (see above).

Eggs, hard-boiled. ŒUFS DURS – Cut into dice, or slice. Season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper or with mayonnaise.

Eggs, stuffed. ŒUFS FARCIS – Hard-boil the eggs. Cut into halves. Take out the yolks and mix these with whatever preparation is used as stuffing. Another way of stuffing eggs is to cut a little off at both ends so that they can stand. Carefully take the yolks out without breaking the white. Stuff the eggs to taste. Arrange them standing up looking like little barrels.

Salads and salpicons can be used as stuffings for eggs.

Decorate the halved eggs or the little barrel-shaped eggs, glaze over with jelly and arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish or on a plate garnished with curly parsley.

Egg stuffing à la moscovite. FARCE D'ŒUFS À LA MOSCOVITE – Pound 2 hard-boiled egg yolks. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) thick mayonnaise, 1 tablespoon finely chopped onions cooked in oil until tender, and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Season with salt and paprika and mix well.

Plovers' or lapwings' eggs. ŒUFS DE PLUVIER, DE VANNEAU – Hard-boil the eggs and peel two-thirds of each one. Put the part of the egg which is left in the shell on a bed of watercress, made to look like a nest. The merits of this hors-d'œuvre lie mainly in the rarity of the eggs and their high price. Lapwings' eggs appear on the market in France round about Easter.

Escabèche of various fishes (Spanish and Provençal cookery). ESCABÈCHE DE POISSONS DIVERS – Wash smelts, mackerels, whittings, red mullets, etc., and dry in a cloth. Dip in flour and fry in olive oil until both sides are lightly coloured. Pour boiling court-bouillon over them. This is prepared as follows:

Heat the oil in which the fish were fried until it begins to smoke. Add, for 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, general cup) oil, 5 cloves unpeeled garlic, and a sliced onion and carrot. Fry for a few minutes and add 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) vinegar, ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) water, a sprig of thyme, half a bay leaf, some parsley, 3 pimientos, salt and pepper. Cook for 10 to 12 minutes, pour over the fish, and leave to soak for 24 hours. Serve cold with the marinade.

Fanchonnettes – See Patties, Fanchonnette patties, below.

Fennel roots. FENOUIL BULBEUX – Peel and wash the bulbous part of the fennel, cut into halves or quarters, and serve with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE).

Fennel roots à la grecque. FENOUIL BULBEUX À LA GRECQUE – Cut the bulbous roots into halves or quarters and proceed as indicated for Artichokes à la grecque (see above).

Figs, fresh. FIGUES FRAÎCHES – Serve as they are. Arrange the figs on vine leaves or, preferably, on small fig leaves. Or roll them in thin slices of Parma ham.

French beans. HARICOTS VERTS – Cook in salt water, drain, cut into dice, season with oil and vinegar, salt and pepper, and with mayonnaise.

Frogs' legs. GRENOUILLES – For the general preparation of dishes with frogs legs see FROG.

Frogs' legs à la grecque. GRENOUILLES À LA GRECQUE – Cook frogs' legs in Court-bouillon I (see COURT-BOUILLON). Leave to cool in the cooking stock.

Garnish with rounds of peeled lemon.

Frogs' legs à la parisienne. GRENOUILLES À LA PARISIENNE – Cook frogs' legs in white wine to which a squeeze of lemon has been added and which has been seasoned with salt and pepper. Drain the frogs' legs and dry them in a cloth. Cover with Mayonnaise III (see SAUCE).

Serve on diced potato salad. Garnish with chopped hard-boiled eggs (yolk and white chopped separately) and parsley.

Frogs' legs with pimientos. GRENOUILLES AUX PIMENTS DOUX – Cook the frogs' legs as described in the recipe for Frogs' legs à la parisienne above. Add finely cut red and green peppers and vinegar or lemon juice to the cooking stock and dress with a trickle of oil. Leave to cool.

Frogs' legs à la vinaigrette. GRENOUILLES À LA VINAIGRETTE – Poach the frogs' legs as described in the recipe for Frogs' legs à la parisienne above.

Drain, season with oil, vinegar, pepper, salt and chopped parsley. Sprinkle some of the boiled-down cooking stock over the dish.

Gherkins. CORNICHONS – Gherkins in vinegar are served cut into dice.

Goose, smoked. OIE FUMÉE – Cut the breast into very thin slices. Serve with fresh parsley.

Ham (Bayonne, Parma, Westphalia, Ardennes, Toulouse). JAMBONS – Cut the raw ham into very thin slices and arrange in slices or rolled into cornets. Garnish with fresh parsley.

Herrings. HARENGS – Cut desalted smoked herrings into small dice. Season with an oil and vinegar dressing or with mayonnaise. Add hard-boiled eggs cut into dice and sprinkled with chives or chopped onions.

Fillets of salted herrings. FILETS DE HARENGS SALÉS – Fillet 6 salted herrings, skin them and free them from salt by soaking in milk and water. Drain, dry in a cloth and arrange in a terrine. Put rounds of blanched onions on them and add thyme, bay leaf and cloves. Pour 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) vinegar over and marinate them in this mixture for 5 hours. Cover with oil and keep in a cool place. Garnish with capers, gherkins and lemon.

These fillets can also be prepared in a court-bouillon (q.v.), or dressed with a mayonnaise, or used as a garnish for canapés if thoroughly dried on a cloth.

Garnish with hard-boiled eggs, chopped parsley, and rounds of fluted lemon slices.

Fillets of smoked herring prepared in this way can be dressed with mayonnaise, or used as garnish for canapés. The soft and hard roes are steeped in oil and served with the fillets.

Fresh herrings, marinated. HARENGS FRAIS MARINÉS – Divide 6 herrings with soft roes into pieces. Arrange in a buttered or oiled pan.

Make Court-bouillon XII (see COURT-BOUILLON), pour over the herrings and bring to the boil. Cover, and cook for 10 to 12 minutes. Put into a terrine with the cooking stock. Leave to cool before serving. Sprinkle with some of the stock, decorate with the vegetables cooked in the court-bouillon and thin rounds of lemon.

Herrings à la livonienne. HARENGS À LA LIVONIENNE – Choose large smoked herrings. Fillet, skin and trim them. Keep the heads and tails. Cut the fillets into dice and add an equal quantity of cooked potatoes and diced tart apples.

Season with oil, vinegar and pepper, and add chopped parsley, chervil, tarragon and fennel. Mix well.

Arrange on a dish in the shape of herrings and complete by adding the heads and tails.

Hors-d'œuvre (Robert Carrier)

Herrings à la portugaise. HARENGS À LA PORTUGAISE – Cut herrings into large pieces and cook in 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) Tomato fondue (see FONDUE).

Serve as above.

Smoked herring à la russe. HARENGS FUMÉS À LA RUSSE – Soak smoked herring fillets in milk or cold strained tea, skin, and cut crosswise into thin slices. Arrange in a dish, giving them their original shape. Season with several tablespoons Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) to which chervil, tarragon, fennel and chopped shallots have been added. Add 2 to 3 tablespoons sour cream to the dressing.

Kilkis or Norwegian anchovies – See under Anchovies above.

Leeks à la grecque. POIREAUX À LA GRECQUE – Use the white part of large tender leeks. Cut into pieces  $7\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (3 inches) long. Blanch and cook as indicated for Artichokes à la grecque (see above).

Lobster, spiny lobster and other shellfish. HOMARD, LANGOUSTE, CRUSTACÉS – Cut into dice, season with oil and vinegar, salt and pepper, or with mayonnaise.

Mackerel, marinated. MAQUEREAUX MARINÉS – can be bought ready prepared and should be served in an hors-d'œuvre dish or in the original container.

Marinated mackerel can also be prepared at home. Choose very small fish and proceed as for Smelts in marinade (see below).

Melon – Cut melons in half, drain, and take the seeds out. Cut in slices. Serve on a dish covered with green leaves. Surround with crushed ice.

The Italians serve thin slices of Parma ham with melon.

Small preserved melons. PETITS MELONS CONFITS – Proceed with very small melons as indicated in the recipe for Gherkins in vinegar (see GHERKINS).

Leave to soak for 10 days before serving. Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish or in an earthenware jar.

Mortadella. MORTADELLE – Cut the Mortadella into thin slices. According to their diameter, divide the slices into halves or quarters. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish, flat or rolled into cornets. Garnish with fresh parsley.

Mousse Fanchon – In France this hors-d'œuvre is also called mousse mignonne. It consists of various kinds of mousses.

HORS-D'ŒUVRE

Coat small moulds with jelly, fill them with the various mousses and decorate with small pieces of truffle. Put in the refrigerator.

Turn out the moulds just before serving. Put them on canapés of sandwich bread toasted and spread with a compound butter in keeping with the mousse. Arrange on a paper doyley.

Mousses Fanchon can also be served on tartlets or on artichoke hearts.

Mulberries. MÛRES FRAÎCHES – Serve plain in a fruit dish or on a plate covered with green leaves.

Mushrooms. CHAMPIGNONS – Cook in a white Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON) mushrooms cut into small dice. Season with an oil and vinegar dressing, or with mayonnaise.

Marinated cèpes and mushrooms. CÈPES, CHAMPIGNONS MARINÉS – Use small firm white mushrooms. Parboil for 4 minutes in salted boiling water. Drain and dry. Put them in an earthenware dish and cover them with a boiling marinade, prepared as follows:

For 1 kg. (2½ lb.) mushrooms, boil together for 10 minutes, 5 dl. (scant pint, 2¼ cups) vinegar, 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) oil, 3 crushed cloves of garlic, a bouquet garni made of 2 parsley roots, ½ bay leaf, a sprig of thyme and a little fennel, 1 teaspoon coriander, 6 to 8 peppercorns.

Leave the mushrooms in the marinade for 4 to 5 days. Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish.

These mushrooms can be bottled in the prescribed marinade. Bottling jars of 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) capacity must be boiled for 35 minutes; those of ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) capacity need only 25 minutes.

Mussels. MOULES – Cook in white wine. Shell, dry, season with oil and vinegar, salt and pepper, or with mayonnaise.

Mussels à la ravigote. MOULES À LA RAVIGOTE – Cook and drain large mussels. Put them in a terrine. Season with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) to which hard-boiled eggs, parsley, chervil, tarragon and chopped gherkins have been added. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish.

Mussel salad. SALADE DE MOULES – Prepare the mussels as for Mussels à la marinière (see MUSSEL). Shell them and dress with oil, vinegar, pepper and finest herbes. Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish.

Mussels à la tartare. MOULES À LA TARTARE – Prepare some large mussels as for Mussels à la marinière (see MUSSEL). Shell them and arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Mask with Tartare sauce (see SAUCE). Surround with half slices of lemon cut with a fluted knife.

Olives – Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish without dressing them.

Black olives. OLIVES NOIRES – These can be bought ready for the table and are served without dressing. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish.

Stuffed olives. OLIVES FARCIES – Choose large stoned olives, which have been soaked to free them from salt. Stuff with a compound butter. The most usual stuffing for olives is Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Arrange the stuffed olives on an hors-d'œuvre dish and dress with a few tablespoons oil.

Stuffed olives can also be bought.

Onions. OIGNONS – Cut raw onions into dice, blanch, drain, and season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, or with mayonnaise.

Onions à la grecque. OIGNONS À LA GRECQUE – Prepared like Artichokes à la grecque (see above).

Onions à l'orientale – See ONION.

Ox muzzle salad. MUSEAU DE BOEUF EN SALADE – Blanch, cool and drain the muzzle. Scrape and wash. Boil the muzzle in a white court-bouillon (q.v.), and leave it to cool in the pot.

Drain, wipe dry and cut into very thin slices. Season with a strong Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) to which onion and chopped parsley have been added.

Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish. Decorate with tiny rings or raw onions and chopped hard-boiled eggs.

This hors-d'œuvre can be bought ready-made.

Ox tongue salad. PALAIS DE BOEUF EN SALADE – Proceed as above.

Oysters

Oysters. HUITRES – Oysters are usually eaten raw. There are a number of recipes for serving oysters as a cold hors-d'œuvre. The most famous are Oysters à l'andalouse, Oysters in barquettes, Oysters with caviare, The gastronome's oyster and Marinated oysters. (See OYSTER.)

Pastry straws with anchovies. ALLUMETTES AUX ANCHOIS – Proceed as for Allumettes with anchovies (see Hot hors-d'œuvre) but serve cold.

Pastry straws with caviare. ALLUMETTES AU CAVIAR – Prepare pastry as for Allumettes (q.v.). Cover with a thin layer of Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and cook in the oven. Cool and cover with fresh caviare.

Norwegian pastry straws. ALLUMETTES À LA NORVÉGIENNE – Prepare the pastry as for Allumettes (q.v.). Cover with a thin layer of a salpicon (q.v.) of hard-boiled eggs, blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Bake in the oven. Leave to cool and garnish with Norwegian anchovy fillets.

Parisian pastry straws. ALLUMETTES À LA PARISIENNE – Prepare the pastry as for Allumettes (q.v.). Coat with a thin layer of chicken Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and bake in the oven.

Cool, garnish with thin strips of breast of chicken alternating with slices of truffles and pickled tongue. Glaze with jelly.

Vladimir pastry straws. ALLUMETTES VLADIMIR – Prepare the pastry as for Allumettes (q.v.), coat with a thin layer of Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and Crayfish butter (see BUTTER). Bake in the oven. Leave to cool, and garnish with small slices of smoked salmon, alternating with slices of truffles. Glaze with jelly.

Patties. BOUCHÉES – Very small patties made of puff pastry garnished with different mousses; prawns, shrimps, crayfish, foie gras, game, poultry, etc.

Fanchonnette patties. BOUCHÉES FANCHONNETTE – Make very small patties of puff pastry. Garnish with a salad of breast of chicken and a salpicon (q.v.) of red and green peppers with mayonnaise. Put a thick slice of truffle on each patty.

Small patties can be garnished in the same way as canapés, tartlets, and other similar preparations.

Peppers, sweet. PIMENTS DOUX – Skin the peppers, open them and take out the seeds. Cut into sticks and season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish, sprinkle with chopped parsley, and garnish with thin rings of raw onion.

Peppers, small green. PETITS PIMENTS VERTS, POIVRONS – Proceed as indicated for Sweet peppers above.

Pickles – Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish or serve in the original container.

Pissalat (condiment) – This can be bought ready-made.

To make it yourself pickle a mixture of small shad, herrings, sardines and anchovies, for 8 days. Rub through a sieve and dilute with a few tablespoons of the brine in which the fish were pickled. Add some cloves and put into jars. Seal well and keep in a cool place.

Pissalat condiment can be used as it is, or with oil added to it.

Potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE – Cooked in water, cut into dice or sliced, seasoned with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, or with mayonnaise.

Printanière – See Spring vegetables below.

Radishes, black. RADIS NOIRS – Scrape the radishes and cut into thin slices. Sprinkle them with salt and leave them to render their liquor for 30 minutes. Dry, and arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish.

A little Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE) can be added. In Russia, black radish is generally served with a sour cream dressing.

Radishes, red and white. RADIS ROSES, RADIS GRIS – Scrape the radishes, cut the green part short, wash and arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Serve with salt and fresh butter.

Red radishes are often used to decorate cold dishes and salad arrangements.

Red mullet à l'orientale or red mullet with saffron. ROUGETS À L'ORIENTALE, AU SAFRAN – Choose very small fish. Season with salt and pepper, roll in flour, deep-fry in hot oil.

Arrange the fish on an oiled baking dish. Cover with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) spiced with a little saffron, fennel, thyme, powdered bayleaf, some grains of coriander, garlic and chopped parsley. Bring to the boil. Cover the dish and finish the cooking in the oven for 6 to 8 minutes.

Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish with slices of peeled lemon. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Rollmops – Fillets of herring, marinated and strongly spiced. They are stuffed with a gherkin, rolled up and secured with a little wooden stick. Rollmops are served on an hors-d'œuvre dish decorated with rounds of onions.

Rolls, garnished. PETITS PAINS GARNIS – Choose very small oblong-shaped rolls made with butter. Similarly shaped rolls made from ordinary Brioche dough (see DOUGH) can also be used. Fill them à la française, or à la russe:

À la française. Cut open on one side only. Spread with butter (either ordinary butter or mustard butter). Garnish with thin slices of breast of chicken (or other poultry), ham, pickled tongue, fillet of beef, smoked salmon or similar items according to taste. Various purées or foie gras can also be used as stuffing.

À la russe. Take a round slice off the top of the rolls. Empty the rolls through this opening without breaking the crust. Fill the roll with a purée, a salad, or a salpicon (q.v.).

Arrange on a paper doyley, or on a napkin.

Rolls à la française are served at luncheon or as sandwiches.

Rolls à la russe should always be very small. They belong to the Russian hors-d'œuvre called zakouski.

Salami – Cut into thin slices, arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish, garnish with fresh parsley.

Salmon à la canadienne. SAUMON À LA CANADIENNE – Cut the salmon in squares and sauté in oil. Season with salt and paprika.

Add okra pods (ladies' fingers) which have been poached separately. Moisten with white wine and lemon juice. Cover with a lid and simmer for a few seconds. Leave to cool.

Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Garnish with red and green peppers, peeled and cut into dice. Pour a little olive oil over the dish.

Fresh salmon can be served as an hors-d'œuvre following the instructions given for different kinds of fish as hors-d'œuvre.

Salmon paupiettes à l'impériale. PAUPIETTES DE SAUMON À L'IMPÉRIALE – Flatten thin narrow slices of salmon, season, coat lightly with a layer of Pike forcemeat (see FORCE-MEATS) with a little shallot and some chopped parsley added. Roll up into the shape of paupiettes and secure with string.

Put the paupiettes into an oiled pan, packing them in fairly tightly. Moisten with a few tablespoons white wine and a squeeze of lemon juice. Season and add a little bouquet of fennel. Simmer very slowly with the lid on.

Drain the paupiettes, untie, and place each on a small artichoke heart cooked in a white wine stock. Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish, sprinkle with the stock in which the paupiettes have been cooked, and add a little olive oil and a few spices. Decorate with capers, half slices of lemon cut with a fluted cutter, and fresh parsley.

Salmon paupiettes au vert. PAUPIETTES DE SAUMON AU VERT – Prepare the paupiettes as in the preceding recipe. Cook them according to the instruction for Eels au vert (see EEL).

Smoked salmon. SAUMON FUMÉ – Cut the smoked salmon into very thin slices. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish, flat or rolled into cornets. Garnish with fresh parsley.

Smoked salmon Boston style. SAUMON FUMÉ À LA BOSTONNAISE – Cut 100 g. (4 oz.) smoked salmon into very thin short strips. Add 100 g. (4 oz.) cooked mushrooms and 75 g. (3 oz.) each of green and red peeled pepper, cut in the same way. Season with mayonnaise mixed with a very little Tabasco sauce (commercial product). Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish, surround with the chopped yolks and whites of hard-boiled eggs, and sprigs of parsley. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

Smoked salmon à la moscovite. SAUMON FUMÉ À LA MOSCOVITE – Roll very small slices of smoked salmon into cornets. Fill with fresh caviar. Arrange the cornets in a circle on a plate. Decorate with the chopped yolks and whites of hard-boiled eggs, parsley and capers.

Rollmops

Salt cod, curried. ESCALOPES DE MORUE À L'INDIENNE – Soak the salt cod and cut into thin slices. Wash and dry the slices in a cloth. Flour lightly and cook in boiling oil.

Take the fish out of the pan. Cook 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) finely minced onion in the pan, sprinkle in 1 tablespoon curry powder, moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) white wine and a little lemon juice, and add a little crushed garlic. Boil for a few minutes and put the slices of cod into this court-bouillon. Bring to the boil again, cover and remove from the heat.

Cool, arrange in a dish and surround with lemon slices.

Salt cod tongues à la madrilène. LANGUES DE MORUES À LA MADRILÈNE – Cook an unpeeled clove of garlic in very hot oil. Toss the cod tongues in this oil.

Pour over the tongues a sufficient quantity of vinegar to cover them. Season with thyme, powdered bay leaf and red Spanish pepper. Cook in an open pan for 12 minutes, and sprinkle in a generous amount of freshly chopped fennel. Leave to cool in the stock.

Salt cod tongues, marinated. LANGUES DE MORUES MARINÉES – Soak the cod tongues to remove the salt. Dry, and fry in olive oil.

Moisten with white wine court-bouillon (q.v.) adding just enough to cover them. Cook slowly for 12 minutes. Put the tongues and the cooking liquor into a terrine. Leave to cool. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sardines in oil. SARDINES À L'HUILE – Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish, dress with oil, and garnish with capers and fresh parsley.

Sardine purée. PURÉE DE SARDINES – Put in a mortar 12 well-boned sardines which have been kept in olive oil. Pound them in the mortar together with 4 yolks of hard-boiled eggs. Pass through a fine sieve and use for cold or hot hors-d'œuvre.

Sausages, various. SAUCISSONS – There are many different sausages which can be bought ready-made and served as hors-d'œuvre.

Cut into thin slices and arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish with fresh parsley.

Saveloys (sausage). CERVELAS – Cook various kinds of saveloys and leave to cool. Cut into thin slices and serve like other sausages.

Sheep's trotters à la vinaigrette. PIEDS DE MOUTON À LA VINAIGRETTE – Cook the sheep's trotters in the usual way (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS). Drain, bone and cut into very small pieces. Season the meat while it is still hot, with oil, vinegar, salt, pepper, onions and chopped parsley. Arrange in small salad bowls or in an hors-d'œuvre dish.

Shellfish, mixed. FRUITS DE MER – Different kinds of shellfish served raw.

Shrimps. CREVETTES – Shrimps seasoned with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, or with mayonnaise.

Shrimp salad. SALADE DE CREVETTES – Shell the shrimps and put them in a deep dish. Cover with mayonnaise. Garnish the dish with lettuce, leaving the centre free; fill this with rounds of hard-boiled eggs.

Sigui, smoked. SIGUI FUMÉ – Cut smoked sigui into very thin slices, arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish and garnish with fresh parsley. You can also use smoked sigui for filling barquettes, canapés, tartlets, etc.

Smelts in marinade. ÉPERLANS MARINÉS – Clean and dry carefully chosen smelts. Roll in flour and fry them in boiling oil so that they quickly colour on both sides. Season.

Drain the smelts. Arrange them in a deep dish, cover with rounds of blanched onions and sprinkle with thyme and bay leaf. Add peppercorns and cloves. Cover with cold concentrated vinegar. Leave the smelts for 12 hours in this marinade. Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish.

Sour-sweet pickles (aceto-dolce) – Different kinds of vegetables and fruits are commercially preserved in vinegar. They are then put in a syrup of must and honey spiced with mustard.

Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish or serve in the original jar.

Sprats – Take the heads and the tails off the fish and skin them. Arrange on a plate and sprinkle with chopped shallots and parsley. Moisten with oil and vinegar and leave to steep for several hours in this marinade before serving. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish and garnish with fresh parsley.

Spring vegetables

Spring vegetables (printanière) – Cook diced French beans, carrots and turnips cut into very small squares, peas and asparagus tips in water. Drain and season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper.

Tapenade (Provençal recipe) – This consists of olives pounded with desalted anchovy fillets and capers, the whole being blended with olive oil and lemon juice, then seasoned with pepper. Serve on toast.

Tartlets, garnished. TARTELETTES GARNIES – Garnished tartlets are prepared and filled in the same way as barquettes; the only difference lies in their shape. Tartlets are baked in small round tins with plain or fluted borders.

Toast, garnished. TOASTS GARNIS – All recipes for garnished canapés can be used for garnished toast.

Tomatoes. TOMATES – Peel and seed the tomatoes. Cut them into dice or slices. Sprinkle with salt, leave them to stand for a time and season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper.

Tomatoes à l'antiboise. TOMATES À L'ANTIBOISE – Choose red, uniform, small tomatoes. Take out the seeds without damaging the flesh. Leave them for 1 hour in oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Garnish with a mixture of chopped tunny (tuna fish) in oil, hard-boiled eggs, capers, parsley, chervil and tarragon blended with a strongly flavoured mayonnaise to which anchovy essence has been added. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish or plate, sprinkle with the marinade, and garnish with fresh parsley and half slices of lemon cut with a fluted cutter.

Tomatoes, stuffed. TOMATES FARCIES – Prepare tomatoes as described in the recipe for Tomatoes à l'antiboise (see above). Garnish with a compound butter, purée, Russian salad, or a salpicon (q.v.).

Stuffed tomatoes presented in a hollowed-out cucumber

Tomatoes à la vinaigrette. TOMATES À LA VINAIGRETTE – Skin the tomatoes, take out the seeds and water and cut into slices or quarters. Put on a towel, cover with salt and leave them to render their liquor for 1 hour.

Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish, sprinkle with oil and vinegar, chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon. Sprinkle with freshly ground pepper and garnish with thin rounds of raw onion.

Tongue, pickled and smoked. LANGUE ÉCARLATE, FUMÉ – Cut into thin slices and serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish.

Trout, marinated. TRUITES MARINÉES – Cook very small trout in Court-bouillon XII (see COURT-BOUILLON). Leave them to cool in their cooking stock. Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Pour the stock over the fish and garnish with seeded and peeled slices of lemon, and fresh parsley.

Trout à l'orientale. TRUITES À L'ORIENTALE – Prepare and cook very small trout as indicated for Red mullet à l'orientale above. Arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish.

Trout, smoked. TRUITES FUMÉES – Garnish and serve with toast and lemon.

Truffles. TRUFFES – Cut cooked or raw truffles into dice or strips, season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, or with mayonnaise. Truffles can also be blended with jelly or with a brown Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE).

Tunny (tuna fish). THON – Marinate in oil, cut into dice, season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, or mayonnaise.

Tunny (tuna fish) à la nantaise. THON À LA NANTAISE – Cut the fish into slices. Cover with a thin coating of Horseradish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Arrange the slices two by two in a circle on a plate, alternating with rounds of cooked beetroot. Garnish the centre with a salad of mussels and potatoes. Sprinkle with chives and chopped tarragon.

Tunny (tuna fish) in oil. THON À L'HUILE – Arrange canned tunny on an hors-d'œuvre dish, dress with oil and garnish with capers or fresh parsley.

Vegetable boats, garnished. BARQUETTES DE LÉGUMES GARNIES – Pieces of vegetables, mainly beetroot and cucumber, shaped like boats, hollowed out and garnished in different ways.

All the fillings given for barquettes apply as garnishes for vegetable boats. The most usual garnishes for this kind of hors-d'œuvre are caviare, vegetable macédoine, purées, butter compounds, salpicons of shellfish.

Vegetable julienne. JULIENNE DE LÉGUMES – Cook the following fine julienne (q.v.) slowly in oil in a covered pan: 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) of the white part of leeks, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) celery and 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) onions. Season.

When three-quarters cooked add 50 g. (2 oz., 1 cup) raw mushrooms cut into julienne strips. Blend with fresh cream or mayonnaise, or leave as it is, according to what other dishes you are serving.

Whitebait, marinated. NONATS MARINÉS – Put the fish in a deep dish, and pour in a boiling marinade made with white wine. Cover and leave to cool before serving. Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish, sprinkle with chopped parsley, and surround with half slices of lemon cut with a fluted cutter.

Whitebait salad. SALADE DE NONATS – Put a twig of thyme, a bay leaf and some salt into a pot of water. Bring to the boil, put the fish in and boil for 1 minute. Drain, arrange in a salad bowl or an hors-d'œuvre dish, and sprinkle with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE).

Zampino – Boned and stuffed pigs' trotters. Cook and leave to cool. Cut into thin slices and arrange on an hors-d'œuvre dish, garnished with parsley. Zampino can be bought ready cooked in shops selling Italian produce.

HOT HORS-D'ŒUVRE. HORS-D'ŒUVRE CHAUDS –

Allumettes – Puff pastry rectangles, spread with a suitable mixture and baked in the oven.

Make Puff pastry (see DOUGH). Roll out to a thickness of ½ cm. (¼ inch) and cut into ribbons 7½ cm. (3 inches) long. Spread with a cold forcemeat of poultry or fish, and add the garnish appropriate to the recipe.

Cut the ribbons into rectangles about 2½ cm. (1 inch) wide. Put on a baking sheet and bake in the oven for 12 to 15 minutes. Arrange on a napkin and serve very hot.

Allumettes with anchovies I. ALLUMETTES AUX ANCHOIS – Spread with Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters.) Garnish with fillets of anchovy.

Allumettes with anchovies II. ALLUMETTES AUX ANCHOIS – Spread with Salpicon (q.v.) of fillets of anchovies and hard-boiled eggs blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Allumettes à l'andalouse – Spread with Poultry forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) seasoned with paprika, mixed with a salpicon of lean ham and onions cooked in butter, also seasoned with paprika.

Allumettes à la chalonaise – Spread with Poultry forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) to which diced cocks' combs and kidneys, mushrooms and truffles have been added.

Allumettes Chavette – Spread with Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Garnish with crayfish tails and truffles.

Allumettes à l'écarlate – Spread with Veal forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) to which a salpicon of pickled or smoked tongue has been added.

Allumettes à l'écoissaise – Spread with purée of haddock blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Allumettes à la florentine – Spread with spinach cooked in butter, blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), to which grated cheese has been added. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese and brown in the oven just before serving.

Anchovy tart with pissalat. TOURTE D'ANCHOIS AU PISSALAT – Roll out Lining paste (see DOUGH) 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick.

Line a large tart tin with the pastry, crimp the edges. Desalt fillets of anchovy, dry them well in a cloth and cover the pastry with them in a criss-cross pattern. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon finely chopped onions and distribute 20 black olives on top. Dress with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) olive oil mixed with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) pissalat (q.v.). Cook in a slow oven. Serve very hot.

Anchoyade I – Desalt and scrape fillets of anchovy and steep them for several minutes in olive oil to which chopped garlic and ground pepper have been added.

Arrange the fillets on large pieces of crust cut from the lower part of home-made bread. Crush the fillets onto the bread by pressing them with other pieces of bread cut into squares, which are then removed. The diners eat these squares one after the other, as they become impregnated with anchovy.

Moisten the crusts with the oil in which the fillets have soaked, and grill.

This Provençal dish is known in the Bouches-du-Rhône district under the name of quichet.

Anchoyade II – Desalt fillets of anchovy. Pound, moisten with a few tablespoons olive oil and vinegar.

Spread this purée on large slices of bread. Cover with slices of hard-boiled eggs and minced onions. Add a few drops of olive oil, season with freshly ground pepper and heat lightly in the oven.

Attereaux – Name given to the method of cooking on skewers, in which the ingredients, instead of being grilled, are coated with a sauce, dipped into egg and breadcrumbs, and fried.

All the ingredients are first cooked, then cut into pieces. Any ingredient used for attereaux must be quite cold before it is put on a wooden or metal skewer. The different ingredients used are garnished according to their nature with mushrooms, truffles, etc.

The sauce must be thick and almost cold. When the skewer is full and coated with sauce it is left to get quite cold before it is dipped into egg and breadcrumbs. Attereaux are fried just before serving, drained and dried, arranged on a napkin and garnished with fresh parsley.

If wooden skewers are used they are taken out when the cooking is finished and replaced by silver skewers for serving.

Use short metal skewers instead of wooden ones if possible. This does away with the necessity of replacing the skewers after cooking.

In ancient times attereaux were served as an entrée volante or small entrée. They were served in a circle on a crust of fried sandwich bread, or on a foundation of rice.

All kinds of meat, fish, shellfish and a variety of other food, cut into small square pieces, can be used for attereaux.

The sauce can be white or brown, made from meat, fish or vegetable stock, according to the principal ingredient of the attereaux. This ingredient determines the name given to the attereaux on the menu.

Attereaux à l'écarlate – Pickled or smoked tongue, mushrooms and truffles coated with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) with tomato purée added.

Attereaux à la Villeroi – Brains, cocks' combs or combs of other birds, foie gras, sweetbreads, cocks' kidneys, etc. The dish may be completed with the additions of mushrooms, truffles, artichoke hearts, pickled tongue, ham, etc. Poultry or other cold meat can be used in the same way. Coat with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE).

Attereaux of brain à l'ancienne. ATTEREAUX DE CERVELLA À L'ANCIENNE – Poached brain, mushrooms and truffles coated with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE).

Attereaux of brain à l'italienne. ATTEREAUX DE CERVELLA À L'ITALIENNE – Poached brain, ham and mushrooms coated with Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE).

Attereaux of brain à la mirepoix. ATTEREAUX DE CERVELLA À LA MIREPOIX – Poached brain and ham coated with mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables blended with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE).

Attereaux of chicken livers à la duxelles. ATTEREAUX DE FOIES DE VOLAILLE À LA DUXELLES – Chicken livers browned lightly in butter and mushrooms coated with Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE).

Attereaux of cocks' combs à l'ancienne. ATTEREAUX DE CRÊTES DE COQ À L'ANCIENNE – Cocks' combs stuffed à la duxelles (q.v.), ham and mushrooms coated with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) with tomatoes.

Attereaux of lobster. ATTEREAUX DE HOMARD – Lobster, mushrooms and truffles coated with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) or Shellfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Attereaux of oysters. ATTEREAUX D'HUÎTRES – Poached oysters and mushrooms coated with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock.

Attereaux of Parmesan, also known as à la royale and à la princesse. ATTEREAUX AU PARMESAN – Cook a stiff semolina with Parmesan. Spread out to cool on a baking sheet in a  $\frac{1}{2}$ -cm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$ -inch) layer. When quite cold, cut into circlets 2½ cm. (1 inch) in diameter. Put these on the skewers, alternating with rounds of Gruyère cheese. Coat with egg and breadcrumbs, but not with any sauce.

Attereaux of sweetbreads. ATTEREAUX DE RIS D'AGNEAU, RIS DE VEAU – Sweetbreads, mushrooms and truffles coated with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE).

Attereaux of various vegetables. ATTEREAUX DE LÉGUMES – Cooked or parboiled vegetables, such as artichoke hearts, carrots, celeriac, pumpkin, etc. One of these or various combinations can be used.

Coat with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Barquettes, garnished. BARQUETTES GARNIES – Oval-shaped tartlets lined with different kinds of pastry (puff pastry, ordinary lining (pie) pastry, etc.) baked blind and filled with different ingredients.

Roll out the pastry 2½ mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) thick. Stamp the dough out with a fluted oval pastry-cutter. Butter barquette baking tins, plain or fluted. Put the cut-out pieces of pastry into the moulds, pressing well down so that they cling to all sides of the tins.

Prick the pastry lining the base of the tins to prevent blistering. Put greaseproof paper in each and fill the tins with dried peas or rice. Bake in a moderate oven for 12 to 15 minutes. Remove the paper and the peas or rice. Take the pastry out of the tins, brush with egg and put back into the oven for a few minutes to dry, leaving the oven door open.

This way of preparing pastry is called baking blind (unfilled). The reason for filling the tartlets with dried vegetables or cereals (which are taken out after cooking and can be used again) is to keep the pastry uniformly hollow.

Fillings for barquettes. The ingredients of the fillings vary according to the recipe chosen. The most usual are purées, ragoûts and salpicons. You can also fill barquettes with the garnishes given for patties, tartlets, etc.

Once filled, serve the barquettes as they are, or sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs or grated cheese and brown under the grill. Decorate as indicated in the recipe.

Serving barquettes. Cover a dish with a napkin or a paper doyley and arrange the barquettes on it. Garnish with parsley.

Barquettes can be served as a small entrée or entrée volante. In this case they should be baked in slightly bigger moulds than for hors-d'œuvre.

Barquettes à l'américaine – Fill with a salpicon (q.v.) of spiny lobster and Lobster à l'américaine (see LOBSTER), sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and put in the oven for a short time.

Barquettes with anchovies. BARQUETTES AUX ANCHOIS – Desalt anchovy filets. Dice mushrooms and onions and cook slowly in butter. Blend all together with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Bake the barquettes blind and fill them with the above salpicon. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs fried in butter and drained. Put into a very hot oven for a few minutes.

Barquettes à la bouquetière – Blend mixed vegetables with Béchamel or Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Fill the barquettes and put on each a small bouquet of asparagus tips.

Barquettes with chestnuts. BARQUETTES AUX MARRONS – Use Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) and bake cases for barquettes, as indicated above. Fill with Chestnut purée (see CHESTNUT). Pile the purée into a dome and smooth the surface. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese. Pour melted butter over it and brown in a hot oven.

Barquettes with mussels. BARQUETTES DE MOULES – Prepare Mussels à la poulette (see MUSSELS), fill the barquettes, sprinkle fried breadcrumbs over them, and put in the oven for a few minutes.

Barquettes with oysters. BARQUETTES D'HUÎTRES – Poach the oysters and drain. Fill the barquettes and cover with Oyster sauce (see SAUCE). Brown in a very hot oven.

Barquettes with shrimps. BARQUETTES DE CREVETTES – Make a ragoût of shrimp tails. Fill the barquettes. Spoon over some Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with cheese and brown under the grill.

Beurrecks à la turque I – Dice 225 g. (8 oz., 2 cups) Gruyère cheese, mix with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thick, almost cold, Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and leave to get quite cold.

Divide the mixture into small portions of about 50 g. (2 oz.) and mould into cigar shapes. Make some ordinary noodle paste (see NOODLES, Fresh noodles), roll out wafer thin, enclose each portion of cheese mixture in an oval piece of noodle paste, dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry just before serving.

Beurrecks à la turque II – Make the mixture of cheese and Béchamel sauce as in the above recipe.

Make ordinary noodle paste, roll out wafer thin, cut into round pieces, put the cheese and Béchamel mixture on the paste and fold it like a turnover. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry just before serving.

Blinis (Russian cookery) – Blinis are pancakes made with yeast, very popular in Russia. They are often served with fresh caviare sprinkled with melted butter, or with sour cream.

First method. Dilute 7 g. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  oz.) yeast in 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) warm milk. Mix, do not let curdle, pass through a strainer. Sieve 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous cup) white flour and 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) buckwheat flour, and mix together with a pinch of salt. Put in a bowl and add the liquid. Mix in the yolks of 3 eggs. The paste should have the consistency of pancake batter and care should be taken to keep it light.

Leave to rise in a warm place for 2 hours.

Add 2 beaten egg whites and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) whipped cream. Cover and leave to rise for 20 minutes.

Second method. Make a yeast batter using 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sifted flour, 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) yeast, and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) warm milk. Leave in a warm place for 2 hours.

Add 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous cup) flour, a pinch of salt, 2 egg yolks and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) warm milk. Mix. Add 2 beaten egg whites.

Cover and leave to rise for 30 minutes.

Third method. Put into a bowl 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) buckwheat flour and 25 g. (1 oz.) yeast. Moisten with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) warm water. Leave to ferment in a cool place for 4 hours.

Add 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous cup) fine white flour, a pinch of salt, 2 egg yolks and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) warm cream.

Mix, add 2 firmly beaten egg whites and half their volume of whipped cream, and leave to rise for 20 minutes.

Blinis can also be made of rice flour or maize (corn) flour.

Cooking of blinis. In France, blinis are cooked in the same way as ordinary pancakes (crêpes).

In Russia, blinis are fried in special cast-iron frying pans, divided into flat 'nests', in which up to 6 small, individual pancakes can be cooked at once. They are served very hot, with melted butter, sour cream, chopped hard-boiled eggs in melted butter, caviare, smoked salmon, kilki, salted herring, and other similar 'fishy' foods.

Blinis with carrots. BLINIS AUX CAROTTES – Dice 1 tablespoon carrots, cook in butter and pour the blini mixture over. Continue as usual.

Blinis with caviare. BLINIS AU CAVIAR – Prepare the blinis according to one of the methods described above.

Serve piping hot with fresh caviare, melted butter and sour cream.

Blinis with eggs. BLINIS AUX OEUFS – Before putting the blini mixture into a buttered frying pan, sprinkle into the pan 1 tablespoon chopped hard-boiled eggs.

Cook the blinis in the usual way.

Lithuanian blinis. BLINIS LIVONIENS – Mix in a bowl 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) flour and 4 whole eggs. Add, little by little, 4 glasses of milk, a pinch of salt and a pinch of sugar.

Add 4 beaten egg whites and 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) whipped cream.

Cook the blinis in the usual way.

Brioche, garnished. BRIOCHES GARNIES – These brioche must be very small. They are often served as patties.

Use ordinary unsweetened brioche dough. Bake the brioche in very small fluted moulds in the shape of Brioche à tête (see BRIOCHE).

Leave them to cool. Remove the heads, keeping them to serve as lids. Scoop out the brioche, taking care not to break them. Dry them for a few minutes in the oven with the door open.

Small Brioche à tête may be filled with the same ingredients as given for Patties (see below). When garnished, put the heads back on the brioche and put in the oven for a few seconds.

Small garnished brioche can be used as an accompaniment for large dishes of various kinds.

Brochettes – Prepare brochettes according to the recipes given in their alphabetical order. (See SKEWER, BEEF, Fillet of beef on skewers, MUTTON, Fillets of mutton on skewers.)

Brochettes served as an hors-d'œuvre should be very much smaller than those prepared for an entrée.

Brochettes de Parme – Another name for Attareaux of Parmesan. (See Attareaux above.)

Brochettes of sweetbreads. BROCHETTES DE RIS D'AGNEAU, RIS DE VEAU – Parboil or braise lamb or calf sweetbreads, cut into square pieces. Put them on metal skewers, alternating with rectangles of lean blanched bacon or lean ham and, if desired, with cooked, sliced mushrooms.

Brush the brochettes with melted butter, roll in fine breadcrumbs and grill under a moderate heat.

Cassettes (small garnished cases) – Round or oval receptacles made of ovenproof china, glass or metal, filled with ragoûts (q.v.), salpicons (q.v.) or similar ingredients. Recipes for these are given elsewhere; they are the same as for barquettes, patties, pies, tartlets, etc.

According to the nature of the garnish used the cases are sprinkled with breadcrumbs or grated cheese and put under the grill. Alternatively, they may be sprinkled with well-drained fried breadcrumbs, and put in the oven. A third possibility is to decorate the cases with truffles, mushrooms, etc.

Canapés or garnished toast. CANAPÉS, TOASTS GARNIS – Cut the canapés from a sandwich loaf, having first removed the crust. Shape them, as required, into squares, rectangles, ovals or rounds. Toast the slices on both sides, butter them or spread with whatever ingredient is indicated in the chosen recipe (forcemeat, scrambled eggs, purées, salpicon (q.v.), etc.).

Garnish the canapés as indicated, sprinkle with freshly grated breadcrumbs, fried breadcrumbs or grated cheese, according to the garnish used, and grill, or brown them in the oven. Arrange on a paper doyley or napkin and decorate with green curly parsley.

Garnishes for canapés are numerous. Apart from those given in the recipes which follow, you can use all those indicated in the section on Croûtes (see below).

Canapés with bloater. CANAPÉS AU BLOATER – Cut sandwich loaf into rounds and toast. Heap the bloater purée, to which Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and butter have been added, on the rounds, and heat in the oven.

Alternatively, garnish the canapés as indicated above, but sprinkle them with grated Parmesan cheese and brown them in the oven.

Canapés with hard-boiled eggs. CANAPÉS AUX ŒUFS DURS – Spread a salpicon of hard-boiled eggs blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), on rectangular pieces of toast. Cover each piece with two rounds of hard-boiled egg. Fry breadcrumbs in butter, drain well, sprinkle on the canapés, and brown lightly in the oven.

Canapés with scrambled eggs. CANAPÉS AUX ŒUFS BROUILLÉS – Cover rounds of toast with scrambled eggs arranged in a dome. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and brown in the oven.

Canapés à la florentine – Toast rounds of sandwich bread. Parboil some spinach, drain and rub through a sieve. Blend with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and spread on the toast. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and brown in the oven.

Canapés with Gruyère cheese. CANAPÉS AU FROMAGE DE GRUYÈRE – Spread the canapés with a layer of thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) to which grated Gruyère cheese and a pinch of cayenne have been added. Scatter diced Gruyère cheese over the canapés and brown in the oven.

Canapés can be made in the same way with Cheshire, Edam or Parmesan cheese.

Canapés with ham. CANAPÉS AU JAMBON – Cut a sandwich loaf into oval-shaped slices and toast. Make a salpicon of York or Prague ham and blend it with a concentrated Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) to which chopped parsley has been added. Spread the salpicon on the toast.

Fry slices of ham in butter and put one on each canapé. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs fried in butter.

Canapés with sardines. CANAPÉS AUX SARDINES – Toast rectangular pieces of bread. Cover with fillets of sardines. Heat for a few moments in the oven. Arrange on a napkin.

Alternatively, make a purée of sardines in oil, mixed with hard-boiled eggs. Rub through a sieve and add a little English mustard. Spread on the canapés and arrange fillets of sardines in oil on top.

Sprinkle with breadcrumbs which have been fried in butter and drained well. Put in the oven for a few minutes. Season with a pinch of cayenne and serve.

Canapés Victoria – Make a salpicon of lobster or spiny lobster, truffles and mushrooms, all cut into very small dice, blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and finished off with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Spread toast with this salpicon. Fry breadcrumbs in butter, drain well, and sprinkle on the canapés. Put them in the oven for a few moments.

Cannelons, garnished. CANNELONS GARNIS – These can be of rectangular shape or made as cornets.

Rectangular. Roll out puff pastry in rectangles measuring 4 cm. (1½ inches) by 10 cm. (4 inches).

Using a forcing-bag with a plain nozzle make a line of cold forcemeat or other mixture in the middle of the rectangles. Moisten the border all around the forcemeat, and cover with another rectangle of puff pastry. Brush over with egg and bake in the oven.

Cornets. Cut the dough into straight ribbons and roll around special 'funnels' (see CORNETS).

When the cornets are baked, take the funnels out and fill the cornets. Use salpicons (q.v.), meat purée, fish or shellfish purée, etc., as fillings. The purées should be rather thick.

All the garnishes given for barquettes, patties, cassollettes, and similar dishes can be used for cannelons.

Cassollettes – Individual glass, metal or porcelain containers. The most usual ingredients for cassollettes are purées, ragoûts (q.v.), salpicons (q.v.) and similar preparations.

Cassollettes without a border. Fill the cassollettes with the preparation indicated.

Sprinkle with breadcrumbs fried in butter and drained, or, according to the recipe used, with grated cheese. Brown for a few moments in the oven.

Cassollettes with a border of Duchess potato. Use a forcing-bag and pipe a thin border of Duchess potato (see POTATOES) round the edge of the cassollette.

Fill with the preparation indicated, sprinkle with breadcrumbs fried in butter and drained, or with grated cheese, and brown in the oven.

Cassollettes topped with Duchess potato. Prepare the cassollettes as indicated in the above recipe. Fill as described and cover with a layer of Duchess potato (see POTATOES) pressing down on the edges to seal in the contents. Brush the top with egg and brown in the oven.

Cassollettes with border and covered with puff pastry. Put a narrow band of puff pastry round the rim of the cassollettes. Fill them with the desired preparation, which should be cold or lukewarm.

Cover the cassollettes with a round of puff pastry. Press well onto the border. Decorate with flower-shaped ornaments or other motifs made from puff pastry. Brush with egg and bake in the oven for 10 to 12 minutes.

Cassolettes ambassadrice – Make a lid and a border for the cassolettes, using Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Fill with a ragoût of chicken livers. Put in the oven for a few minutes.

Cassolettes bouquetière – Make the border of the cassolettes with Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Fill with a macédoine of vegetables with cream.

Put in the oven. When removed from the oven put 1 tablespoon asparagus tips cooked in butter, and a little knob of cauliflower, on each cassolette.

Cassolettes à la florentine (with meat) – Use Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) to make the top of the cassolettes. Put 1 tablespoon spinach leaves cooked in butter at the bottom. Put 1 tablespoon salpicon of chicken blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) on the spinach. Brown in the oven.

Cassolettes à la gauloise – Use Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) to make the border of the cassolettes. Fill with a salpicon of cocks' combs and kidneys, truffles and mushrooms blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Brown in the oven. When removed from the pan put a cock's comb fried à la Villeroi on each cassolette.

Cassolettes with lobster or spiny lobster. CASSOLETTES AU HOMARD, À LA LANGOUSTE – Make the border or top of whatever preparation you desire. Fill with a salpicon of lobster or spiny lobster blended with cream and finished off with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Brown in the oven.

Cassolettes marquise – Make the border of puff pastry. Fill with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH) to which diced truffles and mushrooms have been added. Bake in the oven.

Cassolettes Régence – Make a border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Fill with a salpicon of breast of chicken and truffles cooked in Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Bake in the oven. Put a large slice of truffle on each cassolette when removed from the oven, and cover with a small bouquet of asparagus tips cooked in butter.

Cassolettes Sagan (without a border) – Fill with a salpicon of truffles and mushrooms cooked in Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese. Brown in the oven. When taken out, put on each cassolette a very small slice of calf's brain sautéed in butter.

Cassolettes of sweetbread. CASSOLETTES DE RIS D'AGNEAU, RIS DE VEAU – These can have a border or be served plain. Fill with a salpicon of sweetbread blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) to which truffles and mushrooms can be added, if desired. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and brown in the oven.

Cassolettes à la vénitienne (without a border) – Line the bottom of the cassolettes with diced macaroni à l'italienne. Add 1 tablespoon ragoût of sweetbreads, truffles and mushrooms, if desired. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and brown in the oven.

Choux (U.S. cream puffs) – Using Ordinary chou paste (see DOUGH), make small choux (cream puffs), the size of pigeons' eggs.

After the choux are cooked, split the sides open and fill with whatever preparation is indicated in the recipe used. Heat for a few moments in the oven.

If the choux are small enough they can be used as a garnish for large dishes, or served as savouries. Choux can be filled with all the preparations recommended for barquettes, cassolettes, tartlets and other similar dishes.

Choux with cheese. CHOUX AU FROMAGE – Filled with a cream made with Cheshire, Gruyère or Parmesan cheese.

Choux à la maraîchère – Filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of carrots, leeks, celery – all cooked in butter and blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Choux à la Nantua – Filled with a purée of crayfish to which chopped truffles have been added.

Choux à la royale – Filled with a purée of truffles with cream.

Choux à la Saint-Hubert – Filled with a purée of game blended with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock.

Choux à la strasbourgeoise – Filled with a salpicon of foie gras and truffles blended with concentrated Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Choux à la toulousaine – Filled with a salpicon of sweetbreads, cocks' combs and cocks' kidneys, mushrooms and truffles blended with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Choux au vert-pré – Filled with a purée of green beans, green peas and asparagus tips blended with cream.

Cierniki (Polish cookery) – Mix in a terrine 225 g. (8 oz.) pressed white cheese, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sifted flour, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) melted butter and 3 eggs. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Blend these ingredients with a spatula and gradually work in a further 75 g. (3 oz., ¾ cup) flour.

Experiment with poaching 1 teaspoon of this mixture in boiling water. If it is not thick enough add a little more flour, if it is too thick, lighten it with 1 or 2 tablespoons cream.

Sprinkle flour on a table and roll the mixture out on it. Shape into small galettes 5 cm. (2 inches) in diameter and 1 cm. (½ inch) thick. Poach for 15 to 18 minutes in boiling water, drain, arrange in a pie dish and pour melted butter over them.

Cocks' combs. CRÊTES DE COQ – For two recipes using cocks' combs see Atteraux and Fritot in this section.

Cocks' combs Villeroi. CRÊTES DE COQ VILLEROI – Drain cocks' combs cooked in a white court-bouillon (q.v.) and put them in a lukewarm Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE).

Take them out and dip them one by one in finely grated breadcrumbs. Each cock's comb must be completely covered. Dip in beaten egg and again in breadcrumbs.

Fry just before serving and heap on a napkin or arrange in a nest of straw potatoes. Garnish with fried parsley.

Serve with Tomato sauce or Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Stuffed cocks' combs Villeroi. CRÊTES DE COQ FARCIES VILLEROI – Choose very large cocks' combs. Cook, and then open them on the fleshy side without cutting right through. Stuff them with a little forcemeat. Complete the cooking and serving as in the preceding recipe.

Cocks' combs can be stuffed with forcemeats, or purées of mushrooms, foie gras, different vegetables, duxelles (q.v.), brunoise (q.v.), portugaise (q.v.), etc.

Cocks' kidneys. ROGNONS DE COQ – Cook kidneys in Court-bouillon 1 (see COURT-BOUILLON). Then follow any of the recipes for cocks' combs in this section.

Colombines – Line buttered tartlet tins with a semolina mixture flavoured with Parmesan cheese. Fill the tins with a salpicon (q.v.), a purée or any other mixture generally used for barquettes, patties and similar dishes. Cover with a thin layer of semolina.

Dip the tins into warm water and turn out the tartlets. Dip them in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry. Serve with fried parsley.

Craquelins – Croquettes prepared with stuffed pancaques (crêpes). This hors-d'œuvre is better known under the name of pannequet.

Crayfish. ÉCREVISSES – Small crayfish, cooked à la nage, à la marinière, or à la liégeoise, can be served as hot hors-d'œuvre. Crayfish tails are often used as the principal ingredient in hot hors-d'œuvre such as fitters, croquettes, stuffed potatoes, rissoles, soufflés or tartlets.

Cromesquis – See Kromesnies in this section.

Croquets – A variety of croquettes made of pasta, macaroni, spaghetti, etc.

Begin by poaching the pasta in salted water. Drain, and cut into dice. Blend with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and add grated cheese.

This preparation can be finished off with lean ham or scarlet tongue cut into julienne (q.v.) strips. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Croquettes – Croquettes served as hot hors-d'œuvre are composed of one or several preparations cut into small dice (or, in certain cases, chopped). They are blended with a white or brown sauce based on meat, fish or vegetable stock. (See CROQUETTES.)

Beef croquettes I. CROQUETTES DE BOEUF – Minced boiled beef, blended with a beaten egg; and chopped parsley. Shape according to taste.

Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef croquettes II. CROQUETTES DE BOEUF – Salpicon of boiled beef, mushrooms and lean ham, blended with concentrated Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE), and shaped according to taste.

Serve with Piquant sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef croquettes III. CROQUETTES DE BOEUF – Salpicon of boiled beef and lean ham, blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Shape according to taste. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef croquettes IV. CROQUETTES DE BOEUF – Two-thirds salpicon of boiled beef, one-third rice cooked in meat stock. Shape according to taste.

Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef croquettes V. CROQUETTES DE BOEUF – Salpicon of corned beef (pressed beef) blended with Demi-glaze sauce or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef croquettes made of left-overs. Many preparations can be made by adding to the boiled beef different ingredients like spinach, lettuce, celery or other chopped vegetables, grated cheese, chopped onion cooked in butter, tomato fondue, purées of fresh and dried vegetables, mirepoix of vegetables, bread soaked in bouillon or in milk, etc.

Bone-marrow croquettes. CROQUETTES D'AMOURETTES – Salpicon of bone-marrow and mushrooms blended with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Shape to look like corks and serve Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) separately.

Brain croquettes. CROQUETTES DE CERVELLE – Prepare like Bone-marrow croquettes using a salpicon of sheep's or calf's brain. Shape according to taste.

Cod croquettes. CROQUETTES DE MORUE – These are also called fish balls or fish cakes. They are made of two-thirds cod, which should be cooked, drained, and cut into pieces, mixed with one-third Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Shape into balls.

Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Cress croquettes. CROQUETTES CRESSONNIÈRE – Purée of watercress to which Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) have been added. Blend with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with mixed herbs. Shape according to taste.

Fish croquettes. CROQUETTES DE POISSONS – A salpicon composed solely of the fish prescribed, blended with Béchamel or Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Shape according to taste and serve with a sauce in character with the fish used for the croquettes.

These croquettes are usually served in the shape of balls. Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) should be added to the ingredients and the croquettes served with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Diced mushrooms and truffles can also be added to the ingredients of fish croquettes.

Foie gras croquettes à la Périgieux. CROQUETTES DE FOIE GRAS À LA PÉRIGUEUX – Salpicon of foie gras and truffles, blended with a very strong Demi-glaze sauce flavoured with Madeira, or with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Shape into little flat cakes, and serve with Périgieux sauce (see SAUCE).

Foie gras croquettes à la reine. CROQUETTES DE FOIE GRAS À LA REINE – Salpicon of foie gras, bound with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Shape into little flat cakes and serve with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE), adding truffles.

Game croquettes. CROQUETTES DE GIBIER – Salpicon of game left-overs, mushrooms and truffles, blended with very concentrated Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE). Serve with demi-glaze sauce based on concentrated game stock.

On the menu, name the croquettes after the game which is predominant in their preparation, e.g., pheasant croquettes, venison croquettes, etc.

Croquettes can be prepared from a mixture of different kinds of game.

Lobster croquettes I. CROQUETTES DE HOMARD – Salpicon of lobster to which diced mushrooms and truffles have been added, blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Serve with White wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Lobster croquettes II. CROQUETTES DE HOMARD – Salpicon of lobster, mushrooms and truffles, blended with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE), finished with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) or any shellfish butter.

Serve with Lobster sauce (see SAUCE).

Lobster croquettes III. CROQUETTES DE HOMARD – Two-thirds salpicon of lobster, one-third rice cooked in meat or fish stock.

Serve with Lobster sauce (see SAUCE) made with white wine.

This method of preparation applies to all shellfish. It is a practical way of using up left-overs.

If there is not a sufficient quantity of left-overs, potato purée or rice can be added to the salpicon.

Macaroni croquettes valentinoise. CROQUETTES DE MACARONI VALENTINOISE – Salpicon of big macaroni, blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) to which grated cheese has been added.

Spread the macaroni on a shallow dish in a layer 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. Add a layer of salpicon (q.v.) à la Nantua to which diced truffles have been added. Cover with a second layer of the macaroni mixture. Leave to cool.

Divide into portions, shape into little rectangles. Dip into egg and breadcrumbs and fry. Serve with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE).

Meat croquettes (made with various meat left-overs). CROQUETTES DE VIANDES – Salpicon of the meat blended with Allemande sauce, Demi-glaze sauce or Tomato sauce (see SAUCE), depending on the meat used.

The salpicon can be finished off with diced mushrooms and truffles, smoked or pickled tongue or ham.

Montrouge croquettes. CROQUETTES MONTROUGE – Mushroom purée blended with yolks of eggs, mixed with chopped lean ham.

These croquettes are mainly used as garnish and should be very small. If they are used as garnish for a fish dish, the chopped ham must be left out. Shape to look like very small eggs.

Mussel croquettes. CROQUETTES DE MOULES – Salpicon of mussels and mushrooms, blended with thick Béchamel or Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock.

Serve with White wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Noodle croquettes. CROQUETTES DE NOUILLES – Prepare, cook and serve as Macaroni croquettes valentinoise (see above) using ordinary or small noodles instead of macaroni.

Oyster croquettes à la normande. CROQUETTES D'ŒUFS À LA NORMANDE – Salpicon of poached oysters, mushrooms and truffles blended with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Shape into flat cakes and serve with Normande sauce (see SAUCE).

Veal croquettes (Scarnati)

Oyster croquettes Victoria. CROQUETTES D'ŒUFS VICTORIA – Salpicon of lobster, mushrooms and truffles blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Put in the middle of each croquette a poached oyster coated with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) and finished with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) or any other shellfish butter. Shape into flat cakes.

Serve with Lobster sauce (see SAUCE).

Potato croquettes. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE – Potato croquettes are usually served without sauce.

Potato croquettes Dauphiné – See POTATOES, Dauphiné potatoes.

Potato croquettes à la florentine – CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA FLORENTINE – Two-thirds Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) mixed with one-third spinach cooked in butter. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) grated Parmesan cheese for each 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) potato and spinach mixture.

Potato croquettes à la niçoise. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA NIÇOISE – Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) mixed with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thick Tomato fondue à la niçoise (see TOMATO) for each 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) potato.

Potato croquettes with Parmesan cheese. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA PARMESANE – Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) with grated Parmesan cheese. For each 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) potato add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) cheese.

Cheshire or Gruyère cheese can also be added to potato croquettes.

Poultry croquettes. CROQUETTES DE VOLAILLE – Salpicon of poultry meat, mushrooms and truffles, blended with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Serve with Demi-glace sauce, Périgueux sauce or Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Printanière croquettes – Spring vegetables blended with Béchamel sauce or Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Serve with a Cream sauce (see SAUCE) to which parsley and chervil have been added.

Rice croquettes. CROQUETTES DE RIZ – Rice cooked in meat, fish or vegetable stock, plain or with grated cheese added.

Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Rice croquettes à l'américaine. CROQUETTES DE RIZ À L'AMÉRICAIN – Rice cooked in fish stock to which a salpicon of Lobster à l'américaine (see LOBSTER) has been added.

Serve with American sauce (see SAUCE).

Curried rice croquettes. CROQUETTES DE RIZ À L'INDIENNE – Rice cooked in a meat, fish or vegetable stock to which is added a salpicon of onions, cooked in butter until soft, and blended with a few tablespoons of Curry sauce (see SAUCE).

Rice croquettes à la piémontaise. CROQUETTES DE RIZ À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Risotto à la piémontaise (see RICE) served with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Spiny lobster croquettes. CROQUETTES DE LANGOUSTE – As for Lobster croquettes (see above) using a salpicon of spiny lobster instead of lobster.

Vegetable croquettes (various). CROQUETTES DE LÉGUMES – Salpicon of cooked vegetable, blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Serve with Tomato sauce or Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Vegetable croquettes are usually made from artichoke hearts, carrots, celeriac or French beans. They can also be prepared using a macédoine of vegetables.

Croquettes à la viennoise – Salpicon of lamb sweetreads, lean ham, mushrooms and chopped onions, cooked in butter until soft, and blended with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) seasoned with paprika. Shape into small rectangles, and fry. Arrange in a circle and garnish the centre with a heap of fried onions.

Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) seasoned with paprika.

Croustades – Small, filled croustades, made of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES), rice, semolina or Lining paste (see DOUGH) are used as hors-d'œuvre.

Croustades of duchess potatoes. Make a very thick duchess potato mixture. Roll out on a floured table to a thickness of about  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  inches).

Cut out pieces about 5 cm. (2 inches) across, using a pastry-cutter. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs twice.

With a smaller pastry-cutter mark out the lid of the croustade by pressing on it. Fry the croustades. Remove the lids. Hollow out the croustades and fill as directed in the recipe chosen. Cover with the lids.

Serve the croustades on a napkin or paper doyley.

Croustades of rice or semolina. Prepare as described above, but using rice or semolina cooked in a meat, fish or vegetable stock, bound with egg yolks, and spread on a slab to cool.

Croustades made of lining paste (tart pastry). Line croustade moulds with lining paste, following the directions given for barquettes. Bake the pastry blind. Garnish as described in the recipe chosen.

Croustades à l'alsacienne – Make the croustades using Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Fill with braised sauerkraut. Put on each croustade a slice of ham and a round of poached Strasbourg sausage.

Croustades à l'anversoise – Make the croustades using duchess potatoes. Fill with hop shoots with cream.

Croustades à la bretonne – Make the croustades using duchess potatoes. Fill with a purée of Fresh white beans à la bretonne (see BEAN).

Croustades à la forestière – Make the croustades using duchess potatoes. Cut out with an oval pastry-cutter. Fill with morels sautéed with parsley. Put on each croustade a small rectangle of blanched lean bacon browned in butter.

Croustades à la grecque – Make rice croustades and cut into oval shapes. Fill with Tomato fondue à la grecque (see TOMATO). Put on each croustade 3 onion rings which have been dipped in batter and fried.

Croustades à la marinère – Make the croustades using Lining paste (see DOUGH). Fill with a ragoût of Mussels à la marinère (see MUSSEL).

Croustades à la Montrouge – Make the croustades using lining paste. Fill with a purée of mushrooms with cream.

Croustades à la napolitaine – Make the croustades using lining paste. Fill with Spaghetti à la napolitaine (see SPAGHETTI).

Croustades à la nivernaise – Make the croustades using Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Fill with very small glazed carrots. Put on each croustade a bouquet of very small glazed onions.

Croustades à la toulousaine – Make the croustades using lining paste. Fill with a ragoût of cocks' kidneys and force-meat blended with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE). Put on each croustade a small slice of calf's sweetbread, a slice of truffle and a cock's comb.

Croustades vert-pré – Make the croustades using duchess potatoes. Fill with a mixture of equal parts diced French beans, peas and asparagus tips blended with butter.

Croustades Vichy – Make rice croustades. Fill with Carrots à la Vichy (see CARROTS).

Apart from all the special recipes given for croustades they can also be made according to the recipes given for barquettes and similar dishes.

Croûtes, garnished. CROÛTES GARNIES – Cut slices of stale sandwich loaf into rounds 5 cm. (2 inches) in diameter and 2½ cm. (1 inch) thick, using a biscuit-cutter.

With a biscuit-cutter of smaller diameter, mark the top of the croûtes firmly but without cutting right through.

Fry in butter until golden brown. Drain and hollow out.

Garnish according to the selected recipe.

Alternatively, instead of frying the croûtes in butter, spread them with butter and brown in the oven.

Croûtes à l'ambassadrice – Garnish with a purée of breast of chicken (or other poultry) in Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Put a large slice of truffle and a small bouquet of mirepoix of vegetables on each croûte.

Anchovy croûtes. CROÛTES AUX ANCHOIS – Cut slices of a sandwich loaf in round or rectangular pieces. Fry them in sizzling butter. Desalt anchovy fillets and cut into thin strips. Put these strips on the croûtes.

Sprinkle with breadcrumbs fried in butter and seasoned with cayenne. Put in a very hot oven for a few moments.

Arrange on a napkin or on a paper doyley and garnish with fresh parsley.

Croûtes with bone-marrow. CROÛTES À LA MOELLE – Garnish with bone-marrow cut into dice and poached. Sprinkle with a little chopped shallot. Pour concentrated and thickened veal stock on the croûtes and brown in the oven. Before serving put 2 or 3 slices of bone-marrow on each croûte. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Croûtes Brillat-Savarin – Garnish with a salpicon of hard-boiled eggs, mushrooms and truffles blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Make a criss-cross pattern of anchovy fillets on each croûte. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and brown.

Croûtes cardinal – Garnish with a salpicon of lobster and truffles blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) finished with Lobster butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and brown. When ready, put a slice of lobster and 2 slivers of truffles on each croûte.

Cheese croûtes. CROÛTES AU FROMAGE – Garnish with a salpicon of Gruyère cheese. Season with paprika and grated nutmeg. Sprinkle grated cheese and melted butter on the croûtes and brown.

Croûtes à la Clamart (Vegetarian recipe) – Garnish with a purée of fresh peas mixed with fresh cream.

Devil'd croûtes. CROÛTES À LA DIABLE – Garnish with a salpicon of York ham and mushrooms blended with a strong Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), seasoned with a pinch of cayenne. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and brown.

Croûtes Dubarry – Garnish with florets of cauliflower cooked in butter. Coat with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with grated cheese, and brown.

Croûtes à la livonienne – Garnish with a purée of soft roes of smoked herring with the addition of Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Put a little salpicon of fillets of smoked herrings and tart apples on each croûte. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and brown.

Croûtes à la lyonnaise – Garnish with diced boiled beef sautéed in butter and mixed with an equal quantity of diced onions tossed in butter. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs, pour butter over the croûtes, and brown. Pour a little lemon juice or vinegar on them and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mushroom croûtes. CROÛTES AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Garnish with a ragoût of small mushrooms à l'allemande.

Mushroom croûtes are made from small, round, crusty rolls. Scoop out the rolls, butter them and brown in the oven. The croûtes can also be made from French bread cut thick slices and prepared in the same way as the rolls.

Tourte de champignons à la crème is also sometimes called mushroom croûte.

Croûtes à la paysanne I – Garnish with coarsely chopped vegetables cooked in butter until soft. Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown.

Croûtes à la paysanne II – Garnish with stock-pot vegetables chopped and mixed with grated cheese. Finish as in the previous recipe.

Croûtes à la provençale – Garnish with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Put 4 black, stoned olives, each surrounded by a fillet of anchovy, on each croûte. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs. Heat in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Croûtes à la reine – Garnish with a salpicon of poultry, truffles and mushrooms, blended with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkled with fried breadcrumbs. Brown in the oven.

Croûtes à la rouennaise – Garnish with à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) made, whenever possible, of Rouen duckling livers (see DUCK). Heat for a minute in the oven. Put a grilled mushroom on each croûte. Fill the hollow of the mushroom with a little very thick Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Croûtes with skate liver. CROÛTES DE FOIE DE RATE – Garnish with a salpicon of skate liver cooked in a court-bouillon (q.v.). Pour melted butter, seasoned with salt and pepper and a squeeze of lemon juice, over the salpicon. Put in the oven. Arrange the croûtes with the liver on a dish, sprinkle with chopped parsley, squeeze a few drops of lemon juice over, and before serving pour a little brown butter on them.

Croûtes with soft roes. CROÛTES AUX LAITANCES – Garnish with soft roes of fresh herrings. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and put in the oven.

Croûtes à la zingara – Garnish with ham, smoked or pickled tongue and truffles cut into strips and blended with tomato-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Put a round slice of heated ham and a grilled mushroom on each garnished croûte. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Apart from the above recipes, recipes given for barquettes, cassolettes, etc., can be applied to garnished croûtes.

Cutlets (compound) (U.S. chopettes). CÔTELETTES COM-

POSÉES – Make up the mixture given in the chosen croquette recipe.

Spread a layer of this mixture on a dish, leave to cool completely, and divide into portions of 50 to 75 g. (2 to 3 oz.).

Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and shape into the form of cutlets (chops). Deep-fry in clarified butter or sauté in butter, depending on recipe. Arrange in the shape of a crown. Add appropriate garnish. Put a piece of raw macaroni, decorated with a tiny paper frill, on each cutlet. Serve with an appropriate sauce.

These cutlets, when made very small, can be used as a garnish for large dishes.

All the directions given for making croquettes also apply to these cutlets, which differ from croquettes only in their shape.

They can also be made from purée of poultry, game, fish, etc., dipped in egg and breadcrumbs, and sautéed in butter. Cutlets which have purées as a basic ingredient can have a filling of plain or compound salpicon blended with very thick sauce.

Dartois – Similar to Allumettes (see above). Their difference lies in the fact that the garnish in a dartois is enclosed in two pieces of puff pastry, which are not cut into rectangles until after the cooking is finished.

Roll the puff pastry out as for allumettes, cut into bands and put on a moistened baking tray. Spread the middle of the band with the chosen filling, which must be cold, leaving 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) clear on each side.

Put on each garnished band another band of pastry the same length and width as the bottom one, but a little thicker. Moisten the border of the lower band with water and press the upper band on it. Make a few light cuts along the edges. Brush with egg and score the surface lightly. Mark into divisions to make subsequent cutting easier. Bake in a hot oven for 20 to 25 minutes. Cut into rectangles about 2½ cm. (1 inch) long, and arrange on a napkin.

All fillings given for allumettes can be used for dartois. They can also be garnished with salpicons (q.v.) of meat, poultry, fish, etc., blended with white or brown stock.

Anchovy dartois (Sausselis). DARTOIS AUX ANCHOIS – Fill with Anchovy forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Decorate with anchovy fillets, cover with a layer of puff pastry and bake in the oven.

Dartois à la florentine – Fill with spinach cooked in butter, blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) to which grated cheese has been added.

Dartois Grimod de la Reynière – Fill with fine Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Decorate with crayfish tails and sliced truffles.

Dartois Laguière – Fill with a salpicon (q.v.) of calves' sweetbreads and truffles to which is added a brunoise (q.v.) of vegetables, blended with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Dartois Lucullus – Fill with a salpicon of foie gras and truffles blended with concentrated Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Dartois à la reine – Fill with a salpicon of poultry, truffles and mushrooms blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Sardine dartois. DARTOIS AUX SARDINES – Madelike Anchovy dartois, using well-trimmed fillets of sardines in oil instead.

Tunny (tuna fish) dartois. DARTOIS AU THON – Made like Anchovy dartois, using finely cut-up slices of tunny in oil.

Eggs mignons. OEUF MIGNON – Name given to very small egg-shaped cases made of Duchess potato (see POTATOES). They are dipped in egg and breadcrumbs, deep-fried, hollowed out and filled in various ways.

Make a duchess potato mixture and leave until quite cold.

Divide into portions of 1 tablespoon. Roll these in flour and shape to look like eggs. Roll them in egg and breadcrumbs twice. Fry in hot, deep fat, drain and dry them.

Make a small round opening in the top and through the opening hollow out the 'egg' completely, without breaking the crust. Fill with the selected mixture. Arrange them on a napkin-covered dish or in a nest of straw potatoes and garnish with fried parsley.

Eggs mignons d'Aigrefeuille. OEUF MIGNON D'AIGREFEUILLE – Fill with a purée of poultry finished with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Eggs mignons à l'andalouse. OEUF MIGNON À L'ANDALOUSE – Fill with a purée of foie gras to which grated orange peel has been added.

Eggs mignons Beauharnais. OEUF MIGNON BEAUHARNAIS – Fill with a purée of poultry finished with Tarragon butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Eggs mignons à la cévenole. OEUF MIGNON À LA CÉVENOLE – Fill with Chestnut purée (see CHESTNUTS), mixed with a purée of onions.

Eggs mignons à la Clamart. OEUF MIGNON À LA CLAMART – Fill with a purée of fresh peas with cream.

Curried eggs mignons. OEUF MIGNON À L'INDIENNE – Fill with a salpicon of poultry blended with Curry sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs mignons à la nivernaise. OEUF MIGNON À LA NIVERNAISE – Fill with a fondue (q.v.) of diced carrots and onions blended with veal stock.

Eggs mignons à la normande. OEUF MIGNON À LA NORMANDE – Fill with a ragoût of oysters with Normande sauce (see SAUCE).

Eggs mignons à la royale. OEUF MIGNON À LA ROYALE – Fill with a salpicon of French beans and asparagus tips, blended with butter.

In addition to these fillings, all those given for barquettes, patties, croustades, etc., can be used for eggs mignons.

Fondants (croquettes) – The French call very small croquettes fondants. They are made of vegetable purée or of a cream preparation with cheese.

Vegetable purée fondants. Prepare the purée of the selected vegetables and add an appropriate sauce to it. The sauce should be very thick. The proportion of sauce to vegetable purée should be one to three.

Divide the purée into small portions of about 50 g. (2 oz.). Roll in flour and coat with egg and breadcrumbs as for croquettes. Shape to look like eggs or pears.

Fry just before serving. Drain, and arrange on a napkin. Garnish with fried parsley.

These croquettes can be made from any one vegetable purée or a combination of purées. The basic purée must, however, always weigh two-thirds of the whole preparation.

Cream fondants with cheese. Prepare a very thick unsweetened French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Add grated cheese.

Spread on a slab to a thickness of about 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch). Leave to cool. Cut into shapes. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and finish as for vegetable croquettes.

Argenteuil fondants. FONDANTS ARGENTEUIL – Asparagus purée with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Cheese fondants. FONDANTS DE FROMAGES – A creamy cheese mixture made of Brie, Camembert, Cantal, Cheshire, Gruyère or Dutch cheese.

Fondants Crécy – Purée of carrots with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Fondants with foie gras Taillevent. FONDANTS DE FOIE GRAS TAILLEVENT – Purée of foie gras and purée of the white meat of poultry mixed with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Fondants with foie gras and truffles. FONDANTS DE FOIE

HORS-D'ŒUVRE

GRAS AUX TRUFFES – Purée of foie gras and purée of truffles with a very concentrated Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Meat fondants. FONDANTS DE VIANDES – Prepare in the same way as Fondants à la reine (see below) using different kinds of meat purées. Blend these purées with a sauce appropriate to the meat.

Fondants à la Nantua – Purée of sole with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Fondants with poultry liver or à la rouennaise. FONDANTS DE FOIES DE VOLAILLE À LA ROUENNAISE – Purée of poultry liver with Rouennaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Fondants à la reine – Purée of poultry, to which diced mushrooms and truffles have been added, blended with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Fondants Vladimir – Purée of calves' sweetbreads mixed with purée of truffles, blended with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Fondants à la Yorkaise – Purée of ham with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Fritots – A kind of fritter, the commonest ingredients of which are offal (variety meats), poultry, left-overs of fish and shellfish.

Beef fritots. FRITOTS DE BOEUF – Cut boiled beef into square pieces of 4 cm. (1½ inches). Finish as for Bone-marrow fritots (see below).

Bone-marrow fritots. FRITOTS D'AMOURETTES – Cook the bone-marrow in a white court-bouillon (q.v.). Divide into pieces 5 cm. (2 inches) long. Marinate the pieces, dip them in batter and deep-fry. Arrange on a napkin and garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Fritots of calves' and sheeps' brains – FRITOTS DE CERVELE D'AGNEAU, DE VEAU – Cut the brains into thick slices and cook in a court-bouillon. Marinate and finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Fritots of cocks' combs. FRITOTS DE CRÊTES DE COQ – Cook the cocks' combs in a white court-bouillon. Marinate and finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Fritots of cooked fish. FRITOTS DE POISSONS DE DESSERT – Divide the pieces of fish into pieces. Marinate them, dip in batter and finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Fritots of calf's or sheep's foot. FRITOTS DE PIEDS DE MOUTON, DE VEAU – Bone the calf's (or sheep's) foot. Cook in Court-bouillon I (see COURT-BOUILLON) and marinate. Finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Fritots of calf's head. FRITOTS DE TÊTE DE VEAU – Cook the calf's head in Court-bouillon I (see COURT-BOUILLON). Marinate and finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Frogs' legs fritots. FRITOTS DE GRENOUILLES – Trim the frogs' legs, put them in an uncooked marinade (q.v.) and leave for 30 minutes. Dip in frying batter and finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Fritots of cold meat. FRITOTS DE VIANDES DE DESSERT – Boiled or braised left-overs of lamb, mutton or veal can be used. Marinate and finish as for Beef fritots.

Fritots of calf's mesentery. FRITOTS DE FRAISE DE VEAU – Cook and marinate the mesentery and finish like Bone-marrow fritots.

Mussel fritots. FRITOTS DE MOULES – Prepare in the same way as Oyster fritots (see below).

Oyster fritots. FRITOTS D'HUITRES – Poach the oysters, drain, dry, marinate, and dip in frying batter. Finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Fritots of cold poultry. FRITOTS DE VOLAILLE DE DESSERT – Left-overs of poached or braised poultry are best. Remove all the bones. Cut into very small regular pieces. Marinate, and dip into frying batter. Finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Sweetbread fritots. FRITOTS DE RIS D'AGNEAU – Braise lambs' sweetbreads and marinate. Finish as for Bone-marrow fritots.

Vegetable fritots. FRITOTS DE LÉGUMES – Cut into quarters or into long pieces, vegetables such as cardoons or salsify (which should be cooked in a white court-bouillon), or artichokes and asparagus (which should only be blanched). Marinate, and dip in frying batter. They are finished in the same way as Bone-marrow fritots.

Fritters. BEIGNETS – Fritters served as hors-d'œuvre or small entrées can be made from a variety of ingredients – meat, poultry, fish and cooked vegetables – dipped in batter and fried.

Different kinds of batter can be used.

Fritters with frying batter. Whatever ingredients you use, they should be cooked first and then cut into slices, square pieces or any other shape desired.

Some recipes require the basic ingredient to be left to soak for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice or vinegar, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

When ready to fry, dip the pieces, one by one, into a light batter, and deep-fry them in very hot fat until they are a good colour. Dry them on a cloth, season with fine dry salt and arrange them in a pile on a dish.

For fritters incorporating forcemeat, mince, purées or various salpicons (q.v.), prepare the ingredients as directed in the recipe and leave until quite cold. Divide into small portions, shape into balls, corks, rissoles, flat round cakes, etc. Roll in flour. Dip in batter and finish as described above.

Fritters (Scarnati)

Fritters with chou paste (soufflé fritters). Prepare Chou paste I (see DOUGH). Add whatever ingredients are indicated in the recipe chosen.

Divide the paste with a spoon into pieces as small as a hazelnut or as large as a walnut, depending on the ingredients. Drop one by one into hot, but not boiling, oil. Cook on a high flame until the fritters are well shaped, dry and golden brown. Drain on paper or linen towelling, sprinkle with fine dry salt and serve.

Anchovy fritters I. BEIGNETS D'ANCHOIS – Roll anchovy fillets into rings and put them on thin round slices of bread, about 4 cm. (1½ inches) in diameter.

Sandwich these rounds together, two by two, dip in batter, and fry just before serving.

The rounds of bread can be coated with a layer of fish

forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) or spread with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Alternatively, spread the rounds of bread with a salpicon (q.v.) of hard-boiled eggs and fillets of anchovies blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Finish in the usual way.

In all the recipes bread can be replaced by small savoury pancakes.

Anchovy fritters II. BEIGNETS D'ANCHOIS – Soak unleavened bread (matzos) in cold water and cut into small circles. Put a little salpicon made of anchovies and hard-boiled eggs blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) on each circle. Seal the fritters like turnovers, dip in frying batter and finish as indicated above.

Artichoke fritters. BEIGNETS D'ARTICHAUTS – Trim very tender artichokes and divide into quarters. Lay them on a dish and dress with a trickle of oil and a squeeze of lemon juice. Season with salt and pepper. Leave to marinate for 30 minutes.

Dip the artichokes in batter and fry them. If they are a little hard, blanch them lightly before putting them into the marinade.

Beef fritters à la lyonnaise. BEIGNETS DE BOEUF À LA LYONNAISE – Make Beef hash à la lyonnaise (see HASH), using beef left-overs.

Divide the mince into pieces the size of a walnut. Dip in batter and fry.

Bernois fritters. BEIGNETS BERNOIS – Cut Gruyère cheese into rounds 2½ cm. (1 inch) in diameter. Make a thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and add minced ham. Coat the rounds of cheese with this sauce and sandwich together in pairs. Finish the fritter in the usual manner.

Fish fritters. BEIGNETS DE POISSONS – Use left-over braised or poached fish. Cut into slices or pieces and marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

Dip the pieces one by one in batter and finish in the usual manner.

Fritters à la florentine. BEIGNETS À LA FLORENTINE – Prepare 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) spinach purée, making it as dry as possible. Add 2 dl. (¼ pint, scant cup) thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and 2 to 3 tablespoons grated cheese.

Leave to cool, divide into balls the size of a pigeons' eggs, roll in flour, dip in batter and finish in the usual manner.

Herring fritters I. BEIGNETS DE HARENGS – Use marinated herrings. Drain, and dry on a cloth. Coat with a thin layer of Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and roll them up. Dip in batter and finish in the usual way.

Herrings fritters II. BEIGNETS DE HARENGS – Make a salpicon of marinated herrings and Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and spread it on pancakes (crêpes) made without salt. Roll up the pancakes, cut them in uniform pieces, dip in batter and finish in the usual way.

Lucullus fritters. BEIGNETS LUCULLUS – Cut truffles into thick slices, coat with a purée of foie gras and sandwich together in pairs. Dip in batter and finish in the usual manner.

In France these fritters are also known as Fritters à la périgourdine.

Meat fritters. BEIGNETS DE VIANDES – Use braised or poached left-overs of meat. Cut into squares, slices or any other shape.

Marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Dip the pieces one by one in batter. Finish in the usual manner.

Mussel fritters à la duxelles. BEIGNETS DE MOULES À LA DUXELLES – Cook large mussels in white wine, take them out of their shells, dry well, cover with 1 teaspoon thick Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE). Dip the mussels in batter and finish in the usual manner.

Pasta fritters. BEIGNETS DE PÂTES – Prepare Macaroni à l'italienne (see MACARONI) cut into dice, shell-shaped pasta, noodles or vermicelli. Leave to cool. Divide into portions the size of pigeons' eggs.

Dip in batter and finish in the usual manner.

Rice fritters. BEIGNETS DE RIZ – Cook the rice and mix with Parmesan cheese. Divide into portions the size of pigeons' eggs. Dip in batter and finish in the usual manner.

Polenta and semolina fritters are prepared in the same way as rice fritters.

Soft roe fritters. BEIGNETS DE LAITANCES – Poach the soft roes in Court-bouillon XV (see COURT-BOUILLON). Drain and put them in a marinade of oil, lemon juice or vinegar, and chopped parsley. Dry, dip in batter and fry in the usual way.

Soufflé fritters. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS – Prepare Chou paste (see DOUGH) without sugar. Divide with a spoon into pieces the size of a hazelnut. Drop one by one into hot, but not boiling, oil. Cook over a high flame until the fritters are well shaped, dry, and golden in colour.

Drain on paper or linen towelling and serve.

Soufflé fritters with anchovy I. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS AUX ANCHOIS – Prepare 250 g. (9 oz., 1 cup) Chou paste (see DOUGH) and add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) salpicon of desalted anchovies.

Proceed as for Soufflé fritters.

Soufflé fritters with anchovy II. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS AUX ANCHOIS – Make the fritters as directed for Soufflé fritters.

As soon as they are cooked and drained, stuff them with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Soufflé fritters à la hongroise. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS À LA HONGROISE – Make 250 g. (9 oz., 1 cup) batter as for Soufflé fritters. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) chopped onions cooked in butter and season with ½ teaspoon of paprika.

Soufflé fritters à la parmesane I, or cheese soufflé fritters. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS À LA PARMESANE, BEIGNETS AU FROMAGE – Prepare 250 g. (9 oz., 1 cup) Chou paste (see DOUGH), add 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) grated Parmesan cheese and season with a little grated nutmeg.

Soufflé fritters à la parmesane II. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS À LA PARMESANE – Make the fritters as indicated for Soufflé fritters. As soon as they are cooked and drained, stuff them with Cream sauce (see SAUCE) to which Parmesan cheese has been added.

Soufflé fritters à la toscane. BEIGNETS SOUFFLÉS À LA TOSCANE – Proceed as indicated for Soufflé fritters à la parmesane, adding chopped lean ham and truffles to the chou paste.

Sweetbread fritters. BEIGNETS DE RIS D'AGNEAU, DE VEAU – Braise or poach the sweetbreads. Cut into square pieces. Marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

Dip the pieces in batter, fry, and finish in the usual manner.

Truffle fritters. BEIGNETS DE TRUFFES – Cover large slices of truffle with poultry purée and sandwich together in pairs. Dip in batter and finish in the usual way.

Vegetable fritters. BEIGNETS DE LÉGUMES – Vegetables for fritters must be cooked or parboiled, according to their nature. Cut them into pieces, slices or strips.

Marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice or vinegar, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

Dip one by one in batter and fry in the usual manner.

The best vegetables for fritters are artichokes, white asparagus tips, Brussels sprouts, cauliflower, salsify, tomatoes.

Vegetable marrow (U.S. squash) flower fritters. BEIGNETS DE FLEURS DE COURGES – Dip the flowers one by one into a light batter and then fry.

Vegetarian fritters à la printanière. BEIGNETS VÉGÉTARIENS À LA PRINTANIÈRE. Make 250 g. (9 oz.) vegetable macédoine (q.v.) and blend with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Leave to cool. Finish in the usual manner.

Vegetarian fritters à la romaine. BEIGNETS VÉGÉTARIENS À LA ROMAINE – Blanch some spinach, chop and simmer it in butter. Mix 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) spinach with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and 3 table-spoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) grated cheese. Leave to cool. Finish in the usual manner.

Kromesgies. CROMESQUIS – Kromesgies are generally made of the same ingredients as Croquettes (see above), and can also be made of mince, purée, forcemeat and all kinds of left-overs of meat, fish or vegetables.

À la française. Prepare the ingredients as croquettes according to the recipe chosen. Let this get quite cold. Divide into portions of about 60 to 75 g. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 oz.). Roll in flour and shape into corks or rectangles.

Dip in batter and drop them one by one into a pan of boiling fat. Fry until golden brown, drain, dry in a cloth, and sprinkle with salt. Garnish with fried parsley and serve with an appropriate sauce.

À la russe. Prepare according to the recipe chosen and divide into pieces as directed above.

Wrap each portion in a very thin piece of salt pork and shape like a cork. Dip in batter and finish as indicated above.

À la polonaise. Proceed as directed in the preceding recipe, using large, thin, unsweetened pancakes (crêpes) instead of caul.

À l'ancienne. Wrap each portion in a thin layer of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES), and then in an unsweetened pancake (crêpe). Finish as directed in the preceding recipes.

Kromesgies are generally served with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) or any other suitable sauce.

As kromesgies are very much like croquettes we give only a few special recipes. They are made, as far as the basic ingredients are concerned, in every way like croquettes, for which the recipes are given above.

Kromesgies à la bonne femme. CROMESQUIS À LA BONNE FEMME – Beef hash à la lyonnaise (see HASH) coated in batter.

Kromesgies à la carmélite. CROMESQUIS À LA CARMÉLITE – Salt cod pounded with garlic, oil, and cream to which chopped truffles have been added. Wrap in pancakes and coat with batter.

Serve with a White wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Kromesgies à la florentine. CROMESQUIS À LA FLORENTINE – Thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) to which grated Parmesan cheese and spinach cooked in butter have been added. Wrap in pancakes and coat with butter.

When the kromesgies are made of preparations which are difficult to divide into portions and to shape into corks or rectangles, (as, for instance, in the case of Kromesgies à la florentine), coat the pancakes with béchamel sauce, then add the spinach. Roll the pancakes, cut them into pieces and dip in frying batter. Finish as directed above.

Kromesgies à la mirepoix. CROMESQUIS À LA MIREPOIX – Mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables, blended with Velouté sauce or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). If a meatless mirepoix is used it should be blended with béchamel sauce; if minced raw ham is added to the mirepoix, velouté sauce should be used for blending. In either case wrap in pancakes and coat with batter. Serve Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) separately.

Kromesgies Saint-Hubert. CROMESQUIS SAINT-HUBERT –

Salpicon (q.v.) of game blended with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock. Wrap in caul and coat with batter.

Kromesgies with various vegetables. CROMESQUIS DE LÉGUMES – Salpicon of cooked vegetables blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Wrap in pancakes and coat with batter.

The most usual vegetables for this dish are artichoke hearts, asparagus, carrots, salsify and celeriac.

Kromesgies à la Vladimir. CROMESQUIS À LA VLADIMIR – Salpicon of fillet of sole, truffles and crayfish tails blended with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), based on fish stock. Wrap in duchess potatoes and pancakes and coat with batter. Serve with Normande sauce (see SAUCE).

Mazagrans – Moulded mazagrans. Butter tartlet tins, and line them with a thin layer of rolled out Duchess potato (see POTATOES).

Fill the tartlets with a salpicon (q.v.) or any other preparation indicated in the recipe. The filling should be quite cold. Cover each tartlet with a circle of potato mixture cut out with a fluted biscuit-cutter, and brushed with egg. Brush again with egg and brown in a very hot oven.

Take the mazagrans out of the tins when they are ready and arrange on a plate.

Large mazagrans. Line deep fireproof plates with rolled-out duchess potato mixture.

Fill with a salpicon or other cold preparation. Cover with another layer of the potato mixture. Decorate with rolled-out pieces of duchess potato mixture cut in fancy shapes. Bake in a moderate oven. Serve on the plate on which the mazgran has been baked.

Unmoulded mazagrans. Roll out a layer of duchess potatoes. Cut it into circles, using a fluted biscuit-cutter about 5 cm. (2 inches) in diameter.

Put these circles on a buttered baking tray. Fill with a salpicon or any other suitable cold preparation, putting a piece the size of a walnut on each.

Cover with a second circle of duchess potatoes. Seal the edges and brush with egg. Brown lightly in a very hot oven.

All garnishes, salpicons, or other preparations given for patties, croustades, rissoles, tartlets, etc., can also be used for mazagrans.

Médallions – The only difference between médallions and Croquettes (see above) is their shape. Médallions are shaped like small flat cakes. They are made of the same preparations as croquettes and left until quite cold. Dip them in egg and breadcrumbs and sauté in clarified butter.

Arrange in a circle. Garnish with fried parsley.

Médallions are served with a sauce appropriate to the basic ingredients. They can also be garnished with vegetables blended with butter or with a fairly thick vegetable purée.

Oysters. HUITRES – There are several ways of serving cooked oysters as a hot hors-d'œuvre, including Oysters à l'américaine (see OYSTERS), Atteraux of oysters (see Atteraux above) fritots, patties, oysters on skewers, fried oysters, etc.

Pannequets – Pancakes served as pannequets in an hors-d'œuvre are made from unsweetened Crêpe batter (see CRÊPE).

Anchovy pannequets. PANNEQUETS AUX ANCHOIS – Cut the pancakes into rectangles and garnish with Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Pannequets à la brunoise – Roll the pancakes and fry them. Stuff with a brunoise (q.v.) of vegetables cooked in butter and blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Cheese pannequets (Cheshire, Gruyère or Parmesan). PANNEQUETS AU FROMAGE – Cut the pancakes into rectangles.

Fill them with cream cheese. Sprinkle with grated cheese, and brown.

Pannequets à la florentine – Cut the pancakes into lozenge shapes. Garnish with spinach cooked in butter and blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) to which grated cheese has been added. Sprinkle with more grated cheese, and brown.

Fried pannequets in breadcrumbs. PANNEQUETS PANÉS ET FRITS – Prepare the pancakes and stuff them as described below under Stuffed pannequets.

Roll into scrolls, cut them into pieces, dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and fry.

Pancakes prepared in this way are also known in France under the name of croquettes or craquelins.

Apart from the recipes given here, pancakes can be stuffed with all kinds of preparations: purées, salpicons, creams, etc. as given in recipes for barquettes, patties, canapés, tartlets and other small dishes of the same kind.

Pannequets à la grecque – Rolled pancakes garnished with a salpicon of braised mutton, aubergines sautéed in oil, and pimentos, blended with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) seasoned with paprika. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry.

Pannequets are often made from very small pancakes spread with forcemeat, folded in two and browned under the grill.

Pannequets à la hongroise – Rolled pancakes garnished with a salpicon of onions and mushrooms cooked in butter until very soft, seasoned with paprika and blended with Béchamel or Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Pannequets à l'italienne – Rolled pancakes garnished with duxelles (q.v.) to which lean chopped ham, blended with very thick Tomato sauce (see SAUCE), has been added. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry.

Pannequets à la ligurienne – Make very small pancakes and fold in two. Garnish with a salpicon of anchovies and hard-boiled eggs blended with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE), seasoned with tarragon.

Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and brown.

Pannequets à la Saint-Hubert – Cut the pancakes into rectangles or into lozenge shapes. Garnish with a purée of ground game with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock.

Pannequets à la strasbourgeoise – Cut the pancakes into rectangles. Garnish with a purée of foie gras to which chopped truffles have been added.

Stuffed pannequets. PANNEQUETS FOURRÉS – Make the pancakes large and very thin.

Spread them on a table, coat with a thin layer of the selected forcemeat, roll them up and cut each roll into two or three pieces. Put these on a baking tray and heat in the oven.

If preferred, instead of rolling them up, put two together and cut with a biscuit-cutter into rectangles, squares, lozenges or circles. For further recipes see CRÊPES.

Small pâtés au gastronome. PETITS PÂTÉS AU GASTRONOME – Pastry approximately 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick. Cut into rounds or ovals with a pastry-cutter.

Collect the remains of the dough and roll them out into another layer, which should be a little thinner than the first layer. Cut the same number of shapes out of it. Put the second lot of circles on a moistened baking tray.

Slightly moisten the edges of the circles with water. Put in the centre of each a portion of filling the size of a hazelnut. This can be forcemeat, minced meat or any other preparation according to the recipe chosen.

Cover with the circles cut out of the first layer of dough. Press with the back of a spoon so that the two circles stick together. Brush with egg and put in a hot oven for 12 to 15 minutes.

In addition to the recipes given below, small pâtés can be filled with all the ingredients given for barquettes, patties, tartlets, etc.

Small pâtés straight from the oven (Larousse)

Small pâtés with anchovy. PETITS PÂTÉS AUX ANCHOIS – Make small pâtés. Garnish with Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) with Anchovy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) to which a salpicon (q.v.) of anchovy fillets has been added.

Small pâtés à l'andalouse. PETITS PÂTÉS À L'ANDALOUSE – Make small pâtés. Garnish with sausage meat to which a salpicon of pimentos cooked in butter, and chopped onions lightly fried in butter, has been added.

Small pâtés à la charcutière. PETITS PÂTÉS À LA CHARCUTIÈRE – Small pâtés garnished with sausage meat to which chopped parsley has been added.

Small pâtés à la duxelles. PETITS PÂTÉS À LA DUXELLES – Garnish with Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) to which an equal part of dry duxelles (q.v.) has been added.

Small fish pâtés. PETITS PÂTÉS DE POISSONS – These can be made in any shape. Garnish with a forcemeat of pike, whiting or any other fish, or a salpicon of cooked fish, blended with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock. If desired, diced mushrooms and truffles can be added to the salpicon.

Small game pâtés with stock. PETITS PÂTÉS DE GIBIER AU JUS – Proceed as indicated in the recipe for Small pâtés with stock (see below) but use a salpicon of game instead of forcemeat.

Small pâtés au gastronome. PETITS PÂTÉS AU GASTRONOME – Small oval pâtés garnished with a salpicon of cocks' combs, pickled or smoked tongue, truffles and mushrooms, blended with strong Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Small pâtés à la lyonnaise. PETITS PÂTÉS À LA LYONNAISE – Small square pâtés garnished with finely chopped braised or boiled beef to which have been added chopped onions cooked in butter until soft, and blended with concentrated veal stock.

Small meat pâtés. PETITS PÂTÉS DE VIANDES – Any shape. Garnish as for Small pâtés à la Saint-Hubert (see below) replacing the purée of game by any kind of meat.

Small pâtés à la moscovite. PETITS PÂTÉS À LA MOSCOVITE – Make a Brioche dough (see DOUGH), less fine than usual and cut it into circles of approximately  $7\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (3 inches) in diameter.

Put a piece of Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) the size of a walnut in the middle of each circle.

Top with a little cooked semolina and a slice of raw white fish. Season with salt and spices. Fold the dough over towards the centre from the sides, making small oval-shaped pies. Press the rims together and crimp the edges. Make a small hole in the middle. Put on a tray in a warm place and leave to rise for 30 minutes. Brush with egg and bake in a hot oven for 25 minutes.

Just before serving pour into the opening of each pie a little concentrated Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) to which chopped parsley and lemon juice have been added.

Small mutton pâtés. PETITS PÂTÉS DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – Line deep tartlet moulds with Lining paste (see DOUGH). Fill with small dice of mutton, half lean half fat. Season with salt and pepper and sprinkle with chopped herbs.

Make some puff pastry and give it 8 turns. Cover the pâtés with little circles of pastry. Brush with egg and make a small hole in the middle of each pie.

Bake in a cool oven for 35 minutes. As you take the pâtés out of the oven pour into each 2 teaspoons Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Small poultry pâtés with stock. PETITS PÂTÉS DE VOLAILLE AU JUS – As described in the recipe for Small pâtés with stock (see below) using a salpicon of poultry.

Small pâtés à la reine. PETITS PÂTÉS À LA REINE – Small round pâtés garnished with poultry purée to which chopped truffles, blended with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), have been added.

Small pâtés à la Saint-Hubert. PETITS PÂTÉS À LA SAINT-HUBERT – Small round pâtés garnished with game purée blended with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock.

Small pâtés with stock. PETITS PÂTÉS AU JUS – Line small pastry moulds with Lining paste (see DOUGH).

Fill them with a salpicon of forcemeat, mushrooms and truffles blended with strong Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Cover each mould with a round of puff pastry. Press the rims together. Put on each a small ring of puff pastry cut out with a fluted pastry-cutter of a smaller diameter than the lid.

Make a small hole in the middle of the lid. Brush with egg and bake in a hot oven for 15 to 18 minutes. Take the pâtés out of the moulds. Pour into each a few drops of thickened veal stock, piping hot.

Small pâtés with stock can be prepared in the same way using all kinds of other meat.

Small pâtés à la strasbourgeoise. PETITS PÂTÉS À LA STRASBOURGEOISE – Garnished with a purée of foie gras to which chopped truffles have been added.

Garnished patties. BOUCHÉES GARNIES – Puff pastry baked blind, garnished with meat, fish or vegetable salpicon (q.v.).

Roll out puff pastry 6 times, and then to a thickness of 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch). Cut out circles  $6\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches) in diameter with a fluted pastry-cutter. Place on a slightly moistened metal tray. Brush with egg, mark the lid by pressing each circle lightly with a smaller pastry-cutter.

Bake the patties in a hot oven. Remove the lids and scoop out the soft part from the interior of the patty.

Very small, hollowed out and variously filled brioches are also called patties.

To prepare bouchées, roll out puff pastry and cut out circles with a fluted pastry-cutter

Place the circles of pastry on a slightly moistened metal tray (Larousse)

Mark the lid with a smaller pastry-cutter

Baked bouchées ready for filling (Larousse)

Filling the patties. Fill with a simple or compound meat, fish or vegetable salpicon, blended with white or brown stock, purées of meat, fish or vegetables.

All the fillings recommended for barquettes, croûtes, tartlets and similar dishes can also be used for patties. Very small patties can be used as a garnish for large dishes of various kinds. Slightly bigger patties can be served as small entrées.

Just before filling, put them in the oven for a few seconds. If at all possible, arrange the cooking so that garnishing can take place the minute they come out of the oven. This makes a great difference to the flavour. The same applies to all kinds of pastry dishes filled with a salpicon or other hot garnish.

Patties à l'américaine. BOUCHÉES À L'AMÉRICAINNE – Fill with a salpicon of spiny lobster or Lobster à l'américaine (see LOBSTER).

Patties à la bédicte. BOUCHÉES À LA BÉNÉDICTINE – Fill with salt cod pounded with garlic, oil and cream, to which diced truffles have been added. Cover the patties with slices of truffles.

Patties à la bouquetière. BOUCHÉES À LA BOUQUETIÈRE – Fill with vegetable macédoine (q.v.), blended with Béchamel or Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Patties à la Clamart. BOUCHÉES À LA CLAMART – Fill with a purée of fresh peas with cream.

Crayfish patties. BOUCHÉES AUX ÉCREVISSES – Fill with a ragoût of crayfish tails bound with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE).

Patties à la Crécy. BOUCHÉES À LA CRÉCY – Fill with a purée of carrots cooked in vegetable stock.

Patties à la dieppoise. BOUCHÉES À LA DIEPPOISE – Fill with a salpicon of mussels and prawns blended with White wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Patties à la financière. BOUCHÉES À LA FINANCIÈRE – Fill with Salpicon à la financière (see SALPICON). Cover with sliced truffles.

Patties à la julienne. BOUCHÉES À LA JULIENNE – Fill with vegetables cut into matchsticks, stewed in butter and blended with cream.

Patties with lobster, spiny lobster, or other shellfish. BOUCHÉES AU HOMARD, À LA LANGOUSTE – Fill with a salpicon of the chosen shellfish, blended with Béchamel or Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock and finished with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) or any other shellfish butter.

Patties Montglas (square shape). BOUCHÉES MONTGLAS – Fill with a salpicon of lamb sweetbreads, cocks' combs and kidneys, truffles and mushrooms, blended with a Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Top with small slices of foie gras and slices of truffles.

Patties with mussels. BOUCHÉES AUX MOULES – Fill with mussels with Allemande or Poulette sauce (see SAUCE).

Patties with oysters. BOUCHÉES AUX HUÎTRES – Fill with poached oysters, drained and debearded, mixed with Normande sauce (see SAUCE) made with white wine.

Patties à la périgourdine. BOUCHÉES À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Fill with a salpicon of truffles and foie gras, blended with Madeira-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Patties with poultry. BOUCHÉES DE VOLAILLE – Fill with a salpicon of poultry or purée of poultry with cream.

Patties à la reine. BOUCHÉES À LA REINE – Fill with a purée of poultry with cream or Salpicon à la reine (see SALPICON).

Patties à la Saint-Hubert. BOUCHÉES À LA SAINT-HUBERT – Fill with a purée of game or salpicon made from the meat of ground game. These patties should be oval.

Séigné patties. BOUCHÉES SÉIGNÉ – Fill with a salpicon of chicken quenelles with truffles cooked in Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Put half a heart of braised lettuce on each patty.

Patties with shrimps. BOUCHÉES AUX CREVETTES – Fill with a ragoût of shrimp tails with Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE).

Patties with soft roes. BOUCHÉES AUX LAITANCES – Fill with a salpicon of soft roe with cream or with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Patties with truffles. BOUCHÉES AUX TRUFFES – Fill with a salpicon of truffles stewed in butter, with cream or with Madeira or similar wine.

Piroghi (Russian cookery). PIROGUI – This is the Russian name for pies of various kinds. Piroghi can be made from different doughs: chou paste, pancake batter, puff pastry, etc., and filled with mixtures such as meat, poultry, game, fish, vegetables, rice, cheese. (See PIROGHI.)

Pirozhki. PIROJKI – Plural of pirozhok – a diminutive of piroghi – i.e. small pie or patty, filled with all kinds of different ingredients. (See PIROGHI.)

Pomponnettes – Rissoles made in the shape of a very small pouch.

Roll out best quality Lining paste (see DOUGH), to a thickness of 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch). Cut circles with a fluted pastry-cutter 7½ cm. (3 inches) in diameter.

Fill with a portion of purée the size of a walnut. Lightly moisten the rim of the dough and fold in towards the middle to make the shape of a small pouch. Fry in deep fat over a hot flame. Pomponnettes can be made from left-over puff pastry. All fillings given in the recipes for rissoles can be used.

Stuffed potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE FOURRÉES – After potatoes have been baked in the oven and two-thirds of their pulp scooped out, fill with Ragoût à la cancalaise, Ragoût à la Nantua (see RAGOÛT) or with a salpicon (q.v.) of poultry.

Quiche lorraine – Flan filled with a cream garnished with thin slices of lean bacon and served piping hot. The method of preparing quiches is described under QUICHE.

Patties à la reine
(Larousse)

Ramekins. RAMEQUINS – Tartlets with cream cheese. This name is also given to a small pastry made of chou paste to which cheese is added. For their preparation see RAMEKINS.

Rastegai – Russian patty, made of a yeast dough and sealed only at the ends. Divide the yeast dough into 150 g. (5 oz.) pieces, roll into balls, allow to stand for 8 to 10 minutes then roll out into circles. Put on each, 1 tablespoon minced beef with chopped eggs and onion, fish forcemeat, or chopped mushrooms. Crimp up the ends, making a boat-shaped patty, leaving the middle unsealed and the filling exposed. Hence the name, which in Russian means 'un-buttoned'. Leave to stand for 10 minutes, then bake in a hot oven. When ready, brush the rastegai with melted butter and add garnish appropriate to the filling. Thus, a fish rastegai should have a slice of cooked salmon or sturgeon, for a mushroom rastegai a teaspoon of small pickled cèpes or slices of hard-boiled egg, etc. Fish rastegais are served as an accompaniment to ukha, (clear fish soup), meat rastegais to strong beef consommé, and mushroom rastegais to mushroom consommé.

Ravioli – Small pasta envelopes filled with different purée stuffings, and poached. Serve in a clear soup with grated cheese. (See RAVIOLI.)

Ravioli à la lituanienne – See vareniki in this section.

Rissoles – Small pastries of various shapes (round, oval, rectangular or turnovers). Rissoles are made from a variety of doughs, including lining paste, left-over puff pastry or ordinary brioche pastry. They are filled mainly with croquette ingredients. The filling should only be put on the pastry when it is quite cold. For the method of preparation see RISSOLES.

Generally speaking rissoles should be fried, but sometimes they are baked in the oven.

Rissoles à la bohémienne – Using Brioche dough (see DOUGH) make the rissoles in the shape of turnovers. Fill with a salpicon of foie gras and truffles blended with rich Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Rissoles à la chalonaise – Round rissoles of puff pastry. Fill with a salpicon of cocks' combs and kidneys, truffles and mushrooms, blended with thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on chicken stock.

Cinderella rissoles. RISSOLES CENDRILLON – Make the rissoles using Brioche dough (see DOUGH) in the shape of turnovers. Fill with a salpicon (q.v.) of poultry and truffles blended with a purée of foie gras.

Rissoles à la dauphine – Make Brioche dough rissoles in the shape of turnovers.

Rissoles filled with all kinds of garnishes, salpicons (q.v.), etc. are served under this name.

The name of the main ingredients should appear on the menu, e.g. Foie gras rissoles à la dauphine, Lobster rissoles à la dauphine, etc.

Farm rissoles. RISSOLES À LA FERMIÈRE – Made from Lining paste (see DOUGH) cut into circles. Fill with a salpicon of equal quantities of ham and mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables cooked in butter, blended with rich Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Foie gras rissoles. RISSOLES AU FOIE GRAS – Choose your dough according to taste. Fill with a purée of foie gras to which chopped truffles can be added, if desired.

Pompadour rissoles. RISSOLES POMPADOUR – Roll out left-over puff pastry and cut into circles. Fill with a salpicon of pickled or smoked tongue, truffles and mushrooms blended with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Sausages. SAUCISSES – Small chipolata sausages, Strasbourg, Frankfurt and Vienna sausages are served as hors-d'œuvre.

Deville chipolata sausages. SAUCISSES CHIPOLATAS À LA DIABLE – Cook chipolata sausages under a grill. Put each sausage on a slice of bread which has been fried in butter and spread with mustard. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs, season with a little cayenne and put in the oven for a minute.

Garnish with fresh parsley.

Sausages à la duchesse. SAUCISSES À LA DUCHESSE – Fry the sausages quickly in butter. Make oval cakes of Duchess potato (see POTATOES) brown them in the oven and put a sausage on each potato cake.

Add white wine and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) to the butter in which the sausages were cooked. Boil down, add more butter and pour this sauce over the sausages. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Frankfurt, Strasbourg and Vienna sausages. SAUCISSES DE FRANCFORT, DE STRASBOURG, DE VIENNE – Poach the sausages in boiling water for 10 minutes. Drain, and serve with grated horseradish.

Sausages à l'italienne. SAUCISSES À L'ITALIENNE – Proceed as for Sausages à la duchesse. Pour very thick Italian sauce (see SAUCE) over the sausages.

Sausages à la languedocienne. SAUCISSES À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Fry the sausages in butter. Cut an aubergine into slices. Dip in flour and fry in oil. Put 1 sausage on each slice of fried aubergine, and top with 1 tablespoon Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) seasoned with a little chopped garlic. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs, put in the oven for a minute, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

Sausage à la lyonnaise. SAUCISSON CHAUD À LA LYONNAISE – Poached saveloy sausage served with hot potato salad.

Saveloys are often made with truffles, and also with pistachio nuts added.

Sausages à la maltaise. SAUCISSES À LA MALTAISE – Fry the sausages in butter.

Cut a sandwich loaf into thick rectangular pieces. Hollow out and fry in butter. Put 1 sausage on each piece.

Add white wine to the butter in which the sausages were fried, stirring well. Season with a little chopped shallot. Make a rich Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Blanch some orange peel, drain, cut into very thin strips and add to the sauce. Pour over the sausages.

Sausages à la tyrolienne. SAUCISSES À LA TYROLIENNE – Cook the sausages under the grill.

Cut a sandwich loaf into thick rectangular pieces. Hollow them out and fry in butter. Garnish with Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Put 1 sausage on each piece of fried bread. Fry onion rings in oil and put 2 rings on each sausage.

Sausages à la zingara. SAUCISSES À LA ZINGARA – Fry the sausages in butter.

Grill some mushrooms and fill with a julienne (q.v.) of lean ham, scarlet tongue, truffles and mushrooms, blended with tomato-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Put 1 sausage on each garnished mushroom. Sprinkle with chopped tarragon.

Scallop shells, garnished. COQUILLES GARNIES – Using a forcing-bag, make a thin border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) round the edge of the scallop shell. You can also use thin rounds of boiled potatoes.

Put 1 tablespoon of the desired sauce on the bottom of the shell. Garnish according to the recipe chosen, and spoon over some more of the same sauce. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs or grated cheese, depending on the ingredients used, and with melted butter. Put the shells into a baking-dish containing warm water, and brown in a very hot oven.

When scallop shells are gratiné (sprinkled with breadcrumbs and grated cheese and browned in the oven) or glazed (heated quickly in a hot oven), the shells can be prepared without a potato border.

The function of the border is to contain the ingredients of the garnish. It can be made of different preparations, which go well with the main ingredient of the garnish. You can, for instance, make a rim of chicken, veal or fish forcemeat for the shells, or pipe a border of spinach, rice, etc.

The shells can be made without breadcrumbs or glazing. If they are made with a border of duchess potato they should be baked quickly in the oven, to give the potato a good colour before the garnish is added.

After the shells have been coated with a sauce, browned or glazed, they can be decorated with truffles, mushrooms, asparagus tips, etc. Care should be taken to use only decorations which are in harmony with the basic ingredients.

Scallop shells of bone-marrow à la duxelles. COQUILLES D'AMOURETTES À LA DUXELLES – Make a border of Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). Garnish with slices of bone-marrow, mushrooms and Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE).

Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter and brown the top. After cooking, sprinkle a few drops of lemon juice on the shells and garnish with chopped parsley.

Scallop shells of brains à l'allemande. COQUILLES DE CERVELE À L'ALLEMANDE – Make a border of duchess potatoes. Garnish with slices of lamb's or calf's brain and Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Glaze in the oven.

Scallop shells of brains à l'aurore. COQUILLES DE CERVELE À L'AUORE – Make a border of duchess potatoes. Garnish with brains, mushrooms and Aurore sauce (see SAUCE).

Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour melted butter over the shells, and brown. When cooked, sprinkle with chopped hard-boiled eggs and chopped parsley. Pour round them a ring of Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Scallop shells of brains à la duxelles. COQUILLES DE CERVELE À LA DUXELLES – Prepare in the same way as Scallop shells of bone-marrow à la duxelles, using slices of brains instead of bone-marrow.

Scallop shells of brill Mornay. COQUILLES DE BARBUE MORNAY – Make a border of duchess potatoes. Garnish with slices of cooked brill with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with cheese, pour melted butter over the shells and brown.

(In U.S.A. grey sole or flounder can be substituted for brill.)

Scallop shells of brill à la trouillaie. COQUILLES DE BARBUE À LA TROUVILLAIE – Make a border of duchess potatoes. Brown the border before garnishing with slices of brill, mussels, shrimps and Shrimp sauce (see SAUCE). These shells are not glazed, but they should be decorated with small mushroom heads.

Scallop shells of crayfish. COQUILLES D'ÉCREVISSES – Make a rim of duchess potatoes and garnish with Crayfish tail ragout à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH).

Finish as for Scallop shells of shrimps (see below).

The shells used should be very small.

Scallop shells of eggs au gratin. COQUILLES D'ŒUFS AU GRATIN – Make a border of duchess potatoes and garnish with hard-boiled eggs cut into large dice, and Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with cheese and brown in the oven.

Scallop shells of fish. COQUILLES DE POISSONS – Prepare as described in the recipes for scallop shells of brill, shrimps, crayfish, skate liver, lobster, oysters, soft roes and mussels.

Fill the shells with garnishes and sauces, as directed in the recipe chosen. The sauces used most often for fish in scallop shells are the following: Aurore, Béchamel, shrimp, duxelles, lobster, Hungarian, curry, Italian, Mornay, Nantua, niçoise, normande and white wine sauce.

According to the recipe chosen, scallop shells of fish are sprinkled with breadcrumbs or grated cheese, or they are simply glazed.

For all these dishes of fish in scallop shells you can use up left-overs of boiled or braised fish such as perch, cod, coalfish, whiting, hake, skate, salmon, sole, trout, turbot, etc.

Left-overs in shells can also be prepared with minced mutton or veal. If minced veal is used, blend with a thick Velouté or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Scallop shells of lobster. COQUILLES DE HOMARD – Make a border with duchess potatoes and garnish with pieces of lobster, or salpicon (q.v.) of lobster with Béchamel, Lobster or Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle the shells with grated cheese and brown the top.

Scallop shells of meat. COQUILLES DE VIANDES – Follow the directions given for Scallop shells of bone-marrow. Left-overs of boiled, braised or roast lamb, mutton, beef or veal can be used.

Scallop shells of mussels. COQUILLES DE MOULES – Prepare as described in the recipes for Scallop shells of oysters or Scallop shells of soft roes. You can also follow any of the recipes for fish in scallop shells.

Scallop shells of oysters à la diable. COQUILLES D'HUITRES À LA DIABLE – Make a border of duchess potatoes and garnish with poached oysters, drained and bearded, and thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) made with the water in which the oysters have been poached, seasoned with a pinch of cayenne. Sprinkle the shells with fried breadcrumbs. Brown.

Shells with oysters cooked in this way are often known as Oysters à la diable.

Scallop shells of oysters Mornay. COQUILLES D'HUITRES MORNAY – Make a border of duchess potatoes and garnish with poached oysters, drained and debearded, and Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour butter over the shells, and brown.

Scallop shells of poultry. COQUILLES DE VOLAILLES – In principle, only the white meat should be used, but in ordinary home kitchens, where these shells are served mainly to use up left-overs, all parts of the poultry can be used.

Scallop shells of poultry à l'allemande. COQUILLES DE VOLAILLE À L'ALLEMANDE – Make a border of duchess potatoes and garnish with slices of white poultry meat and Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Glaze in a hot oven.

Scallop shells of poultry Monselet. COQUILLES DE VOLAILLE MONSELET – Make a border of duchess potatoes. Garnish with slices of white poultry meat, artichoke hearts and Mornay sauce (see SAUCE).

Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown in the oven. After taking out of the oven, garnish each shell with 2 slices of truffle alternating with sliced artichoke hearts cooked in butter.

Scallop shells of poultry princesse. COQUILLES DE VOLAILLE PRINCESSE – Make a border of duchess potatoes.

Garnish with slices of white poultry meat and Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Do not glaze. Just before serving, put on each shell 2 slices of truffle and a bouquet of asparagus tips cooked in butter.

Scallop shells of poultry Rossini. COQUILLES DE VOLAILLE ROSSINI – Make a border of Duchess potatoes and brown before adding the garnish.

Garnish with slices of white poultry meat, truffles and thick Madeira sauce (see SAUCE).

Just before serving, put on each shell 1 slice of foie gras sautéed in butter, and a slice of truffle.

Scallop shells of poultry with smoked or pickled tongue. COQUILLES DE VOLAILLE À L'ÉCARLATE – Make a border of duchess potatoes and brown in the oven.

Garnish with slices of white poultry meat, smoked or pickled tongue and Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Do not glaze, but sprinkle the shells just before serving with chopped tongue.

Scallop shells of shrimps. COQUILLES DE CREVETTES – Make a border of duchess potatoes. Garnish with a ragoût of shrimps' tails with Béchamel or Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) finished with Shrimp butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour melted butter over the shells and brown in the oven.

Scallop shells of skate liver and brown butter. COQUILLES DE FOIE DE RAIE AU BEURRE NOIR – Make a border of duchess potatoes and brown in the oven. Garnish with slices of cooked skate liver.

Sprinkle with pounded parsley, and a few drops of lemon juice. At the last moment pour Brown butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) over the shells.

Scallop shells of skate liver à la polonaise. COQUILLES DE FOIE DE RAIE À LA POLONAISE – Dress and garnish as directed for Scallop shells of skate liver and brown butter.

Sprinkle with the chopped yolks of hard-boiled eggs and chopped parsley.

Brown fine breadcrumbs in Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and sprinkle over the shells.

Scallop shells of soft roes à la florentine. COQUILLES DE LAITANCES À LA FLORENTINE – Make a border of duchess potatoes. Garnish with slices of soft carp roes or herring roes arranged on a layer of spinach cooked in butter, and Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown in the oven.

Scallop shells of sweetbreads. COQUILLES DE RIS D'AGNEAU – Prepare with lambs' sweetbreads as described in the recipes for Scallop shells of bone-marrow or Scallop shells of brains.

Small soufflés. PETITS SOUFFLÉS – These are made in cassolettes from all the different mixtures described in the section on SOUFFLÉS.

Small soufflés à l'américaine. PETITS SOUFFLÉS À L'AMÉRICAINNE – Fill the cassolettes with alternate layers of the mixture used for Lobster soufflé or Spiny lobster soufflé (see SOUFFLÉS) and Salpicon à l'américaine (see SALPICON).

Finish in the ordinary way as described in the section on SOUFFLÉS.

Small soufflés à l'aurore. PETITS SOUFFLÉS À L'AUORE – Garnish the cassolettes with the mixture for Chicken soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ) and add concentrated tomato juice.

When the soufflés come out of the oven sprinkle them with the chopped yolk of hard-boiled eggs and chopped parsley.

Small crayfish soufflés à la Nantua I. PETITS SOUFFLÉS D'ÉCREVISSES (À LA NANTUA) – Rub through a sieve 125 g. (4 oz.) white fish (whiting, cod or sole) cooked in butter. Add to this purée 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) crayfish purée blended with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Season with a little cayenne. Blend with 3 egg yolks and, at the last minute, work 3 stiffly beaten egg whites into the mixture.

Small crayfish soufflés à la Nantua II. PETITS SOUFFLÉS D'ÉCREVISSES (À LA NANTUA) – Prepare the mixture as described in the preceding recipe.

When putting it into the cassolettes arrange alternate layers of salpicon (q.v.) of crayfish tails with truffles.

Finish as described in the preceding recipe.

Small crayfish soufflés with Parmesan. PETITS SOUFFLÉS D'ÉCREVISSES AU PARMESAN – Fill the cassolettes with a layer of the mixture used for Parmesan soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ). On this put 1 tablespoon Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH). Cover with another layer of Parmesan soufflé mixture. Finish as described in the preceding recipes.

Small oyster soufflés à la cancalaise. PETITS SOUFFLÉS AUX HUÎTRES, DITS À LA CANCALAISE – Poach 12 oysters in their own juice. Drain, and dry in a cloth.

Boil down the cooking stock and add 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Strain, and blend with 3 egg yolks. Add the oysters cut in two and the beaten egg whites.

Finish as described in the preceding recipes.

Small soufflés à la princesse. PETITS SOUFFLÉS À LA PRINCESSE – Fill the cassolettes with alternate layers of the mixture used for Chicken soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ) and a salpicon of truffles and asparagus tips.

Finish as described in the preceding recipes.

Small soft roe soufflés. PETITS SOUFFLÉS DE LAITANCES – Poach, cool and drain the soft roe of carp or other fish. Rub through a fine sieve. To each 125 g. (4 oz.) of this purée add 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Blend with 3 egg yolks and add the 3 beaten egg whites.

Finish as described in the preceding recipes.

Subrics – Similar to small croquettes except that they are not dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and fried in deep fat, but are cooked in butter in a shallow pan. For their general preparation see SUBRICS.

Brain and bone-marrow subrics. SUBRICS DE CERVELLE, D'AMOURETTES – Poach a calf's brain, drain, and cut into large dice. Put into a terrine.

Add ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) Allemande or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), and 1 egg beaten as for an omelette. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Mix carefully so as not to crush the brain. Finish as described under SUBRICS. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Instead of calf's brain an equivalent amount of sheep or ox brains can be used.

Subrics made of sweetbreads and bone-marrow are prepared in the same manner.

Brain subrics à l'italienne. SUBRICS DE CERVELLE À L'ITALIENNE – Dice the brains and blend with 2 eggs beaten as for an omelette, mixed with 1 tablespoon flour seasoned with pepper and nutmeg.

Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) grated Parmesan cheese. Finish as described under SUBRICS. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Subrics à la florentine – Make a preparation for subrics with spinach and finish off with 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) grated Parmesan cheese.

Finish as described under SUBRICS.

Subrics of goose liver. SUBRICS DE FOIE GRAS – Put 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) sifted flour into a bowl. Add 1 egg beaten as for an omelette, and 2 or 3 tablespoons thick cream. Season with salt and pepper, and mix.

Cook 250 g. (9 oz.) goose liver. Cool and dice. Mix carefully into the above preparation.

Finish as described under SUBRICS. Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Subrics à la menagère – Dice 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) cold braised or boiled beef. Add 1 tablespoon chopped onion cooked in butter until very soft, and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley.

Blend this mixture with 2 beaten eggs and 1 tablespoon flour. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Mix well.

Finish as described under SUBRICS.

Subrics can be prepared in the same way, using all kinds of cold cooked meat and fish.

Poultry liver subrics. SUBRICS DE FOIES DE VOLAILLE – Cook chicken (or other poultry) liver in butter. Cool and dice. Blend with 2 beaten eggs, 1 tablespoon flour, salt, pepper and nutmeg.

Finish as described under SUBRICS.

Rice subrics à la piémontaise. SUBRICS DE RIZ À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Blend 250 g. (9 oz. ½ cups) cheese risotto with 2 beaten eggs. Add 1 to 2 tablespoons lean, chopped ham, and mix.

Finish the subrics in the usual manner. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Semolina subrics. SUBRICS DE SEMOULE – Proceed as for Rice subrics à la piémontaise, using semolina cooked in a clear stock or in milk. Omit the chopped ham, if desired.

Sweetbread subrics. SUBRICS DE RIS DE VEAU, D'AGNEAU – Proceed as described for Brain subrics, using a salpicon (q.v.) of sweetbreads.

Talmouse – This can be made in many different ways but it should always have cheese as a basis.

Line fluted tartlet tins with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) and fill with whatever cheese preparation is given in the recipe chosen. Brush with egg, sprinkle with Gruyère cheese, dice, and bake in a slow oven. Take the talmouses out of the tins.

Talmouses which have Gougère batter (see DOUGH) as a basis are often filled with a cream cheese mixture after they are cooked.

Talmouses à l'ancienne – Roll out some left-over puff pastry to a thickness of 5 mm. (¼ inch). Cut into squares of 6 cm. (2½ inches). Coat with a thin layer of the mixture used for Cheese soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ).

Put very small dice of Gruyère cheese on each talmouse. Lift its four corners so as to enclose the filling. Put these turnovers on a baking sheet. Bake in a slow oven.

Talmouses à la pâtissière – Line fluted tartlet tins with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Fill with a cheese Chou paste (see DOUGH) piped through a forcing-bag. Brush over with egg, sprinkle with very small dice of Gruyère cheese and bake in a slow oven.

Take the talmouses out of their tins, and fill the choux with a cream cheese mixture piped through a forcing-bag.

Saint-Denis talmouses. TALMOUSES DE SAINT-DENIS – Recipe from Cuisinier gascon, Amsterdam 1747.

'Make ordinary puff pastry; take a preparation of cream cheese and drain well; work it thoroughly with your hands; add as many eggs as the cheese will absorb, a grain of salt, and a pinch of flour; when this is all well mixed, put a layer of the cheese mixture on the rolled-out puff pastry and fold over both layers. Brush over with egg, bake in the oven and serve.'

This kind of talmouse is very similar to a cheese quiche.

Spinach talmouses. TALMOUSES AUX ÉPINARDS – Prepare the talmouses as described in any of the previous recipes and fill them with a Spinach soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ) to which grated cheese has been added.

Finish the talmouses as described in the preceding recipes.

Tartlets, garnished. TARTELETTES GARNIES – The preparation of garnished tartlets is the same as for barquettes, from which they differ only in their shape. These tartlets can be prepared from all kinds of doughs but are usually made from Fine lining paste (see DOUGH).

Line some round or fluted tartlet moulds as described for Barquettes (see above). Bake the tartlets blind. Take them out of their tins and finish as described in the chosen recipe.

In addition to the fillings given in the recipes which follow, all those given for barquettes and similar dishes can be used for tartlets.

Agnes Sorel tartlets. TARTELETTES AGNÈS SOREL – Coat the bottom of the tartlets with a layer of Chicken purée (see PURÉE). Surround with a border of very small slices of breast of chicken and pickled or smoked tongue. Put a mushroom head in the middle.

Heat through in the oven. Pour a little Allemande sauce

(see SAUCE) on the mushrooms.

Argenteuil tartlets. TARTELETTES ARGENTEUIL – Fill with Chicken purée (see PURÉE). Cover with asparagus tips cooked in butter.

Beatrix tartlets. TARTELETTES RÉATRIX – Garnish with Mushroom purée (see PURÉE). Make a border of shrimps. Put a poached oyster on each tartlet. Cover with Normande sauce (see SAUCE).

Curried tartlets. TARTELETTES À L'INDIENNE – Fill with a prawn ragoût made with curry. Put 1 teaspoon Rice à l'indienne (see RICE) on each tartlet.

Tartlets à l'écoissaise. TARTELETTES À L'ÉCOSSAISE – Garnish with Salmon purée (see PURÉE). Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese, and brown. Put a piece of sliced truffle on each tartlet.

Tartlets à la japonaise. TARTELETTES À LA JAPONAISE – Fill with Chinese artichokes with cream. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs. Warm through in the oven.

Metternich tartlets. TARTELETTES METTERNICH – Garnish with a salpicon (q.v.) of sweetbreads and truffles seasoned with paprika. Put a small slice of calf's brain on each tartlet. Cover with Hungarian sauce (see SAUCE).

Tartlets à la mirepoix. TARTELETTES À LA MIREPOIX – Fill with a mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables cooked in butter with a salpicon of ham blended with rich veal gravy. Cover with a thin layer of Chicken forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Cook in the oven.

Printania tartlets. TARTELETTES PRINTANIA – Fill with morels in cream. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs. Warm through in the oven and then put 1 teaspoon asparagus tips cooked in butter on each tartlet.

Regina tartlets. TARTELETTES RÉGINA – Fill with a salpicon of mushrooms and truffles with cream. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs. Warm through in the oven and then put a very small slice of sweetbread sautéed in butter on each tartlet.

Timbales, garnished. TIMBALES GARNIES – This name covers a variety of small dishes which are all similar in shape but their ingredients differ.

Use buttered dariole moulds. Decorate with tiny motifs of truffle, scarlet tongue or lean ham. Alternatively, sprinkle with chopped truffle or chopped tongue. Line with a layer of fine forcemeat of poultry, fish or anything else suitable.

Fill the middle with a cold salpicon (q.v.) prepared according to the recipe selected. Cover the garnish with a layer of the same forcemeat as the one chosen for lining the inside of the mould. Cook in the oven, standing in a pan of water, for 15 to 18 minutes. Leave in the moulds for a few minutes before taking out. Cylindrical or six-sided dariole moulds can be used.

Garnished timbales are often masked with a sauce in character with the main ingredient; or the sauce can be served separately. These timbales can be served on croûtes of bread fried in butter, or on artichoke hearts.

Apart from the recipes which follow, small timbales can be garnished in the same way as Barquettes, Croquettes and Croustades (see above).

Timbales à l'amiral – Decorate the buttered moulds with truffles and line with fine Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Fill with a salpicon (q.v.) of crayfish tails, oysters and truffles blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock and finished with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Cover with the fish forcemeat, poach, and serve with Normande sauce (see SAUCE).

Bagration timbales. TIMBALES BAGRATION – Sprinkle the buttered moulds with chopped truffles and chopped, pickled or smoked tongue. Line them with a fine Chicken forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Fill with diced macaroni, blended with cream, to which a salpicon of truffles and chopped tongue has been added. Finish in the usual way and serve with Suprême sauce (see SAUCE).

Beauvilliers timbales. TIMBALES BEAUVILLIERS – Line buttered moulds with an unsweetened Brioche dough (see DOUGH). Bake and leave to cool.

Empty the brioche, leaving a crust 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick. Warm slightly in the oven. Fill them with a salpicon of breast of chicken and truffles blended with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Put a bouquet of asparagus tips cooked in butter on each timbale.

Timbales à l'épicurienne – Sprinkle the buttered moulds with breadcrumbs and line them with a layer of rice, cooked in meat stock, to which chopped truffles have been added. This layer should cover the sides of the moulds evenly and be about 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick.

Fill with a salpicon of lambs' sweetbreads, truffles and scarlet tongue blended with Mushroom purée (see PURÉE). Cover the salpicon with a layer of the rice cooked in meat stock. Cook these small timbales in the oven for 8 minutes. Leave them to settle a little before turning out. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Timbales à la fermière – Butter the moulds and coat with a brunoise (q.v.) of vegetables cooked in butter. Line with a thin layer of forcemeat, and fill with a macédoine (q.v.) of vegetables mixed with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Serve with a light Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Timbales à la milanaise – Butter the moulds and line with macaroni cooked in water, drained and dried. Lay the macaroni in a spiral shape against the sides of the moulds. Cover them with a thin layer of fine Chicken or Veal forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Fill with a salpicon of pickled or smoked tongue, lean ham, truffles and mushrooms, blended with rich tomato-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Serve with tomato-flavoured demi-glace sauce.

Timbales à la Montrouge – Decorate the buttered moulds with lean ham and line with fine Chicken forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Garnish with a salpicon of chicken mixed with Mushroom purée (see PURÉE). Serve with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Timbales à la nantuaïenne – Decorate buttered moulds with crayfish tails and truffles. Line them with a fine Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Fill with crayfish purée (see PURÉE, Shrimp purée) to which a salpicon of crayfish tails has been added. Serve with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE).

Timbales à la piémontaise – Decorate the buttered moulds with pickled or smoked tongue and truffles cut into very small dice. Fill with risotto made with saffron, to which a fine julienne (q.v.) of white truffles has been added. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Timbales à la polonaise – Butter the moulds and line with strips cut from thin unsweetened pancakes (crêpes). Add a light layer of Chicken forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) with cream. Fill with a purée of brains to which chopped truffles have been added. Serve with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Timbales à la printanière – Cook carrots, turnips and French beans. Cool, and cut into short narrow strips. Decorate the buttered moulds with these. Line with a thin coating of Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Fill with a macédoine of vegetables blended with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Serve with a light Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Timbales à la Rossini – Decorate the buttered moulds with truffles and line them with fine Chicken or Veal forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Fill with a salpicon of foie gras and truffles blended with a rich Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Serve with demi-glace sauce flavoured with truffle essence.

Timbales à la Saint-Hubert – Decorate the buttered moulds with chopped truffles and chopped, pickled or smoked tongue, and line them with Game forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Fill with a salpicon of game to which truffles and mushrooms have been added. Blend with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock.

Serve with demi-glace sauce based on concentrated game stock.

Polish valesniki. VALESNIKIS POLONAI – To 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white pressed cream cheese, add 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) well-softened butter. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Add 1 egg and mix well.

Divide into portions of 50 to 75 g. (2 to 3 oz.). Put each portion on a small, thin, unsweetened pancake (crêpe). Fold over and dip in butter. Deep-fry in very hot fat, drain, and sprinkle with fine salt. Garnish with fried parsley.

Lithuanian vareniki. VARÉNIKIS LITUANIENS – Chop a large onion finely and cook in butter. When it has turned a golden colour add 125 g. (4 oz.) raw fillet of beef and 125 g. (4 oz.) raw, finely chopped beef kidney fat. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Brown the meat, blend with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley.

Make a noodle paste (see NOODLES, Fresh noodles). Cut into squares of 6 cm. (2½ inches) and put in the middle of each square a portion of the above mixture as for ravioli. Poach these vareniki in salted boiling water for 15 to 18 minutes. Drain, put in a dish and sprinkle with melted butter.

HORSE BUTCHERY. HIPPOPHAGIE – The slaughter of horses for human consumption.

Horseflesh, forbidden in Mosaic law, was eaten from time immemorial in Tartary and northern lands. For centuries it has been the principal food of the Gauchos Indians of South America. For a very long time the Teutons, too, lived on horsemeat, and continued to do so until their conversion to Christianity.

The people of Paris have always eaten horsemeat, in spite of numerous eighteenth-century police ordinances forbidding its sale in the hope of 'preventing those diseases which the consumption of such meat cannot fail to induce'. In spite of the fact that horsemeat was in use during the critical revolutionary period, the order prohibiting its sale was re-enacted in 1803, and again in 1811.

There followed special orders permitting the use of horsemeat as animal food, especially for the animals in the zoo. The interdiction was finally revoked about 1830. This followed reports by Parmentier and Parent-Duchatelet, arising out of the publicly expressed views of Baron Larrey, who had used horsemeat extensively to feed his wounded men during the Napoleonic wars.

After the battle of Eylau, being entirely cut off from supplies on the Isle of Lobau, he made soup of it in the breastplates of the dismounted cavalry, and seasoned it with gunpowder in place of salt. More provident than the rest, he had kept a little salt for himself, and was thus able to invite Marshall Masséna to share his hotpot.

At the instigation of Geoffrey-Saint-Hilaire, there followed a propaganda campaign in favour of horsemeat. This was crowned with success when on 6 February 1865, a horsemeat banquet was held at the Grand Hotel. In the following year, on 9 July, another horsemeat banquet took place at the establishment of Lemardelay, a Paris horse butcher.

Since then, horsemeat has become more and more popular, and the number of horse butchers has greatly increased.

A variety of recipes for beef (q.v.) can be used for horse-meat.

HORSE CHESTNUT. MARRON D'INDE – Seed fruit, very rich in starch. Once the acid has been extracted from it, the horse chestnut can be made into flour suitable for human consumption.

HORSE PARSLEY. MACERON – Herbaceous plant of the umbelliferous group. This herb has a strong aromatic fragrance similar to that of parsley. It grows wild by the roadside and in ditches, especially in cool and shady places.

The common horse parsley is fairly prolific in the south of France. In former times, the root of this plant was eaten. The tender leaves of the horse parsley are used in cooking as a substitute for parsley.

HORSERADISH. RAIFORT – Plant originating in the East, growing both wild and cultivated. Its cylindrical root, brown outside, white inside, has a sharp and piquant flavour and a very penetrating smell. This root is used grated as a condiment. It is a great favourite in Germany (where it is called 'German mustard') and accompanies a wide range of dishes.

Horseradish butter – See BUTTER, Compound butters.

Canapés of horseradish à l'anglaise. CANAPÉS DE RAIFORT À L'ANGLAISE – Spread thin slices of black bread with butter to which English mustard and chopped chives have been added. Cover with grated horseradish and surround with a border of chopped, hard-boiled egg yolks.

Grated horseradish. RAIFORT RÂPÉ – Wash and peel a root of horseradish. Grate on a cheese-grater. Serve in an hors-d'œuvre dish as accompaniment to boiled meat or cold meat.

Horseradish sauce or Albert sauce (hot). SAUCE AU RAIFORT DITE ALBERT-SAUCE – Cook 4 teaspoons grated horseradish in 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) white consommé. Add  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) Butter sauce II (see SAUCE).

Boil down and sieve. Bind with 2 egg yolks. Add 1 teaspoon mustard blended with 2 teaspoons wine vinegar.

Serve with boiled or braised beef.

Horseradish sauce (cold). SAUCE AU RAIFORT – Mix grated horseradish with breadcrumbs soaked in milk and squeezed dry. Season with salt and sugar. Add thick cream and vinegar.

HOSPICE DE BEAUNE – The Beaune hospital – a jewel of Gothic architecture – was founded in 1443 by Nicolas Rolin, chancellor to the Duke of Burgundy, Philippe le Bon.

The vinicultural district called the Hospices is the result of charitable donations made to the hospital, and is situated in one of the best regions of the Côte de Beaune.

The famous public auction of the Hospices wines takes place every November. Buyers come from all over the world, while restaurateurs consider themselves honour-bound to purchase a vat of Hospices wine because although 'Hospice de Beaune' does not boast a special appellation contrôlée, the name alone gives the wine an added lustre.

HOTCH-POTCH. HOCHÉPOT – This is a corruption of the name given in France to a fatty broth made from pigs' ears and tails, breast of beef, breast and shoulder of mutton, salt bacon, and mixed sliced vegetables, mainly cabbage, carrots, onions, leeks and potatoes. (See SOUPS, Hochepot à la flamande.)

There is also a spiced oxtail stew which is called a hotchpotch. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Oxtail en hochepot).

The French hochepot may be derived from the verb hocher, to shake. Meats of various kinds cooked in a sauce are 'shaken' in the pot to prevent them from sticking.

Hotch-potch (Scottish cookery) – Scottish national soup prepared as follows.

Put in a stewing pot 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) boned shoulder of mutton and 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) rump of beef. Cover with cold water and bring it to the boil. Remove scum, add salt, and simmer for 2 hours. Put a celeriac cut into quarters into the pot, add 1 small cabbage, 1 large onion with 2 cloves, the white part of 4 leeks tied in a bundle, 2 turnips, 4 carrots and a clove of garlic. Simmer together for 35 minutes. Add 200 g. (7 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) potatoes cut into pieces, 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) diced French beans, 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) fresh white beans, a lettuce cut into quarters, and a handful of fresh peas. Cook all these ingredients together on a low heat.

HUSK. GRUAU – The part of the wheat encasing the grain. It is the most nourishing part of the wheat and the richest in gluten. The husk is also the toughest part of the wheat. In the first stage of milling it is very coarsely ground. At the second grinding, the husks are ground finer to produce wholemeal flour from which wholemeal bread is made.

The outer casings of oats, separated from the grain by a special milling process, are also called husks. (Oat husks cannot be used in the making of bread.) When the husks are removed from barley and the grain is smoothed it becomes pearl barley.

The French word for husk, gruau, is also given to a very small pasta, made from potatoes, which looks like sago.

HYDROMEL – A drink made from honey, much used by the Greeks and Romans. Plain hydromel is a solution of honey in water. Vinous hydromel (mead) is the result of the alcoholic fermentation of honey diluted with five times its volume of water. It has an alcoholic content of 11° to 13°.

Hydromel may be made according to the following recipe:

Heat 100 litres (22 gallons,  $27\frac{1}{2}$  gallons) water to 50°C. (122°F.) in a copper kettle. Add 50 kg. (110 lb.) honey.

Gradually raise the temperature of the water to boiling point, taking care to skim the liquid constantly. Pour into a vat and leave to cool. When it is quite cold, transfer to a barrel where it must be left to ferment for 5 to 6 weeks. Draw off the hydromel.

Spirits can be distilled from hydromel. It can also be used in the manufacture of vinegar.

HYDROMETER. ARÉOMÈTRE – Instrument for measuring density. Hydrometers are principally used for the comparison of liquid densities at a constant weight and variable volume. These instruments, on being placed in the liquid under examination, by a simple reading of their graduated stems, show the density for a given temperature. Special tables enable necessary adjustments to be made when operating at a different temperature. There are many of these instruments in existence (syrup gauge, salinometer, acidimeter, alcoholometer, etc.). Only the Gay-Lussac centesimal alcoholometer is legal in France.

HYSSOP. HYSOPE – Small plant with a pungent aromatic smell and a slightly bitter flavour. It is used in the distillation of a number of liqueurs. In particular, in the composition of the elixir of Grande-Chartreuse.

IBEX. BOUQUETIN – A type of wild goat which lives in the high mountains. It is becoming increasingly rare in Europe.

ICE. GLACE – Water in its solid state. Ice used in conjunction with food ought to yield drinking water when melted. To analyse the ice, wash a cube with distilled water and melt it. Test as for drinking water.

ICE CREAMS AND ICES. GLACES – Flavoured ices have been made since the very earliest times, and it is generally recognised that the Arabs and the Chinese knew the art of making iced sweets, especially water ices (sherbets). The Chinese, it is said, taught the art of ice cream making to the Indians, the Persians and the Arabs.

Ice creams and water ices were introduced into France about the year 1660 by a Sicilian, Francisco Procopio. Some ten years later he opened a café in Paris, in the rue des Fossés-Saint-Germain (now the rue de l'Ancienne-Comédie). It was here that Procopio (who had changed his name to the more Gallic-sounding Procope) sold variously flavoured ice creams and water ices to the Parisians, who acquired a taste for these sweets, still a novelty to them.

Other Parisian limonadiers quickly followed Procope's example, and soon there were so many of them that, in 1676, it was necessary to give statutory recognition to their corporation and to authorise its members officially to sell ice creams and water ices. It is said that there were in Paris, at that time, 250 limonadiers who were selling ices.

Until about the middle of the eighteenth century, ices were only sold in Paris in the summer. In 1750, Procope's successor, Buisson, started making ices all the year round. His competitors at once followed suit. But the ices were of poor quality. It was not until 1776 that ices more delicate in flavour began to be made. These had more body than those of earlier times and could be moulded into different shapes. It was about this time that fromages, as well as a number of frozen desserts, were invented. Some of these are still made today.

Although the Romans used to cool drinks with ice or snow, this practice was not introduced into France until the seventeenth century, and even then it was only adopted by persons of great refinement.

In the Dictionnaire de Monnet, 1636, the word glacière (ice chest) does not even appear. Yet some forty years later the custom of drinking iced wines was so general in France that any departure from it was much frowned upon, if one may judge from what Boileau says in his Repas ridicule:

*Mais qui l'aurait pensé? Pour comble de disgrâce,
Par le chaud qu'il faisait, nous n'avions point de glace,*

Point de glace, bon Dieu! Dans le fort de l'été, Au mois de juin . . .

'The worst of disasters. But who would have thought it?

'In spite of the heat, we had no ice.

'No ice, good God! At the height of the summer,

'In the month of June . . .'

At the end of the eighteenth century, the manufacture of ices developed considerably, especially in Paris. This was the age which saw the invention of the ice bombe. It was soon the custom to serve a bombe glacée at the end of any formal meal, and the savouring of ices at the cafés of the Palais-Royal had by this time become fashionable.

During the period of the First Empire, thanks to the Italian ice cream manufacturers, of whom there were many in Paris, ice cream and water ices of various kinds improved still further in quality. Ices began to be made from a basic mixture of egg yolks and syrup, which led to the creation of more elaborate sweets. These took the place of cylindrical ice cream blocks at formal dinners.

Pratti and Tortoni became famous for the delicacy of their ices.

Under the Second Empire the 'surprise omelette', sometimes called omelette à la norvégienne, was invented. This remarkable sweet, with a centre of cold fruit and ice cream and a hot crust of meringue browned in the oven, was cleverly devised to produce a gastronomic paradox, a ball of ice in a piping hot casing. (See EGGS, Omelette à la norvégienne.) Under the Second Empire, too, coupes, mousses, and parfaits were first made.

The manufacture of ices, sherbets and ice creams has developed into an industry of some magnitude being, as it is, an important outlet for agricultural dairy produce, eggs and fruit.

The enormous advances made by the refrigeration industries have resulted in much improved methods of manufacture, conservation and distribution. Domestic appliances, too, have been considerably improved.

The manufacture of ice cream products, now mainly automatic, is carried out under strictly hygienic conditions. Electrically-operated ice cream freezers are available for domestic use.

General method for the preparation of ices – Using a churn freezer. Having prepared the appropriate mixture (for syrup ice or cream ice), pour it into a metal freezer lodged in a bucket containing layers of chipped ice, salt and saltpetre. This mixture should be well pressed down in the bucket. Replace the lid and start to churn, continuing until freezing is accomplished.

If a hand-operated churn freezer is used close it tightly. Turn it up first one way and then the other by the handle attached to the lid. This operation throws some of the mixture against the sides of the freezer so that it solidifies. It is therefore necessary from time to time to scrape the sides of the freezer with a special spatula and mix the frozen ice cream with the rest. During the freezing process, stir the mixture thoroughly with the spatula so that it remains smooth and creamy.

Using a food freezer. Ice cream mixtures can be frozen quickly and easily in a household food freezer. This does not produce the same perfect texture as an ice cream churn freezer, but if the mixture is frozen quickly and stirred frequently, satisfactory results can be obtained.

Presentation of ices – Ice cream and water ices can be presented in many different ways. They can be shaped with a ball-scoop and served in shells or in special glasses, or – still shaped with a ball-scoop – formed into a pyramid on a dish covered with a folded napkin or paper doyley.

Ice cream and water ices can also be transferred, after freezing, to special moulds which are conical in shape. These are hermetically sealed and placed, with their contents, in a bucket where they are packed round with chopped ice and salt. To ensure that the ices are quite firm when they are turned out of the moulds, they should be left in the ice bucket for at least 1 hour.

To turn out these ices, run cold water rapidly over the mould. Dip it for a second into warm water. This will warm the mould slightly and detach the ice from the sides. Tip the mould upside down on a dish and lift it up carefully, leaving the ice cream in the centre of the dish.

Ices can be prepared in small moulds in the same way as those shaped in large moulds.

Small moulds are available in a variety of shapes.

When they are filled, their edges are sealed with butter. They are then pressed down into a bucket of crushed ice and salt, like other types of ice cream moulds.

ICE CREAM AND WATER ICE MIXTURES. COMPOSITIONS POUR GLACES DIVERSES – These are of three kinds: those with a syrup base, used in the preparation of water ices flavoured with fruit juices, essences or liqueurs; those with a custard base, made from a mixture of egg yolks, sugar and milk; and those with a mousse base.

Mixture for fruit ices. GLACE AUX FRUITS – Rub the fruit (peeled if necessary) through a fine sieve. Add to the purée thus obtained an equal quantity of cold sugar syrup (4 cups sugar and 2 cups water boiled for 5 minutes and cooled) and add lemon juice according to the nature of the fruit purée. Mix all these ingredients on ice, where possible testing the sugar content of the mixture with a saccharometer. Fruit ices are made from a mixture registering a standard density of 18° to 22°.

Fruit ices may also be prepared thus:

Pound the fruit in a mortar with 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups)

Various moulds for ice puddings
(Dehillerin. Phot. Larousse)

Electric churn freezer
'Sirem'

fine sugar to every 500 g. (generous 1 lb.) fruit.

Rub through a fine sieve. Add to this mixture as much water as is required to bring it to the right density. (This must be tested with a saccharometer.)

Mixture for ices flavoured with liqueurs and essences. GLACES AUX LIQUEURS, AUX ESSENCES – Add the liqueur or essence desired to cold sugar syrup (see SYRUP). Usually, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) liqueur is required for every litre (scant quart, generous quart) syrup. A little lemon juice is added to this mixture.

These are the basic ingredients of ices flavoured with anisette, Armagnac, Crème de cacao, Curaçao, cherry brandy, kirsch, rum, maraschino, or any other liqueur.

As in the case of fruit ices, this mixture whenever possible must be tested with a saccharometer, which should register between 18° and 22°.

Ice cream mixture (custard). GLACE À LA CRÈME – Place in a saucepan 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) fine sugar and 10 egg yolks. Work this mixture with a spatula until it reaches ribbon consistency (when it drops off the spatula like a ribbon).

Blend in little by little, 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) flavoured boiling milk. Cook on the stove, stirring until it coats the spoon. It must not be allowed to come to the boil or the mixture will curdle.

Rub through a fine conical sieve into a bowl. Stir from time to time until it is quite cold.

The mixture most commonly used is 400 g. (14 oz., 1½ cups) fine sugar and 8 egg yolks to 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) milk. This is a very good recipe, producing a firm, creamy ice, not too sweet, to which may be added a liquid flavouring (brandy, rum, kirsch, Chartreuse or any other) without risk of spoiling its consistency. By using less milk and making up the liquid content with fresh cream, an ice cream of smoother texture can be obtained.

A drier and firmer ice is made by using less sugar and fewer egg yolks. If, however, too little sugar or too few eggs are used, the result will be a disappointingly tasteless mixture.

In no circumstances should less than 300 g. (11 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) fine sugar and 6 egg yolks be used. Even these quantities will not yield an ice of good quality.

Mousse (bombe) mixture. PÂTE À BOMBE – Make 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) syrup boiled to 104°C. (220°F.). Put the syrup and 32 egg yolks in a double saucepan on the stove over a high flame. From time to time stir with a whisk. When the mixture reaches the consistency of thick cream, rub it through a fine sieve into a bowl. Whisk until it is quite cold, when it should be light, frothy and whitish in colour. Add an equal quantity of whipped cream, and liqueur or fruit purée.

Keep in a stone or porcelain container, and place in a bucket of ice without salt, or in the refrigerator.

Recipes for a number of different ices are given below.

PLAIN FRUIT ICES WITH A SYRUP BASE. GLACES SIMPLES, AUX FRUITS, AU SIROP –

Apricot ice. GLACE À L'ABRICOT – Equal quantities of fresh apricot pulp or purée and syrup. The juice of 2 lemons is added to every litre (scant quart, generous quart) of this mixture. (Density: 18° to 19° – see SUGAR.)

Banana ice. GLACE À LA BANANE – Proceed as for Pineapple ice (see below), using syrup and banana purée. Add lemon juice. Flavoured with kirsch or rum. (Density: 20° to 21° – see SUGAR.)

Cherry ice. GLACE AUX CERISES – Soak  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) crushed stoned cherries for 1 hour in  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) syrup. Soak pounded kernels with the cherries. Add a few drops of lemon juice and a little kirsch. Rub through a fine sieve. (Density: 20° to 21° – see SUGAR.)

Lemon ice. GLACE AU CITRON – Soak the rind of 3 lemons for 2 hours in  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) cold syrup. Add the juice of 4 lemons (and, if desired, the juice of 2 oranges). Strain. (Density: 21° to 22° – see SUGAR.)

Melon ice. GLACE AU MELON – Proceed as for Apricot ice, using melon pulp rubbed through a fine sieve. Add a little brandy to the mixture.

Orange ice. GLACE À L'ORANGE – Proceed as for Tangerine ice (see below) with the peel and juice of 4 to 5 oranges and the juice of 1 lemon. (Density: 20° to 21° – see SUGAR.)

Peach ice. GLACE À LA PÊCHE – Proceed as for Apricot ice, using peach pulp. (Density: 18° to 19° – see SUGAR.)

Pear ice. GLACE À LA POIRE – Pound in a mortar 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar with 500 g. (18 oz.) peeled and cored pears stewed until very soft. Add the juice of a lemon. Rub through a sieve. Add enough filtered water to bring the sugar density to 21° to 22° (see SUGAR.)

Pineapple ice. GLACE À L'ANANAS – Soak  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) finely pounded pineapple (fresh or tinned) for 2 hours in an equal quantity of syrup. Add a little lemon juice and kirsch. (Density: 18° to 20° – see SUGAR.)

Plum ice. GLACE AUX PRUNES – Proceed as for Apricot ice, using purée of plums.

Raspberry ice. GLACE À LA FRAMBOISE – Proceed as for Strawberry ice (see below) using crushed raspberries.

Redcurrant ice. GLACE À LA GROSEILLE – Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) redcurrant juice to an equal quantity of syrup. Add only a few drops of lemon juice, as the fruit is acid enough. (Density: 19° to 20° – see SUGAR.)

Strawberry ice. GLACE AUX FRAISES – Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) crushed strawberries (fresh or preserved) and the juice of 2 lemons and 2 oranges to  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) cold syrup. Sieve. (Density: 16° to 18° – see SUGAR.)

This ice may also be prepared as follows: pound together 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) strawberries and 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fine sugar. Add the juice of 2 lemons and of 2 oranges. Rub through a sieve.

Add to this mixture enough filtered water to bring the mixture to a density of 16° to 18° (see SUGAR).

Tangerine ice. GLACE À LA MANDARINE – Infuse the peel of 4 tangerines in  $7\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints,  $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints) boiling syrup. When the mixture is cold, add the juice of 6 tangerines, 2 oranges and 1 lemon. Strain. (Density: 20° to 21° – see SUGAR.)

PLAIN ICE CREAMS. GLACES SIMPLES À LA CRÈME –

Almond ice cream. GLACES AUX AMANDES – Add to 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) boiled milk, 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) fresh almonds and 5 bitter almonds which have been blanched and pounded with a few tablespoons water. Infuse for 25 minutes.

Use to prepare custard cream as described in the basic recipe for Ice cream mixture. Freeze the ice cream in the usual way.

Chocolate ice cream. GLACE AU CHOCOLAT – Add 250 g. (9 oz., 3 cups) grated chocolate, dissolved in 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) water to 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) boiled milk flavoured with vanilla.

The chocolate being sweet in itself, only 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar should be used instead of the larger quantities indicated in the basic instructions for Ice cream mixture.

Coffee ice cream (Debillot. Phot. Larousse)

Coffee ice cream. GLACE AU CAFÉ – Infuse 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) freshly roasted and ground coffee in a 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) hot, boiled milk for 25 minutes. Use this to prepare the cream according to the basic instructions for Ice cream mixture. It can also be made by adding to the milk 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) very strong liquid coffee.

Hazelnut ice cream. GLACE AUX AVELINES – Proceed as for Almond ice cream, substituting for the almonds 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) slightly roasted, pounded hazelnuts.

Pistachio ice cream. GLACE À LA PISTACHE – Pound together 75 g. (3 oz.,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) blanched pistachio nuts and 25 g. (1 oz., 3 tablespoons) blanched fresh almonds. While pounding, add a few tablespoons milk.

Infuse in 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) boiling milk.

Hazelnut ice cream (Larousse)

Use to prepare the cream according to the basic instructions for Ice cream mixture.

Plombières ice cream. GLACE PLOMBIÈRES – Pound thoroughly in a mortar 300 g. (11 oz., 2 cups) blanched fresh almonds and 25 g. (1 oz., 3 tablespoons) blanched bitter almonds. Moisten with a little milk. Add 1½ litres (2½ pints, 2¾ pints) cream.

Strain, pressing the mixture down in the strainer to extract all the milk.

Stir 10 egg yolks thoroughly with 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) fine sugar in a saucepan. Add the milk to this mixture. Heat on the stove without bringing to the boil, as for Custard cream (see CREAMS). Remove from the stove and stir vigorously for 3 minutes. Rub through a sieve. Freeze in a churn freezer, stirring from time to time with a spatula. When the mixture is partly frozen, add 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) whipped cream. Continue the freezing process.

Drain off any water in the bucket and immerse the freezer once more. Cover it completely with ice and salt and leave for 2 hours.

Scoop out the ice cream with a ball-scoop and arrange in a pyramid on a dish covered with a folded napkin. Pour apricot jam over the ice cream.

Chestnut Plombières ice cream. GLACE PLOMBIÈRES AUX MARRONS – Mix 250 g. (9 oz., 1 cup) chestnut purée (made from skinned chestnuts cooked in milk) with 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) hot Custard cream (see CREAMS). Rub through a fine sieve. Freeze. When it is firm and smooth, mix in ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) whipped cream, and 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) maraschino.

Put this mixture in a cylindrical ice cream mould and leave in the ice bucket for 1½ hours.

Praline ice cream. GLACE AU PRALINÉ – Add to 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) vanilla custard cream, prepared as described in the recipe for Vanilla ice cream (see below), 125 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) praline (q.v.) of burnt almonds, pounded and rubbed through a sieve or put through a grinder.

The same method is used for burnt hazelnuts, walnuts, pistachio nuts or peanuts.

Tea ice cream. GLACE AU THÉ – Prepare the cream in the usual way with a mixture of 7½ dl. (1½ pints, 1¾ pints) milk and 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) very strong, strained tea.

The same method is used for the preparation of ice creams flavoured with peppermint, lime-flower or verbena infusions.

Vanilla ice cream. GLACE À LA VANILLE – Proceed as for the basic Ice cream mixture, using milk in which a vanilla pod has been infused for 20 minutes, or to which 1 tablespoon of vanilla extract has been added.

Vanilla and strawberry ice cream (Debillot. Phot. Larousse)

Walnut ice cream. GLACE AUX NOIX – Proceed as for Almond ice cream, using 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) pounded walnuts.

Ice cream without eggs (American cookery). GLACE SANS OEUFS – Boil 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) milk with the same quantity of cream and 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fine sugar. Bind with 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) cornflour. Rub through a hair sieve. Let it cool, stirring often.

Flavour with vanilla, lemon or orange zest, coffee, chocolate, liqueurs, etc. Freeze in the usual way.

BOMBE ICES. BOMBES GLACÉES – In former times, bombes were made of water ice or ice cream mixtures and were shaped in spherical moulds. This is how they got their name. Nowadays, bombe ices are more delicate in flavour, being made from the Mousse (bombe) mixture described in the basic recipes above.

A bombe should be made of two different ice cream mixtures, one to line the mould (this is usually a plain ice cream or a fruit or water ice), the other, which fills the casing, made from Mousse (bombe) mixture. Bombes are made in conical moulds, slightly rounded at the top, with tight-fitting lids, and are hermetically sealed with butter. They should be left to stand in ice and salt for 2 hours.

Bombe Aïda – Line the mould with Tangerine ice. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with vanilla and kirsch.

Algerian bombe. BOMBE ALGÉRIENNE – Line the bombe mould with Tangerine ice. Fill with Pineapple ice, to which pieces of crystallised pineapple steeped in kirsch have been added.

Bombe Alhambra – Line the mould with Vanilla ice cream. Fill with strawberry-flavoured Mousse (bombe) mixture. After turning out, surround the bombe with large strawberries steeped in kirsch.

American bombe. BOMBE AMÉRICAINE – Line the mould with Strawberry ice. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with tangerine. Decorate the bombe with Pistachio ice cream put through a forcing-bag.

Apricot bombe – See APRICOT.

Bombe Bourdaloue – Line the mould with Vanilla ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with anise. Decorate the bombe with crystallised violets.

Bombe cardinal – Line the mould with ice cream flavoured with strawberry and raspberry. Fill with vanilla Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with praline.

Bombe Chateaubriand – Line the mould with Apricot ice. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with vanilla, mixed with crystallised (candied) apricots, diced and steeped in kirsch.

ICE CREAMS AND ICES

Bombe dame-blanche – Line the mould with Vanilla ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with almond milk.

Bombe dauphinoise – Line the mould with Pineapple ice. Fill with whipped cream flavoured with green Chartreuse.

Bombe diplomate – Line the mould with Vanilla ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured maraschino, mixed with crystallised fruit steeped in liqueur.

Bombe Doria – Line the mould with Pistachio ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with vanilla, mixed with pieces of Marrons glacés (see CHESTNUT) steeped in Curaçao.

Bombe duchesse – Line the mould with Pineapple ice. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with pears and kirsch.

Bombe Francillon – Line the mould with Coffee ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with fine Champagne brandy.

Bombe Gismonda – Line the mould with Praline ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with aniseed, and a praline (q.v.) made from filberts.

Bombe Grimaldi – Line the mould with Vanilla ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with kummel. Decorate the bombe with crystallised (candied) violets and halved pistachio nuts.

Bombe Héricart – Line a large, shallow mould with Strawberry ice. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with Champagne brandy, with whole strawberries from strawberry jam dotted about here and there.

Bombe impératrice – Line the mould with Redcurrant ice. Fill with Rice à l'impératrice (see RICE) mixed with diced crystallised (candied) fruit steeped in liqueur.

Bombe Médicis – Line the mould with Pear ice. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with peach, and pieces of peach steeped in kirsch.

Bombe Monselet – Line the mould with Tangerine ice. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with port and mixed with candied orange peel cut into little pieces and steeped in Champagne brandy.

Bombe Montmorency – Line the mould with kirsch ice (see the basic recipe above for ices flavoured with liqueurs). Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with cherry brandy, mixed with cherries steeped in kirsch.

Nelusko ice cream – Mousse (bombe) mixture enclosed in a layer of ice cream flavoured with praline.

Bombe Nesselrode – Line the mould with Vanilla ice cream. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture to which a purée of Marrons glacés (see CHESTNUT) flavoured with kirsch has been added.

Bombe succès – Line the mould with Apricot ice. Fill with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with kirsch, mixed with diced apricots.

Bombe tutti-frutti – Line the mould with Strawberry ice. Fill with Mousse (bombe) mixture flavoured with vanilla, and with a salpicon (q.v.) of crystallised fruit steeped in liqueur.

Bombe Véronique – Line the mould with Pistachio ice cream. Fill with chocolate-flavoured Mousse (bombe) mixture mixed with diced candied orange peel steeped in Champagne brandy.

ICED COUPES or SUNDAES. COUPES GLACÉES – These are a delicious composite sweet with ice cream as their main ingredient. They are served in glass or silver ice cups, and for this reason they are known as coupes in France.

The glasses are usually filled with one or more kinds of ice cream and decorated on top with fresh or crystallised fruit, or with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS).

Sundaes may be presented in a great many different ways.

Preparation of coupes

The coupe Jacques may be regarded as the classic sundae, the model for all others. (See also SUNDAES.)

Apricot coupe. COUPE GLACÉE AUX ABRICOTS – Put 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) fresh (or canned) sliced apricots, steeped in kirsch, into a Champagne glass or ice cup.

Top with a layer of Apricot ice. Smooth down the surface. Decorate with half an apricot, steeped in kirsch, and halved, blanched almonds. Sprinkle with a few drops of kirsch.

Cherry coupe. COUPE GLACÉE AUX CERISES – Put 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) stoned cherries which have been steeped in cherry brandy and sugar in the bottom of the ice cups. Cover with Cherry ice.

Decorate the ices with cherries and halved almonds.

Coupe Crapotte. COUPE GLACÉE CRAPOTTE – Fill Champagne glasses or ice cups three-quarters full with a smooth layer of Peach ice. Arrange on top a mixture of equal quantities of alpine strawberries and raspberries, previously steeped in kummel and chilled.

Cover the fruit with a layer of whipped cream piped through a forcing-bag with a fluted nozzle.

Decorate the top with blanched almonds and crystallised violets.

Coupe Jacques – Fill Champagne glasses or ice cups with equal quantities of Lemon ice and Strawberry ice. Put 1 tablespoon fresh fruit steeped in kirsch in the middle. Decorate with crystallised cherries and halved almonds. Sprinkle a few drops of kirsch on top.

Peach coupe. COUPE GLACÉE AUX PÊCHES – Put 1 tablespoon of a salpicon (q.v.) of raw peaches, steeped in liqueur, in Champagne glasses or ice cups. Cover with a smooth layer of Peach ice. Place in the centre a ripe peach which has been peeled and chilled on ice. Sprinkle with kirsch or any other liqueur.

SHERBETS AND WATER ICES. SORBETS – See SHERBETS.

Granolates – A granité (see below) served between main courses, like sherbets. They are also served as refreshments in the course of an evening's entertainment.

Granités – These ices, which are presented in special glasses, are made from fruit syrups, with a density of not more than 14° by the syrup saccharometer.

They are frozen in a churn freezer or deep freeze. Unlike other types of ice, they are not stirred during freezing. As their name suggests, granités should have a somewhat granular texture.

Iced Marquises. MARQUISES GLACÉES – Make from a mixture similar to that used in the preparation of granités but frozen to a somewhat stiffer consistency.

It is flavoured with kirsch and should register 17° on the syrup saccharometer.

Mix in, for 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) of the syrup, 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) very stiffly beaten Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) mixed with a purée of strawberries or some other fruit. Serve in glass goblets.

Iced punch à la romaine. PUNCH GLACÉ À LA ROMAINE – Iced punch is served between main courses, like sherbets and granités.

To  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) syrup (density 22°) add enough dry white wine or dry Champagne to reduce the density to 17°. Add to this mixture a little lemon and orange rind and the juice of 2 oranges and 3 lemons. Leave, covered, for 1 hour. Strain and bring to a density of 18°.

Ice this mixture in a churn freezer until it is rather stiff. Add a quarter of its volume of Italian meringue (see MIXTURES), made from 2 egg whites and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar.

Just before serving, mix in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum. Serve like sherbet.

Spoons – A sherbet with a sugar density of 20°. When it is frozen, Italian meringue (see MIXTURES) is added – twice as much as would be used in an ordinary sherbet.

Spoons are made from fruit juices or wines such as Champagne, muscatel, Frontignan, sherry, port, etc. They are served in glasses, like sherbets.

MISCELLANEOUS ICES AND ICE CREAMS. GLACES DIVERSES –

Iced mousses or mousselines. MOUSSES, MOUSSELINES GLACÉES – Iced mousse or mousseline may be made in two different ways, using either syrup or custard cream.

Ingredients for the syrup. Make a thick syrup (4 cups sugar, 2 cups water boiled to 104.5°C. (220°F.) and cooled). Add equal quantities of fresh fruit pulp and very stiff Chantilly cream (see CREAMS).

Ingredients for the cream. Make a custard using 500 g. (18 oz., 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sugar, 16 egg yolks and  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) milk. Leave to cool. Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fresh cream, 20 g. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  oz., 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons) powdered gum tragacanth and flavouring (vanilla, orange or lemon rind, various liqueurs, etc.). If the mousse is made with fruit, add to the cream mixture  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) fresh fruit pulp.

Beat the mixture on ice until it is very frothy. Put into moulds lined with white paper. Seal them hermetically and leave to stand in ice and salt for 2 to 3 hours, according to the size of the moulds.

Iced parfaits. PARFAITS GLACÉS – In former times the term parfait was used exclusively for an iced sweet flavoured with coffee. Nowadays, parfaits are made from all kinds of ices. They differ from bombes in that they are not encased in a simple water ice or ice cream.

Mix 32 egg yolks in 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) syrup of 28° density, strained and cooled.

Cook over a low flame like a custard. Strain through a fine sieve, and whisk on ice until it is quite cold. Flavour with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum or brandy, and blend in 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) cream, stiffly beaten.

Put the mixture in a parfait mould. Leave in ice and salt for 2 to 3 hours, or place in a food freezer.

This mixture can be flavoured with coffee, chocolate, praline, vanilla and many other flavourings.

Ice puddings. POUDINGS GLACÉS – Ice puddings can be made in many ways. They are shaped in pudding-basin moulds or in bombe moulds.

Line the moulds with wafers, sponge fingers steeped in liqueur as for a Charlotte russe (see CHARLOTTE), or with finely sliced Genoese cake cut into thin strips.

Fill with a Mousse (bombe) mixture. The pudding can be made more attractive by using different coloured layers of variously flavoured ice cream for the filling. It may also be made from a mixture similar to that used in a Bavarian cream (q.v.).

Ice puddings are frozen with a great deal of ice or placed in a food freezer.

Iced pudding capucine. POUDING GLACÉ CAPUCINE – Make a Genoese cake (see GENOESE) in a charlotte mould. Leave it until it is completely cold. Remove the top and scoop out the cake almost completely, being careful not to break the crust. Fill with alternate layers of tangerine-flavoured Iced mousse and kummel-flavoured Iced mousse, prepared in advance.

Cover the Genoese cake with its top. Surround it with ice and salt in a bucket and leave for 1 hour, or place in a food freezer.

Place it on a base of clear sugar, decorated with flowers and ribbons of spun sugar. Pipe Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) through a forcing-bag onto the cake.

Iced soufflés. SOUFFLÉS GLACÉS – These are prepared with a mixture similar to that used for cream iced mousses, or with a fruit mixture.

Ingredients and method for fruit iced soufflés. Whisk 10 egg whites to a stiff foam. Add 500 g. (18 oz., 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sugar cooked with 1 cup water to 116°C. (240°F.) (see SUGAR). Put this mixture in a bowl and chill. Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) of whatever fruit purée is desired and  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) stiffly beaten cream.

Large soufflés are served in an ordinary soufflé dish, surrounded by a white paper frill tied with string or stuck together with butter. The frill should be about 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (1 inch) deeper than the dish. Fill the dish until the soufflé is flush with the top of the frill. Put it in a bucket of ice and salt, or in a food freezer.

Small soufflés are served in the same way, either in little metal cases or in frilled paper cases. They, too, should be put to freeze in a bucket of ice and salt, or placed in a food freezer.

Before serving remove the paper frills from the dish or cases.

Neapolitan ice cream or ice gâteau. BISCUITS GLACÉS – These ices are made of Ice cream mixture shaped in rectangular boxes. Layers of ice cream are alternated with layers of water ices of different colours and flavours.

They are left to freeze in ice and salt in the usual way, or placed in a food freezer.

When the block of ice cream is taken out of the mould, it is cut into neat slabs and served either unadorned, or decorated with plain ice cream piped through a forcing-bag.

Neapolitan ice cream Comtesse-Marie. BISCUIT COMTESSE-MARIE – This is made in a special square mould (called a Comtesse-Marie mould). It is lined entirely with Strawberry ice and filled with sweet vanilla-flavoured whipped cream.

Turn the ice out of the mould into a special waxed paper case. Decorate with large strawberries steeped in kirsch, and sweet whipped cream.

ICED DESSERTS or SWEETS. ENTREMETS GLACÉS – Sweets or desserts of this kind may either be served in addition to ice cream or may include ice cream in their composition. Among these sweets are Bavarian cream (q.v.), Charlotte russe (see CHARLOTTE), fruit salads flavoured with liqueurs, various jellies including fruit moulds, puddings, Rice à l'impératrice (see RICE), stewed suédoise (q.v.).

Iced apples à la normande. POMMES GLACÉES À LA NOR-

ICE CREAMS AND ICES

MANDE – Scoop out large, sound cooking apples without damaging the skins. Immerse the hollowed-out apples for a few minutes in boiling syrup, so that they are slightly cooked.

From the pulp, make either an Ice cream mixture or a Mousse (bombe) mixture (see above). Flavour with Calvados.

If the apples are filled with mousse mixture, chill them in plenty of ice and salt for about 2 hours. If they are filled with ice cream, freeze the mixture first and fill the skins just before serving.

Iced grapefruit (filled). PAMPLEMOUSSE GLACÉ – This sweet can be prepared in the same way as Iced tangerines and oranges (see below), by filling the skins with a plain ice or Mousse (bombe) mixture made from the pulp.

Iced melon (filled). MELON GLACÉ – Slice off the top of a large cantaloupe melon near the stem. Remove all liquid and seeds.

Using a large spoon, scoop out the pulp, being careful not to damage the rind. Make a kirsch-flavoured water ice or ice cream with the pulp.

Just before serving, fill the melon with this ice. Serve in a large glass dish, surrounded with crushed ice.

Iced melon filled à la Chantilly. MELON GLACÉ À LA CHANTILLY – Prepare the melon as indicated above. Cook the pulp sugar and rub it through a fine sieve. When quite cold, mix it with stiffly beaten Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with kirsch. Sprinkle the inside of the melon rind with sugar and kirsch, leave for a time, and then fill the rind with the mixture.

Stand the melon in an ice bucket for 2 hours before serving.

Iced pears belle angevine. POIRES BELLE ANGEVINE – Cut each pear at the stalk end, core it, scoop out some of the flesh without damaging the skin and pour boiling syrup over the fruit.

Fill the pears with pear Iced mousse flavoured with kirsch or with ordinary Pear ice made from the scooped-out flesh.

Arrange the pears on a napkin-covered dish, or on a foundation of nougat.

Iced pears, filled. POIRES DUCHESSE GLACÉES – Scoop out, without damaging the skins, some large, sound, well-shaped pears. Using the pulp, prepare a Mousse (bombe) mixture. Immerse the hollowed-out pears for 5 minutes in boiling syrup. Drain and leave to cool. Fill with the mousse mixture and chill for 2 hours in an ice bucket with plenty of ice and salt.

Iced pineapple. ANANAS GLACÉ – Choose a large pineapple, regular in shape, with the plume of its tufted top left on.

Remove the tufted top by a clean cut about 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) below the crown. Keep it to use as a lid.

Carefully remove all the flesh, leaving on the sides and bottom of the unbroken rind, pulp about 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. Dust inside with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) sugar, sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) kirsch and leave in a cold place for about 2 hours.

Just before serving, fill the rind with Pineapple ice prepared from the pulp removed earlier, with shredded pineapple steeped in kirsch added to it.

Put the pineapple on a napkin or a block of ice slightly hollowed out in the middle, and replace the tufted crown on top.

Iced pineapple à la bouronnaise. ANANAS GLACÉ À LA BOURBONNAISE – Slice off the top of a large fresh pineapple. Keep this part with its leaves intact to cover the pineapple later.

Carefully scoop out all the flesh of the pineapple. Core it, and cut the remainder into little cubes. Sprinkle with rum and sugar and stand it on ice.

(Modern Press)

Make a rum ice cream.

Before serving, sprinkle the inside of the scooped-out shell with rum and sugar and embed it in an ice-bucket to chill. Fill the shell with alternate layers of pineapple cubes and rum ice cream.

Cover with the top of the pineapple. Serve surrounded with crushed ice.

Iced pineapple à la Chantilly. ANANAS GLACÉ À LA CHANTILLY – Proceed as described in the recipe for Iced pineapple above, replacing pineapple ice by Vanilla ice cream with whipped cream added to it.

Arrange the pineapple on a napkin or on a block of ice and replace the tufted top.

Iced pineapple à la créole. ANANAS GLACÉ À LA CRÉOLE – Scoop out the pineapple as indicated above. Fill with an Iced mousse made from the pulp of the pineapple alternating with layers of chopped crystallised fruit steeped in rum.

Replace the top of the pineapple. Serve on a dish covered with a napkin, or on a block of ice.

Iced pineapple à la parisienne I. ANANAS GLACÉ À LA PARISIENNE – Prepare a Banana ice and flavour with Champagne brandy.

Cut off the top of the pineapple and scoop out three-quarters of the pulp without damaging the rind. Cut the pulp into small dice and steep in a bowl with 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) wild strawberries and 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) black grapes, sugar, and Champagne brandy. Keep in a cool place until ready to serve.

Fill the pineapple rind with banana ice, alternating with layers of the fresh fruit. Sprinkle each layer of fruit with blanched, finely shredded almonds. Finish with a layer of ice cream and cover with the tufted top.

Put on a block of ice, slightly hollowed out in the middle, or on a napkin-covered dish.

Serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) laced with kirsch.

Iced pineapple à la parisienne II. ANANAS GLACÉ À LA PARISIENNE – Scoop out the pineapple as indicated above. Fill with alternate layers of Strawberry ice and a salpicon (q.v.) of pineapple pulp, diced and steeped in kirsch.

Iced tangerines and oranges. MANDARINES ET ORANGES GLACÉES – Slice off the top of the fruit near the stem. Scoop out the pulp carefully so as not to damage the skins. Fill the skins with a plain Tangerine ice or Orange ice made from the fruit pulp.

Cover with the top of the fruit and serve on a napkin.

Melon frappé – Two melons are used in the preparation of this sweet. Using the pulp of one of them, make a granité flavoured with kirsch.

Iced pineapple à la Chantilly (Robert Carrier)

Slice off the top of the second melon near the stem. Remove all liquid and seeds. Using a spoon, scoop out the pulp, being careful not to damage the rind. Steep the pulp on ice in Frontignan, port, sherry, kirsch, maraschino or Curaçao.

Put the shell of the melon in an ice bucket until it is very cold. Fill with alternate layers of the granité and the iced flesh of the second melon.

Replace the top of the melon. Serve in a glass dish.

Peaches cardinal. PÊCHES CARDINAL – Stew the peaches in a syrup flavoured with vanilla. Leave until completely cold. Drain them. Put them in a dish on a fairly thick layer of Strawberry ice. Cover with iced redcurrant jelly flavoured with kirsch, and scatter wild strawberries on top.

Peach Melba. PÊCHES MELBA – This sweet was first made in London by Escoffier. Line a silver dish with a fairly thick layer of Vanilla ice cream. Place on top peeled peaches which have been steeped in a syrup flavoured with vanilla, and left until they are completely cold. The peaches are then covered with raspberry purée.

Many other kinds of fruit may be served in the same way. For instance, large fresh strawberries steeped in sugar or kirsch; pears (halved or quartered) stewed in vanilla-flavoured syrup, and chilled; nectarines (peeled, stewed in syrup and chilled), etc.

Pear Melba. POIRES MELBA – Poach the pears in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain and dry them. Arrange in a glass dish or a timbale on a foundation of Vanilla ice cream and cover with raspberry purée.

ICHTHYOPHAGY. ICHTYOPHAGIE – The practice of eating nothing, or almost nothing, but fish. Ichthyophagy is mainly practised among seaboard peoples. A fish diet is said to be less nourishing than a meat diet, but there are no substantial grounds for this view. Fish has been credited with aphrodisiac properties. It is also said to stimulate the brain. These properties were attributed to fish because of a misguided belief that it contains a high proportion of phosphorus. In fact there is less phosphorus in fish than in meat, less even than in some vegetables. Fish on the whole is very easily digested. As a result it gives the impression of being less filling than some other foods, and so it is not favoured by manual workers.

ICING. GLACES DE SUCRE – Sugar icing, which may be prepared with or without cooking, is used in confectionery of all kinds. Pastries, cakes and petits fours (q.v.) of various kinds may all be decorated with icing.

Blackcurrant icing. GLACE AU CASSIS – Mix  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) blackcurrant juice with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) syrup cooked to hard ball stage (121°C., 250°F.). Add enough icing sugar to produce a fairly stiff paste. Mix. This icing must be warmed slightly before use. It is often coloured with a little liquid carmine.

Using the same method, icing may be made with strawberries, raspberries, redcurrants and other red fruit.

Chocolate icing. GLACE AU CHOCOLAT – Place 125 g. (4 oz., 4 squares) unsweetened, softened chocolate in a bowl. Add a few tablespoons lukewarm syrup, boiled to short thread stage (see SUGAR), and icing sugar. This icing must be used at once.

Coffee icing. GLACE AU CAFÉ – Add to  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) very strong coffee (coffee essence) enough icing sugar to make a fairly stiff paste. This icing must be used at once.

Fondant icing. GLACE AU FONDANT – Put in a basin  $2\frac{1}{2}$  kg. (5½ lb.) lump sugar. Add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  litres ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  pints,  $2\frac{3}{4}$  pints) water and 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) glucose.

Cook over a high flame, skimming from time to time, until the sugar has reached 116°C. (240°F.) or soft ball stage (see SUGAR).

Pour the sugar onto a marble slab and let it cool a little. Work it with a spatula by folding the edges towards the centre until it is a white and very smooth fondant. Put in a bowl, cover with a damp cloth and leave in a cool place.

To use the fondant. Soften a few tablespoons of the mixture in a small saucepan over a low flame, stirring constantly. Add a little syrup cooked to short thread stage. Flavour with any appropriate liqueur, or add a little coffee essence or melted chocolate.

Colour the fondant with carmine or any other vegetable colouring if desired.

Lemon icing – GLACE AU CITRON – Made with the rind and juice of lemons, as for Orange icing (see below).

Orange icing. GLACE À L'ORANGE – Put the peel of 2 oranges in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) syrup cooked to the hard ball stage (see SUGAR) and let it stand for 15 minutes. Add the strained juice of the fruit. Put the mixture in a bowl, add icing sugar, and proceed as for other kinds of icing.

This icing may be coloured with a little liquid carmine and a yellow vegetable dye. It must be used at once.

Royal icing. GLACE ROYALE – Put 2 egg whites in a small bowl. Add enough icing sugar to make a fairly stiff paste, though it must be soft enough to spread easily on cakes and pastry.

Mix, without working the eggs and sugar too hard.

Royal icing for desserts or sweets. GLACE ROYALE – Prepared in the same way as ordinary royal icing with egg whites and very fine icing sugar. Add to the mixture 6 to 8 drops of lemon juice and work with a spatula for 8 to 10 minutes. When the icing is ready, cover with damp paper. Keep in a cool place.

Strawberry fondant icing. GLACE AU FONDANT À LA FRAISE – Cook sugar to 116°C. (240°F.) or soft ball stage (see SUGAR). Add a little strawberry juice and a few drops of lemon juice. Pour it on a marble slab and work it with a spatula until very smooth.

Using the same method, fondant icing may be made with raspberry juice, lemon (rind and juice), or orange (rind and juice), or from the pulp or juice of other kinds of fruit.

Icing flavoured with rum and other liqueurs. GLACE AU RHUM – Put in a bowl 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) syrup cooked to soft ball stage (see SUGAR),  $1\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons rum and 1 teaspoon lemon juice. Add icing sugar. Mix. Use at once.

Icing made in this way may be flavoured with other liqueurs.

IERCHI – Russian name for a small fish similar to gudgeon. It is much used in Russian cooking, served fried or in soup.

Iguana

IGUANA. IGUANE – A kind of lizard, very scarce except in the tropics. Iguanas are to be found in both hemispheres, but there is one species which exists only in America.

In spite of its size, which precludes its assimilation with European lizards – though it is akin to these in its habits, and is almost as graceful and no less agile – the iguana should be included among those harmless animals which are worthy of preservation.

Its flesh is among the foods most highly prized by the gourmets of Central and South America.

ÎLE-DE-FRANCE – Some people say that Paris, the symbol and home of the whole gastronomic tradition of the Île-de-France, does not possess culinary specialities which are particularly her own. Such people take no account of the magnificent work carried out by the master chefs of Parisian restaurants, from Carême to Escoffier. There were also Gouffé, Urbain Dubois, Philéas Gilbert, Marguery, Pailard, Mourier, Nignon and a host of others.

In this vast city there are the best cooks and most skilful cordons bleus of all France. Paris abounds with foodstuffs imported from abroad and brought in from every corner of France, not to mention the produce of the fertile soil of the Île-de-France, and the livestock reared in all the départements around Paris, which provide it with savoury fish, delicate poultry, every kind of game and a host of other delicious things.

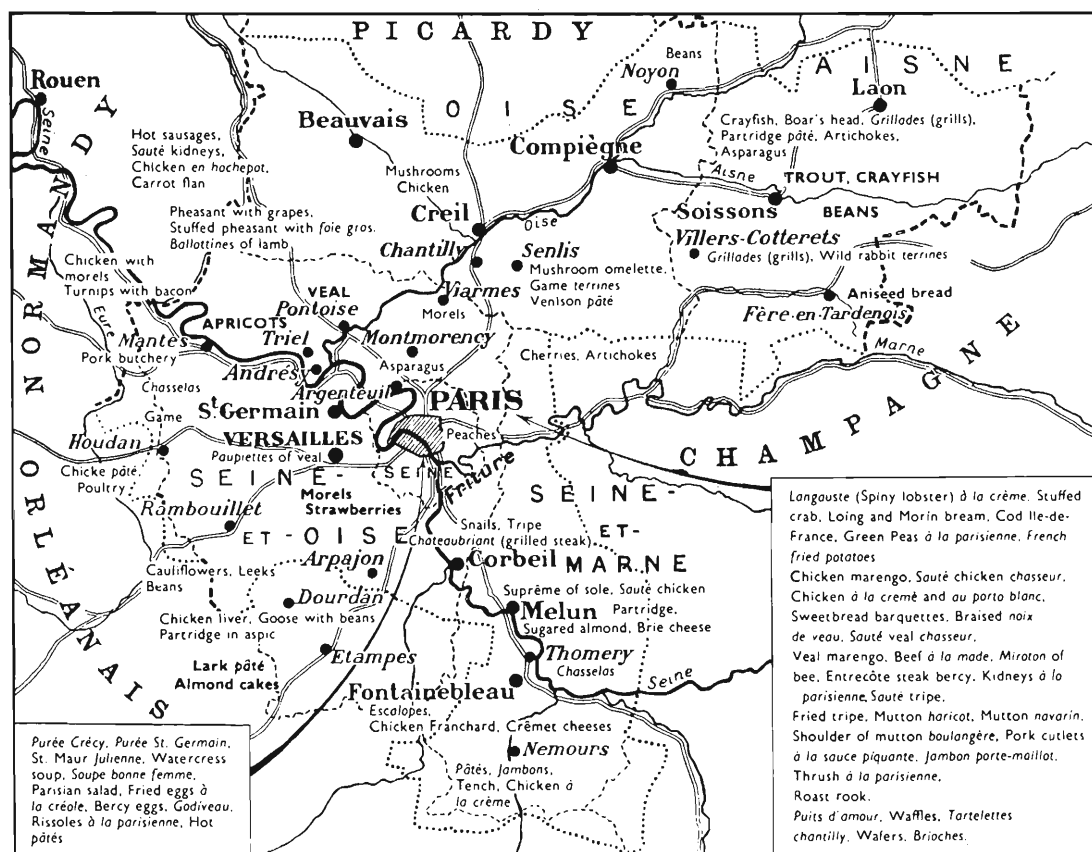

Les Halles (French Government Tourist Office)

The finest vegetables are grown in the Île-de-France, and the most delicately flavoured fruit is picked in the orchards of Paris. Here is a list of a few of the gastronomic delights to be found in the Île-de-France, and in the Paris region in particular:

Argenteuil asparagus, which with that of Lauris has the reputation of being the best in France; Clamart green peas; the French beans of Bagnolet; the cauliflower of Arpajon; the carrots of Crécy-sur-Morin; Laon artichokes and asparagus; the white beans of Soissons, or more accurately of Noyon; the lettuces of Versailles; the fragrant morels of the woods of Verrières, Viarmes and Rambouillet; the cultivated mushrooms of the Paris region, called champignons de Paris; the pot-vegetables grown at Bagneux, Châtillon, Saint Denis and other places in the area; onions, small and large, leeks, cabbages, carrots, turnips, cucumbers, shallots, various salads, spinach, sorrel, chervil, parsley, parsnips, horseradish, beetroot.

Gastronomic map of Île-de-France

The fruits of the Paris orchards have a great reputation; the Chasselas of Fontainebleau (those from the king's vine-arbour), of Thomery and Andrézy; the peaches of Montreuil; the strawberries of the Bièvre valley, the Héricart strawberry which the barrow-men call 'Ricart', and many other sweet-smelling fruits which melt in the mouth, such as pears, apples, plums, figs, apricots and nectarines.

Excellent meat is sold in Paris. What is more, the Paris butchers are true artists, and their cuts are flawless. Pontoise veal, called river veal, is as tender and as delicate as any to be found.

In the woods and forests around Paris, in the regions of Versailles, Marly and Saint-Germain-au-Laye, there is an abundance of excellent game.

The poultry of Houdan is held in high repute for its delicate flavour. The freshwater fish caught in the Seine, the Marne, the Oise and the Aisne are especially delicious.

Very good cheeses are made round about Paris, among which are Coulommiers, Brie, Brie de Melun, and the fresh cream cheese known as the Crémets of Fontainebleau, which rivals the famous fresh cream cheese of Saumur and Angers.

On the hillsides of the Marne, which are an extension of the neighbouring Champagne vineyards, the grapes gathered produce table wines that are fresh and pleasant to taste.

Excellent cider is brewed in the Aisne and Oise districts, and among the liqueurs distilled in the Paris region there is one, the Noyau de Poissy, which enjoys a great and long-established reputation.

Culinary specialties – The following soups were invented in Paris, in Parisian restaurants by Parisian chefs, and may be classed among the culinary specialties of Paris and the Paris region: Crêcy, Saint-Germain, Parisien, Bonne-femme, Cressonnière, Santé, Bonvalet, Compiègne, Cormeilles, Biard, Soissonnais, Argenteuil, Ambassadeurs, Balvet, Faubonne, Germine (invented by Dugléré at the Café Anglais), Darblay, Longchamp, Saint-Cloud.

Among the pork specialties of the Paris region are: Andouillettes (chitterling sausages); boudins noirs et blancs (black and white puddings); petit-salé; veau piqué (misnamed since it is not made from veal but from pork); friands parisiens; Pâté de foie de cochon (pig's liver pâté); fromage de tête de porc (pork brawn); hure de porc à la parisienne (boar's head à la parisienne) Roulade de tête de porc; pâté de porc de Paris; rillons and rillettes; cervelas or saucisson à cuire (saveloy or cooking sausage); jambon glacé de Paris (glazed Paris ham); côtes de porc à la charcutière (ribs of pork à la charcutière); pieds de porc à la parisienne (pig's trotters à la parisienne).

Among the dishes made from other meat are: Beef miroton; shoulder of mutton à la boulangère; entrecôte Bercy and entrecôte marchand de vin; the celebrated navarin of mutton, and the old haricot of mutton with turnips, now called haricot of mutton; fillet of beef à la béarnaise (bearnaise sauce having been created at Saint-Germain-en-Laye); rib of veal à la bonne femme; calves' tendons à la paysanne; the old-fashioned fricandeau; calves' head du Puits Certin; sauté of veal chasseur; mutton chops Champvallan; sheep's trotters à la poulette; épigrammes of mutton, lamb, etc.

Among the special poultry and game dishes of Paris are: Sautéed chicken Bercy, Boivin-Champeaux, Chasseur, Durand, finer herbes, Lathuille, Parmentier; spring chicken en cocotte, à la Clamart, à la bonne-femme, à la diable; squab à la crapaudine, en compote, en papillotes; duckling nantais with turnips, green peas; duckling rouennais à la presse; timbale of duckling Voisin; gibelotte of young rabbit; young garenne rabbit chasseur; pheasant à la Sainte-Alliance, a majestic creation from the hands of Brillat-Savarin; snipe à la fine Champagne, à la Riche; wild duck à la presse.

Vol-au-vent, flans and tarts filled in many different ways have for a very long time been regarded as culinary specialties of Paris.

Special Parisian fish (sea and freshwater) and shellfish dishes are: Lobster à l'américaine; the various matelotés of eels and freshwater fish, for example matelotes du Moulin de la Râpée and à la canotière; eel à la tartare; carp à la canotière; bouillabaisse à la parisienne (doubtless disapproved of by natives of Marseilles, but excellent all the same, and invented by a Parisian master chef); whiting Bercy, Colbert, au gratin; all manner of dishes made of sole, brill, turbot, sea perch, etc., brill Dugléré, young turbot au plat, sole à la normande, sole Marguery, turbot à la parisienne, spring lobster à la parisienne, coquilles Saint-Jacques à la parisienne, frogs' legs à la poulette.

The sauces in the Paris repertoire are numerous. Among the brown sauces may be mentioned: Charcutière, chasseur, Colbert, diable, hachée, moelle and Robert.

Among the white sauces the following are the best known: Béarnaise, Bercy, Bonnefoy, Chantilly, Choron, Fayot, Laguipière, marinière, mousseline, moutarde, poulette, ravigote, Riche and Véron.

Here is a random selection of some other Parisian specialties: Green peas à la française, à la parisienne; Matelote de Beauvais; the partridge pâtés of Laon; the poultry pâtés of Houdan; the lark pâtés of Étampes; échaudés; puits d'amour; oubliés; the Paris brioche; the aniseed bread of Fère-en-Tardenois; the stuffed pears of Provins; the cakes of Compiègne and Étampes; the green walnuts of Faucaucourt; the barley-sugar of Moret and the sugared almonds of Melun.

IMPÉRATRICE (À L') – Name applied to various dishes and cakes. Among these is Rice à l'impératrice, a cold dessert, a recipe for which is given under RICE.

IMPERIAL, IMPÉRIALE – The name given to a variety of plum and also to a large bottle holding about 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts), which is used for Bordeaux wines and for spirits.

IMPÉRIALE (À L') – Name applied to various dishes garnished with truffles, foie gras, cocks' combs and kidneys, and other similar garnishes.

IMPROMPTU – An improvised meal which would be described as a pot-luck meal in English.

INCISE, INCISER – To make shallow incisions with a sharp knife in the skin of fish that is to be grilled or fried.

INFUSE, INFUSER – To steep herbs or other flavouring in boiling liquid, until the liquid absorbs the flavour.

Milk used in the preparation of creams and custards is flavoured by infusing vanilla, cinnamon, or lemon or orange rind in it.

Wine used in the preparation of sauces is flavoured by the infusion of mushroom peelings, truffles or any kind of herb.

INSECTS, EDIBLE. INSECTES COMESTIBLES – Considering the prodigious number of insects, which, for the most part, feed on the greenstuffs which are also eaten by man and his flocks and cattle, one cannot help being surprised that in the west, even in times of famine, no one dreams of eating them.

They are usually objects of disgust among western peoples who do not, however, hesitate to eat prawns and other shellfish. On the other hand, the Arabs and other peoples of Africa and Asia look upon certain insects as great delicacies, and are surprised at our taste for shellfish.

The Hebrew tribes ate insects, long before Saint John the Baptist was forced to feed exclusively on locusts and other creatures of the same kind. In Leviticus (II, 21–22), Moses enumerates the animals which the Hebrews were permitted to eat. Among these he mentions four insects which Saint Jerome in his Latin translation calls locusta, bruchus, ophimachus and attacus.

The locusta must have been the locust, but naturalists have been unable to identify the other three.

Several other insects, such as white ants, are used as food by savage tribes. In ancient times, the Greeks prized grasshoppers very highly, especially the larvae. The Chinese, too, greatly enjoy eating certain insects, and feast upon the chrysalis of the silk-worm, while in Mexico, fried palm and agave grubs are sold in the streets like chestnuts.

INTERLARDING, PIQUAGE DES VIANDES – See CULINARY METHODS.

INTERNATIONAL COOKERY. CUISINE ÉTRANGÈRE – AMERICAN COOKERY. CUISINE AMÉRICAINE – Canada – Traditions of home cooking persist in Canada despite the growing dependence on convenience foods elsewhere. The type of home cooking varies according to which part of Europe the family originally came from.

The native inhabitants had little to offer. The Huron and Iroquois Indians cooked their beans in the embers, and lived mainly on a porridge made of water and crushed maize, to which they added fish or meat. However, pork trotter stew is said to be of Indian origin.

Otherwise it is European cookery, or rather European provincial cookery that forms the basis of Canadian cuisine. In Labrador, and on the shores of Newfoundland, we rediscover specialties of Mecklenburg, Swabia and Switzerland. Elsewhere, it is English cookery that reigns supreme. And naturally the whole of French Canada guards the secrets of the traditional regional dishes of France, especially those of Normandy. Certain religious communities in Canada still possess old recipes long since forgotten, even in France: a type of gingerbread made by the Ursuline nuns of Quebec, for example.

Canada is a rich country, with immense reserves of game; the Canadians eat bear, caribou, moose, and the goats of the Rocky Mountains. Fish abound in the innumerable lakes. Wheat, maize, oats and barley grow in abundance. These energy-giving cereals form the principal part of most Canadians' midday meal. The Ministry of Agriculture publishes booklets of cereal recipes, in order to encourage housewives to be adventurous in their presentation of cereals.

Canada is, above all, the country of the maple, the tree that is the country's national emblem. Whenever the thaws come, its bark is pierced by the sap collectors, and the sap flows like water: clear and slightly sweet. It is boiled to a syrup, which, together with the light brown maple sugar, form the basis of cakes, biscuits, sauces and jams, perfuming the Canadian air with the aroma of honey.

Central and South America – The cookery of South America is a spicier version of Spanish or Portuguese cuisine (depending upon the region), while that of Central America, and of Cuba in particular, is individual in character. (Cuba boasts a wide range of food produce, all of excellent quality.)

Delicately fleshed fish are caught in the Caribbean Sea and in the Gulf of Mexico. The best of these are cabrilla, cabra mora, chernia criolla, and chernia americana. They are all spindle-shaped and vividly coloured.

In the same seas are found fish that belong to the same family as the perch: the rabirrubia, the pargo colorado, the pargo amarillo, to name only a few.

A species closely related to the above includes the ronco carbonero, the boca colorada, the ronco amarillo, the jeniguana, etc. Fish of the mackerel family also abound in these waters.

All these fish are served boiled, grilled or fried. Some are considered more suitable for marinating.

The oysters caught off the shores of Cuba are delicious. They include a variety with a completely white shell.

Among the shellfish is a type of giant prawn (some weighing as much as 400 g. (14 oz.)). These prawns are a blackish-blue colour when they emerge from the water but cooking changes them to red.

High-quality meat is imported from the United States; the poorer home-produced beef is consumed by the country people. The latter comes from oxen which, working in a hot country as they do, yield lean, not very tasty meat.

Veal is better, mutton is mediocre, but pork is of good quality. Poultry is scarce and of inferior quality in Central America. Eggs, of course, are also scarce.

Cuba grows a wide range of vegetables, many of them similar to those found in our markets. In Central America there are edible plants such as manioc, Chinese potatoes, yams, Indian corn, plantain (the large banana used in cooking), and the small Indian pumpkin (calabaza). There are grapefruit, citrons, several varieties of oranges, lemons, sour limes, mangoes, guavas, red and yellow bananas, anonas, coconuts, avocado pears, custard apples, etc.

The special dishes of Central America are all highly spiced and most of them contain green peppers. Fish dishes include cod à la créole (bacalao à la criolla); cod Biscay-style; marinated fish; West Indian red prawns (camarones) fried in oil; chernia with onions; octopus with pimentos.

Meat dishes include olla podrida, a hearty stew made from a variety of meats, found in the parts of the country of Iberian origin; sancocho, which is a type of olla podrida; puchero, a Spanish-style pot-au-feu; montería, a chicken and tomato hash garnished with yams, potatoes and white Indian corn cobs and served with Cuban-style rice surrounded with bananas fried in oil; various types of meat balls called albondiguillas de carne; tasajo à la cubaine (minced cured beef simmered in tomato sauce and served with Cuban-style rice and fried bananas); pork chops Cuban-style, or with rice, or à l'espagnole; marinated rabbit; tamales.

Nearly all South American dishes are served with rice. This is prepared, Cuban-style, à la créole or à la valencienne. The vegetable specialities of the country include a variety of ways of preparing potatoes which along with rice, bananas and Indian corn take the place of our bread and most of our vegetables in the diet of the natives of the West Indies and Central America; bananas and plantain, eaten raw and used in cooking; Japanese and Porto Rican yams, served braised, or in hazelnut butter, or à la créole; roots of cassava or manioc prepared like yams; gombos prepared à l'espagnole or à la créole; avocado à la créole or in salad, palm cabbage in salad.

The orchards of Central America contain many delicious fruits, most of which are exported to Europe.

The large custard apple is the biggest member of the anona family. This fruit, which can weigh as much as 3 kg. (6½ lb.) is sometimes called sour sop in English. When it reaches maturity it exudes a pleasant aroma. Its dense white flesh, with large black seeds, is slightly acid and a tasty beverage is obtained by crushing the pulp and mixing it with four or five times its volume of water.

Anonas (small custard apples) are shaped rather like artichokes. The cream-coloured flesh is sweet but rather insipid. They are eaten raw.

The mamey of Santo Domingo can grow to the size of a small melon. Its skin is thick and its flesh yellow. It contains a very large stone. Called the apricot of the Tropics, it has, apart from the colour of its pulp, no similarity to this fruit. The fruit is usually stewed. A certain bitterness remains whatever method of preparation is chosen.

The red mamey, despite its name, belongs to a different family. Its other name in Central America is sapota. The skin of this fruit is woody and its strawberry-coloured flesh has the consistency of a ripe banana. It is usually eaten raw.

Guavas come in several varieties. Some are orange-shaped, others pear-shaped, others again look like large figs. The flesh is insipid and is generally eaten raw. It may also be stewed or made into jellies.

Mangoes vary in shape according to their species. Usually they resemble pears both in colour and shape. Their pulp is very juicy but slightly bitter in flavour.

The citron is the biggest fruit of the lemon family. This fruit is hardly ever eaten raw. It is usually preserved.

The grapefruit is the biggest fruit of the orange family. In Central America it is called either pomelos, or by its English name.

Kumquats are small fruits of the orange family. They are about the size and shape of olives and may be eaten raw like almonds since their skin is tender and not bitter. They may also be stewed, or pickled in vinegar.

From the Argentine (Spanish influence) to Brazil (Portuguese influence), from Peru to Bolivia the same dishes (with only slight variations) and the same spices appear again and again. Beer and rum are drunk in Columbia, excellent beer and chicha in Bolivia. There are vineyards in the Argentine, Uruguay and Peru. Chile is the largest wine-producing area (see WINES).

United States—The history of cooking of the United States is closely related to the history of the country. When the early settlers arrived, they found the Indians, who had been living off the land for centuries, eating the animals and birds of the plains and forests; fish and shellfish from the seas, lakes, rivers and streams; and wild fruits and nuts; a great variety of greens, and corn (maize). Most of the settlers, beginning with the Spanish explorers in the 1500s, followed by the British in the 1600s, and not long after, the Dutch, French, Germans, and Scandinavians, arrived in the New World with domestic animals and native plants to start a new life comparable to the one they had left behind. Many of them incorporated into their traditional eating habits certain Indian foods, especially corn.

By the nineteenth century, people from every corner of the globe had come to this country, settling in different areas. Thus regional cooking in the United States can be attributed in part to the resources of an area, but also to the people who settled there and adapted their native cooking habits to what nature had to offer.

Many factors enter into the American gastronomical picture. Most important are the natural resources of the whole country, modern food handling and rapid transportation, food technology, nutritional emphasis, and communication.

The climatic and geographical conditions of the United States are so varied that from the fertile valleys, vast forests and plains, lakes, rivers and streams, and extensive coastal regions, almost every food known to man can be produced within its borders. With modern technology, the produce of any one section of the country can be enjoyed in any other. For example, oranges and grapefruit grown in Florida or California are sold in every State in the Union. Maine lobsters are served in Texas, and oysters and crabs from Maryland are served fresh in Chicago. This means that very few foods are unique to any one area, but there are still special dishes that certain localities claim as their own. To mention a few, baked beans and brown bread belongs to Boston, and lobster stew to Maine. Fried chicken, hominy grits and pecan pie are at home south of the Mason-Dixon line; roast pork tastes best in Iowa; and New Orleans is where one finds the best Creole cooking.

Food technology, which concerns itself in part with the processing and packaging of food, takes much of the hard work of food preparation out of the home or restaurant kitchen. This, together with country-wide distribution, tends to standardise American food. The whole country is highly nutrition-conscious. Great emphasis is placed on the importance of eating foods with high vitamin and mineral content; food is advertised and sold quite as much for its food value as for its enjoyment. Food fads extolling the health-giving properties of one food or another come and go, but the basic requirements for nutritional health remain constantly in the minds of most Americans, professional and domestic, who plan meals.

The food business, with its main contributing subdivisions, represents a major part of American industry. One subdivision is communication, with cookbooks, magazine articles, newspaper columns, radio and television programmes all dealing with the production and preparation of food. The United States can boast its share of gourmets who strive constantly, through the various media of communications, to raise the gastronomic standards of the country.

Hotels and restaurants in the United States, as in most countries, range from the simplest to the most luxurious. In large cities such as New York, Chicago and San Francisco, there are many restaurants which specialise in food from other countries. In large cities generally, the better restaurants combine American cooking with international cooking, the French variety having the predominant influence. Outside the cities and across the length and breadth of the country there are thousands of small inns, restaurants and hotels. Some of the establishments specialising in regional cookery have attained national reputations. Peculiarly American are the eating-places dedicated to eating as quickly as possible for as little money as possible. These include lunch counters where quick-order meals are served, cafeterias where customers serve themselves from a wide variety of foods, the ubiquitous hot-dog and hamburger stands, and drive-ins where meals are served to patrons in their cars.

Certain American gastronomical habits that surprise visitors to the country are the speed with which most people eat, the number of foods that are served together on a plate, the sweet jellies and preserves served with meat and vegetables, and the great quantities of dairy produce used. These are admittedly American characteristics, but the nature of the country, and the international nature of its population, make it impossible to define United States cookery as such, other than to say that America is capable of producing and cooking the finest food in the world. Favourite American foods are: steaks, lamb chops, ham, chicken, lobster, corn on the cob, apple pie and ice cream.

When Spanish monks planted a few vines around Los Angeles in the eighteenth century, they had little idea that 200 years later America would be the second biggest wine-producing continent in the world.

It was not until a century ago, however (thanks to a Hungarian called Harszthy) that California became the centre of the American wine industry.

American wines are classified as 'dry' wines (white or red wines not exceeding 14°), and 'sweet' or 'dessert' wines. Some bear the name of the grower; others have European names.

A great deal of alcohol is consumed in the United States. This is mainly derived from cereals. There is also home-produced gin and imported Scotch whisky. On the whole, however, Americans prefer their own Bourbon whisky which is distilled from maize, or Canadian rye whisky.

Small pastries filled with jam: gefüllte Tascherl (pâtisserie viennoise)

AUSTRIAN COOKERY. CUISINE AUTRICHIENNE – Austrian cuisine is refined and contains Italian, German and Oriental influences. The traditional goulasch, which is of Hungarian origin, consists of sautéed beef cooked in a very thin sauce, garnished with sweet peppers. Sweet peppers are also served stuffed. Viennese boiled beef is well known. It is made with well-hung, tender meat and is accompanied by salads and various compotes. Wiener-schnitzel is a veal escalope, breadcrumbed, then fried in clarified butter.

Austria is above all the country of puddings and pastries: Mehlspeisen, Linzer torte and Sacher-torte are well known. Nockerl are quenelles made of flour and eggs bound with milk, similar to the Spätzle of Baden but sweeter and more delicate. They are sprinkled with poppyseeds and served with cream. Strudel consists of a very stiff dough rolled out thinly then folded over and over with layers of a kind of apple jam. Kaiser-schmarren is a thick sweet pancake which is divided in the pan as the mixture firms. The triumph of these Viennese sweets is the Zwetschgen-knödel – prunes with their stones replaced by lumps of sugar, then wrapped in a very light potato pastry and fried.

Austria makes an excellent lager. Large quantities of red and white wines are also produced. See Central European Cookery in this section.

BELGIAN COOKERY. CUISINE BELGE – Belgium is the country of 'pudding fairs'. The citizens of the city and suburbs of Brussels, for example, spend three days celebrating theirs. It is a country with a great love of food, for although surrendering wholeheartedly to the delicacies of French cuisine, the Belgian gourmet has remained faithful to his own national specialities. These include eel au vert (a spring and summer dish); Flemish carbonnade for which the celebrated national beer, gueuze lambic, seems specially designed; choezels au madère; fricadelles bruxelloises (fried mince balls); l'oie à l'instar de Visé (goose Visé-style); hochepot gantois (Ghent hotchpot); kouyn met pruneu (rabbit with prunes), essentially a Flemish dish; hop shoots; Brussels endive; pâté namurois brioché (Namur brioche pastry pie); and the succulent dishes à la liégeoise (calves' kidneys, larks, crayfish, etc.) which for many food lovers are the jewels of Belgian cuisine. The sauces are all seasoned predominantly with juniper berries, giving the dishes a distinctive flavour.

One of Belgium's national dishes is waterzoï (spouting water). Once made of fish from the Flemish coast, it now consists of chickens from the farmlands, especially those round Ghent. It is also one of the most ancient of Belgian dishes. Legend has it that Charles V considered it one of the best (and there is a painting in humorous vein by Herbo to illustrate this).

Brillat-Savarin, once initiated into the delights of Belgian cuisine, greatly enjoyed waterzoï, Namur pie, and the dishes with a distinctly Latin flavour such as those à la liégeoise. L'oie à l'instar de Visé surprised but did not tempt him. The origin of the recipe, although comparatively recent, is much disputed. It is said to owe its creation to an angry police inspector who, sixty years ago, was in charge of police headquarters in the charming Meuse village of Visé. One day he was called upon to settle a dispute concerning a goose that had wandered onto the public highway and been run over by a carter. The owner of the goose demanded nine francs compensation from the carter and said that he could keep the dead bird. The carter refused to pay more than six francs since, he said, the goose was no use to him.

'As you do not wish to have the bird,' the police inspector said to the carter, 'pay him the six francs you have offered.'

Then he said to the owner of the goose, 'As for you, since you are determined to rid yourself of the creature, here are this fellow's six francs and here are three from me. That makes nine, which is the amount you asked. I'll take the goose myself.'

The police inspector took the goose home and prepared it in the following way. He trussed and placed it in a large cooking pot, together with the giblets, and covered it with salted water. This was brought to the boil and skimmed. He added 2 heads of garlic, some onion, a few carrots, a bouquet garni, 2 cloves and several white peppercorns.

When the bird was cooked, he carefully jointed it and simmered the pieces gently in equal parts of goose fat and butter. He then made a white roux from goose fat, flour, and a little goose stock. This, when boiled, produced a rather thick sauce. He then added 4 egg yolks, a few pats of butter, and cream. He sieved the sauce, and tossed in a few cloves of garlic previously cooked in milk. Finally he arranged the goose portions on a large plate and poured the sauce over them.

Another recipe appears under GOOSE.

CENTRAL EUROPEAN AND BALKAN COOKERY. CUISINE DE L'EUROPE CENTRALE ET DES BALKANS – First in importance and distinction comes Hungary, symbolised for us by goulasch and paprika. The latter, however, is a recent innovation, dating from the Turkish occupation. Paprika-flavoured dishes include goulasch (meat soup or stew), pörkölt (a thicker stew in which onion predominates), tokany (with the meat thinly sliced); paprikache (stew made with white meat or fish and flavoured with sour cream) and szekegylyas (pork, sour cream and sauerkraut).

Characteristic ingredients of Hungarian cuisine are pork and goose fat, and large quantities of onion.

The fogas of Lake Balaton is a famous variety of fish.

The national pâtisserie speciality is réteche: flaky pastry stuffed with vegetables, cheese or fruit. Hungarian wines are excellent, the most famous being Tokay. There is also an apricot liqueur called barack.

Beer (Pilsen) is the national beverage in Czechoslovakia. Pork, a beef pot-au-feu (hovesy maso), potatoes, goose, and cabbage are the staple foods.

The Orient has been the main influence in Rumanian cookery, which is based on fish, pork and game. The wines are excellent.

Bulgarian cookery is a blend of Turkish and Russian influences. Tchorba soup and yogurt reign supreme. There is a plum spirit called slivovitz.

Yugoslavian cookery is as varied as the races and the climate. Serbs, Croats, Slovenes and Bosnians all eat Hungarian stews, Italian pastas and Turkish pastries, and drink beer and wine.

In Greece, there is beef in the north, lean mutton in the south, fish, olive oil, mézés (see Turkish cookery below) and ouzo (the raki of the other Mediterranean coast) everywhere.

Greek wines are generally very sweet. Samos is one of them, counterpart of the hydromel of the Ancient Greeks. Retsina is flavoured with resin.

CHINESE COOKERY. CUISINE CHINOISE – 'China and France,' Curnonsky said, 'are the only two peoples to have created a cuisine that is inseparably linked with good manners and courtesy.' Since the time of the Celestial Empire, the Chinese have considered their cuisine an art and an important expression of their country's civilisation.

Chinese cookery in restaurants abroad may not be a true reflection of the original. Preparation is a painstaking business, with the cook carefully scooping out bones and shredding fowl, meat and fish into strips that can be easily manipulated by chopsticks. These existed a long time before Europe had the fork, and are made of bamboo, blackwood, ivory, silver or plastic.

Most of the dishes are common to the whole of China, with rice as the principal ingredient. Besides taking the place of bread, it can be a main course, an accompaniment, steamed, boiled or fried. Northern China (including Peking) is where highly seasoned dishes are to be found; Nankin, Shanghai, central China and Szechuan prefer sweet dishes. Canton, in the south, is the gastronomic capital of China.

The soya bean is the other basic ingredient. Soy sauce (cho-you) like the Vietnamese nuoc nam, is one of the reasons why Chinese cuisine is described as 'a form of dietetics, 5,000 years old'.

Salangane's nest soup and shark's fin soup are based on chicken stock. The classical method of cooking is by steaming. Eel, goose and duck are cooked in this way. A philosopher, Lao Tsesu, once said: 'Govern the Empire as carefully as you would cook a small fish.' The fruits of the sea are much respected in China.

Lacquered duck (prepared twenty-four hours in advance) is a great classical dish. Chicken is prepared with pineapple, almonds, bamboo shoots, Chinese mushrooms or in sweet-and-sour sauce (like pork).

Only a glass of warm yellow wine (rice wine) is drunk with the meal. Jasmine tea is served afterwards. It has been known there since the year 2000 B.C. There are two main types of tea: green tea (tsing tcha) which is dried in the sun, and red tea which is artificially dried and destined for export.

It is practically impossible to imitate Chinese cookery outside the Far East, but dishes can be given a 'Chinese flavour' by using such products as rice, soya beans, spices, ginger, black or scented mushrooms (sold dried in food shops that specialise in exotic foods). Swallows' nests and sharks' fins are sold tinned, rice pancakes in packets. Sauerkraut is of Chinese origin.

DUTCH COOKERY. CUISINE HOLLANDAISE – Dutch cookery is closely related to that of Belgium and north Germany. Being a country of rich pasture lands, there is an abundance of high quality dairy produce, and a feature of the large towns is the milk parlours (melksalons), which also sell excellent sandwiches. Holland's rich dairy produce goes into its superb cheeses, which represent one of the country's largest exports. Edam cheese (edammerkaas), Purmerend and Alkmaar cheeses are spherical in shape and painted red. Another famous cheese is Gouda (goudsche-kaas), a cream cheese manufactured mostly in the south of Holland. It is shaped like a flattened cylinder with rounded ends.

Holland is a country equally devoted to stock farming and fishing, so the Dutch table features a wide variety of charcuteries and salted and smoked fish. The oysters of Zealand are of excellent quality.

There is a Dutch proverb which says: 'Haring in't land, dokter aan de kant': 'As long as the herring is there, the doctor stays away.' Herring is the staple food of the Dutch people. (Herring fishing was transferred to deeper waters after the enclosure of the Zuyder Zee. In 1965 the total catch amounted to 450 million fish.) So it is not surprising that the herring is the centre-piece of countless feasts. One of these is the 'New Hollanders' (first fishing of the year) celebrated in gaily decorated coastal villages. The first barrel of herring is offered to the queen.

In restaurants specialising in French food, the favourite dishes are jugged hare (hazepaper), and veal escalope with sauce brunoise, accompanied by potatoes and peas. Cheese is usually served with butter and small salted crackers. Rice is imported in large quantities from the former Dutch colonies and often appears in both savoury and sweet dishes.

From Indonesia comes excellent coffee, tea, and high quality cocoa and chocolate. The Dutch love good coffee and drink it often, from small porcelain coffee cups.

Apart from their own national beer, the Dutch drink French and Rhine wines. They have a famous liqueur: Curaçao (Wynand Fockink), which is sold in big-bellied, narrow-necked ceramic flagons.

ENGLISH COOKERY. CUISINE ANGLAISE – The essence of English cookery lies in choosing ingredients of the finest quality and cooking them so that their flavour and texture are fully developed. This is done with the minimum addition of ingredients to mask the fine natural taste of the original food.

England has long been a producer of beef, mutton, lamb, pork, pheasant, grouse, partridge, duck, salmon, sole, plaice, turbot, halibut, butter and cheese, etc., of a quality unsurpassed anywhere else in the world. Dishes from these prime materials cooked by roasting, grilling, frying or baking can be relied on to give food which is not only good to eat but is also easily digested.

Puddings, pies and tarts are another important part of English cooking. A great many different recipes for baked, boiled and steamed puddings using mainly flour, fat, eggs and fruit are given in any English basic cookery book – the variety of puddings available is probably greater than in any other country in the world. The main meal of the day usually includes one of these puddings or one with milk as the main ingredient, or it may be a pie or tart having pastry as one of its main ingredients.

Cakes, scones and biscuits also feature in English cookery, and are usually eaten at the tea meal in the late afternoon. There are many varieties, a number of which are fairly plain, having a smaller proportion of fat, sugar and eggs than those of other countries. Another basic constituent of the tea meal is thinly sliced brown or white bread and butter.

Vegetable cookery is not a highly developed art in England. As long ago as the eighteenth century foreigners said that English cooks seemed incapable of turning out a good vegetable dish. A German named Moritz in 1872 wrote of his landlady's meal that 'An English dinner for such lodgers as I am, generally consists of a piece of half-boiled or half-roasted meat, and a few cabbage leaves boiled in plain water, on which they pour a sauce made of flour and butter.' It is usual for a main meal to include potatoes as one of the two vegetables served, both of which are cooked by boiling in plenty of water.

Popular dishes for which England is justly famous include pork pies, the best ones being made in the Midlands; bacon and egg – thin smoked back rashers lightly fried and served with slices of bread crisply fried and a lightly fried egg – a delicious dish whether served for breakfast, lunch or supper; Lancashire hotpot – a stew of meat, potatoes and onions cooked slowly for a long period in the oven; Cornish pasties – diced lamb, potato and shredded onion cooked in individual cases of short pastry and served either hot as part of the main meal or cold as a snack or picnic dish. Other delicious specialities are Christmas pudding, mince pies, stew with dumplings, Welsh rarebit, Yorkshire pudding, steak and kidney pudding, and kippers (particularly those cured in wood smoke).

FRENCH REGIONAL COOKERY. CUISINE RÉGIONALE – Every French province has its particular cuisine, although all so-called regional dishes are not necessarily authentic. Nevertheless, there are a great number of genuine French regional specialities. These are given under the names of the provinces listed alphabetically.

GERMAN COOKERY. CUISINE ALLEMANDE – There is more to this substantial cuisine than the dishes we are so familiar with abroad. The German gastronomic map is a reflection of the geographical one, which extends from the North Sea to the Alps, and offers much variation, each region offering special dishes depending upon its ancestry and climate.

The soups, like French soups, are mostly the hearty type. Beginning from the north and working towards the south, there is Hamburger Aalsuppe (eel soup) which, although it gets its name from the great German port, is, in fact, common to the whole of Schleswig-Holstein. A typical German soup is Haferfleischsuppe, a consommé made of oats. Then there is Arfensuppe mit Snuten und Poren which is a pea soup flavoured with pig's snout and trotters. Another Hamburg speciality is brisket of beef garnished with veal, semolina quenelles and diced seasonal vegetables.

Bremen eel soup is flavoured with a wide variety of herbs. In Württemberg and Baden there is Spätzle soup (Spätzle are squares of fresh noodle paste, plain, or filled with liver, ham, mushrooms). In Swabia there are many vegetable soups: cauliflower soup, bean soup, lentil soup, pea soup, potato soup.

The North Sea and the Baltic provide fresh fish and shell-fish. In Berlin, fresh herring (or green Grüner Hering) are eaten fried, hot or cold, together with jacket potatoes. They are sometimes marinated after they are fried. The red herring is also much prized. Another outstanding dish is herring salad with gherkins and potatoes.

Hamburg offers oysters, lobster, and large prawns. One speciality is fried oysters and Cheshire cheese; and there is a delicious crayfish soup. All varieties of sea and river fish are found here. Holstein is best known for its tench. At Emden a veritable meal is made of the herring; while elsewhere along the coast there is smoked fish accompanied by spirits (schnapps, brandy, etc.).

The Rhine is the river for salmon, and the chefs of the region have many ways of preparing it. One of the trout recipes is paper-wrapped trout (Forelle in Papier-Hülle). Moselle pike is garnished with cream and grated Parmesan. Further south, in Württemberg and Baden, eels and salmon are served Basle-style, steamed with onions. The trout of the Black Forest are cooked au bleu in a mixture of water, wine and vinegar; those of Wiesent in melted butter, garnished with small potatoes. The fish of the Danube are served in the same fashion.

In the mountain lakes of Upper Bavaria there are trout (Saiblinge) and a variety of salmon (Renken).

The Hamburg Stubenkücken are spring chickens as popular as the caponised ducks eaten in the same city. The cuisine of the ancient town of Bremen has an international flavour, one of its specialities being chicken curry. Smoked breast of goose is a typical Pomeranian dish; goose is eaten almost everywhere.

In the Rhineland, an item on the menu called Halbe Hahn does not mean 'half a chicken', but a roll of wholemeal bread filled with Dutch cheese.

Charcuterie is important in the country of Sauerkraut. In Hamburg, Gefüllte Schweinerippchen are pork cutlets stuffed with currants, apples, biscuits and rum. The pork butchers of Holstein have ham comparable in quality to that of Westphalia; there are also some very good varieties of sausage. In Berlin, Sauerkraut is served with Eisbein, which is boiled salted knuckle of pork accompanied by pea purée. In Bremen, any feasts dedicated to the honourable pig are bound to include Pinkel-Wurst (a sausage made of wheaten flour and diced bacon), and Oldenburg hams smoked in the hearth.

The smoked juniper-flavoured hams of Westphalia are rivalled by the excellent charcuterie of Münsterland. Smoked bacon is served with beans and seasoned with savory; and there is a sausage wrapped in flaky pastry. Mettwurst and dried sausage are found in Lower Saxony; sausage garnished with horseradish and mustard in Hanover is eaten with Lüttje Laage, a glass of beer topped with a small glass of brandy.

Smoked pork loin is a favourite dish of the Hessians, while the Rhinelanders feast upon grilled puddings served with onions mixed with potato purée and christened 'Heaven and Earth'. Mainz offers succulent pickled pork and various types of sausages, while the whole of the Palatinate offers Schweinepfeffer mit Knödel, which is a poivrade of pork garnished with quenelles.

Swabian Schlachtplatte is a generous heap of cooked meats. The grilled sausages of Nuremberg are as good as those of Ratisbon and Coburg, the former short and fat, the latter thin and served stuffed into bread rolls. Both are rich in herbs and spices. In Upper Bavaria, there are grilled smoked pork; pig's ear and pea purée; pig's tongue with onion; and Rostbratwürste (grilled Franconian sausages).

The Hamburger Steak is well known internationally. A similar dish is Holsteiner Schnitzel, a breadcrumbed veal escalope, slightly browned, topped with a poached egg, a grilled sardine, and surrounded by various vegetables, including cucumbers. This is a favourite festive dish in the region.

Meat balls served with a piquant caper sauce is a Pomeranian delicacy. Westphalia is the country of Pfefferpotthast, meat cut into small pieces and boiled with bay leaf, cloves, and the weight of the beef in onions. The whole is then bound with breadcrumbs and seasoned generously with pepper. A fine beef stew is produced in Munster, and a tripe dish, Soester Wamme, a speciality of Soest, is well known throughout the region.

Black Forest Christmas gâteaux with cinnamon (Claire)

In the Kassel district, the speciality is a mixture of veal and pork (Weckewerk) simmered with bread rolls and eaten cold. Spit roasts are a Rhineland delicacy. In upper Nahe, near Idar-Aberstein, there is the custom of marinating beef for twenty-four hours in wine, salt, pepper, onions and herbs, before cooking. They use a spit rod or beechwood, and roast over wood charcoal. In Stuttgart, there is a unique dish called Gaisburger Marsch, which consists of sliced potatoes, Spätzle and beef. These are cooked to such a degree of tenderness that they may be eaten with a spoon. Muzzle of beef salad is a Nuremberg dish. Veal knuckle, boiled, then grilled, and accompanied by Knödel, comes from around Munich.

Fresh vegetables accompany almost all specialities, from Schleswig-Holstein to Hamburg. In Bremen a sign of autumn is the appearance of Brunten oder gepflückten Finten, a dish of white haricot beans, french beans, carrots and potatoes. Winter is the season of red cabbage cooked with bacon, and of stuffed cabbage. In Berlin, favourite dishes are peas with bacon with squares of toasted bread added; and potato pancakes (grated raw potatoes, or potatoes bound with flour, called Kartoffelpuffer). In summer, Berliners enjoy the small turnips of Teltow, and the asparagus grown on the Brandenburg marshes.

Westphalia offers a dish made of raw potatoes blended with buckwheat flour, served fried. The vegetables grown in the countryside around Brunswick are tinned and sold throughout the country; the asparagus in particular is excellent. The green cabbages of Lower Saxony are served with a popular sausage stuffed with brains. The Hessen region offers Beulsches, potato quenelles made with a forcemeat of leeks and savoury pudding; and zwiebelkuchen, an onion cake.

The staple diet of the people of Wurttemberg is boiled flour quenelles. There are many varieties of these, ranging from the Spätzle with added liver, ham, etc., to the Maultasche, a kind of highly seasoned canelloni stuffed with brains, veal and pork.

Upper Bavaria is the country of Knödel (potato balls). These are varied by the addition of white breadcrumbs, liver stuffing, or bacon.

There are also the small round cumin-flavoured cheeses of Harz; the Hessian Schmierkäse (a white cheese blended with green sauce containing nine varieties of herbs); cream cheese made of ewes' milk, from the Palatinate, including that of Mayence called Mainze Handkäse; the cheeses of Allgäu; Kraeuter (a kind of Roquefort); and the assorted cheese-cakes that German beer complements so perfectly. The salads of Baden contain Emmenthal cheese, together with bitter-sweet melon, red bilberries, and hard-boiled eggs.

Pâtisseries are excellent throughout Germany and very varied. There are the Napfkuchen of Berlin; Streuselkuchen, a yeast cake made with butter, flour and sugar; Berliner Pfannkuchen (jam fritters dusted with sugar); and many varieties of rolls, some made with milk. In Dresden there are custard tarts speckled with raisins, Christmas Mohnspielen (slices of white bread steeped in milk and sprinkled with ground poppyseeds and sugar). Lübeck has its almond paste, Bremen its Bremer Klaben (white bread dough mixed with raisins and crystallised lemon). Brunswick has gingerbread made with honey from the moors of Lüneburg, and Zuckerkuchen, a sugary cake baked on a metal tray. Hanover has its petits-beurre (Liebnitz Keks), the Rhineland has its Muzen (variety of fritters), and Cleves has its almond Spekulatius. The gâteaux (Printen) of Aix-la-Chapelle are coated with chocolate or caramel; the Black Forest offers cherry tart and bilberry cake; a fruit loaf called Hutzelbrot and the Zuckerbrot of Ulm are favourites of the people of Wurttemberg. The Kuchle of Baden are fritters fried in deep fat. Then there are the aniseed-flavoured Springerle from Heidelberg and the macaroons and chocolate-covered nougat of Nuremberg.

'Let there be beer . . . And there was beer.' A Bavarian monastery attributes these words to Saint Gambrinus, and they are sufficient to show the influence of this legendary figure over the great country of hops. There is a wide variety of German beers. They include Holstein beer, Berlin beer (which in summer is a low fermentation wheat beer kept in stone-jugs and drunk with raspberry syrup: Weisse mit Himbeer), Franconian beer (Rauchbier of Bamberg, Bäck'bier of Bayreuth, fortified beer of Kulmbach), Munich beer, etc.

German wines are often excellent. There are two principal denominations: Auslese, first-class quality wines, and Spätlese wines made from grapes that have been allowed to ripen on the vine for as long as possible (see WINE).

Assortment of Italian produce: Gorgonzola, Bel paese, Parma ham, Asi spumante and Chianti (Maison Bileta. Phot. Larousse)

ITALIAN COOKERY. CUISINE ITALIENNE – The Italian cuisine does not begin and end with pasta dishes, risotto, fritto misto and zuppa inglese (which despite its name was certainly not invented in England).

Italian cuisine is much more than that. Besides the above (which are all excellent) there are succulent charcuteries made in Milan and Bologna, such as mortadella and salami, the famous Parma ham, and the zampone (stuffed pig's trotter) of Modena. Then there is Gorgonzola cheese (which is quite unlike Roquefort or any of the other French blue cheeses) and Parmesan cheese which goes so well with all Italian pasta dishes and which is the secret of the creaminess of Italian risotto.

Italian cuisine is one of the oldest in Europe. It is derived from Greek gourmet traditions, these being derived in their turn from Oriental cuisine. Throughout the centuries these culinary traditions became firmly established in Italy. They gradually attained perfection in the country that had adopted them. Choose any ordinary Italian dish and it is the replica of one that was once enjoyed by gourmands reclining on their triclinia in Ancient Rome.

Italian polenta is the same as the pulse that the Romans prepared en route when they set out to conquer the world. They toasted grains of wheat, crushed them, and made a gruel from the result. The only difference is that polenta is now made from coarse maize flour, not wheaten flour.

Contemporary Italian dessert wines are almost identical to those the Romans made. They left them to thicken in the attics of their villas then drank them diluted with snow.

Italian cuisine can be considered the 'mother' of all European Latin cuisines.

Catherine de Medicis took Italian pastry-makers, cooks and ice cream makers with her to France. These craftsmen imparted the secrets of their delicate pastries (especially their pasta frolla), luscious creams and flavoured ices to their French counterparts. Italian culinary methods were thus introduced into France, and there is hardly a restaurant menu in that country today that does not include dishes of Italian origin. In Paris, and in most of the large towns, are restaurants (and some of these the best in town) that offer solely Italian dishes, accompanied by the appropriate Italian wines. Wines such as Valpolicella from Verona, Bardolino from Garda, Chianti from Tuscany and Frascati and Orvieto the white wines from Castelli Romani and Umbria. Piedmont has red and white moscati spumanti from Asti (Barbera and Freisa) and the famous Emilian wine, Lambrusco. Italy is the second largest wine-producing country of Europe. There is also a traditional spirit, grappa, and a herb-flavoured liqueur called strega (witch). Another liqueur, from the Adriatic coast, is maraschino.

Italian food produce is of excellent quality. Italian charcuteries are known everywhere. The pork butchers are culinary artists, making mortadelle where the skin of a boned piglet is stuffed without there being the slightest apparent trace of an incision.

The poultry of Piedmont has delicate, tender flesh although it is rather too yellow for some tastes. The young guinea fowl of the province, no bigger than pigeons, are delicious, the butter of Piedmont is excellent, Italian pasta is extremely good, and the coarse maize flour with which polenta is made is better here than anywhere. Italian olive oil is comparable to the olive oil of Provence, and Italian tomatoes are sweeter than the tomatoes of most other European countries. The meat (apart from pork) may not quite match the delicacy and flavour of the meat of some other European countries, but it is still quite good.

Pasta asciutta, the general name for various types of pasta, should be served before the main course.

For Italian wines see WINE.

JAPANESE COOKERY. CUISINE JAPONAISE – Japan is an agglomeration of densely populated islands lacking in cattle, sheep or pigs. The people live mainly on fish and various sea products, supplementing their diet with rice and other plants and vegetables.

The abundance of sea-food explains why fish form the basis of Japanese cuisine. The people are skilful cooks, and have devised many ways of serving food of marine origin. They use not only all the types of fish and shellfish found in their seas, but also edible seaweed, and many other marine products unknown in the West, which they eat both in their fresh and preserved states. Tinned sea urchins, crabs, mussels, fish quenelles, etc., are widely available in Japan.

Dried fish, which the Japanese call sashimi, is very popular. They also eat solid-fleshed fish such as sea bream (tai), tuna (maguro), carp (koi-no-arai), turbot (hirame) and, less frequently, mackerel (saba), usually seasoned with soy sauce.

Raw fish seasoned with soy sauce is easily digestible and (in the opinion of Nipponese gourmets) a most delicate dish.

Another national dish is sukiyaki, which means 'roasted on the spit'. This has a history. In former times roast beef was prohibited by the Buddhist monks who forbade the domestic eating of animal meat. Such edicts were regarded lightly in rural areas, and the peasants used to get over them by building a fire between two stones in the fields and roasting the mutton and pork over it there. Sukiyaki dates from this time. Each guest prepares the dish according to his taste using the foods that are available: thin slices of meat, raw diced vegetables, mushrooms, bamboo shoots, raw egg, etc.

The following are among the most popular fish dishes in Japan:

Kabayaki. Grilled eel fillets (unagi). This is prepared in a very special way in Japan. The eel is gorged with beer or spirits, bled, then immediately split in half lengthwise with one blow from a chopper and completely deboned. This requires much skill. It is first steamed, then grilled over a wood fire and served sprinkled with sauce.

Katsus-buski. Dried bonito (a species of tuna). When the drying process is completed the fish becomes like a piece of wood. It is then grated as it is required. Bonito powder is added to certain soups with the dual purpose of seasoning them and making them more nutritious. It is widely used in Japan.

Maguro-no-suhki. A bowl of cooked rice containing powdered egg wrapped in a thin slice of raw tuna (or other substance).

Musi-yaki. Fish cooked in the oven in a sauce made of potato flour; or cooked dry and sprinkled afterwards with the same sauce.

Nosi-maki. A bowl of rice garnished with seaweed.

Nuta. A mixture of raw fish and vegetables. This dish is strongly seasoned with horseradish, mustard and other condiments.

The Japanese drink tea, water, beer and hot rice wine before a meal.

RUSSIAN AND POLISH COOKERY. CUISINE RUSSE ET POLONAISE – Russian cuisine is composed of two contrasting gastronomic influences: Asian and west European. Contemporary Russian cuisine, then, is a blend of these, and not at all as the great French chefs have imagined it since the eighteenth century.

A rare book of the sixteenth century, le Ménagier russe, describes the Russian cuisine of that time. Festive occasions were frequent, and drink flowed with every meal. There was Greek and Italian wine (hot and cold), hydromel, beer, sparkling kvas, brandy, cherry and raspberry liqueurs. But, according to the advice of Le Ménagier, these wines and spirits were not to be offered too liberally – 'There should be no disputes and certainly no knock-out blows.'

Other picturesque details of Russian cuisine are supplied by the descriptions of the traditional, quasi-ritual meal (similar to that offered on Christmas Eve in Europe) eaten on the return from midnight mass between Holy Saturday and Easter Sunday.

The Easter meal is a mixed cold table, with savoury and sweet dishes, pastries, and desserts laid out together. All these dishes remain on the table during the whole of Easter Sunday and Easter Monday; empty ones being replaced by full ones as the food is consumed.

The composition of the Easter meal is traditional. Certain dishes, such as roast lamb and sucking pig, must always be included, and one or more lambs made of butter must be prepared. This is done in the following way:

A reclining lamb is modelled from a block of fresh butter. Its wool is fashioned by placing a piece of canvas on some butter and attaching it to the modelled lamb's body. The head is carefully sculpted. The horns may be covered with gold or silver foil, and peppercorns or grape seeds serve as eyes. The lamb is then placed on a mount consisting of a piece of wood placed on a bottle. The wood is covered with damp hemp on which grass, oats or lentils have been sown and germinated to give an attractive surround.

An orthodox Russian Easter meal consists of a roast lamb and sucking pig, a cold ham, a turkey or piece of feathered game, also roasted, roast leg of veal, variously coloured eggs, a paskha of white cheese (pyramid of pressed white cheese), one or more Easter gâteaux (koulitch), one or several babas (cylindrical cake made of leavened dough which can be as much as 1 m. (39 inches) high and 40 cm. (16 inches) in diameter), plates of Polish pastries (plietzki), and several salt cellars of salt which has been blessed. A large number of non-ritual dishes also appear on the Easter table. These, like the dishes above, are constantly replenished throughout the night.

Apart from this Easter fare there are Russian zakouskis, closely related to the smörrebröd and smorgasbord of Scandinavia. The zakouskis are arranged on immense buffet tables, pride of place being given to caviare. Today, as in former times, the sumptuousness of the display of zakouskis is an indication both of the social status of the host and the prestige of the guest. Vodka accompanies the meal.

Russian hors-d'œuvre (hot and cold) are many and varied.

The following are some of the hot hors-d'œuvre (most of which are found under HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre): Various garnished barquettes, beurrecks à la turque, blinis, ciernikis, kromeskies à la polonaise or à la russe, cheese croûtes, anchovy darts, herrings à l'estonienne, nalesnikis, Siberian pel'meni (see PEL'MENI), Caucasian pirozhki and other varieties (see PIROGHI), rastegaïs, cabbage sausselis, Lithuanian varenikis, game tartlets, visnisekis, etc.

Cold hors-d'œuvre include a great variety of canapés and barquettes, agouros, various types of caviare, herrings à la livonienne, rolls à la varsovienne, etc.

A distinguishing feature of Russian cuisine is the use of smetana (whey) and beetroot, which forms the base of bortsch, without which no Russian meal would be complete.

Russian soups, like those of Poland, are very nourishing, for besides vegetables they contain a variety of meats.

The following are the soups most commonly served in Russia and Poland: Polish bortsch, stschis à la russe, cucumber rossolnick, oukha de sterlet, meschanski soup, nettle soup, Livonian soup, botwinia (served iced). Polish kolodnik, kliotskis soup, cream of ham soup, game okrochka, morel soup, Finnish soup, kalstchale (a macêdoine of glacé fruits),

Scandinavian specialties: marinated mackerel, cod liver à la scandinave (Nicolas)

calves' kidney soup, iced ockrochka fish soup, etc.

The Russians make excellent pies. The best-known is the coulbiac, which goes back as far as the sixteenth or seventeenth century. It used to be filled with cabbage, but nowadays it usually contains salmon or other fish. Other pies include: Polish pie, Vesiga patties, burbot liver patties, Smolensk pies, Troitski patties, sour cabbage patties, Caucasian pies, Saracen pies, Russian fish tourte, small croustades of fish, and the numerous pastry items included in the hors-d'œuvre list.

Vodka (46° alcohol) made from fermented wheat, or occasionally from maize or potatoes, is odourless and colourless and should traditionally be drunk in one gulp. It helps digest the predominantly fatty food. Russian tea (black tea from China) is drunk all day from the ever-simmering samovar. Some wine is produced, mainly in the Caucasus.

SCANDINAVIAN COOKERY. CUISINE SCANDINAVE – In the Scandinavian countries of Sweden, Norway and Denmark almost everything on the restaurant menus is à la carte. These countries have a buffet table in the dining-room, called smörgåsbord which is covered with all kinds of cold meats, fish, cheeses and spirits. One can help oneself before the meal unless it constitutes the meal proper. These hors-d'œuvre consist principally of preserved fish (smoked or tinned), anchovies, mackerel, brisling, etc., and are accompanied by a wide range of seasonings. There is, for example, gaffel-biter, oyster sauce or anchovy sauce made with white wine. Other parts of the smörgåsbord include salt beef, rolled breast of pork or mutton (rullepölse), various items of charcuterie such as Danish saucisson, which resembles Italian salami but is fattier and more savoury. There are also various salads of which the most original is sill-salade, made of cooked beetroot, anchovies, herrings and salted gherkins.

National dishes include leg of pork with caramelised apples, fresh apples, prunes and red cabbage; knuckle of ham with turnip cabbage; brisket of beef with horse-radish; veal stew with dill sauce. The famous pytt-i-panna is composed of diced beef, ham and apples topped with a poached egg. Even more original is roast reindeer (rensdyrsteg in Norwegian, radjurstek in Swedish) served with a cream sauce seasoned with goat's cheese (gjetöst) and accompanied by bilberry jam. Then there is the snow hen, a speciality of Scandinavia. Wheat, rye and barley bread are served with the meal.

Every housewife knows the secret of how to make a good sandwich – there are as many as fifty-nine varieties.

Scandinavian beers are world-famous, especially Danish beer. Then there is the well-known akvavit, a light fragrant spirit that aids the digestion and is drunk at the end of the meal, like the Calvados.

SPANISH COOKERY. CUISINE ESPAGNOLE – There is an old Spanish saying, 'All you find to eat in a Spanish inn is what you bring with you.' Fortunately, the advent of tourism has changed all this.

Dishes vary from the south (rice and pork), to the north (beef and potatoes) while the poor central provinces generally eat lean mutton and chick peas. Fish and shellfish are caught all along the coast, and are usually fried in oil.

There is one dish better known than any of the others: olla podrida (q.v.) which is possibly the forerunner of the grande oseille that used to be made in south-west France and is a soup that combines the flavours of meats and vegetables. Another good Spanish soup is puchero (q.v.) which is often a substitute for olla podrida.

Paella is a hearty dish that may include pork, chicken, duck, chorizos, fish, shellfish, frogs, snails and a large number of vegetables, pulses and cereals. Simpler paellas are made in the home.

Other special Spanish dishes are marinated fish, marinated game, chicken Valencia, bacalao à la biscaïenne (cod served with tomatoes, onions, green peppers and hard-boiled eggs), montería, roast veal Spanish-style (topside of veal which, before being roasted, is marinated with red peppers, origano, garlic, white wine and the juice of bitter oranges), ham and eggs, chorizos with garbanzos (see GARBANZOS), etc.

In the course of this volume you will find a great many recipes of Spanish origin.

In the streets of Spain, vendors sell churros (hot fritters), water melon, and touron (a kind of almond paste). Water melon is offered with a glass of Manzanilla.

Spain is the third wine-producing country in Europe. The principal wines are: Jerez, Manzanilla, Malaga, Moscatel, Valdepanas, etc. (See WINE.)

SWISS COOKERY. CUISINE SUISSE – Swiss hotels, catering for a large tourist industry, have an international cuisine.

Home cooking in private households, small local restaurants and country inns is surprisingly good and has a distinctive local character. There is no lack of produce for good cooking – abundant milk, cream and butter, excellent quality meat, poultry and game, succulent fruit and vegetables. Excellent transport facilities ensure that a wide variety of products from all over Europe and from other continents are available on the market.

Swiss charcuterie is a highly developed art and deserves its excellent reputation.

Although it is easy nowadays to enjoy perfectly fresh sea-fish and other sea products, Swiss gourmets prefer the rich and varied local river and lake fauna. Pride of place goes to the fario, a red-spotted trout with delicate flesh that lives in the mountain streams and is far superior to the rainbow trout artificially bred for table use.

The char comes a close second to the trout for flavour, while the burbot with its delectable liver is fairly abundant in Switzerland. All western and central European varieties of fish are found in the Swiss lakes and rivers. Some species, however, are found only in the Swiss lakes. One example is the féro of Lake Geneva, a delicious salmonid that can reach a very large size. The same fish is found in Lakes Zurich and Constance, where it is called fellschen. Lake Neuchatel has its bondelles; and in the tiny lake of Zoug, a species of small, rosy-fleshed trout called zuger röthli is fished in springtime. These are served with a cream sauce flavoured with aromatic herbs.

Another great delicacy is fried baby perch caught in Lake Leman, and eaten, washed down with a bottle of Dézaley, on the shores of the lake itself.

Cheese is a basic ingredient of Swiss cuisine. To the uninitiated there are only two types: Gruyère, a pleasantly piquant, fatty cheese (minimum 45 per cent fat), and Emmenthal, fatty and sticky with large vacuoles, a rarer cheese with a less pronounced flavour. To the initiated, however, there are infinite variations of quality in these two cheeses depending on their provenance and age.

In the Vaud part of the Jura mountains there is a special cheese called Vacherin, creamy with a delicate flavour. Another special cheese, Schabzieger, is produced in the canton of Glarus. This cheese is very close-textured because the whey undergoes a double coagulation process. The Berne section of the Jura mountains possesses a cheese speciality called Tête de moine (monk's head). This is a close-grained, tender cheese. Although Reblochons and Tommes are manufactured on the borders of Savoy, they are eaten mainly in Geneva, where gourmets give first prize to the distinctive Tomme au marc, coated with vintage marc.

Pâtisserie has always been a speciality of the Swiss, and Swiss chocolates enjoy a world-wide reputation for quality. The raw materials are all imported, since Switzerland does not produce cocoa or a sufficient quantity of sugar. The industry came into its own after a law passed limiting the duty payable on sugar and other foreign produce.

Swiss vineyards produce some highly regarded white and red wines, both of which consistently improve in quality (see WINE).

Gastronomic customs vary from region to region. In French-speaking Switzerland, customs are more or less the same as in France, though with a tendency to make the main meal of the day the midday meal, as they do in German-speaking Switzerland. For most families the evening meal consists of a cup of white coffee and potatoes browned in butter (rôsti), which the Béarnaise housewives do well.

There are many specialities, especially those devised for festive occasions like carnival. Swiss cooks have also adopted classic dishes from France, specialities from Savoy and Franche-Comté, dishes from southern Germany, and pastas, risottos and fried dishes from northern Italy.

In Geneva there is soupe aux fidés which is a pot-au-feu soup garnished with very fine vermicelli; and longeole, which the Genevese go to the mountain inns to eat. This is a kind of fresh moist sausage based on fat pork rinds, seasoned with coriander and fennel and served poached, accompanied by boiled potatoes. Then there are atriaux, which are highly seasoned, flat pigs' liver sausages, served fried. A wide variety of cheese dishes are served including soufflé fritters, ramekins, cheese steaks (a thick slice of Gruyère dipped in white of egg and breadcrumbs and fried in clarified butter), cheese croûtes (slices of stale bread soaked in white wine or milk, sometimes sprinkled with onion rings, covered with a slice of cheese and baked or fried).

One of the best-known dishes in cheese fondue for which there are many recipes. Here is Brillat-Savarin's. 'The fondue begins in the kitchen in a glazed earthenware casserole or cast-iron enamelled pan (caquelon they call it in French-speaking Switzerland) which is rubbed with a clove of garlic. The cheese is finely grated, allowing 150 to 200 g. (5 to 7 oz.) of good, full-flavoured Gruyère per person. Enough local wine is added to cover. Correct the seasoning with salt if necessary, and add a grinding of pepper (a little grated nutmeg does not harm, either). While the fondue is being prepared, the guests cut their bread into small pieces. The fondue is brought in on a spirit heater. At the last moment a small glass of pure fruit kirsch is added. Everyone eats from the same dish, dipping their forkful of bread right to the bottom to ensure that the fondue does not stick to the pan while cooking. No wine is drunk, but halfway through the meal, a small glass of kirsch is offered.' The experts disapprove of short cuts, such as thickening the mixture with cornflour, or making it more frothy by adding bicarbonate. However, when one is not very sure of success, it is advisable to add a little cornflour with the wine before heating, rather than spoil the fondue. This guarantees perfect binding when the mixture is brought to the boil. Thin it with hot white wine if evaporation causes it to thicken too much.

In the canton of Vaud, we find excellent charcuterie. Payerne sausages are not unlike those of Mordeau but fatter, more moist and more highly seasoned. Cabbage and liver stuffed sausages have a pronounced smoky flavour, and are eaten Vaudois-style, garnished with leeks and potatoes. Tongue marinated à la vaudois is delicious and a well-known dish in Paris today. Vevay bricelets (variety of wafer) are exported all over the world.

Fribourg is renowned for its salted and smoked beef. Smoked cows' udders are considered a delicacy. The fondue of this canton is made with Vacherin cheese.

Neuchâtel fondue is made of equal proportions of Gruyère and Emmenthal. Fried bondelles are accompanied by Auvernier wine.

In Valais, the shepherds prefer raclette to fondue. A piece of Valaisian cheese is stuck on a fork and held over the fire. As the surface of the cheese softens and begins to bubble, it is scraped with a knife onto a heated plate. This is eaten with boiled potatoes and with an appetite sharpened by the altitude and a glass or two of fendant, what could be better!

Berne also produces cochonnilles (cooked meats); the saveloy, ham, smoked bacon, smoked pork shoulder are renowned, and with the addition of cabbages and sauerkraut form a rich stew called bernerplatte. A good classical sauerkraut is also made in Berne.

Basle is principally a town of pastry-makers, and the leckerlis of Basle, with their hard, brittle, full-flavoured base are well known. There is a wide variety of home-made pastries, and these increase in number at carnival time.

The culinary art of Zurich has borrowed much from countries on the other side of the Rhine. There is leberknödel (calf's liver quenelles), knöpli (a pastry made of flour, milk and eggs cut into small pieces and poached in boiling water, like the spoeztle of Baden). Dampfnüdeln (steamed pastry balls) come from Württemberg. Roast sausages are typical Zurich fare, made of a mixture of finely minced pork and veal. Another local dish is leberspiessli, which are brochettes (skewers) of cubes of calf's liver and bacon interspersed with leaves of sage. This is cooked in clarified butter and served with creamed kohlrabi, small white turnip cabbages (not to be confused with rutabaga, which is a swede turnip). Zurich leckerlis have a marzipan base and bear no resemblance to those of Basle. Trichterküchli are home-made pastries made with a thin choux pastry mixture. This is placed in a funnel and left to flow into hot fat, where it forms unexpected amusing shapes. They are a carnival speciality. Millet porridge (hirsensbrei) was once a traditional dish. At the time of their alliance with Strasbourg, the delegates of Zurich paid an official visit to their allies, bearing an immense cauldron of this porridge which was still hot on their arrival, and symbolised how promptly they would bring aid if called upon. It is rarely served now.

The canton of Glarus manufactures schabzieger, which forms the basis of various food products. Birnbrot is a rather heavy pâtisserie made of bread dough mixed with figs, pears softened in red wine, almonds and walnuts. It forms a dense loaf and is served very thinly sliced.

Saint-Gall no longer enjoys the gastronomic fastes of its famous abbey, but still retains some delicious charcuterie, such as schiblig (a kind of dried saveloy) and därre landjaeger (steam-dried and known as gendarmes suisses).

In the canton of Girsens is bindenfleisch (beef, mutton or goat's flesh dried out-of-doors). This can only be done in the upper valleys where the air is dry and pure. The meat becomes as hard as leather and is eaten raw, in shavings.

Tessin cuisine has a distinctly Italian flavour, and is, in fact, only distinguishable from that of Lombardy by a greater refinement in its preparation. The ravioli of this canton are very large.

In the Swiss Alps, apart from the bread, flour and coffee that reach them from the valley, the shepherds have to depend upon the resources of the Alps. Milk, whey, buttermilk, cream, butter and cheese, supplemented by salted meats, constitute their basic diet during the season. They do, however, have a few traditional dishes. In the Appenzell pastures there is fenz, a thick, lightly salted porridge made of flour and buttermilk, cooked over the fire in a cauldron or in the traditional three-legged pot. This porridge may also be prepared with milk and with cream (nidel-fenz). Room-zonne is another cream-based porridge that is cooked over the fire. As much flour as it will absorb is added to it, followed by a generous slab of butter. Chäas schoppe or alte mâ is prepared by placing alternating layers of stale bread and slices of cheese in a cauldron, and sprinkling with milk. Once the preparation is thoroughly soaked, it is fried gently in butter until golden brown, rather like a thick waffle.

These dishes, perhaps named differently and varying slightly in their preparation, are found in all the chalets of the Central Swiss Alps. Polenta has been recently introduced into Valais and Grisons. Milk or water is drunk, the latter sometimes with a dash of kirsch.

TURKISH COOKERY. CUISINE TURQUE – Because of the country's long subjugation to the Greeks, there is no such thing as Turkish cuisine. What exists is a local cuisine influenced by the various races that make up the nation, dominated by the more refined Greek cuisine.

The Turkish cuisine, then, enjoyed by Persians, Kurds, Armenians, Rumanians, Albanians, the island population, European colonials and the Jewish people (for it conforms to the principles of the Talmud) comprises quite a wide range of dishes.

In Istanbul and its immediate vicinity, the water is of such purity and digestibility that it is looked upon as a kind of elixir. People make pilgrimages to drink the Taksim and Buyuk Dere waters, and carry bottles of it away with them. A proverb says that 'whoever has once drunk the waters of Taksim will always return to drink it again'.

Apart from lamb and mutton, meat is far from good. Buffalo meat takes the place of ox meat; veal is scarce and lean; pork is forbidden for religious reasons; poultry is poor. This means that most meat dishes are made of mutton or lamb.

There is an abundance of vegetables: artichokes, tomatoes, courgettes, aubergines, giant french beans, gombos. Rice is the national dish; Turks soak their rice for a few minutes in strongly salted water before cooking it using a large quantity of Alep butter, the surplus of which is poured off at the end of cooking.

Oriental cooking is savoury and spicy. It is also very rich, as oil plays an important part in its preparation.

Pâtisserie is heavy and generally very sweet. It is always served with large glasses of water.

The milk used is buffalo milk.

INTOXICATION

Fruits come mostly from Asia, Smyrna and Jaffa: figs, peaches, oranges, melons, water melons, muscat grapes, Jerusalem grapes, strawberries, apricots, plums, almonds, cherries, apples, etc.

Cooking is done in hemispheres of beaten copper called djindjères.

In the cheaper restaurants, djindjères, each containing a different ragoût, are ranged side by side on a 'silo', which is covered with cinders to conserve the heat. They stay there from one meal to another, just as lamb and mutton remain constantly on the spit.

In Constantinople, some restaurants stay open all night, and there are many itinerant food sellers, offering cooked rice, chick peas, spit-roasted lamb and chicken offal, white cheese, grilled fish, tea, coffee, salep, ices, simitis, waffles, melons, water melons, chicory, mézès, etc.

One habit that has been passed from the Greek to the Turks is that of eating mézès in the cafés in the evening between 5 o'clock and 8 o'clock, together with numerous glasses of raki and ouzo. Mézès are hors-d'œuvre consisting of radishes, cucumbers, pieces of cheese, fried fish, horse-radish, haricot bean salad, tomato and onion salad, olives, sweetcorn, diced swordfish, salted almonds, etc.

Kacher cheese and yogurt are essential items of the Turkish diet, together with olives and raw onions.

Jams, flower and fruit syrups and Turkish delight are delicacies, as are melons, water melons, cucumbers, tomatoes and chicory, all of which are eaten raw.

The most typical Turkish specialties are atoli à la grecque (see AYOLI), Armenian couscous, dagh kebabs, dolmas à la turque, keftes-kebabs, macaroni à la persane, aubergine purée, red caviare purée, rice pilaf, lamb's tripe soup, tourlouyovetsch, Jaffa oranges in syrup. (Most of these may be found in alphabetical order in this volume.)

INTOXICATION – The general effect of the phenomena produced by the action of a poison.

Alcoholic intoxication. INTOXICATION ALCOOLIQUE – See ALCOHOLISM.

Food intoxication. INTOXICATION ALIMENTAIRE – It is essential to differentiate between the two categories of food intoxication: that caused by food which is already poisonous (or has become so through putrefaction) before ingestion; and that caused by wholesome food rendered toxic by fermentations or putrefactions produced by it in the intestine.

Dietetic remedial treatment for the latter consists of reducing the quantity of the troublesome food and offering it in a more digestible form. The residues that encourage the growth of microbes are thus eliminated since the digestive juices transform the food completely.

This is why, in the case of proteic putrefaction, the proportion of albumins in the diet is reduced and that of farinaceous foods increased. Inversely, when a child suffers from intestinal catarrh caused by hydrocarbonic fermentations, a starch-reduced, albumin-rich diet is prescribed (albuminous milk, buttermilk, etc.).

IRIDESCENT SEAWEED. IRIDÉE – Edible seaweed remarkable for its variegated colouring. It is eaten raw in salad or cooked like French beans.

IRISH STEW (British cookery) – This dish really belongs to the Irish culinary repertoire. It is mutton stewed in white stock with potatoes and sliced onions. (See MUTTON.)

IRON. FER – Although iron is present in very small quantities in the human body (5 or 6 g.), it has a very important part to play in the body's functioning.

IRRORATEUR (Spray gun) – Piece of apparatus, invented by Brillat-Savarin, which was used to perfume rooms, especially the dining-room.

Brillat-Savarin writes in the preface to la Physiologie du goût: 'I submitted to the council of the Society for the Encouragement of National Industries my irrorateur, a piece of apparatus invented by me, which is none other than a compressor spray which can fill a room with perfume.'

'I had brought the spray with me, in my pocket. It was well-filled. I turned on the tap and, with a hissing sound, out came a sweet-smelling vapour which rose right up to the ceiling and then fell in tiny drops on the people present and on their papers.'

'It was then that I witnessed, with indescribable pleasure, the heads of the wisest men in the capital bending under my 'irrotation'. I was enraptured to note that the wettest among them were also the happiest.'

ISIGNY – A small town in Calvados where some of the best butter in France is made from its famous cream.

ISINGLASS (Gelatine). COLLE DE POISSON CLARIFIÉE – 'Take a 25-g. (1-oz.) sheet of gelatine; after cutting it into small pieces, wash it, put it in a pan with 8 glasses of filtered water and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) sugar. Put it on the fire.

'As soon as rapid boiling is established, put the pan on the side of the fire in such a way as to keep it boiling.

'Take care to remove the scum as it rises and when the reduction produces a good glass of gelatine, strain it through a napkin into a clean vessel.

'The proper clarification of the sugar and the gelatine can be considered the secret of success of attractive fruit and liqueur jellies.' (Carême.)

ITALIAN MARROWS, COURGETTES (U.S. zucchini). COURGETTES – Variety of gourd with short fruits. Courgettes are also known under the name of courgeron, coucourselle, and zuchetti. In U.S.A. they are called Italian squash or zucchini.

Courgettes have a very delicate taste.

Method of preparation. Courgettes may be peeled or not. When the vegetable is to be fried it is peeled, cut into thick rounds or little sticks, soaked in milk, drained, rolled in flour, and deep-fried in boiling oil.

Italian marrows, à la créole. COURGETTES À LA CRÉOLE – Peel the courgettes, remove the seeds, dice the flesh, and brown in good fat. Add salt, put the lid on the pan and cook slowly on low heat, stirring from time to time. Crush them with a spoon and cook until all the moisture has evaporated. Let the pulp acquire a golden colour before serving.

Glazed Italian marrow garnish. COURGETTES GLACÉES – Divide the courgettes in quarters and trim them into lozenge shape of even size. Blanch for a few minutes and drain.

Put them in a sauté pan with 2 tablespoons (3 table-spoons) butter, a pinch of salt, and a little sugar. Cover with cold water. Bring to the boil, cover, and cook gently until the liquid has almost entirely disappeared. Sauté the courgettes in the remaining liquor so that they are coated with it.

Courgettes à la niçoise II

Italian marrow à la grecque (hors-d'œuvre). COURGETTES À LA GRECQUE – Divide the courgettes into small slices without peeling them, or trim them into lozenge shapes. Put them into a court-bouillon prepared in the manner described for Artichokes à la grecque (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE). Finish in the same way.

Italian marrows à l'indienne. COURGETTES À L'INDIENNE – Prepare the marrows the same as for Glazed Italian marrow. Simmer them in butter. Season with salt and a good pinch of curry powder.

When they are cooked, pour over a few tablespoons Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Mix without breaking the courgettes.

Italian marrows à la mentonnaise. COURGETTES À LA MENTONNAISE – Prepare the courgettes in the way described for Italian marrow à la niçoise II (see below).

Stuff the halved courgettes with their chopped pulp, to which an equal quantity of blanched, drained and chopped spinach simmered in butter, has been added. Add a little Parmesan cheese to the stuffing, a little garlic and some chopped parsley.

Sprinkle with browned breadcrumbs. Pour olive oil over the courgettes and brown in the oven.

Italian marrows à la mingrélienne (Russian cookery).

COURGETTES FARCIES À LA MINGRÉLIENNE – Peel the courgettes and cut them into slices 5 cm (2 inches) thick. Remove the seeds, blanch and drain the slices.

Blanch and drain some rice, put it under the cold tap, and drain again. Add some fat chopped mutton, chopped onion softened in butter, chopped fennel, a little garlic, salt and pepper. Mix well.

Fill the courgettes with this stuffing, rounding the tops. Arrange in a buttered sauté pan, packing them in fairly tightly. Moisten with tomato-flavoured veal stock. Start cooking on the stove, and continue gently in the oven with the lid on. Baste the dish with its own juice during cooking.

Italian marrows à la niçoise I. COURGETTES À LA NIÇOISE – Pare the courgettes, cut them into thin slices, salt them, wipe with a cloth, sprinkle flour and sauté them in oil in a pan on a strong flame.

Put them in a dish, alternating them with skimmed and seeded tomatoes which have been sliced and lightly fried in oil.

Pour 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) boiling oil, in which some garlic and chopped parsley have been rapidly browned, over the slices. A little sliced onion, browned in oil, can also be added to this dish.

Italian marrows à la niçoise II. COURGETTES À LA NIÇOISE – Divide the courgettes in half lengthways. Make an incision (around the pulp,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) from the edge, and several little cuts in the middle of the pulp.

Season the courgettes with salt, put them on a cloth and leave them to get rid of excess moisture. Dry and cook them gently in oil, without letting them brown too much. Drain.

Take out three-quarters of the pulp, without damaging the skin. Chop the pulp. Add two-thirds of its weight of risotto flavoured with Parmesan and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) thick tomato purée, flavoured with a touch of grated garlic. Stuff the halved courgettes with this mixture. Smooth the stuffing with a fork, giving it a lightly domed shape. Put the courgettes in an oiled gratin dish. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs, pour over some oil, brown gently in the oven.

To serve, surround them with a few tablespoons good veal stock and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Italian marrows à la provençale. COURGETTES À LA PROVENÇALE – Cut the courgettes into thick slices, without peeling them. Salt, dry, sprinkle with flour and sauté them in oil.

Arrange the slices in layers in a gratin dish, alternating them with rice cooked in stock, and tomatoes lightly fried in oil, with sliced onions, parsley, and chopped garlic.

Smooth the surface of the dish, cover with grated cheese, and brown in the oven.

Italian marrow salad. COURGETTES EN SALADE – Divide the courgettes lengthways into quarters. Blanch them in boiling salt water for 6 to 8 minutes. Drain and wipe them on a cloth.

Put them in a salad bowl. Pour over them a few tablespoons Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle generously with chervil and chopped tarragon.

This salad can be served with mayonnaise.

Italian marrows sautéed. COURGETTES SAUTÉES – Peel the courgettes, cut them in slices, flour them and sauté in oil or butter.

ITALIAN PASTA (Pasta products). PÂTES ALIMENTAIRES – Dried wheaten flour preparation, mostly made from durum wheat. The flour is well kneaded into a stiff dough and forced through specially perforated cylinders from which it comes out in various shapes, known by different names (macaroni, spaghetti, vermicelli, crescioni, ditalini, fedelini, ravioli, reginette, strichetti, tagliarini, tagliatelli, tortellini, etc.)

They are made by kneading vigorously hard (red) wheat with boiling water. After kneading, the paste is put in a bronze cylinder equipped with a die, and pressure is applied to it by a hydraulic press. A fan is placed near the outlet of the die to begin the drying process, which ends in the drying oven. The small pasta products are cut as they emerge from the cylinder by means of a circular knife; the others are produced in different lengths. Egg pasta is made by adding dry or fresh eggs to the mixture. The slightly yellow colour of ordinary pasta is due to the addition of turmeric or to various chemical colourings.

The food value of pasta products is the same as that of the cereals from which it is made. It contains glucides or carbohydrates and mineral salts, but only very small amounts of protein, fats and vitamins (mostly Vitamin B1).

Pasta is essentially an energy food providing the body with 350 calories per 100 g. (4 oz.) pasta. It is an excellent staple food.

For the preparation of home-made noodles, see NOODLES.

ITALIENNE (À L') – Name given to various dishes made of meat, poultry, fish and vegetables. In all these dishes finely diced or chopped mushrooms are used.

The name à l'italienne is also given to a method of preparing macaroni or other pastas.

ITALY – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY, WINE.

IVA – Name given in some districts of France to the yarrow, and to a type of gentian.

IVOIRE (À L') – Method of preparation used especially for poultry. (See CHICKEN, Chicken à l'ivoire.)

IVROGNE DE MER – Small fish with red scales found in the Atlantic, and in the Mediterranean and Adriatic. Its flesh is tough, but it is edible.

IZARD. ISARD – Name given to the wild goat of the Pyrénées. For methods of cooking it see ROEBUCK.

JALOUSIES – Little cakes made of flaky pastry.

Method I. Roll out a piece of Flaky pastry dough (see DOUGH) and cut it into strips about  $7\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (3 inches) wide.

Leaving a margin of 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) around the edges, spread a layer of Almond paste (see ALMOND) flavoured with vanilla on the slices.

Decorate with twisted strips of dough to make a criss-cross pattern. Secure this by pressing down at each edge of the slice a narrow strip of dough moistened with water so that it sticks firmly. Crimp the edges. Brush with beaten egg. Bake in a medium oven. When cooked, spread apricot jam on top. Cut into pieces of equal size.

Method II. Roll out a piece of flaky pastry, cut it into 2 pieces, each 10 cm. (4 inches) wide).

Place one of these on a slightly moistened baking sheet. Brush the edges of the dough with water. Spread with jam, leaving a border. Fold the second length of dough in half lengthwise. Using the back of a large knife, carefully cut the folded dough into strips of equal width, leaving a border at each end. Open out the dough and lay it carefully on the slice spread with jam. Press the edges to join them. Trim the edges neatly and crimp them.

Brush the top with beaten egg. Bake in a medium oven for 25 to 30 minutes. Take the tart out of the oven, spread jam on it and sprinkle sugar crystals round the edge.

Cut into strips about 4 cm. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches) wide. Leave to cool on a wire tray.

JAMS AND JELLIES. CONFITURES, GELÉES – A preparation of fruit for which the legal definition in France is as follows: 'Products constituted solely of refined or crystallised sugar and fresh fruits or juice of fresh fruits, or preserved in some way other than by drying.' (Decree of 25 September 1925). They must contain a maximum of 40 per cent moisture, and in consequence hold 60 per cent dry extract, of which 55 per cent must be sugar. (Fruit already contains 5 to 7 per cent.)

Only those products which correspond to this definition have a right to be labelled pure fruit, pure sugar.

The law authorises the mixing of fruits (in practice, apple juice is used a great deal, particularly for jellies), on condition that the fruit used in the highest proportion is put first on the label.

Marmelades (q.v.) must correspond to the same definition as jams, but the dry extract can fall as low as 55 per cent, and the use of brown sugar, or sugar which has already been used for crystallising fruit, is allowed.

If tartaric acid or citric acid is added, the label must contain the word fantaisie. When artificial essences are added, the words fantaisie or arome artificiel (artificial flavouring) must appear on the label. When colouring matter is added, this must be indicated.

A product made with essences, acids and colouring matter cannot bear the name of a fruit, and can only be sold under the name of produit artificiel (artificial product) with, if necessary, the mention of pure sugar.

Jams made of fruit or of mixtures of fruit, or marmelades made with syrup which has been used to preserve fruits (syrup containing about 5 per cent glucose) must bear the words au sirop de fruits confits (made with preserved fruit syrup).

Jams, all of which are obtained from a basis of fruit and sugar, can be divided into various categories:

1. Jams made by cooking stoned fruit with sugar. Apricots, cherries, strawberries, oranges, plums, etc., are used and, according to its kind, the fruit is prepared whole or halved.
2. Jellies made only with the juice of fruits and sugar.
3. Marmelades prepared with strained fruit pulp and sugar.
4. Jams made with a multiple base, such as the raisinés (q.v.), or other similar preparations.

Preserving pan with skimming ladle
(Dehillerin. Phot. Larousse)

Jam-making. FABRICATION – The quantity of sugar used varies according to the fruit in question. Sugar is used not only to sweeten the preparation, but to preserve it. When rather watery fruits with slight acidity are used, sugar must be introduced in a quantity to equal that of the fruit.

For fruits of more substance, containing mucilaginous matter, the quantity of sugar should be reduced. The best quality sugar should be used.

JAMS AND JELLIES

Too much sugar oversweetens the jam, noticeably diminishes the flavour of the fruit, and risks rapid crystallisation. On the other hand, jams or jellies prepared with an insufficient quantity of sugar are in danger of fermenting, or, if they have been overcooked, of lacking all flavour.

Cooking. This cannot be properly done without an untinned copper or aluminium utensil.

The time taken to cook the jam depends upon the intensity of the heat to which it is submitted. It cannot be precisely measured. The cooking period is divided into two phases: during the first the evaporation of the moisture contained in the fruit takes place. The process of dehydration is complete when the steam rising from the pan is less dense and the surface begins to seethe rather than to bubble. Then the real cooking begins, effected at greater or less speed according to whether the fruit is watery or easily jelled.

During the first phase, the jam should be skimmed with an untinned skimming ladle, to remove all the impurities which rise to the surface.

Once evaporation has taken place, you must follow very closely the progress of the cooking, which from then on will be very rapid. Put the skimming ladle frequently into the pan to see whether, on lifting it out, the drops of jam fall off easily or slowly. As soon as these drops collect in the centre of the skimmer and slide slowly off, the jam is ready. It is cooked to a degree called jelling – 32°–33° (104.5°C., 220°F. on the sugar thermometer).

Potting, sealing and conservation. As soon as the jam has achieved the stage known as jelling, remove the pan from the fire. Allow the jam to cool for a few minutes. Fill the pots, having heated them gradually beforehand so as to prevent them from cracking. Put the pots on a table and leave them till the following day. Then cover the surface of the jam with a glycerine paper or paraffin wax, and seal the top of the pot with a double paper tightly tied with string.

Gum on labels indicating the type of jam and store in a very dry place.

Failures in jam-making and remedies.

The jam remains runny. – There is lack of pectin. Add some apple jelly.

The jam crystallises. – The fruits are insufficiently acid. Cook again, adding lemon juice, or tartaric or citric acid.

The jam develops mould. – The jars are inadequately sealed. Remove the mould and cover with melted paraffin wax.

The jam ferments. – The cooking has been insufficient. Cook again.

Recipes for jams and jellies are given below; recipes for marmalade will be found under the separate heading MARMALADE.

JAMS. CONFITURES –

Apricot jam I. CONFITURE D'ABRICOTS – For 1 kg. (2 lb.) apricots which are ripe, net weight stoned, 750 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) sugar.

Put the sugar in a pan with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water. Let the sugar dissolve, then boil for 5 minutes and skim.

Add the apricots. Cook till the jelling stage is reached, as described above. Finish according to the instructions above adding, at the last moment, some of the apricot kernels which have been previously shelled and divided in two.

Apricot jam II. CONFITURE D'ABRICOTS – For 1 kg. (2 lb.) net weight of apricots, 800 g. (1¾ lb., 3½ cups) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water.

Put the fruit, sugar and water in a pan. Let the sugar melt, stirring all the time on a gentle heat. Raise the heat and continue to cook until the jelling stage is reached. Add shelled apricot kernels. Finish as directed above.

Cherry jam I. CONFITURE DE CERISES – For 1 kg. (2 lb.) stoned cherries, use 1 kg. (2 lb., 4 cups) sugar and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water. Proceed in the same way as for Apricot jam I.

If the cherries are very sweet, only 750 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) sugar should be used for 1 kg. (2 lb.) fruit.

Cherry jam II. CONFITURE DE CERISES – 1 kg. (2 lb.) cherries, 1 kg. (2 lb., 4 cups) sugar, 5 dl. (scant pint, 2¼ cups) gooseberry juice, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water. Dissolve the sugar in the water and boil for 5 minutes. Add the cherries and the gooseberry juice. Cook and finish in the usual way.

The addition of gooseberry juice makes for more rapid cooking and a more fragrant jam as well.

Chestnut jam. CONFITURE DE MARRONS – See CHESTNUTS.

Melon jam. CONFITURE DE MELON – For 1 kg. (2 lb.) melon, net weight, after removing rind and seeds, 750 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) fine sugar.

Cut the flesh of the melon into little pieces. Put these in layers in a large basin, sprinkling each layer with sugar. Leave to stand in a cool place for 3 or 4 hours, then put the contents of the basin into a pan and cook to the jelling stage as described above.

Orange jam. CONFITURE D'ORANGES – For 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) orange purée, 1 kg. (2 lb., 4 cups) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water and 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) apple juice.

Choose oranges of the same size, sound and with a thick skin. Prick them here and there rather deeply with a little pointed stick. Put them in a pan of boiling water and leave to cook rapidly for 30 minutes.

Drain, and soak them in a basin of cold water, renewing the water frequently, for 24 hours. This rather prolonged operation removes the bitterness from the orange rind and softens it more completely.

Drain the oranges, divide them into quarters, remove the pips and pith and pass through a sieve.

Dissolve the sugar with the water in a pan. Boil for a few moments, and skim. Add the orange purée and the apple juice. Finish in the same way as the recipes above.

Peach jam. CONFITURE DE PÊCHES – Proceed with stoned and skinned peaches in the same way as for Apricot jam.

Pineapple jam. CONFITURE D'ANANAS – For 1 kg. (2 lb.) fresh pineapple (net weight, after removing the outside and hard core), 750 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water.

Cut the pineapple into small, square pieces. Dissolve the sugar in the water and cook it to the ball stage (116°C., 240°F.), then put in the pineapple chunks.

Cook the jam as usual until it reaches the jelling stage.

Finish in the usual way.

Plum jam. CONFITURE DE PRUNES – For every 1 kg. (2 lb.) stoned plums, add 750 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) sugar and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water. Prepare as for Apricot jam.

Raspberry jam. CONFITURE DE FRAMBOISES – Remove stems from raspberries. Choose ripe but firm fruit. Put in a copper pan. Cover with sugar cooked to 116°C. (240°F.). For 1 kg. (2 lb.) of fruit use 1 kg. (2 lb., 4 cups) sugar.

Heat gently on a small flame or in a double cooker so that the sugar thoroughly penetrates the fruit. Remove from the heat, and leave overnight.

Next morning drain the raspberries very carefully without crushing them, and put the syrup back on the stove. Add an equal quantity of currant juice. Cook this syrup until it coats a silver spoon. Put the raspberries in it and bring to the boil.

Pot the jam. Cover with a layer of currant jelly. When the jam is absolutely cold, cover the pots.

Rhubarb jam. CONFITURE DE RHUBARBE - For 1 kg. (2 lb.) rhubarb (net weight, with outer fibres removed), 800 g. (1½ lb., 3½ cups) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water.

Skin the stems of young red or green rhubarb, according to whether one wishes to obtain a jam of one or the other colour, and divide into pieces 5 cm. (2 inches) long.

Wash the pieces, drain, and put them in with the sugar, which has been dissolved with the water and boiled for a few minutes.

Draw the pan to one side of the stove and cover it. Leave for 10 minutes so that the rhubarb softens. Return the pan to full heat and cook, stirring until the jam reaches the jelling stage. Finish in the usual way.

Strawberry jam. CONFITURE DE FRAISES - The strawberries must be selected for perfect unblemished ripeness. It is advisable not to wash them unless absolutely necessary. In this case they should be well drained and dried before cooking.

1 kg. (2 lb.) strawberries (net weight), 750 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water.

Dissolve the sugar in a pan with the water and cook to ball stage (116°C., 240°F.), skimming well.

Put the strawberries, stalks removed, in the dissolved sugar. Keep the pan on the side of the stove for a few minutes. When the juice from the strawberries has thinned the sugar to a syrupy consistency, drain the fruit through a silk strainer. Cook the syrup again in the pan until it reaches 116°C. (240°F.) once more. Put the strawberries back in the pan and cook for 5 or 6 minutes, to the point at which the jam reaches the jelling stage. Finish in the usual way.

Tomato jam. CONFITURE DE TOMATES - 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) drained tomato pulp, 1 kg. (2 lb., 4 cups) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water, 3 dl. (¾ pint, 1¼ cups) apple juice, 1 vanilla pod.

Dissolve the sugar in the water with the vanilla pod. Cook to the ball stage (116°C., 240°F.).

Add the tomato pulp to the pan, sieving it first. Cook on a lively heat, stirring all the time with the skimmer until the jam reaches the jelling stage.

Finish in the usual way.

Instead of apple juice, gooseberry juice may be used. The addition of juice is necessary to supply the jelling element to the tomatoes, so that the jam sets properly.

Watermelon jam. CONFITURE DE PÂTÈQUES - For 1 kg. (2 lb.) watermelon, net weight after removing rind and seeds, 750 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) fine sugar.

Proceed in the same way as for Melon jam.

JELLIES. GELÉES -

Apple jelly. GELÉE DE POMMES - This jelly is made by cutting good cooking apples into slices without peeling them or removing the pips. The fruit should be ripe and perfectly sound.

Cook them in a preserving pan with 1½ litres (2½ pints, 3¼ pints) water for every 1 kg. (2 lb.) fruit. As soon as the apples are cooked, turn them into a jelly-bag placed over a large basin.

Add 800 g. (1¾ lb., 3½ cups) sugar for every litre (scant quart, generous quart) juice, which must be obtained without pressure. Cook until it begins to jell. This stage is reached when a drop of jelly is let fall from the skimmer onto a plate without spreading.

Fill the pots when the jelly is lukewarm, and cover them the following day.

Cherry jelly. GELÉE DE CERISES - For 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) cherry juice use 850 g. (1 lb. 14 oz., 3½ cups) sugar, (½ pint, 1½ cups) apple juice, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water.

Proceed in the same way as for Currant jelly (see below).

Currant jelly I. GELÉE DE GROSEILLES - Use two-thirds redcurrants and one-third white. 125 g. (4 oz.) raspberries are added to each 1 kg. (2 lb.) currants.

Crush the currants and raspberries together and strain them through a cloth which is wrung at both ends.

Dissolve the sugar, slightly moistened with hot water, allowing 1 kg. (2 lb., 4 cups) for each litre (scant quart, generous quart) fruit juice. Cook to the jelling stage on a good heat.

Currant jelly II. GELÉE DE GROSEILLES - Add the currants and the raspberries to the sugar, which has been dissolved in a pan, allowing 600 g. (1¼ lb., 2½ cups) sugar for every 1 kg. (2 lb.) fruit.

Allow the fruit to swell, keeping the pan on a corner of the stove. Then boil quickly until the jelling stage is reached. Strain the jelly and decant into pots.

Redcurrant juice can also be obtained in the following way. Put the currants in a pan with the raspberries. Add a glass of water for every 1 kg. (2 lb.) fruit. Keep at a low temperature until the skins burst and the juice comes out. Strain juice as described above.

Orange jelly. GELÉE D'ORANGES - Rub the zest of 12 oranges with 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) lump sugar. Add this sugar, which has absorbed the fragrant oil of the oranges, to 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) apple juice, obtained as described for Apple jelly.

Add the strained juice of the 12 oranges and 900 g. (2 lb., 7 cups) lump sugar. Add, if desired, 100 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) crystallised orange peel which has been soaked in lukewarm water and shredded into fine strips.

Cook the jelly to the jelling stage and finish as described.

Quince jelly. GELÉE DE COINGS - Cut ripe, peeled quinces into slices. Put them into a basin of cold water as soon as they have been sliced. Cook them in a copper pan with water in the proportion of 1 litre (scant quart, generous quart) water for 500 g. (1 lb.) fruit, without stirring. As soon as the fruit is cooked turn it into a sieve and drain.

Put the juice into a pan and add 800 g. (1¾ lb., 3½ cups) sugar for each litre (scant quart, generous quart) liquid. Dissolve the sugar. Cook on a lively heat until the jelly has reached the jelling stage.

JAMBE DE BOIS SOUP - This was the name given, in former times, to a clear soup whose principal ingredient was a piece of leg of beef on the bone. When it was ready, the meat fell away from the bone. (It was as though a wooden leg was floating in the soup, hence its name.)

JAMBON - See also HAM.

Jambon de Prague sous la cendre - Name which is often used in menus to describe ham (Prague, York or other) cooked in pastry.

JAPAN - See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.

JAPONAISE (À LA) - A number of different dishes are called à la japonaise. Most of them have this in common, that Chinese (in French, called Japanese) artichokes are included in the ingredients. Francillon salad is sometimes called salade à la japonaise. It is made from mussels, potatoes and truffles, and was invented by Alexandre Dumas the younger (see SALADS, Mixed salads).

The term japonaise is also applied to an iced bombe made of peach ice cream filled with tea-flavoured mousse.

JARDINIÈRE (À LA) - Name given to a garnish made of fresh vegetables – carrots and turnips (shaped with a plain or fluted ball-scoop, cut with a hollow tubular cutter, or diced), green peas, small kidney beans, French beans (diced or cut into lozenges), cauliflower, etc. These vegetables are cooked separately, some boiled, others glazed. They are arranged round the main dish in separate groups. This garnish is served with roast, stewed or braised meat and pot-roasted poultry. (See GARNISHES.)

JASMIN – Plant containing a powerfully scented substance which is used in oriental cookery and confectionery.

JAY. GEAT – Bird regarded as a delicacy when it is young. The fully grown birds may also be eaten, but they must be boiled before roasting. These jays differ from the jays of North America. European jays have a pinkish-brown body, white rump, black tail, white patch on wings, black and white crown feathers, blue and black wing coverts.

JELLY. GELÉE – A jelly is, first of all, a clear meat or fish stock which solidifies when cold, by virtue of the gelatinous substances contained in it.

In former times, meat and fish jellies were prepared with hart's horn. Nowadays, these jellies are prepared in a more natural way, by including gelatinous bones in the stock or by adding a quantity of gelatine to it. It is this preparation which was once called aspic.

Gelatine should not be used to excess in the preparation of meat jellies. Whenever possible it should be left out altogether, and this is possible where the stock is made from naturally gelatinous parts of the meat, such as veal knuckles and calves' feet, fresh bacon rind, and poultry.

In jam-making, the name jelly is given to a preserve, made from fruit juice and sugar, which, by a careful control of temperature in cooking, is reduced to the required consistency. Jelly may be made from quinces, currants, apples and other fruits containing pectin (see JAMS AND JELLIES).

Certain sweets are also called jellies. These are made from various fruit juices with sugar and a variable quantity of gelatine added, or made by the old method, with calf's foot jelly.

Jellies are also made from fresh and dried vegetables, and cereals. These are mainly used as invalid foods. Recipes for them are given further on in this section and elsewhere in this volume.

Clarification of jellies. Jelly stocks must always be clarified to ensure perfect transparency, whether they have a meat, fish or vegetable base, and after they have been prepared according to the instructions and have been reduced (with or without gelatine) to the desired consistency.

Instructions for clarification of jelly stocks are given under ASPIC. Methods for clarifying meat, fish and vegetable stocks are also given in the article on CULINARY METHODS.

Chopped jelly. GELÉE HACHÉE – Chopped meat or fish jelly is used as a garnish for cold dishes. To obtain the best results, place the jelly on a cloth which has been dipped in cold water, wrung out thoroughly and spread out on the table. Chop the jelly with a large knife. It must be arranged round the dish with a spoon and not, as is often done, squeezed through a forcing-bag. Treated in the latter way, the jelly tends to lose its colour and becomes cloudy.

Set pieces in jelly. ATTELETS DE GELÉE – These set pieces, which were much used in former times to enhance the appearance of a cold dish, have now almost disappeared, although, on occasions, they still appear as a feature of a cold buffet.

Jelly triangles. CROÛTONS DE GELÉE – These croûtons or triangles are used to provide a decorative border for a cold dish.

They are made from very stiff meat or fish jelly which is first cut into strips about 5 cm. (2 inches) wide, and then shaped into elongated triangles to produce a dog's tooth effect.

The jelly may also be cut into other shapes, using pastry-cutters.

MEAT JELLIES. GELÉES DE VIANDE –

Meat jelly stock. FONDS POUR GELÉE DE VIANDE – Ingredients. For 5 litres ( $5\frac{1}{2}$  quarts) of jelly:

Nourishing ingredients. 2 kg. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) beef (leg),  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. ( $3\frac{3}{4}$  lb.) knuckle of veal,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. ( $3\frac{3}{4}$  lb.) veal and beef bones sawn in small pieces, 3 calves' feet (boned and blanched, with the bones ground), 250 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) bacon rinds.

Aromatic ingredients. 2 or 3 large carrots, 2 medium onions, 2 leeks, 3 stalks of celery, bouquet of herbs, salt and pepper.

Liquid.  $8\frac{1}{2}$  litres (9 quarts) water.

Put the beef, the veal (tied with string) and the bones in a pan and brown slightly in butter. Transfer the meat and bones to a large stockpot, brown them further with the carrots, onions, leeks and celery. Pour in the water.

Rinse the pan in which the meat and bones were first browned with a little water, and add this to the ingredients in the stockpot. Bring to the boil, skim, and add the calves' feet and bacon rinds, tied with string, and the bouquet of herbs. Season. Simmer gently for about 5 to 6 hours.

Strain this stock through muslin or a fine strainer. To turn it into aspic jelly, clarify it in the usual way.

Chicken jelly stock. FONDS POUR GELÉE DE VOLAILLE – Use the same method of preparation as for ordinary jelly adding, over and above the basic ingredients, a pullet which has been browned in the oven or, alternatively,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. ( $3\frac{3}{4}$  lb.) chicken carcass and giblets, also browned in advance in the oven.

When this jelly stock is intended as a garnish for galantine, the galantine takes the place of the pullet and should be cooked in the stock.

Fish jelly stock. FONDS POUR GELÉE DE POISSON – This stock is made in the same way as concentrated fish stock (see STOCKS) from the following basic ingredients.

For 5 litres ( $5\frac{1}{2}$  quarts): 500 g. (1 lb.) fish bones and trimmings of turbot, brill or sole (U.S. flounder or haddock) or an equivalent quantity of fish such as whiting, gurnet, weever, etc., 2 medium onions (finely sliced), mushroom peelings, celery, parsley roots, thyme, laurel.

This stock may be made with water but it is better made with fish fumet (see FUMET) prepared in advance.

Fish jelly stock with red wine. FONDS POUR GELÉE DE POISSON AU VIN ROUGE – This stock is used in cooking the various fish served in red wine jelly (salmon trout, brown trout, carp, etc.).

It may be prepared like ordinary fish jelly, with the same basic ingredients and flavourings, to which are added equal parts of red wine (Burgundy or Claret) and Fish fumet (see FUMET).

Game jelly stock. FONDS POUR GELÉE DE GIBIER – The same method is used as that given for ordinary jelly. Use the same basic ingredients, adding about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. (3 lb.) game carcasses and trimmings which have been previously browned in the oven. Add celery, thyme, bay leaf and 8 to 10 juniper berries to the usual flavourings.

White jelly stock. FONDS POUR GELÉE BLANCHE – Made from the same basic ingredients and flavourings as ordinary jelly, but without browning the meat or bones.

VEGETABLE JELLIES. GELÉES DE LÉGUMES – These jellies, which are prepared from various dried vegetables, cereals and fresh herbs, are used particularly as invalid foods. Pectose is a constituent of all these vegetables. In unripe fruit and vegetables, it is present in an insoluble state but, as the fruit or vegetable ripens, it changes into soluble pectin.

Fresh bean jelly. GELÉE DE FÈVES FRAÎCHES – Put ripe, shelled beans in a saucepan. Add a little water, cover tightly, and cook. From time to time, while they are cooking, add a little water so that the liquid level in the pan remains constant.

When the beans are cooked, sieve them. Press the vegetables gently to extract all the juice, which makes a jelly with a very high albumen content.

In the same way, jellies can be extracted from small kidney beans, French (string) beans, green peas and various other fresh vegetables.

DESSERT (SWEET) JELLIES. GELÉES D'ENTREMETS – Sweet jellies are made with a base of powdered gelatine or French leaf gelatine dissolved in water or (rarely) from calf's foot jelly plus sugar and water. This base is flavoured either with liqueur, a dessert wine, or a fruit juice.

For liqueur jellies, the liqueur is added after clarifying the jelly. 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) liqueur is used to 9 dl. jelly ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 2 pints) base.

Jellies made from juicy fruits. GELÉES DE FRUITS AQUEUX – Use lemons, oranges, tangerines, pineapple, grapes, etc. The filtered juice of the fruit is added to the dissolved gelatine.

Muscovite jelly. GELÉE À LA MOSCOVITE – This jelly is made in the usual way, flavoured with liqueur or fruit juice and poured into a hinged mould, called a 'Muscovite' mould, which must be completely airtight, as in the preparation of ice cream.

The special feature of this jelly is that it is covered with a thin coating of frost.

Red fruit jellies. GELÉES DE FRUITS ROUGES – Cherries, strawberries, raspberries, redcurrants, etc. Only very ripe fruit should be used. Put the fruit through a fine sieve. Add between 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) and 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) water to  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) juice, according to the pectin content of the fruit.

Filter this fruit juice, and add it in two stages to the calf's foot jelly or the gelatine, dissolved in advance, to ensure the right consistency.

Russian jelly. GELÉE À LA RUSSE – This sweet is made like other jellies, with various flavourings. It is whisked on ice until it begins to set, poured into a mould as quickly as possible, and put on ice to set completely. Turn out on a napkin.

Stone fruit. GELÉES DE FRUITS À NOYAUX – Apricots, nectarines, peaches, plums, etc., are often used as a garnish with different fruit jellies.

The jelly itself may also be made from these fruits.

Dip the fruit in boiling water and peel. Cook slowly in syrup. Leave in the syrup until cold. Make the jelly from the syrup and clarify in the usual way.

Generally, fruit jellies should be flavoured with kirsch, maraschino or some other liqueur.

Swedish fruit jelly. GELÉE DE FRUITS À LA SUÉDOISE – Fruit jelly, garnished after it is put in the mould, with various kinds of fruit which have been cooked in syrup and thoroughly drained.

Various wine jellies. GELÉES AUX VINS DIVERS – Champagne, Frontignan, Madeira, Marsala, port, sherry, etc. 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) wine should be used to every 7 dl. ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints) jelly base.

PASTE JELLIES (Confectionery). PÂTES – These confections are made by mixing fruit or flower pulp with sugar.

Apple paste jelly. PÂTE DE POMMES – 'Choose good, sound, cooking apples, peel them and remove cores. Put into a pan with water, and cook, turning with a wooden spoon from time to time, until they have been softened. Remove, strain the juice into a bowl leaving the apples in the sieve until cold, then rub the pulp through a sieve. Put over the fire and cook down by half. Remove from heat, transfer from the pan into an earthenware or glazed china bowl – a precaution which cannot be stressed too much.

'Clarify the same amount of sugar, cook it to small crack degree (see SUGAR), take the pan off the fire, pour in the apple pulp, stir the mixture thoroughly with a wooden spoon and place on a low heat. Allow to heat until the mixture shivers very slightly. Stir all the time until you begin to see the bottom of the pan. Then proceed to pour into moulds as described (below.)' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Apricot paste jelly. PÂTE D'ABRICOTS – 'Choose sound, ripe apricots, stone them, put into a pan with water, stand over the fire and, as soon as boiling is established, remove and drain. Rub through a sieve at once to extract all pulp, collecting it in a bowl. Throw away the skin. Weigh the pulp and boil down by half. Take out of the pan and transfer into an earthenware or china bowl. Clarify the same quantity of sugar as you have pulp and cook to small crack degree (see SUGAR). Pour the pulp into it, stirring with a wooden spoon. When the mixture is smooth, stand the pan on low heat again, stirring all the time until the bottom of the pan can be seen, then remove from the heat.

'Put moulds of different shapes (round, heart-shaped, etc.) on a tinned metal sheet, fill them with the apricot and sugar confection, smoothing the surface with a knife. When the moulds are filled, dust them with sugar and put them into a hot drying-oven. Two days later take the confections out of the mould, turn them out onto a sieve, dust with sugar, leave in a drying-oven for a day, then store in tins with well-fitting lids, placing the confections in rows and putting a sheet of white paper between each layer.' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Cherry paste jelly. PÂTE DE CERISES – 'Choose very ripe red cherries. Remove stalks and stones, putting the cherries into a bowl as you do so. Then transfer them into a pan and put over the fire. Bring them to the boil, stirring with a wooden spoon. Rub through a sieve to extract all the pulp, collecting it in a bowl. Boil down by half. weigh the pulp and pour into a china bowl. Clarify the same weight of sugar, cook to ball degree (see SUGAR), add the cherry pulp and proceed as described in the recipe for Apricot paste jelly.' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Grape paste jelly. PÂTE DE VERJUS – 'Pick good green grapes off the bunches and put into a basin with a little water. Bring to the boil on a high flame. When the grapes swell and burst, strain the juice into a bowl, leaving the grapes to drip. Then rub them through a sieve, collecting the pulp in a bowl. Put it into a pan, set on a low flame, boil down by half and weigh. Clarify the same amount of sugar, cook to small ball degree (see SUGAR), take off the heat, pour in the grape pulp and add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) apple pulp per 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) grape pulp. Mix well and proceed as described above.' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Greengage paste jelly. PÂTE DE REINES-CLAUDES – 'Pick the greengages when they are very ripe. Stone, put into a pan with a little water, and bring to the boil. Strain the juice, leaving the greengages on the sieve to cool. When they are cold, rub them through the sieve, weigh the pulp and, allowing the same amount of sugar, proceed as described above.' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Mirabelle paste jelly. PÂTE DE MIRABELLES – 'Choose sound mirabelles, peel, stone them and put into cold water. Place them in a pan over the fire, stirring with a wooden spoon until they are cooked. Drain, leave the mirabelles in a sieve until cold, then rub them through. Boil down the quantity by half and pour from the pan into a china bowl. Weigh the pulp, clarify the same amount of sugar and cook to small crack degree (see SUGAR). Pour the pulp into it, stirring with a wooden spoon to mix, and proceed to make the jellies as described in the recipe for Apricot paste jelly. (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Peach paste jelly. PÂTE DE PÊCHES – 'Proceed as above using the following ingredients: 2 kg. (4 lb.) peaches and 1½ kg. (3 lb., 6 cups) sugar.' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Pear paste jelly. PÂTE DE POIRES – 'Prepare as Apple paste jelly, using the pulp of juicy pears.' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Quince paste jelly. PÂTE DE COINGS – 'Choose very ripe quinces, cut into quarters, remove the skins and pips, put into a pan with water and place over the fire to soften. Drain, and proceed as described in the recipe for Apricot paste jelly.' (Le Confiseur Moderne.)

Raspberry paste jelly. PÂTE DE FRAMBOISES – 'Choose ripe raspberries, rub through a sieve to extract the pulp. Put over the fire and boil down the pulp by half. Weigh, add the same amount (by weight) of sugar cooked to ball degree (see SUGAR), and proceed as described above.

'Strawberry jellies are made in the same way as raspberry jellies.' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

Violet paste jelly. PÂTE DE VIOLETTES – 'Take 1 kg. (2 lb.) clean violets, reduce to pulp by bruising in a mortar and add the juice of 2 lemons.

'Cook 1 kg. (2 lb., 4 cups) sugar to ball degree (see SUGAR), take the pan off the fire, add the bruised violets and 500 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) apple jelly, mix, and make the jellies as described above.

Various other flowers, such as orange blossom, roses, etc., can be made into jellies in a similar manner.' (Le Confiseur moderne.)

JERBOA. GERBOISE – Small rodent about the size of a squirrel. It is to be found in all parts of Europe, and is prepared for the table like squirrel (q.v.). Found in south-western U.S.A. and Mexico, under the name of kangaroo-rat or pouched mouse.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE. TOPINAMBOUR – Plant originating in North America and imported into France at the beginning of the seventeenth century. Jerusalem artichokes, also known as artichauts du Canada and poires de terre, were not much liked at the start, but were established, like the potato, by Parmentier. They are at their best on the borderline of winter and spring.

Jerusalem artichokes are firm in consistency. They resemble real artichokes to some extent in flavour and may be substituted for them in certain preparations. They have a pleasant taste, but one that soon palls.

Jerusalem artichokes à l'anglaise. TOPINAMBOURS À L'ANGLAISE – Peel the artichokes, divide in quarters and cut them to look like pigeons' eggs. Blanch lightly in salted water and cook gently in butter. Season, and stir in a few tablespoons of rather thin Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Simmer for a few minutes. Serve in a deep dish.

Jerusalem artichokes in butter. TOPINAMBOURS AU BEURRE – Cut to look like pigeons' eggs. Cook in butter like Château potatoes (see POTATOES).

Jerusalem artichokes à la crème. TOPINAMBOURS À LA CRÈME – Cut to look like pigeons' eggs and simmer gently in butter. When they are almost cooked, cover with boiling fresh cream and finish cooking as slowly as possible. Season.

At the last moment add a few tablespoons of fresh cream. Jerusalem artichokes à la crème may also be prepared with rather thin Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Fried Jerusalem artichokes. TOPINAMBOURS EN FRITOT – Cut the artichokes in thick slices and cook them in butter. Dip in light batter and fry in smoking-hot fat or oil.

Purée of Jerusalem artichokes. PURÉE DE TOPINAMBOURS – Peel the artichokes, cut them in thin slices and simmer them in butter and a little water in a covered pan. Rub through a sieve. Heat this purée and add to it a sufficient quantity of potatoes to give it the desired consistency. Add a few tablespoons boiling hot milk or cream and 2 or 3 tablespoons fresh butter.

Salad of Jerusalem artichokes. SALADE DE TOPINAMBOURS – Made like Potato salad (see SALAD).

Soufflé of Jerusalem artichokes. SOUFFLÉ DE TOPINAMBOURS – Using purée of Jerusalem artichoke, made like Potato soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ).

JERUSALEM MELON. ABDELAVIS – This melon, which originally came from Egypt, has sweet, juicy and succulent flesh which is much valued as it quenches thirst. Its seeds are used for making sedative and tranquilising drinks, and its flesh is used in the manufacture of excellent ices, bombes, etc. It is eaten like melon.

JESSE – Fish found in almost all the rivers of Europe, rather similar in shape to the carp. It turns yellowish when cooked. It is fairly delicate but has many bones and is cooked in the same way as carp (q.v.).

JÉSUTE – A small pastry made of left-overs of Flaky pastry dough (see DOUGH).

Roll out the dough. Cut it into lengths 15 cm. (6 inches) wide. Spread half the lengths with almond paste, and cover with the remaining lengths. Sprinkle with praline (q.v.). Cut into triangles. Bake in a moderate oven.

JÉSUS – Type of pork-liver sausage made in Switzerland and Franche-Comté. It is also called Jésu. The Jésu de Morieau is particularly well known.

JOHANNISBEERKUCHEN (German cookery) – A German redcurrant tart. (See TARTS, Fruit tart à l'allemande.)

JOHANNISBERG – A village of Hesse-Nassau, in Prussia, where two special vines are grown, the large and the small Riesling. A famous dry white wine is made from the grapes of these vines.

JOHN DORY. SAINT-PIERRE – Fish, also known to the French as dorée, Jean-Doré and poule de mer. It is very oddly shaped, oval in form, and flat, with a large spiny head. Its skin is thick and it is covered with very small scales.

The first dorsal fin consists of nine spines held together by a membrane which ends in a long filament. On the flanks is a round blackish mark, surrounded by a light grey circle.

The flesh of the John Dory is delicate and rivals turbot and sole. In U.S.A. the Atlantic fish, the porgy (called scup in New England), could be used for John Dory recipes.

It may be cooked whole, grilled, braised or poached in a court-bouillon (q.v.), but most often it is filleted and cooked in the same way as filets of brill (q.v.), turbot (q.v.) or sole (q.v.).

The John Dory is also used as an ingredient of bouillabaisse (q.v.).

Filletts of John Dory Pierre Chapelle. FILETS DE SAINT-PIERRE PIERRE CHAPELLE – Fillet a raw medium-sized John Dory. Season with salt and pepper and coat with egg and breadcrumbs. Use the skin and bones to prepare a white wine fish stock. Use this stock for a rice pilaf made of 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) rice tossed in butter with chopped onions and cooked in the stock for 20 minutes. In another pot cook 50 g.

John Dory

(2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onions gently in butter. Add 4 to 6 large tomatoes, peeled, squeezed to remove seeds and chopped. Season with salt, pepper, garlic and 1 teaspoon curry powder. Cook together for 20 minutes. Cook the fillets of fish in butter. Serve on top of the pilaf. Surround with the tomatoes.

JOINTING. DÉPEÇAGE – The action of cutting up meat, poultry, etc. (See CARVING.)

JONCHÉE – See CHEESE.

JUDAS-TREE. GAINIER – Judean tree which also grows in southern Europe, North America and Asia. Its strongly scented flowers are pickled in vinegar like capers.

JUDRU – A very short, thick saucisson made at Chagny in Burgundy.

JUICE. JUS – The French use the term jus in a somewhat wider sense than the English 'juice'.

Jus is used:

1. As in English, of the juice squeezed out of foodstuffs, whether animal or vegetable, e.g. herbal juice, orange juice, lemon juice, meat juice, etc.

2. Of the gravy of a roast made by diluting the juices of the roasting pan or dripping pan (in the case of spit roasts), with clear stock, water or any other suitable liquid, and then boiling it until all the goodness in the pan has been absorbed into the stock.

3. Of meat juice, extracted by pressing slices of lightly grilled beef in a special press. This juice is taken as a tonic.

4. Of coulis (q.v.) or brown stock, thickened or clear, of various kinds of meat, especially veal. (See STOCKS, Veal stock.)

Fruit and vegetable juices are very valuable in dietetics. Fruit juice is an excellent beverage containing vitamins, minerals and retaining the diuretic qualities of whole fruit. In fact, it has all the assets of the latter without its disadvantages (e.g. indigestibility).

Fruit juice is given to babies who cannot digest milk, or as a means of compensating for the vitamin deficiency in certain tinned milks. Invalids, post-operative patients and convalescents all must have fruit or vegetable juices in their diets.

Vegetable juice is particularly suitable for those who cannot tolerate raw vegetables or cooked green vegetables and, generally speaking, for people who find cellulose indigestible.

Apple juice. JUS DE POMMES – This is made from apple pulp. (See APPLE, Apple pectin.)

Herb juices. JUS D'HERBES VERTES – Made from various raw herbs (watercress, chervil, parsley, tarragon, etc.) pounded in a mortar and strained through muslin.

Meat juice. JUS DE VIANDE – This is extracted by putting slices of lightly grilled beef into a special press. The juice dripping from the press is collected in a cup standing in a bowl of hot water.

Orange, Seville orange or lemon juices. JUS D'ORANGE, BIGARADE, CITRON – These juices have many uses in the kitchen, in confectionary and in pâtisserie. They are extracted by squeezing the fruit. The flavour is enhanced if a little grated rind is added before straining.

Pineapple juice. JUS D'ANANAS – Pound fresh pineapple pulp in a mortar. While pounding, mix in a few tablespoons plain sugar syrup. Strain the pulp through muslin. This juice, like all other fruit juices, is used in the preparation of desserts.

Red fruit juices. JUS DE FRUITS ROUGES – Made from strawberries, raspberries, redcurrants or cherries. Rub the raw fruit through a fine sieve.

Jujube
a. Flower; b. Fruit

JUJUBE – The fruit of the jujube tree which is of Syrian origin. It grows in warm climates, including the south of France. The ovoid fruit is about the size of an olive, covered with a smooth, leathery, red skin. The pulp is yellowish, mild and sweet. It has a long stone.

Dried jujubes are used to sweeten medicines. They are soothing to the throat and chest, and are used in infusions, decoctions and in the form of paste, etc.

JULIENNE – Term used in French cookery to designate:

1. A clear vegetable soup made from clear consommé. To this stock is added a mixture of finely shredded vegetables cooked very slowly in butter until they are tender. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Consommé julienne.)

2. A coarsely or finely shredded foodstuffs. Thus one may say julienne of breast of chicken, julienne of mushrooms, julienne of truffles, julienne of gherkins, etc.

JUNIPER BERRIES. GENIÈVRE – The berries of a bush which grows wild in woods and mountain gullies.

Juniper berries are used to add flavour to marinades, and as seasoning with certain foods (sauerkraut, thrushes, blackbirds, etc.). They are also used in the distillation of gin.

JUNIPER WINE. GENEVRETTE (VIN DE GENIÈVRE) – Medicinal drink made from juniper berries. (See BEVERAGES, Juniper hippocras.)

This name is also given to a wine which used to be made in the Gâtinais district from absinthe and juniper seeds.

Slicing vegetables julienne: first and second steps (Larousse)

Juniper berries
(Rap)

JUPITER'S BEARD. JOUBARBE – Name given to several plants with fleshy leaves. Among these are the houseleek or wild artichoke, and the white stonecrop, which is edible, its leaves being eaten in salad.

JURANÇON – Small town in the Basses-Pyrénées, 1 km. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  mile) from Pau. A fine wine is made there which, it is said, was greatly prized by King Henry IV of France.

Legend has it that when the king was born, his grandfather, the King of Navarre, after having rubbed the baby's lips with a clove of garlic, made him swallow a few drops of Jurançon. The royal infant having come through this bacchic ordeal very creditably, his grandfather, in a frenzy of enthusiasm, cried: 'You are a real Béarnais.'

White Jurançon is a full-blooded and intoxicating wine. With age, it acquires a strong flavour of Madeira.

A red Jurançon is also made, but is less popular than the white. These wines are made by mixing the grapes of several different vines in the vat, but, curiously enough, the grapes of the Jurançon vine are not among them.

KALTSCHALE (Russian cookery) – A fruit salad liberally moistened with liqueur, wine or syrup.

Take a selection of mixed fresh fruit such as apricots, pineapple, peaches, strawberries, raspberries, melon and watermelon. Where necessary, skin the fruit. Cut it all up into small, thick slices and place in a bowl pressed down into a bucket of crushed ice.

Bring to the boil 1 bottle Champagne,  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) red Bordeaux wine, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira, 2 or 3 tablespoons sugar and a pinch of ground cinnamon. Chill this mixture on ice and pour it over the fruit. Chill again and serve.

Kaltschale with strawberry purée. KALTSCHALE À LA PURÉE DE FRAISES – Embed a bowl in crushed ice. Fill it with fruit as indicated above. Make a purée of strawberries as follows: Rub through a fine sieve 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  lb., 7 cups) very ripe strawberries and 225 g. (8 oz., 2 cups) redcurrants. Dilute this purée with 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) light sugar syrup and  $\frac{1}{2}$  bottle Champagne previously brought to the boil and chilled. Pour over the fruit and serve chilled.

KANGAROO. KANGOUROU – The flesh of this Australian mammal is edible. Kangaroo tail soup is a delicacy in Germany. It is also sold commercially.

KASHA (Russian cookery). KACHE – Russian dish of cooked buckwheat. There are several ways of preparing it.

Ingredients. 500 g. (1 lb.) buckwheat, 1 teaspoon salt, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter.

1. Sort the buckwheat to pick out any black grains. – these are still covered with the hard husk which people find unsightly. Cook in a frying pan without grease or liquid, until the grains acquire a light golden colour. Put into an oven-proof dish, season with salt, add the butter, and pour in just enough boiling water to cover. Bake in a slow oven for  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 3 hours. It will have a thin crust but the grains should fall apart easily.

2. Using the same proportions, put the buckwheat in a double saucepan, add salt and melted butter, cover with cold water, stir, and cook on a low heat for 3 hours.

3. Wash the buckwheat, scald with boiling water and pour off the liquid. Put in a saucepan with salt and butter, cover with boiling water, bring again to the boil, stir, and transfer into a double saucepan. Cook for 3 hours.

Kasha croûtons. CROÛTONS DE KACHE – Soak 500 g. (1 lb.) crushed buckwheat in warm water until it forms a thick porridge. Season with salt and put it in a large earthenware pot.

Bake in a hot oven for 2 hours. Remove the thick crust formed on the surface. Scoop out all the porridge not sticking to the sides of the pan and put in a bowl. Add a piece of butter about the size of an egg. Mix well with a spatula. Press the porridge between 2 saucepan lids to make a 'dough' 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. Cut into shapes with a pastry-cutter and brown them in clarified butter.

These buckwheat croûtons are served with shchi, borshch and other soups.

Kasha with mushrooms. KACHE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Prepare the buckwheat porridge as indicated above, adding to it sliced mushrooms tossed in butter before putting it in the oven.

Serve in the cooking pot, with fresh butter handed separately.

Kasha with Parmesan. KACHE DE SARRASIN AU PARMESAN – Make the buckwheat porridge as indicated above. When it is baked, remove the crust from the top and use part of the soft porridge to line a buttered boat-shaped dish, or a deep gratin dish. Sprinkle the porridge with grated Parmesan cheese and melted butter. Spread another layer of porridge on top and sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter. When it is full, smooth the surface, sprinkle with Parmesan and melted butter and brown in the oven. Serve with melted butter and estouffade (q.v.) stock.

Polish kasha. KACHE POLONAIS – Pick over, blanch and hull 250 g. (9 oz.) barley. Simmer it gently in 3 litres ( $5\frac{1}{2}$  pints,  $6\frac{1}{2}$  pints) milk with a piece of butter about the size of an egg. Stir until the barley is fully cooked. Remove from the stove. Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 6 eggs beaten as for an omelette, and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sour cream.

Put this mixture in a buttered charlotte mould. Bake in a hot oven. Wrap the mould in a napkin and serve the kasha in it. Serve with double cream.

Semolina kasha. KACHE DE SEMOULE – Pour 500 g. (18 oz., 3 cups) Smolensk semolina on a slab. Beat 2 eggs as for an omelette and pour over the semolina. Mix well so that the semolina is thoroughly moistened. Leave the mixture to dry in a very moderate oven. Put through a food mill or strainer.

Boil 2 litres ( $3\frac{1}{2}$  pints,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  pints) milk with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter. Pour in the semolina. Season. Simmer gently, stirring frequently. Put into a serving dish and brown in a hot oven. Serve with melted butter.

KAUNAS – See CHEESE.

KEBAB (Turkish cookery) – Name used in Turkey for various dishes whose principal feature is skewered meat.

The skewers are of metal or wood. The meat – mutton, lamb or buffalo – is cut into squares, seasoned with pepper, salt, thyme and powdered bay leaves. Square pieces of mutton fat are placed on the skewer between the pieces of meat. In Turkey, mutton fat takes the place of bacon. The skewered meat is grilled over hot embers, and is served plain, with lemon or with various garnishes.

Kebab galette. KEBAB EN GALETTE – Cut into thick squares a boned shoulder of lamb. Steep the pieces in milk, and place them on skewers with squares of green pepper, tomato, onion and bay leaves between. Sprinkle with powdered thyme. Grill over hot embers.

Take the pieces off the skewers. Arrange them on a galette (q.v.) (thin cake) made of wheat flour. Cover with finely chopped onions previously browned in butter. Moisten with brown stock and cover with another wheaten galette, which should be piping hot.

Shish-kebab, which is the Turkish name for skewered mutton cooked in this way, is also served with pilaf of rice or with chick peas and raw finely sliced onions.

Tchevir me kebab – Place on an upright spit some thin slices of mutton, alternating with pieces of mutton fat. This spit turns itself in front of an upright grill.

As the meat is cooked the pieces are slit lengthwise, taken off the spit one after another, and served with yogurt, pilaf of rice, etc.

KÉFIR – Fermented milk of Caucasian origin. Strictly it should be made of camels' milk but, in practice, it is made from cows' milk, skimmed or not, according to taste. Fermentation is induced by means of kéfir bacteria. When the bacteria have been added to the milk it is put in bottles with patent stoppers and kept for a period in a hot cupboard. After a day, mild kéfir is obtained. This is slightly laxative. After two days, medium kéfir is obtained, which is not laxative. Strong kéfir is obtained after three days of fermentation. It is slightly constipating and contains 2.5 per cent alcohol.

Kéfir has a rather sour taste. It is frothy and contains a greater or lesser proportion of alcohol according to the period of fermentation. The casein shows signs of peptinisation in the form of thin flakes. Kéfir is easily digestible and is often recommended for invalids.

KEFTES-KEBABS (Turkish cookery) – Made from small slices of raw meat (mutton, veal or buffalo), skewered, grilled and served with pilaf of rice and the juices of roast meat.

KETCHUP or CATSUP – Ketchup is a condiment rather than a sauce in the proper sense of the word. It is manufactured commercially and much used in England and North America. It is also made in home kitchens.

Mushroom ketchup or catsup. KETCHUP AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Put in a salting jar layers of fresh sliced mushrooms – about 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) deep – and sprinkle each layer with table salt, pepper and allspice.

Leave the mushrooms in the salt for 5 or 6 days in a cool place. Press to extract all the juice. Boil this juice. Season with pepper, thyme, bay, ginger, marjoram and a little tomato paste. Leave to cool. Filter and bottle.

Tomato ketchup. KETCHUP AUX TOMATES – Cut up  $3\frac{1}{2}$  kg. (8 lb.) unpeeled tomatoes, 6 medium onions, 2 sweet red peppers and 2 garlic cloves. Cover with water and boil gently until the vegetables are soft. Strain through a sieve. Tie in a bag 1 red pepper, 2 bay leaves, 1 tablespoon chopped celery, 1 tablespoon mustard seeds, 1 teaspoon peppercorns and 1 stick cinnamon, and add this, with 1 tablespoon salt, to the juice. Boil down by half, stirring frequently. Add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) brown sugar, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white sugar and 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) vinegar. Continue simmering for 15 to 20 minutes or until the sauce is thickened to the desired point. Seal in hot sterilised jars or bottles.

KETMIE – Plant, the fruit of which is edible and known as okra, gumbo or ladies' fingers. (See OKRA.)

KHLODNIK (Polish and Russian cookery). KOLODNIK – Iced soup, very popular in Poland, its country or origin, and in Russia.

It is made as follows:

Wash and blanch 4 large handfuls of tender beetroot leaves. Chop finely. Add to these a handful of finely chopped, blanched and drained chervil, tarragon, chive, fennel and shallot.

Put these herbs in a dish embedded in chopped ice, and moisten them with  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) cucumber brine. Add the same amount of kvass (q.v.), a drink very popular in Russia. Just before serving, season the soup with salt and a pinch of fine sugar. Add the following garnishes: 48 crayfish tails, 500 g. (1 lb.) diced, braised sturgeon, 4 or 5 tablespoons diced, fresh cucumber. Add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sieved sour cream and 1 or 2 pieces of ice. Serve with quartered hard-boiled eggs sprinkled with finely chopped chervil and fennel.

KID. CHEVREAU, CABRI – Young goat, slaughtered before being weaned. The meat of the kid is not very substantial but it is not unwholesome, as some people believe.

In French butchery sucking kids thirty to forty days old are called tétards, the other, three or four months old, are called brouards.

All the methods of preparation given for very young lamb are applicable to kid (see LAMB). As the meat is rather tasteless it has to be well seasoned.

The roast kid of Israel perfumes the pages of the Bible with its appetising aroma. It is the roast of patriarchs and kings. To this day, the bedouin in his tent solemnly 'stews' his kid on festive occasions; and in Cambodia and Burma, the kid is the traditional dish for engagement celebrations.

In the Middle Ages, it held its own among quarters of venison and heads of boar, dressed herons and white swans. Even at the time of the kings of Navarre, the kid of the Pyrénées was considered the chief attraction of the Easter feasts. And the gallant Béarnais who was to become Henry IV had occasion more than once to wash down the Easter kid with a fine Jurançon wine.

KIDNEYS. ROGNONS – Pigs' and sheep's kidneys are the shape of a haricot (shell) bean; calves' and ox kidneys are multi-lobed.

Calves' and lambs' kidneys are delicate and sought-after foodstuffs. Pigs' kidneys, a little richer and with a sweetish taste, are less well thought of. Ox and sheep's kidneys are tough and often taste of urine.

Cocks' kidneys. ROGNONS DE COQ – These are used mainly as an ingredient in garnishes, but they may also be used, cooked in various ways, as hot hors-d'œuvre or small entrées, in the same way as cocks' combs (q.v.).

To prepare a garnish, wash firm, white cocks' kidneys in several waters. Put them into a small saucepan with water, a pinch of salt, a little butter and a few drops of lemon juice.

Start cooking over a good heat. As soon as the liquid begins to boil turn the heat very low and cook, covered, for 10 to 12 minutes, taking care to avoid boiling.

Use according to the recipe chosen.

Kidneys sautéed with Madeira. ROGNONS SAUTÉS AU MADÈRE – Calves' or lambs' kidneys sliced and sautéed in butter. Madeira is poured into the cooking pan and this sauce is diluted with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE.)

Preparing kidneys on a skewer (Scarnati)

KILKIS or NORWEGIAN ANCHOVIES – Tiny fish found mainly in northern European waters. It is preserved like the anchovy and is very well liked in Russia. It is served as an hors-d'œuvre (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre).

KIMALI BUREK (Turkish and Russian cookery). KIMALI BEURRECK – Stuffed pancake rolled into the shape of a cigar, filled with forcemeat or some other filling, and fried. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre, Beurrecks à la turque.)

KINGFISH. TASSARD – Large fish found in all oceans. There are many different species. The flesh is firm and white and it is prepared in the same way as tunny fish.

KIPPER – These, strictly called kippered herrings, are herrings which are slit open and smoked.

Kippers are very good to eat. They are usually grilled and served with melted butter or Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). They can also be boiled. (See HERRINGS.)

KIRSCH – Spirit with a very strong bouquet, chiefly manufactured in eastern France and in Germany. The finest kirsch comes from Alsace. Black Forest kirsch also enjoys a great reputation. It is distilled from fermented ripe wild cherries.

Kirsch is highly prized by connoisseurs. It is used a great deal for flavouring in confectionery and pâtisserie.

KISEL. KISSEL – Russian dessert made from all kinds of berries. It is served in a charlotte mould with thick cream and can be eaten either hot or cold.

KISSING CRUST. BAISURE – Bakery term describing the pale soft crust where one loaf has touched another in baking.

KITCHEN EQUIPMENT. BATTERIE DE CUISINE – This term covers all the utensils used in the kitchen for the preparation and cooking of food. The utensils, of various shapes, are made of copper or other metals such as nickel, aluminium or bimetals, silver-plated copper, iron, cast-iron, bronze, sheet-iron, wrought-iron, etc., of special fireproof earthenware or china, or of hardened glass which is also fireproof.

We know very little about the first kitchen utensils. The Egyptians, the Assyrians and the Persians principally used earthenware and bronze vessels, big-bellied in shape, with and without handles. They also used the spit and, for cooking cakes and biscuits, they had baking dishes rather like those we use nowadays.

The Jews did not generally use earthenware vessels for cooking purposes; most of their pots and pans were made of metal. To extract the meat from the big pots in which food destined to be offered to God was prepared, they used a big two-pronged fork, the forerunner of our table fork, which did not make its appearance until the seventeenth century.

The Greeks, for their culinary preparations, used greatly improved bronze, iron or silver vessels. They also had some in earthenware. Almost all these vessels were conical in shape and therefore not very deep. They were provided with lids, and either handles or detachable rings.

Among the principal kitchen utensils used by the Greeks was the chytra, a kind of earthenware pan used for cooking meats and stews. It was apparently in these utensils that the famous Spartan broths were prepared. Or perhaps this historical dish was made in the kakkabi, a fairly large three-legged pot. The Greeks also had another pot, which can be considered as the prototype of the earthenware casserole which we use nowadays for the pot-au-feu. This, filled with cooked fruit (probably cooked in wine and sweetened with honey) was carried to the altar of the god, Bacchus, on the third day of the feast of Anthesteria, the famous festival in honour of Dionysus.

The Greeks also had bronze casseroles which resembled those now in use. For cooking meat and fish cut in pieces they had a pan similar to the type which in France today is called coupe lyonnaise, and which the Greeks called teganon. In order to place all these metal or earthenware receptacles on the fire, the Greeks used a triangular support, the tripod, that is still in use in country kitchens.

Kitchen utensils used by the Romans were similar to those of the Greeks. It is also a known fact that Greek cooks brought the art of cooking to Rome. The Romans, who were sensual, voluptuous people, with a great love of luxury in all things, made kitchen utensils not only of bronze but also of silver. Among the treasures of Bosco-Reale, which are kept in the Louvre, various kitchen utensils of this type can be seen. Kitchen utensils used by the Romans included the clibanus, an earthenware utensil with holes pierced in it, used for cooking various dishes, mainly pastry, in hot ashes; craticula, a grill for cooking meat and fish on the glowing embers; and the apala, a dish with cavities of varying sizes hollowed out, which was used for cooking eggs.

The Gauls and the Gallo-Romans had earthenware and metal kitchen utensils somewhat similar to those of the Greeks and the Romans. The Celts knew nothing of the Water heaters found in the excavations at Pompeii provided with pipes to make the best possible use of the heat from the fireplace; the principle is the same as for our most perfected tubular boilers refinements of the sumptuous cookery of Imperial Rome and their pots and pans were rudimentary. With the coming of the Merovingian era, kitchen utensils began again to improve. Some specimens of these have survived, and we can see in museums the magnificent bronze vessels in which the food was prepared.

From reading Charlemagne's Capitularies, it seems evident that in succeeding centuries French kitchen utensils were improved still further. After the Crusades a great number of richly worked metal utensils – ewers, salvers, cauldrons – were brought to Europe and served as models for the artisans of the West in the manufacture of magnificent utensils.

In French museums and private collections can be seen, for example, cooking pots in engraved bronze or artistically beaten copper; wrought-iron pot-hangers, which are veritable works of art; kitchen forks, which in those days were called roables; turning gridirons; big-bellied pots and kettles; the acoste-pot (old version of the accote-pot, 'tilt-pot'), and other kitchen implements which are all excellent examples of ironmongery.

To show what a collection of kitchen utensils in the sixteenth-century manor house was like, we reproduce an extract from an inventory made in 1530 at the château de La Mothe-Chandenier:

- 'In the kitchen of the aforesaid château de la Mothe:
- '18 silver dishes and 18 escuclles (mediaeval version of écuelle – bowl) bearing the coat of arms which the late Master and the late Lady brought with them from Javarzay when they came here to the château de la Mothe.
- 'The following utensils were found in the said kitchen:
- 'Six large dishes, three small, and ten bowls, all utensils engraved with the late Master's coat of arms;
- 'One pot-hanger;
- 'Two beaten-iron cookers;
- 'One big iron spit;
- 'Then two more smaller spits;
- 'One iron fish slice, one grid;
- 'Item, one big cooking pot;
- 'Item, one big cast-iron pot with perforations;
- 'Item, another iron pot of one seillée (a measure of capacity);
- 'Item, two big cauldrons of three seillées, without rims;
- 'Item, another cauldron, of two seillées;
- 'Item, another, of one seillée;
- 'Item, two small cauldrons of half seillées;
- 'Item, two big round bronze pans of about four seillées each;
- 'Item, plus another round pan of two seillées (with a piece broken off);

- 'One wooden press for pressing capons;
- 'Two iron spoons;
- 'One small skimmer;
- 'One round bronze pan with a long handle for cooking fish;
- 'Two old dripping pans;
- 'One small metal mortar and pestle;
- 'Three iron frying pans with long handles;
- 'A table on two trestles;
- 'One old bench with bar back;
- 'One cupboard with two glass doors, which can be locked with a key;
- 'Another old cupboard, for keeping plates and dishes, with two glass doors, which can be locked with a key;
- 'Six big copper candlesticks;
- 'Six other medium-sized candlesticks;
- 'One deep copper basin for washing hands;
- 'Two deep bronze candlesticks, in the shape of a cup;
- 'In the larder near the said kitchen:
- 'Three long shelves, but there was no meat there except for one piglet, which was kept for the Master in case he wanted it while he was here.
- 'The following bottle-ware:
- 'Barrel of Gascony wine;
- 'Pitcher with a spout;
- 'Half-litre mugs;
- 'One stone mustard pot, for making mustard, etc.;
- 'One small table for making pastry.'

Our ancestors used many other utensils in addition to those mentioned in the inventory quoted above.

They had, among others, the horsehair sieve or tammy, which, it is said, was invented by the Gauls. The following utensils were also in use: the couloir, a large strainer with a handle which was used for draining foods; the rastels or rastelrier, iron hooks on which food was hung; pots and kettles of all sizes; tartières (baking tins); skillets, saucepans, frying pans, etc.; the féral – a large metal vessel used as a water container; the becdasne, a pot with a handle and a long curved spout; funnels, mostly in copper; the esmieuire, a grater used for grating nutmeg and cheese. Nutmeg was greatly valued in those days, as we know. 'Do you like nutmeg? They put it in everything,' Boileau was to write a few hundred years later.

In the kitchens of those times they also used gridirons, mortars; spice-grinders; various ladles which were called poulouches and poches; minchoirs, long-bladed knives used for slicing pork fat into rashers; mincers and various other utensils which are still in use in the present day.

Tin plating of pots and pans was already known at that time. In the Homeric era tin, along with silver, gold and bronze, was considered to be one of the precious metals. History tells us that the Aedui, the people who inhabited ancient Gaul, invented metal plating and it is thanks to this discovery that vessels and kitchen utensils were made in such a way that tin, applied on copper, could not be distinguished from silver.

There are many people who protest against the disappearance of the archaic spits or such other utensils formerly used in the kitchen. They are even capable of lamenting the passing of those inconvenient charcoal ranges – the stoves about which Carême complained when he said: 'The coal is killing us!' These were the old-fashioned paillasses, laboriously kept up, where, in live charcoal embers, stews and braised dishes simmered and sometimes caught fire.

In 1849, Michel Chevalier wrote in the Magasin Pittoresque: 'The improvement of household utensils has more to do with real freedom than is generally realised, for it contributes a great deal to freedom from drudgery in the home, which matters no less to human happiness than liberty in a public place. One utensil may free the servants from one type of arduous or unhealthy task, another allows one person to do the work of three and, consequently, frees two from domestic drudgery.'

Modern kitchen equipment – Modern kitchen equipment, either in domestic or institutional kitchens, includes such utensils as well-sharpened knives, wire whisks, saucepans, frying pans, casseroles, braising pans, kettles and strainers, and many inventions which in recent years have contributed much to make culinary operations easier and have taken the drudgery out of cooking.

The kitchen in many modern homes is the centre of family living, especially in the ever increasing number of areas where domestic service does not exist. This means that the kitchen must be an attractive room to be in, as well as an efficient place in which to produce meals. Such a room in many cases includes a dining area, either a table or counter space. The basic requirements, the stove and the refrigerator, are designed for appearance as well as usefulness, but besides these appliances there are many others designed for home use which make the preparation of food not only easy but enjoyable. Included in an ever expanding list of such appliances are electric beaters, electric blenders for chopping, pulverising and puréeing, pressure cookers, machines for slicing and shredding vegetables, rôtisseries, thermostatically controlled frying pans, waste disposal units, automatic dish washers and home freezers. But all this equipment does not assure good food. On the contrary, gourmets agree that much in texture and flavour can be sacrificed to the speed and efficiency of many of the modern gadgets. One must retain a sense of proportion.

Kitchens in small restaurants and inns are usually an elaboration of a domestic kitchen, but the modern kitchen designed for large hotels, restaurants and institutions may be compared to a factory. Here the utensils are tools of the trade and are built on a large scale and of sturdy materials. The kitchen is divided into many departments, each of which has its head chef and assistants. There may be departments for baked goods, soups, roasts, fish, salads and hors-d'œuvre, vegetables, desserts, beverages. In some kitchens these departments are further subdivided; in others they are combined. All these departments are under the direction of a manager or head chef who is responsible for the whole operation. On his staff there are usually one or more dietitians to plan the menus. Trained kitchen engineers design kitchens of various types and specifications, but each must meet public health requirements, which are today more rigid and closely controlled than ever before. Specifications for a modern kitchen designed in the U.S.A. to feed 2000 people a day, but capable of feeding 5000, include the following equipment:

- 3 electric ranges
- 3 compartment steamers
- 2 large tilting kettles used for soups and vegetables
- 2 undercounter refrigerators
- 1 bakers' revolving tray oven
- 2 cooks' tables with sinks
- 1 60-quart (70-litre) electric mixer
- 2 salad preparation tables
- Salad refrigerator
- Fish refrigerator
- 80-quart (90-litre) electric mixer
- Mobile flour bin
- Room refrigerators for meat
- Room refrigerator for vegetables and dairy products
- Room refrigerator for frozen foods
- Baker's refrigerator
- 'Pass-through' refrigerator which can be filled from the kitchen side and opened on the serving side
- 5 10-quart (12-litre) tilting pans used for soups and sauces
- Hot food table
- Refrigerated cold table
- Milk dispenser
- Cream dispenser
- Tea urn
- Coffee urn
- Electric juice dispenser
- Electric ice maker

KITCHEN EQUIPMENT

Classic French pots and pans: 1. Casserole russe; 2. Sauté pan (plat à sauter); 3. Frying pan (sauteuse); 4. Small casserole russe; 5. Round cocotte; 6. Oval copper cocotte for cooking chicken en cocotte; 7. Small copper cocotte for game; 8. Stew pan (marmite à ragoût); 9. Large stock pot (grande marmite); 10. Double saucepan (marmite) for steaming potatoes; 11. Braising pan (braisière) (Larousse)

Classic French pots and pans: 1. Copper fish kettle (poissonière); 2. Saucepans (casseroles) for bain-marie; 3. Braising pan (braisière) for fillet of beef; 4. Round stew pan (bassine or rondin à ragoût); 5. Copper pan (plaque d'office); 6. Pan for cooking ham (jambonnière); 7. Turbot kettle (turbotière); 8. Fish pan (plaque à poisson) (Larousse).

KITCHEN TEAM

Added to these utensils there are many machines for serving food, for disposing of rubbish and for washing dishes. Many hotels catering to a luxury clientele have charcoal broilers and rôtisserie spits rotating before open fires.

KITCHEN TEAM. BRIGADE DE CUISINE – In a hotel or restaurant this term applies to the staff of a kitchen.

In principle, a kitchen team of a relatively important establishment, a team which takes its orders from a chef, referred to as the gros bonnet ('big-hat') in professional jargon, consists of a chef saucier (sauce chef), who is considered to be the deputy head of the team; an entremettier, who has charge of the preparation of soups, vegetables and sweet courses; a rôtisseur who, in addition to various roasts, also prepares fried dishes and grills; and, finally, a garde-manger (larder chef), who has charge of all the supplies, raw and cooked, and prepares cold dishes such as galantines, terrines, pâtés, mousses, etc. He also prepares the jellies, sees to the cutting up of meat, fish, poultry, game, etc., and does all the cold hors-d'œuvre relevant to the kitchen service. Kitchen assistants, called commis, are attached to the chef of each section.

If the establishment is an important and busy one, some of these sections (each team service is called a section, or partie, in France), are doubled. Thus the sauce section might have a second service under a special chef – the fish chef. Entremets becomes a separate section, also with a chef at its head, usually the soup chef, called potagiste or potager. The rôtisserie (the section in charge of roasts) may be supplemented by a cook who would have charge of all grills and would, therefore, be called the grillardin.

In an establishment of still greater importance, the roasting section, in addition to the roast chef proper and the grillardin, would also have a friturier (fryer), a noun which probably does not exist in any dictionary but is accepted in culinary terminology and means exactly what it says.

Equally, the garde-manger, in addition to the actual head of this important section, might be supplemented by the inclusion of other chefs, each with his own speciality. One might have the charge of hors-d'œuvre, another of meat, etc. chef and an assistant chef, there are also special teams dealing with pastry. These would include a chef pâtissier and several assistants, a chef confiseur and a chef glacier.

The art of managing the kitchen team of a big restaurant or hotel is a difficult one. A chef in charge of a kitchen must not only be a man who knows his job – his art, we should say – inside out, but he must also have the qualities of an ideal administrator. The time is long past (if it ever existed at all) when kitchens in big establishments were run without some system of accounting. Today, more than ever, the kitchen of a restaurant or of a hotel must be well organised, everything must be foreseen and carried out in such a way that the dishes, whilst being excellent in quality, cost only what they should cost and no more. In a modern establishment the kitchen is a department which must never show a loss – always a profit.

At the end of the nineteenth century and at the beginning of the twentieth there were a great number of chefs de cuisine (famous gros bonnets), who had charge of kitchen teams: M. Prat, who for a long time had charge of the kitchens at the Grand-Hotel in Paris; Jean Giroix, who directed the kitchen at the Hotel de Paris in Monte Carlo; Léopold Mourier, who, after having directed the kitchen of the Maire restaurant (now no more) became the grand maître of various famous restaurants, such as the Café de Paris, Armenonville, the Pré-Catalan, Fouquet, etc.

The great Escoffier, who died in 1935, was first the chef of the Petit Moulin-Rouge, then took charge of the no less famous kitchens of the old Maire restaurant, then the Grand-Hotel at Monte Carlo and the Savoy in London. He finished his active career at the Carlton Hotel in London. Philéas Gilbert was the author of the best culinary works of our time. Other illustrious names include Tony Girod, Ninlias, Argentier, Prosper Drenault, Prosper Salles and Deland.

It is impossible for us to give the names of all the gros bonnets of the past who have improved the status of the culinary art. We can only mention chefs of the great private houses, such as Urbain Dubois, Émile Bernard, Armand Gouffé, Joseph Favre and Gastilleur, some of whom had charge of the imperial and royal kitchens.

KNEADING OF DOUGH. FRAISAGE – This operation consists of breaking up the dough once it has become elastic, by working it with the palm of the hand. The object of handling the dough in this way is to obtain a perfect mixture of all the ingredients.

Selection of cooks' knives: 1. Palette knife (Couteau à tartiner); 2. Carving knife (Couteau de cuisine); 3. Slicing knife; 4. Chopping knife (Couteau à abattre); 5. Filleting knife for fish (Couteau tranche lard); 6. Vegetable knife (Couteau d'office) (Coutellerie André. Phot. Larousse)

KNIFE. COUTEAU – A cutting instrument, with a handle and a blade.

Kitchen knives. COUTEAUX DE CUISINE – For the various culinary operations it is essential to have good tools, and in particular very good knives. Each has its proper use. In order of size they are: vegetable knife for peeling vegetables; knife with a large blade for cutting fish fillets; slicing knife with a fairly large blade for slicing raw or cooked meat perfectly; straight-bladed chopper, with which it is possible to break up bones of a certain size, and to hash meat in the same way as with a four-bladed chopper; carving knife, which is used for cutting bards of fat pork or bacon and which resembles the so-called 'English' knife used to carve large joints of beef and hams, but which, instead of having a rounded point, is sharply pointed.

There is also the knife for boning meat. It is used mostly in butchery but can be used in cooking.

Some special knives: 1. Boning knife (Couteau à saigner); 2. Fluted knife; 3. Potato peeler; 4. Cannelling knife; 5. Knife for scraping lemon zest; 6. can opener (Coutellerie André. Phot. Larousse)

Among the cutting tools which it is necessary to have in a well-ordered kitchen, are the following: a cleaver, which is a fairly large instrument with which a carcass can be cut in half; a chopper, to crack the hardest bones; a chopping knife, which is made with one, two or four blades; the whole series of small knives used for chopping, peeling and paring vegetables, especially potatoes, and for cutting potatoes into ribbons; knives for opening oysters; tin-openers.

Little tools, such as knives with a fluting device or one for scraping lemon zest, should be mentioned, as should little instruments for cutting ravioli; special knives for cutting grapefruit; scissors for jointing chicken (poultry shears –

Cisaille à volaille); the cutlet beater; the butcher's saw; and the scraper for the butcher's table.

Table knives should be of excellent quality, with good cutting blades in pure steel. Many table knives are made today in stainless steel. Their principal advantage is that they do not stain. For serving fruit, knives are made in silver plate. For fish, special knives are made of silver plate.

KNIFE-REST. PORTE-COUTEAU – Utensils of various shapes, in glass or silver, on which the knife is placed to prevent soiling the tablecloth.

NUCKLE. SOURIS – Small, fleshy muscle on the leg of mutton. It is much appreciated by connoisseurs.

KOHLRABI. CHOU-RAVE – This is not, properly speaking, a root, but a swelling of the stem above ground in the form of a plump, pithy ball. Some varieties have quite a delicate flavour. All the recipes given for turnips (q.v.) and for celeriac (q.v.) may be used for this vegetable.

Kohlrabi à la paysanne. CHOU-RAVE À LA PAYSANNE – Cut the kohlrabi into slices. Brown in lard in which some chopped onion has been softened. Add some fresh breast of pork and season with salt. Moisten with white wine and stock in equal proportions. Cook in the oven.

KOUMISS – Fermented mares' milk, originally made in Turkestan and Tartary, rather similar to kéfir. The ferment used is prepared by working 250 g. (8 oz.) barm (brewer's yeast) and 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) flour with a little honey and a glass of milk. Leave overnight. Next day add 3 litres (5½ pints, 6½ pints) milk to this leaven. It contains a great deal of carbonic acid gas and from 1.65 to 3.23 per cent alcohol.

KROMESKY – See CROMESQUI.

Kugelhopf with mould (Nicolas)

KUGELHOPF

KUGELHOPF or KOUGLOFF (Alsation pastry). KUGELHOF, KOUGLOF – It is said that Queen Marie Antoinette was very fond of this pastry, which contributed a great deal to the fashion in her day for sweets made with risen dough. These were no longer made with leaven, as they had been until the middle of the eighteenth century, but with brewer's yeast, which had been in use for a very long time in Austria and Poland.

Some authorities, however, believe that it was Carême who popularised this pastry in Paris, when he established himself as a pastry-cook. It is said that he was given the recipe by M. Eugène, at that time master chef to Prince Schwarzenberg, the Austrian ambassador.

Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter, 90 g. ( $3\frac{1}{2}$  oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fine sugar, 4 eggs, 25 g. (1 oz.) yeast – or 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) in summer, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) currants,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt.

Make the dough according to the instructions for Brioche dough (see DOUGH), but make it a little less firm.

Butter a large kugelhopf mould and line the sides with shredded almonds. Half-fill with dough. Leave the dough in a warm place, until it has risen above the sides of the mould.

Bake in a hot oven 40 to 45 minutes.

KULICH (Russian cookery). KOULICH – Cake of risen dough, made in Russia for the ceremonial Easter dinner. After it has been baked and cooled, it is decorated with a cluster of artificial roses.

KUMMEL – Russian liqueur extracted from caraway seeds (not, as wrongly supposed, from cumin seeds, a misapprehension that explains its name because cumin is Kümmel in German).

One type of Russian kummel has a deposit of crystals at the bottom of the bottle. This is sugar with which the liqueur is supersaturated under heat and which resumes its crystalline state upon cooling four or five days later. The same phenomenon also occasionally occurs in jam-making.

Kulich,

cake

Danzig liqueur is a well-known, potent type of kummel with a particularly large amount of crystallisation. It is an essential ingredient of Rothschild soufflé.

Kummel or Leidsche kaas is also the name of a Dutch cheese. (See CHEESE.)

KUMQUAT – Very small orange shaped like an elongated olive. This fruit, which is nowadays sold in certain food stores, is eaten raw, like oranges and tangerines.

It can be used in salads or marmalade.

KVASS. KWASS – Slightly gaseous, mildly alcoholic drink similar to beer. It is made in Russia by adding fermented yeast to a must of rye flour mixed with a little sprouted barley. It is sometimes flavoured with mint leaves or juniper berries.

LA BOUILLE – See CHEESE.

LABRUS. LABRE – European sea fish, also called wrasse. It is remarkable for its brilliant colouring, but is tasteless, and limp in texture. It is served fried, or may be used as an ingredient of bouillabaisse (q.v.).

LACHE – Small sea-fish, very delicate to eat, cooked in the same way as the smelt (q.v.). It is rather scarce.

LACRIMA-CHRISTI. LACRYMA-CHRISTI – Wine made from grapes grown on the slopes of Vesuvius. It is rather sweet and delicate.

LACTARY. LACTAIRE – Fungus of the agaric type. It contains a white or coloured milky juice. Some lactaries are poisonous, others are edible, though of rather poor flavour in spite of the fact that one type is called delicious.

LACTIC ACID. LACTIQUE – An acid present in sour milk and certain fermented substances. It is an antiseptic and is particularly effective in preventing putrefaction. A primitive method of preserving meat was to immerse it in sour milk.

LACTIC FERMENTS. LACTIQUES – These are microbes which are very widespread and of many kinds. When they are introduced into milk the lactose (milk sugar) molecules are split and lactic acid is produced. It is these microbes which breed on the teats of cows in cowsheds and in dairies. They cause the curdling of milk and are one of the agents in the production of cheese.

Sour milk is produced either by introducing indigenous ferments into the milk or by using ferments imported from the Balkans, Egypt and the Caucasus. These latter, being adapted to higher temperatures, produce a larger quantity of lactic acid. (See CHEESE, KÉFIR, KOUMISS, YOGURT.)

LACTOMETER. LACTOMÈTRE – A graduated densimeter which shows the density of milk, from which the cream content can be calculated.

LADIES' FINGERS. GOMBO, GOMBAUT – See OKRA.

LADLE. POCHÉ – Large spoon with cup bowl and a long handle, used mainly for serving liquid dishes.

LADY APPLE – Tiny variety of pale yellow apple, tinged with carmine. The white flesh is firm and crunchy; the flavour sweetish, but with a touch of bitterness.

LAGOPUS. LAGOPÈDE – The lagopus or Pyrenean partridge has tawny plumage with thin black streaks in summer. In winter it turns almost completely white, except for touches of black on the tail. It is sometimes called snow partridge because of its winter plumage.

This bird is much sought after for the table, in spite of its slightly bitter flavour which is due to the fact that it feeds on birch-shoots, myrtle berries and other mountain berries.

All recipes for grouse (q.v.), which belong to the same family as the lagopus, are suitable for this bird.

LAGUIPIÈRE – Laguipière, who was born in the middle of the eighteenth century and died in 1812, was one of the great masters of French cookery. Carême described him as 'the most remarkable chef of our times'. Carême's tutor in all branches of cookery was, in fact, Laguipière, who accompanied Murat to Naples and later followed him to Russia. He froze to death at Vilno (later Vilnius) during the 1812 retreat from Moscow.

At the beginning of his book, le Cuisinier parisien, Carême wrote the following words about his great master: 'Awake, shade of Laguipière! Listen to the voice of a pupil, a friend, a devotee! You should have died in Paris, surrounded by the reverence evoked in all of us by the memory of your great work . . . Laguipière, accept the pious homage of a faithful disciple. I couple my works with your name. I have cited you with pride in all my books, and, today, I invoke your memory and dedicate to you my finest work.'

It is regrettable that so learned a practitioner of the art of cooking as Laguipière should not have left any written record of his teachings for posterity.

LAITIAT – Name given in the Franche-Comté to a refreshing drink made by steeping wild fruit in whey.

LAMB. AGNEAU – Young ovine animal before it is a year old.

After the age of one year, when the animal has already grown its first two nippers (the incisor teeth of herbivorous animals), it is called a yearling. When the other permanent teeth appear, the animal becomes a ram or a ewe.

In the culinary sense lamb is known in two forms:

1. The milk-fed (or baby) lamb. This animal has not yet been weaned and has not yet been put out to graze. The best French lamb of this type is Pauillac lamb.

2. Ordinary lamb or salt meadow lamb. This is a young sheep which has not yet reached its full growth.

Good quality lamb can be recognised by the width of its loins, which should be well covered with flesh, and by the whiteness of its fat, which should be firm and abundant, especially round the kidneys. Its freshness can be judged from the firmness of its legs and the colour of the kidneys,

LAMB

Lamb: division of the live animal which should be pale pink. Baby or milk-fed lamb is generally sold whole, with its pluck. It is also sometimes sold in quarters.

Lamb should be eaten at its freshest. This meat does not keep for very long. Ordinary lamb and milk-fed lamb are sold in butchers' shops and, in France, in poultry shops. Ordinary lamb is divided into cuts like mutton.

The best parts are the legs, the saddle and the loins. The neck and breast are principally used for making blanquettes, fricassées, ragoûts and sauté dishes.

The legs are generally used for roasting. They are served as they are, plain or with a garnish of vegetables – baked, dressed with butter, or braised.

The shoulders, whether boned or not, are usually prepared in the same manner as legs.

Two legs are called a double. When the saddle, and sometimes a part of the loins, is left with the legs, then such a joint is called a baron. Half of this joint is known as a quarter.

The best way to prepare these various joints is to roast or pot-roast them. The loins can also be cooked whole (on the spit or in the oven) but they are usually divided into cutlets, which can be grilled or fried and served plain or with various garnishes. All lamb offal (variety meat) is delicate in flavour.

Lamb plays an important part both in classical French cookery and in home cookery.

Baby or milk-fed lamb is divided into the same cuts as ordinary lamb: baron, loin, double, shoulder, leg, quarter, saddle. All these cuts can be served with garnishes recommended for ordinary lamb and for mutton. Bearing in mind the particularly delicate flavour of this meat, however, it is advisable to serve it grilled, pot-roasted or as a roast, with its own juice – thickened or clear – as the only accompaniment. Other parts of milk-fed lamb are used for blanquettes, ragoûts and sauté dishes.

BABY or MILK-FED LAMB. AGNEAU DE LAIT –

Leg of baby or milk-fed lamb in pastry à la périgourdine. GIGOT D'AGNEAU EN PÂTE À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – A method of preparation for leg of baby or milk-fed lamb.

Trim the leg and remove most of the bone. Cook in a hot oven for 10 minutes to brown it. Allow to cool. Cover completely with sausage meat mixed with one-third of its weight of uncooked goose liver rubbed through a sieve, 2 diced truffles, 1 egg. Wrap the leg in a sheet of salt pork or a piece of pig's caul, previously soaked in cold water.

Put the leg on an oval-shaped sheet of rolled-out pastry. Cover with another sheet of pastry. Seal the edges by crimping them. Make a hole in the middle to allow steam to escape. Brush the top of the pastry with beaten egg, and put it on a baking sheet. Cook in a moderate oven for 1½ hours.

When removed from the oven, pour through the hole in the top 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ⅔ cup) Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE). Serve on a napkin-covered dish.

This kind of hot pie can also be made with a boned and rolled leg of ordinary lamb.

Loin of baby or milk-fed lamb à la Clamart. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU À LA CLAMART – Trim the loin of baby or milk-fed lamb and pot-roast it in butter. When cooked, add to the casserole 350 g. (12 oz., 2¼ cups) fresh garden peas prepared à la française (see PEAS). Leave to simmer for 5 minutes under a lid.

Loin of baby or milk-fed lamb La Varenne. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU LA VARENNE – Bone a trimmed loin of baby or milk-fed lamb. Beat it to flatten slightly, season with salt and pepper, dip in beaten egg and cover with breadcrumbs, pressing down well to make the crumbs adhere. Cook the loin in clarified butter until both sides are a golden colour.

Arrange on a dish on a foundation composed of a salpicon (q.v.) of cultivated Mushrooms cooked in cream (see MUSHROOMS). Sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Loin of baby or milk-fed lamb maharajah. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU MAHARADJAH – Trim a loin of milk-fed lamb and pot-roast in butter.

When half-cooked, add 75 g. (3 oz., ¾ cup) chopped onion lightly cooked in butter. Season with salt, 1 teaspoon curry powder and a clove of garlic. Cook with a lid on.

Serve garnished with Rice pilaf (see PILAF) and small tomatoes cooked in oil. Dilute the pan juices with 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ⅔ cup) white wine, add 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) fresh cream, simmer, and pour over the curry.

Loin of baby or milk-fed lamb Monselet. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU MONSELET – Trim a loin of baby or milk-fed lamb and cook under a grill. When nearly cooked, sprinkle with freshly grated breadcrumbs and put back under grill to turn golden.

Put on a foundation of Anna potatoes (see POTATOES). Garnish with quarters of small artichokes cooked in butter. Surround with a border of buttered Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Loin of baby or milk-fed lamb à la périgourdine. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU EN CRÉPINE À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Trim and bone a loin of milk-fed lamb and cook in butter until three-quarters done. Allow to cool.

Coat on both sides with finely minced pork forcemeat mixed with diced truffles. Wrap in a thin piece of pig's caul previously soaked in cold water. Make sure the fat covers the meat completely. Spread with melted butter, cover with white breadcrumbs, sprinkle with more butter and grill or broil on low heat. Put the loin on a dish, garnish with small potato balls cooked in butter. Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Fried loin of baby or milk-fed lamb à la viennoise. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU FRIT À LA VIENNOISE – Method of preparation suitable only for loin of milk-fed (or baby) lamb.

Divide the loin in half. Marinate for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and chopped parsley. Drain the pieces of lamb and dry; dredge in flour and dip in egg and breadcrumbs. Fry in clarified butter or deep-fry in sizzling fat. Garnish with fried parsley and quarters of lemon.

Quarter of lamb. QUARTIER D'AGNEAU – Joint comprising the leg and half the saddle. It is mainly taken from baby or milk-fed (Pauillac) lamb, and is usually roasted. All the garnishes recommended for baron or saddle of ordinary lamb are applicable to quarter of lamb.

Roast baby or milk-fed lamb. AGNEAU DE LAIT RÔTI – This method of preparation is suitable for small lambs. Dress the skin over the knuckles and shoulders. Truss the lamb to give it a regular shape. Put on a spit, season with salt and pepper, brush with melted butter and roast before a brisk fire, allowing 20 to 25 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.).

Take it off the spit, put on a long dish, and garnish with bunches of watercress and quarters of lemon. Dilute the pan juices with a little stock and serve with the lamb.

Roast lamb is generally served with mint sauce and garnished with various vegetables. Lamb can also be roasted in the oven.

Grilled shoulder of baby or milk-fed lamb. ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU DE LAIT GRILLÉE – Trim the shoulder, make a few slits on both sides, season, and brush with melted butter.

Grill under a moderate flame for 20 to 25 minutes. Sprinkle with white breadcrumbs, brush with melted butter, and put under the grill or broiler to colour.

Arrange on a long dish. Serve garnished with watercress.

Baby or milk-fed lamb stuffed with rice. AGNEAU DE LAIT FARCI AU RIZ – Stuff the lamb with half-cooked Rice pilaf (see PILAF), to which have been added the animal's liver, heart, sweetbreads and kidneys, cut into small slices, briskly fried in butter, and seasoned.

Sew up the opening, and truss the lamb. Cover the back with strips or rashers of bacon tied in place. Put on a spit and roast before a lively fire, allowing 20–25 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.).

Remove from the spit, take off the bacon and cut away trussing string. Put on a long dish, garnish with watercress and quarters of lemon. Serve with the pan juices, diluted with a few tablespoons of stock.

Roast baron of lamb

LAMB. AGNEAU –

Baron of lamb. BARON D'AGNEAU – The cut comprising the two legs and the saddle. This joint is roasted on a spit or pot-roasted, but may also be served as a roast in its own juice.

It is accompanied by a garnish of vegetables, either arranged around the joint or served separately, and with its own juice, left as it is or thickened, depending on the nature of the garnish.

For cooking time see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts.

Garnishes suitable for baron of lamb. Green vegetables dressed with butter or cream; braised vegetables; Anversoise; bouquetière; bretonne; Clamart; Dauphine; duchesse; jardinière; macédoine; parisienne; provençale; renaissance; Richelieu. (See GARNISHES.) Anna potatoes (see POTATOES) and potatoes prepared in various other ways would also be suitable.

Blanquette of lamb. BLANQUETTE D'AGNEAU – This method of preparation is often described as a fricassée.

Soak the pieces of lamb and dry well. Fry in butter without allowing to brown. Season. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour, blend over heat, add white stock and garnish as for Blanquette of lamb à l'ancienne (see below). Bring to the boil, simmer with the lid on from 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Transfer to another pan. Add small onions, mushrooms, and the sauce. Blend in egg yolks as described below.

Blanquette of lamb à l'ancienne. BLANQUETTE D'AGNEAU À L'ANCIENNE – This is made of shoulder and ribs of ordinary or salt meadow lamb. Cut 1½ kg. (4 lb.) lamb into uniform pieces. Soak for 1 hour in water, blanch, dip in cold water to cool, and dry.

Put into a shallow pan. Add enough white stock (or a light pot-au-feu broth – see SOUPS AND BROTHS) to just cover the meat. Add 2 medium-sized carrots cut in quarters, 2 medium-sized onions – one studded with a clove – and a bouquet garni consisting of a sprig of parsley, a stalk of celery, 2 leeks, a sprig of thyme and a bay leaf. Season with salt.

Bring to the boil, remove scum and simmer with the lid on the pan 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Take out the pieces of lamb and remove small pieces of bone and skin which have become detached during cooking. Put the lamb into a shallow pan with 12 small onions previously cooked in a court-bouillon (q.v.), and the same number of cooked mushrooms.

Make a roux (q.v.) of 60 g. (2½ oz., 5 tablespoons) butter and 75 g. (3 oz., ¼ cup) flour. Add the strained stock in which the lamb was cooked, simmer for 15 minutes, skim, strain, and pour over the lamb.

Simmer gently for 20 to 25 minutes. Blend in 4 egg yolks mixed with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) cream, a dash of lemon juice and a pinch of grated nutmeg. Keep the blanquette hot but do not allow to boil.

Alternatively, cook the lamb in stock, and put it into a shallow pan with onions cooked in court-bouillon, and the mushrooms. Keep hot with the pan covered. Prepare Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) with the stock in which the lamb was cooked. Blend with egg yolks, cream and lemon juice, to the desired consistency, strain through a tammy cloth, and pour over the lamb.

Lamb's brains – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Lamb's breast. POITRINE D'AGNEAU – This is generally used for making ragoûts or sauté dishes. It can also be made into épigrammes (q.v.) and is used instead of beef to prepare country soups (see SOUPS AND BROTHS, Mutton broth).

Lamb's breast à l'anglaise. POITRINE D'AGNEAU À L'ANGLAISE – Cook the breast as in the recipe for Lamb's breast à la diable (see below) and leave to get cold under a press. Cut into rectangular pieces, dip in beaten egg and breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter. Arrange on a long dish, dot with dabs of half-melted Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Lamb's breast fried in batter. POITRINE D'AGNEAU EN FRITOT – Braise, bone, cool under a press and cut the breast of lamb into small, square pieces. Steep for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

Dip the pieces in light batter and deep-fry. Drain, dry, season with finely ground salt. Arrange on a napkin in a pyramid, garnish with fried parsley, and serve with tomato sauce.

Lamb's breast in breadcrumbs with various garnishes. POITRINE D'AGNEAU PANÉE – Cook pieces of breast, dipped in egg and breadcrumbs, in clarified butter as described in the recipe for Lamb's breast à l'anglaise.

Arrange in a crown on a dish. Fill the middle of the dish with the garnish indicated. Surround with a border of thickened veal stock.

Garnishes suitable for breast in breadcrumbs. Green vegetables blended with butter or cream; purées of various vegetables; spinach, leaf or purée; rice pilaf or risotto; various pasta products with butter or à l'italienne, new potatoes in butter; carrots, glazed, or à la Vichy.

Lamb's breast à la diable. POITRINE D'AGNEAU À LA DIABLE – Braise the breast or cook it in a little white stock. Drain, and remove all the rib bones. Leave to cool under a press. Cut into rectangular pieces, spread these with mustard and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Dip in melted butter and breadcrumbs. Sprinkle with butter and cook on a low grill.

Arrange in a circle on a dish, and garnish with watercress. Serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Épigrammes of lamb's breast. POITRINE D'AGNEAU EN ÉPIGRAMMES – Braise a lamb's breast or poach it in very little white stock. Drain, bone, and cool under a press.

Cut into heart-shaped pieces of uniform size. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs.

At the same time dip in egg and breadcrumbs a number of lamb chops, similar in shape and size to the pieces of breast. Cook the chops and the pieces of breast under a low grill or sauté them both in butter.

Arrange in a crown on a long dish. Decorate the end bones with paper frills. Put the recommended garnish in the middle of the dish. Pour a few tablespoons of Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) on the épigrammes, or the stock left over from braising the breast, boiled down and strained.

Garnishes suitable for épigrammes of lamb. All those recommended elsewhere for lamb chops or noisettes.

Stuffed breast of lamb. POITRINE D'AGNEAU FARCIE – Slit the pieces of breast to form pockets. Fill them with fine forcemeat bound with an egg. Sew up the opening. Wrap the pieces in thin rashers of bacon. Braise them in a small quantity of liquid.

Drain the pieces. Unwrap and glaze. Arrange on a dish and garnish as indicated. Sprinkle with the strained pan juices.

Stuffed breast of lamb can be served with all the garnishes recommended for pieces of braised lamb or mutton.

Lamb chops. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU – Rib lamb chops are cut from the rib roast. In France they are called côtelettes and in England they are called cutlets.

Loin lamb chops are cut from the loin and are known in French as côtes. In England they are known as lamb chops.

Chops are most often grilled, but all preparations recommended in the following recipes are suitable for rib chops (cutlets) or lamb chops cut from the loin. They can be served with any of the garnishes recommended for Mutton cutlets (see MUTTON). Most frequently these garnishes consist of a green vegetable, such as beans, peas, asparagus tips, etc. dressed with butter.

Lamb chops à l'ancienne. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À L'ANCIENNE – Fry the chops in butter. Arrange in a crown on a dish. Garnish the middle with a ragoût of lambs' sweetbreads, cocks' combs and kidneys, truffles and mushrooms, bound with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and cream. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira, sherry or other similar wine, add a little light Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) and pour over the chops. Garnish the bones with paper frills.

Lamb chops à l'anglaise. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À L'ANGLAISE – These are prepared in two ways:

Grilled. Season the chops, dip in melted butter and breadcrumbs and grill or broil.

Arrange on a dish. Garnish with grilled strips or rashers of bacon, boiled potatoes and watercress.

Sautéed. Dip in beaten egg and breadcrumbs and sauté in clarified butter. Arrange in a crown on a dish and sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Lamb chops in aspic jelly. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA GELÉE – Braise a large lamb loin, neatly trimmed, in very little court-bouillon (q.v.). Allow to cool in its own strained juices.

Drain and cut into chops. Dry them and glaze with jelly. (The pan juices left over from braising the cutlets should be added to the jelly before its clarification.) Arrange the chops in a turban on a dish. Garnish with chopped jelly, hard-boiled eggs cut into quarters, lettuce hearts, or with mixed salads. Serve with Mayonnaise or Tartare sauce or, as is customary in England, with Mint sauce (see SAUCE, Cold sauces).

Instead of cooking the loin whole and then cutting it, the chops can be prepared as described in the recipe for Chaud-froid of lamb chops (see below).

Bar-man lamb chops. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU BAR-MAN – Grill the chops. Garnish with whole, grilled tomatoes and mushrooms. Put a rasher of grilled bacon on each cutlet, and garnish with watercress.

Lamb chops in breadcrumbs, garnished. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU PANÉES GARNIES – Dip the chops in egg and breadcrumbs if they are to be fried, and in butter and breadcrumbs if they are to be grilled.

Fry in clarified butter, or cook under the grill on low heat. Surround with the recommended garnish.

All the garnishes for fried lamb chops are applicable to lamb chops in breadcrumbs.

Lamb chops Brossard. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU BROSSARD – Dip the chops in beaten egg and breadcrumbs mixed with chopped truffles. Sauté in butter. Arrange in a crown on a dish. Garnish the middle of the dish with mushrooms cooked in cream. Put a border of Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) round the chops.

Lamb chops Champvallonn. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU CHAMPVALLON – Choose lower ribs from salt meadow lamb, cut fairly thick. Proceed as with Mutton chops Champvallonn (see MUTTON).

Chaud-froid of lamb chops

Chaud-froid of lamb chops. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU EN CHAUD-FROID – Braise thick chops in very little liquid. Leave to get cold under a press in the stock in which they were braised, strained and with surplus fat removed.

When they are quite cold, drain, trim, and cover with Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) using the pan juices in which the cutlets were cooked.

Decorate with pieces of hard-boiled egg whites, truffles, pickled tongue, etc. Glaze with liquid jelly and leave in a cold place to set.

Lay the chops in a circle on a dish. Garnish with chopped jelly. Serve with mint sauce. Chaud-froid of lamb chops can be served with a vegetable salad or mixed salad.

Lamb chops Conti. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU CONTI – Coat the chops on both sides with a mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables finely chopped and cooked in butter. Dip in breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter. Arrange in a crown on a dish, alternating with slices of ham cut in triangles and fried in butter. Garnish the centre of the dish with a fairly thick Lentil purée (see PURÉE). Surround with a border of Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb chops in crépinettes. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU EN CRÉPINETTES – Prepare as Mutton chops in crépinettes (see MUTTON), or, instead of braising them, fry them in butter before wrapping them in pieces of thin salt pork or pig's caul.

Lamb chops Dubarry. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU DUBARRY – Grill or fry the chops and garnish with cauliflower divided into florets and covered with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkled with Parmesan cheese. Brown in the oven or under a grill.

Lamb chops à la financière. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA FINANCIÈRE – Fry the chops. Add Madeira to the pan and finish off the sauce with Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE).

Arrange the chops in a circle in a puff pastry shell (not too raised) and garnish the middle with a Ragoût à la financière (see RAGOÛT).

If there is no time to make a pastry shell, the chops can be arranged in a crown, putting each on a heart-shaped croûton fried in butter.

Lamb chops à la française. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA FRANÇAISE – Fry 12 cutlets, put them under a press; when they are cold, coat with chicken quenelle forcemeat.

Put them on a metal sheet greased with clarified butter and glaze with egg. Cook in the oven, painting them with melted butter from time to time, until nicely golden.

Prepare a croûstade (q.v.) from a piece of bread about 10 cm. (4 inches) in diameter, scooped out in the middle and fried in deep fat. Put this croûstade in the middle of an entrée dish, place the cutlets around it and fill the middle with fried lambs' sweetbreads and truffles. Glaze and serve.' (La Grande Cuisine simplifiée, by Robert, 1845.)

Lamb chops with garnish. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU SAUTÉES GARNIES – Season the chops and sauté them in butter. Arrange them in a crown on a dish. Garnish with vegetables or any other garnish recommended below. Dilute the pan juices with white wine, add Demi-glaze sauce (see SAUCE) or veal stock, boil down, strain, and pour over the chops.

Grilled lamb chops served with rice

Garnishes suitable for lamb chops. Green vegetables dressed with butter or cream; various braised vegetables; potatoes prepared in various ways; purées of fresh or dried vegetables; pasta products; rice; risotto; and the garnishes, simple or mixed, recommended for small fillet steaks, tournedos, escalopes of veal, noisettes and médallions of mutton or lamb.

Grilled lamb chops garnished with various vegetables. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU GRILLÉES GARNIES DE LÉGUMES – Season the cutlets, brush with melted butter or oil, and cook under a moderate flame. Garnish with vegetables. Put paper frills on end bones.

Grilled chops can be garnished with various green vegetables, dressed with butter or cream (asparagus tips, French beans, kidney beans, young broad beans, garden peas, etc.); potatoes prepared in different ways; braised vegetables (celery, lettuce, endive, etc.); purées of fresh vegetables; small marrows (zucchini) or aubergines cut in dice and sautéed in butter or oil; tomatoes lightly sautéed in butter or oil; Brussels sprouts or cauliflower sautéed in butter; cucumbers cut into uniform pieces and cooked in butter; artichoke hearts fried lightly in butter, etc.

Lamb chops à l'italienne. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À L'ITALIENNE – See MUTTON, Mutton chops à l'italienne.

Lamb chops Maintenon. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU MAINTENON – See MUTTON, Mutton chops Maintenon.

Lamb chops à la maréchale. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA MARÉCHALE – Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter.

Arrange the chops in a crown, and put on each a sliver of truffle heated in butter. Garnish with asparagus tips dressed with butter. Put a border of Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with Madeira and butter around the chops.

Lamb chops à la mexicaine. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA MEXICAINE – Fry the chops in butter. Arrange in a crown on a dish and garnish the middle with bananas cut in slices, dipped in batter and fried.

Add to the pan juices (for 6 chops) 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) wine vinegar. Pour in 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) brown veal stock. Simmer to thicken. Add to it the peel of 1 orange, blanched, rinsed in cold water, well drained, and finely shredded. Pour over the chops.

Minute lamb chops. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA MINUTE – Beat the chops flat and season. Sauté as briskly as possible in sizzling butter.

Arrange in a crown. Pour over the chops the butter left in the pan, with a dash of lemon juice and some chopped parsley added to it.

Lamb chops Montrouge. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU MONTROUGE – Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter. Arrange in a crown on a dish. Garnish the middle with fairly thick Mushroom purée (see PURÉE). Put a border of buttered Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) around the chops.

Lamb chops Paul Mounet. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU PAUL MOUNET – Fry 6 chops in goose fat. Arrange them in a crown, alternating with rows of fried heart-shaped croûtons.

Put into the pan 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Bayonne ham which has been blanched, drained, dried, and finely shredded. When the ham is lightly browned add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) shredded cèpes or mushroom caps, and sauté lightly. Add 2 cloves of garlic, also finely chopped. Dilute with 1 tablespoon wine vinegar, add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) tomato-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Cook for 5 minutes. Pour over the chops.

Lamb chops en papillotes. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU EN PAPILLOTES – Prepare as described in the recipe for Veal chops en papillote (see VEAL).

Lamb chops, instead of being fried, can be braised, allowed to get cold in the juices and then put into buttered papers.

The juices left over from braising will be used for moistening the duxelles (q.v.).

Lamb chops à la parisienne. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA PARISIENNE – Dip the chops in beaten egg, then in breadcrumbs mixed with chopped truffles. Cook in clarified butter. Arrange in a crown in a dish. Garnish the middle of the dish with mushrooms cooked in cream. Put a border of asparagus tips dressed with butter round the chops.

Lamb chops Périnette. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU PÉRINETTE – Dip the chops in egg and breadcrumbs mixed with finely chopped cooked ham. Fry them in clarified butter.

Arrange in a crown alternating with rows of baby marrows (zucchini) cut in long slices and fried in oil. Garnish the middle of the dish with a Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) mixed with sweet pimientos, cut in large dice and fried in oil.

Lamb chops à la portugaise. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA PORTUGAISE – Fry the lamb chops in butter. Garnish with very small, stuffed tomatoes, cooked in the oven or under a grill. Dilute the pan juices with white wine, add a little tomato purée with a finely chopped or pounded clove of garlic blended in, and pour this sauce over the chops.

Lamb chops princesse. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU PRINCESSE – This name describes the following two methods of preparation:

1. Dip the chops in egg and breadcrumbs, fry them in clarified butter, arrange in a circle on a dish. Garnish with little bunches of asparagus tips dressed with butter and coarsely shredded truffles. Serve with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated mushroom stock.

2. Cook the chops in butter. Arrange in a circle. Cover with Allemande sauce based on concentrated mushroom stock. Put a sliver of truffle on each chop and garnish the middle of the dish with asparagus tips dressed with butter. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira and thickened brown stock. Pour this over the chops.

Lamb chops à la romaine. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA ROMAINE – Fry the chops in butter. Arrange in a crown on a dish, alternating with rows of heart-shaped croûtons of bread fried in butter. Garnish the middle of the dish with small potato balls, cooked in butter and tossed in concentrated meat stock. Pour over the chops Romaine sauce (see SAUCE) to which the pan juices, diluted with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) wine vinegar, have been added.

Lamb chops Rossini. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU ROSSINI – Fry the chops in butter, and arrange on a dish. Put on each a slice of foie gras fried in butter and 2 or 3 slivers of truffle tossed in butter. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira (or any similar wine), add some Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), boil down, strain and pour over the chops.

Lamb chops à la rouennaise. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA ROUENNAISE – Fry the chops in butter. When half cooked, add to the pan 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion lightly cooked in butter, and 1 teaspoon chopped shallots. Drain the chops. Arrange in a crown on a dish, alternating with rows of heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter. Pour over the following sauce:

Dilute the pan juices with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for 5 minutes, remove from the heat and stir in 3 uncooked chicken livers rubbed through a fine sieve, blended with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Calvados. Heat without allowing to boil. Put the sauce through a strainer. Heat gently and blend in 2 teaspoons butter.

Lamb chops à la sarladaise. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA SARLADAISE – Grill the chops or fry them in butter. Arrange in a ring on a layer of Potatoes à la sarladaise (see POTATOES). Pour around the potatoes several tablespoons of Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb chops soubise. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU SOUBISE – Grill or fry the chops. Arrange in a crown. Garnish with a fairly thick Onion soubise (see PURÉE).

Lamb chops Talleyrand. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU TALLEYRAND – Sauté the chops in butter. Arrange in a crown. Garnish the middle of the dish with a fairly thick Onion soubise (see PURÉE). Pour over the chops the following sauce:

In the butter left over in the pan, lightly fry diced mushrooms and diced truffles. Dilute with sherry and add thick fresh cream. Simmer for a few moments and pour over the chops.

Lamb chops à la Toulouse. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA TOULOUSE – Braise the chops and glaze in the oven. Boil down the stock until thick and add to it 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Madeira.

Arrange the chops in a slightly raised puff pastry shell (or in a circle on croûtons fried in butter) and garnish them, in the centre, with Ragoût à la toulousaine (see RAGOÛT). Sprinkle the chops with the pan juices. Put paper frills on end bones.

Lamb chops à la turque. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU À LA TURQUE – Fry the chops in butter. Arrange in a circle on a dish. Garnish the middle of the dish with Rice pilaf à la turque (see PILAF). Dilute the pan juices with stock and Tomato sauce (see SAUCE), add a pounded clove of garlic and pour over the chops.

Lamb chops Villeroi. CÔTELETTES D'AGNEAU VILLEROI – See MUTTON, Mutton chops à la Villeroi.

Crêpinettes of lamb. CRÉPINETTES D'AGNEAU – Prepare like Crêpinettes of pork (see PORK) using lamb salpicon (q.v.).

Crêpinettes of lamb à la périgourdine. CRÉPINETTES D'AGNEAU À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Flatten and trim 6 lamb cutlets, season with salt and pepper, and braise. Allow to cool in the pan juices.

Prepare 200 g. (7 oz.) finely pounded Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), add to it 100 g. (4 oz.) foie gras, and 2 diced truffles. Mix well.

Drain the chops and dry them off. Coat on both sides with a layer of the above forcemeat. Wrap each cutlet in a thin piece of pig's caul or salt pork, making sure that it is entirely closed.

Brush the crêpinettes with melted butter, coat with breadcrumbs, and cook under a low flame.

Lamb curry. CARI D'AGNEAU – Follow directions for Curried mutton (see MUTTON), reducing the cooking time slightly to allow for the tenderness of the meat.

Double of lamb. DOUBLE D'AGNEAU – This is a joint comprising the two legs of the animal. You can either roast or pot-roast it. Garnish with vegetables and serve with its own gravy, clear or thickened, depending on vegetable chosen.

Cook for 18 to 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 18 minutes at 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6).

All the garnishes recommended for the baron are suitable for a double of lamb.

Filets mignons of lamb. FILETS MIGNONS D'AGNEAU – Small pieces of lean meat found on the bone of the saddle. In general, these small filets are left with the big filets of the saddle when the saddle is boned, but they can also be prepared separately. (See MUTTON, Filets mignons of mutton.)

Filets of lamb (U.S. loin of lamb). FILETS D'AGNEAU – Half of the saddle, boned, rolled and secured with string. It can be roasted, pot-roasted or braised.

All methods of preparation given for loin or shoulder of lamb are applicable.

Fricassée of lamb. FRICASSÉE D'AGNEAU – This is the same as the second recipe for Blanquette of lamb above.

Lamb's head à l'écoissaise. TÊTE D'AGNEAU À L'ÉCOISSAISE – Singe and carefully clean the lamb's head. Cut in two lengthwise. Leave to soak thoroughly in cold water.

Remove the brains, which are cooked separately in court-bouillon (q.v.).

Cook the 2 halves of the head in water with carrots, onions and celery as a pot-au-feu (q.v.). (Cooking time about 2 hours.) Drain the head, put it in an ovenproof dish, brush with melted butter and put in a very hot oven.

Serve with a white sauce to which 1 tablespoon chopped and blanched sage and the diced brains have been added.

Stuffed lamb's head à l'anglaise. TÊTE D'AGNEAU FARCIE À L'ANGLAISE – Scald the lamb's head and remove all bones. Fill it with a stuffing à l'anglaise, made of chopped suet and breadcrumbs, well seasoned and mixed with forcemeat made from minced lamb's liver and bacon.

Wrap the lamb's head in a napkin and secure both ends with string.

Brown chopped bacon rinds, carrots and onions in butter in a braising pan. Put in the head. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and a clove. Braise for 30 minutes.

Serve with Pascaline sauce prepared as follows:

Toss 1 chopped onion in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter, and moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine. Boil down and add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) white sauce. Bring to the boil, bind with 2 egg yolks and add 1 tablespoon chopped, blanched parsley, a dash of lemon juice and a pinch of cayenne pepper.

Lamb's kidney – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Leg of lamb. GIGOT D'AGNEAU – The best way to prepare leg of lamb is to roast, pot-roast or braise it. This joint, when it is big, can also be boiled, according to the English method.

Roast, pot-roast or boiled leg of lamb can be served with all the garnishes recommended for leg, baron, double or shoulder of mutton.

For cooking time see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts.

The leg of baby or milk-fed lamb is either roasted or pot-roasted.

Roast leg of lamb is served garnished with watercress and quarters of lemon and accompanied by its own gravy. It can also be served, as is customary in England, with Mint sauce (see SAUCE, Cold sauces).

Leg of lamb à l'anglaise. GIGOT D'AGNEAU À L'ANGLAISE – Season a leg of lamb, trim and bone it almost completely. Wrap it in a napkin, lightly buttered and sprinkled with flour. Secure with string.

Put it into lightly salted boiling water with 2 quartered carrots, 2 medium-sized onions, one stuck with a clove, and a bouquet garni consisting of a sprig of parsley, thyme, a bay leaf and a clove of garlic.

Cook the leg, simmering gently, allowing 15 to 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.). Drain, unwrap it, and arrange on a long dish. Put vegetables around it. Serve with Butter sauce II (see SAUCE), to which has been added 2 teaspoons capers and the strained stock.

Leg of lamb boiled à l'anglaise can be served with purée of turnips or celery which has been cooked with the leg, mashed potatoes, or purée of white beans.

Leg of lamb à la bonne femme. GIGOT D'AGNEAU À LA BONNE FEMME – Using a leg of lamb, prepare as described in the recipe for Leg of mutton à la bonne femme (see MUTTON).

Leg of lamb à la bordelaise. GIGOT D'AGNEAU À LA BORDELAISE – Cook a leg of lamb in a mixture of butter and oil in a casserole. When one-third done, add 600 g. ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) tiny potato balls and 250 g. (9 oz.) fresh cèpes or button mushrooms, lightly tossed in oil. Season. Cook in a slow oven. When the leg and garnish are cooked, sprinkle with Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) in which 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) breadcrumbs with 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and garlic have been fried.

Leg of lamb à la boulangère. GIGOT D'AGNEAU À LA BOULANGÈRE – Prepare like Shoulder of mutton à la boulangère (see MUTTON).

Braised leg of lamb with various garnishes. GIGOT D'AGNEAU BRAISÉ – Prepare like Braised shoulder of lamb (see below), and serve with the usual garnishes suitable for braised, pot-roasted or roast mutton or lamb.

Leg of lamb en chevreuil. GIGOT D'AGNEAU EN CHEVREUIL – Prepare, using a leg of lamb, as described in the recipe for Leg of mutton en chevreuil (see MUTTON).

Parslief leg of lamb. GIGOT D'AGNEAU PERSILLÉ – Leg of ordinary or milk-fed lamb, cooked in the oven or on a spit. When cooked, coat it with fresh breadcrumbs mixed with chopped parsley. Press well to make this mixture adhere evenly all over the joint and put the leg back in the oven until the surface turns golden. Arrange on a long dish, garnish with watercress and lemons cut in half. Serve with its own gravy.

In the south-east of France chopped garlic is added to the parsley and breadcrumbs mixture.

Pot-roasted leg of lamb with various garnishes. GIGOT D'AGNEAU POÊLÉ – Leg of lamb trimmed and pot-roasted in a casserole in butter or other fat, but without adding any liquid.

When the leg is cooked, put it on a long dish and surround it with the garnish desired (all garnishes recommended for baron, double, or loin of lamb). Pour over it the pan juices mixed with white wine and thickened brown stock.

Roast leg of lamb. GIGOT D'AGNEAU RÔTI – Trim the leg at the knuckle end, loosen the flesh around the knuckle and remove most of the bone. Tie this part of the leg with string. Cook on a spit or in the oven. For cooking times see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts.

Arrange the leg on a long dish and garnish with a bunch of watercress. Serve with the diluted pan juices (keeping a little fat in them), halves of lemons, and Mint sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb's liver. FOIE D'AGNEAU – This is generally used with the rest of the lamb's pluck to prepare a special dish called fressure.

All recipes for calf's liver can also be used for lamb's liver (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS).

Loin of lamb. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU – Loin of lamb is often roasted. All garnishes recommended for baron or double of lamb are applicable to this cut. They are served with their own juices, clear or thickened, depending on the nature of the garnish. They are also served with Mint sauce (see SAUCE).

Cook for 15 to 20 minutes per 500 g. (1 lb.) plus 15 minutes at 200°C. (400°F., Gas Mark 6).

Baby or milk-fed lamb loins, which are not very big, are usually pot-roasted in butter or grilled.

Loin of lamb (U.S.) – See Fillet of lamb.

Loin of lamb à la Beuharnais. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU À LA BEAUHARNAIS – Trim the loin, season, brush with melted butter and grill or broil under a gentle heat. When it is nearly cooked, sprinkle with white breadcrumbs and finish cooking under the grill or broiler to brown the surface.

Parslief leg of lamb (Robert Carrier)

Put the meat on a long dish, garnish at each end with Noisette potatoes (see POTATOES) and with little artichoke hearts boiled in court-bouillon (q.v.), sautéed in butter, and filled with Beauharnais sauce (Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) finished off with a purée of tarragon). Surround the loin with a border of buttered Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Loin of lamb à la bonne femme. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU À LA BONNE FEMME – Trim the loin and brown in butter in a cocotte (earthenware fireproof casserole). Add 12 lightly fried bacon rashers and 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) tiny potato balls. Season, sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter, cook in a slow oven, and serve in the cocotte.

Loin of lamb à la bordelaise. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU À LA BORDELAISE – Pare and trim the loin and brown it lightly in a mixture of butter and oil in equal proportions in a cocotte (q.v.). Add cèpes fried in oil, and potatoes cut down to look like small olives. Season, and cook in a slow oven. Add several tablespoons of brown stock mixed with tomato purée and flavoured with a crushed clove of garlic. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. Serve in the cocotte.

Loin of lamb à la boulangère. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU À LA BOULANGÈRE – Trim the loin. Prepare in an earthenware dish as Shoulder of lamb à la boulangère (see below).

Loin of lamb in a cocotte à la maraîchère. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU EN COCOTTE À LA MARAÎCHÈRE – Trim the loin and brown it in butter in an earthenware dish. Put into the cocotte 24 small potatoes tossed in butter, 150 g. (5 oz.) salsify cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.) and tossed in butter, and 24 Brussels sprouts lightly blanched and tossed in butter.

Finish cooking everything together. Add 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) thickened brown stock. Serve in the cocotte.

Grilled loin of lamb. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU GRILLÉ – Trim the loin. Make a few surface incisions in the skin, season, brush with melted butter and grill (or broil) under a low flame until both sides are golden.

Arrange on a long dish, garnish with watercress and serve with half-melted Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Loin of lamb à la languedocienne. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Trim the lamb and brown it lightly in butter (or goose fat) in an earthenware dish. Add 2 small onions tossed in butter with 12 small pieces of smoked ham, 6 blanched garlic cloves and 200 g. (7 oz.) small white cèpes or button mushrooms fried in oil. Season. Cook in a slow oven, basting frequently. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve in the dish in which it was cooked.

Loin of lamb à la niçoise. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU À LA NIÇOISE – Trim a loin of lamb and brown in butter in an earthenware cocotte (q.v.). Add zucchini (or a baby marrow) peeled, diced, and tossed in butter; a large peeled, seeded tomato cut into pieces and fried in oil; and about 20 small new potatoes, cut to a uniform size. Season with salt and pepper. Cook in a slow oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. Serve in the cocotte.

Loin of lamb with noodles. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU AUX NOUILLES – Trim the loin of lamb and cook it in butter in a cocotte (q.v.). When nearly cooked, remove it from the cocotte. Add noodles, freshly boiled in salted water, drained, and tossed in Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), to the cocotte. Put the loin back. Finish cooking together in the oven. Sprinkle with a few tablespoons of thickened brown stock.

Loin of lamb Parmentier. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU PARMENTIER – Brown a trimmed loin of lamb in butter. Put in a pan 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) diced potatoes. Season and sprinkle with melted butter. Finish cooking together in a slow oven. Place on a dish. Dilute the pan juices with white wine, add thickened veal stock, and pour over the loin. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Pot-roasted loin of lamb with various garnishes. CARRÉ D'AGNEAU POÛLÉ – Trim a loin of lamb and pot-roast in butter. When half cooked, add the vegetables chosen as garnish and finish cooking together.

Arrange the loin in a dish and surround with garnish. Dilute the pan juices with white wine, blend in thickened brown stock, and pour over the meat.

The pot-roasted loin may be cooked separately, and garnished with one or other of the garnishes recommended for baron or double of lamb.

The following garnishes can be added to the loin during cooking: artichokes (hearts or quarters), diced aubergines previously tossed in butter or oil, new carrots half-cooked in butter and water, cèpes fried in oil or butter, various types of mushrooms, Brussels sprouts, marrows cut in large dice, half-braised Chinese artichokes, half-cooked turnips, glazed small onions, diced or shredded potatoes, salsify cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.), drained and tossed in butter.

Pot-roasted loin of lamb can also be garnished with the following: pasta prepared in various ways, purées of fresh or dried vegetables, rice pilaf or risotto, fondue of tomatoes, soubise, etc.

Medallions of lamb. MÉDAILLONS D'AGNEAU – Another name for Lamb noisettes (see below).

Mignonnettes of lamb. MIGNONNETTES D'AGNEAU – Name often used for Lamb noisettes (see below).

Minced lamb. HACHIS D'AGNEAU – Prepare as Beef hash (see HASH).

Lamb moussaka. MOUSSAKA D'AGNEAU – Prepared with minced lamb and aubergines like Mutton moussaka (see MUTTON).

Lamb noisettes. NOISSETTES D'AGNEAU – Delicate pieces of meat taken from the rib or loin of lamb. They are trimmed into round, rather thick filets. Their weight varies between 75 and 100 g. (3 and 4 oz.).

Sautéed noisettes of lamb. NOISSETTES D'AGNEAU SAUTÉES – Trim the noisettes and flatten them lightly. Season and sauté briskly in clarified butter, oil, or a mixture of butter and oil. Garnish.

Sautéed noisettes are sometimes served on croûtons fried in butter or on various garnishes as foundations.

Garnishes and sauces for them will be found in the recipes which follow. In addition to these recipes, all those given elsewhere for tournedos or médallions of beef, as well as those indicated for lamb or mutton cutlets, can be applied to noisettes.

The stocks and gravies most commonly used in cooking are based on veal, chicken or beef. Stock can also be made of lamb and mutton trimmings and bones.

Lamb noisettes à l'algérienne. NOISSETTES D'AGNEAU À L'ALGÉRIENNE – Proceed as described in the recipe given for Tournedos à l'algérienne (see BEEF).

Lamb noisettes Armenonville. NOISSETTES D'AGNEAU ARMENONVILLE – Sauté the noisettes in butter, arrange on a foundation of Anna potatoes (see POTATOES), garnish with morels in cream and cocks' combs and kidneys. Serve with a sauce made of the pan juices, mixed with white wine and thickened veal stock.

Lamb noisettes Béatrix. NOISSETTES D'AGNEAU BÉATRIX – Sauté the noisettes in butter and place on fried croûtons. Garnish with morels or other mushrooms fried in butter, very small quarters of artichokes cooked in butter, small glazed carrots and new potatoes in butter. Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices mixed with sherry and thickened veal stock.

Lamb noisettes Beauharnais. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU BEAUHARNAIS – Sauté the noisettes in butter. Place on fried croûtons. Garnish with very small artichoke hearts filled with thick Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) with a purée of tarragon added to it, and tiny potato balls. Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices mixed with Madeira and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) with chopped truffles added to it.

Lamb noisettes Carignan. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU CARIGNAN – Sauté the noisettes in butter and place on a foundation of Anna potatoes (see POTATOES).

Garnish with very small quarters of artichokes cooked in butter, and asparagus tips dressed with butter. Put between the noisettes very small 'eggs' made of Duchess potato mixture (see POTATO), dipped in egg and breadcrumbs, fried, hollowed out and filled with a purée of foie gras with truffles. Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices mixed with port and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb noisettes chasseur. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU CHASSEUR – Sauté the noisettes in a mixture of butter and oil. Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices mixed with Chasseur sauce (see SAUCE).

Alternatively one can remove the noisettes as soon as they are cooked and put into the same pan (for 8 noisettes) 125 g. (4 oz., 2 cups) chopped mushrooms and 1 teaspoon chopped shallots. Dilute with white wine and moisten with veal stock and a little Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb noisettes Cussy. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU CUSSY – Sauté the noisettes in butter and arrange on fried croûtons. Garnish with little artichoke hearts filled with mushroom purée and sprinkled with breadcrumbs. Serve with a sauce made from the juices mixed with Madeira and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb noisettes Duroc. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU DUROC – Proceed as for Lamb noisettes chasseur. Garnish with very small potato balls fried in butter. Sprinkle with chopped tarragon.

Lamb noisettes à l'italienne. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU À L'ITALIENNE – Sauté the noisettes in oil. Arrange on fried croûtons and put on each noisette a small slice of lean ham fried in oil. Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices mixed with Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb noisettes Melba. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU MELBA – Sauté the noisettes in butter, arrange on fried croûtons, garnish with braised lettuce hearts, or with small tomatoes stuffed with a mixture of chicken, truffles and mushrooms, bound with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Brown in the oven or under a grill. Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices mixed with Madeira and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb noisettes Montpensier. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU MONT-PENSIER – Sauté the noisettes in butter, arrange on fried croûtons, and garnish with coarsely shredded truffles and asparagus tips both fried in butter. Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices mixed with Madeira and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb noisettes Nicheffe. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU NICHEFFE – Grill the noisettes and put each on a cake made of Duchess potato (see POTATOES) cooked in the oven until golden. Garnish with cocks' combs and kidneys. Put a grilled mushroom filled with grated horseradish on top of each noisette. Serve with Marrow sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb noisettes à la niçoise I. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU À LA NIÇOISE – Sauté the noisettes in oil and garnish with la niçoise (see GARNISHES). Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices diluted with white wine and tomato-flavoured veal stock.

Lamb noisettes à la niçoise II. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU À LA NIÇOISE – Sauté the noisettes in oil and garnish with small new potatoes tossed in butter, and French beans in butter. Put on each noisette 1 tablespoon Tomato fondue (see FONDUE). Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices diluted with white wine and tomato-flavoured veal stock.

Lamb noisettes Rivoli. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU RIVOLI – Sauté the noisettes in butter, arrange on Anna potatoes (see POTATOES), and serve with a sauce made from the pan juices mixed with Madeira and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) with truffles added to it.

These can be served in a cocotte (q.v.).

Lamb noisettes Saint-Germain. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU SAINT-GERMAIN – Proceed as described in the recipe for Tournedos Saint-Germain (see BEEF).

Lamb noisettes à la turque. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU À LA TURQUE – Sauté the noisettes in butter, garnish with Rice pilaf à la turque (see PILAF) and aubergines cut in large dice and fried in oil. Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices diluted with tomato-flavoured veal stock.

Lamb noisettes à la Valenciennoises. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU À LA VALENCIENNES – Sauté the noisettes in butter and put each on a little mound of rice à la Valenciennoises (see GARNISHES). Serve with a sauce made from the pan juices diluted with white wine and tomato-flavoured veal stock, with a pounded clove of garlic added to it.

Lamb noisettes garnished with vegetables. NOISETTES D'AGNEAU GARNIES AUX LÉGUMES – Sauté the noisettes in butter or grill them, garnish with the vegetables recommended. Sprinkle the sautéed noisettes very lightly with a sauce made from the pan juices, diluted and boiled down, or with a thickened Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

The following vegetables are used for garnishing noisettes: quartered hearts of artichokes, sautéed or fried aubergines, fried cèpes and other mushrooms, braised endive, kidney beans in butter, sautéed Brussels sprouts, cucumbers cut into uniform pieces and cooked in butter, stewed Chinese artichokes, stewed gumbos (okra), French beans in butter, braised lettuce, peas in butter or à la française, asparagus tips in butter, etc.

The noisettes can also be garnished with purée of fresh vegetables, such as chicory or spinach.

Pascaline of lamb. PASCALINE D'AGNEAU – Plumerey, who continued Carême's work, gives a recipe for this rather complicated dish. He says that he wrote it from the dictation of the old controller of the Prince de Conti's household, but he himself never tried it out.

'Scald perfectly 4 lambs' heads and put them to soak, as well as the 4 sets of brains and 4 tongues. Take 3 lambs' livers, and mince with fresh bacon, finest herbes, salt, pepper and spices, to make into forcemeat. Cook 12 lambs' feet with the tongues in a court-bouillon.

'Cook the brains separately in a white court-bouillon. When the tongues and brains are cooked, cut them into large dice with mushrooms, and shape them into 12 croquettes.

'Now take the 4 blanched heads of lamb and fill with the forcemeat. Sew them up securely. Put on top of them several slices of lemon. Cover with bacon and cook them in a covered casserole on a bed of vegetables.

'Have a dozen larded lambs' sweetbreads ready. Keep the throats. Prepare a smooth sauce (Velouté – see SAUCE), into which you have put 2 handfuls of mushrooms. Boil down and bind with 6 egg yolks. Take the heads out of the casserole, drain, remove thread, arrange on a long dish, nose part facing outwards. Cut each foot in two and put 3 halves between each head. Pour the sauce over and put around them 12 fried croquettes, 12 larded lambs' sweetbreads and 12 croûtons of bread cut to look like cocks' combs, fried in butter. Add the lambs' throats and mushrooms to the sauce and cover the heads with it.

Alexandre Dumas père, who wrote a gastronomical dictionary, gives for the preparation of Pascaline of lamb the following recipe, different from that given by Plumerey:

Pascaline of lamb à la royale. PASCALINE D'AGNEAU À LA ROYALE – 'The custom of serving a lamb whole on Easter Sunday was kept in France until the time of Louis XVI. This is how the dish was prepared:

'The neck of a six-month-old lamb was boned, the breast bone sawn through and the shoulder bone broken and trussed to the breast. The 2 shank bones of the legs were also broken and fastened in the same manner.

'It was stuffed with a forcemeat of pounded lamb, yolks of hard-boiled eggs, stale breadcrumbs and chopped finer herbes, and seasoned with 4 spices.

'The flesh was carefully larded and put to roast before a big fire. It was served whole, as a separate course, after the soup, either with a green sauce or on a ragoût of truffles cooked in ham jelly.'

Pâté of lamb à la périgourdine – See PÂTÉ.

Lamb pie à la languedocienne. TOURTE D'AGNEAU À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Puff pastry pie with a filling of small lamb noisettes sautéed in butter; salsify cooked in Court-bouillon IX (see COURT-BOUILLON), cut into pieces and tossed in butter; sliced mushrooms; stoned and blanched olives. Put these ingredients into a pastry-lined dish on a layer of finely pounded Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Dot with a few dabs of butter. Cover with a piece of rolled-out pastry, brush with egg and bake in the oven for 40 or 45 minutes. Pour into the pie a few tablespoons of boiled down Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), flavoured with Madeira.

Lamb pilaf. PILAF D'AGNEAU – Prepared like Mutton pilaf (see PILAF).

Lamb's pluck – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Lamb ragoût. RAGOÛT D'AGNEAU – The parts which are most suitable for this dish are lower ribs, neck, shoulder and breast.

Ragoût of lamb à l'anglaise. RAGOÛT D'AGNEAU À BLANC (À L'ANGLAISE) – Put into a pan, in alternate layers, 750 g. (1½ lb.) lamb cut in pieces and 3 medium-sized sliced potatoes mixed with 2 medium-sized chopped onions. Season, and add a bouquet garni (q.v.). Pour in enough water or light stock to cover the meat. Cook fairly briskly with a lid on the pan.

Heap in a deep dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Ragoût of lamb à la bonne femme. RAGOÛT D'AGNEAU À LA BONNE FEMME – Brown 750 g. (1½ lb.) lamb in clarified fat, and season with salt, pepper and a pinch of sugar. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour and brown lightly. Moisten with ¾ litre (1½ pints, 1½ pints) water, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and ½ crushed clove of garlic.

Cook with a lid on the pan for 40 minutes. Drain the lamb, trim, and put the pieces back in the pan.

Add 500 g. (18 oz., 3 cups) small potato balls and 12 small onions lightly fried in butter. Cook with a lid on the pan for 40 to 45 minutes. 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) tomato sauce can be added.

All the ragoûts given for mutton (q.v.) can be used for lamb.

Rib roast of lamb (U.S.) – See Loin of lamb.

Saddle of lamb. SELLE D'AGNEAU – The saddle of lamb can be prepared by roasting, pot-roasting or braising, like Saddle of mutton (see MUTTON). All the garnishes recommended for mutton can be applied to it.

The saddle of baby or milk-fed lamb is either roasted or pot-roasted. This saddle usually remains attached to two legs of the animal, which constitutes the joint known as the baron of lamb.

Sautéed lamb. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU – Prepared from the same parts of the animal as are used for ragoûts.

Cut 1½ kg. (3¼ lb.) boned lamb into pieces. Brown in butter with a carrot and an onion cut in quarters. Season.

Remove the lamb with a perforated spoon and put into a sauté pan with the garnish indicated in the recipe chosen.

Dilute the pan juices with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) white wine or other wine, depending on recipe, and add 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) thickened brown stock and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) tomato purée. Strain through a fine strainer and pour over the lamb.

Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and finish cooking in the oven for 25 minutes with a lid on the pan.

Sautéed lamb à l'ancienne. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU À L'ANCIENNE – Bone and cut the lamb into pieces and sauté in butter. Add 125 g. (4 oz.) lambs' sweetbreads (soaked, blanched and half cooked in butter), 225 g. (8 oz.) small mushrooms lightly tossed in butter, and 125 g. (4 oz.) cocks' combs and kidneys, cooked in a white court-bouillon (q.v.). Moisten with the pan juices diluted with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) Madeira, to which 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) thick fresh cream have been added. Season and strain. Leave to simmer gently for 20 minutes.

Garnish with heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter.

Sautéed lamb with artichokes. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU AUX ARTICHAUTS – Fry in butter or oil 750 g. (1½ lb.) neck or shoulder of lamb, boned and cut in pieces. Season with salt and pepper and cook until done.

Decorate with 4 artichoke hearts, blanched and cut in large dice, or sliced and fried in butter or oil.

Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) white wine, boil down, add 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) thickened veal stock and pour over the lamb. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed lamb with aubergines. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU AUX AUBERGINES – Cut 1½ kg. (3¼ lb.) boned and trimmed lamb's neck into pieces. Season with salt and pepper and cook until brown in a mixture of butter and oil in equal proportions. When the lamb is cooked, heap in a shallow dish. Put on top 3 small aubergines, peeled, cut in pieces and fried in oil. Mix the pan juices with white wine, thickened brown veal stock and tomato purée, flavoured with a pinch of chopped garlic. Boil down, strain, and pour over the lamb. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed lamb with cèpes, morels, St. George's agaric. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAUX AUX CÈPES, MORILLES, MOUSSERONS – Cook the lamb as described in the recipe for sautéed lamb with aubergines, replacing the aubergines by 250 g. (8 oz.) cèpes, morels or St. George's agarics, fried in butter or oil.

Sautéed lamb chasseur. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU CHASSEUR – Proceed as described in the recipe given for Sautéed veal chasseur (see VEAL).

Sautéed lamb à la crème. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU À LA CRÈME – Bone and cut the lamb into pieces. Season with salt and paprika and fry in butter.

Heap on a shallow dish. Dilute the pan juices with 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) cream. Boil down by one-third, add 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, strain, and pour over the lamb.

Sautéed lamb aux fines herbes. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU AUX FINES HERBES – Proceed as described in the recipe for Sautéed lambs à la minute (see below), adding to the sauce 1 tablespoon chopped shallots and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) of a mixture of chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon.

Sautéed lamb à l'indienne. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU À L'INDIENNE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Sautéed veal à l'indienne (see VEAL).

Sautéed lamb à l'italienne. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU À L'ITALIENNE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Sautéed lamb à la minute (see below). Dilute the pan juices with white wine and Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Sautéed lamb à la minute. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU À LA MINUTE – Cut a boned neck or shoulder of lamb into small pieces. Sauté on lively heat in butter or oil.

When the pieces are cooked and sufficiently browned, put them in a dish, sprinkle with chopped parsley and a dash of lemon juice, and pour over them the pan juices diluted with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine and thickened veal stock.

Sautéed lamb with mushrooms. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU AUX CHAMPIGNONS – As in the recipe for Sautéed lamb with cèpes, morels, St. George's agarics, but use cultivated mushrooms, peeled and fried in butter, whole, if they are small, sliced, if they are large.

Sautéed lamb with paprika (à la hongroise). SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU AU PAPRIKA (À LA HONGROISE) – Cut into pieces  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. (3 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) boned lower ribs or shoulder of lamb. Brown in butter. As soon as the lamb is well browned, add 2 chopped onions. Season with salt and 1 tablespoon paprika. Sprinkle in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour. Moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine. Boil down, and then add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) white stock, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) tomato purée, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Cook with a lid on the pan for 30 minutes. Take the pieces of lamb out with a perforated spoon, and put them in a pan with 250 g. (8 oz.) mushrooms which have been sliced and lightly tossed in butter. Add fresh cream seasoned with paprika to the sauce left in the first pan. Boil down, strain, and pour over the lamb. Simmer gently with a lid on the pan for 25 minutes.

Sautéed lamb Parmentier. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU PARMENTIER – Cook the meat and sauce as described in the recipe for Sautéed lamb with aubergines, replacing the aubergines with 4 diced potatoes fried in butter or oil.

Sautéed lamb à la printanière. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU À LA PRINTANIÈRE – Proceed as in the recipe for Sautéed veal à la printanière (see VEAL).

Sautéed lamb with tomatoes. SAUTÉ D'AGNEAU AUX TOMATES – Proceed as described in the recipe for Sautéed lamb with artichokes, replacing the artichokes by 8 small peeled, seeded tomatoes, cooked in butter or oil. A grated clove of garlic can be added.

Shoulder of lamb. ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU – All the recipes given for Shoulder of mutton (see MUTTON) are applicable to shoulders of ordinary lamb. They can be boned and stuffed before cooking.

Shoulders of baby or milk-fed lamb and Pauillac lamb should not be boned. These are grilled or roasted, and served with various garnishes.

Shoulder of lamb à l'albigeoise. ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU À L'ALBIGEOISE – Bone the shoulder and stuff with forcemeat made of sausage meat and minced pig's liver in equal proportions, flavoured with chopped garlic and parsley, and well seasoned. Roll the shoulder and secure with string.

Fry it lightly until golden in sizzling goose fat in an earthenware casserole. Surround with quartered potatoes or whole new potatoes, and 12 lightly blanched cloves of garlic. Season, sprinkle with a little goose fat and cook in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. Serve in the dish in which it was cooked.

Shoulder of lamb à la boulangère. ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU À LA BOULANGÈRE – Bone the shoulder, season it on the inside, roll, and secure with string. Cook for 30 minutes in an earthenware fireproof dish in which 3 to 4 tablespoons butter have been heated.

Surround with 3 sliced or quartered large potatoes and 3 onions, finely chopped and lightly fried in butter. Season the garnish, sprinkle with the butter left over in the pan and finish cooking in the oven, basting frequently. Just before serving add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thickened brown stock.

Braised shoulder of lamb with various garnishes. ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU BRAISÉE – Bone a shoulder of lamb. Season inside, roll and secure with string.

Put into a braising pan finely chopped bacon rinds, 2 carrots and 1 onion, and fry lightly in butter. Place the shoulder of lamb on top. Leave to cook with the lid on the pan for 10 minutes. Moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) white wine and boil down. Add  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) thickened brown stock, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) tomato purée, a bouquet garni (q.v.) and the bones and trimmed scraps of the shoulder. Cover with a lid and cook in a moderate oven for 1 to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours, depending on the size of the shoulder.

Glaze in the oven, and arrange on a dish. Surround with the recommended garnish. Heat the pan juices left over from braising, remove fat, boil down, strain if necessary and pour over the shoulder.

Garnishes suitable for braised shoulder of lamb. All the garnishes indicated for the baron, double, loin and saddle of roast or braised mutton, and beans or Bean purée à la bretonne (see PURÉE).

Shoulder of lamb à la catalane or with pistachio nuts. ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU À LA CATALANE (EN PISTACHE) – See MUTTON, Shoulder of mutton à la catalane.

Shoulder of lamb à la gasconne. ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU À LA GASCONNE – Stuff the boned shoulder with a forcemeat made of raw ham (fat and lean), stale bread (without crusts) soaked in stock and squeezed out, chopped onion, and chopped garlic and parsley, all bound with an egg, and well seasoned.

Brush the shoulder with goose fat and brown lightly in the oven.

Put into a braising pan with coarsely shredded, blanched green cabbage, 2 quartered carrots, 1 onion stuck with a clove, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Moisten with slightly fat stock. Cook in the oven for 45 minutes. Add quartered potatoes and finish cooking together for another 45 minutes.

Roast shoulder of lamb. ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU RÔTIE – Shoulder of lamb is usually boned, rolled and secured with string before being roasted in the oven or on a spit. It is garnished with watercress and its gravy is served separately.

The shoulder of baby or milk-fed lamb is not boned. It should be roasted in the oven or on a spit on a brisk fire. Garnish with watercress and serve the gravy separately.

Rolled shoulder of lamb (Carême's recipe). ÉPAULE D'AGNEAU EN BALLOTTINE – 'Bone 2 shoulders of lamb to the shank bone; season with salt, pepper and nutmeg and stuff it with a finely pounded forcemeat.

'With a butcher's needle thread a string through to the end of the shoulder in such a way as to make it serve as a draw string. Lard each shoulder with lardoons of bacon, working them in in the shape of a rosette. Put into a casserole trimmings from the shoulders and veal scraps, 1 carrot, 2 onions and a bouquet garni. Cover with rashers of bacon. Moisten with bouillon and a good glass of white wine to cover the larded shoulders, and cook for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours. Take care to glaze the larded shoulders gradually. Drain, remove string, arrange on a dish and garnish with small glazed carrots and onions, or braised lettuce or celery. Strain the pan juices and remove surplus fat, boil down, pour some over the rolled shoulder of lamb and serve the rest separately.

Lamb on skewers. BROCHETTES D'AGNEAU – Using pieces of lean lamb cut from the neck or lower ribs, and pieces of bacon, prepare as described in the recipe for Brochette of veal (see VEAL).

Sliced lamb. ÉMINCÉS D'AGNEAU – Best cuts of lamb, pot-roasted or braised.

Lamb sweetbreads – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Lamb on skewers or brochettes (Robert Carrier)

Timbale of lamb à l'ancienne. TIMBALE D'AGNEAU À L'ANCIENNE – Line a Charlotte mould with pie pastry. Put in it small lamb noisettes braised in court-bouillon (q.v.), lamb sweetbreads cooked in butter, and truffles and mushrooms, all blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) diluted with cream and flavoured with Madeira. Alternate with layers of macaroni cooked in water and blended with cream, butter and grated cheese. These fillings must be completely cold before being put into the pie dish. Cover the dish with a pastry lid and decorate the top with pastry leaves. Make an opening to allow steam to escape and brush over with beaten egg. Bake in a hot oven for 40 to 45 minutes. Before serving, pour into the pie through the opening, a few tablespoons of the Velouté sauce.

Lamb's trotters (feet). PIEDS D'AGNEAU – These are prepared as Sheep's trotters (feet) (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS).

Vol-au-vent of lamb with truffles and mushrooms I. VOL-AU-VENT D'AGNEAU AUX TRUFFES ET CHAMPIGNONS – Fill a vol-au-vent case, as soon as it is out of the oven, with a ragoût of braised thin noisettes of lamb, lamb sweetbreads cooked in butter, and sliced truffles and mushrooms, all moistened with white or brown thickened stock.

Vol-au-vent of lamb with truffles and mushrooms II. VOL-AU-VENT D'AGNEAU AUX TRUFFES ET CHAMPIGNONS – Prepare a vol-au-vent case in the usual way. As soon as it is removed from the oven, fill with a ragoût of lamb sweetbreads braised in court-bouillon (q.v.), with truffles and mushrooms added, the whole blended with a piping hot Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

LAMBALLE – Name given to various dishes. It is usually applied to a meat broth made by adding consommé with tapioca cooked in it to a purée of fresh peas (see SOUPS AND BROTHS, Potage Lamballe).

LAMBICK – Highly intoxicating Belgian beer, rather sour in taste. (See BEER.)

LA MOTHE-SAINT-HÉRAYE – See CHEESE.

LAMPREY. LAMPROIE – There are three types of edible lamprey: the lamprey-eel or sea-lamprey, the lampern or river lamprey and the lamprey proper.

The lamprey-eel found in the Atlantic and the Mediterranean is the most highly prized. It is similar to the eel in general appearance, but different from it in a number of details: its skin is yellowish with brown markings, its dorsal fins are spaced along its back, and it has seven bronchial orifices which form two vertical lines on either side of its neck.

In spring, the lamprey-eels migrate to the mouths of rivers. They are to be found in large numbers in the Loire, the Rhône and the Gironde.

The flesh of the lamprey is delicate but, being very fatty, it is somewhat indigestible. Lampreys of medium size are the most sought after, especially those caught in the mouths of rivers.

Scald the fish so that the skin can be easily removed. According to the manner in which it is to be cooked, cut it into thick slices or leave it whole. Prepare according to the selected recipe.

The lamprey can be cooked in a great many different ways. Most commonly it is stewed in wine (en matelote) flavoured with the blood of the fish. All recipes for eel (q.v.) are suitable for lamprey.

Lamprey à la Bordelaise (Bordeaux cookery). LAMPROIE À LA BORDELAISE – Bleed a medium-sized lamprey. Keep the blood aside to flavour the sauce. Scald the fish and scrape off the skin. Remove the central nerve. (To do this, cut off the tip of the lamprey's tail, make an incision round the neck below the gills and, through this opening, catch hold of the nerve and pull it out.)

LAMPSANA

Cut the fish into slices 5 cm. (2 inches) thick. Butter a pan and line it with sliced onions and carrots. Put in the slices of lamprey. Place a bouquet garni (q.v.) and a clove of garlic in the middle of the dish. Season with salt and pepper. Moisten with enough red wine to cover the fish. Boil for 12 minutes.

Cook 12 slices of white leek with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) raw diced bacon in butter in a covered pan. Drain the slices of lamprey and put them in a pan, alternating with the slices of white leek. Make a roux (q.v.) of flour and butter. Moisten with the cooking stock of the lamprey. Cook this sauce for 15 minutes, strain, and pour over the lamprey. Simmer very slowly until the fish is cooked. Arrange the fish on a serving dish and pour over it the sauce mixed with some of the blood. Garnish with slices of bread fried in butter.

LAMPSANA, NIPPLEWORT. LAMPSANE – Plant of the endive family, similar to the sow-thistle. Its leaves are eaten raw in salad. Cooking turns them bitter.

LANGUE-DE-CHAT (Cat's tongue) – In the view of some experts, this biscuit derives its name from its shape – thin, flat and narrow, somewhat like a cat's tongue in appearance.

Langues-de-chat, which are crisp, dry biscuits, can be made and flavoured in various ways. Only biscuits made according to one of the recipes given below, however, can properly be called langues-de-chat.

These keep for a long time and are served with some liqueurs and sparkling wines. They are also served with iced sweets (desserts) and used as an ingredient of various puddings.

Langue-de-chat I – Work together, in a bowl, 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) fine sugar and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) fresh cream. Add 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sieved flour, 1 tablespoon vanilla-flavoured fine sugar, and, when the mixture is quite smooth, 5 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Rub a metal baking sheet with pure wax or line with heavy waxed paper and, using a forcing-bag with a round nozzle, pipe the mixture to make little strips about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (1 inch) apart, so that they will not run into one another during baking.

Bake in a hot oven for about 8 minutes.

Langue-de-chat II – Ingredients. 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous cup) sieved flour, 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) fine sugar, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) vanilla-flavoured fine sugar, 2 eggs.

Method. Cream the butter in a warmed bowl. Add the sugar and vanilla-flavoured sugar. Work the mixture for 2 minutes, and mix in the eggs, one at a time. Add the sieved flour.

Pipe this mixture onto a baking sheet as indicated above.

LANGUEDOC, ROUSSILLON, COMTÉ DE FOIX

The land of Oc (Languedoc) is a district which for centuries has had a tradition of fine cooking. Its people have always been connoisseurs of good food. Not only have they provided substantial dishes in abundance, such as the famous cassoulet (q.v.) of Castelnaudary and the daube languedocienne, but also subtly flavoured and delicate appetisers such as the pâté de foie gras with truffles, gem of the Languedoc culinary repertoire, which has made famous throughout the world the names of Toulouse, Cazères, Albi and other cities where for so long these delicacies have been made.

In Languedoc, the Roman and Arab influences which gradually determined the character of its cooking are still recognisable. In this province, which was called Gallia Narbonensis under the Romans, was invented the ragoût of mutton with white beans which was the prototype of that robust dish known as cassoulet.

The Languedoc larder is well stocked. In the south-western provinces of France are to be found excellent meat, succulent poultry, and good winged and ground game. The finest foie gras is made in this region from goose and duck liver and their indispensable foil, the truffle, the 'subterranean empress' as it was called by the Marquis de Cussy.

To these delicacies must be added excellent saltwater and freshwater fish. Among the latter are the trout of the icy Pyrenean streams, the perch, bream, tench, pike, etc., which are found in abundance in the Garonne, Ariège, Tarn and Aude rivers.

The Languedoc kitchen gardens are well stocked with vegetables and the orchards with delicious fruit. Languedoc also has its vineyards and produces excellent wine.

Culinary specialities – With such natural resources, it is no wonder that the cuisine of Languedoc is excellent and that the region has a large number of succulent specialities.

Here, first, are some typical Languedoc broths and soups: Pot-au-feu à la poule farcie (stuffed chicken hotpot); soup au farci; pot-au-feu albigeois (with stuffed goose neck); pot-au-feu carcassonnais (with ribs of beef, neck of mutton, lean bacon, stuffed cabbage and white beans); ouillade catalane; braou bouffat de Cerdagne; bouillade des pêcheurs (Rousillon); bouillabaisse Catalane (which is nothing like the bouillabaisse of Marseille); soupe aux poissons de Sète (fish soup); soupe aux clovisses (cockle soup); soupe à l'ail (garlic soup); soupe à la courge (pumpkin soup); soupe aux choux (cabbage soup); soupe aux tomates (tomato soup); tourin; and succulent garbure.

Among the hors-d'œuvre of the area are: Black Mountain and Ariège ham; sausages from Luchon, Toulouse, the Black Mountain and Ariège; frutons or gratons of pork, goose and turkey; dried fêche with radishes from Tarn; meilat from Dourgne; languettes (little tongues) from Tarn; anchovy pâté from Collioure; little pâtés of Pézenas or Béziers (which are also eaten as a dessert); anchoiade; fresh white beans à la croque-au-sel; fresh figs.

Among the special egg dishes of Languedoc are: Omelettes à la cansaldo; omelettes with ham, blood, wild asparagus tips, hop shoots (called omelette à la Saint-Jean), agaric, peppers, pine kernels, garlic, tomatoes and Quercy truffles; poached or fried eggs with ham, tomatoes, aubergines, garlic; poached or fried eggs à la cansalado.

The following dishes are made from saltwater and freshwater fish, shellfish of all kinds, snails and frogs: Cod à l'ailloli; ragoût of cod à la carcassonnaise; cod à la persillade (with parsley); brandade of cod; cod bouillabaisse; shad à la persillade; stuffed shad on the spit; lamprey en matelote; fricandeau of tunny (tuna) fish à la catalane, with olives or with anchovy; chopped tunny (tuna) à la palavasienne; river trout à la meunière; river trout in court-bouillon; small fry in court-bouillon; Eel à la catalane; elver fry; pike on the spit; matelotes of various freshwater fish; civet of spiny lobster (Roussillon); freshwater crayfish in court-bouillon; mussels à la ravigote; mussels à la catalane; mussels with rice; cockles à la persillade; snails à la languedocienne, à la lodévoise, à la narbonnaise, à la sommoise; mourguettes à la meridionale; frogs legs à la persillade.

Here are some of the meat, poultry and game dishes of Languedoc: Daube of beef à l'albigeoise, à la carcassonnaise; estouffat of beef à la catalane; veal slices with agaric; roll of veal en papillote; veal en persillade; ragoût of veal with olives; chump end of veal with salsify; pistache of mutton; gasconade of mutton; braised leg of mutton with salsify; ragoût of mutton with white beans; leg of mutton with garlic; Luchon salted ewe; Toulouse quarter of lamb à la persillade; blanquette of lamb; cutlets of milk-fed lamb en culotte; leg of lamb with agaric; galimaufry of pork; ribs of pork à la persillade; ribs of pork en papillotes; lumbet of pork with potatoes, cassoulets from Carcassonne, Castelnaudary and Toulouse; estouffat of white beans from Carcassonne; saupiquet ariègeois (with white beans); roast sucking pig with piglet skins; tripe à l'albigeoise; tripe à la mode narbonnaise; cabassols (Hérault); manous (Hérault); tripe with saffron; petarram of Luchon; lamb's pluck à la languedocienne; lamb's sweetbread pie with salsify; calf's head with olives; calf's brain en papillote; veal kidneys à la catalane.

Fricassée of chicken; poultry pie with agaric, salsify, mushrooms and truffles; stuffed chicken; truffled capon; capon à la carcassonnaise (stuffed with sausage, olives, chicken livers, the neck stuffed with garlic bread, roasted on the spit); truffled young turkey; young turkey with olives; duck à la bigarade; duck with olives; salmi of duck; pigeon à la catalane; compte of pigeon; pigeon in blood; goose with chestnuts; ragoût of goose with celery; salmi of guinea fowl; alicuit of chicken, turkey and goose; sanguette of chicken; turkey livers with capers, olives, or sautéed with garlic and lemon; foie gras of duck or goose with capers, grapes truffles, Frontignan wine, in pies, charcoal-grilled, potted; Toulouse, Cazères and Luchon pâtés de foie gras with truffles; pickled goose and duck; partridge à la catalane; salmi of partridge;

Gastronomic map of Languedoc

partridge with cabbage; salmi of larks; larks en caisse; small birds baked in a pie; bunting en caisse; salmi of thrush; teal à la bigarade; hare au saupiquet; civet of hare; civet of izard (Pyrenean mountain goat); pâté of young rabbit with truffles; hare pâté.

The vegetable dishes, sweets and preserves made in Languedoc include: Gratin of tomatoes and aubergines; aubergine stuffed à la catalane; agarics sautéed with garlic; cèpes à la persillade; green peas with ham; salsify deep-fried with sugar; stuffed cabbage, green cabbage sautéed and stewed; French beans with tomato sauce.

Biscuits from Bédarieux; honey croquettes from Narbonne; grape tart; touron from Limoux; Montpellier pie; Limoux cake; dry pepper cakes from Limoux; Alleluias from Castelnaudary; ring-biscuits and janots from Albi; flaky pastry and rauzel from Carcassonne; flaunes or flauzonnes from Lodève; heartcakes from Tarn; bras de Venus from Narbonne; pancakes; oreillettes ('rabbits ears'); pickled plums; crystallised fruit from Carcassonne.

Wines – The province of Languedoc is very large and covers several wine-producing areas.

Côtes du Rhône. The best-known vineyards of the northern part of this area are situated on the right bank of the Rhône (opposite Valence and Tain-L'Hermitage) in the département of Ardèche. This is where the white and red wines of Saint-Joseph and the red wines of Cornas are produced. The Saint-Péray white wines, also from this area, are made into excellent sparkling wines following the méthode champenoise.

The appellations of the southern part of the right bank of the Côtes du Rhône are situated in the département of Gard. This is the home of the dry, fruity rosés of Tavel and Chusclan, the red and rosé wines of Lirac, and the red and white wines of Laudun. Another exceptional wine produced here is the V.D.Q.S. Costières du Gard.

Aude and Hérault. Besides a large production of vin ordinaire, Aude produces the excellent red wines Fitou, Corbières and Minervois; also a sparkling wine called Blanquette de Limoux.

A very fine famous Muscat wine is produced in the département of Hérault in Frontignan.

Eastern Pyrenees. This département is the home of such great dessert wines as Rivesaltes and Muscat de Rivesaltes, Banyuls and Banyuls Grand Cru, Maury, Côtes d'Agly and Grand Roussillon.

Gaillac wine, from the département of Tarn, can be drunk as a still or sparkling wine.

LANGUEDOCIENNE (À LA) – Name given to a number of different dishes mostly served with a garnish of tomatoes, aubergines and cèpes. The sauce served with dishes prepared à la languedocienne is flavoured with garlic.

LAPWING. VANNEAU – Bird of passage with crested head, considered very good to eat. Its eggs are much sought after. The lapwing is cooked like plover (q.v.).

LARD. SAINDOUX – Cooking fat obtained from the melting down of pork fat. This fat, well prepared and free from impurities, is excellent and in certain regions of France, notably the south-west, is used in place of butter or oil for the greater part of their culinary preparations.

Preparation. Cut the fat in very small pieces and put it in a deep pot with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) water per 500 g. (1 lb.) fat.

Start cooking over a good heat, stirring with a wooden spoon, then cook over a gentle but sustained heat, stirring often, until the fat is completely melted. At this point the pieces of pork fat will appear well fried and crisp, while the liquid part will be very clear and will give off no more steam.

As soon as it is ready, strain through a very fine strainer or close woven cloth. Put into pots, which should be filled to the top. When the fat is completely set, cover the pots with paper, tie with string, and put them in a cool, dry place. The lard will keep for several months.

After the melting process is complete the strained pork fat leaves a residue that is considered very good to eat in the districts of France where lard is used.

Lard gras (pork fat) – The fat of pork lying between the skin and the flesh which is found all along the chine.

This fat, usually eaten fresh, is in two layers. The first layer, which is next to the flesh, is used chiefly in the preparation of lard. It is called melting fat. The second layer, next to the skin, is firmer and melts less readily. It is used in various ways in pork butchery and also for barding. It is known as hard fat.

Lard maigre – This is the fat of the pig's belly, streaked with muscular tissue. It can be salted or smoked.

In France this fat is usually eaten fresh but in England and in U.S.A. it is smoked and known as bacon, or salted and known as salt pork.

LARDING. LARDER – Threading lardoons of varying thickness into large cuts of meat, by means of a larding needle.

Larding fat. LARD À PIQUER – Pork fat used for interlarding meat. This fat should be white, firm and dry. In summer it must, if possible, be kept on ice before being cut into lardoons. The purpose for which the lardoons are used determines their length and thickness.

To make them, first cut the fat into rectangular slabs. When measured across, these slabs should correspond to the desired length of the lardoons.

Lay these slabs flat on a table, skin downwards. Slice the fat evenly. With the flat of the knife smooth the surface of the fat, and slice horizontally to obtain the lardoons.

They must be kept in a cool place until they are needed. Larding needles of different thicknesses are available for threading the lardoons into the meat.

Larding needles (Coutellerie André)

LARDING NEEDLE. LARDOIRE – Implement used for larding cuts of meat, poultry and game.

LARDOONS. LARDONS – Strips of larding fat of varying lengths and thicknesses, threaded into meat, poultry and game by means of a larding needle.

In French, the name lardon is also used for blanched and fried diced bacon which is added to certain dishes such as civet of hare, beef à la bourguignonne etc., and to a number of garnishes.

LARK. ALOUETTE, MAUVIETTE – Bird, of which numerous species are known, including the calandra and crested lark. The lark has a very delicate flesh but, in some countries, it is in great demand more as an aviary bird than as food, because of its varied and harmonious song.

In France, larks are eagerly sought for the preparation of lark pâté, greatly esteemed by gastronomes.

Although the lark is found in Asia and in Africa, it belongs more to northern parts of Europe. Larks abound in Provence, in Languedoc, in the plains of Champagne and Burgundy, as well as in the steppes of southern Russia.

In France, the lark is always referred to as mauviette when it is used for the table. In former times this savoury bird was called mauvais, which derives from the Latin mala avis, meaning bad bird. It is strange that the qualification mauvais (bad) should have been applied to a bird which is so delicate to eat.

Larks à la bonne femme. MAUVIETTES À LA BONNE FEMME – Prepared in a casserole in the same way as Thrushes à la bonne femme (see THRUSH).

Larks in breadcrust. MAUVIETTES EN CROÛTE – Slit the birds along the back and bone them. Stuff them with a piece of foie gras about the size of a small nut. Press in a piece of truffle. Fold the birds back into shape. Place them in a buttered casserole, pressing them closely one against the other so that they keep their shape in cooking. Season. Pour on melted butter. Cook for 5 minutes in a very hot oven.

Drain the larks. Scoop out a round loaf and butter the inside. Line with à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Brown in the oven. Put the larks in the crust and finish cooking them in the oven for 8 minutes. Pour over them a few tablespoons Madeira-flavoured concentrated Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Put the 'pie' on a dish covered with a napkin, and serve.

Larks en caisses. MAUVIETTES EN CAISSES – Proceed as for Thrushes en caisses (see THRUSH).

Larks à la minute. MAUVIETTES À LA MINUTE – Slit the larks along the back. Open and flatten them gently. Season with salt and pepper. Fry quickly in a frying pan, using best butter. Place each bird on a slice of bread fried in butter, and serve. Pour a little liqueur brandy and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) into the pan and stir. Pour this sauce over the larks.

Lark pâté, cold. PÂTÉ FROID DE MAUVIETTES – Made with boned larks stuffed in the same way as cold Partridge pâté (see PÂTÉ).

Lark pâté, hot. PÂTÉ CHAUD DE MAUVIETTES – Made with boned larks stuffed with foie gras and truffles, in the same way as hot Quail pâté (see PÂTÉ).

Larks à la piémontaise. MAUVIETTES À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Stuff each lark with a piece of à gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) about the size of a small nut. Cook quickly in butter. Serve in a deep earthenware dish on a bed of polenta (q.v.) made with cheese. Press the birds down into the polenta, pour on melted butter and bake in the oven for 5 minutes. Sprinkle with a few tablespoons of game stock flavoured with Marsala.

Pilaf of larks. PILAF DE MAUVIETTES – Cook the larks quickly in butter. Arrange them in a circle on a bed of Rice pilaf (see PILAF). Pour a few tablespoons of game essence flavoured with Madeira over them.

Larks with risotto. MAUVIETTES AU RISOTTO – Proceed as for Pilaf of larks. Serve the larks on a bed of Risotto (see RICE).

LARUE – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

LASAGNE. LAZAGNE – Italian pasta cut in the shape of wide ribbons. It is cooked in the same way as macaroni (q.v.).

LATEX – The milky sap of a number of plants. The latex of the galactodendron of Columbia is drunk and used in cooking in the same way as milk.

LATOUR (Château) – One of the five great wines of Bordeaux (Pauillac-Médoc).

Latticed apple flan

LATTICED FLAN or TART. GRILLÉ – Flan or tart pastry shell filled with fruit, cream or other filling, covered with narrow criss-cross strips of pastry.

LATUILLE, LE PÈRE – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

LA VARENNE – A great chef who lived in the seventeenth century. La Varenne began his career as kitchen minion or marmiton in the home of the Duchesse de Bar, sister of Henry IV of France.

The King, author of the legendary 'poule au pot', observing that La Varenne was a bright lad, entrusted him with certain negotiations in an affair of the heart. As a result of this, he made such a great fortune that the Duchess remarked jestingly to him one day: 'You have done better by carrying my brother's "poulets" (amorous notes) than by larding mine'.

But La Varenne also had great talents as a chef. He was the author of the first systematically planned books on cookery and confectionery. These books are now rare, but they have been consulted for centuries and contain recipes which can still be used today. Here are their titles: le Pâtissier français (first edition 1653); le Confiturier français (1664); le Cuisinier français (first edition 1651, published by Pierre David at Lyons, now virtually unobtainable); and l'École des ragoûts (published at Lyons by Jacques Carnier in 1725).

LAVARET – Fish of the salmon family found in very deep lakes. There are also saltwater lavarets which periodically run to the rivers. The most sought after is that of Lake Le Bourget.

This fish is very delicate. All recipes for river trout and salmon trout are suitable for lavaret. (See TROUT.)

LAYON. COTEAUX DU LAYON – The vineyards of Anjou are to be found on these slopes. Some of the best white wines of the Maine-et-Loire département come from the vineyards on these slopes on the right bank of the Layon river.

LEAF. FEUILLE – Aerial part of plants, usually flat and green. A great many leaves are edible.

Vine leaves. FEUILLES DE VIGNE – Young vine leaves have various uses in cookery. They are used to wrap game (quail and partridges especially) along with strips of bacon or pork fat.

Turkish dolmas (balls of meat and rice) are wrapped in vine leaves.

Young tender vine leaves are sometimes used to make fritters, or finely chopped and added to green salads.

Vine leaves may also be used in decorative arrangements of fresh fruit.

LEAF CHERVIL

LEAF CHERVIL. PLUCHES DE CERFEUIL – See GARNISHES, Chervil leaves.

LEAKAGE. COULAGE – Loss of liquor from a cask.

LEAVEN. LEVAIN – Sour wheat paste which has begun to ferment and which is in a fit state to induce fermentation, and thus cause kneaded dough to rise. The term leaven is often used instead of barm (brewer's yeast).

LEBERKNÖDELN (Hungarian cookery) – See SOUPS AND BROTHS.

LEBER-SUPPE (Hungarian cookery) – See SOUPS AND BROTHS.

LECITHIN. LÉCITHINE – Fat containing phosphorus which is found in egg yolks, brain, etc.

Leckerli (Swiss pâtisserie)

LECKERLI (Swiss pâtisserie) – Type of spiced biscuit, rectangular in shape and about 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick.

Ingredients. 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fine sugar, 350 g. (12 oz., 1 cup) honey, 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) chopped fresh almonds, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped candied lemon or orange peel, 1 teaspoon bicarbonate of soda, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) spices (ground cloves, nutmeg and ginger).

Method. Arrange the flour in a ring on the table. Put the honey in the centre of the ring and work with a spatula. Add all the other ingredients and knead well.

Put the mixture in rectangles on well-buttered baking trays. Bake in the oven. Cut into small rectangles and brush with milk just before taking out of the oven.

LEEK. POIREAU – Hardy biennial plant, the origins of which go back a very long way, which has never been found in its wild state and is believed to be a cultivated variety of oriental garlic.

The Egyptians held the leek in great esteem, as did the Romans. Nero had leek soup served to him every day. The Romans attributed to leeks the property of imparting and keeping up the sonority of the voice, and it is known that Nero was anxious to have a clear and sonorous voice for delivering his orations.

The leek has little nutritional value apart from being rich in Vitamin C and containing a variety of mineral salts and a little iron. Leek bouillon is a diuretic.

Bunch of leeks
(Kollar)

This plant, which is mainly used as a flavouring for the stockpot or an ingredient of home-made soups, can also be prepared in various ways as a vegetable.

Leeks à la béchamel. POIREAUX À LA BÉCHAMEL – Trim the leeks, leaving only the white part. Parboil for 5 minutes in salted water, and drain. Cook in butter and arrange in a timbale or dish.

Cover with not too thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE.)

Boiled leeks. POIREAUX À L'ANGLAISE – Trim off the roots of the leeks and the greater part of the green ends, leaving only the white part. Take off the outside skin and wash the leeks. Tie them in bunches like asparagus and cook in boiling salted water.

Drain and dry them, serve on a folded napkin or in a perforated asparagus dish. Garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with melted butter.

Braised leeks. POIREAUX BRAISÉS –

Trim 12 large leeks, leaving only the white part. Cut into pieces and put into a sauté pan in which 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter have been heated. Season with salt and pepper. Moisten with 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) water, cover the pan and simmer for about 40 minutes. Put the leeks into a vegetable dish. Sprinkle with the braising liquor to which an extra tablespoon of butter has been added.

Alternatively, the leeks can be moistened with clear meat stock instead of water.

Leeks with melted butter or other sauces. POIREAUX AU BEURRE FONDU – Boil in water and serve with melted butter or any other sauce, such as Cream, Hollandaise, Mousseline, Vinaigrette (see SAUCE).

Leeks à la crème. POIREAUX À LA CRÈME – Put the white part of the leeks into a buttered sauté pan. Season and cook gently for 15 minutes with a lid on. Moisten with fresh cream, covering the leeks. Simmer gently for 30 minutes with the lid on the pan. Put into a vegetable dish. Add a few tablespoons fresh cream to the pan juices and pour over the leeks.

Deep-fried leeks. POIREAUX EN FRITOT – Trim the leeks, leaving only the white part, and cut this into pieces. Marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper, then parboil in salted water for 8 minutes.

Dip in a light batter and fry in smoking hot deep fat. When the leeks become golden and crisp, drain them, dry, season with fine salt, arrange in a heap on a folded napkin or on a paper doyley, and garnish with fried parsley.

Leeks au gratin. POIREAUX AU GRATIN – Trim the leeks, leaving only the white part. Parboil in salted water and cook gently in butter in a covered sauté pan. Put into a buttered ovenproof dish, sprinkle with grated cheese (Parmesan, for preference), pour over some melted butter, and brown in a slow oven or under a low grill.

Leeks à la grecque. POIREAUX À LA GRECQUE – White part of the leeks cooked in a court-bouillon (q.v.) consisting of water, oil and lemon juice, spiced with coriander. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre.)

Leeks Mornay. POIREAUX MORNAY – Cook the white part of the leeks in butter. Put them into a fireproof dish on a layer of Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter and brown in the oven.

Velouté or cream of leek. VELOUTÉ, CRÈME DE POIREAUX – Recipes for these soups will be found in the section entitled SOUPS AND BROTHS.

Leeks à la vinaigrette. POIREAUX À LA VINAIGRETTE – Cook the white parts of the leeks in salted water. Drain and dry them, arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish and season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper.

LEFT-OVERS. RESTES – Sometimes foodstuffs are served in large quantity when, for example, they will be served at a subsequent meal as cold meat. It is done with roast meat or poultry or braised meat (boeuf à la mode, for example), when it is intended to reheat these meats to serve them again.

LEGUMIN. LÉGUMINE – Proteid substance resembling casein found in pulses (peas, beans, lentils). It is less well assimilated than animal protein, and combines with chalk to form an insoluble deposit. For this reason pulses cannot be satisfactorily cooked in hard water.

Lemons on a branch

LEMON. CITRON – Fruit of the lemon tree, very acid and highly scented. It originally came from India, but now grows out of doors in the Mediterranean region and extensively in California, U.S.A.

The juice and the zest of lemons are used in cooking to flavour and season a large number of dishes. Various creams, puddings and sauces are flavoured with the zest (the outside part of the skin). The juice is used to enhance the flavour of certain dishes and to season salads and mayonnaise instead of vinegar.

For the use of lemon as a flavouring for bavarois, creams, mousses, puddings, sauces, soufflés, see these words in their alphabetical order.

The food value of the lemon is a matter of some controversy; however, being exceptionally rich in Vitamin C it is undoubtedly the specific remedy for scurvy.

Lemon custard. CRÈME AU CITRON – Make a Custard cream (see CREAMS) using milk which has been boiled with lemon zest. Pass through a very fine strainer or silk tammy.

Lemon essence. ESSENCE DE CITRON – A commercial product used in cooking and pâtisserie in place of fresh lemon juice. It is very concentrated.

Lemon jam. CONFITURE DE CITRON – Blanch the skins of 24 lemons. When they are half cooked drain them. Chop up half the lemon skins and rub them through a sieve. Cut the rest into thin strips. Mix these ingredients and moisten with the juice of 8 lemons. Add an amount of sugar equal in weight to the lemon skins. Cook in a copper pan in the same way as other jams.

Lemon manqué. MANQUÉ AU CITRON – See MANQUÉ. Use lemon-flavoured sugar for the mixture and add diced crystallised citron or  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon lemon essence to it.

When the manqué is baked and turned out, mask it completely with egg whites whisked with sugar until stiff. Frost with icing sugar. Sprinkle pistachio nuts on top. Dry in the oven but do not brown.

Preserved lemon peel. ÉCORCE DE CITRON CONFITE (CITRON-NAT) – Blanch pieces of fresh lemon peel, from which the pith has been removed. In this way only the zest is used. Drain the pieces and put them in syrup (q.v.). Leave all night in the syrup.

Next day take out the peel and cook the syrup until it measures 25° on the saccharometer or until it drops in a short thread from the spoon. Put back the peel. Leave to soak in syrup overnight again and repeat the operation for several days, cooking the syrup for the last time to the point of crystallisation.

Lemon syrup. SIROP DE CITRON – Soak the zest of 12 fine lemons in their own juice. Prepare 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) hot sugar syrup measuring 36° on the saccharometer. Add the juice and zest to this syrup. Leave for 5 to 6 days. Filter.

Lemon zest. ZESTE DE CITRON – This is used to flavour creams and other preparations for sweets by grating the skin with a lump of sugar. The sugar becomes impregnated with the essential oil of the lemon and is then put in the mixture to be flavoured.

Milk can also be flavoured with lemon zest and used in creams and custards. The zest which is used to flavour certain culinary preparations is prepared in this way:

Remove the zest from the fruit with a sharp knife. According to the use to which it is to be put, chop the zest finely, or slice it into fine strips. In the latter case, blanch the lemon julienne, drain and dry it.

LEMONADE

LEMONADE. CITRONNADE, LIMONADE – Drink consisting of lemon juice, sugar and water.

Lemonade I. CITRONNADE – Dissolve 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) lump sugar in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) filtered water. Add the juice and zest of 2 lemons to the syrup. Leave to infuse for 3 hours in a cool place.

Strain through a fine strainer. A siphon of soda water, or fresh water, can be added to the lemonade. Serve cold and put a slice of lemon in each glass.

Lemonade II. LIMONADE CUITE – Cut a lemon into thin slices. Remove the seeds. Infuse for 1 hour in ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) boiling water. Add 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar.

Fizzy lemonade. LIMONADE GAZEUSE – This lemonade is usually artificially made and aerated with carbonic acid gas, like manufactured soda water. It is sold in bottles or siphons.

LEMON SOLE. LIMANDE-SOLE – The name lemon sole is a corruption of the French limande-sole. This fish is really a kind of dab but, unlike the dab and other flat fish such as flounder and plaice, it is elongated and oval in shape, and is thus somewhat similar to a sole in appearance.

Some authorities assert that lemon sole is very little inferior in quality to the sole, but this opinion is not shared by gastronomes, who find this fish comparatively stringy and tasteless. It corresponds to the yellowtail flounder in U.S.A.

All recipes for brill (q.v.) and sole (q.v.) are suitable for lemon sole.

LENT. CARÊME – Forty-day fast imposed by the Catholic religion, from Ash Wednesday till Easter. This period of fasting in the early Church had excellent physical effects by imposing on the digestive system, worn out by gastronomic excess during the winter season, a much needed rest.

Brillat-Savarin tell us that towards the middle of the eighteenth century the normal régime in bourgeois families consisted of four meals:

Breakfast, which took place before 9 a.m. and consisted of bread, cheese, fruit, sometimes a pâté or cold meat. (The habit of drinking coffee had not yet penetrated into provincial life.)

Lunch, which took place between noon and 1 p.m., with soup, the boiled meat of the pot-au-feu, and vegetable accompaniments according to the season.

Around 4 p.m. there was a light meal enjoyed as a rule by the ladies of the household and the children.

Supper was at 8 p.m., with entrée, roast, side-dishes, salad and dessert.

During Lent breakfast was omitted, meat was excluded from the lunch menu, and in the evening supper was replaced by a meal which contained no eggs, butter, or anything of a live nature.

Battle between Carême (Lent) and Mardi-Gras
(from an 18th century print)

The real test of culinary art was to create a rigorously apostolic meal which had all the appearances of an excellent supper.

Little by little the Church relaxed its original severity, and permitted the use of butter and eggs and, later, the flesh of 'cold-blooded' animals, such as fish. Still later, certain aquatic game considered to be cold-blooded, such as the spoonbill, pintail, scoter-duck, moorhen, coot, teal, water-rail, curlew, heron, godwit and sandpiper were allowed.

A Lenten meal could also include an impressive list of sumptuous removes, entrées and roasts. Understood in these terms the Lenten diet does not differ from normal diet from the health point of view.

For Lent menus see FESTIVE COOKERY.

Lent anecdotes. CARÊME ANECDOTIQUE – 'Madame Victoire (sister of Louis XV), good, sweet and kindly, lived in the most refreshing simplicity in a society that loved her dearly; her household adored her. In exemplary fashion (and without stirring from her luxurious bergère in Versailles) she fulfilled all her religious duties by giving all she possessed to the poor and by diligently observing fastings and Lent. In fact, the same lady's table was so noted for its meagreness that the parasite gourmets kept well away from it. It was not that Madame Victoire did not appreciate good food, but she had the strictest religious scruples concerning what should be eaten during penance. I have seen her tormented by doubt over a duck served to her during Lent. The question was whether the bird was lean or fat. She solicited the opinion of a bishop who happened to be attending the dinner. He immediately assumed the demeanour and tone of a judge at the last court of appeal. He told the princess that doubts such as these necessitated placing the cooked bird upon a very cold silver platter. If the creature's juices congealed within a quarter of an hour, it was to be considered fat; if, on the other hand, the juices remained liquid, it could be eaten without misgiving. Madame Victoire lost no time in putting the matter to the test: the juices did not congeal, a fact that delighted the princess since she was very partial to that particular type of wildfowl. The truth was that the period of fasting which Madame Victoire so diligently observed also upset her. She waited impatiently for the midnight bell on the Saturday before Easter and saw to it that she was immediately brought a plump fowl with rice and other succulent dishes.'

'Desbarreaux, upon hearing a peal of thunder while eating a bacon omelette, opened the window and flung his plate out into the night muttering: "All that fuss just for an omelette!"'

'One town celebrated Lent with a procession in which a beautiful, frail young maid played the part of a poor, wretched, barefooted girl. The moment the procession was over, the hypocrite went off to dine with her lover on a quarter of lamb and a ham. The odour of these drifted down the street, whereupon several people went up to the room where she was enjoying herself and dragged her downstairs, obliging her to parade through the town with the spit-roasted quarter of lamb slung round her shoulders and the ham strung round her neck.' (Brantôme.)

LENTIL. LENTILLE – A pulse (leguminous seed), originally from central Asia, where it was cultivated in prehistoric times. There are numerous varieties. This vegetable contains more protein than any other; 100 g. (4 oz.) provide 337 calories.

Lentils are rich in mineral salts, especially phosphorous and iron. They are particularly recommended for children, anaemics, nursing and expectant mothers, provided that none of these suffers from digestive troubles. It is advisable to purée them or to mix them with potatoes to counteract the effect of the unassimilable lentil husks.

Cooking of lentils. CUISSON DES LENTILLES. Proceed as for Dried white beans (see BEAN). Like these, lentils must be soaked in cold water before cooking, but not for long. If they are soaked too long, they begin to germinate, which renders them, if not actually poisonous, at least more difficult to digest.

After cooking in meat or vegetable stock, lentils can be prepared in any way suitable for dried white beans.

LENTISK. LENTISQUE – Bush of the same family as the turpentine tree. It is grown in the Greek Archipelago. Its fruit yields an edible oil. A resin known as mastic is collected from its trunk by making incisions in it. This resin is used to flavour the spirit known as Raki.

LÉOGNAN – Among the excellent Graves wines produced in this Gironde commune are the Château-Haut-Bailly, Château-Carbonnieux, Domaine de Chevalier, Château-Malartic-Lagravière and Château-Olivier.

LÉOVILLE – Red Bordeaux wine classed among the second growths of the great Médoc wines.

Léoville-Las-Cases, Léoville-Poyferré and Léoville-Barton, which are made in the commune of Saint-Julien, are highly prized by connoisseurs.

LEPIOTA. LÉPIOTE – Species of fungus of which a number of varieties are edible, the best-known in France being the cultivated lepiota, also known as the coulémelle.

LEPIDOSTEUS (Gar-pike). LEPIDOSTÉE – The peculiarity of this fish is that it has very hard, pebbly scales, so that it is encased in a veritable suit of armour.

It is to be found in the rivers and lakes of Central America. Its flesh is fairly delicate. All recipes for pike (q.v.) are suitable for this dish.

LES LAUMES – See CHEESE.

LESSER CELANDINE. FICAIRE – Plant whose leaves are sometimes eaten after being blanched. They are cooked in the same way as spinach (q.v.).

LETTUCE. LAITUE – Plant which grows wild all over Europe, in the Caucasus and in India. It has been cultivated in Egypt and China from time immemorial.

The word 'lettuce' comes from the Latin lactuca, because lettuce, when it is cut, exudes a milky juice. In ancient times, the lettuce was looked upon as a sacred plant (it figures in the Passover ritual of the Hebrews at the same time as the paschal lamb). It was brought into favour in ancient Rome by Antonius Musa, physician to the Emperor Augustus.

Galen asserts that this plant cured him of stomach disorders when he was young. He adds that lettuce brought him restful sleep in his old age.

Among the Romans, lettuce was usually served at the end of the evening meal. Under the Emperor Domitian, the fashion changed and it became customary to serve lettuce at the beginning of the meal.

The Romans now regarded lettuce, especially when dressed as a salad, as an appetiser, and so took to serving it as an hors-d'oeuvre.

Lettuce is in season all the year round, except in winter. All the common varieties can be eaten raw, in salads. Cabbage lettuces are mainly used in cookery, but cos lettuces can also be cooked. Lettuce can be braised, like endive.

Braised lettuce in meat stock. LAITUES BRAISÉES AU GRAS – Trim the lettuces by removing the tough green outer leaves. Parboil them for 5 minutes in salt water. Cool them under running water. Squeeze the leaves to extract all the water. Tie 2 or 3 lettuces together.

Butter a pan and line it with bacon rinds, sliced onions and carrots. Lay the lettuces in this pan. Cover with rather fat stock. Bring to the boil. Cover and cook in a moderate oven for 50 minutes.

Drain the lettuces, and untie them. Cut each in half, lengthwise. Trim the leaves at both ends and fold each half in two. Boil down the cooking stock, strain it through a fine sieve, and pour over the lettuces.

Lettuces prepared in this way can be served as they are, as a vegetable, as a garnish for various main dishes, or may be cooked further with various sauces as indicated below.

Vegetarian braised lettuce. LAITUES BRAISÉES AU MAIGRE – Proceed as above, omitting the bacon rind. Moisten with water instead of stock.

Lettuce with bone-marrow. LAITUES À LA MOELLE – Arrange braised lettuces in a circle in a shallow pie dish, alternating with slices of bread fried in butter. Put on top of each lettuce 2 slices of poached beef marrow. Add a little Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) to the braising stock. Boil down the stock, add butter, strain and pour over the dish. Sprinkle a little chopped parsley on top of each slice of marrow.

Lettuce in browned butter. LAITUES AU BEURRE NOISETTE – Braise the lettuces, and halve and roll them. Arrange in the form of a rosette on a dish. Before serving, pour a few tablespoons Brown butter (see BUTTER) over them.

Chiffonnade of lettuce in butter for garnishing. LAITUES EN CHIFFONNADE AU BEURRE – Shred very finely 4 trimmed and washed lettuces. Put them in a pan with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Season with table salt. Moisten with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) bouillon (q.v.). Cover and simmer gently. Use as indicated in the recipe for whatever main dish is to be served with this garnish.

Chiffonnade of lettuce for cold dishes. LAITUES EN CHIFFONNADE – Shred very finely some trimmed and washed lettuces. Squeeze them to extract all moisture. Season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper.

This chiffonnade is used mainly to decorate salads and mayonnaise of fish, shellfish or poultry.

Chiffonnade of lettuce with cream as garnish. LAITUES EN CHIFFONNADE À LA CRÈME – Prepare and cook finely shredded lettuce as for the preceding recipe.

When the lettuce is soft, moisten it with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint, $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) cream. Simmer for a few minutes. Serve as garnish with a suitable main dish.

Lettuce Colbert (Vegetarian cookery). LAITUES COLBERT – Cook the lettuces in butter in a covered pan. Drain and halve them. Fold the halves into pear shapes. Squeeze them gently, dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry.

Arrange them in a circle on a dish, and cover with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Creamed lettuce. LAITUES À LA CRÈME – Halve or quarter braised lettuces if they are too big and arrange them neatly in a buttered frying pan. Simmer for 5 minutes. Cover with boiling fresh cream and simmer until this is reduced by half. Arrange the lettuces in a shallow serving dish, alternating them with croûtons of fried bread. Coat with the cream.

Deep-fried lettuce. LAITUES EN FRITOT – Braise the lettuces as for Braised lettuce. Fold the quarters and put them in a dish. Season with oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Leave them in this marinade for 30 minutes. Just before serving, dip them in a light batter and deep-fry. Garnish with fried parsley.

Lettuce au gratin (in white sauce). LAITUES AU GRATIN – Arrange halved braised lettuces in a gratin dish. Pour Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) over them. Sprinkle with grated cheese, pour on melted butter, and brown.

Lettuce in gravy. LAITUES AU JUS – Braise lettuces, halve them, and place them in a buttered pan. Sprinkle with a few tablespoons of well-seasoned brown veal stock. Simmer. Arrange the lettuces in a ring, alternating with slices of bread fried in butter. Boil down the cooking stock, add butter and pour over the dish.

Lettuce à la hollandaise. LAITUES À LA HOLLANDAISE – Arrange on a dish, alternating with slices of bread fried in butter, halved lettuces braised in a vegetable stock. Cover with Hollandaise sauce (see SAUCE, Cold sauces).

Lettuce à l'italienne. LAITUES À L'ITALIENNE – Proceed as for Lettuce in gravy, using Italian sauce (see SAUCE) instead of the stock.

Lettuce Mornay. LAITUES MORNAY – See Lettuce au gratin (in white sauce).

Lettuce purée. PURÉE DE LAITUE – Sieve lettuces braised in meat or vegetable stock through a fine sieve. Heat this purée. To give it body, add a few tablespoons of concentrated and strained Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Season. Mix and add butter.

Mashed potatoes can be added, as they can be added to the purées of all watery vegetables.

Lettuce salad. SALADE DE LAITUE – See SALAD.

Lettuce soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE LAITUE – Made with purée of lettuce in the same way as for Endive soufflé (see ENDIVE).

Lettuce soup. POTAGE DE LAITUE – See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Purée of lettuce soup.

Stuffed lettuce. LAITUES FARCIES – Blanch the lettuces. Cool under running water and squeeze dry. Slit them in half without cutting the stump. Season them inside. Fill each lettuce with a fine forcemeat mixed with duxelles (q.v.). Each piece of mixed forcemeat should be the size of an egg. Close up the lettuces, tie, and braise them.

Stuffed lettuce can be served as a vegetable, arranged in a circle on a dish with fried bread between and covered with any suitable sauce, or it may be used as a garnish.

Lettuce stumps. MOELLE DE LAITUE – The stumps of cos lettuces which have gone to seed are mainly used. These stumps, after trimming, are cooked like asparagus, or in any of the ways suitable for artichoke stalks or endive stumps.

LEVERET. LEVRAUT – Young hare. (See HARE.)

LEVROUX – See CHEESE.

LIAISON – See THICKENING.

LIÉGEOISE (À LA) – Method of cooking, applied to various foodstuffs. Its characteristic feature is the use of juniper flavouring. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Calves' kidneys à la liégeoise; THRUSH, Thrushes à la liégeoise.)

LIGHTEN. DÉTENDRE – To make a mixture lighter by the addition of eggs or some liquid.

LIGHTS. MOU – In the tripe trade this term is used to designate the lungs of certain animals. For the preparation of lambs' and calves' lights, see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

LIMANDELLE – A flat fish, also called cardine or mère de sole, very good to eat. It has an elongated oval body, about 25 to 35 cm. (10 to 14 inches) long, with fragile, shaded scales. Its eyes are placed on the left side, which is pale yellow with brown shading. Its blind side is white. All recipes for plaice (q.v.) and brill (q.v.) are suitable for this fish.

LIME. LIMON – Thin-skinned citrus fruit.

Lime tree. TILLEUL – Tree of which there are several species in Europe. The scented flowers are used in infusions for their soothing and antispasmodic properties. The American species (Tilia Americana) is called a linden tree.

The flowers are also used in pastry-making and confectionery to flavour creams, ices and sweets (desserts) of various kinds.

LIMONADIERS – Name given in France in former times to sellers of non-alcoholic drinks. In the Middle Ages the only drinks available were beer, hippocras (mead), sweet or heavy wines. Anyone was free to stock and sell wines, without seeking permission of any authority. In the sixteenth century, spirits began to be widely drunk. They were sold by the small glassful at vinegar shops.

It was the Italians, many of whom followed Catherine de Medici into France, who introduced a number of entirely new drinks. Among these were lemonade, orangeade, bitter citron cordial, frangipane water, sherbets, populo, etc. The drink which found most favour with the public was lemonade, and the name limonadiers stuck to shop keepers who sold other drinks as well.

LIMOUSIN – See MARCHE AND LIMOUSIN.

LIMOUSINE (À LA) – Method of preparing red cabbage.

Cuts of meat and poultry garnished with red cabbage cooked in this way are also called à la limousine.

LIMOUX, BLANQUETTE DE – Sparkling wine, fairly heavy, made at Limoux in the Aude district.

LIMPET. BERNICLE – See BARNACLE.

LINE. FONCER – To cover the bottom of a stewpan or saucepan with strips of bacon and rounds of vegetables; or to cover the inside of a terrine with strips of pork fat; or to cover the sides and bottom of a mould or dish with pastry.

LING. LINGUE – Fish of the cod family, also called sea burbot or long cod. It is fished in the same latitudes as cod. It is quite good to eat, is often salted like cod, and is prepared in the same way as cod (q.v.) or codling.

In U.S.A. the name ling is sometimes given to the freshwater burbot.

LINNET. LINOT-LINOTTE – Small, edible but rather tasteless bird which feeds on linseed or hempseed. It is prepared in the same way as lark (q.v.).

LION – Lion meat, though edible, is seldom used in cookery. It is rather tasteless and must be steeped in an aromatic marinade before cooking.

All recipes for beef (q.v.) are suitable for lion.

LIQUEUR – Name given to various composite alcoholic drinks. Nowadays these are made from a mixture of spirits and syrups. There are innumerable liqueurs with many different names. Their alcoholic content varies.

Liqueurs can be made in the home. Their quality varies according to the spirits or alcohol used.

All home-made liqueurs are made by steeping fruit and other basic ingredients in alcohol or spirits. The best spirits to use are 70° (US 80°) proof. Liqueurs made in this way are often called ratafias.

Acacia liqueur or ratafia I. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA D'ACACIA – Remove stalks from acacia flowers and steep 100 g. (4 oz.) of the flowers in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) spirits, preferably white, proof 88° (US 100°).

Leave to infuse for 1 month, keeping the hermetically sealed container in a warm place.

At the end of a month add 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) sugar. Stir from time to time until all the sugar has dissolved. This takes about 2 weeks. Filter through filter paper, and bottle.

Acacia liqueur or ratafia II (old recipe). LIQUEUR, RATAFIA D'ACACIA – Put 200 g. (7 oz.) acacia flowers in a deep dish with alternate layers of fine sugar. Steep for 24 hours.

Moisten with 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) water and strain. Add to the strained liquid a syrup made with 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) water and the remaining sugar – 750 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) are needed in all. Finally, add 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) spirits.

Leave to steep for a few months. Filter and bottle.

Angelica liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA D'ANGÉLIQUE – Ingredients. 900 g. (2 lb.) angelica, 900 g. (2 lb., 7 cups) lump sugar, 5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts) spirits, 1½ tablespoons (2 tablespoons) cinnamon, 1 teaspoon nutmeg, 1 clove, ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) filtered water.

Method. Cut the angelica into small pieces and put them together with the sugar, spirits, and other ingredients in a large jar. Seal the jar hermetically and leave for 2 months.

Sieve through a fine strainer over a large bowl. Press the pieces of angelica to extract all the juice.

Filter through filter paper. Bottle, cork well, and keep at a moderate temperature, in a cupboard rather than a cellar.

Anise or anisetle liqueur or ratafia I. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA D'ANIS (ANISETTE) – Put 25 g. (1 oz.) green, crushed anise, ¼ teaspoon cinnamon, 1½ tablespoons (2 tablespoons) coriander into 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) spirits.

Infuse for 1 month. Add 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar dissolved in a little water. Filter and bottle.

Anise liqueur or ratafia II. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA D'ANIS – Make a syrup of 2½ kg. (5½ lb., 11 cups) sugar and 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water. Strain through muslin.

Dissolve 3 g. (⅓ oz.) essence of Chinese anise, ½ g. (⅛ oz.) essence of Seville orange, ½ g. (⅛ oz.) essence of cinnamon, 5 g. (⅓ oz.) essence of anise, 1 g. (⅓ oz.) essence of nutmeg, 1 g. (⅓ oz.) tincture of vanilla in 15 g. (½ oz.) spirits 70° (US 80°) proof.

Mix thoroughly and add 1½ litres (2¾ pints, 3¼ pints) alcohol 85° (US 97°) proof. Leave to stand for 24 hours. Filter and bottle.

Anise liqueur III or cream of aniseed (old recipe). LIQUEUR, CRÈME D'ANIS – 100 g. (4 oz.) whole aniseed, 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) spirits 36° (US 42°) proof.

Infuse for 6 days and strain through muslin.

Add 3 kg. (6½ lb., 13 cups) sugar dissolved in 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) water.

Leave to stand for several days, until the liqueur is clear. Strain through muslin.

Apricot liqueur. LIQUEUR D'ABRICOT – Ingredients. 30 apricots, 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) white wine, 1 kg. (2½ lb., 4½ cups) sugar, 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) 58° (US 66°) proof spirits, 1½ tablespoons (2 tablespoons) cinnamon.

Method. Put the apricots in a large pan. Moisten with the white wine and bring to the boil. Add the sugar, cinnamon and spirits.

Take the pan off the heat. Cover and leave to infuse for 4 days. Strain, filter, and bottle. Cork the bottles tightly. Keep in a dry place.

Blackcurrant liqueur I. LIQUEUR DE CASSIS – Ingredients. 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) spirits, 1 kg. (2½ lb.) blackcurrants, 750 g. (1½ lb. 3½ cups) sugar, 1 clove, 1 g. (⅓ oz.) cinnamon stick. To give a stronger flavour, add 10 blackcurrant leaves, the greenest available, from the top branches.

Method. Put the clove, cinnamon and blackcurrant leaves in a bowl. On top lay the blackcurrants, picked over and well crushed by hand. Pour the spirits over them, mix, add the sugar and mix again. Put the mixture in a stone jar and seal. Keep the jar in a warm place (in the sun, if possible) for at least 1 month to ensure a thorough infusion. At the end of this time strain the liqueur through a sieve over a bowl. Extract all liquid by squeezing the pulp in a coarse linen cloth.

Filter and bottle the liqueur.

Water should not be added to help dissolve the sugar, since this would lower the alcohol content of the liqueur. If too strong, add a plain syrup of 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar to ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) water. Dissolve cold.

Blackcurrant liqueur II (old recipe). LIQUEUR DE CASSIS – Infuse 1 kg. (2½ lb.) blackcurrants, 1 teaspoon each of ground cloves and ground cinnamon, 3 litres (5½ pints, 6½ pints) spirits and 750 g. (1½ lb., 3½ cups) sugar in a jar. Leave for 15 days, mixing every day.

Strain through muslin, filter, and, when perfectly clear, bottle.

Carnation liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA D'OEILLET – Steep in 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) alcohol, at 39° (US 44°) proof, 250 g. (9 oz.) carnation petals. Spice with a clove and ½ teaspoon cinnamon. Leave for 1 month, then filter.

Add a syrup made from 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar and ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) water. Filter once more. Bottle.

Cherry liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE CERISE – Crush 4 kg. (8½ lb.) Montmorency cherries with the stones. Put them in a bowl and leave to ferment for 4 days.

Add 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) alcohol, 39° (US 44°) proof spirit, and 1 kg. (2½ lb., 4½ cups) sugar. Put the mixture in a jar and leave to infuse for a month. Squeeze through muslin. Filter and bottle.

Cherry liqueur or ratafia, Grenoble style. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE CERISE À LA FAÇON DE GRENOBLE – Infuse in 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) brandy 125 g. (4 oz., ¾ cup) blanched cherry stone kernels, 10 g. (⅓ oz.) peach blossom or leaves, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 12 cloves.

When the brandy is thoroughly impregnated with the aroma of these ingredients, pour it over 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) cherry juice with 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar dissolved in it. Mix. Filter and bottle.

Liqueur or ratafia of cherry stones. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE NOYAUX DE CERISES – This can be made from the stones of cherries used for jam-making.

Wash and dry the stones. When they are quite dry, crush them. Put them to infuse in alcohol, allowing 1 kg. (2½ lb., 6 cups) stones to 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) spirits.

Proceed as indicated in the previous recipe.

Citron liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE CÉDRAT – Made with the peel and juice of citrons, in the same way as Orange ratafia (see below).

Coffee liqueur (old recipe). LIQUEUR DE CAFÉ – Roast 1½ kg. (3¼ lb., 13 cups) best mocha beans and grind very fine. Infuse in 5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts) alcohol 58° (US 66°) proof, and 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) water. After 10 days of infusion, distil in a bain-marie to obtain 5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts). If a stronger flavour of coffee is desired, more fresh coffee can be infused in the liqueur. Next, dissolve 2½ kg. (5½ lb., 11 cups) sugar in 2½ litres (4½ pints, 5½ pints) water and add this to the liqueur. Leave to stand overnight and filter next day.

Curaçao liqueur. LIQUEUR DE CURAÇAO – Ingredients. 50 g. (2 oz.) bitter orange peel, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 30 g. (1 oz.) Pernambuco bark, 1 clove, 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) pure wine alcohol 79° (US 90°) proof, 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar, ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) water.

Method. Infuse the orange peel, Pernambuco bark, cinnamon and clove for 3 weeks. Make a syrup of the sugar and water and pour it over these ingredients.

Filter and bottle. If necessary, colour with carmine and caramel.

Dantzig liqueur. LIQUEUR DE DANTZIG – This liqueur is made from sweetened 85° (US 97°) proof grain spirits with water added, and flavoured with various herbs.

The characteristic feature of this liqueur is that it has tiny specks of gold leaf floating in it.

Fennel liqueur. LIQUEUR DE FENOUIL – This is made from fennel stalks in the same way as Angelica liqueur.

Grande-Chartreuse – The liqueur of the Grande-Chartreuse, generally called Chartreuse, is one of the most famous liqueurs now being made. It is produced by the distillation of herbs gathered in Alpine regions, and is named after the monastery of the Grande-Chartreuse, where it was first manufactured by the monks.

Juniper liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE GENIÈVRE – Make a syrup of 4 kg. (8½ lb., 17½ cups) sugar dissolved in a little water. With this syrup, moisten 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) juniper berries placed in a stone crock with 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) alcohol.

Seal and leave to infuse for 15 days, shaking the crock from time to time after the first 3 or 4 days. Strain the liqueur through a muslin bag. Bottle.

This liqueur is good only when it has been kept a very long time.

Lemon liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE CITRON – Made with the peel and juice of lemons, in the same way as Orange liqueur (see below).

Orange liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA D'ORANGE – Ingredients. 6 oranges, 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) brandy or pure white spirits of wine, 500 g. (18 oz., 4 cups) lump sugar, ½ teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon coriander.

Method. Peel the oranges carefully, so that none of the white pith is mixed with the outer rind. Chop the rind finely.

Squeeze the juice of the oranges into a jar. Add the sugar to the juice. Add the chopped rind, cinnamon and coriander. Pour on the spirits and mix all together. Leave to infuse for 2 months.

Filter and bottle.

Orange blossom liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE FLEURS D'ORANGER – Made from the petals of orange blossom in the same way as Carnation liqueur.

Liqueur or ratafia of peach and apricot stones. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE NOYAUX – Made from peach and apricot stones, or a mixture of the two.

Half-fill a stone crock with whole stones. Fill up with white alcohol. Leave to infuse for 1½ months, placing the crock either in the sun or in a hot place.

Take out a quarter of the stones. Crack them and put the shells and kernels back in the crock. Leave to infuse for another 15 days. Draw off the liqueur. Add an equal quantity of water with 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar per litre (scant quart, generous quart) dissolved in it. After 10 days, filter and bottle.

Peppermint liqueur (old recipe). LIQUEUR DE MENTHE – Dissolve 2½ kg. (5½ lb., 11 cups) white sugar on the stove in 1½ litres (3 pints, 4 pints) water. Add 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) alcohol, 58° (US 66°) proof, and 1 g. (⅓₀ oz.) essence of mint.

Leave for 30 days. Filter through filter paper.

Persico or persicot – Alcoholic liqueur, made of eau-de-vie, peach stone kernels, sugar and aromatic substances. It is used for flavouring pastry desserts.

Quince liqueur or ratafia (quince water) I. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE COING (EAU DE COING) – Cut the quinces into quarters. Remove pips and shred the fruit without peeling.

Place in a bowl, cover and leave to stand in a cool place for 3 days. Squeeze through muslin. Add to the quince juice an equal quantity of spirits. To every litre (scant quart, generous quart) of this mixture add 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar, a clove and a small piece of cinnamon. Infuse in a jar for 2 months.

Strain through a muslin bag. Bottle.

Quince liqueur or ratafia II. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE COINGS – Prepare the quince juice as for the previous recipe. To every 1½ litres (2¾ pints, 3¼ pints) juice add ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) alcohol, 85° (US 97°) proof. Add ½ teaspoon cloves, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, a pinch of ground mace and 1 or 2 teaspoons bitter almonds.

Leave the mixture to infuse for 2 months. Then add a syrup (cold) made from 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) sugar dissolved on the stove in 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) water.

Filter and bottle.

Raspberry liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE FRAMBOISE – Put 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) very ripe raspberries in a jar. Cover with 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) spirits. Cork the jar and leave to infuse for 2 months, putting the jar in the sun whenever possible.

Add to the liqueur 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar, barely moistened to dissolve it.

Filter and bottle.

Tangerine liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE MANDARINE – Proceed as for Orange liqueur, using the peel and juice of tangerines.

Vanilla liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA À LA VANILLE – Infuse 3 vanilla pods in 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) spirits for 15 days. Mix with a very thick syrup. Filter and bottle.

Verbena liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE VERVEINE – Made with verbena leaves in the same way as Vanilla liqueur.

Violet liqueur or ratafia. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE VIOLETTE – Made with violets in the same way as Carnation liqueur.

Walnut liqueur or ratafia (walnut water or cordial). LIQUEUR RATAFIA DE NOIX (BROU, EAU DE NOIX) – Split in half 20 green walnuts and put them in a jar with 1½ litres (2¾ pints, 3¼ pints) spirits. Cork tightly.

Leave this mixture to infuse for 6 weeks in a cool place, shaking the jar from time to time.

Strain through a cloth. Add a syrup made from 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar and 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) boiled water, also a little cinnamon and a pinch of coriander.

Leave to infuse for another month. Strain and bottle.

Walnut liqueur or ratafia (walnut water or cordial) à la carmélite. LIQUEUR, RATAFIA DE NOIX (BROU, EAU DE NOIX À LA CARMÉLITE) – Proceed as indicated in the previous recipe, using 100 green walnuts and  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon cloves. The walnuts must be unripe so that they can be pierced with a thick pin.

When the mixture has infused for 2 months, add 2 kg. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  lb., 9 cups) sugar.

Proceed as indicated in the previous recipe.

LIQUEUR or DESSERT WINES. VINS DE LIQUEUR – Name given to any wine which is both sweet and intoxicating. Among these wines, which are mainly drunk as apéritifs and used in cooking and confectionery, the following are well known: Frontignac, Muscatel, Lunel, Grenache, Banyuls, Madeira, Malaga, Malmsey, Marsala, Port, Sherry, Lacrima-Christi.

LIQUORICE. RÉGLISSE – Leguminous plant found mainly in Spain and Sicily. Its rhizome contains a sweet substance, and when soaked or infused in water, provides a sweet drink.

Solidified liquorice comes from a watery extract obtained by strong pressure, which is then evaporated to a solid consistency. It is black in colour, and is generally moulded into cylindrical sticks, glossy when broken, sweet tasting, a little bitter and sharp, soluble in water to some extent when pure.

Litchis on a branch

LITCHI or LICHEE. LETCHI – This fruit, probably of Chinese origin, is also cultivated in India, the Philippine Islands and other countries of the Far East. It has the appearance of a berry about the size of a cherry, and has a large stone. The pulp is white, sweet and musky in flavour. It has a thin, hard and scaly shell which comes away easily from the fruit. The shell is greenish at first, then it turns pink, and when fully ripe, red.

For export, the fruit is usually left to dry in its shell. It then turns black like a prune, is very sweet with a slightly acid flavour, and is called lichee or litchi nuts.

Fresh lichees are sold in some delicatessen stores and those specialising in exotic fruits.

LITRON – Old French liquid measure. An old bushel measured about 13 litres ( $2\frac{3}{4}$  gallons,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  gallons) and a litron was a sixteenth of a bushel.

LITTLE BUSTARD (Field duck). CANEPETIÈRE – Migratory European wild bird of the wader family.

LIVAROT – See CHEESE.

LIVER. FOIE – The liver is the largest and most important of the glands attached to the digestive organs.

The livers of slaughtered animals, poultry and game are all used in cookery, as are those of one or two fish, such as turbot and skate. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

LIVESTOCK. BÉTAIL – This word is used to describe all the animals, particularly animals intended for food, raised on cattle-breeding farms.

Erroneously this word is also applied to small farmyard animals, various types of poultry and hutch rabbits.

The only animals which should come under this heading are bullocks, oxen, cows, calves, sheep, lambs and pigs.

Livre d'or of Alex Humbert
(Phot. X)

LIVRE D'OR – French term for the visitors' book, especially (in this context) the one offered by the restaurateur to enthusiastic clients. All too often it becomes the repository of banal compliments and tasteless jokes; sometimes, however, it contains clever witticisms and humorous drawings and becomes a worthy logbook of the establishment.

Can you imagine, for example, what the livre d'or of the Rocher restaurant of Cancale could be today with the signatures of Balzac, Victor Hugo, Baudelaire, Eugène Sue, the Goncourts and Flaubert?

Some livres d'or are veritable treasures. That, for example, of Camille Renault of Puteaux, restaurateur-cum-patron of the arts, which runs to seven volumes and contains paintings, watercolours and drawings signed by Villon, Reynold Arnould, Picasso, Braque, Fernand Léger, etc.

In the livre d'or of the Grand Saint-Antoine restaurant of Albi, the Rieux family can trace its lineage from the first entry by Jaurès. Then there is the livre d'or of Sam, the troubadour-restaurateur of Pontchartrain, which boasts all the signatures of the famous of its time – and many more.

During the war, Picasso and his friends passed the time drawing on the paper tablecloths of the Catalan restaurant. The poet Georges Hugnet published these collected drawings (some coloured with mustard, coffee and red wine) in a luxury edition known as the Nappe du Catalan. If only all livres d'or were of this calibre!

LLAMA. LAMA – Ruminant mammal found in Peru. It is edible and is cooked in the same way as beef (q.v.).

LOACH. LOCHE – Name given to several European freshwater fish, all long in shape and barbed.

There are three types: the common loach, a delicate fish found in mountain streams; the spined loach or groundling, a small fish found in rivers and streams, about the size of a gudgeon, and rather leathery; the rockling, about the same size as the other two, but less delicate in flavour. The loach is eaten fried, en matelote or à la meunière.

LOAVES. PAINS – Culinary term applied to dishes, served cold or hot, made of a forcemeat placed in a special mould and poached in a bain-marie (q.v.) if served hot, and set in a mould lined with aspic jelly and chilled if served cold.

This type of entrée was once very popular. It has been replaced by mousses (q.v.), which are also prepared hot or cold.

The various ingredients used for the forcemeats are, as indicated in individual recipes, liver (foie gras), game meat (winged and ground game), poultry and vegetables, fish and shellfish.

FISH AND SHELLFISH LOAVES. PAINS DE POISSONS, CRUSTACÉS.

Pike loaf (hot). PAIN DE BROCHET – Dice 500 g. (18 oz.)

pike flesh (net weight, after cleaning the fish). Season with 1 teaspoon salt, a pinch of white pepper and a little grated nutmeg. Pound in a mortar into a fine paste.

Remove the fish from the mortar and in its place put 250 g. (9 oz., 1 cup) Flour panada (see PANADA). After pounding the panada thoroughly, add to it 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter. Blend by pounding together.

Put the pike back in the mortar and pound vigorously to obtain a perfectly smooth mixture. Add, still pounding, 1 whole egg and, one by one, 4 egg yolks.

Remove the forcemeat from the mortar, rub through a fine sieve, transfer to a bowl and stir with a wooden spoon until very smooth.

Butter a mould and fill with the mixture. Cook in a bain-marie (q.v.) in the oven from 45 to 50 minutes, depending on the size of the mould. Turn out onto a serving dish, either straight onto the dish or on a fried croûton of bread. Serve with the garnish and sauce as indicated in the recipe.

Various fish loaves (hot). PAINS DE POISSON – Using carp, salmon or turbot flesh, prepare as described in the recipe for Pike loaf.

The forcemeat can also be prepared as described in the recipe for Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Garnishes and sauces. Cancalaise (poached oysters) and Normande sauce; Américaine (slices of spiny lobster) and American sauce; Cardinal (slices of spiny lobster or lobster, truffles and mushrooms) and Cardinal sauce; Normande (mussels, oysters, crayfish, mushrooms and truffles) and Normande sauce; Trouvillaise (shrimps' tails, mussels and mushrooms) and Shrimp sauce. (See GARNISHES, SAUCES.)

Shellfish loaves (hot). PAINS DE CRUSTACÉS – Prepare a lobster, spiny lobster, crab or any other shellfish forcemeat, as described in the recipe for Panada forcemeat with butter (see FORCEMEATS), pour into a well-buttered mould with a hole in the middle and poach in the oven in a bain-marie.

Turn out onto a dish and serve with the garnish indicated. Pour over a sauce appropriate to the garnish.

Garnishes and sauces. All the garnishes and sauces recommended for fish loaves are applicable to shellfish loaves.

FOIE GRAS LOAVES. PAINS DE FOIE GRAS – In the old days the foie gras loaves (today replaced by foie gras mousses and mousselines) were prepared using panada (q.v.) to bind them. This is no longer used nowadays; a more delicate composition is obtained and the binding of the mixture is assured by using meat jelly. Here is an old recipe for this type of entrée:

Jellied foie gras loaf (Carême)

Jellied foie gras loaf (Carême's recipe). PAIN DE FOIE GRAS À LA GELÉE – This entrée can be made from fattened goose liver although Carême uses capon liver.

'Trim 450 g. (1 lb.) fat capon liver, which you have previously soaked in water.

'Weigh out 175 g. (6 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) panada and the same amount of butter or grated bacon fat.

'Begin to pound the panada, then add butter to it. Take this mixture out of the mortar and proceed to pound the liver into a perfectly smooth paste. Add the panada and pound together for a good 15 minutes, adding 5 egg yolks, 4 teaspoons spiced salt, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) finest herbes tossed in butter (by finest herbes, Carême meant a mixture of chopped mushrooms, truffles, shallots and aromatic herbs) and 1 tablespoon Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

'When the whole has been well blended, rub it through a sieve and put this forcemeat into a bowl. Add 50 g. (2 oz.) blanched, diced udder, 50 g. (2 oz.) pickled tongue and 50 g. (2 oz.) truffles (50 g. (2 oz.) pistachio nuts can also be added).

'Transfer the mixture into a cylindrical-shaped mould, lined with thin rashers of bacon, in such a way as to have the whole inside surface covered completely. Press down the mould with a napkin to make the forcemeat take shape. Cover with more bacon rashers and stand the mould in a casserole 10 cm. (4 inches) larger than the mould. Pour enough boiling water into the casserole to reach to within 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) of the rim. Place on red coals and put some glowing coals on the lid as well, to ensure that the water maintains the same temperature – almost boiling – all the time. (Or you can cook the loaf in a bain-marie in a slow oven.)

'A good 2 hours later take out the mould (1 hour later if the cooking is done in the oven) and put it on ice or in a cold place. When the loaf is quite cold, heat the mould on the stove to loosen it and turn out onto a casserole lid. Remove the bacon rashers covering the loaf, and spoon over some warm, clear jelly on top and all round.

'Put the loaf on an entrée dish, the bottom of which should be lined with some liquid jelly, and set. Garnish the edges of the dish first with chopped jelly, then with jelly croûtons, and decorate the top with jelly.'

GAME LOAVES. PAINS DE GIBIERS –

Ground game loaf (hot). PAIN DE GIBIER DE POIL – This is prepared, using the flesh of leveret, hare or deer, like Chicken loaf (hot) (see CHICKEN).

Ground game loaf in jelly. PAIN DE GIBIER DE POIL À LA GELÉE – Like Winged game loaf in jelly (see below).

Winged game loaf (hot). PAIN DE GIBIER DE PLUME – Use the meat of woodcock, pheasant, partridge, like Chicken loaf (hot) (see CHICKEN). The garnish and sauces suitable for hot game loaf are: mushrooms and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) based on buttered, concentrated game stock boiled down to the consistency of a fumet (q.v.); chipolata sausages with buttered Demi-glace; Rossini (escalopes of liver and truffles) and Demi-glace sauce based on a truffle fumet; truffles and Demi-glace based on truffle fumet.

Winged game loaf in jelly. PAIN DE GIBIER DE PLUME À LA GELÉE – Prepare like Foie gras loaf in jelly (see FOIE GRAS) replacing the liver by 500 g. (18 oz.) (net weight) of game meat, as indicated.

loaves are made of braised vegetables mixed with eggs beaten as for an omelette, poured into a buttered plain mould and poached in a bain-marie.

By following the recipe given for Endive loaf (see ENDIVE) various other vegetable loaves can be made: artichoke, aubergine, carrot, cauliflower, turnip, etc.

This type of loaf, made in large moulds, is served as a small entrée, with a cream sauce poured over it.

Small vegetable loaves are used as a garnish for meat and poultry. They can also be used for garnishing fish dishes, or poached or soft-boiled eggs. Some recipes are given below.

Small cauliflower loaves. PETITS PAINS DE CHOU-FLEUR – Prepare a cauliflower purée bound with egg yolks, pour it into small buttered dariole moulds and cook in the oven in a bain-marie.

Small lettuce loaves. PETITS PAINS DE LAITUES – Using lettuces, braised, chopped and bound with egg, prepare as for Small spinach loaves (see below).

Various other vegetable loaves or vegetable purées such as carrot, mushrooms, endive, Brussels sprouts, chicory, tomato, etc. can be prepared in the same manner.

Small spinach loaves à la romaine. PETITS PAINS D'ÉPINARDS À LA ROMAINE – Prepare a leaf spinach purée, tossed in

Lobster (Robert Carrier)

Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), mixed with diced anchovy fillets, and bound with eggs beaten as for an omelette. Pour the mixture into buttered dariole moulds and cook in a bain marie.

LOBSTER. HOMARD – Large seawater crustacean similar in shape to the crayfish. There are two main types; one is found in European waters, the other in American waters.

The shell of the lobster is smooth. Its claws are armed with pincers of unequal size; one is large and oval, the other more slender and elongated.

The lobster found in European waters is of a rich, dark blue colour tinged with purple. Its joints are orange and its feelers, which are as long as its body, red.

The lobster reaches full size very slowly. At 5 years old, it is about 12 cm. (5 inches) long, having shed its tail some 20 times in the course of this period. Later it grows very much larger, attaining 30 to 50 cm. (12 to 20 inches) in length and weighing up to 5 kg. (11 lb.).

The female lobster carries its eggs in the tail. The French have a special name, paquette, for the female lobster with fully formed eggs, and connoisseurs assert that it is when the eggs are formed and not laid that the flesh of the female lobster is at its most delicate and savoury.

The American lobster lives only on the Eastern coast of North America, running from Labrador to North Carolina, although the most important sources are off the coast of Nova Scotia and the state of Maine. According to United States fisheries authorities, the 5-year-old lobster measures about 27 cm. (10½ inches) and has moulted 25 times. It is a dark mottled green when caught. The flesh of the lobster is more highly flavoured than that of the spiny lobster or crayfish.

There are many ways of preparing lobster. It can be eaten hot or cold like the spiny lobster (q.v.).

Lobster à l'américaine. HOMARD À L'AMÉRICAINÉ — This

How to cut up a lobster à l'américaine (Larousse)

1. Cut off the right claws; 2. Cut off the left claws; 3. Cut off the tip of the tail; 4. Cut the carapace in two; 5. Cut the head in two lengthwise;
6. Lobster completely cut up dish is of Provençal origin. Raw lobster sautéed in oil and the use of tomatoes are characteristic features of Mediterranean cookery.

Towards the middle of the nineteenth century, this dish was called lobster à la provençale (Gouffé). The name lobster à l'américaine was applied at that time to a dish made from poached lobster.

A certain confusion had arisen over these two names. Lobster à la provençale, simpler to prepare and less subtle in flavour, usurped both the name and the position of lobster à l'américaine. There is still some doubt as to who invented the name lobster à l'américaine, the dish itself having been known for a very long time.

Was it some anonymous cook, as the master chef Escoffier would have us believe, who, having known the dish in Nice, exported it to America, whence it was subsequently re-imported into France? Was it some restaurateur, perhaps Fraisse of Noel and Peter's Restaurant, who gave this name to the dish in honour of some transatlantic patron?

Curnonsky settled this controversy once and for all by investigating the matter. He discovered that a certain Pierre Fraisse, born in Sète, chef for a number of years in the United States (mainly in Chicago), set up a restaurant called Peter's in the boulevard des Italiens. It was the period of the Second Empire. One evening, in an attempt to serve a party of tourists who had little time to spare, he followed the Provençal recipe, starting with the living lobster. The delighted clients asked for the name of the wonderful dish. Still under the influence of his American sojourn, Fraisse replied: 'Homard à l'américaine'.

This lobster would be even more American, perhaps, if whisky were used instead of Cognac.

To those who object to the dissection of a live lobster we dedicate the following lines:

An American was uncertain
Of the best way to cook lobster
Why not just leave it for now
Said the homard à l'Américaine . . .

Provençal cooks prepare lobsters and spiny lobsters in the Provençal fashion, in a coulis (q.v.) of tomatoes flavoured with onion, garlic and parsley.

Take a hen lobster weighing 1 kg. (generous 2 lb.). Cut the tail into slices, following the marks of the joints. Split the carcase in two, lengthwise. Crack the shell of the claws. Remove all the gritty substance near the head. Keep the coral and the liver, which will be used to thicken the sauce. Season the portions of the lobster with salt and pepper.

Heat 4 to 6 tablespoons olive oil in a pan. Put in the pieces of lobster, brown quickly on both sides and remove from the pan. Put 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) finely chopped onion in the pan. Cook slowly until very tender, stirring frequently with a wooden spoon. When almost cooked, add 2 chopped shallots. Stir, mixing thoroughly. Put 2 coarsely chopped tomatoes (peeled, squeezed and with seeds removed) into the pan. Add a touch of garlic, and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and tarragon.

Lay the pieces of lobster on this foundation of herbs and vegetables. Moisten with 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) dry white wine, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) fish fumet (q.v.) and 4 tablespoons (½ cup) brandy. Season with cayenne pepper.

Bring the mixture to the boil, cover the pan, and cook on the stove or in the oven for 20 minutes.

Drain the lobster pieces and pick out the flesh from the claws and the tail.

Serve in the halves of the shells. Keep warm while the sauce is being made.

The sauce. Boil down the pan juices by half. Add the coral and liver of the lobster pounded and mixed with butter.

Whisk over a high flame. Remove the pan from the fire and, still whisking to ensure a smooth and creamy sauce, add 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter cut into fragments.

Season with a little cayenne pepper and a squeeze of lemon juice. Pour this sauce, piping hot, over the lobster, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Lobster aspic. ASPIC DE HOMARD – Line a mould with jelly and lay in it thick slices of lobster interlaced with strips of truffle, decorated with jelly. Fill the mould to the top with clear white fish jelly. Leave on ice to set.

It can either be turned out straight onto the dish or served on a slice of buttered bread. Decorate with jelly.

Boiled lobster. HOMARD BOUILLI – Proceed as for Lobster à la nage (see below).

This dish is served hot with a sauce usually served with boiled fish or shellfish. When it is eaten cold, it should be served with a sauce suitable for cold fish or shellfish.

Lobster à la bordelaise. HOMARD À LA BORDELAISE – Use small lobsters called demoiselles of Cherbourg, or large lobsters split in half lengthwise.

Large lobsters can be prepared à la bordelaise by splitting them into sections as for lobster à l'américaine. Proceed as for Crayfish à la bordelaise (see CRAYFISH).

Lobster Brillat-Savarin. HOMARD BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Cook a large lobster in Court-bouillon XII (see COURT-BOUILLON). Drain. Cut off the tail and shell it. Simmer slices of the flesh in a thick American sauce (see SAUCE), which has been prepared separately, adding to it some of the court-bouillon in which the lobster was cooked, boiled down almost to a jelly.

Shell the claws and the carcase. Chop the flesh into a coarse salpicon (q.v.). Add equal quantities of salpicon of cooked truffles and mushrooms. Simmer all these ingredients in a Curry sauce (see SAUCE) made with the rest of the lobster court-bouillon.

Cook courgettes, cut into thick slices – the same number as there are lobster slices – slowly in oil.

Place the slices of lobster and courgette alternately in a ring inside a baked flan crust. Put the salpicon in the middle and cover with American sauce. On top of each slice of lobster place a thick strip of truffle.

Lobster cardinal. HOMARD CARDINAL – Boil the lobster in Court-bouillon XII (see COURT-BOUILLON) until it is cooked. Drain, cool a little, and split it lengthwise. Remove the flesh from the tail and cut it into slices of equal thickness. Cut off the claws, take out the flesh, and dice it to make a salpicon (q.v.). Add an equal quantity of diced truffles. Bind the salpicon with a Lobster sauce (see SAUCE).

Fill the halves of the lobster shell with the salpicon. Place on top the slices of lobster interspersed with strips of truffles. Pour on some lobster sauce. Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter.

Place the halves on a baking sheet and brown them quickly in the oven. Garnish with curly parsley.

Lobster en chemise. HOMARD EN CHEMISE – Plunge a lobster into boiling water to kill it. Season with salt and pepper. Baste with oil or melted butter. Wrap it in a double thickness of oiled greaseproof paper and tie with string.

Place on a baking sheet, and bake in a hot oven for 40 to 50 minutes for a medium-sized lobster. Untie, and serve it in the paper in which it has been cooked.

Suitable dressings are half-melted Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), or any sauce usually served with grilled fish: Américaine, Béarnaise, Bercy, Bordelaise, Hongroise, Indienne, Ravigote (see SAUCE).

Lobster in cream. HOMARD À LA CRÈME – Cut up the lobster as for Lobster à l'américaine. Sauté the portions in butter. Drain off the butter. Pour 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) brandy into the pan and mix with the pan juices. Add 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) cream. Season with salt and a touch of cayenne pepper. Cover the pan and simmer.

Serve the lobster in a pie dish (in or out of its shell). Boil down the cooking sauce to half its volume, add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and a few drops of lemon juice, and strain through muslin. Pour this sauce over the lobster.

Lobster croquettes. CROQUETTES DE HOMARD – Made from lobster salpicon (q.v.) in the same way as plain croquettes. If desired a salpicon of mushrooms and truffles may be added. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre, Croquettes.)

Lobster à la franco-américaine. HOMARD À LA FRANCO-AMÉRICAIN – This method of cooking lobster is a variant of the recipe for Lobster à l'américaine.

Plunge 2 lobsters in boiling water. Cut off the claws and crack them. Split the lobsters in half lengthwise. Drain the carcasses and scrape them out, keeping the liver and the liquid.

Simmer 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion and 1 tablespoon chopped shallot in 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) oil. Add the lobsters, and season with salt and freshly ground pepper.

Pour over 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) rather thin Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for 5 minutes. Add 2 small glasses of brandy. Cover the pan and bake in the oven for 16 to 18 minutes.

Drain the lobsters. Put them on a serving dish and keep warm. Strain the sauce and put it back in the pan. Add the liquid and liver, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) meat essence,  $\frac{1}{2}$  glass Madeira, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flaming brandy and 1 or 2 small chopped sweet peppers. Boil down this sauce, add butter, and pour over the lobsters.

Grilled lobster. HOMARD GRILLÉ – Plunge a medium-sized lobster into boiling salt water for 3 minutes. Drain, split it in two lengthwise, season, and pour melted butter over it. Grill on a moderate heat.

Crack the claws so that the flesh can be easily removed, and serve on a napkin garnished with fresh parsley.

Serve with melted butter, Maitre d'hôtel butter or Ravigote butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Lobster Henri Duvernois. HOMARD HENRI DUVERNOIS – Split a lobster lengthwise or joint it as for Lobster à l'américaine. Season with salt and paprika. Sauté it in butter.

Take it out of the pan. Add to the butter 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) julienne (q.v.) of leeks and 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) mushrooms tossed in butter.

Put the lobster back in the pan. Moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) sherry and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy. Boil down, add fresh cream, cover with a lid and simmer.

Put the lobster on a long dish. Garnish with a pilaf of rice arranged along each side. Boil down the sauce, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter and pour over the lobster.

Lobster kromeskijs. CROMESQUIS DE HOMARD – This dish is served as a hot hors-d'œuvre or as a light main course. It is made from lobster salpicon (q.v.) either plain or with a Velouté or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), to which diced truffles and mushrooms have been added. For further details see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

Lobster à la marinière. HOMARD AU COURT-BOUILLON À LA MARINIÈRE – Very small lobsters are used for this dish. Proceed as for Crayfish à la marinière (see CRAYFISH).

Lobsters cooked in this way are often called Lobsters à la nage.

Lobster Mornay. HOMARD MORNAY – Proceed as for Lobster cardinal, substituting Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) for lobster sauce.

Lobster Mornay in scallop shells (hot). COQUILLES DE HOMARD MORNAY – Proceed as for Brill in scallop shells (see BRILL) or any other fish in scallop shells, using a salpicon (q.v.) and thick slices of lobster coated with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Brown in a very hot oven.

As with all other scallop shells, whether filled with poultry, fish or other ingredients, the shells should be decorated with a border of Duchess potato mixture (see POTATOES) piped through a forcing-bag with a fluted nozzle, before they are filled.

Hot lobster scallop shells can also be made with other sauces such as Cardinal, Nantua, Normande, White wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Cold lobster mousse. MOUSSE DE HOMARD FROIDE – Add to a mirepoix (q.v.) some dry white wine and 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) flaming brandy. Cook the lobster in this and leave to cool. Drain the lobster and take it out of the shell. Pound the flesh finely in a mortar, slowly adding for every 500 g. (18 oz.) flesh (net weight) 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) cold Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock. Rub this mixture through a sieve. Put the purée thus obtained in a pan on ice. Stir with a spatula for a few minutes. Add 4 to 5 tablespoons cold Fish aspic jelly (see ASPIC) and about 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) fresh, slightly whipped cream. Season.

Line a plain mould with fish jelly. Fill with the lobster mousse and decorate with truffles or some other garnish. Put it on ice to set.

Turn the mousse out onto a serving dish or on a slice of thickly buttered bread. Surround with chopped jelly and a border of jelly croûtons.

The mousse may also be served in a bowl and covered with fish aspic jelly. A salpicon of lobster and truffles may be added to the mixture.

Cold lobster mousselines (mousses served in individual portions). MOUSSELINES DE HOMARD FROIDES – These are made from the same mixture as Cold lobster mousse. Serve either in small cylindrical moulds lined with jelly and decorated with truffles, or in little silver or porcelain cups.

Lobster mousselines can be served as hors-d'œuvre or as a light main course, or may be used as a garnish with large cold fish.

Lobster à la nage

Lobster à la nage (cold). HOMARD À LA NAGE – Proceed as for Lobster à la nage (hot) (see below). Leave the lobsters to cool in the court-bouillon and serve them in it. Serve with a Mayonnaise sauce or Tartare sauce (see SAUCE, Cold sauces), or any other sauce usually served with cold fish or shellfish.

Lobster à la nage (hot). HOMARD À LA NAGE – Boil some small lobsters, of the type known as demoiselles of Cherbourg or Dieppe, in white wine Court-bouillon XII (see COURT-BOUILLON).

Serve hot in the court-bouillon, with sauce suitable for poached fish.

Lobster Newburg. HOMARD À LA NEWBURG – Ingredients. 2 lobsters weighing about 400 to 500 g. (1 lb.) each, 175 g. (6 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sherry, 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) concentrated fish stock, 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), 4 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant 2 cups) cream, salt, paprika.

Method. Wash the lobsters and joint them as for Lobster à l'américaine. Remove the liver and keep for use later. Season the lobsters with salt and paprika. Brown the lobsters in 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter. Cover the pan and cook for 12 minutes.

Drain off the butter and add the sherry. Boil down over a high flame. Add the fish stock and the velouté sauce. Keeping the pan covered, simmer gently for 20 minutes.

Take out the pieces of lobster and arrange them in a deep dish. (The tail pieces may be shelled.)

Boil down the sauce, add the cream, and test the sauce. When it coats the back of a spoon, add the liver, previously rubbed through a fine sieve and blended with the rest of the butter. Mix the sauce quickly by whisking. Pour over the pieces of lobster.

This dish is sometimes called lobster sauté à la crème.

Lobster à la parisienne. HOMARD À LA PARISIENNE – Cut into slices of equal thickness the tail of a medium-sized lobster, cooked in a court-bouillon and cooled. Coat with gelatine-strengthened mayonnaise and decorate with strips of truffle dipped in the half-set mayonnaise jelly.

Line a mould with jelly, fill with vegetable salad mixed with the rest of the lobster, diced, and diced truffles in mayonnaise. Turn out onto a dish, arrange the prepared lobster slices round it in a border, and garnish with chopped jelly.

The slices coated with jelly may also be served as a border to Parisian salad (see SALAD) which should be piled up into a small dome in the middle.

Cold lobster à la parisienne or à la russe. HOMARD FROID À LA PARISIENNE, À LA RUSSE – Proceed according to the recipes for Spiny lobster à la parisienne or à la russe (see SPINY LOBSTER).

Lobster pilaf. PILAF DE HOMARD – Coarsely dice the flesh of boiled lobsters or cut it into pieces. Brown lightly in butter.

Line a domed mould with Rice pilaf (see PILAF), and fill with the lobster. Turn out the mould on a serving dish. Surround with Lobster sauce (see SAUCE) or any other sauce suitable for shellfish.

Lobster risotto. RISOTTO DE HOMARD – Proceed as for Lobster pilaf. Fill a ring mould with risotto. Turn it out, and heap pieces of lobster in the middle.

Lobster salad. SALADE DE HOMARD – See SALAD, Lobster salad.

Cold lobster with various sauces. HOMARD FROID AVEC SAUCES DIVERSES – Boil the lobster in a court-bouillon (q.v.). Leave to cool. Split it in two lengthwise. Crack the shell of the claws so that the flesh can be taken out easily. Garnish with fresh parsley or lettuce hearts. Serve with Mayonnaise sauce or any other cold sauce, such as Gribiche, Rémoulade, Tartare (see SAUCE, Cold sauces).

Lobster in scallop shells (cold). COQUILLES FROIDES DE HOMARD – This dish is usually made from scraps.

Line the scallop shells with shredded lettuce seasoned with salt, pepper, oil and vinegar. On this foundation put a lobster salpicon, seasoned with French dressing and sprinkled with chopped chervil and parsley.

Put 1 or 2 thick slices of lobster in each shell. Cover with mayonnaise. Decorate the top with fillets of anchovy, capers and olives. Garnish with lettuce hearts and quartered hard-boiled eggs.

Lobster in scallop shells à la parisienne. COQUILLES DE HOMARD À LA PARISIENNE – Proceed as for Lobster in scallop shells (cold), using vegetable salad dressed with mayonnaise or French dressing, instead of lettuce. Decorate with strips of truffle, capers, lettuce hearts and quartered hard-boiled eggs.

Lobster in scallop shells vert-pré. COQUILLES DE HOMARD VERT PRÉ – Line the shells with shredded watercress leaves in a French dressing. Place a salpicon and slices of lobster on top. Coat with green mayonnaise. Decorate with slices of gherkin and chopped yolks of hard-boiled eggs. Surround with a border of French beans which have been boiled in salt water, drained, diced and seasoned with French dressing.

Lobster soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE HOMARD – Pound in a mortar 300 g. (11 oz.) cooked lobster (net weight). Rub through a fine sieve. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) previously cooked with a little of the lobster stock. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Blend in 4 egg yolks. Add 4 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Put the mixture in a buttered soufflé dish and cook in a slow oven for 25 to 30 minutes. Serve at once.

Little lobster soufflés can be served as an hors-d'œuvre or light main course. These are made from the same mixture as lobster soufflé, but are cooked in small buttered cups or cases.

Lobster on the spit. HOMARD À LA BROCHE – Plunge a large live lobster into boiling salt water for a few seconds to kill it instantly.

Put the lobster on a spit. Season with salt, pepper, thyme, and powdered bay leaf. Baste with melted butter or oil, with a dripping pan or other suitable dish underneath. Put into the pan a few tablespoons of dry white wine and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Cook in front of a very hot fire, basting frequently. A lobster weighing  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. (about 3 lb.) needs to be cooked for 40 to 45 minutes.

Remove the lobster from the spit and arrange on a long dish. Serve with the juice collected in the dripping pan.

Lobster on the spit can be served with spicy sauces such as Béarnaise, Curry, Ravigote (see SAUCE).

Lobster thermidor. HOMARD THERMIDOR – Split a lobster in two, lengthwise. Crack the shell of the claws and pick out the meat. Season both halves of the lobster with salt. Pour oil over them and roast in the oven for 15 to 20 minutes.

Dice the flesh. Make a stock of white wine, fish fumet and meat juices, flavoured with chervil, tarragon and chopped shallots. Boil it down to a concentrated consistency. Add to this a little very thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and some English mustard.

Boil the sauce for a few seconds, then whisk in fresh butter (one-third of the volume of the sauce). Line the two halves of the carcass with a little of this sauce. Fill them with the flesh of the lobster, cover with the remainder of the sauce, sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter and brown quickly in the oven.

(This is the recipe for lobster thermidor given to us by M. Tony Girod, for many years master chef of the famous Parisian restaurant, the Café de Paris.)

This dish is often prepared in a different way. The tail of the lobster is split in half and grilled, then the flesh is cut into thick slices and put back in the shells, which have been coated with a little cream sauce seasoned with mustard. They are covered with the same sauce and browned in the oven. (See FRENCH CULINARY APPELLATIONS.)

LOCUST or CAROB TREE. CAROUBE – Leguminous plant which grows in the East and in the Mediterranean. The long pod contains numerous seeds and a rather insipid sweet pulp.

LOIN. CARRÉ – The front part of a hindquarter of beef, mutton, lamb, pork or veal with the flank removed.

LONGCHAMP – A broth fundamental to Parisian cooking. It is made by cooking shredded sorrel and vermicelli in consommé and adding a purée of fresh green peas. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS.)

LONGE – This French term should refer only to the top part of the loin of veal (see VEAL).

It is, however, inaccurately extended to refer to the same part of any slaughtered animal.

LONZO (Corsican cookery) – Pork product eaten raw as an hors-d'œuvre, like raw salt ham, made from boned fillet of pork. This is steeped in brine with herbs and then dried.

LOQUAT or JAPANESE MEDLAR. NÈFLE DU JAPON – Fruit of the Japanese biwa. It looks something like a small plum. Its seeds are enclosed in a large stone. Loquats ripen in Provence from April onward. They are quite sweet, slightly tart, and refreshing.

LORDS AND LADIES. PIED-DE-VEAU – Common name for wild arum, the tuberous roots of which contain edible secula. It is also known as cuckoo-pint and wake-robin.

LORRAINE – District of high gastronomic repute. Here the connoisseur of good cooking will savour many succulent dishes, and will find white, red and rosé wines, all delightful, though some are more fragrant than others.

Culinary specialities – The dishes of Lorraine are, for the most part, substantial. Heading the list of the culinary specialities of what was once the ancient province of Lotharingie is the potée, the national soup of this region.

Then there is the quiche, a dish which goes back centuries in the gastronomic history of Lorraine. This is a tart made with eggs, cream and lean bacon. It is also called féouse.

Another characteristic local dish is the tourte à la Lorraine, made with two kinds of meat, veal and pork. These are first steeped with herbs in a marinade and then baked together on a bed of savoury egg custard in a pie crust of fine pastry.

Other specialities include ramequins; kneppes; oeufs à l'escargot (eggs with snails); choucroute (sauerkraut) à la messine; tourte aux oignons (onion tart similar to the Strasbourg onion tart); pâtés; quenelles de foie de veau (calves' liver forcemeat balls); civet de pork frais (civet of fresh pork); and a whole series of local pork products, the finest being the famous black pudding of Nancy. The potée meats and pâtés de foie gras of Lorraine rival in delicacy those of neighbouring Alsace.

A local writer, Auricoste de Lazarque, devoted a book of some 300 pages to the gastronomy of his homeland. He speaks with eloquence of the matelote de Metz; crayfish à la mode de Boulay; frogs' legs à la mode de Riom; partridge with cabbage à la Lorraine; and the daube of goose. He gives recipes for the soupe au lard de Lorraine; the soupe au boudin (black pudding soup); sucking pig in aspic; ham au foie;

Gastronomic map of Lorraine

the goose pâté of Rupt-de-Mad; soupe dorée; meillat or miot; rouyats (apple pies); chaudée (a kind of apple tart); chemitrés (a kind of waffle); and many other delicious dishes.

Among the delicate pastries made in Lorraine are the macarons and bergamotes of Nancy; the madeines of Commercy; the kugelhupf (similar to that of Alsace); Nancy cake; the nonettes of Remiremont; aniseed bread; and mirabelle plum tart. There are, too, the myrtle jams; the famous sugar almonds of Verdun; and many other sweet dishes.

The cheeses include Gérardmer cheese, admirable partner to the local wines, Lorraine cheese made from scalded curds, and Fromage, a kind of white cheese, which is spread on a slice of bread and sprinkled with chopped onions and shallots.

Wines – Among the wines of this region are the white, red and rosé wines of Côtes de Toul in Meurthe-et-Moselle, and the white and red wines of Moselle. Both varieties are in the V.D.Q.S. category (vins délimités de qualité supérieure).

LOTUS – In ancient Egypt the tuberous stump of white lotus was eaten, grilled or boiled. The pink lotus, on the other hand, being regarded as a sacred plant, was forbidden food.

LOUBINE – French local name for the grey mullet.

LOUISE-BONNE – Variety of pear.

LOVAGE. LIVÈCHE – Herb of the angelica family, much used in Roman cookery. The young leaves, ribs and leaf stalks are eaten like celery. The seeds are used in confectionery.

LOVE-IN-A-MIST. POIVRETTE – Common name for the cultivated nigella (q.v.).

LUMPY. GRENU – Stuffings or doughs are said to be lumpy when they are not thoroughly mixed and smooth.

LUNEL WINE – Muscatel wine made in the Hérault commune, round about Lunel. This is a sweet dessert wine.

ĹUPIN – A pulse (leguminous plant) used as fodder. Its bitter seeds can only be eaten after soaking in water.

LUTE. LUT – A paste which hardens as it dries. It is used to seal containers hermetically. Almond lute is made by mixing powdered almonds, from which the oil has been extracted, with starch paste. In cooking, a flour-and-water paste is used, which is also called repère or repaire.

LYONNAIS – The Lyonnais district, more industrial than agricultural, has a few fertile plains, notably those of Forez and Roannais, and market gardening is carried out on a large scale in the area. There is an abundance of good quality potatoes as well as excellent onions, such as those of Roanne, which are used in the preparation of a large number of special dishes, for example tripe à la lyonnaise.

Many other vegetables are grown. Fruit production is also an important industry, and some fruit, such as the apricots of Ampuis have a well-deserved reputation. So, too, have the sweet chestnuts which come from the many trees that flourish on the mountain sides.

The neighbouring regions converge on Lyons, a town of high gastronomic repute, with many excellent foodstuffs, such as the succulent poultry of Bresse.

Excellent meat is to be found in the Lyonnais district. Pigs, bred in large numbers, provide Lyons with the many well-known pork products made there. The game of this region is also of fine quality

Gastronomic map of Lyonnais

Excellent fish is caught in the Loire, the Saône and the Rhône, as well as in the local ponds.

Culinary specialties – The well-known Lyons sausage; pike au bleu; quenelles (fish balls) of pike à la lyonnaise; gratin of crayfish tails; matelots of Loire and Saône fish; omelette à la lyonnaise; black pudding with apples; tripe à la lyonnaise; poached saveloy with pistachio nuts and truffles; roulade of pig's head; Charlieu chitterlings; ham with walnuts; Marlihes sausage; chicken en demi-deuil; the celebrated poached chicken de la mère Filloux; chicken à la crème; chicken en vessie (chicken sausage); chicken célestine; veal en vessie (veal sausage); cardoons au gratin.

Among the special sweets of this region are bugnes lyonnaises (a special type of fritter); acacia blossom fritters; frangipane; the substantial matefaim (a type of pancake); and pumpkin cake.

Wines – Worthy accompaniment of the dishes made in the Lyonnais district, are the wines drunk by the gourmets of this food-loving region.

Beaujolais wines. See BURGUNDY.

Côtes du Forez. Under this V.D.Q.S. appellation Lyonnais produces a light and fruity Gamay red wine not unlike Beaujolais.

LYOPHILISATION – Lyophilisation or freeze-drying is a method of drying pre-frozen products. The process is carried out in several stages and results in a perfectly dry, stable, end product, unaltered in quality. Foods of animal and vegetable origin treated thus (delicate fruit, fruit juices, vegetables, coffee, tea, milk, fish fillets, certain meats) have the same texture, taste, aroma, vitamins, fatty acids and proteins.

Other advantages are easy rehydration of the treated foods; instant consumption; long-term conservation; ease of transport, storage and distribution (weight and volume are reduced, due to the elimination of water).

MACARONI – A farinaceous food, originally from Italy (some authorities give Naples as its place of origin), where it has been eaten for centuries. Macaroni, like all other pasta, is very nourishing.

Cooking macaroni. CUISSON DE MACARONI – Put 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) water in a pan, adding salt in the ratio of 1½ teaspoons per litre (scant quart, generous quart). Bring it to the boil and put in 150 g. (5 oz.) macaroni, broken into pieces.

Boil very fast for 16 to 20 minutes according to the thickness of the macaroni. Like all pasta products, macaroni must not be overcooked. Remove the saucepan from the stove. Cover it and leave the pasta to swell in the water for a few minutes.

Drain the macaroni and put it back in the saucepan. Evaporate all moisture by leaving it on the stove for a few seconds. This is necessary to get rid of any water absorbed by the macaroni during cooking.

Proceed according to the recipe used.

Macaroni à l'anglaise – Boil the macaroni as indicated above. Heap on a serving platter. Serve with butter.

Macaroni à la béchamel – Add several tablespoons Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) to the cooked macaroni. Season. Mix. Just before serving, add 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) butter.

Macaroni pieces (Nicolas)

Macaroni with butter. MACARONI AU BEURRE – Add 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) fresh butter, cut into small pieces, to the cooked macaroni. Season. Toss so that the butter is well mixed in.

Macaroni with cheese. MACARONI AU FROMAGE – Another name for Macaroni à l'italienne (see below).

Macaroni with cream. MACARONI À LA CRÈME – Boil the macaroni until it is three-parts cooked. Drain and put back in the saucepan on the stove to evaporate all moisture. Moisten with 2 dl. (¼ pint, scant cup) boiled fresh cream. Simmer slowly for 10 to 12 minutes. Season with a pinch of salt and a little grated nutmeg. Remove the pan from the stove and mix in 60 g. (2½ oz., 5 tablespoons) butter cut into small pieces.

Macaroni à la créole – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne (see below). Make a coarse salpicon (q.v.) of sweet peppers (green and red), very small vegetable marrows (zucchini, courgettes) tossed in oil, tomatoes tossed in oil, and a touch of garlic. Bind with cheese. Mix this salpicon with the macaroni.

Macaroni croquettes. MACARONI EN CROQUETTES – These are made in the usual way (see CROQUETTES) using macaroni, boiled in salt water, drained, diced and blended with Allemande or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

Macaroni à la fermière – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne (see below). Serve in a deep dish alternating with layers of a vegetable fondue of carrots, turnips, celery, onion and leek, finely sliced and cooked slowly in butter until very tender.

Macaroni au gratin

Macaroni au gratin – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne (see below). Serve in an ovenware dish lined with butter and grated cheese. Sprinkle the top of the macaroni with mixed breadcrumbs and grated cheese. Pour melted butter over and brown in the oven.

MACAROON

Macaroni à l'italienne – Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) grated cheese (a mixture of Gruyère and Parmesan) and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter cut into small pieces, to the cooked macaroni. Season with salt and a little grated nutmeg. Toss to mix thoroughly. Heap on a serving plate. One kind of cheese only need be used, though a mixture of Parmesan and Gruyère gives better results.

Macaroni à la Lucullus – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne. Serve in a dish with alternate layers of a coarse salpicon of foie gras and truffles blended in a very concentrated Madeira sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate the top of the macaroni with strips of truffle.

Macaroni à la milanaise – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne. Add 2 to 3 tablespoons Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with tomato, and 2 to 3 tablespoons of Milanaise garnish (coarsely shredded ham, pickled tongue, mushrooms and truffles).

Mix well and heap on a serving platter.

Macaroni à la mirepoix – Make a mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables, rather coarsely diced, cooked slowly in butter until very tender and blended with cheese. It should be a quarter of the weight of the macaroni. Mix the mirepoix with the cooked macaroni. Put in an ovenproof dish lined with butter and grated cheese. Sprinkle the top of the macaroni with cheese. Pour butter over and brown in the oven.

Macaroni à la Nantua – Macaroni à l'italienne served in a pie crust of lining pastry baked blind, with alternate layers of Crayfish tail ragout à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH).

Macaroni à la napolitaine I – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne. Add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) to the macaroni. Mix. Serve in a deep dish. Sprinkle with grated cheese.

Macaroni à la napolitaine II – Break some thick macaroni into short sticks, and boil in salt water until the macaroni is three-parts cooked. Drain and mix with butter.

Put the macaroni in an ovenproof dish lined with butter and grated cheese, with alternate layers of cooked Braised beef (see BEEF) rubbed through a sieve. Sprinkle the layers with grated cheese. Warm over a low heat and serve.

Macaroni à la piémontaise – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne. After adding the butter and cheese, add very finely sliced white truffles. Mix and serve in a deep dish.

The white truffles are cooked by the heat of the macaroni.

Macaroni with seafood. MACARONI AUX FRUITS DE MER – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne. Serve in a deep dish with alternate layers of Seafood ragout (see RAGOÛT).

Macaroni à la sicilienne – Proceed as for Macaroni à l'italienne. Add, at the same time as the butter and cheese, a few tablespoons of purée of chicken livers mixed with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Serve in a deep dish.

Macaroni in stock. MACARONI AU JUS – Boil the macaroni until it is three-parts cooked. Drain and put in a saucepan with brown veal or beef stock. Cover and leave to simmer slowly for 12 to 15 minutes.

Heap on a serving dish and pour over it 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) concentrated brown stock.

Macaroni with tomato sauce. MACARONI À LA TOMATE – Proceed as for Macaroni in stock, substituting tomato sauce for the stock.

Macaroni with truffles. MACARONI AUX TRUFFES – Mix butter, cheese and coarsely shredded truffles tossed in butter with the macaroni. Decorate the top with strips of truffles.

MACAROON. MACARON – Small round dry pastry made of almond paste, sugar and egg white.

The origin of this pastry is unknown. Some authorities suggest that this little biscuit was invented in Italy, and from there came to France, where it was appreciated by connoisseurs, and was subsequently mass produced.

Delicately flavoured macaroons are made in various parts of France. Those of Nancy are considered the best. They have been made for nearly two centuries by successive generations of the same family, and are known as the macaroons of the 'Macaroon Sisters'.

In the eighteenth century, it became the custom in many convents for the nuns to make macaroons. The nuns of the Convent of the Visitation of Our Lady at Melun made these and other sweetmeats.

When, in 1748, the Court was at Fontainebleau, the Dauphin and his wife went to visit the Convent of the Visitation of Our Lady at Melun, at the Port de Bière the procession was addressed by the Mayor, who offered the visitors a ceremonial bottle of wine with a basket of biscuits, macaroons, sugar sticks and other sweetmeats.

Plain macaroons. MACARONS ORDINAIRES – Pound in a mortar 200 g. (7 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds (4 of which should be bitter almonds) moistened with 1 egg white. As soon as the almonds are well pounded, add 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) sugar. Mix and add  $\frac{1}{2}$  egg white. Still mixing, add 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) sugar and the rest of the egg white.

The mixture must be rather soft but not runny. If necessary at this stage add another  $\frac{1}{2}$  egg white and mix thoroughly.

Pipe the mixture onto a sheet of rice paper. The macaroons should be 3 to 4 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inches) in diameter, and far enough apart to prevent them from running into one another during baking.

Sprinkle with icing sugar and bake at 180°C. (350°F., Gas Mark 4) for 20 minutes or until the macaroons are a rich golden colour.

Crisp macaroons. MACARONS CROQUANTS – Pound in a mortar 250 g. (9 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) blanched almonds with a little egg white. Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar flavoured to taste. Mix well. Add to the mixture 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar and enough egg white to make a fairly soft but not runny paste. Spoon small heaps of this mixture onto rice paper. Bake at 180°C. (350°F., Gas Mark 4) for 18 to 20 minutes.

Hazelnut macaroons. MACARONS AUX NOISETTES – Hazelnuts, egg whites and sugar are used for these macaroons. The hazelnuts are not blanched. The method is the same as for plain macaroons.

Pine kernel macaroons can also be made in the same way.

In accordance with a regulation regarding the naming of foodstuffs, the above biscuits may no longer commercially be called macaroons in France.

Montmorillon macaroons. MACARONS DE MONTMORILLON – These macaroons are shaped through a fluted nozzle into rings. They are a speciality of Vienna.

Niort macaroons. MACARONS DE NIORT – Pound in a mortar 375 g. (13 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds with 5 egg whites and 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sugar. Transfer the mixture to a small saucepan and dry out on the stove. Add 4 teaspoons finely chopped crystallised angelica.

Proceed as usual.

Macaroons à la parisienne. MACARONS À LA PARISIENNE – Pound in a mortar 250 g. (9 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) blanched almonds with 4 egg whites. Add 375 g. (13 oz., 3 cups) fine sugar and a little vanilla. Mix well. Put the mixture in a bowl and blend in 2 more egg whites. Whisk the mixture. Pipe onto rice paper. Sprinkle with sugar and bake as indicated above.

Soft macaroons. MACARONS MOELLEUX – Pound in a mortar 250 g. (9 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) almonds with 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) lump sugar. Pound into this mixture enough double cream and egg white to make a paste which is soft but not runny.

Spoon the mixture onto sheets of rice paper and bake as indicated above.

MACE. MACIS – Dried shell of the nutmeg. Its flavour is midway between that of nutmeg and cinnamon. It is used to flavour marinades, brines and sauces.

MACÉDOINE – Mixture of raw or cooked fruit or vegetables. It can be served either hot or cold.

The name macédoine is derived from Macedonia, the country formed by small states which were conquered by Alexander the Great.

MACÉDOINE OF FRUIT. MACÉDOINE DE FRUITS –

Macédoine of fruit, chilled (fruit salad). MACÉDOINE DE FRUITS RAFAÏCHIS – Mix in a bowl, fruit in season, such as quartered or sliced pears, peeled and sliced bananas, sliced apricots, strawberries, whole raspberries, blanched fresh almonds, etc.

Pour a heavy sugar syrup over the fruit, or sprinkle each layer of fruit with fine sugar. Flavour with a few teaspoons of kirsch, maraschino, or other liqueur.

Embed the bowl of fruit in a bucket of crushed ice. Leave to chill for 2 hours.

MACÉDOINE OF VEGETABLES. MACÉDOINE DE LÉGUMES –

Macédoine of vegetables with butter. MACÉDOINE DE LÉGUMES AU BEURRE – Shape carrots and turnips into balls with a ball-scoop, or dice them finely. Dice French beans or cut them into lozenges. Dice green asparagus tips. Boil each of these vegetables and some green peas separately in salt water.

Heat the vegetables together and blend in butter. Season.

Cold macédoine of vegetables. MACÉDOINE DE LÉGUMES FROIDS – Prepare, cook and mix in a bowl the same vegetables as in the recipe for Macédoine of vegetables with butter. Dress with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper or with mayonnaise.

This dish can be eaten either as a salad or an hors-d'œuvre.

Macédoine of vegetables with cream. MACÉDOINE DE LÉGUMES À LA CRÈME – Prepare and cook the same mixture of vegetables as above. Blend in fresh cream.

Macédoine of vegetables in jelly. MACÉDOINE DE LÉGUMES À LA GELÉE – This type of macédoine, which is usually served with mayonnaise mixed with concentrated jelly stock, is set in a mould lined with jelly. It is also known as aspic of vegetables.

MACKEREL. MAQUEREAU – A long, slender, saltwater fish. Its scales are small and smooth, its back steely blue or greenish, its belly an opalescent silvery white. It is fatty and savoury, and is eaten fresh, smoked, salted or soured.

Its real name is soombrid. The name mackerel is derived from the French word maquereau which also means a 'procurer' or 'pimp'. It was given to this fish because of its habit of escorting the young shad (known as 'virgins') to the males. The male mackerel is polygamous.

The French name for young mackerels is sansonnets.

Mackerel à l'anglaise. MAQUEREAU À L'ANGLAISE – Cut the fish into thick slices. Poach in a court-bouillon (q.v.) flavoured with fennel. Serve with a rather liquid gooseberry purée.

Mackerel à la bouillonnaise. MAQUEREAU À LA BOULLONNAISE – Cut the mackerel into thick slices. Poach in a court-bouillon with a good deal of vinegar. Drain and skin. Arrange on a dish and surround with shelled, poached mussels. Cover with Butter sauce (see SAUCE) moistened with a little of the mackerel and mussel cooking stocks.

Mackerel with browned butter I. MAQUEREAU AU BEURRE

NOISETTE – Poach the mackerel, sliced or filleted, in a court-bouillon. Put it on a serving dish and pour lemon juice over it. Before serving, pour on 2 to 3 tablespoons butter heated in a pan until nut brown.

Mackerel with browned butter II. MAQUEREAU AU BEURRE NOIR – Cut the mackerel into thick slices or fillet it. Poach in a vinegar court-bouillon. Drain. Put on a serving dish and dry it a little in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and capers. Pour a little lemon juice or vinegar over it. Before serving, pour on 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter heated in a frying pan until very dark brown.

The mackerel can also be prepared as follows:

Put it on a serving dish. Dry in the oven and sprinkle with capers. Pour a little lemon juice or vinegar over it. Pour on browned butter as indicated above, with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) parsley leaves fried in it.

Mackerel Colbert. MAQUEREAU COLBERT – Slit the fish along the back. Open it and remove the bone. Season with salt and pepper. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry. Serve with Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Mackerel in court-bouillon. MAQUEREAU AU COURT-BOUILLON – Poach the fish, whole or sliced, in a court-bouillon of water with vinegar or lemon juice, seasoned with salt and flavoured with thyme and bay leaves.

Drain. Garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with one of the following sauces: Butter, Parsley, Hollandaise, Lobster, Ravigote, Venetian (see SAUCE).

Fillets of mackerel à la dieppoise. FILETS DE MAQUEREAU À LA DIEPPOISE – Poach the fillets in white wine, and drain. Arrange on a dish surrounded by a Dieppoise garnish (see GARNISHES). Cover with White wine sauce (see SAUCE), with the cooking liquor of the mussels and fillets added to it. Sprinkle the garnish with chopped parsley.

Fillets of mackerel with aubergines. FILETS DE MAQUEREAU AUX AUBERGINES – Season the fillets and fry them in butter à la meunière. Put them on a serving dish. Surround with slices of aubergine fried in butter. Squeeze lemon juice over the fillets. Pour on the cooking butter, piping hot.

Fillets of mackerel à la florentine. FILETS DE MAQUEREAU À LA FLORENTINE – Cook the fillets in a very little white wine. Cook-leaf spinach in butter. Arrange the fillets on this bed of spinach. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE) with the fish cooking stock added to it. Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter and brown in the oven or under a grill.

Fillets of mackerel au gratin. FILETS DE MAQUEREAU AU GRATIN – Proceed as for Sole au gratin (see SOLE).

Fillets of mackerel with various garnishes. FILETS DE MAQUEREAU AVEC GARNITURES DIVERSES – Cook in butter and surround with one of the following garnishes: cèpes sautéed in oil; thick slices of mushrooms cooked in butter; cucumber cut into small oval chunks and cooked in butter; very small vegetable marrows (courgettes or zucchinis) cut into rounds and sautéed in butter or oil; tomatoes sautéed in oil or butter and flavoured with garlic; coarsely diced potatoes sautéed in butter.

Pour lemon juice and the cooking butter, piping hot, over the fillets.

Fillets of mackerel à la lyonnaise. FILETS DE MAQUEREAU À LA LYONNAISE – Line a dish with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion which has been gently cooked in butter and moistened with 1 tablespoon vinegar. Season the fillets, lay them on top of the onion and cover them with more onion prepared in the same way. Moisten with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) white wine. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs, and dot with tiny pieces of butter. Bake in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Fillets of mackerel à la piémontaise. FILETS DE MAQUEREAU

How to fillet mackerel: Trace the contours of the fillet with a knife (Larousse)

Slide the knife along the backbone and detach the fillet (Larousse)

À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Season the fillets and dip in egg and breadcrumbs. Fry in butter.

Serve on a foundation of risotto (q.v.) and surround with a border of Tomato fondue (see FONDUE).

Fillets of mackerel à la vénitienne. FILETS DE MAQUEURAU À LA VÉNITIENNE – Cook the fillets in white wine with chopped shallots and chervil. Drain. Put on a serving dish. Cover with Venetian sauce (see SAUCE) to which the boiled-down pan juices have been added.

Fillets of mackerel in white wine. FILETS DE MAQUEURAU AU VIN BLANC – Trim the fillets and season them with salt and pepper. Put in a buttered baking tin. Moisten with concentrated white wine fish fumet (q.v.) and bake in the oven for 8 to 10 minutes. Drain, boil down the pan juices and use as a basis for White wine sauce (see SAUCE). Pour the sauce over the mackerel and serve.

Fried mackerel. MAQUEURAU FRIT – This is especially suitable for small mackerel. Dip in cold, boiled milk. Flour lightly and deep-fry in very hot fat. Drain, dry on a cloth and season with dry table salt. Garnish with fried parsley and lemon.

Grilled mackerel. MAQUEURAU GRILLÉ – Snip off the tip of the mackerel's jaw and slit the fish along the back. Open it and cut the bone in two places without separating the halves. Season, baste with melted butter and grill slowly.

Shape the mackerel in its original form. Pour on half melted Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Any sauce suitable for grilled fish, e.g. Bordelaise, Provençale, Saint-Malo (see SAUCE) can be served with mackerel.

Mackerel à la meunière. MAQUEURAU À LA MEUNIÈRE – Prepare like Bass à la meunière (see BASS).

Mackerel soft roes. LAITANCES DE MAQUEURAU – See SOFT ROES.

Soused mackerel. MAQUEURAU MARINÉS – Usually served as a cold hors-d'œuvre. Proceed as for Marinade of fresh herrings (see HERRING).

MÂCON WINE. VIN DE MÂCON – The name of Mâcon is well known, thanks to the excellent wines made from the grapes grown around this town in the Saône-et-Loire département.

The Côte mâconnaise extends along the slopes which run almost parallel to the right bank of the Saône between Tournus and the boundary of the Rhône département.

Mâconnaise wines (known as Mâcon wines) are full bodied and very smooth, with a delicate and distinctive aroma.

The most famous of the white Mâcon wines are Pouilly-

Fuissé, Pouilly-Loché and Pouilly-Vinzelles, all from the Solutré region, south of Mâcon. (See BURGUNDY.)

MÂCONNAISE – Wine cask in use in the Mâconnaise district. It holds about 212 litres (46½ gallons, 58 gallons).

This name is also applied to a bottle, containing 8 dl. (1½ pints, 1⅓ pints), which is used for Mâconnaise wines.

MÂCONNAISE (À LA) – Name given to various meat dishes flavoured with red wine.

MADDER-WORT. GARANCE – Plant used in dyeing, from which a kind of beer can be brewed.

MADEIRA CAKE – Mix 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sifted flour with ½ teaspoon salt. Cream 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) butter and 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) sugar. Beat 10 egg yolks until light and add to the butter mixture. Sift in the flour gradually. Add ½ teaspoon lemon essence and the grated rind of ½ lemon. Beat the egg whites until stiff, and fold in. Line 2 900-g. (2-lb.) bread tins with buttered paper or waxed paper. Pour the batter into the pans and sprinkle the surface with sugar. Bake 1¼ hours at 150°C. (300°F., Gas Mark 2). Place small slices of candied citron on the surface of the cake after the first 15 minutes of baking.

MADEIRA WINE. VIN DE MADÈRE – This wine, which is made from grapes grown on the island of Madeira in the Atlantic Ocean, is one of the finest of fortified wines.

Various types of wine are made in Madeira, such as Malmsey, Muscatel, Dry Madeira, made from the grapes of vines which are said to have been imported into Madeira from Cyprus in about the fifteenth century. Funchal, the capital of the island, is the storehouse of these wines.

Madeira is a tonic and an exhilarating wine. It is drunk as an apéritif before meals and is used a great deal in cooking.

Madeira pie. CROÛTE AU MADÈRE – Fruit pie served with apricot sauce flavoured with Madeira.

Madeira sauce. SAUCE AU MADÈRE – A deux-glaces sauce boiled down with Madeira. (See SAUCE.)

Madeira sherbets. SORBETS AU MADÈRE – Sherbets served in sherbet glasses with Madeira poured over them just before serving.

MADELEINE – A small cake made of flour, butter, eggs and sugar.

A chronicler of the history of pastry-making says that the great pastry-cook, Avise, invented the madeleine when he was working for Prince Talleyrand. 'He had the idea of using tôt-fait (q.v.) or quatre-quarts (q.v.) mixture for little cakes baked in an aspic mould. M. Boucher and Carême approved

Madeleines made in old-fashioned moulds

the idea. He gave the name of madeleines to these cakes.' (Lacam, Mémorial de la pâtisserie.)

Other authorities, however, hold that far from having been invented by Avice, these little cakes were known in France long before his time. They believe that they were first made at Commercy, and were brought into fashion about 1730, first at Versailles and then, in Paris, by Stanislas Leczinski, father-in-law of Louis XV, who was very partial to them.

The recipe for madeleines remained a secret for a very long time. It is said that it was sold for a very large sum to the pastry-makers of Commercy, who made of this great delicacy one of the finest gastronomic specialties of their town.

Commercy madeleines

Commercy madeleine. MADELEINE DE COMMERCEY — Work together in a bowl 625 g. (1 lb. 6 oz., 5 cups) fine sugar, 625 g. (1 lb. 6 oz.,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 12 eggs,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons bicarbonate of soda, the grated rind of a lemon, a pinch of salt.

When this mixture is very smooth, add to it 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) melted butter. Mix well. Put in buttered madeleine moulds. Bake in a very slow oven.

Plain madeleines. MADELEINES ORDINAIRES - Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) fine sugar, 250 g. (9 oz., 2¼ cups) sieved flour, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) melted butter, 4 eggs, a pinch of salt, vanilla or other flavouring.

Method. Put the sugar, flour, eggs, salt and flavouring into a bowl. Work with a spatula until the mixture is smooth. Add the melted butter.

Butter and flour the required number of madeleine moulds. Spoon in the mixture. The moulds should be two-thirds full. Bake at 190°C. (375°F., Gas Mark 5) for 15 to 20 minutes.

MADERISED. MADÉRISE – Certain white wines acquire with age a flavour of Madeira. These are said to be maderised.

The term madérisé in modern French also applies to the unpleasant bottle smell of a wine kept for too long a period.

MADRILÈNE (À LA) – Name given to a clear soup (generally served cold or chilled) which is flavoured with tomato juice. The name is also applied to other dishes, flavoured with tomato juice.

MAGISTÈRES – Name given to a number of nourishing soups invented by Brillat-Savarin, author of la Physiologie du goût.

'The first of the magistères', says Brillat-Savarin, 'is made as follows:

'Take 6 large onions, 3 carrots, a handful of parsley. Chop all these ingredients and put them in a pot to warm and brown with a piece of good fresh butter.

'When the mixture is just right, throw in 175 g. (6 oz.) candied sugar, 20 grains pounded amber, with a slice of toast and 3 bottles of water. Boil for 45 minutes and add fresh water to make up the small amount lost through evaporation, so that 3 bottles full of liquid remain.

'Pound an old fowl, flesh, bones and all, in a mortar with an iron pestle. Chop 900 g. (2 lb.) carefully chosen beef.

'When this is done mix the two meats, adding salt and pepper. Put the mixture in a saucepan over a high flame, so that the heat penetrates right through, and from time to time add a little fresh butter so that the mixture is well browned without sticking to the pan.

'When the stock begins to brown, strain the soup which is in the first saucepan. With this, moisten little by little the mixture in the second saucepan, and, when it is all mixed in, boil it for 45 minutes so that the surface of the liquid ripples throughout. Care must be taken to add hot water from time to time so that the liquid level remains constant. The result is a potion whose beneficial effect is certain as long as the invalid, however exhausted he may be, is still able to digest food.'

Brillat-Savarin goes on to explain how the magistère should be given to the invalid.

“On the first day he should be given a cup every 3 hours until he settles down for the night; on the following days, a large cup in the morning only and the same amount in the evening, until the 3 bottles are used up. The invalid should be kept on a light though nourishing diet, such as legs of poultry, fish, sweet fruit and jam.

'Towards the fourth day the invalid should be able to return to normal life.

'This magistère,' Brillat-Savarin points out, 'is intended for robust and dynamic characters and for people who generally wear themselves out by burning up their energies.'

The master suggests another magistère made from shin of veal, pigeons and crayfish, intended for 'the weak and the infirm'.

MAGNY – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

MAGPIE. PIE – Common bird in France, sometimes eaten in the country. The flesh is very dry and is used mainly for stock. Young magpies are more tender and more edible.

MAIA – Name given in the Balkans to milk soured by previous fermentation and used as a leaven in the preparation of yoghurt.

MAIGRE – French word describing foods prescribed by the Church for consumption during Lent and days of abstinence. In the early days, only foods of vegetable origin were permitted, but gradually the Church authorised butter and eggs; then the flesh of cold-blooded creatures such as fish: then certain waterfowl (considered to be cold-blooded, too) such as the shoveller duck, the pintail, the scoter, the waterhen, the coot, the teal, the water-rail, the curlew, the heron, the godwit, the sandpiper and the wheatear.

MAILLOT – See GARNISHES.

MAINE – See ORLÉANAIS.

MAINTENON (À LA) – See MIXTURES, Maintenon mixture.

MAIRE – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

MAISON – The term maison is often abused in restaurants. All too often one reads: sole (or some other fish) maison, chicken maison, etc.

The epithet maison, in its origin and in the minds of restaurateurs who use it honestly, indicates that the dish in question has been made by the restaurateur himself or his staff, following a recipe which he can claim as his own.

Nevertheless, the term does lack precision. It would be more satisfactory to say de notre maison or à la manière de notre maison, since maison as it stands is vague enough for unscrupulous restaurateurs to offer as a Tarte maison, for instance, a pastry which comes from a maison other than their own, from a wholesale confectioner, in fact!

There would be no great harm in this, were it not that more serious abuses may arise from it, when, for instance maison is applied to a product whose name implies its place of origin. Fine maison, i.e. Fine Champagne (a liqueur brandy) would be suspect, because, by law, the designations 'Cognac' and 'Fine Champagne' are reserved exclusively, under pain of prosecution and severe penalties, for brandies made in Cognac or within the official boundaries of the Fine Champagne region. Thus, the expression fine maison is a purely fanciful one. It suggests to the consumer a Fine Champagne which the maison has imported for its own exclusive use from the Fine Champagne region. In fact it merely enables the restaurateur to sell, without risk of prosecution, adulterated brandy, made from spirits which might come from anywhere.

MAISON DORÉE – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

MAISON DU ROI (Royal Household) – Under the old French monarchy, this was the name given to all the departments and personnel of the court. Chief among these was the bouche du roi (royal kitchens), which was made up of a very large number of officials.

MAITRANK – Drink very popular in Germany. The name is made up of the words mai (May) and trank (drink), indicating that it is made in the spring.

It is prepared from young, fragrant, asperula shoots. This plant is also known as woodruff.

Put some young asperula shoots in a large soup tureen. Moisten with a bottle of white Rhine wine and 2 to 4 table-spoons of brandy. Cover the tureen and leave to infuse for 30 minutes. Add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar dissolved in a little water. Mix.

This drink can also be made with white Alsace wine or white Graves.

MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL – Nowadays, the title of maître d'hôtel is reserved for the man in charge of the dining-room in a hotel or restaurant. He is assisted by a team of senior, junior and assistant waiters.

Formerly this title was used also of a hotel proprietor, but only in the provinces.

Previously in royal, princely, and other noble households, the office of maître d'hôtel was always held by persons of the highest rank, sometimes princes of the blood royal. Although at that time the office was a sinecure, the maître d'hôtel was, at least nominally, in charge of all departments of the royal household, including the kitchens and cellars, and all the functionaries and servants.

The maître d'hôtel of a modern restaurant or a great private establishment today, must have a very extensive range of technical knowledge. He must have qualities of leadership which will enable him to command his staff with authority and courtesy. He must be a first-class administrator and a tactful diplomat.

He must be thoroughly familiar with details of the special work of the dining-room, kitchens and cellars. He must be able to talk to the clients – in several languages – politely but not obsequiously. He must be able to advise his clients, to guide them in their choice of dishes, the wines to go with them and the fruit to follow.

These are the qualities which the modern maître d'hôtel must possess. If he is no longer a grand seigneur, as were the important personages who filled this office in the great royal households, he is usually a man of distinction, good education and, particularly, a master of his art, for service at the table is as much an art as cooking.

MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL BUTTER. BEURRE À LA MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL – A seasoned butter served with grilled meat or fish, fried fish and other dishes. It is prepared by creaming fresh butter with chopped parsley, lemon juice, salt and pepper. (See BUTTER, Compound butters.)

MAIZE – See CORN.

MALAGA – A sweet wine made in Andalusia, which enjoys a great reputation and is used in cooking and confectionery. There is white Malaga, which is a golden colour, and red Malaga.

MALAXER – French word meaning to knead a substance in order to soften it.

MALIC ACID. MALIQUE – An organic acid present in most fruit and some vegetables.

MALLOW. MAUVE – Plant whose leaves, which contain a viscous substance, are used as an emollient in poultices and infusions.

The flowers are soothing to chest troubles. The leaves can be eaten in salad or as a vegetable, like spinach.

MALMSEY (MALVOISIE) WINE. VIN DE MALVOISIE – This famous wine made in Madeira, Cyprus and the Canary Islands is named after a vine originating in the Greek island, Malavosia. The transplanted vine yields a slightly musky wine, sometimes a little bitter, and heavy and, occasionally, perfectly dry.

It is very similar to Frontignac, and is drunk as an apéritif. It is also used a great deal in cooking in the preparation of sweets, and to flavour certain sauces, instead of Madeira and other heavy wines.

MALT – Barley prepared for brewing by steeping, germination or kiln drying. (See BEER.)

Malt extract. EXTRAIT DE MALT – A concentrated infusion of germinated barley which is made into syrups or crystals. It is used as a food, especially to moisten porridges for very young babies, because of its enzyme content.

MANCHE – In French cookery, the projecting bone of a cutlet is called a manche.

MANCHETTE – A paper frill for the projecting bones of cutlets or joints. (See PAPILOTTE.)

MANCHON – This is a name for:

1. A small cake made of flaky pastry and baked in a mould in the shape of a muff.

2. A petit four made of almond paste rolled out rather thin, baked for a few seconds in the oven, then rolled on a wooden handle to make a kind of little muff.

When these manchons are cold they are filled with butter cream flavoured with praline (q.v.). Each end of the biscuit is then dipped into very finely shredded green almonds.

MANGE-TOUT – Sugar pea or bean of which the pod is eaten as well as the seeds. They are cooked in the same way as French beans (see BEANS, French beans).

MANGO, MANGUE – The mango tree, of which the mango is the fruit, is of East Indian origin. It is cultivated in the East Indies, Cayenne, Malaya, China, the island of Mauritius and in southern Florida and California in U.S.A.

The mango is an oblong fruit about the size of a big pear, green in colour, turning orange-yellow when ripe with a rosy blush on the side exposed to the sun. The flesh is orange-yellow in colour, similar to that of a carrot. It is pleasant in flavour but a little acid and does not appeal to all tastes.

Besides being eaten raw, mangoes can also be made into jam and are used in the preparation of Indian chutney, a pickle with a great reputation, used as a condiment.

MANGOSTEEN, MANGOUSTAN – This tree grows in India and the Spice Islands. Its fruit (not to be confused with the mango) is about the size of an orange, with a delicious raspberry-flavoured pulp. It is eaten raw, used to make jams and other preserves and as an ingredient of desserts.

MANICAMP – See CHEESE.

MANICLE – Vine grown in Bugey. It yields a 'muddy' (épais) wine. Brillat-Savarin says that this vine was planted by the Romans.

MANIER – French culinary term for working a mixture by hand. It is particularly applied to thoroughly mixing a quantity of flour with butter or other fat. This mixture is used to rapidly thicken sauces, gravies and stews, and is called kneaded butter.

MANQUÉ – A cake very popular in Paris.

One recipe for manqué is given under SPONGE CAKE.
Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., 2½ cups) sifted flour, 375 g. (13 oz., 2 cups) fine sugar, 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter, 9 eggs, a small pinch of salt, vanilla.

Method. Work the egg yolks with the sugar, vanilla and salt in a mixing bowl. When the mixture is light and fluffy, add the melted butter, flour, then, stirring gently, the stiffly beaten whites of egg. Fill a brioche mould with this mixture. Bake in a slow oven. Sprinkle with praline (q.v.) and decorate the top with a piece of crystallised fruit.

MANZANILLA WINE – Kind of sherry.

MAPLE, ÉRABLE À SUCRE – A true native of South America, and cultivated in the United States and Canada. The trunk of this tree, tapped in the spring, yields abundant sap which can be fermented or made into vinegar, but which is usually eaten in the form of syrup (maple syrup) or sugar (maple sugar).

A maple tree can yield, in 24 hours, as much as 30 kg. (66 lb.) sap containing 2 kg. (4½ lb.) sugar.

Several varieties of maple yield sugar.

MARAÎCHÈRE (À LA) – Method of preparation applied especially to large roast or braised cuts of meat. The main ingredients are carrots, small onions, braised stuffed cucumbers, salsify, artichokes, Château potatoes (see POTATOES).

MARASCHINO, MARASQUIN – Liqueur made chiefly in Zara, in Dalmatia. Its main ingredient is a type of black cherry called marasca in Italy.

The cherries are pounded and the stones crushed (which is not the case with kirsch). Honey is added and the mixture is left to ferment. It is then distilled and sugar is added.

MARBLED, PERSILLÉ – Meat is said to be marbled when it is flecked with tiny particles of fat. This marbling only occurs in meat of the finest quality.

In French the term persillé is also applied to various green-veined cheeses.

MARC – The residue of various fruits and vegetables after pressing. The word is often used as an abbreviation for eau-de-vie de marc, a spirit distilled from the marc of grapes. It can also mean the residue of substances like tea or coffee from which the goodness has been extracted by boiling or steeping.

MARCHE AND LIMOUSIN – Geographically and historically these two ancient French provinces are different from each other. Gastronomically, however, they can be regarded as one, for not only are they neighbours but they share the same produce and the same culinary specialities.

The province of Limousin is now divided into the départements of Corrèze and Haute-Vienne. The famous hare à la royale was created in this province.

Potted foie gras and pâtés de foie gras are made in Brive.

Limoges china, as well as its cuisine, is famous.

In these two ancient provinces are to be found foodstuffs of every kind and of the highest quality.

The cattle of Limousin are famous, as are its pigs, from which excellent pork products are made. Ground and winged game abound in the Marche and Limousin provinces. Fresh-water fish (carp, perch, pike and others) fill the rivers, lakes and ponds of the region. The trout of Vienne, Maulde and Vézère are very delicate in flavour. Crayfish abound in the waterways. Notable, too, are the salmon of Vézère.

The market gardens produce excellent vegetables, and there is an abundance of fruit and chestnuts.

In the woods and fields of this region, all kinds of fungi are to be found, in particular cèpes and morels.

Excellent cheeses are made in the Marche and Limousin provinces.

The slopes of Argentat and Queyssac in Corrèze produce pleasant wines. The rosé wines of Chabanais, Étagnat, Saint-Brice, Verneuil and Aise, in the Vienne Valley, have a high reputation.

Culinary specialities – Soupe bouillie d'avoine (oat porridge); soupe au pain de seigle (rye-bread soup); soupe aux choux (cabbage soup); soupe Bréjauda (a soup made from cabbage and bacon. With this soup the people of Limousin make chabrol; they add half a glass of red wine to the last few spoonfuls of soup left in the plate).

Farciures (balls made from buckwheat flour mixed with sorrel and beetroot and wrapped in cabbage leaves. These are sometimes made small and cooked in cabbage soup). Trout à la meunière; matelotes of fish de la Corrèze; crayfish in court-bouillon; broccana (meat pâtés, made from sausage meat and veal); hare au Cabessal or Chabessal (this dish, which is the great culinary speciality of the region, is known among connoisseurs as hare à la royale). Cèpes stuffed à la corrézienne; farciure of fried potatoes; chou farci (stuffed cabbage).

Among the sweets and desserts are Limousin clafoutis; flognarde; fruit tart; cheese pâté; tourtons (buckwheat galettes); the macaroons of Dorat; the croquants (biscuits) of Bort-les-Orgues; the meringues of Uzerches.

Gastronomic map of Marche and Limousin

MARÉCHALE (À LA) -- Method of preparing escalopes, wings and breasts of poultry and other small cuts, dipping them in egg and breadcrumbs and frying them in butter. These small cuts are usually garnished with green asparagus tips and truffles.

MARÉE -- French collective name for all the seawater fish, shellfish and seafood sold in a fish market.

Paris had a regular daily supply of fresh fish as early as the sixteenth century, thanks to the sturdy fish cart ponies which raced to and fro between the Channel ports and the capital.

MARENGO -- Name of the battle in which Napoleon Bonaparte defeated the Austrians on 14 June 1800. This battle has given its name to a chicken dish which was cooked on the battlefield itself by Dunand, chef to Napoleon.

Bonaparte, who on battle days ate nothing until the fight was over, had gone forward with his general staff and was a long way from his supply wagons. Seeing his enemies put to flight, he asked Dunand to prepare dinner for him. The master chef at once sent men of the quartermaster's staff and ordnance corps in search of provisions. All they could find were 3 eggs, 4 tomatoes, 6 crayfish, a small hen, a little garlic, some oil and a saucepan. Using his bread ration, Dunand first made a panade with oil and water, and then, having drawn and jointed the chicken, browned it in oil, and fried the eggs in the same oil with a few cloves of garlic and the tomatoes. He poured over this mixture some water laced with brandy borrowed from the General's flask and put the crayfish on top to cook in the steam.

The dish was served on a tin plate, the chicken surrounded by the fried eggs and crayfish, with the sauce poured over it. Bonaparte, having feasted upon it, said to Dunand: 'You must feed me like this after every battle.'

The originality of this improvised dish lay in the garnish, for chicken à la Provençale, sautéed in oil with garlic and tomatoes, was known in Paris under the Directory (1796-1799). Dunand was well aware that the crayfish were out of place in this dish, and so he later substituted wine for the water and added mushrooms. But one day, when he had served the dish improved in this way, Bonaparte said angrily: 'You have left out the crayfish. It will bring me bad luck. I don't want any of it.'

Willy-nilly, the crayfish garnish had to be restored, and it has remained to this day the traditional garnish for the dish.

For detailed recipes see CHICKEN, and also VEAL, Veal sauté marenge.

MARENNES – Small port in the Charente-Maritime district where, in vast beds at La Tremblade, fine white and green oysters are bred.

There is a confrérie called the Galants de la Verte Marennes.

MARES-TAILS. PRÊLE – Common plant of the fields, especially in damp places, which is hard stemmed and rich in silica. In their first week of growth the young shoots, not yet silicious, are edible and can be used like asparagus. The Romans valued them and the habit of eating them is maintained in certain regions. They are also pickled in vinegar.

MARGARINE – Cooking fat made from the most soluble parts of beef and veal fat, purified by heating and decanting, and churned with a little cream. Vegetable oil, groundnuts, sesame or coconut is added.

This type of margarine is intended especially for pastry-making. The type called table margarine which is used in household cooking is made entirely from vegetable fat.

MARGUÉRY – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

MARIGNAN – Cake very popular in Paris. Bake a savarin (q.v.) in a manque (q.v.) mould. When ready, soak it in syrup flavoured with liqueur. Cut 2 horizontal channels on top of the cake. Decorate them with Meringue à Marignan (see MERINGUE). Cover the cake with apricot jam, leaving the meringue plain.

MARIGOLD. SOUCI – Name of several plants, among them the cultivated marigold whose yellow flowers are sometimes used to colour butter. The fully blown buds of the marsh marigold are sometimes pickled in vinegar, masquerading as capers.

MARINADE – A seasoned liquid, cooked or uncooked, in which foodstuffs, notably meat and fish, are steeped.

The purposes of a marinade is to season the food steeped in it by impregnating them with the flavour of its condiments. It also softens the fibres of some kinds of meat a little, and enables fish and meat to be kept rather longer than is generally possible.

The time during which foodstuffs should be left in a marinade depends upon their size and texture. In winter large cuts of meat and venison can be left in a marinade for 5 to 6 days. In summer, they should not be steeped for longer than 24 to 48 hours, except in the case of large cuts of venison, which require longer steeping.

COOKED MARINADES. MARINADES CUITES –

Preservation of cooked marinades. CONSERVATION DES MARINADES CUITES – These marinades can be kept for quite a long time provided they are brought to the boil every other day in summer and every four days in winter. Each time the marinade is boiled a little wine and vinegar should be added to it.

Cooked marinade for meat and venison. MARINADE CUITE POUR VIANDES DE BOUCHERIE ET VENAISON – Brown very slightly in oil the vegetables and herbs indicated for Uncooked marinade (see below). Add white wine and vinegar, and simmer gently for 30 minutes.

Season the meat with salt and pepper. Put it in a bowl and cover with the marinade, which must be quite cold. Keep in a cool place.

Cooked marinade for mutton, called 'en chevreuil'. MARINADE EN CHEVREUIL – Proceed as indicated above, adding juniper and rosemary.

Red wine marinade for meat. MARINADE AU VIN ROUGE – Proceed as indicated above, using red wine instead of white wine. Leave to steep for 2 hours.

UNCOOKED MARINADES. MARINADES CRUES –

Uncooked marinade I (for meat and game). MARINADES CRUES POUR VIANDES DE BOUCHERIE ET VENAISON – Chop 1 medium-sized carrot, 1 large onion, 2 shallots, 2 sticks celery and 2 clove of garlic. Put half these vegetables in a deep dish, which must be large enough to contain the meat. Add a sprig of chopped parsley, a few shreds of thyme and bay leaf, 6 to 8 peppercorns and a clove.

Season the meat with salt and pepper and put it in the dish. Cover with the rest of the vegetables. Moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) dry white wine and 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) oil. Keep in a cool place. Turn the meat over frequently so that it is thoroughly impregnated with the flavour of the herbs.

When this marinade is to be used for venison, 6 coriander seeds and 6 crushed juniper berries should be added.

Uncooked marinade II (for large cuts of meat). MARINADE CRUE POUR GROSSES VIANDES DE BOUCHERIE – Season the cut (haunch, rib, shoulder, etc.) with salt, pepper and spices. Put it in a bowl. Cover with a chopped onion and carrot. Add 2 crushed garlic cloves, a sprig of parsley and thyme, a quarter of a bay leaf and a clove. Moisten with cooking wine (dry white wine or red wine). Add a few drops of brandy. Cover with a plate, face downwards, and leave to steep in a cool place for 6 hours (or longer, in cool weather). Turn the meat over from time to time so that it is thoroughly impregnated with the marinade.

The meat is moistened with this marinade when braised.

Uncooked marinade III (for small individual portions of meat, poultry, fish, etc.). MARINADE CRUE POUR MENUES PIÈCES DE BOUCHERIE, VOLAILLES POISSONS, ETC. – Season the meat, poultry or fish with salt and pepper before putting it in the marinade. Lay the pieces in a deep dish. Sprinkle with finely chopped onions or shallots, coarsely chopped parsley, shreds of thyme and bay leaf, and garlic if desired. Pour oil and a squeeze of lemon juice over this mixture.

Leave to steep for 2 hours, turning frequently.

Uncooked marinade IV (for garnishes to be served with pâtés, potted meats, galantines, etc.). MARINADE CRUE POUR ÉLÉMENTS DE GARNITURE DES PÂTÉS, TERRINES, GALANTINES, ETC. – Season the garnish indicated with salt, pepper and spices. Pour on white wine, brandy and oil. Leave to steep in this marinade for 2 hours.

MARINIÈRE (À LA) – Method of preparing mussels and other shellfish (see MUSSELS). This name is also applied to certain dishes made of fish cooked in white wine and garnished with mussels (see BRILL, Brill à la marinière).

MARIVAUX – See GARNISHES.

MARJORAM. MARJOLAINE – This aromatic herb, which is used in cookery, flowers in the middle of summer.

MARMALADES. MARMEADES – In French the word marmelade is applied to fruit stewed for a very long time until it is reduced to a thick purée. Recipes are given below for various fruit marmalades (marmelades). For general instructions on jam-making, see JAMS AND JELLIES.

Apple marmalade. MARMEADE DE POMMES – Put the peeled and quartered apples into a copper pan. Moisten with a few tablespoons water. Cook on the stove over a gentle heat.

Rub the apples through a sieve set over a large basin. Return this purée to the pan, with the liquor in which it has been cooked. Add 300 g. (11 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{3}$  cups) sugar for every 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) pulp. Mix and boil the marmalade, stirring all the time with the skimmer.

To determine whether the marmalade is cooked drop a little onto a plate. If this remains in a blob without spreading out the marmalade is cooked.

Apricot marmalade. MARMELADE D'ABRICOTS – Ingredients. 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) stoned apricots (net weight), 750 g. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  lb., 3 cups) sugar, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) water.

Method. Simmer the apricots in the water for 20 minutes, stirring them with a copper or wooden spatula.

Rub through a sieve and put the pulp into a pan with the sugar. Cook to the jelling stage. Finish as described above.

Fig marmalade. MARMELADE DE FIGUES – Peel and slice figs which should be ripe but firm.

Prepare a syrup made of 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) sugar and a little water for every 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) fruit. Add the sliced figs. Boil until the jelling stage is reached.

Melon marmalade. MARMELADE DE MELON – Remove the rind of the melons and the seeds, and rub the pulp through a sieve. Add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar per 450 g. (1 lb.) pulp if this is very sweet, or more if it is less sweet. Boil until it sets.

Orange marmalade. MARMELADE D'ORANGES – Pierce 10 oranges in several places with a pointed stick, and blanch in boiling water for 25 to 30 minutes.

Put them under the cold tap for some time. Divide them into quarters, remove the seeds, the pith and the fibrous parts, and rub through a wide meshed wire sieve. Add an equal quantity of sugar and one-third of the weight of the pulp in apple juice, obtained in the manner described for Apple jelly (see JAMS AND JELLIES). Boil in the usual way.

Peach marmalade. MARMELADE DE PÊCHES – Prepare with peaches in the same way as Apricot marmalade.

Pear marmalade. MARMELADE DE POIRES – Prepare with quartered pears in the same way as Apple marmalade.

Plum marmalade. MARMELADE DE PRUNES – Prepare with plums in the same way as Apricot marmalade.

Quince marmalade. MARMELADE DE COINGS – Prepare in the same way as Apple marmalade, using quinces.

MARMITE – Metal or earthenware covered pot, with or without feet, depending on whether it is used for cooking in the hearth or on the stove.

Straight-sided marmites for stove cooking can have a capacity of as much as 200 litres (44 gallons, 55 gallons). These very large pots have a tap fitted near the base.

Cooking pots of this size or even larger are often required in large establishments such as hospitals, etc. They may be either fixed or swinging, and should be made with a false bottom so that their contents are heated by steam.

There are special types for medium- or high-pressure cooking. Large swinging marmites are balanced in such a way as to ensure their stability at all angles. Pots of this type intended for use on board ship have a concave lip to prevent spilling in heavy seas.

There is also a type of double cooking pot called a marmite.

Earthenware marmites (Nicolas)

In this pot the water in the bottom is heated by vapour passing through a coil of copper tubing. Baskets are used for cooking rice, fish, meat, etc.

MARMITE, PETITE – Name of a clear savoury broth, a type of hotpot, cooked and served in an earthenware pot.

This broth was invented in Paris and is much prized by gourmets. (See PETITE MARMITE, SOUPS AND BROTHS.)

MARMOT, MARMOTTE – Rodent about the size of a large cat, which lives at high altitudes in the Alps and the Pyrenees. Marmots grow very fat towards the end of the autumn. In the winter they hibernate and live on their fat. Their flesh, which has a pronounced musky flavour, is edible after long steeping in a marinade.

MAROILLES – Small town in northern France which has given its name to a cheese, also known as Marolles. (See CHEESE.)

MARQUETTE – Type of rail which is very good to eat.

It is said that King Charles X of France gave orders that he should be immediately informed whenever a flight of marouettes was sighted, even if he were in council with his ministers.

This bird is prepared in the same way as quail. (q.v.).

MARQUER – In French cookery, this term covers all operations connected with the preparation of foodstuffs prior to cooking.

'Food fully prepared, and put in a saucepan, when nothing remains but to cook it,' is how Plumerey defined this cooking term. Marquer, however, is generally used in a more limited sense, meaning to place food in a buttered or greased pan, lined with pork skin, and carrots and onions cut into rings.

MARQUISE – Name of a variety of very tender and sweet pear. This fruit, which is pyramid shaped, is in season in France in November and December.

MARRON – A kind of chestnut, improved by cultivation, which is bigger and better than the common variety.

It is eaten boiled or grilled, or prepared in various ways for use in cooking, pâtisserie and confectionery.

The chestnut is a concentrated source of nourishment (250 calories per 100 g., 4 oz.) although it is rather indigestible owing to the fact that its starch is not easily assimilable. The chestnut is not very rich in vitamins, but contains a high proportion of mineral salts. Its high calcium and phosphorus content make it an excellent food for children and convalescents, provided they have healthy digestions.

Peeling chestnuts. Slit the surface of the chestnuts on the domed face. Put them in a baking tin with a little water and roast them in the oven for 8 minutes. Peel while they are still hot.

Another method. Slit the chestnuts as indicated above. Put them, a few at a time, into boiling fat. Deep-fry for 2 minutes. Drain. Peel them while they are still hot.

MARRONS GLACÉS – See CHESTNUT.

MARSALA – Dessert wine made in Italy from grapes grown in Sicily. This wine, which has something in common with sherry or Madeira, contains about 24 per cent of alcohol.

It is drunk as an apéritif before meals, and is also used in cooking and pâtisserie.

MARSEILLAN – Wine generally known as pe lure d'oignon (onion skin). It is made at Marseillan, a little town in the Hérault district.

Above: Aluminium marmite (Larousse)

Right: Marmite for steaming potatoes (Larousse)

Stainless steel marmite and stew pan (Chorand)

MARSHMALLOW, PÂTE DE GUIMAUVE – This confection contains no real marshmallow, in spite of its name. It is made of egg whites.

MARTAGON – Variety of Alpine lily, also found in Russia, where the bulbs are used for food.

MARTINIQUE – Island in the Lesser Antilles colonised by the French in the seventeenth century and renowned for its rum, considered the best in the world. Sugar cane is grown extensively in this part of the world, and rum is one of the products of sugar cane.

Martinique coffee has a great reputation. The island also produces cocoa and fine spices.

MARTIN-SEC – Variety of pear in season in France from November to January. It is ovoid in shape and of medium size with a russet skin. The pulp is gritty and rather dry, but quite sweet.

MARTIN-SIRE – Variety of pear, also known as rouville, in season in France in November. It is rather large and elongated. Its skin is yellowish with grey flecks, the pulp firm and quite sweet.

MARTYRS, (BRASSERIE DES) – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

MARZIPAN, MASSEPAIN – Marzipan is made from ground almonds, sugar and egg whites. It can be coloured and flavoured and made into petits fours (q.v.) of different shapes, known in France as massepains. Marzipan is also used to make little sweets in the form of fruit, vegetables, etc.

Marzipan is of very ancient origin, and was probably made originally by some order of nuns, who made many little cakes and sweets.

In 1844, a rumour began to circulate that the author of la Comédie humaine (Balzac) had set himself up as a confectioner.

'No one talked of anything else on the Stock Exchange, in the foyer of the Opéra, at the Théâtre-Français, and in all the cafés on the Paris boulevards.

'Several thousands of copies of a curious circular had just made their appearance in Paris. They read as follows:

ISSOUDON MARZIPAN!

"Gentlemen,

"I have just opened a shop at 38 bis rue Vivienne to exploit this product which, in the province of Berry, enjoys a reputation almost a hundred years old. The most remarkable novelist of our era speaks of it thus in one of his works:

'This worthy woman was given the recipe by those most famous nuns to whom we owe Issoudon marzipan, one of the greatest creations of French confectionery, and which no master chef, cook, pastry-cook or confectioner has been able to imitate. M. de Rivière, French Ambassador in Constantinople, ordered large quantities every year for the seraglio of the Sultan Mahmoud.' – H. de Balzac.

"This unique sweetmeat, which to this day has been made only for the rich man's table, will now come within the reach of many more people by virtue of our new selling policy. Issoudon marzipan costing from 60 francs to 5 francs will be on sale to the people of Paris. In order to popularise the extraordinary qualities of this sweetmeat, slices of it will be sold for 50 centimes in the shop."

'This circular bore no signature, and it was inferred that it came from the pen of Balzac or that of a friend, editor or colleague. No one else had ever thought of the idea of launching a confectioner's shop with a paragraph from a novel.

'After making enquiries it was discovered that Balzac, though he did not go to the length of taking a hand in the work, patronised the confectioner's shop in the rue Vivienne.

'For a fortnight, there were long queues of curious visitors and, though there were few takers at 60 francs, the 50-centime slices were sold in large numbers.

'Then Paris turned its attention to other matters and the sale of marzipan sweets slumped.' (Dr Cabanès)

According to this story it seems certain that marzipan sweets, if they were not actually invented in the province of Berry, were once very popular there, and that those of Issoudon enjoyed a great reputation.

Marzipan is very popular in Flanders; marzipan of the finest quality is manufactured industrially all over Belgium.

OLD MARZIPAN RECIPES. RECETTES ANCIENNES DE MASSEPAINS – The following recipes are taken from the Confiturier royal, published by Claud Prud'homme in 1732.

Plain marzipan sweets. MASSEPAINS COMMUNS – 'Take 1½ kg. (3¼ lb., 10½ cups) sweet almonds. Peel them in hot water. Drain and dry them. After this, pound them in a marble mortar, pouring egg white over them from time to time to prevent them from becoming too oily.

'When the almonds are pounded to a smooth paste, cook 700 g. (1½ lb., 3 cups) sugar to the feather stage. Next, put in your almonds and blend all the ingredients with a spatula, carefully scraping the sides of the pan to prevent sticking, which may occur even though the pan is taken off the stove. You will know that your paste is ready if none sticks to the back of your hand when you touch it. Next, take the paste out of the pan and put it on a pastry board. Sprinkle it with fine sugar on both sides. Leave to cool.

'Roll it out to a moderate thickness. Cut your shapes out of the paste with biscuit-cutters. Press them down slightly with the tip of your finger onto sheets of rice paper, to bake them. Expose them to heat on one side only. Next, ice them on the other side and then cook in the same way.

'They can be made round, oval, fluted, heart-shaped, etc. You can also make your paste very moist and squirt it through a syringe. Your marzipan sweets will have as many special names as they have shapes, though they will differ from one another only in shape and the manner in which they are iced, as will be seen below.'

Iced marzipan sweets. MASSEPAINS GLACÉS – 'When your marzipan sweets, cut round, long, oval or fluted, are baked and ready on one side, gently lift them off the paper with a knife. Then ice them on the unbaked side in one of the two following ways:

'Take water scented with orange blossom or some other flavouring, or cooked fruit juice, according to the type of marzipan sweets you wish to make. Mix in little by little some fine powdered sugar, stirring the mixture well until it is as thick as porridge. Take out some of this icing with a knife and spread it neatly on your marzipan sweets. Then, put them back on the rice paper and warm them gently in the oven to set the icing. Put them in a tin for use when required.

'The other type of icing is made with the egg white and fine sugar only, or mixed with some cooked fruit pulp, working and using as indicated above. You can make both types of icing at the same time, so as to distinguish between differently shaped sweets by icing them differently.'

Royal marzipan sweets. MASSEPAINS ROYAUX – 'The paste is the same as for the first kind. Take a piece and stretch it out on the table to about the thickness of a finger. Cut the strip into as many pieces as will make a ring around your finger. Press the ends firmly together so that they will not come apart. Dip these rings in egg white into which a little apricot jam has been mixed, then, dip them in fine sugar. Blow on them to shake off surplus sugar. Put them on rice paper to bake on both sides in the oven, as they have been iced top and bottom.'

MODERN MARZIPAN RECIPES. RECETTES MODERNES DE MASSEPAINS –

Plain marzipan sweets. MASSEPAINS ORDINAIRES – Pound in a mortar 250 g. (9 oz., 1¼ cups) blanched sweet almonds and 4 or 5 bitter almonds, moistening from time to time with a little cold water.

As soon as the almonds are reduced to a smooth, rather stiff paste, put them in a copper pan with 500 g. (18 oz., 4 cups) fine sugar, a pinch of powdered vanilla and a few drops of orange-blossom water. Mix well over a low flame, stirring with a wooden spoon until the mixture is thoroughly dried. Put it back in the mortar and work well with the pestle until it becomes very smooth. To make it even smoother, put it on the table and work by hand, mixing in a small handful of fine sugar sifted through a hair sieve.

Roll out the paste to a thickness of 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch). Put it on a sheet of rice paper and cut into shapes. Put these shapes on a baking sheet covered with paper. Dry in a very cool oven.

Soft marzipan sweets. MASSEPAINS DITS MOELLEUX – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) almonds, 500 g. (18 oz., 4 cups) fine sugar, 250 g. (9 oz., 1 cup) Royal icing (see ICING), 10 egg whites, 10 drops essence of bitter almonds or  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon almond essence.

Method. Proceed as indicated above. Pipe onto buttered paper in various shapes or in rings. Sprinkle with sugar and bake in a moderate oven.

Marzipan sweets. MASSEPAINS – Pound finely in a mortar 500 g. (18 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) blanched almonds with 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) sugar and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) vanilla-flavoured sugar, adding 4 egg whites little by little.

Leave this mixture to stand for a few minutes. Roll it out to a thickness of 3 mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch). Cut the sweets into different shapes. Ice with rather liquid Royal icing (see ICING) flavoured with a few drops of orange-blossom water or orange essence. Put on a baking sheet and bake in a slow oven.

Marzipan sweets à la russe. MASSEPAINS À LA RusSE – Work together in a bowl 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour and 375 g. (13 oz., 3 cups) fine sugar, adding 8 egg whites, 2 at a time.

Working the mixture well, add 375 g. (13 oz.,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  cups) ground almonds and 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) finely chopped candied orange peel. Pipe the paste onto buttered and floured baking sheets and bake in a hot oven. Lift the sweets off the baking sheet while they are still hot.

MASCOTTE – A cake made by filling a Genoese cake with Butter cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with mocha and mixed with finely pounded roasted hazelnuts. The Genoese cake is iced with this cream.

MASCOTTE (À LA) – Name of a garnish served with small cuts of meat and poultry. It consists of quartered artichoke hearts sautéed in butter, small potatoes cut into the shape of olives and cooked in butter, and truffles.

MASKING. NAPPER – Masking is the covering of food with its appropriate sauce after it is dished up for serving.

MASSÉNA (À LA) – The name of a garnish served with small cuts of meat, tournedos and filets. It consists of artichoke hearts filled with thick Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) and strips of poached beef bone-marrow.

MASILLONS – Petit four (q.v.) of almond paste in the shape of a tartlet.

Ingredients. 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) blanched almonds, 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) fine sugar, 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 6 egg whites, 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) cornflour (cornstarch), vanilla.

Method. Pound the almonds with 2 egg whites, the sugar and the vanilla. Rub this mixture through a sieve. Put it in a bowl and work it, adding the rest of the egg whites to make it very frothy. Add the butter, melted, then dredge in the cornflour (cornstarch). Mix thoroughly.

Fill little buttered tartlet cases with this mixture and bake in a hot oven. As soon as they are taken out of the oven, spread the tartlets with apricot jam and ice with kirsch-flavoured Fondant icing (see ICING).

MASTIC – Resin which exudes in the form of pale yellow drops from incisions made in the mastic tree. These drops are floury on the surface and have an aromatic and resinous flavour. Mastic comes mainly from the island of Chios. It is chewed in the East and is also used in the spirit known as Raki (q.v.).

Silver vessel for the preparation of an infusion of maté. The hollow stem serves as a drinking straw. Its base is a perforated hollow ball which serves as a strainer (Larousse)
(Collection Dr Gottschalk. Phot. Larousse)

MATÉ – Plant sometimes known as Paraguay tea. Its leaves, which are rich in caffeine, are used in the preparation of an infusion which is both a stimulant and a tonic.

This drink, which is relatively cheap, is much used in Peru, Chile, the Argentine, Brazil, Bolivia, Paraguay, etc.

In South America, maté tea is made in a somewhat eccentric fashion. The powdered maté is placed in hollowed-out gourds which have been dried and decorated. These are called matés in some countries and culha in Brazil. Boiling water is poured over the powder. The tops are then replaced on the gourds. The drinkers take it in turns to suck the tea contained in the gourds through a special straw known as a bombilla.

This infusion is also made in containers of precious metal, with a bombilla of the same metal through which the tea is drunk.

Maté can be prepared in different ways. It is best in an infusion, prepared as follows:

Put in a teapot 25 g. (1 oz.) maté (leaves or powder). Pour on 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) boiling water. Leave to infuse in a hot place for at least 10 minutes. Strain. Drink hot or cold, with or without sugar, according to taste.

The infusion of maté, which must always be carried out in a hot place, can be prolonged beyond 10 minutes. Some authorities assert that this plant only yields up all its properties after long simmering, and that it should be left to infuse, with the teapot standing on the stove or in a basin of boiling water, for 1 hour.

As in the case of tea, maté can be flavoured in various ways. Thus lemon juice, rum, kirsch, etc., may be added. After straining, the leaves or grounds can be stirred once or twice into hot water, producing a second and third drink which is still quite pleasant.

MATEFAIM – Name given in certain regions of France, notably the Loire, Ain and Jura, to a rather coarse but nourishing type of pancake which appeases or dulls the edge of appetite.

MATELOTE – Name given in French cooking to a fish stew made with white or red wine.

Strictly, matelotes, which are also called meurettes or pochouses according to district and method of preparation, should be made from freshwater fish. Only the dish known as matelote à la normande is made from sea fish, mainly sole, conger eel and gurnet. This matelote is moistened with cider and thickened with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on fish stock and fresh cream.

The term matelote is also loosely and incorrectly applied to dishes made of veal and poultry.

Most matelotes of freshwater fish should be garnished. In addition to the small onions and mushrooms which must always be cooked with the fish, add freshwater crayfish cooked in a court-bouillon (q.v.), and heart-shaped pieces of fried bread.

With some types of matelote, such as pochouse and matelote à la tourangelle, lardoons of belly of pork are cooked with the fish at the same time as the small onions and mushrooms.

The method used in the preparation of most matelotes is indicated below under Matelote à la canotière.

Matelote à la bourguignonne or matelote de meunière – This matelote, known as meurette, is made from freshwater fish: small carp, pike, eel, barbel. These fish, cut into chunks, are put in a copper pan on a foundation of finely sliced carrots and onions, sprigs of parsley, thyme, bay leaves and crushed cloves of garlic. The mixture is moistened with red wine. Blazing Burgundy marc brandy is added, and the sauce is thickened with butter and flour kneaded together. Garnish with bread cut into squares, fried in butter, and rubbed with garlic.

Matelote à la canotière – Made with carp and eel.

Butter a deep frying pan. Line with 150 g. (5 oz., 1½ cups) finely chopped onion and 4 cloves of crushed garlic. Put in 1½ kg. (3¼ lb.) fish cut into pieces of equal thickness, with a large houquet garni (q.v.) in the middle of the pan. Moisten with 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) dry white wine. Bring to the boil, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) brandy, flame it and cook with the pan covered.

Drain the pieces of fish and put them in another pan. Add 125 g. (4 oz.) small cooked mushrooms and 125 g. (4 oz.) small glazed onions. Moisten with the stock in which the fish has been cooked, boiled down to two-thirds of its volume. Thicken with butter and flour kneaded together, allowing 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) flour 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter to every litre (scant quart, generous quart) stock. Finally add 150 g. (5 oz., 10 tablespoons) butter. Simmer gently. Serve the matelote in a deep dish or bowl.

Garnish with fried gudgeon dipped in egg and bread-crumbs (apart from the head and tail), and freshwater crayfish cooked in a court-bouillon.

Matelote à la marinière – Made with a mixture of freshwater fish. Proceed as for Matelote à la canotière, moistening the stew with white wine. Thicken the sauce with a Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) made by moistening a white roux of butter and flour with concentrated fish stock. This stock is made from the heads and trimmings of the fish moistened with white wine and flavoured with onions, parsley, thyme and bay leaves.

Garnish the matelote with small glazed onions, mushrooms, freshwater crayfish and heart-shaped pieces of fried bread.

Matelote à la meunière – Made with one kind of fish only (usually eel) or with several different kinds of fish. Proceed as for Matelote à la canotière, moistening the fish with red wine. Thicken the sauce with butter and flour kneaded together.

Garnish the matelote with freshwater crayfish and pieces of bread fried in butter.

Matelote à la normande – Made with saltwater fish cut into thick slices. Moisten the fish with cider. Add Calvados and set alight. Thicken with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated fish stock. Bring the sauce to the required consistency by adding thick fresh cream, allowing 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) per litre (scant quart, generous quart) sauce.

Garnish with mushrooms, mussels, poached oysters, crayfish, and small heart-shaped pieces of bread fried in butter.

MATIAS – A rather solid, unleavened galette (q.v.) made of ordinary dough mixed with onions, chopped leeks and mashed potatoes. It should be eaten hot.

MATIGNON – A fondue (q.v.) of vegetables served as a garnish with a large number of dishes. (See also GARNISHES.)

Meatless matignon. MATIGNON AU MAIGRE – Stew gently in butter 125 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped carrot, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped celery, 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) finely chopped onions. Add half a bay leaf and a sprig of thyme. Season with salt and a pinch of sugar.

When the vegetables are very tender, moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) Madeira. Boil down until well reduced.

Matignon with meat. MATIGNON AU GRAS – Prepared as indicated above, with the addition of 100 g. (4 oz.) lean raw ham cut into small thin slices.

MAYONNAISE – A cold sauce of which the basic ingredients are egg yolks and oil blended into an emulsion. For recipes, see SAUCE, Cold sauces.

‘Culinary purists,’ writes Carême in his Cuisinier parisien: Traité des entrées froides, ‘are not in agreement regarding the name. Some say mayonnaise, others mahonnaise and other bayonnaise. We always refer to this sauce by the name of magnonnaise.’

Mayonnaise is probably a corruption of moyonnaise, derived from the old French word moyeu, which means egg yolk.

The term mayonnaise is also used of cold dishes made from fish, shellfish or poultry, covered with mayonnaise sauce and garnished with lettuce hearts, hard-boiled eggs, anchovy fillets, olives and capers.

Fish mayonnaise. MAYONNAISE DE POISSONS – Made from various kinds of fish, cooked and cut into small slices, in the same way as Lobster mayonnaise (see below).

Lobster mayonnaise. MAYONNAISE DE HOMARD – Boil a lobster in a court-bouillon (q.v.) and leave to cool. Take the meat of the tail and cut into pieces of equal thickness. Season with salt, pepper, oil, vinegar or lemon juice, chopped parsley and chervil. Dice the rest of the lobster separately and season in the same way.

Take the outer green leaves of a number of lettuces (setting aside the hearts for garnishing). Shred them coarsely and dress.

Line a salad bowl with shredded lettuce. Put the diced lobster on this and arrange the slices on top. Cover with mayonnaise. Decorate with fillets of anchovy, olives and capers, and surround with quartered hard-boiled eggs and lettuce hearts.

Poultry mayonnaise. MAYONNAISE DE VOLAILLE – Proceed as for Lobster mayonnaise, using cooked poultry (usually poached chicken) cut into small slices.

This mayonnaise can also be made with the chicken jointed and skinned, especially when a small bird is used.

Mayonnaise of Mediterranean or Dublin Bay prawns. MAYONNAISE DE LANGOUSTINES – Prepared in the same way as Lobster mayonnaise, using Mediterranean or Dublin Bay prawns.

Mayonnaise of all kinds of shellfish, crabs, shrimps, crayfish tails, etc., can be made in the same way.

Spiny lobster mayonnaise. MAYONNAISE DE LANGOUSTE – Spiny lobster slices may be arranged on a bed of shredded lettuce and served in their shell, cut lengthwise.

Mayonnaise of fillets of sole à l'ancienne with a border of jelly. MAYONNAISE DE FILETS DE SOLES À L'ANCIENNE, SUR BORDURE DE GELÉE – Poach fillets of sole in a very little white wine. Leave them to cool. Trim into rectangles. Cover with gelatine-strengthened mayonnaise.

Fill a ring mould with fish aspic jelly. Turn it out onto a dish when set. Fill the centre of this jelly border with a salad of potatoes, artichoke hearts and diced truffles dressed with gelatine-strengthened mayonnaise.

Arrange the fillets of sole on top of the jelly.

MAZAGRAN – Cold or hot coffee served in a glass.

The word also means a kind of tartlet lined with Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES), filled with a salpicon (q.v.) or any other preparation, and baked in the oven.

MAZARIN (Pâtisserie) – Fill a plain baking tin 6 to 8 cm. (2½ to 3 inches) deep with best Genoise batter (see DOUGH). Bake the cake and allow it to cool. Scoop out the middle, making a funnel-shaped cavity which does not quite reach the bottom. Ice the cone removed from the cake with pale pink fondant icing.

Fill the well of the cake with chopped crystallised fruit (angelica, candied orange and lemon peel, stem ginger, etc.), with a little syrup, thick apricot purée, and kirsch added. Spread the cake with apricot jam. Cover the well with the iced core and decorate with crystallised fruit.

MEADOW-SWEET. REINE-DES-PRÉS – Plant whose tender leaves and flower tips, put to infuse in wine or hydromel, give them an agreeable taste. They are used in making certain types of vermouth.

Tea made from the meadow-sweet blossoms is antispasmodic, diuretic and sudorific.

MEAL. REPAS – A grouping together of various kinds of nourishment taken at a fixed and traditional time.

Preparation for a meal. MISE EN PLACE – In large kitchens this covers all the preparatory operations involved in the cooking of a meal.

It is useful, in a small as well as a large establishment, to prepare the various ingredients required for the meal in advance, peeling the vegetables, etc. When the small tasks are done the actual cooking is much simplified.

MEAT. VIANDE – The word viande derives from the Latin vivenda which meant that 'which maintains life,' and was, like the word 'meat' in English, synonymous with foodstuff in general. Cynetic (hunting) language, preserving an archaic tradition, keeps up this meaning in the words viandis and viander to describe pasture or the action of pasturing where wild beasts are concerned. Today, the meaning is restricted to the muscular flesh of edible animals.

When a piece of meat is examined closely it is seen to be formed of small reddish fibres enclosed in a thin skin. These fibres are grouped into bundles, and their covering skin, thickening, forms the tendons. Certain muscles are surrounded or separated from other groups by thicker coverings of tendon tissue, the mucous membranes. Round the muscular masses, and sometimes between their bundles of fibre, there can be seen deposits of fat varying in quantity.

The connective tissue which holds them together and forms the tendons and muscular fibres is broken down in cooking, and then attacked by the gastric juices. But these juices leave intact the corresponding tissue in raw meat, and it is broken down only in the intestines.

Muscular tissue is formed from albumens and fats; there are only traces of carbohydrates (except in horsemeat, which is richer in glycogen and glucose than the meat of other animals). It contains a large proportion of water (sometimes as much as 70 per cent in certain cuts), mineral salts, among which phosphorus and iron are the most important, and gelatine.

As with all albumens, muscular tissue coagulates in heat from 70° to 80°C. (158° to 176°F.).

Muscular flesh also contains some soluble substances called extractives, because they are found in the extract obtained from the evaporations of their solutions. Some substances can be identified by chemical means, while others remain unknown. They belong to the chemical group of purines, which relates them to the alkaloids in coffee, tea and chocolate. They are transformed by heat into aromatic substances which act as stimulants to the digestive system, the nervous system and the heart.

Freshness of meat. FRAÎCHEUR DE LA VIANDE – Immediately after slaughter meat is slightly acid, because of the presence of lactic acid in the muscular tissue, and hard as a result of stiffening in death. In this state it can be used for dishes that involve long cooking, like pot-au-feu. For all other purposes it must be 'hung', (kept in a cool place for a day or two according to the season) for a certain degree of decomposition to take place. This is due to the action of soluble ferments which exist in the muscles as in all organic tissue, and which soften the fibres by the phenomenon of autolysis (spontaneous decomposition). This autolysis, if it is allowed to proceed to its extreme limits, will continue to the point of complete liquefaction. This process must not be confused with the putrefaction due to bacteria.

The longer it is hung, the more tender the meat becomes. In some places, for example in Vienna, everything is sacrificed to tenderness, and meat is often hung for seven or eight days.

Quality of meat. QUALITÉS DES VIANDES. Variable proportions of fat are found in different kinds of cuts of meat. It may be found around or between the muscular fibres or even in the middle of them, and between the bundles of fibre, in well-nourished animals.

The choicest cuts always have some fat, which is very desirable in cooking, but this should not be excessive. Analyses show that nutritional value in terms of calories depends chiefly on the fat content, since the latter contains more calories than do albumens; but instructions based on such facts should not be followed to the letter, since few people eat very fatty pieces, and would normally leave them on the side of the plate.

Meat that is only moderately fat is generally easier to digest than meat with a very high fat content.

The dark meats (viandes noires) of game and venison contain more extractives, and even toxic substances (when the animal has been hunted hard or when the flesh is very 'high'); they are usually more difficult to digest than butcher's meat.

MEAT CLEAVER

Red meats are those of adult animals (bullock, cow, bull, sheep, horse, donkey, mule); they can be digested and tolerated by most people, provided their use is not abused.

The way in which the animals are fed has a great effect on the quality of the meat.

Meat in dietetics. VIANDÉ EN DIÉTÉTIQUE – For the vast majority of Europeans, meat is the most important of all foods. Dieticians do not share this view and blame meat for many of our current health problems.

Meat contains 15 to 25 per cent of protein substances; variable amounts of fat ranging from 20 to 30 per cent (pork) to less than 5 per cent (rabbit). Meat contains no carbohydrate, so its calorific value is not very high (206 calories per 100 g.). (The calorific value of wheat flour is 350; that of dried nuts over 600.) It is rich in mineral salts such as phosphorus and iron, but lacking in calcium.

Meat leaves little intestinal residue and is liable to cause constipation and intestinal troubles. For these reasons, dieticians recommend either a strict vegetarian diet, which calls for a long and difficult period of adaptation, or a reduction in the daily consumption of meat: 100 g. (4 oz.) maximum for an average adult. The type of meat eaten should be chosen to suit each person's temperament, deficiencies and taste.

Beef. This has the highest protein count of all butcher's meats (23 to 24 per cent).

Horse meat. Equivalent to that of beef.

Veal. Not as rich in protein as beef.

Lamb, mutton. Mutton contains less protein than veal but is fatter.

Pork. Contains least protein of all (on average only 16 per cent). It is particularly indigestible because of its high fat content (more than 30 per cent). This is true not only of pork but of all pork butchery products.

Game. Not recommended by dieticians because of its toxicity (especially game that has been hung).

Tripercy. Viscera and offal (variety meats) are not recommended dietetically. Brains, for example, have a high cholesterol count and contain much fat so they are not the light food suitable for children and invalids that they were once considered to be.

Meat extract. EXTRAIT DE VIANDÉ – Stock that has been concentrated by heat or in a vacuum. Extracts contain part of the extractive substances of the meat, some mineral salts and the same aromatic ingredients (celery, etc.) which give stocks their savoury taste.

There are a great many of these extracts on sale. They should be regarded as condiments which permit any liquid to be given approximately the same flavour as beef stock.

Meat glaze. This is a substance used to enrich sauces, some soups, and ragouts. It is available in fine food stores under the various names of Glace de viande, Meat extract, or Meat glaze.

Boil down strained rich bouillon or simple white consommé (see SOUPS and BROTHS) until it is very dark and syrupy. Pour into a small square pan and let set until very firm. Cut into small squares and store in an airtight container. Glaze will keep several months. (U.S. 3 quarts bouillon makes 1 cup of glaze.)

Meat juice. JUS DE VIANDÉ – The name juice or 'gravy' properly belongs to the liquid which escapes from a piece of meat during cooking, and which is served with roast meats.

There exist commercial substitutes for this juice, very similar to meat extracts.

Meat pulp. PULPE DE VIANDÉ – Describes meat which has been pulped, that is to say, scraped while raw. It has the appearance of a homogeneous paste, and is used for additional nourishment in special diets.

MEAT CLEAVER. FEUILLE – Implement used to split carcasses in half. It is also used in the kitchen for cutting up meat for stews, etc.

MEATBALLS (German and Austrian cookery). KLÖSSE Very popular in Austria and Germany, klösse are a kind of round ball made of different forcemeats. They are boiled in salt water, thoroughly drained, and served with browned butter and fried breadcrumbs poured over them.

Meatballs à la viennoise. KLÖSSE À LA VIENNOISE – Dice finely 500 g. (18 oz.) sandwich bread. Toss in butter until golden. Place in a dish and pour on a few tablespoons boiling milk. Leave to soak. Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) finely diced lean ham tossed in butter, 175 g. (6 oz., 1½ cups) chopped onion, cooked slowly in butter until very tender, and 1 tablespoon chopped chervil and tarragon. Add 1 tablespoon flour and 3 or 4 eggs beaten as for an omelette. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Mix thoroughly.

Divide this mixture into pieces each weighing about 50 g. (2 oz.). Shape into balls. Dip the balls in flour and poach in salt water for 10 to 12 minutes. Drain. Toss a handful of breadcrumbs in browned butter and pour over the meatballs.

MÉCHOUI (Arab cookery) – Arabic word meaning roasted. Arab roasts are made with various animals such as gazelle, sheep, mouflon (wild sheep), young camel or lamb. The animal must always be very fat.

'The cooking demands very special care, for a méchoui cannot be perfect unless it is constantly basted with melted butter and roasted slowly on red hot charcoal embers, which must be kept at the same temperature the whole time. Care must also be taken that the meat is not charred outside and raw inside.

'A méchoui is perfectly cooked when, on pricking it with a large needle, no drops of pink juice exude through the puncture. Care must be taken that the kidneys are properly cooked. These are the most precious part of the roast. A successful méchoui must be of a fine golden-brown colour and the meat must be well roasted and crackling. This is how it is done:

'Kill, skin an eviscerate a sucking lamb. Impale it from head to tail on a pointed wooden spit.

'Tie the shoulders to the neck with string. Stretch the legs out to the full length of the spit, binding them with a strip of linen. Season well with salt and pepper. Rest each end of the spit on a tall stone or Y-shaped support on which the spit can be turned. Near the spitted carcass, dig a hole 1 m. (39 inches) in length and 50 cm. (20 inches) in depth. Light a wood fire. Place the lamb about 50 cm. (20 inches) from the fire. Rotate the spit slowly so that the whole lamb is exposed to the embers. Using a brush, baste with melted butter.

'When it is cooked, take it off the spit. Lay it on a dish and place it in the middle of the table. According to tradition, the diners must abandon the use of knives and forks. Custom requires that the méchoui should be eaten with fingers, the guests tearing off the flesh as desired. The host must serve himself first and must pluck out the kidneys to offer to his guests.

'When the méchoui is all eaten, the servants pass round the ewer containing warm water scented with rose leaves, so that the guests may rinse their hands.

'The whole beauty of this dish lies in the incomparable flavour of the crackling skin and browned flesh. So that it may lose none of the delicacy which makes it so much sought-after by gourmets, it must be speedily dismembered as soon as it appears on the table. If it is left to get cold, the skin, firm and crackling at the outset, grows soft very quickly. One should therefore never forget to provide the guest with hot plates for a méchoui.

'In different regions of Morocco and Tunisia, the méchoui differs only in the method of cooking. It is braised in a glazed earthenware oven.' (L. Isnard, L'Afrique gourmande.)

MEDALLION. MÉDAILLON – This is a name applied to various foodstuffs which must, by definition, be cut in the shape of round or oval medallions.

The word is synonymous with tournedos (q.v.) when applied to small cuts of beef, with collops (q.v.) when applied to slices of mutton, veal or large poultry. The term is extended to designate slices of foie gras served hot or cold.

Medallions of anchovy à la niçoise – See ANCHOVY.

Medallions of lamb – See LAMB.

Medlars

MEDLAR. NÉFLE – The fruit of the medlar tree, a rosaceous plant, which grows wild in all the temperate regions of Europe.

The medlar is a very tart fruit which can only be eaten when it is thoroughly ripe and soft. It has then quite a pleasant flavour of wine.

MÉDOC – Wine-producing region of Bordeaux situated on the left banks of the Garonne and Gironde, stretching from Blanquefort to Graves. It is subdivided into two regions: Bas Médoc in the north and Haut Médoc in the south. The best wines come from the latter. The following communes of Haut Médoc have been given a special appellation: Moulis, Listrac, Margaux, Saint-Julien, Pauillac, and Saint-Estèphe.

Médoc wines have a character of their own, distinguished by a slight tartness (quite unlike that of any other wine), by their delicacy, aroma, smoothness, and a bouquet that improves with age.

They are full bodied without being highly intoxicating. When young, they are of a beautiful garnet colour which changes to burnt ruby with maturity. (See BORDEAUX.)

MEHLSUPPE (German cookery) – For this soup made from flour, known also as sweet-and-sour soup, see SOUPS AND BROTHS.

MELBA – See GARNISHES.

MÉLILOT – Fragrant herb which, in country districts, is used to stuff a freshly killed rabbit to flavour the meat.

The dried leaves and flowers are used to flavour marinades and stews. It is also used in the making of Gruyère cheese.

MELISSA. MÉLISSE – Plant of Mediterranean origin, known also as lemon balm. It has oblong, light green, slightly velvety leaves, and smells rather like lemon.

Melissa

Melissa cordial. EAU DE MÉLISSE – Spirit distilled from melissa. The best-known melissa cordial is that of Carmes, made by infusion of spirits of kidney vetch and spirits of melissa.

Fresh melissa blossoms	900 g. (2 lb.)
Zest of fresh lemons	150 g. (5 oz.)
Ceylon cinnamon	80 g. (3 oz.)
Cloves	80 g. (3 oz.)
Nutmeg	80 g. (3 oz.)
Coriander	40 g. (1½ oz.)
Angelica roots	40 g. (1½ oz.)
Alcohol (80°)	5000 g. (11 lb.)

Slit or crush the various ingredients. Put them with the alcohol in the steam chamber of a distilling apparatus. Leave to infuse for 4 days in a cool place, then distil.

Melissa leaves placed on meat keep away flies and other insects.

MELON – Fruit of a number of herbaceous plants, it is of Asian origin and was first transplanted to Italy, then to France, well before the sixteenth century. The melon was known in early times and was much prized by the Greeks and Romans.

Melon is eaten raw and in its natural state, either at the beginning of the meal as an hors-d'œuvre or at the end, as a fruit.

MELON DE MALABAR

Melon

As an nors-a œuvre it is often seasoned with salt and spiced with ginger. As a dessert it is sprinkled with sugar, though a great many connoisseurs consider that the only admissible seasoning is salt, often with pepper added.

To choose a melon, tap it lightly to discover whether it is well fleshed or hollow. Look to see whether it has round its stem that 'crown' which indicates that the melon is perfectly ripe and whether or not it is sweet.

Chilled melon with Frontignan wine. MELON RAFRAÎCHI AU FRONTIGNAN – Take a large cantaloup melon. Make a circular incision round the stem. Remove the top and scoop out the seeds. Put the melon in a bowl full of crushed ice. Sprinkle the inside with 2 tablespoons (3 tablepoons) sugar and pour into it 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) Frontignan wine or any other dessert wine. Replace the top of the melon and leave to chill thoroughly. Serve in a bowl full of crushed ice.

Melon prepared in this way is not cut into slices. The pulp is scooped out with a large silver spoon.

Chilled melon can be flavoured with grenache, Madeira, Marsala, muscatel, port, sherry, tokay, etc.

Chilled melon en surprise or melon à la parisienne. MELON RAFRAÎCHI EN SURPRISE (MELON À LA PARISIENNE) – Scoop out a large cantaloup melon as indicated for Iced melon (see below). Dice the scooped-out pulp. Add various fruits in season: pineapple, apricots, peaches, pears, cherries, plums, oranges, bananas, apples, grapes, etc., cut into pieces, coarsely diced or stoned. Add sugar, and moisten with kirsch, maraschino or any liqueur, as for Fruit salad (see FRUIT).

Chilled melon en surprise (Larousse)

Fill the melon with this mixture. Put it in a large bowl filled with crushed ice. Leave to chill thoroughly before serving.

Crystallised melon. MELON CONFIT – In high-grade industrial confectionery, whole melons are crystallised in their rind.

In household kitchens, melons can be crystallised in slices or cubes.

Cut into slices of equal size a cantaloup melon which is not over ripe. Skin the slices and remove the seeds. Put in a bowl and sprinkle with sugar. Leave to steep in the sugar for a few hours. Drain. Keep the juice. Put the melon in cold water and leave overnight.

Next day pour the melon juice into a pan. Add enough water and sugar to make a syrup with a density of 14° as measured on a saccharometer. Put the slices of melon in this syrup and boil them. Leave the melon, covered with its syrup in an earthenware bowl, to stand overnight. Next day, drain the pieces of melon, taking them out with care so as not to break them. Boil the syrup until it is reduced to 16° density and pour over the melon. Repeat this operation several times, reducing the syrup each time until it reaches a density of 32°. In French confectionery this process is called façon.

When the melon has undergone the required number of façons, drain and dry it. Keep in a very dry place.

Fresh melon. MELON AU NATUREL – Melon should be well chilled before serving. If possible, leave it on ice for 1 or 2 hours.

If melon is to be served as an nors-d'œuvre, each guest will season it himself with salt, sometimes pepper, or with fine sugar. It can also be spiced with ground ginger. When melon is served as a dessert, if it is fragrant and rich in flavour, serve it plain or with fine sugar.

Melon, in common with other fruit, must not be sliced with an ordinary steel knife. Whether for slicing or eating, a silver, silver-plated or stainless steel knife or a silver spoon should be used.

Iced melon. MELON GLACÉ – Cut a circle of rind round the stem of a large cantaloup melon. Scoop out the pulp, leaving only a thin layer on the rind.

Make a melon ice cream with the pulp (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES). Just before serving, fill the melon rind with the ice cream.

Melon jam. CONFITURE DE MELON – Proceed as for Apricot jam (see JAMS).

Melon pickled in vinegar. MELON CONFIT AU VINAIGRE – Choose small, not very ripe melons. Cut into pieces of equal thickness, and proceed as for Gherkins in vinegar (see GHERKIN).

Melon in vinegar is used in the same way as gherkins, as an accompaniment to boiled meat and cold meat.

Small green melons are generally used. The rind of large melons can be pickled in the same way. Remove the outer skin only, and dice.

MELON DE MALABAR – Name given in France to the Siamese pumpkin. It is cooked in the same way as ordinary pumpkin (q.v.).

MELONGÈNE – French name for the aubergine (q.v.).

MELTING HOUSE. FONDOIR – This is where the melting of fats and tallow from slaughter houses takes place.

MENDIANTS – Common name for a dessert made of almonds, figs, hazelnuts and raisins, whose colours recall the dress of the four Roman Catholic mendicant Orders.

MENTONNAISE (À LA) – Method of cooking certain food-stuffs, especially rock-pool fish. The characteristic ingredients are tomatoes, black olives and garlic seasoning. (See GARNISHES.)

MENU – A sheet of paper or card on which is written, in a specific order, the names of all the dishes which are to be served in succession at a given meal.

The idea of providing a 'bill of fare', which in old French was called an escriteau, is not new.

Here, for instance, is a list of dishes which were served on the occasion of the marriage of a counsellor and master of the Counting House in 1571. This curious document, preserved in the archives of the Northern département of France, is entitled:

'Bill of fare for the nuptial supper of Master Baulde Cuvillon.'

A great many menus of this kind are to be found in the archives of large French towns, but most of them are no more than the accounts of the money spent in buying the food to be served at great feasts.

The 'bills of fare' and escriteaux were working menus, instructions to indicate to the kitchen staff of a royal or princely household the order in which the various courses should succeed one another at a great dinner.

The individual menu as we know it today did not come into use until the early nineteenth century, at the time of the first Restoration in France, appearing in the celebrated restaurants of the Palais-Royal, which at that time was the gastronomic centre of Paris. It was customary to show at the door enormous posters on which were inscribed the names of the dishes provided by the establishment. One or two of these poster-menus have come down to us, notably that of the ancient Rocher de Cancale, one of the most celebrated restaurants of the time, and that of the equally famous Hotel des Américains.

As soon as individual menus came into being, every effort was made to make them artistic and elaborate. The greatest artists did not consider it beneath their dignity to illustrate them with their own hands, and these little cards were afterwards much sought after by collectors and bought at very high prices.

Other individual menus, though less artistic, were also sought by collectors. Written out by hand on plain cards, they recorded meals which have become historic.

Sixteenth century menu – This menu is taken from a mémoire on the preparation of an escriteau for a banquet.

Ragoûts. Woodcock à la Quesat – Capons pêlerins – Stuffed roebuck – Civet of venison with turnips – Rabbit à la grenade – Lion of white capon – Stuffed birds – Goslings with Milanese cheese – Partridge à la tonnelette – Partridge à l'orange – Partridge with capers – Wood pigeon en poivrade – Pickled teal – Soleil of white capon – Venison with turnips – White jelly, decorated, shredded, moulded – Chitterlings in jelly – Jelly angelots – Orissan in jelly – Quails with bay leaves – Roebuck with Milanese cheese – Roebuck head – Salt venison frumenty – Sheep's tongues à la vinaigrette – Mock hedgehog – Goslings in Malmsey wine – Peacocks in their feathers – Devilled trotters with sturgeon – Spring chickens in vinegar – Boar with chestnuts – Veal sausages – Trench à la lombarde Amber jelly, plain and fancy – Jelly shield – Jelly escutcheon – Jelly fountain.

Roasts. Larks – Bitterns – Capons – Herons – Young rabbits – Side of beef – Partridge – Plovers – Boar-Doves – Woodcock – Quail – Roebuck – Pheasant – Rabbit – Young hare – Goslings – Young pigeons – Chickens – Teal.

Salads. White – Green – Hop shoots – Olives – Pickled purslane – Lemon – Pomegranate – Lettuces – Samphire – Bon-Chrétien pear.

Final courses. Saveloys – Mainz ham – Pies of artichokes, capon, ox tongue, ox feet, sheep's feet, teal – Small hot choux pastries – Rissoles – Pickled cucumbers – Rosemary snow – Rosemary cream – Apples au gâtelin – Eirier of plums – Tarts, old style, with cream, beef bone-marrow, plums – Cream gâteau – Gâteau joyeux – Boar's head – Pies à la tonnelle with woodcock, quince, chestnuts, apples, chickens – Venison pies – Cheese tarts – Asparagus – Blancmange – Frumenty cream – Baudrier of apples – Fritters – Tarte angoulousée – Tarte d'Angleterre – Tarte fanaide – Chopped apple tart – White wine tart – Flaky pastry – Italian gâteau.

MENU

Seventeenth century menu – Under Louis XIV, the menus were magnificent.

Here is the menu of the dinner offered by Madame la Chancelière to Louis XIV in 1656 in her Château of Pontchartrain.

First course. Eight potted meats and vegetables and sixteen hot hors-d'œuvre.

Second course. Eight important intermediate dishes called broths. Sixteen entrées of fine meats.

Third course. Eight roast dishes and sixteen vegetable dishes cooked in meat stock.

Fourth course. Eight pies or cold meat and fish dishes and sixteen raw salads, with oil, cream and butter.

Fifth and last course. Twenty-four different kinds of pastries – twenty-four jars of raw fruit – twenty-four dishes of sweetmeats – preserves, dried and in syrup and jams.

There were, in all, 168 garnished dishes, not counting the various foodstuffs served as dessert.

Eighteenth century menu – Here is the menu of a meal which Marshal the Duke de Richelieu offered to all the princes and princesses and the members of their courts taken prisoner by him during the Hanoverian war. President Hénault tells us how the menu for this memorable supper was drafted by the Duke de Richelieu himself. Its peculiarity lay in the fact that it was made up entirely of one kind of meat, beef, because, on that particular day, there was little in the Marshal's larder.

'My lord,' said Rulhières to the Marshal, 'there is nothing in the kitchens except a carcase of beef and a few roots . . .'

'Very good,' said the Marshal, 'that is more than is needed to provide the prettiest supper in the world.'

'But, my lord, it would be impossible . . .'

'Come, Rulhières, calm yourself, and write out the menu that I am about to dictate to you.'

And the Marshal, seeing Rulhières more and more alarmed, took the pen out of his hand and, seated in his secretary's place, wrote the following menu which, later, was brought into the collection of Monsieur de la Popelinière.

SUPPER MENU

Centrepiece

The large silver-gilt salver with the equestrian figure of the King, the statues of Du Guesclin, Dunois, Bayard, Turenne. My silver-gilt plate with the arms embossed and enamelled.

First course. Tureen: A tureen of garbure gratinée, made of beef consommé.

Four hors-d'œuvre: Palate of beef à la Sainte-Menehould – Little pies of chopped fillet of beef with chives – Kidneys with fried onion – Tripe à la poulette with lemon juice.

To follow the broth: Rump of beef garnished with root vegetables in the meat juices. (Trim these vegetables into grotesque shapes on account of the Germans.)

Six entrées: Oxtail with chestnut purée – Civet of tongue à la bourguignonne – Paupiettes of beef à l'estouffade with pickled nasturium buds – Fillet of beef braised with celery – Beef rissoles with hazelnut purée – Beef marrow on toast.

Second course. Roast sirloin (baste it with melted bone-marrow) – Endive salad with ox tongue – Beef à la mode with white jelly mixed with pistachio nuts – Cold beef gâteau with blood and Jurançon wine. (Don't make a mistake!)

Six final dishes: Glazed turnips with the gravy of the roast – Beef bone-marrow pie with breadcrumbs and candy sugar – Beef stock aspic with lemon rind and pralines – Purée of artichoke hearts with stock (beef) and almond milk – Fritters of beef brain steeped in Seville orange juice – Beef jelly with Alicante wine and Verdun mirabelles.

To follow, all that is left in the way of jams or preserves.'

And, as a coda to this majestic menu (which we should like to regard as authentic and of its period, although in some respects it strikes us as somewhat odd), the Marshal added:

'If by any unhappy chance, this meal turns out not to be very good, I shall withhold from the wages of Maret and Roquelère (his maître-d'hôtel and master chef, no doubt) a fine of 100 pistols. Go, and entertain no more doubts!

Signed: RICHELIEU'

This menu, strange as its composition may seem, is perfectly orthodox. Structurally, it obeys all the rules which were in force at this period concerning the organisation of important meals.

Nineteenth century menu – Here is a menu of a historic dinner, known as the dinner of the 'Three Emperors', served on 7 June 1867, at the Café Anglais, which no longer exists.

Among the illustrious guests who attended were Alexander II, Czar of all the Russias, the Czarevich (the future Alexander III) and the King of Prussia who afterwards became the Emperor William I.

This dinner, it is said, cost 400 francs a head.

Composition of a banquet menu – Generally speaking, the menu of a great banquet should be made up as follows:

A soup. Often for an important dinner two soups are served, one clear and one thick.

Hot hors-d'œuvre. This type of dish is more often than not omitted at great dinners.

Cold hors-d'œuvre. In former times, these were obligatory at great dinners. They are now no longer served in the evening, but only at luncheons at the beginning of the meal.

Intermediate fish courses. These consist as a rule of large fish braised and served with various garnishes and sauces, or poached, with special sauces served separately.

Intermediate meat, poultry or game courses. Usually the intermediate course consists of a large cut of meat (beef, mutton or lamb), roast or braised and garnished with vegetables.

Less commonly, a large bird is served as an intermediate course. A cut of venison can also be used for this purpose. It should be served with chestnut purée and a special venison sauce. Very rarely, winged game is served as an intermediate course. Usually it is presented as an entrée or rôt.

Entrées. A large number of dishes can be served as entrées.

To ensure efficient service at an important dinner, there should be not more than one entrée, and this should be chosen from among those which are easy to serve.

Very seldom, in a well-planned menu, is a cold dish such as aspic, chaud-froid, mousse, mould, pâté de foie gras, galantine of chicken, etc., served as an entrée. These dishes belong more properly in the category of cold rôts.

Rôt. This is usually poultry or winged game. Less commonly, a cut of venison is served as a rôt. Even more rarely, roast red meat is served, such as fillet, rib or sirloin. This rule holds not only for large dinners but also for those where there are only a small number of guests. Such cuts should only be served as rôts at intimate dinners where the laws governing the composition of a menu may be transgressed. At the family table full licence is permitted.

To follow, or even to be served with the rôt, there must be a salad. At a large dinner it is advisable to keep to plain salads, salade en saison, but a composite salad may also be served. Recipes for these salads are to be found under SALAD.

Cold rôts. Name given to a cold dish served after the hot rôt. The cold rôt is usually either a pâté de foie gras with truffles or a foie gras in aspic. Salad should not be served with this delicate dish.

The following may also be served as cold rôts: Spiny lobster prepared en bellevue, à la parisienne or à la russe; jelly with a border of slices of various shellfish; mousses or moulds of foie gras or ham; galantines of various types of poultry or winged game; freshwater crayfish served en buisson; and most of the cold fish, meat or poultry dishes given in this book.

Entremets. In former times this term covered not only the vegetable side dishes served after the roast, but also the various sweets which nowadays form the dessert.

In France the correct procedure is to serve the sweet after, not before, the cheese.

The above text is retained from the first edition of Larousse for its interest (and amusement) value. Modern banquets are naturally less copious and much less elaborate.

Here is the menu of a solemn chapter of the confrérie Chantepleure de Vouvray (1951):

Gargamelle cocktail snacks

Pike of the Loire valley à la vouvrillonne

Grilled andouille cooked over wine roots

Perles du tuffeau (special pastry) pies

Roast turkey with chestnut purée
Salad of tender vine leaves with nut oil
Goats' milk cheese
Prune tart stuffed with marzipan

MÉOT – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

MERCUREY – This wine, made from grapes grown in the commune of Mercurey in the Saône-et-Loire district, is classified as a first growth of the Chalon slopes.

It is similar to the wines of the Beaune slopes, but is a little less sweet. (See BURGUNDY.)

MÈRE DE SOLE – Fish, also called in France cardine or limandelle. It is cooked in the same way as plaice (q.v.).

MÈRE GOUTTE – Wine made from the juice extracted from the grapes when they are first crushed, and before they are put in the press.

MERGA (Arab cookery) – Name of the sauce served with couscous (q.v.). It is made from the cooking stock of the meat served with the couscous, and can be made either mild or strong. Strong merga is spiced with red pepper.

MERINGUE – Small pâtisserie made from egg white and sugar.

Historians of cookery say that this little pâtisserie was invented in 1720 by a Swiss pastry-cook called Gasparini, who practised his art in Mehringhen, a small town in the State of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

The first meringues made in France were served in Nancy to King Stanislas who, it is said, prized them highly. It was he, no doubt, who gave the recipe for this sweetmeat to Marie Leczinska. Queen Marie-Antoinette had a great liking for meringues. Court lore has it that she made them with her own hands at the Trianon, where she also made vacherins, for which a similar mixture is used.

Up to the beginning of the nineteenth century, meringues were shaped in a spoon, as the pastry forcing-bag had not yet been invented.

Ingredients. 12 egg whites, 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) sugar, 1½ teaspoons table salt, flavouring to taste.

Method. Whisk the whites to a stiff foam. When they have risen well, add the salt and sugar. Fill a forcing-bag with this mixture, and pipe the meringues in the desired shape and size onto buttered and floured baking sheets. Sprinkle with sugar. Bake in a very slow oven.

After taking the meringues out, press the base of each one with the thumb to make a little hollow. Keep in a dry place.

Meringue Chantilly (Larousse)

Border of meringues with Chantilly cream. BORDURE DE MERINGUES À LA CHANTILLY – Take some oval meringues, half of them white, flavoured with vanilla, half pink, flavoured with strawberry or raspberry essence.

Arrange them in a circle, sticking them together with boiled sugar. Put them in a ring on a dish to form a border. Before serving, fill the middle of the dish with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with vanilla or fruit juice.

Meringue croquembouche or pyramid. CROQUEMBOUCHE DE MERINGUES – Using small oval or round meringues made in different colours and differently flavoured, make a pyramid by joining them together with sugar boiled to crack degree (see SUGAR). Alternate the colours in forming the pyramid.

Meringue crust. MERINGUE – A raw or cooked sweet, once it is made, may be covered with meringue mixture and put in the oven to bake the meringue crust.

Italian meringues. MERINGUES À L'ITALIENNE – Proceed as for plain meringues, using the cooked meringue called Italian meringue mixture (see MIXTURES).

Meringue à Marignan – Cook to ball degree (see SUGAR) 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) sugar dissolved in a little water. Add kirsch, maraschino or any other liqueur. Cook a little longer to bring it back to the ball degree. Pour this sugar onto 5 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Marignan meringue is usually decorated with a long strip of crystallised angelica stuck at each end like the handle of a basket.

Swiss meringues. MERINGUES SUISSES – Ingredients. 6 egg whites, 500 g. (18 oz., 4 cups) fine sugar, 3 drops acetic acid or ½ teaspoon lemon juice, vanilla, a pinch of salt.

Method. Work the sugar with 2 egg whites, the acetic acid, vanilla and salt. When the mixture is very white and smooth, add the 4 remaining egg whites, whisked to a stiff froth. Mix well. Pipe through a forcing-bag. Bake in the oven.

Decorate with crystallised fruit and sprinkle with sugar of different colours.

MÉROU – Fish found in Mediterranean coastal waters. A mérou can be as much as 1 m. (39 inches) in length. It is rather tasteless.

All recipes for tunny (q.v.) are suitable for mérou.

MERVELLE – Name of a French pastry made from dough cut into different shapes and deep-fried.

Make a dough with 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sifted flour, 150 g. (5 oz., ⅔ cup) butter, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar, 4 eggs and a small pinch of salt. Leave this dough to stand for 1 hour. Roll it out to a thickness of ½ cm. (¼ inch). Cut into various shapes with fluted pastry-cutters. Deep-fry in boiling fat. Drain, and sprinkle with vanilla-flavoured sugar.

MESCAL – Alcoholic drink tasting of bitter almonds. It is made in Mexico and South America from the Mexican agave.

MESENTERY OF CALF. FRAISE DE VEAU – Membrane which envelopes the intestines of the calf. This is cooked like Calf's head (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS).

MESSIRE-JEAN – French variety of pear of medium size which ripens in autumn. Its skin is russet in colour with a greyish tinge. It is rather gritty in texture, but very fragrant.

METS – The French apply this term to any food prepared for the table. It derives from the Latin missus.

METTON – See CHEESE.

Milk (Nicolas)

MEUNIÈRE (À LA) – Method of cooking fish, which is seasoned, lightly floured and fried in butter. To serve, squeeze a few drops of lemon juice over it, sprinkle with parsley, and pour on the cooking butter, piping hot.

MEURETTE – The name of a Matelote à la bourguignonne (see MATELOTE).

MEURSAULT – A great white Burgundy wine classified among the wines of Côte de Beune.

Meursault also yields excellent, though less well-known, red wines.

MICROWAVE OVEN – An electrically operated counter-top appliance that works on the principle of radiation reaction on the water molecules within foods of all kinds, so that foods are cooked evenly throughout in a comparatively short time. Much prized for its cleanliness and speed in cooking, it has gained great popularity. Manufacturers have met all government safety and health requirements, but scientists have no definite data on possible radiation damage from continual use.

MIGNONETTE – French name for coarsely ground pepper.

In former times, this was the name given to a muslin sachet containing red pepper, nutmeg, coriander, cinnamon, ginger and cloves. This aromatic sachet was dipped for a few moments in the cooking pot to season the food. It could be used several times.

MIGNOT – A celebrated restaurateur of the seventeenth century. He was immortalised by Boileau who, in his satire le Repas ridicule, called him a poisoner.

'Car Mignot, c'est tout dire, et dans le monde entier Jamais empoisonneur ne sut mieux son métier.'

'For Mignot, I need say no more, and in the whole world 'Never did a poisoner know his job better.'

Mignot who, it is said, was a cook of some talent and a conscientious restaurateur, was much enraged by such criticism and took his complaint to court. His suit was rejected and he resolved to take vengeance himself. At that time he was making a kind of dry pastry much prized by Parisians. He conceived the idea of wrapping these little cakes in a sheet of paper upon which, at his own expense, he had printed a violent satire on Boileau written by the latter's enemy, the Abbé Cottin.

The success of these pastries, which were called biscuits Mignot, was enormous. All Paris wanted to taste them so as to be able to savour, at the same time, the verses in which Cottin reviled Boileau. The rage of Mignot subsided somewhat when he discovered that, far from doing him any harm, the couplet had contributed to his greater prosperity.

MIGRAINE – Wine made from grapes grown in the neighbourhood of Auxerre.

MIKADO – See GARNISHES.

MILANAISE (À LA) – Food prepared à la milanaise is generally dipped in egg and breadcrumbs mixed with grated Parmesan cheese, and fried in clarified butter.

The name also described a method of preparing macaroni, and a garnish for cuts of meat, made from macaroni with cheese, coarsely shredded ham, pickled tongue, mushrooms and truffles, all blended in tomato sauce.

This garnish is also used with Macaroni timbales à la milanaise (see TIMBALE).

MILANESE CAKE, MILANAIS – Heat on the stove, as for a Genoese cake, 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) fine sugar and 6 eggs until the mixture begins to heat. Add 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) melted butter and 200 g. (7 oz., 1¾ cups) sieved flour. Flavour with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) anisette liqueur.

Pour the mixture into ornamental tins and bake in a medium oven. Turn out the cakes, spread with apricot jam and ice with aniseed-flavoured Fondant icing (see ICING).

MILK, LAIT – Opaque white alkaline liquid with a yellowish or bluish tinge, secreted by the mammary glands.

The composition of the milk varies according to the type and breed of animal, its state of health and the diet on which it has been reared.

Milk analysis laboratory
Laiterie Servas (Ain) (Rayot)

A litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) milk supplies the body with 30 g. protein, 35 g. fats, 54 g. milk sugar, 7 g. mineral salts (calcium, phosphorus, sodium, etc.) and an appreciable quantity of Vitamins A, B, B<sub>1</sub>, B<sub>2</sub>, C. It is indispensable to babies, but not the complete food for adults that many suppose it to be: its nutritive value is inadequate. For example, to obtain sufficient carbohydrates for his needs, the average adult would have to drink 3 litres (5¼ pints, 6½ pints) milk; in which case the protein intake (120 g.) would be excessive, equivalent to 500 g. (18 oz.) of beef. Lime salts would also be in excess of his needs.

In spite of the fact that it is a liquid, milk should always be regarded as a food and not as a drink, and should be sipped and swallowed slowly. Taken in this way, it coagulates in little fragments in the stomach, and these can be dealt with readily by the digestive juices. On the other hand, if it is gulped down it forms a large indigestible clot in the stomach, and the digestive juices have difficulty in breaking it down. For the same reason, milk is more digestible in the form of soups and porridges because, mixed with carbohydrates, the clot breaks up into fragments more readily. Even persons suffering from enteritis can take milk in this form.

Concentrated milk

Condensed milk. LAITS CONDENSÉS – Milk collected with the utmost care, with or without added sugar, is evaporated in a vacuum at 60 per cent so as to reduce its water content by 40 to 50 per cent.

Sweetened condensed milk keeps better, once the tin is opened, than unsweetened milk. It has the consistency of thick cream.

Dried milk. LAITS DESSÉCHÉS – Milk, usually partly skimmed, is evaporated very rapidly by passing through heated cylinders. Powdered milk keeps very well. The partial skimming of the milk makes it less likely that the powder will turn rancid. This milk, suitably diluted, can be given to young babies.

Fermented milk. LAITS FERMENTÉS – All agricultural communities make use of fermentation to preserve milk and alter its flavour. Apart from spontaneous coagulation, due to the action of the lactic microbes, which produces curds, and curdling by means of rennet, which is the basis of cheese-making, there are many other types of fermented milk. Examples of these are the dahdi of India, the mazyn of Armenia, the huslanka of the Carpathians and Bukovina, the lab an zebadi of Egypt, the yoghurt of Bulgaria and the taetta of Scandinavia. This last is a runny, viscous milk to which vegetable juices are added to prevent coagulation.

All these types of sour milk are produced by the action of lactic ferments of varying degrees of purity and obtained from a number of different sources.

Kefir (q.v.) and koumiss (q.v.) are produced by the combined action of the lactic ferments and barm (brewer's yeast), which forms lactic acid, alcohol, and carbonic acid, rendering the milk frothy.

Almond milk – See ALMOND.

Buttermilk – See BUTTERMILK.

Coconut milk – See COCONUT.

MILL. MOULIN – Small machine used to pulverise foodstuffs such as coffee, breadcrumbs, pepper, block salt, etc.

MILLAS or MILIASSE – Name given in the Languedoc region to a kind of porridge or hasty-pudding made either with maize flour (cornmeal) or with a mixture of wheaten flour and maize flour.

Though the true millas is made in Languedoc, similar porridges are made in various parts of south-eastern and south-western France. In different areas they are given other names: cruchade in Guyenne and Gascony; broye, gaudines or yerbilhou in Béarn; pous or rimotes in Périgord; gaudes in Franche-Comté.

Polenta (q.v.), which is made in Corsica and in Provence, is a porridge of the same type as millas.

The millas of Languedoc is a dish in rustic style. Formerly, in the countryside of the region, it was eaten like bread with certain dishes cooked in gravy, such as beef daube, civet of hare, etc. When used in this way, the millas, when it is quite cold, is cut into slices and browned in fat in a frying pan, or toasted under the grill. In Languedoc, various sweets are made from millas.

Cherry millas. MILLAS AUX CERISES – Put a layer of hot millas in a buttered pie dish. Add sugar and flavour with kirsch. Smooth the millas carefully. Part-cook some stoned cherries in syrup. Drain, and steep in kirsch. Spread them on top of the millas and cover with another layer of millas. Smooth the surface carefully. Make a border of cherries, prepared as indicated above. Sprinkle with crushed macaroons. Pour on melted butter and brown in a slow oven.

A millas sweet (dessert) can be made in the same way using various kinds of cooked fruit such as apricots, bananas, peaches, pears, apples, plums, etc.

Fried millas. MILLAS FRIT – Cut the millas into slices of equal thickness. Flour the slices and brown them lightly in butter or fat. Prepared in this way millas can be used in place of bread with various dishes in gravy.

Millas with frittons. MILLAS AUX FRITTONS – In Languedoc this type of millas is made on the day when, according to the local phrase, the housewife fait le cochon (cooks the pig). The porridge is cooked in the cauldron used to clarify the fat of the pig. At the end of the cooking, the frittons (the residue of the pork fat after melting) are added to the millas.

When it is ready, the porridge is poured onto a floured linen cloth and left to cool. It is then sliced into squares or rectangles before being fried or grilled.

Millas with grape jam. MILLAS AU RASINÉ – Spread slices of millas with raisiné (q.v.) and arrange them in a circle on a dish. Sprinkle the slices with crushed macaroons. Pour on melted butter and brown gently in the oven.

The millas may be spread with other types of jam, or thick purées.

Lot-et-Garonne millas. MILLAS DE LOT-ET-GARONNE – This kind of millas is called a rimote and also a cruchade in Lot-et-Garonne.

Pour water into a large pan and bring to the boil. Flavour with lemon essence and orange-flower water.

Sprinkle into the boiling liquid freshly milled maize flour (cornmeal) until a thick porridge is produced. Pour into shallow plates.

Rimotes are eaten hot, sprinkled with sugar. When they are cold, they can be cut into quarters, browned on both sides in a frying pan, and sprinkled with sugar.

Millas with sugar. MILLAS AU SUCRE – Cut a layer of millas into slices. Cook the slices in hot butter or fat. (In Languedoc pork or goose fat is used for this purpose.) Brown the slices on both sides. Drain. Sprinkle liberally with fine sugar flavoured with vanilla or lemon rind.

Toasted millas. MILLAS GRILLÉ – Spread slices of millas with fat or butter. Toast them gently under the grill.

Mille-feuilles

MILLE-FEUILLE – A pastry very much in vogue in Paris. It is made by arranging thin layers of flaky pastry one on top of the other with layers of cream or some other filling in between.

Mille-feuille can be baked in the form of a large sweet, decorated in various ways. Or, as in Paris pâtisseries, in small individual portions, by cutting the flaky pastry into pieces 5 cm. (2 inches) wide and laying them one on top of the other, sandwiched together in the same way with cream or some other filling.

Large mille-feuille. GROSS MILLE-FEUILLE – Roll out the Flaky pastry (see DOUGH) 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) thick. Cut circles 15 to 18 cm. (6 to 7 inches) in diameter. Put these on a baking sheet, dredge with sugar and bake in a hot oven. Leave to cool, trim, and spread each circle with French pastry cream (see CREAMS) or with any other sweet cream. Place the circles one on top of the other to produce a cake 18 to 20 cm. (7 to 8 inches) deep, regular in shape. Ice it with plain meringue, carefully smoothed with a knife. Sprinkle with sugar and put the cake in the oven for a few minutes to set the meringue.

Decorate the top of the cake according to taste.

Large mille-feuilles, after being covered with a thin layer of meringue, may be sprinkled on the top and sides with dried sultanas, currants and pistachio nuts, either whole or chopped.

When they are intended to be used for a cold buffet they can be further decorated with sugar ornaments arranged as a border on top of the cake, and with plumes of spun sugar. This type of decoration for large cakes is hardly ever used nowadays. Most commonly, mille-feuilles are made square and simply sprinkled with icing sugar.

Mille-feuille can also be filled with any kind of confectioner's cream or thick fruit purées or jams in alternate layers. The layers of a large mille-feuille can also be spread at the last moment with thick Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with vanilla.

Small mille-feuille. PETIT MILLE-FEUILLE – Individual portions are made in the same way as large mille-feuilles, but the square layers, spread with cream, are laid one on top of the other, and cut into pieces 5 cm. (2 inches) wide. The top is left plain.

MILLER'S THUMB. MEUNIER – Common name for a freshwater fish, also known as a bull-head. It is eaten fried.

MILLÉSIME – French term for a wine (whatever its region or vineyard) that has the vintage year (millésime) marked both on the label and the cork. Since the year helps to distinguish the character and worth of a wine, these are the ones preferred by connoisseurs.

All dated wines are not by any means equal in quality. There are exceptional, excellent, good and mediocre wines. The qualities of a particular year also vary from region to region and occasionally from vineyard to vineyard.

In Champagne, only the bottles of the best vintage years are marked; the others are used for blending.

MILLET – Cereal grain which is one of several species of panic-grass. There are two main edible varieties, the common millet and what is now called Italian or German millet.

This plant has been cultivated from very ancient times, the common millet in the Egypto-Arab countries and the 'Italian' variety in Japan. Millet was cultivated in India in prehistoric times. The Romans used it to make a kind of milk porridge from the grains after removing the husks. It is still used in this way by some African tribes.

MILLIASSOUS (Pâtisserie) – Put in a bowl 200 g. (7 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) flour made from small millet, 400 g. (14 oz.,  $1\frac{3}{4}$  cups) sugar and 8 eggs. Work this mixture thoroughly. Add the finely chopped rind of 2 lemons. Moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  litres ( $2\frac{3}{4}$  pints,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  pints) boiling milk and mix well.

Fill small buttered baking tins with the mixture. Bake in a hot oven for 20 to 30 minutes.

MIMOSA SALAD – Sprinkle mimosa with coarsely chopped yolks of hard-boiled eggs and serve in a salad bowl.

MINCEMEAT (English cookery) – Mincemeat should steep for a month in Madeira, rum or brandy.

Mince pie is popular in the United States, but the mincemeat is different.

Meat is not an ingredient of English mincemeat. In the United States meat (beef or venison) is almost always included, although several recipes for meatless mincemeat exist, some using green tomatoes and others more closely resembling the English variety.

English mincemeat. MINCEMEAT ANGLAIS – 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) shredded suet, 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) currants, 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) chopped seeded raisins, 450 g. (1 lb., 4 cups) chopped apples, 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) sugar, 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) sultanas, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) chopped, mixed candied fruit peel, 3 tablespoons (4 tablespoons) brandy or rum, juice and rind of 1 lemon, 1 teaspoon each of cinnamon, nutmeg, clove and mace.

Combine the ingredients. Pack closely in jars and cover tightly. This yields about 2 kg. (4 to 5 lb.) mincemeat.

American mincemeat. MINCEMEAT AMÉRICAIN – Put the following ingredients in a large bowl: 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) minced beef suet, 450 g. (1 lb.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) cooked and finely diced beef, 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) seeded and chopped raisins, 450 g. (1 lb., 3 cups) cleaned and washed currants and sultanas, 450 g. (1 lb., 4 cups) peeled and chopped rennet apples, 150 g. (5 oz., 1 cup) finely diced candied citron, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) chopped candied orange peel, the chopped rind and juice of 1 orange, 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) light brown moist sugar, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) mixed spices,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt, a half-bottle brandy, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) rum, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira.

Mix all the ingredients thoroughly. Leave the mixture to steep for 1 month in a cool place. Stir every 8 days.

Mincemeat fritters. BEIGNETS DE MINCEMEAT – Dip rounds of rice paper in water. Fill them with mincemeat and shape into balls. Dip them in batter and deep-fry. Serve with apricot sauce flavoured with rum.

Mincemeat omelette, or Christmas omelette. OMELETTE DE MINCEMEAT (OMELETTE DE NOËL) – Beat the eggs, adding a few tablespoons fresh cream, a little rum, grated lemon rind, and sugar.

Cook the omelette in butter and, just before folding it over, fill it with a few tablespoons mincemeat, heated with fresh cream. Sprinkle the omelette with sugar, pour plenty of rum over it, set alight and serve.

Mincemeat rissoles. RISSOLES DE MINCEMEAT – Proceed as for plain rissoles (q.v.).

Mincemeat vol-au-vent. BOUCHÉES DE MINCEMEAT – Bake small vol-au-vent. While they are still hot, fill them with mincemeat with fresh cream added.

Mince pie – 'This little pie', wrote Suzanne, French historian of English cookery, 'is especially esteemed and popular in England. With the legendary plum pudding, it presides as master at the gargantuan love feast of Christmas. Its absence from a Christmas dinner would be looked upon as a breach of the traditional rules and customs.'

To make the pies, line large, deep, buttered tartlet tins with plain lining dough or with flaky pastry trimmings. Fill with one of the mincemeats indicated above. Cover with a thin layer of Flaky pastry (see DOUGH). Press the edges together. Make a hole in the centre of each pie to allow the steam to escape. Brush with egg and bake in a hot oven. Serve the mince pies hot.

MINCERS AND CHOPPERS. HACHOIRS – In butcher's shops and restaurant kitchens, precision implements are used for mincing and chopping. Many of them are electrically operated.

Mincers and choppers (La Carpe. Phot. Nicolas)

In French private kitchens, one of the implements used is the four-bladed, double-handled chopper. An ordinary meat chopper can be used, too, though this is really intended for chopping bones.

Chopping boards are sometimes made of cross-grained plywood, like the chopping blocks described under CHOPPING.

MINERAL WATERS. EAUX MINÉRALES – Some natural mineral water is produced by the disintegration of the rocks under intense heat in the bowels of the earth. This water is sometimes hot when it reaches the earth's surface (thermal water), sometimes cold. Each mineral spring has its own special properties which seem to be unrelated to its chemical composition, since two springs very close together can have different properties.

MINESTRA – Italian word for a thick soup. The best-known of Italian minstras is minestrone, for which a recipe is given under SOUPS AND BROTHS.

MINNOW. VAIRON – Small freshwater fish whose bronze-coloured back has olive lights. It is often substituted for gudgeon in fritures of small fish. Its flesh, however, is less fine and more bitter in taste than that of gudgeon. Prepare in the same way as gudgeon (q.v.).

MINT. MENTHE – Fragrant plant of which there are a great many varieties. These most commonly used in France are menthe pouliot, menthe crépue (curly mint) or menthe rouge (red mint). Peppermint is a variety of mint used in dispensing. It has a four-sided stem which is green or reddish, and contains an oily essence (essence of peppermint) from which crystals of camphor mint or menthol can be extracted.

Mint, which is used a great deal in infusions, is also an ingredient in a large number of liqueurs. It is also used in cooking, especially in England, where it is cultivated.

Spirit of mint is made by steeping 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) fresh mint leaves in 3 litres (5¼ pints, 6½ pints) alcohol, 70° (U.S. 80°) proof, for 3 days, and distilling it by condensation.

Mint sauce (English cookery). SAUCE-MENTHE – This sauce is an almost indispensable adjunct to hot or cold lamb in England.

Add 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) vinegar, 4 tablespoons (¼ cup) water, 25 g. (1 oz., ¾ cup) fine sugar, a pinch of salt and a little pepper to 50 g. (2 oz., 2 cups) finely shredded mint leaves. Leave to marinate in a bowl. For an alternative recipe see SAUCE, Cold Sauces.

MIQUES DE MAÏS (Périgord cookery) – Make a fairly stiff dough with 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cups) maize flour (cornmeal) 250 g. (9 oz., 2¼ cups) sifted flour, 1 tablespoon pork fat, a pinch of salt and a glass of tepid water.

When this dough is well kneaded, break it into small pieces of 100 g. (4 oz.) each. Shape the pieces into balls by rolling them in floured hands.

Drop these dough balls into a saucepan of salted boiling water. Poach like forcemeat balls. Turn them over once or twice so that they are fully cooked.

When they are ready, after 25 to 30 minutes' boiling, strain the miques, put them on a cloth and keep them warm.

Miques are eaten as bread. In the countryside around Périgord, they are an accompaniment to dishes such as pickled pork with cabbage; civet of hare or rabbit, etc.

They can also be served as a sweet (dessert) by frying them in butter and sprinkling with sugar.

MIRABEAU (À LA) – Garnish served mainly with grilled meat. It consists of strips of anchovy filets arranged in a criss-cross pattern on the meat, stoned olives, blanched tarragon leaves and anchovy butter.

MIRABELLE – Small plum, golden yellow in colour with a penetrating smell. It is eaten stewed, made into jam, preserved, and used in the manufacture of a spirit. It is also used in confectionery.

Mirabelle plum flan. FLAN AUX MIRABELLES – Proceed as indicated for Apricot tart (see TART).

MIRBANE. Name given to an artificial essence of bitter almonds. It is a yellow liquid with a powerful smell, and is used in perfumery and occasionally in inferior confectionery.

MIREPOIX – Mixture used in meat, fish and shellfish dishes to enhance their flavour.

Mirepoix with meat. MIREPOIX AU GRAS – Cook 150 g. (5 oz., 1¼ cups) diced carrot, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped celery, and 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) chopped raw ham or blanched belly of pork in 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter in a covered saucepan with a sprig of thyme and a quarter of a bay leaf. Simmer slowly until the vegetables are very tender.

Mirepoix is added to certain sauces, notably Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE), to enhance the flavour. It can also be added to braised or pot-roasted meat or poultry.

Bottling plant for Vichy mineral water (Mougins)

Vegetable mirepoix. MIREPOIX AU MAIGRE – This mirepoix is often called brunoise. It is used mainly in the preparation of shellfish à la bordelaise. It is also used as an additional ingredient in some white sauces.

Cook 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) diced carrot, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped celery slowly in butter. Season with salt, a pinch of powdered thyme, and bay leaf. Cook until the vegetables are very tender.

MIRLITONS DE ROUEN – Small pastry in the form of a tartlet which is speciality of Rouen.

Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz.) flaky pastry dough, 4 egg yolks, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) sugar, 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 1 vanilla pod,  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon orange-blossom water.

Method. Make Flaky pastry (see DOUGH). Mix the sugar, yolks and vanilla (the part taken from the inside of the pod). Add the butter, heated until it is nut-brown in colour, and the orange-blossom water. Line tartlet tins with the flaky pastry. Fill two-thirds full with the mixture. Sprinkle with fine sugar and bake in a hot oven for about 15 minutes.

MIROIR (AU) – Descriptive term for eggs baked in the oven so that the white forms a polished film over the yolk. It is also more loosely applied to other dishes which have a mirror-bright finish. (See EGG, Baked eggs au miroir.)

MIROTON – Type of stew made from cooked meat and flavoured with onions.

In a number of old French recipe books this dish is called mironton, and was used not only of a meat dish but also of dishes made with fruit.

For the preparation of miroton see BEEF, Miroton of beef.

MISSEL THRUSH. DRAINE – Species of thrush called missel thrush because it feeds on mistletoe berries. Its plumage is darker than that of the common thrush, and it is longer. It is cooked in the same way as thrush (q.v.).

MISSION HAUT-BRION WINE – Mission Haut-Brion vineyards are among the oldest of the Bordeaux region. They are situated in the Pessac commune of Graves.

MITAN (Middle-cut) – Old French word, a synonym of middle. It is used in cooking for the middle cut of salmon.

MITE. CIRON – Common name for all the animalcules which live in food matter, in cheese for instance, or in vegetable refuse.

MITONNER – French cooking term meaning to simmer bread for a long time in soup.

MIX. DÉLAYER – To blend various ingredients thoroughly into a homogenous mixture.

MIXTURES. APPAREILS –

Cream cheese mixture for hot hors-d'œuvre à la russe.

APPAREIL TWAROGUE – Prepared from pressed creamed cheese mixed with an equal quantity of fresh butter, blended until it is very smooth.

Dauphine potato mixture. APPAREIL À POMMES DE TERRE DAUPHINE – Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES) mixed with Chou paste (see DOUGH) prepared without sugar, in the proportion of one part chou paste to three parts duchess potatoes.

Duchess potato mixture. APPAREIL À POMMES DE TERRE DUCHESSE – Potato purée bound with eggs. (See POTATOES.)

Mixtures for kromeskiés and croquettes. APPAREILS À CROMESQUIS, À CROQUETTES – These mixtures, which are similar for both preparations, are composed of one or more ingredients, cut into small dice, blended for a white mixture with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) with egg yolks added to it, or for a brown mixture with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) with rich demi-glacé (meat jelly) or thickened brown stock.

Maintenon mixture. APPAREIL À MAINTENON – Mixture of Onion soubise (see PURÉE) and thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), bound with egg yolks, incorporating sliced or shredded mushrooms cooked in butter, truffles, and Pickled tongue (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS).

Matignon mixture. APPAREIL À MATIGNON – Vegetables cut in thin slices, cooked in a covered pan in butter with ham, and then mixed with Madeira. (See MATIGNON.)

This is used as a supplementary ingredient for various mixtures, also for braised and fried dishes à la Matignon.

Mirepoix mixture. APPAREIL À MIREPOIX – Vegetables cut en brunoise (q.v.), the degree of fineness depending on the use for which it is intended. Very small pieces of lean ham or bacon lightly cooked in butter are added. (See MIREPOIX.)

This is used as a supplementary ingredient for sauces, forcemeats and various mixtures; it is also used for braised and fried dishes à la Mirepoix.

Semolina mixture for hot pies à la russe (Semolina kasha) – See KASHA.

MIXTURES FOR SWEET DISHES. APPAREILS POUR ENTREMETS –

Bavarois mixture. APPAREIL À BAVAROIS – A mixture of English custard and dissolved gelatine, variously flavoured, with whipped cream added to it. (See BAVAROIS.)

Butter cream mixture. APPAREIL À CRÈME AU BEURRE – This mixture, which is used in the preparation of various cold pastry desserts (coffee gâteaux, praline, chocolate gâteaux, etc.), is made with 28° syrup, egg yolks, and fresh butter, or with custard to which fresh butter has been added while it was still warm. (See CREAMS.)

Caramel cream mixture. APPAREIL À CRÈME AU CARAMEL – A mixture of eggs, sugar, milk and the flavouring chosen, cooked in a bain-marie (q.v.) in a mould coated with light caramel. (See CUSTARD, Caramel custard.)

Chou paste or cream puff pastry mixture. APPAREIL À PÂTE À CHOU – This mixture is used for making cakes of various kinds, cream buns, éclairs, etc. and also for the preparation of various dishes, such as soufflé fritters, gnocchi, profiteroles, etc. (See DOUGH.)

Condé mixture. APPAREIL À CONDÉ – Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., 2½ cups) chopped almonds, 375 g. (13 oz., 3 cups) fine sugar, egg whites, powdered vanilla.

Method. Put the sugar, almonds and vanilla into a bowl. Moisten with egg white, in sufficient quantity to make an easily spreadable, non-runny paste. (See CONDÉ.)

This mixture is used for icing various dessert pastries.

French pastry cream mixture. APPAREIL À CRÈME PÂTISSÈRE – Cream cooked to a firm consistency, made by diluting egg yolks blended with flour and sugar, with boiled milk flavoured as desired. (See CREAMS.)

Crème Saint-Honoré mixture. APPAREIL À CRÈME SAINT-HONORÉ – Mixture of French pastry cream with egg whites beaten to a stiff foam, added while it is still cooking. (See CREAMS.) Used for various sweet dishes.

English custard mixture. APPAREIL À CRÈME ANGLAISE – Custard made of 500 g. (18 oz., 4 cups) fine sugar, 16 egg yolks, 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) boiled flavoured milk. Cook on the stove, stirring constantly, until the first sign of boiling.

This custard is also known under the name of English sauce. It can be served alone, but is more often served as an accompaniment to puddings.

It can be blended with gelatine, dissolved in a little cold water; allow 25 g. (1 oz.) powdered gelatine to 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart).

This custard is served hot or cold, as indicated in the recipe. (See CREAMS.)

Custard mould mixture. APPAREIL À CRÈME RENVERSÉE – Mixture prepared like English custard, using 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) boiled milk, 4 whole eggs, 7 egg yolks, and 200 g. (7 oz., 1½ cups) fine sugar. Blend the ingredients well.

Fruit soufflé mixture. APPAREIL À SOUFFLÉ AUX FRUITS – Cook 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar in a copper pan to crack stage (see SUGAR). Add 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) fruit pulp, rubbed through a sieve.

Bring the syrup to ball stage. Pour it gradually on 5 egg whites whisked into a very stiff froth. Bake like a soufflé.

Meringue mixture. APPAREIL À MERINGUE ORDINAIRE – Whisk 8 egg whites into a very stiff froth. Add 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) slightly moistened sugar to the mixture, folding it gently with a wooden spoon.

The proportion of egg whites for the meringue can be increased. Up to 12 egg whites for 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) of sugar can be used.

Italian meringue mixture. APPAREIL À MERINGUE ITALIENNE – Whisk 8 egg whites until very stiff. Make a syrup of 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) sugar and 1 cup water cooked to 121°C. (250°F.).

Pour this syrup in a thin thread on the egg whites, whisking vigorously throughout this operation.

Italian meringue mixture en genoise. APPAREIL À MERINGUE ITALIENNE EN GENOISE – Blend 500 g. (18 oz., 2½ cups) sugar and 8 egg whites in a copper pan on a hot plate whisking until the mixture reaches a consistency when it can be held on the whisk.

This meringue can be kept in a bowl for a time. Cover it with a circle of paper.

MOCHA. MOKA – Variety of coffee bean grown in Mocha in Arabia. These fragrant beans are roasted rather less than those of Réunion Island and Martinique, which are blended in the coffee commonly used in France.

Coffee made from pure mocha is generally served in special cups, smaller than those used for ordinary coffee.

Mocha cake. GÂTEAU MOKA – Cake made by covering layers of cake, made from best Genoese mixture, with butter cream flavoured with mocha. Put one layer of cake spread with mocha cream on top of the other.

Ice with mocha-flavoured fondant icing or mocha-flavoured butter cream. Decorate the iced cake by piping the same icing or cream through a fluted nozzle onto the sides and top.

Mocha cream. CRÈME AU MOKA – Custard flavoured with coffee essence. Butter cream can also be flavoured with mocha.

French pastry cream (see CREAMS) used for filling choux and éclairs may be flavoured with mocha coffee. Mocha is sometimes added to Chantilly cream.

Mocha essence. ESSENCE DE MOKA – Made with unadulterated roasted mocha coffee infused in the same way as any other coffee essence.

Put in the upper compartment of a large coffee filter 200 g. (7 oz., 2½ cups) freshly roasted and ground coffee. Pour onto this, a little at a time, 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) very strong coffee prepared in advance, and poured on hot but not boiling.

During this process the filter should stand in hot water.

Coffee essence can also be made with skimmed milk, but only if it is to be used to flavour creams or ice cream mixtures. To make this essence, completely skim 5 dl. (scant pint, 2½ cups) milk. Bring to the boil. Put in 200 g. (7 oz., 2½ cups) roasted coffee, still hot and crushed with a rolling-pin. Cover the container with a cloth. Leave to infuse for 15 minutes.

Mocha ice cream. GLACE AU MOKA – Ice cream flavoured with mocha coffee. (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES, Coffee ice cream.)

MOCHATINE CAKES. MOKATINE – Individual portions of mocha cake or petits fours made from best Genoese mixture, filled with mocha-flavoured butter cream and iced with mocha-flavoured fondant icing.

MOCK TURTLE SOUP (English cookery). POTAGE FAUSSE TORTUE – Soup made with calf's head. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS.)

MODE (À LA) – Name given mainly to large cuts of braised beef. (See BEEF, Top of rump à la mode.)

MOISTENING. MOUILLEMENT – Moistening is the process of adding a liquid of some kind to ragoûts, stews, braised meat, fish or poultry, etc.

The term is applied to the broth, consommé stock, wine, etc., used in this way.

MOLASSES. MÉLASSE – Thick brownish substance which is the residue of sugar refining. It will not crystallise.

Sugar cane molasses has quite a pleasant smell and taste, and is used in the distillation of tafia, generally known as rum, a name once used only of the spirit distilled from cane juice, the natural juice of the sugar cane.

MOLLUSCS. COQUILLAGES – Univalve or bivalve edible mollusc. Nearly all are of marine origin; the snail is the one land mollusc that is eaten.

Many types are eaten raw, sprinkled with a little lemon juice or vinegar. Molluscs are used as a garnish for numerous dishes, especially for fish.

Some molluscs can cause poisoning and infectious diseases but the majority of those caught in clear water can be consumed without danger.

Oysters (q.v.) hold first place by reason of their delicate taste and substance. They are easily digested and have the advantage of being able to be consumed alive. It is possible to eat a very large quantity of oysters without loss of appetite; an equivalent quantity of meat with a far lower nutritive value would bring about satiety. The quantity of diluted sea water which oysters contain is a mineralizing element of the first order.

Mussels (q.v.), perhaps richer in food value than oysters, are rather more difficult to digest. They are usually eaten cooked.

Among the other shellfish, scallops (q.v.) deserve a place apart. They have a flavour approaching that of lobster.

MONACO – Monaco consommé is a clear chicken broth thickened with arrowroot, with a special garnish of small rounds of cake mixture made with cheese.

Monaco cream soup is a cream of chicken soup served with the same garnish.

MONBAZILLAC – White wine, very rich and somewhat similar to Sauternes. It is made from grapes grown at Monbazillac, a small commune in the Dordogne 8 km. (5 miles) from Bergerac. A ministerial decree of May 1936 lays down the boundaries of the Monbazillac vineyards. Wine grown beyond these boundaries may not bear the name Monbazillac.

MONSELET – The author Charles Monselet was born at Nantes in 1828 and died in Paris in 1888. He was one of the well-known writers of his day.

He was also a great gastronome, or, more exactly, a poet of gastronomy, for he wrote a number of pleasant poems on the good things of the table. He published several gastronomic works, among them being the Almanach des gourmands, the Lettres gourmandes and Cuisinière poétique. He also wrote a large number of sonnets on cooking.

MONSELET (À LA) – Name given to a great many dishes which contain artichoke hearts and truffles, with potatoes fried in butter where appropriate.

MONSIEUR FROMAGE – See CHEESE.

MONT-BLANC – See CHESTNUTS.

MONT-BRY – See GARNISHES.

MONT-CENIS – See CHEESE.

MONTE-CRISTO Montpensier gâteau is often called by this name. The recipe for this cake is given under MONT-PENSIER.

MONTGLAS – Salpicon à la Montglas is made from foie gras, pickled tongue, truffles and mushrooms blended in Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with Madeira. This salpicon is used as a filling for very small vol-au-vent, tartlets and other pastry cases.

MONTHÉLIE – Red Burgundy wine produced in Monthélie (north of Volnay) in the Côte de Beaune. (See BURGUNDY.)

MONTMAUR – Pierre de Montmaur was a great French scholar and a distinguished Hellenist. He was born in about 1576 at Bétaille, a village of Bas-Limousin between Tulle and Brive. He became a professor of Greek at Paris in 1623, and died in 1648.

Montmaur was mean, parasitic (a sponger as we would say today) and also a slanderer. Because of this he made many enemies. Among these was Ménage, a French literary

Main types of edible molluscs: 1. Common oyster (huitre); 2. Portuguese oyster; 3. and 4. Mussels (moules); 5. Clam; 6. and 7. Clovisse; 8. Praire; 9. and 10. Cockles (coques); 11. Lavignon; 12. Vernis; 13. Fléon; 14. Razor shell; 15. and 16. Scallops (coquille Saint-Jacques); 17. Amande-de-mer; 18. Dosinie exolète; 19. Ormer; 20. Winkle; 21. Whelk; 22. Limpet figure (1613–1692), tutor to Marc de Sévigné, who averred that Montmaur had above all been a teacher of adulation and cookery.

'He gave his lessons in flattery in the morning and his cookery lessons in the evening.'

Ménage said that Montmaur, in his theories of cookery, gave an inflated importance to the position of the chef. He taught that anyone who aspired to become an expert in this important branch of human knowledge should first study the science of government, medicine, painting, astrology, architecture and arithmetic, and gave specious and absurd reasons for this.

'It is necessary for the chef to consider with care the place, the time, the guests and the host; it is necessary for him to be able to direct a meal as though he were directing a battle. He has to be versed in chemical analysis, so as to distinguish between wholesome and dangerous foodstuffs, and those more or less resistant to the action of heat. He has to be able, like a painter, to make attractive designs and blend colours with skill, and so on.'

MONTMORENCY – Name given to a variety of cherry cultivated in the neighbourhood of Paris.

MONTMORENCY (À LA) – Name given to various dishes, cakes or sweets, all of which have cherries added to them in one form or another. For example: Duck à la Montmorency; aiguillettes (thin slices of breast) of Rouen duck with cherries, called Montmorency; cherry ice cream, called Montmorency; iced mousse with cherries, called Montmorency; cherry tarts and tartlets, called Montmorency.

Border of cream à la Montmorency. BORDURE DE CRÈME À LA MONTMORENCY – Fill a turban (ring) mould with rich custard flavoured with kirsch and cook in a saucepan of water. Leave to cool. Turn out on a dish. Fill the middle with stoned cherries, poached in syrup flavoured with kirsch. Mask with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) shaped into a dome and decorated with large stoned cherries cooked in syrup.

Montmorency cake. GÂTEAU MONTMORENCY – Cook some stoned cherries in syrup. Drain and mix with cherry jam flavoured with kirsch.

Using best Genoise butter (see DOUGH) make a round cake. Spread with the cherry mixture. Cover the cherries with Italian meringue (see MIXTURES). Smooth the meringue and decorate with meringue piping.

Sprinkle with icing sugar and brown in the oven. Decorate the top of the cake with cherries, lightly sprinkled with sugar.

MONTPELLIER BUTTER. BEURRE DE MONTPELLIER – A fancy butter, coloured green, used in the presentation and decoration of cold dishes. This butter is edible, but it is intended primarily for decoration rather than for food. (See BUTTER, Compound butters.)

MONTPENSIER – See GARNISHES.

MONTPENSIER (Pâtisserie) – For the dough. 250 g. (9 oz., 2½ cups) sifted flour, 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) sugar, 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter, 2 whole eggs.

For the filling. 125 g. (4 oz., scant cup) blanched almonds, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, 1 teaspoon powdered vanilla, 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) water, 5 egg whites.

Sieve the flour in a ring on the table. Put the sugar, butter and eggs in the middle. Mix quickly and, when the dough is of a good consistency, knead into a ball. Leave to stand while the filling is prepared as follows:

Pound the almonds finely in a mortar, adding the water. Put them in a bowl. Add the sugar, vanilla and the butter, previously melted. Mix well and add the stiffly beaten egg whites a little at a time.

Roll out the sweetened dough and lay it on a flan ring 20 to 25 cm. (8 to 10 inches) in diameter. Press it well down into the ring, making sure that it is firmly attached to the sides. A pie dish may be used as a substitute for the ring and baking sheet. In this case the tart is served in the dish.

Trim the edge with a knife. Prick the bottom of the flan with the point of a knife.

Pour the filling into the flan. Sprinkle with fine sugar and bake in a slow oven for 45 minutes.

A few seconds before the flan is cooked, turn it out. Put it back in the oven to brown the sides. Sprinkle once more with fine sugar, and leave to cool before serving.

MONTRACHET – One of the great wine-growing localities of the Côte de Beaune, distinguished by an appellation contrôlée spéciale and situated partly in the commune of Puligny, partly in that of Chassagne. It produces one of the greatest dry white wines, with a bouquet reminiscent of fresh almonds. In the best vintage years this wine matures wonderfully well.

The name Montrachet enters into the names of neighbouring appellations; Puligny-Montrachet, Chevalier-Montrachet, Bâtard-Montrachet, Bienvenues-Bâtard-Montrachet, Criots-Bâtard-Montrachet, Chassagne-Montrachet (which also produces fine red wines). (See BURGUNDY.)

MOOSE or ELK. ORIGINAL – The largest member of the deer family. The flesh of Canadian moose is comparable to venison. It is prepared like deer.

MOQUE (Belgian Pâtisserie) – 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved flour in a ring on the table. In the middle put 4 or 5 crushed cloves, a pinch of bicarbonate of soda, a pinch of salt, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) moist brown sugar, the same weight of melted molasses and 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) butter.

Mix thoroughly, working the flour in a little at a time. Roll the dough into the shape of a long sausage. Stand it in a cool place and leave overnight.

Next day, cut the dough 'sausage' into slices ½ cm. (¼ inch) thick. Put these rounds of dough, spaced out a little, on a buttered baking sheet.

Bake in a moderate oven.

MORAY. MURÈNE – The histories of ancient Rome speak with enthusiasm of this fish. Wealthy gourmets of imperial Rome, it is said, bred moray, whose flesh grew more succulent in the magnificent breeding grounds which were maintained at great expense.

The moray, which is somewhat similar to an eel in appearance, is a carnivorous fish of extreme voracity. It is prepared in the same way as eel (q.v.).

MOREL. MORILLE – Name of a fungus found in the spring on the fringe of woods. There are various species, the most highly prized being the little black pointed morels found in mountainous country. (See MUSHROOM.)

To prepare for cooking, trim, wash in several waters and very carefully remove any dirt in the interstices of the honeycombed caps. Simmer them in butter in a covered pan in the same way as cèpes. When the morels are large, divide them in halves or quarters before cooking. Morels can also be fried without first simmering them in butter. In this case they must be thoroughly dried after washing.

MORELLO CHERRY. GRIOTTE – This species of cherry is dark red or almost black and it has a tough skin. The pulp, which is red, is firm and sweetish, but sometimes bitter.

Morels
(Kollar)

All recipes for the preparation of cherries are suitable for morello cherries. (See CHERRY.)

MORINGA – The Ben-nut tree, or the Horseradish tree, a shrub native of Egypt.

The fruit of this tree, about the size of hazel-nuts, yield an oil greatly valued in perfumery.

The pods, when fresh and very ripe, are edible. They are called desert dates.

MORNAY (À LA) – Method of preparing certain food, principally fish. All dishes à la Mornay are covered with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE).

MORTADELLA. MORTADELLE – A large type of sausage of Italian origin. The mortadella of Bologna has the highest reputation. Mortadella sausages are also made in France, notably in Lyons and Paris. These are excellent.

They are served, thinly sliced, as an hors-d'œuvre.

MORTAR. MORTIER – Bowl made of marble, stone, metal or wood in which forcemeats and other mixtures are pounded or mixed using a pestle made of hard wood.

MOSCOVITE – Sweets à la moscovite are prepared in various ways.

Cold moscovites are similar to bavarois (Bavarian creams). Moscovites, however, are different in that they are usually made in a hexagonal mould with a hinged lid and embedded in crushed ice and salt.

The name moscovite is also used of an iced bombe with kummel and almonds, and of an ice pudding flavoured with vanilla, also made in a hexagonal mould. In this case the ice cream is made with a hole in the centre which is filled with fresh fruit and Chantilly cream (see CREAMS).

Moscovite jellies are made with fruit or liqueurs in a hermetically sealed mould and embedded in ice and salt. The distinctive feature of these jellies is that they are covered with a frosting of rime.

Fruit moscovite. MOSCOVITE AUX FRUITS – Rub through a fine sieve enough fruit to produce 8 dl. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints,  $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints) pulp. Add 300 g. (11 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{3}$  cups) sugar and 20 g. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  oz.) gelatine dissolved in water. Mix well and put it to set on ice, stirring constantly. Flavour with kirsch.

When it begins to set, add 6 dl. (1 pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) very stiffly whipped fresh cream. Mix. Fill a moscovite mould. Close it, and rub a little butter round the rim of the lid to ensure that it is hermetically sealed.

Put the mould in a bucket on a bed of crushed ice sprinkled with coarse salt. Surround and cover with more crushed ice and salt. Wrap in a cloth. Leave to stand for 2 hours. Turn out like an ordinary ice cream.

Proceeding as indicated above, moscovites can be made using apricots, pineapple, cherries, strawberries, peaches, pears, etc. They can also be frozen in a deep-freeze.

This sweet can be flavoured with various liqueurs.

MOSTELLE – Mainly Mediterranean fish which is very delicately flavoured, and should be eaten in the places where it is caught, as it deteriorates when transported.

All recipes for whiting (q.v.) are suitable.

MOTHE-SAINT-HÉRAYE – See CHEESE.

MOTHER OF VINEGAR. MÈRE DE VINAIGRE – A thick, corrugated film which forms during the acidulation of wine, as a result of the action of mycoderma aceti.

MOUFFLON. MOUFLO – Name given to various breeds of wild sheep. The European moufflon, which is the parent stock of the domestic sheep, is mainly found in Sardinia and Corsica, where it is known as mufione or mufoli. The African cuffed moufflon is about the size of an ordinary sheep. The American moufflon, also called mountain ram, is a slender animal with very long legs. Its horns, which in the male are very large and thick, come right down to the eyes, and form an almost complete spiral. Its coat, short and wiry, is brown in colour.

All these animals are edible. Their meat is very similar to that of the chamois. Before cooking in any way, moufflon meat must be steeped for a long time in an aromatic marinade. It can be roasted or made into a ragoût or civet. All recipes for mutton and roebuck are suitable for moufflon.

MOULD. MOULE – Hollow receptacle made in different materials and different shapes, used in cooking and confectionery.

MOULDING. MOULAGE – The process of putting a liquid or semi-liquid in a mould, whose shape it takes when it sets or thickens either by congealing or cooking.

In former times, moulded plinths were much used for the presentation of cold dishes, but this practice has disappeared today.

MOULIN-À-VENT – A famous wine-growing district in the Saône-et-Loire département of Beaujolais. Its red wines, stronger and more full-bodied than most Beaujolais wines, are distinctive in being delicious when young and also capable of maturing gracefully, especially those of good vintage years. (See BURGUNDY, BEAUJOLAIS.)

MOUSSACHE – Manioc flour used in the manufacture of tapioca.

MOUSSAKA – Dish of Rumanian origin, now made also in a number of Eastern countries. (See MUTTON, Moussaka of mutton.)

MOUSSES – In cooking and confectionery this term is used of a number of different dishes, mostly served cold and even iced, though a few can be eaten hot.

SAVOURY MOUSSES. MOUSSES D'ENTRÉES –

Fish mousse – See FISH.

Foie gras mousse (hot). MOUSSE DE FOIE GRAS – Pound in a mortar 125 g. (4 oz.) raw chicken or veal with 1 egg white. Rub through a fine sieve.

Put this mixture in a bowl and add 125 g. (4 oz.) raw foie gras and 50 g. (2 oz.) raw truffles, both rubbed through a sieve. Season.

Mix these ingredients on ice, working with a spatula and blending in, a little at a time, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) thick cream. Add 2 stiffly beaten egg whites. Put in a soufflé dish, cover, stand in a pan of water and cook for 25 to 30 minutes.

Serve with Madeira or Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

This dish is sometimes called soufflé of foie gras. It is served as an hors-d'œuvre or light entrée.

Foie gras mousse (cold) – See FOIE GRAS.

Chicken mousse – See CHICKEN.

Cold quail mousse – See QUAIL.

DESSERT MOUSSES. MOUSSES D'ENTREMETS –

Chocolate mousse. MOUSSE AU CHOCOLAT – Make Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) using 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) fresh cream. Melt 200 g. (7 oz.) vanilla-flavoured (bitter-sweet) chocolate with 4 tablespoons hot water over a gentle heat until it forms a smooth paste. Add to this paste 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) sugar and 6 tablespoons water. When it is thoroughly mixed, bring to the boil, and leave to stand until quite cold before adding the cream.

Chocolate mousse

Fruit mousses. MOUSSES DE FRUITS – Apricot mousse.

Rub through muslin 625 g. (1 lb. 6 oz.) very ripe apricots into a bowl. Mix with it 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) fine sugar and 4 tablespoons kirsch. Instead of the sugar, syrup may be used, made with 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) lump sugar dissolved in a few spoonfuls of hot water, boiled for 2 minutes and left to get quite cold before it is added to the apricot purée.

Line a mould with fine white paper.

Whisk 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) thick fresh cream until it is stiff. Add to the apricot purée. Put in the prepared mould, cover with a disc of white paper, close the mould, and seal round the rim with butter. (In contact with the ice the butter will harden. The mould being thus hermetically sealed, there can be no seepage of salt water.) Place the mould in a container on a deep bed of ice, salt and saltpetre. Surround with layers of ice and saltpetre and cover with the same. Leave to chill for 2 hours.

Before serving, wash and dry the mould, turn out the mousse and remove the paper.

Following this same recipe, mousses can be made with various kinds of fruit, such as pineapple, cherries, peaches, pears, plums, etc.

The term mousse is also used to describe sweet jellies made with fruit or flavoured with liqueurs. These jellies are whisked on ice until they begin to set. They are then poured into jelly moulds and left to set on ice.

Iced mousses. MOUSSES GLACÉES – These are iced sweets, usually made from Bombe mixture (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

MOUSSEAU – A type of French bread made from wheaten flour.

MOUSSELINE – Name given to various preparations, most of which have a large or small quantity of whipped cream added to them. This term is in particular used of moulds made of various pastes enriched with cream (poultry, game, fish, shellfish, foie gras).

Mousselines are served hot or cold. If cold, they are also known as small aspics.

Mousseline is used as an adjective to denote a sauce enriched with whipped cream (mayonnaise mousseline, hollandaise mousseline). It is also used of the paste or forcemeat used to make fish balls and mousses.

The term mousseline is much used in confectionery to describe certain cakes and pastries made of delicate mixtures (e.g. brioche mousseline).

MOUTARDELLE – A kind of horseradish, which is eaten in the same way as horseradish.

MOUTON BLANC – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

MOYEU – Old French word for the yolk of an egg.

MUGWORT. BARBOTINE – Name sometimes given to tansy, a plant which is also called herbe aux vers (worm herb) in French because of its anthelmintic properties. In the north of France, this aromatic plant is used for flavouring certain cakes and dishes.

In the olden days, tansy or mugwort was used in England for flavouring ale.

MULBERRY. MÔRE – Fruit of the mulberry tree, which the Romans are said to have prized highly. It is sweet but rather tasteless, and is seldom eaten raw. A syrup is made from it and its juice is used to colour wines.

The fruit of the bramble or wild mulberry is stewed and used in jams and jellies. A syrup which has a slightly tart flavour is also made from it.

MULE – Mule meat is highly prized, except when it is musky, in flavour. All recipes for horsemeat are suitable for mule.

MULLET, GREY. MUGE, MULET – Fish found in coastal waters. It has a protuberance in the middle of the lower jaw which corresponds to an indentation in the upper jaw. Its body is elongated, with rather narrow flanks. It is covered with large broad scales. There are a number of varieties, the most common being the striped mullet and the grey mullet.

In France this fish is sometimes called poisson sauteur (leaping fish), because of its great agility. Flattening itself on the surface of the water and spreading its tail in a brusque movement, the mullet leaps sideways to great heights.

The flesh of mullet is white, fatty, delicate and easy to digest. All recipes for bass (q.v.) are suitable for grey mullet.

MULLET, RED. ROUGET – The name rouget is given in French to quite different types and species of sea fish which have nothing in common except their red colouring.

Two kinds may be distinguished: red mullet, which have two barbels on their lower jaw; and gurnets, which are recognised by their large bony heads and three pectoral rays. The Mediterranean rouget, which is of the mullet type, has a red back, and flanks and belly that are pink and silver without longitudinal bands. Its head is heavy and has two barbels on the lower jaw. Its tail is cankerous. The white fish is very fine and delicate.

The American mullet is the most important food fish in southern U.S.A.

Those who enjoy red mullet eat it grilled and accompanied by Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER) or one of the special sauces for grilled fish.

For many connoisseurs this fish must be cooked without having its scales removed. It is sometimes known as bécasse de mer (sea woodcock) a name which suggests that its inside may be eaten.

Red mullet à la Bercy. ROUGET À LA BERCY – Make a few shallow cuts across the mullet if it is scaled; season with salt and pepper, brush with oil and grill (broil) at a gentle heat.

Set on a serving dish. Cover with half-melted Bercy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Red mullet à la bordelaise. ROUGET À LA BORDELAISE – Make a few shallow cuts across the back of the mullet. Brush with oil, season, and grill (broil) under a gentle heat.

Garnish with fresh parsley and lemon and serve with Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE) with white wine.

Red mullet en caisse. ROUGET EN CAISSE – Grill the mullet or sauté it in butter. Put it into a rectangular paper case, oiled and dried in the oven. Coat the bottom with Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE) and coat the fish with the same sauce. Cover with breadcrumbs, sprinkle with oil or melted butter. Put in the oven for a few moments.

Red mullet with fennel. ROUGET AU FENOUIL – Make a few light incisions across the back of the mullet and season with salt and pepper. Put into a fireproof dish lined with 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) chopped onions gently cooked in oil, mixed with 1 tablespoon chopped fresh fennel.

Cover with breadcrumbs. Sprinkle with a little oil, and cook in the oven at a gentle heat. Sprinkle with a little lemon juice and chopped parsley.

Fillets of red mullet à l'anglaise. FILETS DE ROUGET À L'ANGLAISE – Fillet the mullet. Trim the fillets, season with salt and pepper, flour them, coat in egg and breadcrumbs and cook in butter, browning them on both sides. Set on a serving dish with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER) on top.

Fried red mullet. ROUGET FRIT – Make a few light incisions on the mullet and proceed as for Fried bass (see BASS).

Red mullet au gratin. ROUGET AU GRATIN – Cooked like Sole au gratin (see SOLE).

Grilled red mullet. ROUGET GRILLÉ – Make a few light incisions on the mullet, season, oil and grill the mullet on a gentle heat, as for Grilled bass (see BASS). Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER) or with any sauce suitable for grilled fish.

Red mullet à l'indienne. ROUGET À L'INDIENNE – Lightly score the mullet across the back, season and flour, and sauté in oil.

Set on a serving dish. Pour Curry sauce (see SAUCE) over it. Surround with tomatoes cooked in butter. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Red mullet à l'italienne. ROUGET À L'ITALIENNE – Score the mullet, season, sauté it in butter or grill it.

Line a serving dish with Italian sauce (see SAUCE), and set the mullet on it.

Coat with the same sauce, cover with breadcrumbs, sprinkle with melted butter and brown in the oven for a few minutes. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Red mullet à la meunière. ROUGET À LA MEUNIÈRE – Proceed as for Bass à la meunière (see BASS).

Red mullet à la moelle. ROUGET À LA MOELLE – Grill the mullet and serve it with Marrow sauce (see SAUCE).

Red mullet à la Nantaise. ROUGET À LA NANTAISE – Season the mullet with salt and pepper, brush with oil, and grill. Take the liver from the fish, taking care not to tear it. Add the liver, crushed, to the following sauce.

Boil down  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) white wine to which has been added 1 tablespoon finely chopped shallot. Add a little dissolved meat glaze, a little butter and some lemon juice. Put this sauce in a dish, set the mullet upon it, and surround with half slices of lemon with fluted edges.

Red mullet à la niçoise I. ROUGET À LA NIÇOISE – Season the mullet with salt and pepper, flour lightly and brown quickly on both sides in oil in a frying pan. Put the fish in a fireproof dish, the bottom of which has been lined with a layer of tomatoes cooked to a pulp and flavoured with tarragon.

Put anchovy fillets cut into thin strips on top of the mullet. Cover with breadcrumbs, sprinkle with olive oil, and cook in the oven for 6 to 8 minutes. Set a round of peeled lemon on the fish.

Red mullet à la niçoise II. ROUGET À LA NIÇOISE – Season a mullet with salt and pepper, brush with olive oil and grill under a gentle heat.

Set on a dish on a layer of tomatoes cooked up to a pulp and flavoured with tarragon. Put fillets of anchovies cut into thin strips, and rounds of lemon, on the fish.

Red mullet à la niçoise is often garnished with unstoned black olives and also with capers.

Red mullet à l'orientale. – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre.

Red mullet en papillote. ROUGET EN PAPILLOTE – Grill the mullet and enclose it, between 2 layers of Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE), in a sheet of oiled paper cut into a heart shape. Close up the paper, set it on a dish, and put it in the oven for a few moments to make it puff up. Serve immediately.

Red mullet à la provençale. ROUGET À LA PROVENÇALE – Prepared as for Bass à la provençale (see BASS).

Red mullet with shallots. ROUGET À L'ÉCHALOTE – Make a few light incisions down the back of the mullet and season with salt and pepper. Spread with a layer of chopped shallots cooked almost dry in white wine, and sprinkle 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) dry white wine over it. Dot with small pieces of butter and cook first on the stove, then in the oven at a moderate temperature, basting frequently. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and a little lemon juice. Serve in the dish in which it was cooked.

MULLIGATAWNY HOTPOT (Créole cookery). MOU-LOUCOUTANI, BOUILLON DE FEU – A highly spiced dish which contains curry powder and a special curry paste, served in soup plates, with Rice à la créole (see RICE) served separately.

Brown a young chicken slightly in a pan. Remove it and keep hot. Cook a saucerful of finely chopped onions in the fat. Do not brown. Cook also a large chopped tomato. When these ingredients are tender, add 1 tablespoon of Indian curry powder, garlic, thyme, parsley and ginger thoroughly pounded together in a mortar. Stir the mixture several times. Cut up the chicken as for Sautéed chicken (see CHICKEN) and put it in the pan with the other ingredients. Allow the chicken to become coated with the mixture, then moisten slowly with clear chicken stock. Before serving, mix 1 tablespoon curry paste in a little of this stock and pour into the sauce. Simmer gently for at least 4 hours.

MUROL – See CHEESE.

MUSCADEL. VIN DE MUSCAT – Sweet dessert wine made from Muscat grapes.

MUSCADELLE – Winter pear with a musky flavour.

MUSCADET – Light dry white wine from the region of Nantes. (See BRITTANY.)

MUSCAT – White or black grapes with a musky flavour.

MUSETTE (EN) – In former times this was the name given to a shoulder of beef boned, rolled in the form of a bladder and braised. This joint, rolled in the same way, was also called en ballon.

MUSHROOMS. CHAMPIGNONS – Cryptogamus plants, devoid of chlorophyll, of which there are a great number of species, some edible, some poisonous. Apart from their botanical characteristics, there is no empirical means of distinguishing the good from the bad. The blackening of a silver object or of an onion provides no guarantee, and even if it is possible to make certain fungi safe for consumption by a preliminary boiling in salted water or vinegar, this procedure is without avail for fungi which contain amanita toxin, the most deadly of all.

It is wise, therefore, if one has no knowledge and no experience of identifying mushrooms, to be satisfied with cultivated mushrooms, which are found at all greengrocers and markets and are perfectly safe.

If one wishes to gather wild mushrooms it is necessary to learn to identify the edible kinds, recognised as such in the locality, and at the same time to recognise the dangerous species.

One can make an arbitrary division of mushrooms into three groups: the species which are very poisonous and dangerous; those which are not only edible, but of excellent flavour and worth cooking; and between these two groups the immense quantity of mushrooms, some suspect, some edible, but without gastronomic interest, except for those passionate devotees whose attention we should direct to the treatises of experts so that they may distinguish the suspect from the edible.

The consumption of these species would only be of interest if their nutritive value had been clearly demonstrated, which is not the case. Certainly analyses indicate an impressive proportion of albuminous substances and of mineral salts, a special sugar, rehalose, and a little lecithin; unfortunately most of these substances are without value, either because they are not assimilable in this particular form, or because the cellulose which encloses them is not soluble by the digestive juices.

It follows that mushrooms can hardly be considered as food, but more as a condiment, a rôle which classic cookery has always allotted to them.

Among the dangerous mushrooms the following should be recognised:

Amanita phalloides (death cap). L'AMANITE PHALLOÏDE (ORONGE VERTE, ORONGE CIGUË) – The most dangerous of all, nearly always deadly. The mushroom has a rounded cap which later flattens out, dirty green in colour, fading to a yellowish brown, sometimes bluish, sometimes a paler yellow. It has white gills, sometimes with greenish shades; a white ring; a long stem, narrower at the top, swollen at the base, in the form of a cup enclosed in a sheath or volva, which is only seen on digging it out of the ground. The spores are colourless.

Amanita verna (gill). L'AMANITE VERNA (PRINTANIÈRE) – This is probably only a variety of Amanita phalloides. It has a cap of the same form which is white, shiny, dotted with the remains of the volva; white flesh; white gills; and a white ring around the stalk which has a tendency to drop away.

Both these species are particularly poisonous and are responsible for the majority of deaths from eating mushrooms.

Amanita pantherina (panther cap). L'AMANITE PANTHERINA (FAUSSE GOLMOTTE) – Has first of all a rounded cap, which becomes curved, then flattens out. The colour is variable, brown, greyish red, the colour of dead leaves, sometimes dark yellowish green, almost always covered with scales (the debris of the volva) which sometimes disappear after prolonged rain. It has white gills; a white ring; and a white stalk whose swollen base buried below ground bears two or three circular ridges. Similar to Amanita pantherina is Amanita brunnescens which is typical of North America.

Amanita muscaria (fly agaric). L'AMANITE MUSCARIA (TUE-MOUCHES, FAUSSE ORONGE) – Its cap, of the same form as the preceding species, is a brilliant vermilion red or orange red covered with whitish debris from the volva, except after heavy rain; white or yellowish gills; a white ring. The base of the stem, underground, is covered with white scales.

Amanita citrina (false death cap). L'AMANITE CITRINE – Less poisonous than the preceding species. It is eaten in certain areas, but it should be regarded at least as suspect. This fungus has a citron yellow cap, or greenish yellow, sometimes almost white, covered with the debris of the yellowish volva.

The gills are white, the stalk is fairly tall, swollen at the base. There is a white or yellowish ring which does not become detached.

Apart from Amanita verna which grows from spring to autumn, these species appear particularly in summer and autumn in the woods.

Besides these poisonous species the Amanita group includes some highly esteemed mushrooms:

Amanita caesarea (Caesar's mushroom). L'ORONGE – A magnificent mushroom, rather rare. It has in the first place the form of an egg as long as it is enclosed in the volva, then, when this tears, the red or orange cap appears, first domed, then convex, never covered with scales, but sometimes one can see the traces (two or three fragments) of the volva. The cap is gleaming, sometimes a little slimy in damp weather. It is easily detachable and reveals very white flesh. The gills are large, yellow, never attached to the stem; the stalk is cylindrical, yellow, swollen at the foot, surrounded with a white volva; the yellow ring, tends to drop off. Found in the woods at the end of summer and in autumn. Similar to Amanita caesarea is Amanita calyptroderma which grows in North America in the autumn.

Amanita rubescens (blusher). LA GOLMOTTE, ORONGE VINEUSE – Has a convex cap which later on becomes flatter. It is brownish red or wine-coloured, sometimes quite dark, sometimes faded, with whitish or whitish-yellow scales. The flesh is pinkish or white, turning to pink when in contact with the air; the stalk is hollow, thick, yellow or whitish pink, with a deepening wine-coloured tinge at the base. The gills are white or pinkish. Found in clearings from the end of spring until autumn, it is toxic when raw but excellent when properly cooked.

Amanitopsis fulva and Amanitopsis vaginata (grisette and tawny grisette). COUCOUMELLE – These have domed caps, later spreading out, which are grey, lead coloured, yellowing brown, or beige, usually free of debris from the volva, but sometimes bearing large white patches of volva. They never have a ring on the stalk. The stems are slender, white or slightly coloured, hardly swollen at the base, which remains enclosed by the persistent white or coloured volva. The gills are white, and are never joined at the stalk. Found particularly in autumn, they are toxic when raw but excellent when cooked.

Below are some other good spring mushrooms:

Morchella esculenta (common morel). MORILLES – These do not usually lend themselves to any confusion with dangerous species, and are among the most sought-after mushrooms. They have a rounded or oval shape, beige, greyish or almost black according to the species, the cap indented with honey-combing; the stalk is often shorter than the cap. Morels are found in spring in clearings and copses. In U.S.A. they are found in sandy soil during warm weather in May and June.

Tricholoma (Lepista) saevum (blewit). MOUSSERON VRAI – This has a convex cap, often wavy at the edges, matt, smooth, creamy in colour, sometimes greyish, pinkish or lilac coloured. The stem is short, thick, cylindrical, full. The gills are sinuous, white or cream, joined to the stem. The blewit grows in rings in the spring in meadows or on the borders of woods. It is found sometimes, but rarely, in autumn. In U.S.A. this species is found from September to freezing weather in thin woods and open grassy places.

Marasmius oreades (fairy-ring champignon). FAUX MOUSSERON – Sometimes found in spring but more often in autumn, it grows in circles in dry meadows and pastures or on the edges of paths. The cap is tan or yellow, thin, without much substance, with a central prominence, smooth at the edges; the gills are whitish, uneven, fairly wide apart, and not joined to the stalk. This mushroom, which is never attacked by insects, is sought for its aroma. In U.S.A. it is found from May to October.

Boletus. LES BOLETS – Found in spring and autumn. There are numerous species. Instead of gills they have fleshy tubes on the underside of the cap, white or yellowish, sometimes red, turning to a greenish hue in time, when they are detachable from the cap in the same manner as the choke of an artichoke when cooked. According to the species, the cap is light or dark brown, sometimes very dark brown; the thick stalk which is substantial, is white or brown, and never has a trace of red in the edible species; the white flesh does not turn green when it comes in contact with the air. Even though there are edible species with red tubes, one would do well to avoid them, in spite of the fact that the most suspect, Boletus satanas, only gives rise to serious indigestion. There is one cépe of a pale yellow colour which without being poisonous is uneatable on account of its bitterness.

The mushrooms that follow are only found in summer and autumn:

Psalliota arvensis (horse mushroom). PRATELLE, boule de neige – Has a globular cap of a rosy tint, which later spreads out, thick and white; a strong stem, thickened at the base; rosy white gills; white flesh, yellowing a little when in contact with the air; and a large double ring.

Lepiota procera (parasol). COULMELLE – Has an ovoid cap, becoming rounder and finally spread out, domed in the centre, brown or brownish grey; and a hollow stem, rather tall. The gills are numerous and stand away from the stalk. The flesh is rather soft, insubstantial and white, turning pink or reddish in the air.

Cantharellus cibarius (chanterelle). CHANTERELLE, GIROLLE – Has a form in the shape of a cup, with a frilled edge, and thick swollen vein-like gills, the colour of egg yolk, dark or paler (according to humidity). The stalk is fleshy, short, sometimes non-existent. This mushroom cannot be confused with any other.

Craterellus (Cantharellus) cornucopioides (horn of plenty). CRATERELLE – In France called the horn of plenty or trumpet of death. It appears in the woods at the end of summer and in autumn. The mushroom is in the form of a horn, with vein-like gills and frilled edges, nearly black on top, and dark grey on the underside, smooth on top, slightly veined on the underside. The stem is tubular, ash grey or black. Unattractive and tough as it is, this mushroom is sought for as a condiment on account of its smell which recalls that of the truffle.

In U.S.A. Cantharellus floccosus is found from July to September in woods. Many edible and poisonous mushrooms not mentioned here are found in U.S.A. Cultivated mushrooms are very widely marketed and are government supervised.

Mushroom poisoning – Leaving aside the mushrooms which are suspect and can produce serious indigestion, there exist two types of poisoning according to the type of poison contained in the fungi.

Muscarine poisoning (Amanita muscaria, Amanita pantherina, etc.) resembles atropine intoxication.

The start is rapid (1 to 4 hours after eating). It is characterised by an indefinable malaise, rapidly followed by colic, vomiting, diarrhoea, stomach cramps, abundant salivation, followed by nervous disorders (delirium, excitement, fainting, reeling, dilation of the pupils) followed by prostration.

Avoid the use of alcohol which dissolves the poison, and attempt to empty the stomach by administering vomitives (lukewarm water, soapy water, never emetics); the patient must be kept warm, given frictions, made to inhale ether. The recovery often occurs in 1 or 2 days, the convalescence is short. There are, nevertheless, more serious cases, even fatal (20 per cent of cases for Amanita pantherina).

Phalline poisoning (more correctly, amanita toxin) is much more serious; it is above all caused by Amanita phalloides and Amanita verna. The beginning of the symptoms is much more delayed (12 to 24 hours after eating, sometimes more), and they manifest themselves by fainting fits, great pain, burning stomach, cramp in various parts of the body; intestinal disturbances take the appearance of cholera symptoms, with incessant vomiting, diarrhoea, often bleeding, pain, cold sweats, cold extremities. The stomach is hypersensitive, and rejects everything, the liver is enlarged and painful. The symptoms occur, reach a crisis, are followed by periods of calm.

The mind is not affected until the final period, when the pulse slows down, breathing becomes difficult, the patient turns yellow, and then prostration and collapse ensue, all these symptoms manifesting themselves over 2 or 4 days at least, lasting sometimes for 8 or 10; death follows in 60 per cent of cases; if a recovery is possible it still necessitates a long convalescence.

The emptying of the stomach, which must always be attempted by means of vomitives and stomach douches, has only a small chance of success, the poison being already absorbed.

We must apologise for introducing a rather terrifying picture in a work dedicated to gastronomy, but when one thinks of the too frequent fatal accidents which occur every year from eating poisonous mushrooms, one cannot too often sound a note of warning.

Preparation of cultivated mushrooms. PREPARATION DES CHAMPIGNONS DE COUCHE – Choose 500 g. (1 lb.) very white mushrooms, and remove the earthy bottom of the stalk. Wash quickly and carefully in a lot of water. Drain the mushrooms and dry them. Slice off the stalks on a level with the caps. Pare the caps neatly or groove them by cutting minute and regular incisions.

When one is dealing with cultivated mushrooms which are fresh and firm, it is best not to attempt any kind of embellishment when peeling them, but simply to pare them neatly. It is, however, common practice in restaurant cookery to groove them.

Throw them into a boiling liquor prepared in the following way: Boil together 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, the juice of half a lemon and 1 teaspoon salt. Boil the mushrooms in this liquor for 5 minutes. Turn out into an earthenware vessel with the liquor.

The court-bouillon having once served to cook the mushrooms is used for various preparations: added to white sauces, such as velouté, suprême, allemande, white wine, etc. It can also be used to prepare hors-d'œuvre cooked in a marinade.

Another method. Pare or groove the mushrooms and rub them with half a lemon. Put them in a pan in which a little butter has been melted.

Season with a pinch of salt, moisten with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) white stock or Madeira and simmer with the lid on for 8 minutes. Use according to instructions.

Prepared in this way mushrooms are less white but of better flavour.

RECIPES SUITABLE FOR CULTIVATED MUSHROOMS. RECETTES RELATIVES AUX CHAMPIGNONS DE COUCHE –

Mushroom barquettes (hot hors-d'œuvre). BARQUETTES AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Fill puff pastry barquettes with a ragoût of mushrooms cooked in cream, or à la poulette (see below). (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

Mushrooms cooked in butter. CHAMPIGNONS AU BEURRE – Slice the mushrooms into 2 or 3 pieces according to their size, and season with salt and pepper. Sauté them in butter in a frying pan over a lively heat. Transfer to a vegetable dish.

This recipe can be used for cèpes, field mushrooms, chanterelles, morels, blewits and Caesar's mushrooms.

Mushrooms cooked in cream I. CHAMPIGNONS À LA CRÈME – Slice the mushrooms, season them and simmer in butter for 8 to 10 minutes.

Cover with boiling cream and leave to cook until the cream is almost completely boiled down.

Stir in a little fresh cream.

This recipe can be used for cèpes, morels, Caesar's mushrooms, and to field mushrooms.

Mushrooms cooked in cream II. CHAMPIGNONS À LA CRÈME – Simmer in butter and add Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Mushroom croûte I. CROÛTE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Simmer

Preparation of mushrooms (Larousse)

Mushrooms cooked in cream

the mushrooms in butter. Add a few tablespoons of Allemande sauce (see SAUCE), or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) if the dish is to be cooked au maigre (q.v.). Mix together.

Arrange this preparation in a round bread roll which has been hollowed out, buttered and lightly browned in the oven. Heat for a moment.

This recipe can be used for cèpes, morels, etc.

Mushroom croûte II. CROÛTE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Simmer the mushrooms in butter. Dust lightly with flour and moisten with fresh cream. Season. Cook very gently for 12 minutes. Add butter, and finish in the same way as the recipe above.

Little mushroom croûtes (hot hors-d'œuvre). PETITS CROÛTES AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Prepare a Mushroom purée (see below) and fill bread rolls which have been scooped out, or spread on biscuits.

Mushroom essence – See ESSENCE.

Mushrooms aux fines herbes. CHAMPIGNONS AUX FINES HERBES – The same as Mushrooms cooked in butter with the addition of chopped parsley.

This recipe is applicable to cèpes, field mushrooms, chanterelles, morels, blewits, Caesar's mushrooms.

Mushroom forcemeat or duxelles. FARCE DE CHAMPIGNONS, DUXELLES – This stuffing is usually prepared with cultivated mushroom stalks and peelings, the caps being used for other purposes, but it can be made with other types of mushroom.

Cook gently some chopped onion in a mixture of butter and oil, to which a little chopped shallot is added when the onion is almost cooked. Put in the stalks and peelings of the mushrooms, which have been chopped up and pressed to extract the moisture. For 500 g. (1 lb.) mushrooms use 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) onion, 25 g. (1 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) shallot, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, 3 tablespoons (4 tablespoons) oil.

Cook on a lively heat until all the moisture has evaporated. Season with salt and pepper. Add 1 teaspoon chopped parsley.

Duxelles prepared in this way is used in a large number of preparations.

Mushrooms fumet. FUMET DE CHAMPIGNONS – Term given to the liquor in which mushrooms have cooked. The liquor is boiled down to about a quarter of its original volume.

Mushroom garnish. GARNITURE DE CHAMPIGNONS – Mushrooms which have been sautéed, grilled or cooked in liquor are added to many preparations such as blanquettes, fricassées, escalopes, noisettes (small slices of fillet, loin, or leg of lamb, pork, etc.), tournedos, chicken, sweetbreads, fish, eggs, etc.

Mushrooms à la grecque (cold hors-d'œuvre). CHAMPIGNONS À LA GRECQUE – Choose very small mushrooms. Cook in the same way as for Artichokes à la grecque (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE).

Grilled mushrooms. CHAMPIGNONS GRILLÉS – Choose large, even-sized mushrooms, and remove the stalks. Wash and wipe them, soak in butter or oil, season, and grill under a gentle heat.

Set on a dish with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), as they are, or use according to the directions of the recipe.

Mushrooms à la hongroise. CHAMPIGNONS À LA HONGROISE – Prepare in the same way as Cèpes à la hongroise (see below).

Mushroom julienne. JULIENNE DE CHAMPIGNONS – Trim, wash, wipe and pare the mushrooms. Cut them into julienne (q.v.) strips, thick or thin according to the use to which they will be put. Season and simmer in butter.

Mushroom ketchup – English condiment made and sold commercially. It is used in English cookery to season sauces and as a condiment with cold meat. Prepare as follows:

Peel, trim and wash some fresh mushrooms. Slice them finely. Put them in layers in an earthenware bowl, sprinkling each layer with fine salt. Cover the bowl and leave to macerate for 3 days in a cool place. Skim each day.

Strain the juice through a stout cloth. Measure the liquid and put it in a saucepan. Add the following spices for every litre (scant quart, generous quart) juice: 10 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) fennel flower, 1 tablespoon ground mace, 1 tablespoon ground ginger, 1 teaspoon cayenne pepper, 1 teaspoon grated nutmeg, 1 teaspoon powdered cloves.

Cook until the liquid forms a syrup. Pour into small bottles. Cork and seal.

Mushrooms à la lyonnaise. CHAMPIGNONS À LA LYONNAISE – The same as Mushrooms cooked in butter, with chopped onion softened in butter.

Set in a vegetable dish, sprinkle with drops of lemon juice and chopped parsley, and pour over the mushrooms the hot butter in which they were cooked. All edible mushrooms can be prepared in this way.

Mushrooms in Madeira or in other liqueur wines (garnish). CHAMPIGNONS AU MADÈRE – Sauté the mushrooms in butter. Drain them, deglaze the sauté pan with the wine chosen, and boil down. Add a few tablespoons thick Spanish sauce (see SAUCE). Boil down by half and strain through a sieve. Put the mushrooms back into this sauce.

Cultivated mushrooms, field mushrooms, morels, etc., are prepared in this way.

Mushrooms in marinade (hors-d'œuvre). CHAMPIGNONS MARINÉS – Cèpes and cultivated mushrooms can be prepared in a marinade (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre, Marinated cèpes and mushrooms).

Mushroom omelette. OMELETTE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Slice the mushrooms thinly, or cut them into dice. Season and sauté in butter. Add to the beaten eggs and make the omelette in the usual way (see EGGS).

Mushrooms prepared in this way can be used to garnish fried eggs, poached eggs or soft-boiled eggs.

Mushroom patties (hot hors-d'œuvre or garnish). TARTELETTES AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Cook them in cream, or in a Poulette sauce (see SAUCE). Put the mixture in short pastry tarts which have been baked blind. Sprinkle with dried breadcrumbs or with breadcrumbs fried in butter and drained, or with grated cheese. Brown in the oven.

These patties can also be prepared with mushrooms cut in julienne, or in dice, sautéed in butter and combined with a brown or white sauce.

Mushrooms à la poulette I. CHAMPIGNONS À LA POULETTE – Simmer the mushrooms in butter. Add a few tablespoons of Poulette sauce (see SAUCE). Set in a vegetable dish, sprinkle with chopped parsley.

MUSHROOMS

Cultivated mushrooms, field mushrooms, cèpes and morels are prepared in this way.

Mushrooms à la poulette II. CHAMPIGNONS À LA POULETTE – Soften the mushrooms in butter and drain. Put 1 tablespoon flour in the sauté pan. Mix, and moisten with bouillon or white stock. Boil down, and combine with 1 or 2 egg yolks. Finish the sauce with cream and butter, season, and pass through a sieve.

Mushroom powder. POUDRE DE CHAMPIGNONS – Trim and clean the mushrooms. Slice them. Put them on a baking sheet on layers of paper and dry very slowly in the oven or near an open fire. When they are perfectly dry pound them in a mortar, and pass through a fine sieve. The powder is used to flavour various preparations such as ragoûts, sauces and stuffings.

Preserved mushrooms (au naturel). CONSERVES DE CHAMPIGNONS – Sterilise the mushrooms as soon as they have been gathered. Peel, scrape and wash them in several waters until they are tender. Drain, leave to cool, and put into glass jars. Sterilise by cooking at boiling point for 1½ hours.

See also HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre, Mari-nated cèpes and mushrooms.

Mushroom purée. PURÉE DE CHAMPIGNONS – See PURÉE.

Mushroom rissoles – See RISSOLE.

Mushroom salad. SALADE DE CHAMPIGNONS – Only freshly gathered mushrooms are used (agarics, morels, or cultivated mushrooms).

Trim, wash, wipe, and cut them up finely, seasoning with oil, lemon juice or vinegar, salt, pepper and chopped herbs. Put in a salad bowl.

One can also add a salad dressing to cultivated mushrooms which have been pared and cooked as described above under Preparation of cultivated mushrooms. Serve as an hors-d'œuvre.

Mushroom salpicon. SALPICON DE CHAMPIGNONS – The mushrooms are cut into dice, big or small, according to the use to which they are put, and cooked in butter.

Little mushroom soufflés. PETITS SOUFFLÉS AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Make the soufflé preparation with mushroom purée according to the method given for all soufflés with a vegetable purée base.

Put the preparation into little soufflé dishes. Cook in the oven. (See SOUFFLÉ.)

Cream of mushroom soup. POTAGE CRÈME DE CHAMPIGNONS – See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Mushroom velouté soup.

Mushrooms sous cloche. CHAMPIGNONS SOUS CLOCHE – Choose mushrooms of medium size. Trim, wash, remove the stems, and season them. Put each, gills uppermost, on a slice of bread which has been fried in butter or toasted. Fill each cap with a little Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) and a few drops of cream. Set on a gratin dish. Cover with a glass cloche of the same diameter as the plate. Cook on top of the stove at a low temperature for 15 to 18 minutes.

This recipe is suitable only for cultivated mushrooms.

Stuffed mushrooms. CHAMPIGNONS FARCI – Choose mushrooms of the same size and weight for this garnish. Break the stalks away from the cap. Wash and wipe the caps. Arrange them on an oiled or buttered baking tray, season them, moisten lightly with oil or melted butter and set in the oven for 5 minutes.

Stuff each cap with a spoonful of duxelles (see above). Dust with fine dried breadcrumbs, sprinkle with oil or butter and brown in the oven.

Mushrooms can be filled with various preparations such as brunoise (q.v.) or mirepoix (q.v.), different purées, risotto, various salpicons, etc., in the manner indicated for all those vegetables which are stuffed and browned in the oven (see GRATIN).

Mushroom tart. TOURTE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Prepare the mushrooms by cooking them in cream or in Poulette sauce (see SAUCE). Arrange in flaky pastry open tart pastry case.

Mushrooms on toast (hot hors-d'œuvre). TOASTS AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Grill the mushrooms or sauté them in butter. Arrange them on bread cut in rectangles or rounds, grilled or fried. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs. Put in the oven for a moment. Season with freshly ground pepper, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mushroom vol-au-vent. VOL-AU-VENT AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Fill a vol-au-vent case with a ragoût of mushrooms cooked in cream or in Poulette sauce (see SAUCE).

RECIPES SUITABLE FOR CÈPES AND OTHER VARIETIES. RECETTES S'APPLIQUANT AUX CÈPES ET À QUELQUES AUTRES ESPÈCES –

Cèpes à la béarnaise. CÈPES À LA MODE BÉARNAISE – Trim, wash and wipe the cèpes, and dry them by putting them under the grill or in the oven.

Insert small pieces of raw garlic into the caps, in the same way as garlic is inserted into a leg of mutton. Season with salt and pepper and grill them.

Arrange them on a hot plate and cover with a mixture of breadcrumbs fried in very hot oil. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Cèpes à la bordelaise. CÈPES À LA BORDELAISE – Trim and wash the cèpes and simmer them in butter and lemon juice. Drain and sponge them dry. Cut them into slices if they are very large, leave whole if they are small. Season with salt and pepper and sauté them in oil, browning slightly.

At the last moment for each 500 g. (18 oz.) cèpes, add the chopped-up stalks, 2 teaspoons chopped shallot, 2 table-spoons freshly grated breadcrumbs, and a teaspoon of chopped parsley.

Arrange the cèpes in a dish, sprinkle over them a little lemon juice and some chopped parsley.

This is how cèpes à la bordelaise are prepared in Paris restaurants. In Bordeaux and in south-west France, the cèpes are not seasoned with shallots but with chopped garlic, (as in the case of cèpes à la provençale) and bread-crumbs are not added to the preparation.

In that same region, cèpes prepared à la bordelaise are never browned. They are sometimes cooked in oil, not in a frying pan but in an earthenware casserole.

Cèpes cooked with cream I. CÈPES À LA CRÈME – Cèpes which are white-fleshed and firm are cooked in this way. According to their size they are cut into slices or left whole.

Put them into a pan in which some butter has been heated. Season with salt and pepper, and simmer them in the butter. When cooked, cover them with fresh boiling cream. Cook until the cream has almost disappeared. Add 3 to 4 table-spoons fresh cream. Mix. Arrange the cèpes in their sauce in a dish.

One tablespoon chopped onion which has been lightly fried in butter can be added to the cèpes when they are simmering in butter.

Cèpes cooked with cream II. CÈPES À LA CRÈME – Simmer the cèpes in butter. Moisten with a Cream sauce (see SAUCE) which is not too thick. Cook for a further few minutes. Finish with a little fresh cream.

Cèpes au gratin. CÈPES AU GRATIN – Trim, wash and remove the stalks from cèpes chosen for their firmness. Season with salt and pepper, and simmer in a little butter.

Arrange them in a buttered fireproof dish, tops downwards. Put into each cap 1 tablespoon stuffing prepared with the chopped stalks mixed with breadcrumbs, chopped onion lightly fried in oil or butter, parsley, chopped garlic and seasoning. Press the stuffing into the caps so that it adheres to them. Sprinkle with grated dried breadcrumbs, and pour over each cap a little melted butter or oil. Brown gently in the oven.

Cèpes à la grecque (hors-d'œuvre). CÈPES À LA GRECQUE – Choose small cèpes which are not yet fully grown. Cook them in a court-bouillon (q.v.) as for Artichokes à la grecque (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE).

Grilled cèpes. CÈPES GRILLÉS – Large white-fleshed cèpes are prepared in this way. Make superficial cuts in the domed caps. Season with salt and pepper. Brush over with oil or melted butter. Cook them under the grill at a moderate temperature.

Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) separately or placed on the cèpes.

Cèpes à la hongroise. CÈPES À LA HONGROISE – Cook 500 g. (1 lb.) cèpes in butter with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion which has been cooked in butter. Leave the cèpes whole if they are small, slice them if they are large. Season with salt and paprika pepper. Cover with boiling cream or with a Cream sauce (see SAUCE) which is not too thick. Cook until the cream is almost entirely boiled down. Add a little butter.

Cèpes with Indian sauce. CÈPES À L'INDIENNE – Sauté 500 g. (1 lb.) pared, washed and dried cèpes in butter. When they are cooked, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion which has been cooked in butter. Mix, shaking the pan. Simmer gently, and add a few tablespoons Indian sauce (see SAUCE).

Cèpes à la provençale. CÈPES À LA PROVENÇALE – Cook in the same way as for Cèpes à la bordelaise, but replace the shallot with finely chopped onion, and add a little crushed garlic.

Smothered or stewed cèpes I. CÈPES ÉTUVÉS – Choose 500 g. (1 lb.) fresh cèpes of even size. Trim the earthy part of the stem. Wash, drain and wipe dry. Slice off the stalks on a level with the cap; leave the caps whole or divide them in two if they are too large. Wipe them.

Put them in a pan with 1 tablespoon butter, some drops of lemon juice and a pinch of salt. Simmer with the lid on for 5 minutes. Turn out into an earthenware terrine with their liquor. Use according to the instructions in the recipe.

Smothered or stewed cèpes II. CÈPES ÉTUVÉS – Wash and trim the cèpes, oil them lightly and put them for a few minutes under the grill to enable them give off their liquor.

Morels. MORILLES – Trim them, wash in several waters, and carefully remove any dirt in the interstices of the honey-combed caps. Cook them in butter in the same way as cèpes.

When the morels are large, divide them in halves or quarters before cooking.

Morels can also be fried without first simmering them in butter. In this case they must be thoroughly dried after washing.

Chanterelles, blewits, Caesar's mushrooms. SIROLLES, MOUSSERONS, ORONGES – All these mushrooms are usually prepared according to the methods prescribed for cèpes and morels. If they are cooked as soon as picked they can be fried in oil or butter without any other treatment except for thorough washing and drying in a cloth.

MUSHROOM BED. CHAMPIGNONNIÈRE – Place given over to the cultivation of mushrooms, nearly always established in old chalk pits.

MUSK DEER. CHEVROTIN – Small wild deer found in India, Tibet, and also in Africa. It is hunted for its musk, the product secreted in an abdominal pocket. The animal is edible when young.

All the preparations suitable for lamb (q.v.) can also be applied to it.

MUSLIN BAG. NOUET – A bag used in cooking. Anything to be cooked or infused in liquid and later taken out can be put in one of these bags, which is knotted or tied with string, thus flavouring the liquid without leaving any solid particles in it.

MUSSEL. MOULE – Edible mollusc found in all the oceans of the world, especially in cold regions.

There are two main species of mussel, the common mussel, which is the most widespread, and which has a long shell with a very slight roughness along the back, and the Provence mussel, with a larger shell, sharper along the edges, found at Biarritz, at Bidassoa and on the Mediterranean seaboard. The Provence mussel is bred in salt-water pools along this sheltered coast, at Toulon and Marseilles. It is a little tougher and less highly prized than the common mussel.

A distinction must also be made between wild mussels, gathered in their natural beds and on rocks, and cultivated mussels, bred on wooden hurdles. In places exposed to the pounding of the waves, wild mussels are small and leathery; those found in slimy places are uneatable. On the other hand, a number of natural beds in France produce very good mussels (Villerville, Dives, Port-en-Bessin, Quiberon). The

Mussels growing in natural surrounds

Mussels cultivated on wooden hurdles

MUSSEL

mussel beds of Isigny, which are permanently under water, have to be dredged. These mussels, which can be up to 12 cm. (4½ inches) in length and are very curved in shape, enjoy a great reputation under the name of cafeu d'Isigny.

Breeding on hurdles produces tender and delicately flavoured mussels. They remain small but are very plump. Hurdle-bred mussels can generally be distinguished from wild mussels by the following characteristics: in the hurdle-bred mussel the edge of the shell opposite the hinge (the frontal edge) is always slightly convex, whereas with wild mussels found in French coastal waters it is always slightly concave.

Poisoning and allergy – Mussels can cause skin eruptions and digestive disturbances to some people. Anyone with this kind of sensitivity should avoid eating them.

Mussels gathered in polluted water can spread typhoid infection if they are eaten raw, as is sometimes the case in Provence, but as they are almost always cooked the dangerous microbes are destroyed.

On the other hand, a poison secreted by certain diseased mussels cannot be destroyed by cooking, and may cause serious illness and sometimes death. At the very first onset of the symptoms, while the doctor is on his way, purgatives and emetics must be given.

It was once thought that, to avoid the danger, it was enough to put a piece of silver in the cooking water and discard the mussels if the coin turned black. This, however, is not an adequate precaution, because the coin will in fact turn black when the mussels are not very fresh and give off hydrogen sulphide which is not in itself poisonous. The poison in question does not turn silver coins black. A useful precaution is to add a pinch of bicarbonate of soda to every litre (scant quart, general quart) of cooking water. This is sufficient to destroy the poison. A little vinegar, added as seasoning, also has a beneficial effect.

It must not be thought that mussels taken from the hulls of ships covered with copper plating are unhealthy because they contain copper salts. These mussels should, however, be rejected because harbour water is contaminated, and mussels collected in this way often smell of sewage.

Mussels à la bordelaise. MOULES À LA BORDELAISE – Cook in white wine 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) mussels, trimmed, scraped and washed, with a sliced onion, parsley, thyme and bay leaf as for Mussels à la marinière (see below). When the mussels split open, drain them. Put them in a bowl or deep dish after having removed 1 shell from each mussel. Keep hot.

Make 2 dl. (⅔ pint, scant cup) vegetable mirepoix (q.v.) by cooking the vegetables slowly in butter until very tender. Just before it is ready, add 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ⅔ cup) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Strain the stock in which the mussels were cooked and moisten the mirepoix with it. Add 2 dl. (⅔ pint, scant cup) fresh cream and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) tomato purée. Boil down and whisk in 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) fresh butter, a squeeze of lemon juice and seasoning. Pour this sauce, boiling hot, over the mussels. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mussels in cream. MOULES À LA CRÈME – Cook 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) mussels as for Mussels à la marinière (see below). Put them in a bowl and keep hot.

Strain the stock in which the mussels were cooked and add it to 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Mix a few tablespoons fresh cream into this sauce and simmer until it is quite thick. Finish with 4 tablespoons (½ cup) cream and 1 tablespoon butter. Season and strain through muslin. Bring this sauce to the boil and pour over the mussels.

Curried mussels. MOULES AU CURRIE (À L'INDIENNE) – Proceed as for Mussels à la hongroise (see below), substituting 1 teaspoon curry powder for the paprika.

Rice à l'indienne (see RICE) is served with mussels prepared in this way.

Fried mussels. MOULES FRITES – Steep shelled mussels for 30 minutes in a marinade of oil, lemon juice and chopped parsley, after having cooked them as for Mussels à la marinière (see below). Dip in a light batter and deep-fry in boiling fat. Drain and dry in a cloth. Garnish with fried parsley.

Mussels as a garnish. MOULES POUR GARNITURES – Wash the mussels in several changes of water. Scrape. Cook them in white wine with sliced onions, parsley, thyme and bay leaves. Drain and shell them. Use as indicated in the selected recipe.

The cooking stock of the mussels is added to the sauce after having been boiled down and strained through muslin.

Mussels à la hongroise. MOULES À LA HONGROISE – Cook the mussels as for Mussels à la marinière (see below), seasoning them with paprika. Strain the cooking stock through a fine sieve. Cook 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onions slowly in butter until very tender. Season with 1 teaspoon paprika. Moisten with the stock. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and a little fresh cream. Cook until quite thick. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter to this sauce. Strain and pour, boiling hot, over the mussels.

Mussels à la marinière

Mussels à la marinière I. MOULES À LA MARINIÈRE – Line a buttered saucepan with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped shallot. Add 1 or 2 sprigs of parsley, 1 sprig of thyme and ¼ bay leaf. Put in 2 litres (3½ pints, 4½ pints) mussels, trimmed, scraped and washed.

Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter cut into very small pieces. Moisten with 2 dl. (⅔ pint, scant cup) dry white wine. Cook, covered, over a very high flame.

As soon as the mussels are fully opened, drain them. Remove 1 shell from each, and put them in a bowl. Keep hot. Take the parsley, thyme and bay leaf out of the saucepan. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) butter to the stock. Mix well and pour over the mussels. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mussels à la marinière II. MOULES À LA MARINIÈRE – Put chopped onion instead of shallot in the buttered pan. Add chopped parsley, a sprig of thyme and a shred of bay leaf. Lay the mussels on top. Moisten with dry white wine. Season with freshly ground pepper. Cover and cook quickly. Drain the mussels, put them in a bowl and keep hot.

Add to the stock 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), based on fish stock, and a squeeze of lemon. Add butter and mix. Pour this sauce over the mussels. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mussel farmers' mouclade. MOUCLADE DES BOUCHOLEURS – 'Clean and wash the mussels, place them in a saucepan and toss over a high heat until they open. Remove the empty shells and place the remainder on a heated plate. Strain the juice of the mussels through a fine sieve.

'Chop 1 clove of garlic and a sprig of parsley finely. Blend with 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter. Pour the juice of the mussels into a saucepan and warm over a gentle heat. Add flavoured butter, a pinch of curry powder, a touch of pepper and finally the mussels. Stir well and simmer for 5 minutes. Sprinkle with 1 teaspoon arrowroot or cornflour, stir again and simmer for 2 minutes. Add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) fresh cream and serve immediately.' (Recipe from M. Guy Epailard of La Rochelle).

Mussels à la poulette. MOULES À LA POULETTE – Cook 2 litres (3  $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 4  $\frac{1}{2}$  pints) mussels as indicated for Mussels à la marinière. Drain and put in a bowl.

Decant the cooking stock. Strain and boil down. Add it to 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, 1  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Poulette sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated fish stock. Add butter to this sauce and a squeeze of lemon juice, and pour over the mussels. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mussel risotto. RISOTTO DE MOULES – Prepare the mussels as indicated for Mussels à la poulette. Shell them. Strain the cooking sauce and add butter. Put the mussels back in the sauce. Pile this ragoût in the middle of a border of risotto. (See RICE).

Mussel sauce. SAUCE AUX MOULES – A white wine sauce made with the concentrated and strained cooking stock of the mussels, with shelled mussels added.

Mussels skewered. MOULES EN BROCHETTES – See SCALLOP SAINT-JACQUES, Scallops, skewered.

Mussel soup. SOUPE AUX MOULES – Cook the mussels as for Mussels à la marinière. Drain and shell them. With the cooking stock make a thin Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Enrich this velouté with a few tablespoons fresh cream. Add butter. Rub through a sieve. Put the shelled mussels in the sauce.

MUSTARD. MOUTARDE – Name of various plants whose seeds are used in the preparation of the condiment known as mustard. The most commonly used are the white mustard, with reddish-yellow seeds, black mustard, with smaller blackish-red seeds (the leaves of this plant are sometimes used in salad) and wild mustard, whose oily seeds are mainly used to adulterate the other two varieties.

Mustard was known to the Romans. They imported it into Gaul, where it quickly gained favour as a condiment.

There are a great many formulae for mustard, differing with each manufacturer. English mustard is usually sold as a fine powder, a mixture of black and white mustard, with curcuma added. It is mixed with water before use. French mustards, which are sold in the form of paste, are made with a mixture of white and black powdered mustard seed, often with herbs added. They are mixed with verjuice (Dijon mustard) or unfermented wine (Bordeaux mustard). In Italy, Cremona mustard contains crystallised fruit.

Leaf or Chinese mustard. MOUTARDE DE CHINE – Herbaceous plant, used in cooking like spinach, of which two varieties are cultivated in France. They are the moutarde de Chine à feuille de chou (Brassica juncea, cabbage-leaf variety) and the moutarde de Chine frisée (curly variety). They are in season from October into the winter.

This vegetable has rather a strong smell.

Mustard sauce. SAUCE MOUTARDE – This sauce is usually served with fish. It is made by adding mustard to Butter sauce (see SAUCE). One tablespoon is used to 2  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) sauce.

MUSTÈLE – Fish found mainly in the Mediterranean, which the Italians call galea or pesce moro. It is somewhat similar to the turbot. Its liver is highly prized by connoisseurs.

MUTTON. MOUTON – Mutton, somewhat fatter and darker in colour than beef, has much the same properties as other red meat. It is believed to be a little more digestible, though this depends on the cut.

In France salt meadow mutton is highly prized. This comes from sheep pastured on the coast where aromatic plants are prolific. The English cross-breed (Southdown cross-breed) is also well liked for its fat and tasty meat, as well as the Dishley cross-breed, which provides small legs and large cutlets. In some districts mutton tends to taste of wool grease. In Africa and several Asian countries sheep are bred with especially large tails. This fat takes the place of butter in the cooking of meat in Moslem communities.

Best quality mutton is bright red, close-grained and firm. It has a great deal of fat which is white and firm and evenly spread over the muscular tissue and in the tissue itself. A fleshy leg of mutton has a thick layer of fat at the base. In second-grade mutton, there is less fat, and the meat is less red and firm. In third-grade mutton there is only a very thin layer of fat on the kidneys and none on the surface of the meat.

In France the cuts of mutton, as with beef, are divided into three categories for sale.

First category. Leg, rib, fillet, chump cutlets (U.S.A. English lamb chops), loin cutlets (U.S. loin chops).

Secondary category. Shoulder, chuck, neck cutlets (U.S. rib chops).

Third category. Flank, neck, breast and shin.

Baron of mutton. BARON DE MOUTON – A cut comprising the entire hind-quarters of the sheep; the saddle and the two hind legs.

Salt meadow lamb and Paullac lamb are usually cut in this way. Barons of mutton are less commonly found.

These large cuts, which are always roasted, are served as an intermediate course (see CULINARY METHODS, Roasting), with a garnish of vegetables and their own gravy, slightly thickened, according to the nature of the garnish.

Cooking time. See CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts.

Garnishes for baron of mutton. Bouquetière; Bretonne; Clamart; Dauphine; Duchesse; Jardinière; Potatoes Château, Fondantes, with parsley, Anna or prepared in some other way; Portugaise; Provençale; Renaissance; Richelieu. (See GARNISHES AND POTATOES).

Mutton or lamb brains – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Breast of mutton. POITRINE DE MOUTON – This part of the sheep is used mainly in the preparation of ragoûts.

All recipes for breast of lamb are suitable for breast of mutton. This cut is especially suitable for épigrammes (see LAMB, Breast of lamb en épigrammes).

The breast may be used with the neck in the preparation of Mutton broth (see SOUPS AND BROTHS).

Grilled breast of mutton (Carême's recipe). POITRINE DE MOUTON GRILLÉE AU NATUREL – 'Take 2 fine well-fleshed breasts of mutton. With a single stroke of the knife remove the part of the bone above the gristle. Tie the breasts. Put them in an oval casserole with 2 carrots, 2 onions and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Moisten with good clear soup (enough to cover the meat). Bring to the boil. Skim and cook for 2  $\frac{1}{2}$  hours. Drain the breasts and put them in a press. When they are cold, trim them and gently take off the skin without touching the fat. Round off the meat on the side where the English cuts of mutton gristle is. Saw off the bones, if they are too long, at the lower edge of the breast. Dip them in melted butter. Grill over a gentle heat, making sure that they are a good colour and that, while grilling, they are gradually warmed through.'

Prepared in this way, grilled breast of mutton is served with Diable sauce (see SAUCE) or any other sauce especially suitable for grilled meat.

Grilled breast of mutton in breadcrumbs (Carême's recipe). POITRINE DE MOUTON PANÉE GRILLÉE – Prepare 2 breasts of mutton as indicated in the previous recipe. Leave to cool, and cut each breast into 6 pieces. Trim these pieces, leaving the bone. Dip them in melted butter and breadcrumbs. Grill them and serve with Poivrade sauce (see SAUCE).

Stuffed breast of mutton à l'ariégeoise. POITRINE DE MOUTON FARCIE À L'ARIÉGEAISE – Cut open a breast of mutton to form a pouch. Season inside. Stuff with breadcrumbs dipped in clear soup and squeezed, chopped raw ham, and chopped parsley and garlic. Bind with eggs and season well. Sew up the opening in the breast.

Put in a buttered braising pan, lined with fresh pork skin or bacon rinds, sliced onions and carrots. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.). Cover and cook gently for 15 minutes. Moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) dry white wine. Boil down. Add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) tomato purée and 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) thickened brown stock. Cover and cook in the oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Drain and serve on a large dish. Surround with a garnish of stuffed cabbage rolled into balls and potatoes cooked in clear stock and butter. Skim all fat off the braising stock. Boil down and strain. Pour over the dish.

Mutton broth (English cookery) – Broth made with the breast and neck of mutton, a mixture of coarsely chopped pot vegetables and pearl barley. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS.)

Mutton chops. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON ANGLAISES – Mutton chops (U.S. English lamb chops) are cut from the fillet of mutton. They are cut very thick, 4 to 5 cm. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 inches). Roll the end of the chop inwards and fix with a skewer.

American cuts of mutton

Mutton chops are always grilled. They are served plain as a rule, garnished with parsley, though any of the garnishes suitable for mutton cutlets may be served with these chops.

Mutton cutlets (U.S. chops). CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON – The cutlets are cut from the rib. According to the part from which they are taken, they have different names.

Chump cutlets (U.S. loin chops) are taken from the covered part of the rib. These must be cut rather thick. They are trimmed by cutting off the end of the bone and paring away the narrow strips of meat on either side of this bone, as well as excessive fat along the top. After trimming, the cutlets are slightly flattened.

Chump cutlets are usually grilled, since this method of cooking suits them best. They may, however, be sautéed or braised.

The neck cutlets (U.S. rib chops) are those cut from the uncovered part of the rib. These are prepared in the same way as chump cutlets, but generally they are sautéed or braised.

Untrimmed cutlets are taken either from the covered or uncovered part of the rib. The French call them bouchères.

The term undressed is also applied to a cutlet whose bone meat, after having been detached from the bone and folded back on itself, is kept in this shape by the bone.

Fillet cutlets (U.S. sirloin chops) are cut from the saddle of mutton, split in two, lengthwise.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à l'albigeoise. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À L'ALBIGEOISE – Sauté the cutlets in oil. Arrange in a circle. Garnish the middle of the dish with sliced cèpes (q.v.) sautéed in oil and flavoured with garlic. Dilute the pan juices with white wine poured into the pan and heated. Season with a touch of garlic. Add fairly thin Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Pour this sauce over the cutlets. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à l'anglaise. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – Season with salt and pepper. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in butter.

Garnish with potatoes or green vegetables tossed in butter.

MUTTON

French cuts of mutton

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la bouchère. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA BOUCHÈRE – Name given to neck cutlets (U.S. rib chops) whose bone is not scraped, and to cutlets of which the meat on the bone is cut away and rolled back. These cutlets are grilled.

Braised cutlets (chops) with various garnishes. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON BRAISÉES – These should be cut rather thick. Season. Put in a buttered frying pan lined with pork skin, finely sliced onions and carrots. Cover and cook gently for 10 minutes. Moisten with white wine and a few tablespoons thickened brown gravy. Boil down. Add a bouquet garni. Cover and cook in the oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour, according to the size of the cutlets. Drain the cutlets. Garnish with the vegetables indicated. Boil down the braising liquor, strain, and pour it over the cutlets.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la bretonne. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA BRETONNE – Sauté in butter. Arrange in a circle. Garnish the middle of the dish with white beans or small kidney beans à la bretonne (see BEANS). Dilute pan juices with a little clear stock; pour round the cutlets.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la bruxelloise. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA BRUXELLOISE – Sauté in butter. Garnish with Brussels sprouts sautéed in butter. Pour white wine and Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) into the pan. Heat and serve with the cutlets.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la cévenole. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA CÉVENOLE – Braise the cutlets in very little stock. When they are three-parts cooked, put 18 chestnuts, three-parts cooked, 18 small glazed onions, and 12 small lardons of belly of pork, blanched and fried, in the saucepan. Finish cooking all together. 5 minutes before removing from the stove, add 12 small chipolata sausages, cooked in butter. Arrange the cutlets in a circle on a dish. Put the other ingredients in the middle. Pour on the braising stock. Carrots cut into uniform pieces can be added to the garnish.

Mutton cutlets (chops) Champvallon. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON CHAMPVALLON – Season 6 neck cutlets (U.S. rib chops) and brown them quickly in butter on both sides. Line

Chump cutlets
(Karquel)

Chump cutlets
(Karquel)

an earthenware dish with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) sliced onions cooked in butter without browning. Lay the cutlets on top. Pour white stock or water into the pan in which the cutlets were fried, and heat. Moisten the cutlets and onions with this stock. Add a bouquet garni and  $\frac{1}{2}$  clove crushed garlic. Bring to the boil on the stove, cover and put in the oven. Cook for 35 minutes.

Put on the top of the cutlets 500 g. (1 lb. 2 oz., 3 cups) potatoes cut into thin slices. Season, moisten a little if necessary, and finish cooking in the oven, basting frequently.

Remove the bouquet garni. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

Mutton cutlets (chops) chasseur. CÔTELETES DE MOUTON CHASSEUR – Sauté the cutlets in butter and drain. For 6 cutlets, put in the frying pan 1 tablespoon chopped shallots and 6 sliced mushrooms. Brown for a few seconds over a very hot flame. Moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) white wine. Boil down. Add  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) thickened brown stock and 1 tablespoon Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for a few seconds. Add 2 teaspoon chopped chervil and tarragon and 1 tablespoon butter. Arrange the chops in a circle on a dish and pour the sauce over them.

Mutton cutlets (chops) en chaud-froid and in jelly. CÔTELETES DE MOUTON EN CHAUD-FROID ET À LA GELÉE – Proceed as indicated for Chaud-froid of lamb chops and Lamb chops in aspic jelly (see LAMB).

Mutton cutlets are rarely served cold. It is usually lamb cutlets which are served in this way.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la Clamart. CÔTELETES DE MOUTON À LA CLAMART – This dish can be prepared in two ways.

1. Grilled or sautéed and garnished with petits pois à la française (young peas cooked in butter with onions and shredded lettuce) or, green peas tossed in butter.

2. Braised. Brown the cutlets on both sides in butter. For 6 cutlets put in the pan 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) newly shelled peas, 1 shredded lettuce, 12 small onions; all these ingredients previously mixed with 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter, salt and a pinch of sugar.

Add a bouquet garni parsley and chervil. Moisten with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) slightly thickened brown veal stock. Cover and cook for 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Arrange the cutlets in a circle on a deep dish. Pile the peas in the middle.

Mutton cutlets (chops) en crépinettes à l'ancienne. CÔTELETES DE MOUTON EN CRÉPINETTES À L'ANCIENNE – Cut the cutlets (chops) rather thin and chop off the end of the bone. Braise them and leave to cool in their stock. Drain and dry in a cloth. Coat them on both sides with fine stuffing mixed with diced truffles, well seasoned and flavoured with a few drops of brandy. Wrap each cutlet in a piece of pig's caul or thin slice of salt pork, dipped in cold water. Dip the cutlets in melted butter and breadcrumbs, baste with melted butter and grill slowly.

Arrange the cutlets in a circle on a dish. Garnish the middle with thick mushroom purée (see MUSHROOMS). Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE) made with the braising stock of the cutlets.

Curried mutton cutlets (chops). CÔTELETES DE MOUTON AU CURRIÉ – Sauté the cutlets in oil. Arrange in a circle on a dish. Cover with Curry sauce (see SAUCE) to which the diluted pan juices left from cooking the cutlets have been added. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la duxelles. CÔTELETES DE MOUTON À LA DUXELLES – Sauté the cutlets in butter, or a mixture of equal parts of oil and butter. Drain them and place on a dish. Pour white wine into the cooking pan; add Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE) and boil for a few seconds. Pour this sauce over the cutlets and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la fermière. CÔTELETES DE MOUTON À LA FERMIÈRE – Fry in butter thick loin chops, seasoned with salt and pepper, in a fireproof casserole. For 6 chops, add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) Vegetable fondue (see FONDUE) and 4 or 5 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{4}$  or  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) fresh green peas. Season. Moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) white wine. Boil down. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) slightly thickened brown stock, and a small bouquet garni. Cook for 20 minutes. Add 20 small potatoes trimmed into pear shapes. Cover and finish cooking in the oven for about 45 minutes. Serve in the casserole.

Grilled mutton cutlets (chops). CÔTELETES DE MOUTON GRILLÉES – Trim the cutlets and flatten them slightly. Baste with melted butter or oil; season. Cook under the grill. Serve the cutlets on a very hot dish. Decorate the bones with paper frills and garnish with watercress.

Grilled mutton cutlets (chops) à l'anglaise. CÔTELETES DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – Season. Dip in melted butter and breadcrumbs. Grill slowly. Garnish to taste.

Grilled mutton cutlets (chops) in breadcrumbs. CÔTELETES DE MOUTON GRILLÉES PANÉES – Baste the cutlets with melted

Neck cutlets
(Karquel)

butter. Season. Coat both sides with freshly made breadcrumbs. Pour on melted butter and cook under the grill. Serve on a very hot dish, garnished with watercress. Decorate the bones with cutlet frills.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la hongroise. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA HONGROISE – Season the cutlets with salt and paprika. Sauté in butter. When they are browned on both sides, put in the frying pan 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion, cooked slowly in the butter until very tender. Season with paprika. Finish cooking all together. Serve the cutlets in a circle on a dish. Heap potatoes or any other vegetable sautéed in butter in the middle.

Pour 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine into the frying pan. Add 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) thick fresh cream and simmer until quite thick. Blend in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter. Pour this sauce over the cutlets.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à l'italienne. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À L'ITALIENNE – Sauté the cutlets in a mixture of oil and butter. Place them on a dish. Put in the pan 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Italian sauce (see SAUCE). Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) very finely diced lean cooked ham, 1 tablespoon butter and 2 teaspoons chopped parsley. Pour this sauce over the cutlets.

Mutton cutlets (chops) Maintenon. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON MAINTENON – Fry the cutlets in butter on one side only. Drain and dry in a cloth. Put on the cooked side 1 heaped tablespoon of Maintenon mixture (see MIXTURE): a Soubise (see PURÉE) with shredded truffles, mushrooms and pickled tongue added. Smooth this mixture carefully into a dome. Heat some butter in a baking tin and lay the cutlets in it. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and pour on melted butter. Brown in the oven.

Arrange the cutlets in a rosette on a dish. Decorate the bones with cutlet frills. Serve with Périgieux sauce (see SAUCE).

This dish can also be prepared as follows:

Braise the cutlets in a very little stock. Leave to cool under a weight in the strained braising stock. Drain, trim, and heap Maintenon mixture (see MIXTURE) on one side. Finish cooking as indicated above. (The périgieux sauce is made with the cooking stock.)

Minced mutton cutlets (chops) sautéed and garnished. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON HACHÉES, SAUTÉES, GARNIES – Cut the medallion of lean meat out of the cutlet without touching the fat part on the bone. Mince the meat finely, adding to it  $\frac{1}{3}$  its weight in butter. Season with salt and pepper. Using this minced meat, reshape the cutlet medallion. Sauté in butter. Garnish with vegetables tossed in butter.

Minced mutton cutlets (chops) in breadcrumbs, sautéed. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON HACHÉES, PANÉES, SAUTÉES – Prepare the cutlets as indicated above. After reshaping them, dip in egg and breadcrumbs. Sauté in butter.

Garnish with vegetables tossed in butter.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la niçoise. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA NIÇOISE – Sauté the cutlets in oil. Drain and arrange in a circle on a dish. Fill the middle with new potatoes fried in butter. Arrange French beans in butter and small tomatoes stewed in butter alternately round the edge. Pour a little white wine into the cooking pan. Add a sauce composed of  $\frac{1}{3}$  thickened brown stock and  $\frac{2}{3}$  Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Season with a touch of garlic and butter. Pour this sauce over the cutlets and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mutton cutlets (chops) Parmentier. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON PARMENTIER – Sauté the cutlets in butter. When they are well browned on both sides, add to the pan diced potatoes three-parts cooked in butter. Finish cooking all together. Arrange the cutlets in a circle and heap the potatoes in the middle. Pour white wine and a few spoonfuls of stock into the cooking pan. Heat, and pour this sauce over the dish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mutton cutlets (chops) Pompadour (Carême's recipe). CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON POMPADOUR – 'Prepare the cutlets in the same way as those called à la Soubise (braised). Do not heat them but coat with a concentrated Soubise purée (see PURÉE). Coat the purée once with breadcrumbs. Dip in egg, then in breadcrumbs a second time and brown in clarified butter. Arrange on a dish. Put a macédoine (q.v.) in the middle. Boil down the pan juices and pour over the dish.'

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la provençale. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA PROVENÇALE – Sauté the cutlets in oil. Garnish with small tomatoes stewed in butter or oil, sautéed mushrooms and blanched olives.

Pour white wine into the cooking pan. Add tomato-flavoured veal stock with a touch of garlic added. Pour this sauce over the dish.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la Réforme. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA RÉFORME – Season the cutlets and baste with butter. Coat with white breadcrumbs mixed with  $\frac{1}{4}$  finely chopped lean ham. Sauté in butter. Garnish with the white of 1 hard-boiled egg, 2 cooked mushrooms, 1 small truffle, 1 gherkin and a small slice of pickled tongue; all these ingredients cut into short, thick strips and mixed.

Pour Poivrade sauce (see SAUCE) into the cooking pan. Heat and pour over the shredded mixture only. Serve with redcurrant jelly.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la russe. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA Russe – Leaving the fat on the bone, cut the medallion of meat out of each cutlet. Prepare a mince as for Beefsteak à la russe (see BEEF). Reshape the cutlets. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs. Sauté in clarified butter.

Arrange in a circle on a dish. On each cutlet place a little mound of onions fried in butter. In the middle of the dish heap sautéed potatoes.

Serve with a sour cream sauce prepared as follows: Pour the sour cream into the pan in which the cutlets have been cooked. Enrich this cream with a few tablespoons of Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Boil down and strain.

Mutton cutlets (chops) sautéed in breadcrumbs. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON SAUTÉES, PANÉES – Season the cutlets. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and sauté in butter.

Arrange on a dish. Serve as they are, with the cooking butter poured over them, or garnished with vegetables.

Mutton cutlets (chops) sautéed with garnish. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON SAUTÉES, GARNIES – Sauté the cutlets in butter so that they remain pinkish inside.

Arrange on a very hot dish. Pour dry white wine into the cooking pan and add a few tablespoons thickened brown stock. Heat and pour over the dish.

Garnishes for sautéed mutton cutlets. All those indicated for medallion of mutton. The cutlets can also be garnished with purées of various vegetables, especially Purée bretonne (see PURÉE); green vegetables tossed in butter or cream; potatoes cooked in various ways; various cheese pastes; risotto.

Mutton cutlets (chops) Soubise. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON SOUBISE – Grill or sauté the cutlets. Serve Soubise purée separately (see PURÉE).

Stuffed cutlets (chops) with various garnishes. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON EN PORTEFEUILLE – Make an incision in the thickest part of rather thick cutlets. Pull the edges a little apart to form a pouch. Season the cutlets. Fill with a Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCMEAT) mixed with diced mushrooms and truffles tossed in butter. Close up the pouch in the cutlets and cover with a thin strip of pork fat or bacon rasher, securing it with string. Brown the cutlets in butter on both sides. Moisten with slightly thickened brown stock. Braise the cutlets. Drain and remove the pork fat. Glaze them. Arrange in a circle on a dish, and garnish as indicated. Boil down and strain the cooking stock and pour over the dish.

Prepared in this way, cutlets can be garnished with vegetables, tossed in butter or braised, and served with garnishes such as Chipolata, Forestière, Financière, etc. (see GARNISHES). They can also be garnished with vegetable purées, pasta prepared in different ways, risotto, etc.

Mutton cutlets (chops) La Varenne. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON LA VARENNE – Cut the medallions out of 6 cutlets. Finely chop this meat with  $\frac{1}{2}$  its weight of dry Duxelles (q.v.), 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter, 2 teaspoons chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Reshape the cutlets with this mixture, and put them back on the bone. Dip the cutlets in egg and breadcrumbs and sauté in clarified butter. Arrange in a circle on a dish. Fill the middle of the dish with very thick Mushroom purée (see PURÉE), made with the addition of 100 g. (4 oz., 2 cups) diced truffles tossed in butter. Make a sauce of a few tablespoons of Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) cooked with Madeira. Add butter and strain. Pour over the dish.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la villageoise. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA VILLAGEOISE – Braise and leave to cool in their stock. Make a Soubise (see PURÉE) with very concentrated veal stock and add sliced mushrooms sautéed in butter. Heap some of this mixture on one side of each cutlet. Proceed as for Mutton cutlets Maintenon.

Mutton cutlets (chops) à la Villeroi. CÔTELETTES DE MOUTON À LA VILLEROI – Braise the cutlets and leave to cool in their stock. Drain and trim. Dip in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) and in egg and breadcrumbs. Cook in clarified butter and drain. Arrange in a circle on a paper doyley and garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Périgueux sauce or Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Civet of mutton. CIVET DE MOUTON – Brown in butter 24 small onions and 200 g. (7 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  loosely packed cups) diced and blanched belly of pork.

Take them out of the pan and, in the same fat, brown thoroughly 750 g. (generous  $1\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) lower mutton cutlets (U.S. rib chops), boned and trimmed into squares. Season with salt, pepper and spices. Add 1 crushed clove of garlic and sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour. Cook until the flour is golden-brown. Moisten with equal parts red wine and clear stock. Add a bouquet garni and 2 tablespoons) brandy. Cover and cook in the oven for an hour.

Drain on a sieve. Put the pieces back in the pan and add the pork lardons, small onions and 24 small mushrooms previously tossed in butter. Strain the sauce and pour it over the mutton. Cover and cook in the oven for an hour.

The sauce of this civet is thickened with the blood of a chicken or rabbit.

Curried mutton. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON À L'INDIENNE (CURRIE DE MOUTON) – Dice  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. ( $3\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) lean mutton (neck chops or shoulder) into pieces 4 cm. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches) square. Brown in lard with 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) chopped onions. Season with salt and 1 teaspoon curry powder. Brown for a few seconds on the stove. Add a clove of crushed garlic. Sprinkle with 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) flour. Mix and moisten with clear stock or water, just enough to cover the meat. Add 1 chopped peeled tomato, with the seeds removed, and a bouquet garni. Cover and cook for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours.

Take out the bouquet. Put the meat in a bowl. Pour on the sauce, boiled down if necessary, flavoured with lemon juice. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Curried mutton can also be prepared in the same way as Chicken curry (see CHICKEN).

It is also possible, still preparing it in the French way as indicated above, to moisten it with coconut milk instead of clear soup. This milk is made by diluting a grated coconut with its own milk mixed with water, or ordinary milk, and sieving this pulp through muslin.

Mutton daube à l'avignonnaise. DAUBE DE MOUTON À L'AVIGNONNAISE – Cut a boned leg or shoulder of mutton into pieces. Following the grain of the meat, interlard each piece with a thick lardoon, and season with salt, pepper and spices.

Steep for 2 hours in a marinade of red wine, oil, finely sliced carrots and onions, crushed garlic, parsley, thyme and bay leaves.

Line a deep earthenware dish with layers of thin slices of pork fat. Intersperse each layer with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion, belly of pork and fresh pork skin, diced and blanched, and a little crushed garlic. Put the pieces of mutton on top. Season with salt, pepper, thyme and powdered bay leaf. Put a large bouquet of parsley stalks with a piece of dried orange peel in the middle of the meat. Moisten with the strained marinade, adding enough clear stock to cover the meat. Put slices of pork fat on top. Cover the dish and seal hermetically with flour-and-water paste. Cook slowly in the oven for 5 hours.

Éclanche of mutton. ÉCLANCHE DE MOUTON – Old French word for shoulder of mutton.

Épigrammes of mutton. ÉPIGRAMMES DE MOUTON – Made with a piece of the breast, braised or boiled, trimmed to the shape of a heart, dipped in egg and breadcrumbs, sautéed in butter or grilled, and a grilled mutton chop.

Épigrammes can be garnished with different vegetables. For a recipe, see LAMB, Breast of lamb en épigrammes.

Filets mignons of mutton en chevreuil (venison style). FILETS MIGNONS DE MOUTON EN CHEVREUIL – Proceed as for Beef filets mignons en chevreuil, venison style (see BEEF).

Grilled filets mignons of mutton. FILETS MIGNONS DE MOUTON GRILLÉS – Flatten the filets slightly. Season; baste with melted butter or oil and coat with breadcrumbs. Pour melted butter over them and grill slowly. Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) or any other sauce suitable for grilled meat.

Fillet of mutton (U.S. Sirloin roast). FILET DE MOUTON – Name given to the half-saddle, split lengthwise.

This cut is rolled and tied after boning. It can be roasted, pot-roasted or braised, as for rib or shoulder. All garnishes for rib or shoulder are suitable for fillet of mutton.

The term filets mignons (of mutton or lamb) is used of the two thin slivers of meat found under the saddle.

Filets of mutton on skewers. BROCHETTES DE FILET DE MOUTON – Cut a well-trimmed loin of mutton or lamb into pieces about  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick. Thread these on skewers alternating with blanched pieces of lean bacon. Season, dip into melted butter, cover with white breadcrumbs, sprinkle with melted butter, and grill.

Pieces of bacon, and sliced mushrooms, lightly tossed in butter, can also be added.

Proceeding as described above, various dishes on skewers, such as chicken livers, lamb's sweetbreads or escalopes of calf's sweetbreads, fillets of beef, mutton, lamb or veal, fillets of various fish (for the latter omit the bacon), fillets of chicken, etc., can be prepared. Lean bacon can be replaced by square pieces of smoked bacon, which does not need to be blanched.

Fillets of mutton in red wine. FILETS DE MOUTON AU VIN ROUGE – Cut the fillets into little square pieces. Season with salt and pepper. Cook in sizzling butter, keeping slightly underdone on the inside. Drain. Toss 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous 2 cups) thickly sliced mushrooms in the same butter. Take the mushrooms out of the pan and put them with the meat.

Pour 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) red wine into the pan. Boil down, add a few tablespoons thickened brown veal stock, simmer to a concentrated consistency, blend in some butter, strain, and pour over the mutton and mushrooms.

MUTTON

Haricot or halicot of mutton. HARICOT (HALICOT) DE MOUTON – Mutton ragoût whose name is no doubt derived from the old French halicoter, to cut into tiny morsels.

There are recipes for this dish which date back to a time before the vegetable bean (haricot) was generally known. In one of the oldest formulae given by Taillevent, the following recipe is given.

'Put them all raw to fry in lard, cut into tiny pieces with sliced onions and some beef broth, verjuice, parsley, hyssop and sage, and boil together, with fine-powdered spices.'

Thus in former times haricot (or halicot) of mutton was made without haricot beans. The only garnish was turnips, potatoes and onions.

Haricot of mutton is made like a ragoût of mutton with potatoes, and has nothing in common with the ragoût of mutton with white haricot beans for which the recipe is given below.

Mutton hash. HACHIS DE MOUTON – Made from cooked meat, braised or roasted in the same way as Beef hash (see BEEF).

Mutton head – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Sheep's head.

Mutton hindquarter. DOUBLE DE MOUTON – This cut is made up of the two hind legs of the animal. They are not split. The hindquarter is usually roasted and served as an intermediate meat course.

All garnishes and sauces indicated for Baron of mutton can be served with this dish.

Mutton kidneys – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Leg of mutton à l'anglaise I. GIGOT DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – Take a leg of mutton, trim, cut off the end of the bone, wrap in a buttered and floured cloth and plunge into a pan of boiling salt water. Add 4 medium-sized carrots cut to look like big olives, 6 medium-sized onions (one studded with 2 cloves), a bouquet garni (q.v.) and 2 cloves garlic. In the same pan put 1 dozen large, tender turnips, quartered and tied in a cloth.

Boil steadily, allowing 30 minutes per pound of meat. Drain and unwrap the leg of mutton. Put it on a serving dish, and surround with the carrots and onions.

With it serve the turnips, rubbed through a sieve, and a Butter sauce (see SAUCE) made with the cooking stock of the mutton, with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) capers added.

Skim and drain the rest of the stock and serve separately.

Leg of mutton à l'anglaise II. GIGOT DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – Proceed as indicated above, substituting a purée of celery for the purée of turnips. (Like the turnips, the celery must be cooked with the mutton.)

Mashed potatoes cooked with the mutton can be served in place of turnips or celery.

Leg of mutton cooked according to the English method should be served with a purée of turnips only, which are cooked with the meat.

Carême, in his Traité des grosses pièces de mouton, advises glazing the leg after boiling with the usual ingredients. He also advises garnishing with cauliflower covered with a very smooth Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE).

He adds that all kinds of vegetables and sauces can be served with leg of mutton cooked in this way.

'It is a strange error on the part of many chefs,' he concludes, 'to suppose that English gourmets will eat this leg only if served with boiled carrots and turnips. What the English like best is to see the juice coming from the leg when they slice it.'

Leg of mutton à la bonne femme. GIGOT DE MOUTON À LA BONNE FEMME – Proceed as indicated for Shoulder of mutton à la bonne femme (see below).

Leg of mutton à la bordelaise (Carême's recipe). GIGOT DE MOUTON À LA BORDELAISE – 'Take a leg of mutton which has been hung until very tender. Bone it, except for the projecting bone. Stuff with ham and fillets of anchovy from which all salt has been removed, and also with chopped parsley, 2 shallots and 1 clove of garlic, chopped and blanched. Tie the leg to keep in all the stuffing. Brown lightly in butter. Moisten with a bottle of good red Bordeaux wine. Add 2 carrots, 3 onions (1 studded with 2 cloves), a bouquet garni of thyme, bay leaves and basil. Cover and stew slowly, but in such a way as to reduce the stock to a Demi-glace (see SAUCE). Cook for 1½ hours. Have ready 1½ litres (2½ pints, 3¼ pints) perfectly skinned cloves of garlic. Boil in a lot of water. Drain. Cool under running water and sauté in the best butter. Keep them hot. Drain the leg of mutton. Put it on a serving dish. Boil down the stock with 2 tablespoons Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE).

'After taking out the vegetables and the bouquet garni, strain the stock through muslin. Pour over the joint. Dress the garlic with 1 tablespoon Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) and a small pinch of Cayenne pepper. Serve in a sauceboat or silver bowl.'

How to cut a leg of mutton:
Left: parallel to the bone
Right: perpendicular to the bone
(Larousse)

Leg of mutton à la boulangère. GIGOT DE MOUTON À LA BOULANGÈRE – Proceed as for Shoulder of mutton à la boulangère (see below).

Braised leg of mutton. GIGOT DE MOUTON BRAISÉ – Proceed as for Braised shoulder of mutton (see below).

Leg of mutton à la bretonne. GIGOT DE MOUTON À LA BRETONNE – Roast a leg of mutton. Serve with it the diluted pan juices with a little fat left in them. Garnish with white haricot beans, small kidney beans à la bretonne, or Purée of haricot beans à la bretonne (see BEANS). The garnish must be served separately.

Leg of mutton en chevreuil (venison style). GIGOT DE MOUTON EN CHEVREUIL – Bone the chump end of a leg of mutton and fix the bone into the smaller end so that it projects. Completely skin the meat and interlard with best lardoons, as for a haunch of roebuck.

Put the leg to steep in a special marinade (see MARI-NADE). Leave it in this marinade for some time, depending on the tenderness of the meat and on the weather (2 days in summer and 4 to 5 days in winter).

Dry the leg of mutton in a cloth. Roast it. Serve Roebuck sauce or Poivrade sauce (see SAUCE) separately.

Roast leg of mutton. GIGOT DE MOUTON RÔTI. Bone the chump (U.S. loin) end of the leg. For cooking time see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking time for roasts. Serve the diluted pan juices with it.

It is customary to stud the leg near the projecting bones with 2 or 3 small cloves of garlic.

Cold leg of mutton is cooked in the same way as roast leg of mutton. It is served plain, garnished only with watercress.

Leg of mutton de sept heures or à la cuiller. GIGOT DE MOUTON DE SEPT HEURES (À LA CUILLER) – Trim the leg and cut off the end of the bone. Braise in the usual way, but cook for a long time at a moderate temperature.

After cooking, this mutton should be so tender that it can be cut with a spoon.

Serve with the braising liquor, strained and boiled down. All garnishes indicated for Braised rib or Shoulder of mutton (see below) are suitable for Leg of mutton à la cuiller.

Leg of mutton à la Soubise. GIGOT DE MOUTON À LA SOUBISE – Trim the leg of mutton and braise in the usual way. When it is half-cooked, drain it. Strain the braising stock. Put the leg back in the braising pan. Surround with 2 kg. (4½ lb.) parboiled quartered onions. Pour on the braising stock. Finish cooking all together.

Drain the onions. Crush them in a saucepan, and add 250 g. (9 oz., 1½ cup) rice cooked in clear chicken soup. Simmer for 10 minutes. Rub the onions through a fine sieve (or through a tammy cloth, pressing hard). Heat this purée, and add butter to it. Glaze the joint. Put it on a serving dish and pour over it a few tablespoons of stock, strained and boiled down, if necessary. Serve with the braising stock and the soubise (onion purée).

The leg can also be braised in the usual way, with the soubise prepared separately as indicated in the recipe for this purée (see PURÉE).

Mutton and lamb's liver, heart and spleen. FOIE, COEUR ET RATE DE MOUTON – These parts constitute what is called the pluck.

Sheep and lamb pluck is used mostly in ragoûts.

Moussaka of mutton (Rumanian cookery). MOUSSAKA DE MOUTON – Ingredients prepared in advance. Using cooked mutton make 1 kg. (2¼ lb., 4½ cups) mince.

Cook in oil 6 aubergines, halved lengthwise and lightly scored with a knife. Scoop out the pulp and chop it. Keep the skins to line the mould.

Cook in oil 2 peeled aubergines, cut into slices and chopped. Add to the mutton mince, and add also 125 g.

(4½ oz., 2¼ cups) chopped mushrooms tossed in butter, 75 g. (3 oz., ¾ cup) chopped onions cooked very slowly in butter until tender, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, a touch of garlic, and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE) strongly flavoured with tomato. Season with salt, pepper and spices.

Bind with 2 or 3 eggs. Mix thoroughly.

Final preparations for the moussaka. Completely line a large buttered charlotte mould with the aubergine skins, purple side downward. Fill this mould with alternate layers of mince and round slices of fried aubergine. Press these ingredients well down into the mould. Cover with aubergine skins. On top of the skins lay a sheet of buttered greaseproof paper. Stand the mould in a pan of water and cook the moussaka in the oven for 1 hour.

Let it stand for a few minutes before turning out on to a serving dish.

If aubergines are not available the moussaka may be made with very small vegetable marrows (zucchini, courgettes).

For individual portions served in a restaurant, the moussaka is usually made in a large rectangular mould.

Navarin of mutton. NAVARIN DE MOUTON – A ragoût garnished with different vegetables.

Navarin of mutton with potatoes. NAVARIN DE MOUTON AUX POMMES DE TERRE – Name given to Ragoût of mutton à la bonne femme cooked without belly of pork (see below).

Navarin of mutton printanier. NAVARIN DE MOUTON PRINTANIER – The chuck and shoulder of mutton cut into pieces each weighing about 60 g. (2½ oz.) Season with salt, pepper and a pinch of fine sugar.

With 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) stock fat or butter, brown the pieces thoroughly. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour, mix, and brown lightly in the oven. Add enough tepid water to cover the meat. Bring to the boil, stirring constantly, to ensure that the roux is well blended into the stock. Add chopped tomatoes, 1 clove crushed garlic, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Bring to the boil, cover and simmer in the oven for 1 hour. Remove the pieces of meat and strain the sauce. Rinse the saucepan in hot water to detach bone splinters. Put all the ingredients and the sauce back in the pan. Bring to the boil once more and add small onions, quartered carrots, turnips cut to look like olives and new potatoes. Continue cooking, still very slowly, for 1 hour. Add 175 g. (6 oz., 1 scant cup) shelled peas and 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) French beans. Finish cooking the navarin, still simmering very gently, for a further ½ hour.

Skim all fat off the navarin and serve.

Noisettes of mutton. NOISSETTES DE MOUTON – These small pieces should be cut from the noix of the leg, since noisette is the diminutive of noix. In practice, however, these very

Noisettes of mutton Armenonville delicate cuts are taken from the fillet (loin) or the rib of the animal.

MUTTON

Noisettes cut from the rib are more regular in shape than those cut from the loin.

These may be sautéed or grilled, and served with all garnishes suitable for Mutton cutlets and Noisettes of lamb (see LAMB).

Noisettes of mutton Armenonville. NOISETTES DE MOUTON ARMENONVILLE – Sauté the noisettes in butter. Set each one on a small Anna potato (see POTATOES) cooked in a tartlet.

Garnish with cocks' combs and cocks' kidneys, alternated with the noisettes, and morels in cream, piled in the middle of the dish. Dilute the pan juices with white wine, heat and pour over the meat.

Noisettes of mutton Nichette. NOISETTES DE MOUTON NICHETTE – Grill the noisettes. Put each one on a bed of browned Duchess potatoes (see POTATOES). On top of each put a large grilled mushroom. In the middle of the dish heap morels sautéed with chopped parsley.

Pour concentrated veal stock, enriched with butter, round the dish.

Noisettes of mutton à la tyrolienne

Noisettes of mutton à la tyrolienne. NOISETTES DE MOUTON À LA TYROLIENNE – Sauté the noisettes in butter. Set each on a small Anna potato (see POTATOES), and decorate the top with a spoonful of Tomato fondue (see TOMATO, FONDUE). Fill the middle of the plate with fried onion rings. Pour the cooking stock over the noisettes.

Mutton pie (English cookery) – See PIE.

Pistache of mutton or mutton à la catalane (Languedoc cookery). PISTACHE DE MOUTON (MOUTON À LA CATALANE) – Made from boned shoulder of mutton or part of the leg. The distinctive feature of this dish is that it is garnished with a considerable amount of garlic. (See Shoulder of mutton à la catalane, below).

Ragoût of mutton. RAGOÛTS DE MOUTON – Ragoûts are made with the shoulder, neck, neck chops and breast of the sheep. These are trimmed, boned and cut into pieces weighing up to 100 g. (3 to 3½ oz.).

Ragoûts may be prepared in white or brown stock. Different vegetables, fresh or dried, and rice or barley are served with them.

Ragoût of mutton à l'anglaise I (Irish stew). RAGOÛT DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – Cut into pieces of equal size 750 g. (1½ to 1¾ lb.) mutton. Put these in a saucepan in alternating layers with 500 g. (18 oz., 3 cups) sliced potatoes and 200 g. (7 oz., 1¾ cups) sliced or chopped onions. Put a bouquet garni in the middle of the pan. Season with salt and pepper. Moisten with enough water just to cover the meat and potatoes.

Bring to the boil. Cover the pan. Cook in a hot oven for about 1 hour. Remove the bouquet and serve in a deep dish.

This stew has no thickening other than the potatoes, which in cooking should thicken the stock sufficiently.

Ragoût of mutton à l'anglaise II (Irish stew). RAGOÛT DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – Prepare the stew as indicated in the previous recipe, but using only half the quantity of potatoes and onions. Boil the stew for 35 minutes.

Drain on a sieve. Put the pieces of meat back in the saucepan. Cover with 400 g. (14 oz., 2½ cups) potatoes cut into ovals and 24 small parboiled onions. Pour strained cooking stock over all these ingredients. Cover, and cook in the oven for 35 to 40 minutes. Serve in a deep dish.

Ragoût of mutton with barley. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON À L'ORGE – Use the same ingredients and procedure as for Ragoût of mutton with white haricot beans (see below), leaving out the belly and substituting for the beans 150 g. (5 oz., scant cup) pearl barley, previously cooked in salt water for 1 hour. The cooking water of the barley should be used to moisten the ragoût.

Ragoût of mutton with red beans. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON AUX HARICOTS ROUGES – Proceed as for Ragoût with white haricot beans (see below), substituting for the white beans the same quantity of red beans, three-parts cooked in red wine.

Ragoût of mutton with white haricot beans. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON AUX HARICOTS BLANCS – This ragoût should not be confused with haricot of mutton.

Brown in fat 125 g. (½ lb., 1 cup) diced and blanched belly of pork. Take these lardons out of the pan and in the same fat brown 750 g. (1½ to 1¾ lb.) mutton cut into square pieces and seasoned with salt and pepper.

Dust flour over the ragoût and proceed as indicated for the first stage of Ragoût of mutton à la bonne femme (see below).

Drain the mutton and put the pieces back in the pan. Add ½ litre (scant pint, 2½ cups) white beans, three-parts cooked, and the browned lardons. Skim all fat off the sauce. Strain and pour over the ragoût.

Cover and cook in the oven for 1½ hours.

Ragoût of mutton à la bonne femme. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON À LA BONNE FEMME – Cut into square pieces 750 g. (1½ to 1¾ lb.) mutton. Season with salt and pepper and brown with 1 quartered onion in cooking fat. Pour off some of the fat. Add a pinch of fine sugar (this sugar, turning into caramel, will give the necessary colouring to the sauce), and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour. Mix. Add 1 small clove of crushed garlic. Moisten with 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) water or clear stock. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup)

Ragoût of mutton with white haricot beans

Tomato purée (see SAUCE) 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fresh, pulped tomatoes, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Cover and cook in the oven for an hour.

Drain the pieces of mutton on a sieve. Remove the skin and splinters of bone separated during cooking. Put the meat back in the pan. Add 400 g. (14 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{3}$  cups) potatoes cut to look like big olives, 24 small glazed onions and 125 g. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  lb., 1 cup) blanched and browned belly of pork cut into little squares. Skim all fat off the sauce. Strain and pour over the ragoût. Bring to the boil. Cover and cook in the oven for 1 hour.

Ragoût of mutton with celeriac. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON AU CÉLERI-RAVE – Proceed as indicated for Ragoût of mutton à la bonne femme, substituting for the garnish indicated an equal quantity of celeriac cut into large oval pieces and par-boiled.

Ragoût of mutton with chick-peas, à la catalane. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON AUX POIS CHICHES (À LA CATALANE) – Proceed as for the first stage of Ragoût of mutton à la bonne femme, using a little more Tomato purée (see SAUCE, Tomato sauce) and seasoning liberally with crushed garlic. Put the pieces of mutton back in the pan. Add chick-peas, cooked separately. Strain the sauce and pour it over the dish. Finish cooking in a slow oven.

Ragoût of mutton with kohl-rabi. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON AUX CHOUX-RAVES – Proceed as indicated for Ragoût of mutton with celeriac, substituting kohl-rabi, cut to look like big olives and parboiled, for celeriac.

Ragoût of mutton with macaroni, à la milanaise. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON AU MACARONI (À LA MILANAISE) – Proceed as for the first stage of Ragoût of mutton à la bonne femme, using a larger quantity of Tomato purée (see SAUCE) and cooking the meat completely in one stage.

Put the pieces of mutton, drained and trimmed, in a flat earthenware dish. Cover with macaroni half-boiled in salt water, drained, cut into lengths of 6 cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches), and then cooked in butter. Thoroughly mix grated Parmesan into the macaroni. Pour over this the sauce strained through a fine sieve, sprinkle with melted butter, and brown slowly in the oven.

Ragoût of mutton à la niçoise. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON À LA NIÇOISE – Bone and cut into square pieces 750 g. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  to  $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb.) shoulder of mutton. Brown in oil, sprinkle flour over it, and add 2 cloves of crushed garlic.

Moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) white wine. Boil down. Add enough clear stock to cover the meat, 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Tomato purée (see SAUCE) and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Cook for one hour. Drain the meat, trim it, and put the pieces back in the pan. Add about 30 small new potatoes and 12 small browned onions. Strain the sauce and pour it over the mutton. Cover and cook in the oven for 45 minutes. Without stirring the ragoût, add to it 4 very small vegetable marrows, peeled, coarsely diced and browned in oil. Cook in a slow oven for 15 minutes.

Ragoût of mutton à la paysanne. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON À LA PAYSANNE – Proceed as for Ragoût of mutton à la bonne femme, cooking the meat with carrots, turnips, onions and quartered potatoes.

This ragoût is also made with carrots, turnips, onions and celery cut into triangles and tossed in butter, and potatoes cut to look like olives.

Ragoût of mutton printanier. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON PRINTANIER – Another name for Navarin of mutton printanier.

Ragoût of mutton with rice. RAGOÛT DE MOUTON AU RIZ – Proceed with the same ingredients as for Ragoût of mutton with barley, substituting for the barley 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) rice, added to the ragoût 30 minutes before serving.

Rib of mutton. CARRÉ DE MOUTON – Rib of mutton is usually divided into cutlets. It can also be roasted or braised whole, and garnished with vegetable. It should be served as intermediate course. A rib of mutton should not include more than 8 to 9 cutlets, starting from the chump.

Ribs of mutton (Karquel)

Preparation of a whole rib: Sever at the chuck. Remove the thin parchment-like skin which covers the meat, and remove the backbone. Loosen the tips of the cutlet bones. Bard the skinned meat with pork fat tied on with several lengths of string.

Rib of mutton à l'ancienne (Carême's recipe). CARRÉ DE MOUTON À L'ANCIENNE – 'Cut two ribs of mutton from the fillet (loin) to the fourth cutlet (rib) from the neck.

'Completely remove all the skin covering the fillet, after having removed the backbone, and trim the fillet. Detach to the width of a thumb the meat covering the ribs at the top end. Saw through one bone of each pair of cutlets so that the remainder are only  $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches long. Interlard one of the ribs with best square lardoons. Thread sprigs of parsley into the other.

'Put the ribs in a marinade composed of an onion cut into rings, parsley, thyme, bay leaf, salt, pepper and half a glass of good oil.

'Three-quarters of an hour before serving, put it on the spit. Wrap in a sheet of buttered paper. Baste frequently. Five minutes before serving, unwrap, glaze, serve and pour clear stock over it.'

Rib of mutton à la boulangère. CARRÉ DE MOUTON À LA BOULANGÈRE – Proceed as for Shoulder of lamb à la boulangère (see LAMB).

Rib of mutton à la bretonne. CARRÉ DE MOUTON À LA BRETONNE – Roast the rib in the oven or on the spit. Serve with white beans or small kidney beans à la bretonne (see BEANS). Serve the gravy of the roast separately.

A Purée bretonne (see PURÉE) can also be served with rib of mutton.

Rib of mutton à la boulangère. CARRÉ DE MOUTON À LA MOUTON BRAISÉ – Put the trimmed, barded and tied rib in a buttered braising pan lined with pork skin, and a sliced onion and carrot which have been tossed in butter. Add a bouquet garni. Season. Cover and cook gently for 15 minutes. Moisten  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) white wine. Boil down to an essence. Moisten with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) thickened veal stock or clear soup. Cover and cook in the oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour, according to the size of the joint.

Drain the rib. Glaze and garnish it as indicated. Pour over it the reduced and strained braising stock with the fat skimmed off.

Garnishes for rib of mutton. Most garnishes indicated for Baron of mutton are suitable for this cut. It can also be garnished (these garnishes are very suitable for the rib) with purées of fresh or dried vegetables, especially pulses (lentils, dried beans, etc.), risotto and pasta prepared in different ways.

As appropriate, these garnishes are arranged round the meat or served separately.

Cold rib of mutton. CARRÉ DE MOUTON FROID – Roast the rib in the oven or on the spit, and leave until cold.

Trim. Glaze with jelly. Serve on a long dish. Garnish, at each end of the dish, with bunches of watercress and, along the sides, with chopped jelly.

In England it is customary to serve mint sauce with cold lamb or mutton (see SAUCE, Cold Sauces).

Rib of mutton à la Maintenon. CARRÉ DE MOUTON À LA MAINTENON – Proceed as for Saddle of mutton à la Maintenon (see below).

Rib of mutton à l'orientale. CARRÉ DE MOUTON À L'ORIENTALE – Trim a rib of mutton and braise in the usual way. Drain it. Garnish along the sides with small tomatoes stuffed with a salpicon (q.v.) of sheep's (lamb's) liver, sautéed in butter, blended with thick brown stock with a salpicon of sweet peppers cooked in oil added to it, and with small artichokes, filled with a salpicon of onions cooked in butter until very tender. Garnish each end of the serving dish with saffron-flavoured Pilaf of rice (see PILAF). Serve with the braising liquor.

Roast rib of mutton. CARRÉ DE MOUTON RÔTI – Trim all skin from the rib. Bard with pork fat and tie the joint. Roast in the oven or on the spit. When it is ready, the inside of the meat should be pinkish in colour.

Garnish with watercress. Serve with its pan juices, with the surplus fat skimmed off. (See CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking time for roasts).

Roast rib of mutton with various garnishes. CARRÉ DE MOUTON RÔTI – Prepare and cook as indicated in the previous recipe. Surround with the garnish indicated. Serve with the pan juices, clear or slightly thickened, according to the nature of the garnish.

Garnishes suitable for roast rib of mutton. All those indicated for Baron of mutton.

Saddle of mutton. SELLE DE MOUTON – This cut is most commonly roasted and sometimes braised (see CULINARY METHODS). It provides an intermediate meat course. It is served surrounded by the desired garnish and with the pan juices, clear or thickened, depending on the nature of the garnish. All garnishes indicated for Rib or Leg of mutton are suitable for saddle of mutton.

Cold saddle of mutton. SELLE FROIDE DE MOUTON – Proceed as for Roast of leg of mutton, served cold.

Saddle of mutton à la Maintenon. SELLE DE MOUTON À LA MAINTENON – Trim a saddle of mutton cut near the upper leg. Braise until it is three-parts cooked. Strain the stock and leave the meat to cool in it.

Drain, and cut thin long slices inside the saddle, leaving the overhang on either side. Put these slices back inside the saddle with layers of Maintenon mixture between (see MIXTURES), all pressed close together, so as to reshape the saddle. Cover with Soubise purée (see PURÉE) bound with egg. Put the saddle on an oven-proof dish. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and pour on melted butter. Pour round a few tablespoons of the strained braising stock. Cook in a slow oven until the top of the saddle is lightly browned. Serve with it the braising stock, strained and boiled down.

Shoulder of mutton
en ballon

Saddle of mutton à la Maintenon is usually garnished with braised vegetables.

Shoulder of mutton en ballon or en musette. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON EN BALLON (EN MUSETTE) – Bone the shoulder, season, and shape it into a ball. This type of rolled mutton is called en ballon or en musette. Braise the shoulder in the usual way (see CULINARY METHODS). Drain and untie.

Glaze. Garnish according to the recipe selected. Pour the braising stock over it.

Shoulder of lamb en ballon may be stuffed.

Shoulder of mutton à la bonne femme I. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON À LA BONNE FEMME – Bone the shoulder and season. Stuff with sausage meat. Roll lengthwise and tie. Half-cook it in butter or lard. Put it in an earthenware dish lined with 600 g. (1 lb. 5 oz., 3½ cups) potatoes cut to look like big olives or new potatoes, 150 g. (5 oz., generous cup) small half-cooked onions and 150 g. (5 oz., generous cup) blanched and fried pork lardoons. Season these ingredients well. Pour on melted butter. Add a bouquet garni. Cook in a moderate oven, basting frequently.

Shoulder of mutton à la bonne femme II. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON À LA BONNE FEMME – Trim a shoulder of mutton. Cut off the end of the bone, but do not bone the meat. Brown it in butter in an earthenware dish and remove it from the dish. In the same butter, lightly brown 150 g. (5 oz., generous cup) blanched and drained pork lardoons and about 20 small onions. Take these ingredients out of the dish and put back the shoulder of mutton. Surround with 600 g. (1 lb. 5 oz., 3½ cups) quartered potatoes, the small onions and the lardoons. Pour butter over the dish. Season. Cook in the oven, basting frequently.

Shoulder of mutton à la boulangère. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON À LA BOULANGÈRE – Bone the shoulder, season inside. (Roll lengthwise, if desired.) Tie. Cook for 30 minutes. Surround with 300 g. (11 oz., 2½ cups) sliced onions or about 20 small onions tossed in butter. Season and pour the cooking butter over them. Finish cooking in the oven, basting frequently. Just before serving, add a few tablespoons thickened brown stock.

Shoulder of mutton à la bourgeoise. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON À LA BOURGEOISE – Bone the shoulder and stuff it if desired. Braise. When the joint is half-cooked, drain and put it in another braising pan or in a deep earthenware dish with 6 small carrots (200 grams, 7 oz.), cut to look like big olives and half-cooked in butter, 20 small glazed onions (150 grams, 5 oz.), 175 g. (6 oz., 1½ cups) coarsely diced belly of pork, blanched and browned. Moisten with the strained cooking stock. Cover and finish cooking all together in the oven.

Braised shoulder of mutton with various garnishes. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON BRAISÉE – Bone the shoulder. Season inside with salt and pepper. Roll lengthwise and tie.

Put it in a buttered braising pan lined with pork skin or bacon rinds, carrots and onions sliced and tossed in butter. Surround the shoulder with its bones and trimmings cut into small pieces and tossed in butter. Add a large bouquet garni (q.v.). Season. Cover and cook gently for 15 minutes. Moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) dry white wine. Boil down. Add 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) thickened brown stock and 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Bring to the boil.

Cover and cook in the oven for about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours. Drain and untie the shoulder. Glaze in the oven. Put it on a dish and surround with a suitable garnish. Boil down the braising stock, remove surplus fat, strain and pour over the meat.

Suitable garnishes for braised shoulder of mutton. All garnishes indicated for Braised rib of mutton, especially Bretonne garnish (see GARNISHES), various vegetable purées, dried vegetables in particular (see PURÉE), risotto, and pasta prepared in various ways.

Shoulder of mutton à la bretonne. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON À LA BRETONNE – Bone and braise. Garnish with white haricot beans or small Kidney beans à la bretonne (see BEANS), or with a purée of White haricot beans à la bretonne (see PURÉE). Pour the strained braising stock over the shoulder.

Shoulder of mutton with red cabbage à la flamande. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON AUX CHOUX ROUGES, À LA FLAMANDE – Bone the shoulder and stuff if desired. Roll lengthwise and tie. Braise until half-cooked. Line a deep earthenware dish with red cabbage prepared à la flamande (see CABBAGE) but which is only half-cooked. Lay the shoulder on this bed and cover with more red cabbage. Cover and cook slowly in the oven.

When the shoulder is ready, drain and untie it. Put it back in the dish on top of the cabbage. Pour over it a few tablespoons of stock.

Shoulder of mutton à la catalane or en pistache. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON À LA CATALANE (EN PISTACHE) – Bone the shoulder, roll lengthwise and tie. Put it in a saucepan lined with 1 large slice of raw ham (not smoked), 1 sliced onion and carrot.

Season. Pour over it 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) goose fat or lard. Cover and cook gently on the stove for 25 to 30 minutes. Take the shoulder and the slice of ham out of the pan. Brown 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour in it. Moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine. Add 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) brown stock or clear soup. Mix well; strain. Put the joint, and the slice of ham, diced, back in the saucepan. Add 50 blanched cloves of garlic and a bouquet garni (q.v.) containing 1 piece dried orange peel. Moisten with the cooking stock. Cover and cook in a moderate oven for about 1 hour.

Drain and untie the shoulder. Put on a dish. Pour over it the sauce and the cloves of garlic.

The sauce for pistache of mutton can also be thickened with breadcrumbs.

Shoulder of mutton à la chipolata. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON À LA CHIPOLATA – Bone and braise. Proceed as for Shoulder of mutton à la bourgeoise, garnishing with chipolata sausages. (See GARNISHES.)

Shoulder of mutton in jelly. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON EN GELÉE – Bone the shoulder. Stuff with a Fine forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT) mixed with lean diced ham with 1 or 2 eggs to bind it. Roll lengthwise and tie. Put the shoulder in a stock mixed with mirepoix (q.v.). Cook for 1 hour. Drain the meat and leave it to cool under a weight. Untie. Skim off surplus fat from the stock. Mix in a little concentrated and strained aspic jelly. Pour over the meat and leave to cool. Put the shoulder in an earthenware dish on a foundation of jelly set firmly; cover completely with half-set jelly. Leave until quite cold. Serve in the earthenware dish.

Shoulder of mutton with rice. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON AU RIZ – Bone. Roll lengthwise and tie. Braise until three-parts cooked, moistening with a fair amount of rather thin stock. Drain and put it in another saucepan. Add 500 g. (1 lb. 3 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cups) parboiled rice. Moisten with the strained stock. Finish cooking all together.

Stuffed shoulder of mutton, braised. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON FARCIE BRAISÉE – Bone the shoulder and season inside. Stuff with Fine pork stuffing (see FORCEMEATS, Pork forcemeat or stuffing, fine) mixed with 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) chopped onions cooked in butter until very tender and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. These quantities are for 500 g. (1 lb. 3 oz., generous 2 cups) stuffing. Season well with salt, pepper and spices. Roll the shoulder lengthwise and tie. Braise as indicated in the recipe for Braised mutton with various garnishes.

Garnish as indicated in the preceding recipe. Pour on the braising stock, boiled down and strained.

Stuffed shoulder of mutton en daube à la bourguignonne. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON FARCIE EN DAUBE À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Bone the shoulder. Stuff it with fine pork stuffing (see FORCEMEATS FOR STUFFINGS), adding to this 1 chopped onion cooked slowly in butter until very tender, 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) dry duxelles (q.v.), and some chopped parsley.

Roll the shoulder into a ball (en ballon or en musette, see above), and braise in red wine. When it is half-cooked, drain, untie and put it in a deep earthenware dish. Add 200 g. (7 oz., 2 cups) mushrooms tossed in butter, 20 small glazed onions (150 grams, 5 oz.), 125 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 1 cup) coarsely diced belly of pork, blanched and browned. Moisten with the strained cooking stock. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) blazing brandy. Cover the dish. Seal with flour-and-water paste and cook in the oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour, according to the size of the shoulder.

Shoulder of mutton with turnips. ÉPAULE DE MOUTON AUX NAVETS – Bone the shoulder and stuff if desired. Roll lengthwise and tie. Braise until three-parts cooked. Drain, put the shoulder in another saucepan with 1 kg. (2 lb. 3 oz., scant 6 cups) tender turnips, cut to look like big olives and browned in butter, and 30 small onions 250 g. (9 oz.) also browned in the frying pan.

Skim all fat off the braising stock, strain, and pour over the dish. Finish cooking all together.

Sliced mutton. ÉMINCÉS DE MOUTON – Prepare with cooked mutton, in the same way as Sliced beef (see BEEF).

Braised sheep's tails (Carême's recipe). QUEUES DE MOUTON BRAISÉES – Take 12 medium-sized tails. Soak in cold water for 1 hour. Pour boiling water over them. Line a saucepan with mutton trimmings, a bouquet garni (q.v.), 2 onions, 2 carrots. Cover with thin strips of belly of pork. Tie the tails in pairs. Moisten with good clear soup. Cook for 1½ hours. Drain the tails and put them in a press. Skim all fat off the stock; boil down almost to a jelly. When the tails are cold, trim them and heat slowly in the stock, reducing this slowly to a liquid jelly. Turn the tails over and over so that they are thoroughly impregnated with this liquid jelly. Serve them like cutlets, with Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE), boiled down (reduced) to half its volume.'

Grilled sheep's tails (Carême's recipe). QUEUES DE MOUTON PANÉES GRILLÉES – Prepare 12 sheep's tails as indicated in the previous recipe, trim them, dip them in melted butter and breadcrumbs, and grill until they are a good colour. Serve with Hachée sauce or a thin Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Sheep's tongues – See OFFAL OR VARIETY MEATS.

Sheep's trotters – See OFFAL OR VARIETY MEATS.

MYRTLE. MYRTE – Fragrant evergreen shrub common all over Europe. Myrtle berries were used in place of pepper among the ancients, and even gave their name to a stew, myrtalum. There was also a spiced wine made from myrtle (Myrtidanium).

The pepper myrtle has leaves similar to those of the bay tree. Its powdered berries are known as Jamaican pepper.

MYSÖST – See CHEESE.

NAGE (À LA) – Method of preparing freshwater crayfish, spiny lobsters and small lobsters. These are cooked in a court-bouillon (q.v.) flavoured with herbs. Shellfish prepared in this way can be eaten cold or hot, and are served in this court-bouillon. (See CRAYFISH, LOBSTER, SPINY LOBSTER.)

NALESNIKI (Russian cookery) – Cromesqui (q.v.) made from a mixture of white cheese and butter, used to fill a pancake made without sugar. The pancake is then dipped in butter and deep-fried.

NANDU, NANDOU – A kind of ostrich. The flesh of its young is tender and its eggs are edible.

NANTAIS – Nantes duckling sometimes appears on French menus simply as Nantais (see DUCKLING).

NANTAIS – Small almond biscuit.

Put 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved flour in a circle on the table. In the middle place 125 g. (4½ oz., generous cup) almonds pounded in a mortar, 250 g. (9 oz., scant 1¼ cup) fine sugar, 250 g. (9 oz., scant 1¼ cup) butter, 3 eggs and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) kirsch. Work this dough in the usual way. Leave to stand in a cool place.

Roll out the dough. Cut it into circles with a fluted pastry-cutter, put the biscuits on a baking sheet, brush with egg, dust with sugar mixed with chopped almonds, and bake in a moderate oven.

Nantes cookies. PETITS PAINS DE NANTES – Put 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) softened butter into a bowl with 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) castor sugar, a pinch of salt, ½ teaspoon baking powder and the rind of 1 lemon or orange grated on to the sugar. Mix until a creamy consistency is reached. Then, whisking vigorously, incorporate 2 whole eggs, and 125 g. (4½ oz., scant 1¼ cup) sieved flour.

Put the mixture into tartlet tins, buttered and sprinkled with finely shredded, well-dried almonds. Bake in a moderate oven.

Turn out on to a wire tray. Brush the top with apricot jam, then ice with maraschino-flavoured Fondant icing (see ICING) and sprinkle with pink sugar.

NANTUA (À LA) – Name given to various dishes, which are garnished with freshwater crayfish tails or, where appropriate, covered with crayfish purée.

NAPKINS. SERVIETTES DE TABLE – Table napkins should be folded simply, and not in the fanciful shapes that they used to be given.

NAPOLITAIN – Large cakes which, like breton and Savoie cakes, millefeuilles and croquembouche, were once used to decorate elaborate buffets.

In former times it was customary to place at each end of a table set for a large dinner party either an imposing decorated pastry or a heap of crayfish or other shellfish. This practice has now been abandoned, and although napolitains are still made, they are now usually small.

The name of this cake suggests that it was created in Naples. It is more probably the invention of Carême, who made great set pieces of large and magnificent pastries to which he himself gave the names.

Ingredients. For a large napolitain: 365 g. (¾ lb., 2½ cups) blanched sweet almonds, 12½ g. (½ oz., 1 tablespoon) blanched bitter almonds, 175 g. (6 oz., ¾ cup) fine sugar, 250 g. (9 oz., scant 1¼ cups) butter, 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sieved cake flour, 30 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar flavoured with lemon (or any other flavouring) a pinch of salt.

Method. Pound the almonds in a mortar to a fine paste with a little white of egg to bind them. Add the fine sugar, the flavoured sugar, the butter and flour. Pounding constantly, add as many whole eggs as are required to make a smooth and rather stiff paste. Take it out of the mortar and leave to stand in a cool place for a time.

Roll out the paste. Cut it into square, round or hexagonal pieces. With a pastry cutter 2 inches in diameter, cut out the middle of each piece, except for 2, which will serve for the top and bottom layer of cake.

Bake these layers of pastry in a hot oven and when they are quite cold spread each one with a different fruit purée or jelly. Put the layers one on top of the other, using an uncut layer to form the base, with alternate layers of jam or jelly. Cover with the other uncut layer. When the cake is built up, coat with apricot jam, pipe with Royal icing (see ICING).

NARBONNE – Town in the Aude district, regarded as one of the capitals of French viticulture, for it is in the Narbonne region that many of the ordinary table wines are made.

NARCISSUS. NARCISSE – The bulbs of this plant are edible and are used for food in some regions. They are cooked in the same way as Jerusalem artichokes.

NARWHAL. NARVAL – A cetacean found in Arctic seas. It has a unique defensive weapon in the form of the left canine tooth which can be up to 3 m. (9 ft.) in length. This weapon, believed to belong to the fabulous unicorn, changed hands at very high prices in the Middle Ages, for it was believed to have the power of divining poisons.

Nowadays, the narwhal is chiefly used for the oil processed from its fat. The flesh is eaten by the people of Greenland, probably when no other food is available.

NASTURTIUM. CAPUCINE – Edible and decorative plant. Its flowers and leaves are similar to watercress in taste. It used, at one time, to be called Mexican cress and Jesuits' cress because it was brought into Europe by the Jesuits.

Nasturtium flowers are used in salads. The leaves when young can also be used in salads, like cress. The buds and the seeds, when they are still tender, are pickled in vinegar like capers.

NATURISM, NATURIST. NATURISME, NATURISTE – A doctrine which preaches the return to nature, with regard to clothing as well as food.

Naturism prescribes a much more rigorous diet than vegetarianism. According to the apostles who preach this regenerative doctrine, diet must be made up entirely of raw fruit and vegetables, with some relaxation which permits the seasoning of these natural foods and the preparation of cereal porridges.

NAVARIN – This name is used expressly for a ragoût of mutton made either with small onions and potatoes or with different vegetables such as carrots, turnips, small onions, new potatoes and green peas. In this case the dish must be described as à la printanière (see MUTTON).

The term navarin is sometimes wrongly applied to ragoûts of shellfish or poultry; it should only be used of mutton dishes or, in exceptional cases, lamb.

NEAPOLITAN SLICES. TRANCHES NAPOLITAINES – Mass-produced Neapolitan ice creams sold in cafés and some restaurants. They are made of alternate layers of plain ice cream and mousse mixture, cut into slices from a larger block.

NECTARINE – Smooth-skinned variety of peach. It is eaten raw, like the peach, and can be cooked like peaches (see PEACH). It is also called brugnon in French.

NEEDLE. AIGUILLE –

Larding needle. AIGUILLE À PIQUER – Small-size larding needle, pointed at one end and pronged at the other, used for piercing and larding various substances with thin strips of bacon. It is with a larding needle that we stud fillet of beef, calves' sweetbreads, small pieces of meat, poultry and winged game and different cuts of venison with pieces of bacon, pork or ham fat.

Trussing needle. AIGUILLE À BRIDER – Steel pin pointed at one end and pierced at the other. A trussing needle is used for trussing poultry and game.

NEF (Ship) – This name was given in France to a piece of goldsmith's work made in the form of a ship, which contained cutlery, napery, etc., used at the royal table, such as the salt cellar, the great carvers and the table napkins in scented sachets.

All persons, even princesses, passing by the royal nef had to salute it.

NÉGUS – Wine spiced with sugar, lemons and nutmeg.

NEIGE DE FLORENCE – Delicate pasta product used in clear soup. This pasta, which the guests themselves put into their plates of consommé, is presented in the form of flakes, white and very light. Hence its name, 'Florentine snow'.

NELUSKO – Iced petits fours which are made as follows:

Steep cherries in brandy. Drain them. Put them on a napkin to dry them slightly. Make a Fondant icing (see ICING) and warm it gently. While it is being warmed in a bain-marie (q.v.), slit and stone each cherry. Put them back on the napkin with the holes upward. Fill the cherries with a little Bar-le-Duc redcurrant jam, without pips (see JAMS AND JELLIES, Bar-le-Duc currant jelly). A forcing bag may be used for this operation. Flavour the fondant icing, which must remain thick, with a little of the brandy from the cherries. Heat the fondant.

Using a skewer and taking care to keep the holes in the cherries upward, dip them in the icing. The thicker it is, the more liqueur and the better the sweet.

The dipping must be carried out quickly, for the stoned cherries, filled with Bar-le-Duc jam, are very moist, and the moisture will immediately mix with the icing and melt it.

As soon as the neluskos are cold, put them in silver-paper cases, as the syrup always manages to ooze through ordinary paper.

NEMOURS (Tartlets) – Line tartlet tins with Flaky pastry dough (see DOUGH). Put a little mirabelle jam (see MAR-MALADE, Plum marmalade) at the bottom of each one. On top of the jam, pipe some Chou paste (see DOUGH). Bake in a hot oven. Sprinkle with icing sugar.

NÉNUPHAR (Water lily) – Aquatic plant with a starchy root which is used as food in certain parts of the world. The seeds, too, are used, mostly in Chinese cookery.

NÉROLI – A volatile oil extracted from orange blossom.

This oil is used in confectionery, and in the manufacture of some liqueurs.

NÉROLI (Pâtisserie) – Pound in a mortar 125 g. (4½ oz., 1 cup) blanched almonds with 3 eggs. Add 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) fine sugar, the candied peel of 3 oranges chopped fine, and ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) orange-blossom water or 1 teaspoon orange extract. Work this mixture thoroughly with the pestle.

Put the mixture in a bowl. Add 60 g. (2½ oz., 5 tablespoons) melted butter and 30 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) cornflour (cornstarch). Mix well.

Fill small buttered tins with the mixture, sprinkle with chopped almonds and bake in a moderate oven.

NESSELRODE – An iced sweet, usually known as Nesselrode pudding (see PUDDING).

NESTS. NIDS – Edible nests are made in various ways. They are used for the presentation of small tit-bits.

Potato nests. These are like little baskets made with matchstick potatoes, which are put in small wire baskets shaped like nests, and deep-fried in boiling fat. Fried food of various kinds is served in these nests. Or, after lining them with pancakes, various ragoûts (q.v.) may be served in them. (See QUAIL, Quails in a nest.)

Swallows' nests. NIDS D'HIRONDELLES – Nests built by salanganes. They are much sought after by Chinese gourmets.

The salangane builds its nest with its saliva. Just before the mating season, the bird's saliva glands become enlarged and secrete a thick, viscous, glutinous liquid containing 90 per cent of a protein which is insoluble in water.

The nests, constructed in layers, placed one on top of the other, are font-shaped and are attached to the sides of rocks in almost inaccessible grottos on the coast of Annam, in Java, and on one or two islands of the Malay Archipelago.

Collecting these nests is a difficult and dangerous occupation, and only the high price paid for them can explain the risks taken by men engaged in 'hunting the nests'.

Before being sold for food, the nests undergo complicated processing. They are washed several times in hot water, kneaded with groundnut oil which is then washed out in a further bath of hot water. The nests are then very carefully cleared of all down and feathers with pincers.

Swallow's nest

Particularly enjoyed by gourmets of China, swallows' nests are generally eaten in the form of soup. After being dipped in hot water they are added to carefully clarified beef or chicken broth, and cooked for half an hour in a double saucepan. For every bowl of soup of 300 to 400 g. (11 to 14 oz.), a nest weighing 8 to 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.) is required (see SOUPS AND BROTHS, Consommé with birds' nests).

NETTLE. ORTIE – Weed with stinging hairs on leaves, full of formic acid, which provokes skin eruption. Some species of this plant, such as white dead nettle and blind nettle, or Lamium album, are edible and used like sorrel, as a vegetable or in soups.

The young leaves, buds and roots are used as a purifier of the digestive and renal tracts, and to combat malaria.

NEUFCHÂTEL – See CHEESE.

NÉVA (À LA) – Method of preparing poulards (see CHICKEN).

NIÇOISE (À LA) – Method of preparing various dishes, all of which have tomatoes among their ingredients. They are usually flavoured with garlic.

NIGELLA. NIGELLE – Name given to a number of plants of the Ranunculus family, whose seeds are used as a spice. Some varieties have aromatic and pungent seeds which can be used instead of pepper. Nigella is also known as fennel flower or devil-in-the-bush.

Cultivated nigella is used as a spice in Egypt.

NIOLO – See CHEESE.

NITROGEN. AZOTE – Colourless, tasteless, scentless permanent gas forming 78.1 per cent of the atmosphere; it enters into the composition of many of the substances used as food. (See ALBUMINOIDS.)

NIVERNAIS AND MORVAN – The culinary repertoire of this ancient province, which roughly corresponds to the Nièvre département of today, has no dishes in the grand manner, but the foodstuffs produced in this area are excellent. The livestock produce meat of the highest quality, cattle reared and nurtured in the rich plains of the Loire (Charolais cattle, locally bred) are especially prized for the fine quality of their meat. For delicacy of flavour, the sheep rival those reared in the Bourbonnais and Berry districts. The pigs of the Nivernais province are equally excellent, and very good poultry is bred here. That of Morvan is especially delicate. Succulent winged and ground game is fairly abundant in this region.

In the rivers and small lakes of the Nivernais and Morvan provinces fish of all kinds abound. These provide the materials for delicious matelotes (q.v.). River trout and crayfish are plentiful.

The kitchen gardens and orchards also yield very good products. Pot vegetables such as carrots and onions are especially flavoursome, and it is because of the fine quality of its vegetables that the name Nivernaise is given to one of the best garnishes for meat dishes in the classic culinary repertoire (see GARNISHES).

The best known cheese of the region is that called fromage sec (dry cheese) made by drying white cheese in straw baskets, draining them well and dusting them with pepper.

Culinary specialties – Cabbage soup with pork fat; Nivernais hot-pot; mixed vegetable soup, country style; chitterlings and baby chitterlings of Clamecy, Savelay; cooking sausage (with garlic); beursaudes (pork greaves); Morvan smoked ham; black puddings with wild thyme; griaudes; matelotes of Loire fish; fricassée of pike; river trout à la meunière; freshwater crayfish in court-bouillon; Nivernaise omelette (a flat omelette, filled with sorrel, ham and chives); beef daube (made with a lot of carrots); grilled beef à la marinère (similar to charcoal grilled beef); veal stewed in red wine; grenadins of veal of Corbigny; tripe à la morvandelle (similar to tripe à la mode de Caen); pig's liver with onions; eel galette; griaude galette; chicken en barboille (chicken in red wine, the sauce thickened with chicken's blood); rabbit en barboille; civet of hare (in the Nivernais district turnips are added to the civet); saupiquet des Amognes; potato pâté; truffes (potatoes) en tourtière (baked in a pie-dish); leek tart (a kind of flamiche); dandelion salad with bacon; grapiaux (large pancakes cooked in melted pork fat).

Among the Nivernais sweets, pastries and confectionery are: Flamusse aux pommes (a special kind of apple flan); pâté aux poires (pear paste); sour milk fritters; galettes aux griaudes; croquets (petits fours) from Nevers and Prémercy; nougatines from Nevers; barley-sugar from Morvan; négus (a kind of soft caramel); marzipan sweets from Decize.

Wines – Nivernais is the region that produces those excellent white wines, Pouilly-sur-Loire and Pouilly-Fumé. The appellation is determined by the variety of grape used.

Pouilly-sur-Loire is made from the Chasselas grape. It is fresh and versatile and should be drunk young. Pouilly-Fumé is derived from the Sauvignon grape. It is a distinguished wine, dry and elegant with a delicate bouquet. Connoisseurs choose it to drink with fish, shellfish and seafood.

Both wines are produced in the region around the town of Pouilly, situated on the right bank of the Loire.

NOEKKELÖST – See CHEESE.

NOËL PETERS – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

NIVERNAISE (À LA) – Name of a garnish served with intermediate meat courses. It is made up of carrots cut to look like olives, and small glazed onions.

NOISETTE – Small individual portion of meat, particularly a slice cut from the fillet, rib or leg of mutton or lamb.

A noisette, as its name suggests, must be round in shape. Its average weight should be from 70 to 90 g. (2 to 3 oz.).

For the preparation of noisettes, see LAMB, MUTTON.

More loosely, the term is used to describe a small slice of veal fillet or fillet of beef.

NOISETTE BUTTER – See BUTTER.

NOISETTE POTATOES – Potatoes shaped with a ball scoop to look like hazelnuts (see POTATOES), cooked in butter and slightly browned.

NOISETTE SAUCE – See SAUCE.

NOISETTINES – Small cakes made by putting together two oval layers of short pastry with Frangipane cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with hazelnuts.

They can also be made of large round layers of short pastry filled with hazelnut cream.

NONAT – There is some doubt as to whether this tiny Mediterranean fish is a separate species or, according to a view quite widely held, merely the fry of the goby. The nonat is a great delicacy. It can be eaten only in places close to its fishing grounds.

The best way of preparing nonats is deep-frying. They can also be used as an hors-d'œuvre, and as a garnish for omelettes.

NONNETTE (Iced gingerbread) – Small round gingerbread which is made industrially. The chief centres for the manufacture of nonnettes are Dijon and Reims.

NONPAREILLE – Name given in France to small capers pickled in vinegar.

The same name is given to coloured granulated sugar used to decorate sweets and cakes.

There is also a French variety of pear called nonpareille. It is large, ripens in the autumn, and is somewhat tart in flavour.

NOODLES. NOUILLE – Pasta made with flour, eggs and water. Noodles can be eaten fresh or dried.

For the food value of noodles, see ITALIAN PASTA.

DRIED NOODLES OR VERY SMALL NOODLES. NOUILLES SÈCHES, NOUILLETES – These can be bought ready-made. They are poached in salt water as described for freshly made noodles and macaroni. After poaching they are prepared like the latter.

Dried noodles are served by themselves or are used as garnish for meat, fish, eggs, etc. When noodles are used as garnish, they are prepared with butter or stock.

Pasta should not be poached in a bouillon or in stock, as that toughens them without improving their flavour. Three-quarters cook the pasta in salted water, drain, and simmer gently for a few minutes in a bouillon.

FRESH NOODLES. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES – Fresh noodles can be bought ready-made in food stores. In France, especially in Alsace, housewives make them at home.

Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sifted flour, 3 whole eggs and 6 yolks, 2 teaspoons salt and about 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) water. The pasta is more delicate if only yolks of eggs are used. This depends on what the noodles are to be used for; in some cases they are made with whole eggs.

Method. Sieve the flour. Arrange it in a circle on the table. Put the salt in the middle, dissolving it in water. Add the eggs and the yolks. Mix the flour a little at a time with the eggs. Knead thoroughly to make sure that the flour is well mixed and to ensure a smooth mixture.

The pasta must be very firm. Wrap in a thin cloth to prevent it from drying, and leave to stand for at least an hour, until it loses its elasticity. When a large quantity of noodles is required, make them several hours beforehand. It is then easier to cut them into strips.

Divide the dough into pieces about the size of an egg and roll into balls. Roll out each piece into the shape of a large thin pancake.

Spread the rolled-out dough on baking sheets covered with sheets of paper. Leave to dry for 50 minutes. Lightly dust the pancakes with flour. Roll them and cut into whorls 2 mm. ( $\frac{1}{16}$  inch) wide. Spread them out on a baking sheet.

These are very fine noodles. If the noodles are required for garnishing they should be cut about ½ cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) wide.

Fresh noodles à l'alsacienne. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES À L'ALSACIENNE – Prepare the noodles as indicated for Fresh noodles in butter (see below).

Put them in a pie dish and sprinkle on the top a handful of noodles which have been lightly browned in butter.

Boiled fresh noodles. NOUILLES AU NATUREL – Plunge 250 g. (9 oz.) fresh noodles into 2½ litres (4½ pints, 5½ pints) boiling water, with 1½ teaspoons salt per litre (1¼ pints, generous quart). Boil fast for 8 to 10 minutes. Drain the noodles. Put them in a shallow pan and evaporate excess moisture over low heat. Serve in a well-heated deep dish.

Fresh noodles in butter. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES AU BEURRE – Cook the noodles in salted water and drain. Put them in a pan and dry them slowly on the stove.

Cut 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter into small pieces so that the butter will melt quickly. Add to the noodles and mix well. Season. Serve in a pie dish.

Fresh noodles with brown butter. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES AU BEURRE NOISETTE – Cook the noodles in salted water and drain. Dry and put them in a warm dish. Heat 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter in a frying pan until it has become a nut-brown colour. Pour it over the noodles and mix gently with a fork.

Fresh noodles au gratin. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES AU GRATIN – Cook the noodles in salted water as described in the recipe for Fresh noodles in butter.

Drain the noodles. Add 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) mixed grated Gruyère and Parmesan cheese and 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter. Season with salt and pepper and a little grated nutmeg. Spread the noodles evenly on a buttered dish, sprinkled with grated cheese.

Sprinkle more grated cheese on the noodles, add a little melted butter and brown in a hot oven.

Fresh noodles with stock. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES AU JUS – Cook and drain the noodles and sprinkle them with several tablespoons of thick brown veal stock, beef stock or any other slightly strengthened meat stock.

Leave to simmer for a few minutes on the side of the stove and serve in a pie dish.

Fresh noodles à l'italienne. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES À L'ITALIENNE – Cook the noodles, drain, and finish off with butter and grated cheese as described in the recipe for Fresh noodles au gratin, but do not brown them. Serve in a pie dish.

This dish can be made with Parmesan cheese only or with Gruyère cheese only, but the mixture of both cheeses gives a better result.

Fresh noodles à la lyonnaise. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES À LA LYONNAISE – Prepare the noodles as described in the recipe for Fresh noodles in butter. Arrange them in a pie dish and garnish the top with 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) finely minced onions fried in butter.

Fresh noodles à la milanaise. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES À LA MILANAISE – Cook the noodles, drain, and finish them as described in the recipe for Macaroni à la milanaise (see MACARONI).

Fresh noodles à la napolitaine. NOUILLES FRAÎCHES À LA NAPOLITAINE – Cook the noodles, drain, and finish the dish as described in the recipe for Macaroni à la napolitaine (see MACARONI).

NOQUES (Alsatian cookery) – Work to a paste, in a warmed bowl, 250 g. (9 oz., scant 1¼ cups) butter seasoned with salt, pepper and a touch of grated nutmeg, adding 2 whole eggs and 2 yolks, 150 g. (5 oz., 1¼ cups) sieved flour and a stiffly beaten egg white. Divide this mixture into parts, each about the size of a hazelnut. Poach in boiling salt water. Drain. To serve, sprinkle with grated Parmesan, and browned butter.

Noques are also served in soup.

Noques à la viennoise (Austrian sweet) – These noques are a kind of small quenelle (q.v.), similar to Snow eggs (see EGGS), but less delicate. They can be made lighter by beating the egg whites. These noques are served with vanilla-flavoured custard.

Gastronomic map of Normandy

Ingredients. 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) sieved flour, 9 eggs, 1 pod vanilla, 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) milk, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) double cream, a pinch of table salt.

Put the butter in a bowl and work with a spatula until it is smooth and creamy. Work in a pinch of salt, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) sugar, and 5 yolks of egg added one by one. Add half the double cream.

Beat all the ingredients vigorously together. When the mixture is very fluffy, whisk with an egg-whisk in place of the spatula. While whisking, sprinkle in the flour, and mix. Beat a white of egg to a stiff foam and blend it in. Mix in, one by one, 3 unbeaten egg whites.

The noques are poached in sweetened milk in the same way as Snow eggs (see EGGS).

Poach the noques without bringing the liquid to the boil. (If the milk is allowed to boil, this causes the noques to swell unduly.) While they are poaching, turn them over gently with a skimmer. When they are ready, drain them.

To make the custard which goes with the noques, use the milk in which they have been poached, adding the double cream and 4 egg yolks. Beat the yolks and the cream with an egg-whisk, and when they are well mixed blend in the boiling sweetened milk. Thicken this custard by heating it on the stove for a few seconds, but do not let it boil. Strain it through a fine sieve on to the noques.

This sweet can be served hot or cold.

NORMANDE (À LA) – Method of preparation used mainly for fish braised in white wine, especially sole.

The usual garnish for these fish, which are coated with Normande sauce (see SAUCE), comprises poached oysters, shelled shrimps, mushrooms, strips of truffle, fried gudgeon (or smelt), freshwater crayfish in court-bouillon (q.v.), and lozenge-shaped pieces of bread fried in butter. Poached and shelled mussels are often added to this garnish (see SOLE, Sole à la normande).

Small cuts of meat and chicken can be prepared à la normande. After they are cooked they have cider poured over them. The sauce is enriched with a little Calvados.

Some species of winged game, especially partridge, can be prepared à la normande (see PARTRIDGE).

There are also a large number of preparations called à la normande in pastry-making.

NORMANDY – Province of high gastronomic repute; the Normandy table is regarded as one of the best in all the provinces of France.

Normandy produces excellent butter and cream, which are used in all characteristic dishes of the region.

The cattle and sheep nurtured on its rich pastures provide high-grade meat. Its salt-meadow sheep are particularly good.

Fruit production is a very important industry. Normandy apples have a great reputation.

Its coastal waters provide an abundance of sole, brill, turbot, mackerel and many other delicate fish. The Seine shad and the salmon and trout of Bresles and the Arques are very delicate fish.

There is no lack of shellfish. There are the white oysters of Dives, Luc-sur-mer and Courseulles, the mussels from the natural mussel-beds, which are as fat as one could wish; clams; fléons (donax) cockles. Giant mussels, called caïeu, are found at Isigny, and there are the ormiers (or haliotis) of the Cap de la Hague, the winkles or periwinkles and also the prawns (bouquet) of Cherbourg, and the demoiselles (small lobsters) of Caen, Cherbourg and Dieppe.

The milk and cream of Normandy have a well-deserved reputation. The most famous butter is that of Isigny. This butter is the basis of excellent cheeses: Camembert, Livarot, Pont-l'Évêque.

The winged and ground game shot in Normandy is highly prized.

This region has no vineyards. Wine, moreover, is not much drunk by its people. They have, however, excellent cider and perry to drink with the special dishes of their province. The cider of the Auge Valley has the highest reputation. The pears of Clécy, Alemon, Argentan, Écouche and Domfront are highly prized. And there is the cider spirit called Calvados, and the celebrated Benedictine liqueur made at Fécamp.

Culinary specialties – A distinctive feature of a large number of the dishes of Normandy is that they are cooked in cream. Many dishes are cooked with a special fat called graisse normande, which is made by melting together and clarifying equal quantities of pork fat and suet, flavoured with pot vegetables and herbs and seasoned with salt and pepper. This fat gives a special flavour to food cooked in it.

Among the culinary specialties of the region are: soup normande; the famous Madame Poulard omelette; omelette aux coques; Matelote normande, made with saltwater fish; the true sole à la normande, which is a way of stewing soles in cream, and has nothing in common with the sole à la normande served in Paris restaurants; sole à la dieppoise (and other sea fish prepared in the same way); mussels à la marinière; seine shad stuffed and baked; tripe à la mode de Caen and tripe à la mode de la Ferté-Macé; sheep's trotters à la rouennaise; casserole of veal in cream; white pudding of l'Avranchin; duckling à la rouennaise, which is prepared in different ways in Rouen and Duclair; wood partridges flambés; and the famous Poulet à la crème (chicken in cream) called vallée d'Auge.

Among the vegetables are French beans in cream and salsify à la normande.

The pork products of Rouen, Vire and other places, such as the chitterlings of Vire and the baby chitterlings of Caen, black and white puddings, sausages, etc., are excellent.

The cheeses of this region have a high reputation. The best known are: Pont-l'Évêque, Camembert, Livarot, Neufchâtel, Bondon, Gournay, and the famous small double-cream cheeses among which is the celebrated Gervais Petit-suisse.

Among the sweets and confectionery of Normandy are terrinée which is also called tord-goule; Normandy bourdelots (apple turnovers), made by cooking whole apples in a coating of pastry; douillons, made in the same way with pears; galette normande; fouace (hearth cake) from Caen, roulettes from Rouen, mirlitons from Rouen and Pont-Audemmer, delicious Normandy shortbread; duchesses de Normandie; norelles; boulots; rivets and chemineaux, and the famous sucres de pomme.

NORVÉGIEN (Pâtisserie) – Pound in a mortar 250 g. (9 oz., scant 2 cups) sweet almonds and 1 tablespoon blanched apricot kernels, with 4 whole eggs. When the almonds are pounded to a smooth paste, add 275 g. (10 oz., 1¼ cups) fine sugar.

Blend this mixture thoroughly in a bowl and add 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) softened butter. Work with a spatula until the mixture is frothy. Still stirring, add 25 g. (1 oz., ¼ cup) cornflour (cornstarch) and 1 small glass of kirsch.

Put the mixture into buttered moulds lined with buttered paper. Bake in a moderate oven.

NORVÉGIENNE (À LA) – Name given to various preparations in cookery and confectionery. It is more precisely used for ice cream inside a piping hot casing. This sweet is called Omelette à la norvégienne (see EGGS, Norwegian omelette).

The same name is also applied to certain methods of presenting cold fish or shellfish, such as salmon, lobster and spiny lobster.

NOUGAT – Sweet made with roasted almonds or walnuts, and honey or syrup.

The word derives from the Latin nux, nut (walnut) for it would appear that originally this sweet was made mainly with walnuts; nowadays it is generally made with almonds and sugar, honey being substituted occasionally for the latter. Industrially, it is made with hazelnuts or pistachios.

There are a great many kinds of nougat: hard or soft, white or coloured. White nougat is usually made industrially; Montélimar nougat enjoys a great reputation.

In the South of France, the oil-cake made from the residue of walnut oil is called nougat.

Almond nougat. NOUGAT AUX AMANDES – See ALMOND.

White nougat. NOUGAT BLANC – Cook together to the small crack degree (see SUGAR) 250 g. (9 oz., ¾ cup) honey and an equal quantity of sugar. Add 1 tablespoon orange-blossom water, and a stiffly beaten egg white.

Melt over a gentle flame, stirring, and bring the sugar to the ball degree. Add 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) sweet almonds which have been blanched, dried, chopped and heated.

Put this mixture in a flat baking tin lined with sheets of rice paper. Cover with sheets of the same paper. Place on top of the nougat a wooden board with a 1-kg. (2-lb.) weight on it. Leave until lukewarm. Cut into squares or other shapes.

Nougat with filberts, hazelnuts, pine kernels or pistachio nuts can be made in the same way.

NOUGATINE CAKES – Put into a deep, square, well-buttered baking tin, about 7½ cm. (3 inches) in depth, Genoese cake mixture (see GENOESE) flavoured with vanilla. Bake, and leave to cool.

Cut the cake into squares and slice each across into 3 or

Large farm in Normandy

4 layers. Spread Praline cream (see CREAMS) on each layer. Build them up by putting the layers one on top of the other, and ice with Chocolate fondant icing (see ICING).

These cakes can be made separately in small square pieces instead out of one large cake.

NULLES – Amber and musk-flavoured dessert creams that used to be very popular in France.

‘Whip together 4 or 5 egg yolks, a quantity of very fresh cream, lots of sugar and a pinch of salt.

‘Cook in a shallow casserole. Brown quickly under a hot grill, sprinkle with perfumed water and musk-flavoured sugar, and serve.’ (Lavarenne.)

NUT. NOIX – Name for a number of different types of fruit with a woody outer casing and a soft inner skin enclosing an edible kernel.

NUT-GALL. NOIX DE GALLE – Eastern peoples eat fleshy nut-gall. It is about the size of a lady apple, and grows on a species of sage bush.

In some places a nut-gall which grows on a species of ground-ivy is eaten.

NUTMEG. MUSCADE – Seed of the nutmeg tree, which grows in warm countries and is similar in appearance to the pear tree.

The nutmeg is oval in shape, rounded, greyish brown in colour, usually with a whitish coating of milk of lime. It contains 25 per cent fat (nutmeg butter), volatile oil, acid and starch. It is an aromatic spice, stimulating to the palate, and is used a good deal in cooking.

OATMEAL. GRUAU D'AVOINE – Oats with the husk removed, the grain separated from the chaff and ground. Oatmeal is used in broths and porridge.

Oatmeal porridge – See PORRIDGE.

Oatmeal soup. POTAGE AU GRUAU D'AVOINE – Pour 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) oatmeal into 1 litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) stock. Mix well and simmer gently for 30 minutes. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fresh butter and blend well. This soup can also be made with milk or water.

Cream of oatmeal soup. POTAGE CRÈME D'AVOINE – Boil the oatmeal as described in the recipe for Oatmeal soup. Strain through a coarse muslin cloth and bind with egg yolks, cream and fresh butter.

Oatmeal soup au naturel. POTAGE À L'AVOINE AU NATUREL – Soak crushed oat grains in warm water. Add salt, and cook in plenty of water, simmering very gently, for 4 hours.

Strain through a muslin bag, bind with a few tablespoons of cream or milk and a little fresh butter.

OATS. AVOINE – Cereal, the grain of which excels all others as fodder for horses, cattle and poultry.

It is also used as food for man in the form of fine flour (oatmeal), slightly coarser groats, and also flattened into what is known as rolled or flaked oats. It is used for porridge and for soups.

Oats are rich in phosphorus, iron and vitamins. They are a safe, recommendable food for children (especially as a breakfast dish), convalescents and anaemics. Oats contain a valuable growth-promoting hormone called auxin.

Roast oat grains have a smell which strongly resembles that of vanilla.

Because of its low gluten content, oatmeal flour does not produce malleable paste when mixed with water; it is, therefore, not a bread crop.

Sweetened cream of oats gruel. BOUILLIE À LA CRÈME D'AVOINE SUCRÉE – This dish is recommended mostly for children, elderly people and invalids. To ensure that the gruel is smooth, the oatmeal should be diluted, little by little, with cold liquid, then poured into sweetened boiling liquid (usually milk). Cook for 10 minutes, stirring with a wooden spoon.

OBA – Species of mango from Gabon (Africa) of which the fruit is called ibas; it contains a white oily almond which can be used in its natural state to prepare pain de dika. It tastes like cocoa.

The mango from Gabon was introduced into Europe in 1855.

OBLADE – Mediterranean fish, similar to bream (q.v.). It is cooked à la meunière, fried or boiled.

OCA, OKA-PLANT – This plant (Oxalis tuberosa) was introduced from South America into England in 1829. It is extensively cultivated in Peru and Bolivia and grows very well in England and Wales. It also grows wild in the forests of France. It has edible tubers which are washed, parboiled in salted boiling water and then prepared in different ways: au beurre (lightly fried); à la crème, in stock, etc.

OCTOPUS. POULPE – Marine cephalopod mollusc, known in Brittany under the names of pieuvre and minard; tough-fleshed, edible after prolonged beating.

Octopus à la provençale. POULPE À LA PROVENÇALE – Clean an octopus and leave it for as long as possible in running water. Drain, and beat it hard with big sticks so as to soften the flesh, which is always rather leathery.

Discard the eyes and mouth. Cut up the tentacles and middle into chunks of equal size. Blanch, drain and wipe them, and cook lightly in oil with some chopped onion. Simmer for a few moments. Pour in  $\frac{1}{2}$  bottle dry white wine and an equal quantity of water. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and a crushed clove of garlic.

Cook until the pieces are quite tender, with the saucepan covered. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Octopus with rice. POULPE AU RIZ – Prepare the chunks of octopus as in the preceding recipe. When two-thirds cooked, put in the casserole 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) rice. Season with a pinch of saffron. Continue cooking for another 20 to 25 minutes.

Octopus may also be cut in pieces, deep-fried in oil, and served with spinach.

OFFAL (G.B.) or VARIETY MEATS (U.S.A.). ABATS DE BOUCHERIE – Terms which define various parts of the carcass. The offal or variety meats for beef, mutton and lamb, pork and veal are as follows:

Beef. BOEUF – White. Feet and stomachs (generally used in the preparation of tripe), tripe and brain.

Red. Lights, heart, liver, tongue and kidneys.

Mutton and Lamb. MOUTON, AGNEAU – Kidneys, tongue, brain, feet, animalles, stomachs and the 'pluck', that is, the heart, liver and lungs.

Pork. PORC – Kidneys, liver, brain, trotters and head. All the pig's entrails are used in pork butchery. The intestines are used as containers in the manufacture of sausages, saveloys, dried sausages and black (blood) puddings. Pig's blood is used in the manufacture of black puddings.

Veal. VEAU – Lights, heart, liver, mesentery, spinal marrow (amourette), head, sweetbread, trotters and kidneys.

BEEF or OX OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS. ABATS DE BOEUF – In the U.S.A., all parts of beef are called beef, whereas in England only the best cuts are called beef and the less choice are termed ox. Example: rump of beef, fillet of beef; ox liver, ox tongue.

Beef amourettes (ox marrow). AMOURETTE DE BOEUF – In French the name amourette defines the spinal marrow. The spinal marrow of beef or ox is used in cookery and even more so the spinal marrow of calves.

All methods of preparation given elsewhere for Calves' (veal) amourettes (which are more delicate in flavour than those of beef or oxen) are applicable to the amourettes of beef or ox.

Beef or ox brain. CERVELLE DE BOEUF – Method of preparation. Soak the brain at least 4 hours in cold water. Clean well; remove all the membranes which cover the brain. Soak once again in cold water to make quite white. Put into boiling strained court-bouillon (q.v.), prepared with water, sliced carrots and onions, a dash of vinegar or lemon juice, salt, sprig of thyme, bay leaf. Cook for 20 to 25 minutes.

Drain, and prepare as described in appropriate recipes.

If the brain is not to be used at once, keep in the court-bouillon in which it was cooked.

All the recipes given in this section for the preparation of Calves' brains (see below) can be applied to ox brains.

Beef or ox feet. PIEDS DE BOEUF – These are only used as a garnish for tripe cooked à la mode de Caen.

Beef or ox heart. COEUR DE BOEUF – Prepared like Calf's heart (see below).

Beef or ox kidneys. ROGNONS DE BOEUF – This variety meat or piece of offal, which is mediocre in taste and often tough, can be prepared as described in the recipes given in this section for Calf's (veal) kidneys (see below).

Beef or ox liver. FOIE DE BOEUF – Beef or ox liver, although inferior in flavour, can be prepared as described in the recipes given for Calf's (veal) liver (see below).

Beef or ox muzzle. MUSEAU DE BOEUF – This can be prepared as described in most of the recipes given for Ox tongue (see below). More often, muzzle is served cold, seasoned with oil and vinegar dressing, as hors-d'œuvre.

For this method of preparation cook the muzzle, previously soaked in salted water, from 6 to 8 hours. When it is cold, cut into thin slices, season with oil, vinegar, salt, pepper and chopped fine herbs. This salad is often sprinkled with chopped onion.

Beef or ox palate. PALAIS DE BOEUF – Piece of offal (variety meat) not much used nowadays. In the olden days it was very popular.

Method of preparation. Soak the palate for a long time in cold water. Blanch it, allow to cool, and drain. Remove the skin which covers it.

Cook in white court-bouillon as for Calf's head (see below).

Beef or ox palate attereaux. ATTEREAUX DE PALAIS DE BOEUF – See ATTEREAUX.

Beef or ox palate fried in batter. FRITOT DE PALAIS DE BOEUF – Cook and allow to cool as described above; cut into uniform pieces. Marinate for 1 hour in a mixture of oil, lemon juice and chopped parsley. Soak in a light batter and deep-fry in sizzling fat. Garnish with fried parsley, and serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Beef or ox palate au gratin. PALAIS DE BOEUF AU GRATIN – Cook the palate as above and slice. Arrange in a crown on a buttered dish. Cover with Duxelle sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with grated breadcrumbs and brown the top.

Beef or ox palate à la lyonnaise. PALAIS DE BOEUF À LA LYONNAISE – Cook an ox palate as described above; cut into thick slices like Tripe à la lyonnaise (see below).

Beef or ox palate à la poulette. PALAIS DE BOEUF À LA POULETTE – Cook the palate as described above, and cut into thick slices. Simmer with cooked, sliced mushrooms.

Ox tail. QUEUE DE BOEUF – Used for making various soups, particularly Oxtail soup (see SOUPS AND BROTHS). It can also be prepared independently in a great many ways.

Ox tail is normally sold in butchers' shops completely skinned, but there are some dishes which require unskinned ox tail, for instance for the preparation of boned, stuffed ox tail.

Generally speaking, before being cooked in any way, the ox tail is cut into uniform chunks. The same applies to unskinned ox tail, except in cases when, before being boned and stuffed, it has to be left whole.

Cut into pieces, the ox tail is usually braised, as indicated for this type of dish (see BEEF; CULINARY METHODS, Braising). It can be served with the garnishes recommended for braised top rump (see BEEF, Top rump).

The following garnishes are the most suitable for ox tail: berrichonne; bourgeoise; bourguignonne; chipolata sausages; compote; fermière; flamande; various fresh, buttered, braised or glazed vegetables; marâtchère; braised chestnuts; macaroni à l'italienne (or other pasta products); nivernaise; fresh noodles; piémontaise; purées of various vegetables (fresh or dried); tortue.

Depending on its nature, the garnish is either disposed around the ox tail or served separately in a timbale. After the ox tail has been arranged on a serving dish, its braising liquor should be boiled down, strained and poured over it.

Braised stuffed ox tail. QUEUE DE BOEUF FARCIE BRAISÉE – Soak a whole, unskinned ox tail in cold water. Bone it carefully, without damaging the skin. Spread it on the table, season with salt, pepper and spices and fill along the entire length with some forcemeat – finely pounded Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) is the most suitable – mixed with chopped onion lightly fried in butter and chopped parsley, bound with an egg. Reshape the tail, sew up the slit side, wrap in a cloth and tie with string as a long ballottine.

Braise in brown stock as described in the recipe for Top rump, braised (see BEEF).

Stuffed ox tail can be accompanied by the garnishes recommended above for ox tail cooked in pieces.

Grilled ox tail Sainte-Menehould. QUEUE DE BOEUF GRILLÉE SAINTE-MENEHOULD – Cut the ox tail into rather big chunks and cook in a stockpot as a pot-au-feu (q.v.).

Drain the pieces, bone them, and cool under a press in the strained liquid in which they were cooked. Drain, spread with mustard slightly flavoured with cayenne pepper, sprinkle with melted butter, roll in fresh breadcrumbs, and cook under a low grill.

Serve with a spiced sauce, such as Diable, Piquante, Poivrade, etc. (see SAUCE).

Ox tail en hochepot. QUEUE DE BOEUF EN HOCHEPOT – Cut the ox tail, whether skinned or not, into uniform chunks. Put into a stockpot with 2 pig's trotters, cut into pieces, and a whole pig's ear. Add enough water to cover, bring to the boil, remove scum and simmer gently for 2 hours. Add 1 small blanched cabbage cut in quarters, 3 carrots and 2 turnips, cut into pieces, and 10 small onions. Simmer gently for 2 hours.

Drain the pieces of ox tail and pig's trotters. Arrange them on a large dish. Put the vegetables in the middle, and surround with grilled chipolata sausages and the pig's ear cut into strips. Serve with boiled potatoes.

Beef tongue

Beef or ox tongue. LANGUE DE BOEUF – Ox tongue can be used fresh or salted, when it should be steeped in salt 24 hours.

If used fresh, soak in cold water for several hours, trim and skin and braise or poach the tongue.

Braised. The tongue is prepared in the same way as a piece of braised beef, and can be accompanied by garnishes recommended for this dish (Bourgeoise; Bourguignonne; Sauerkraut; Milanaise; etc., see GARNISHES).

Poached. Poach like Top rump (see BEEF), and add the same garnishes.

Salted. Poach and serve cold as Pickled (scarlet) beef or ox tongue (see below), or hot with various vegetable purées (see PURÉE).

Beef or ox tongue à l'alsacienne. LANGUE DE BOEUF À L'ALSACIENNE – Poach the tongue, soaked, skinned and trimmed in stock with a bouquet garni (q.v.) until half-cooked. Finish cooking with separately prepared sauerkraut (q.v.) and lean bacon.

Drain the tongue. Arrange it on a bed of sauerkraut. Surround with thin slices of bacon and Strasbourg sausages (see SAUSAGE) which have been poached for 10 minutes in boiling water. Serve with boiled potatoes.

Beef or ox tongue à la bourgeoise. LANGUE DE BOEUF À LA BOURGEOISE – Braise the tongue in the usual way. (See BEEF, Braised beef.) When it is nearly cooked, remove from saucepan. Strain the stock in which the tongue was boiled through a fine strainer. Put the tongue back into the pan. Add bourgeoise garnish: half-cooked carrots cut to uniform size, little half-cooked glazed onions and pieces of larding bacon lightly fried in butter. Pour the strained stock over the tongue. Finish cooking everything together in a moderate oven (180°C., 350°F., gas Mark 4).

Braised beef or ox tongue with various garnishes. LANGUE DE BOEUF BRAISÉE – Braise the tongue slowly in the usual way. (See BEEF, Braised beef.) Drain and surround with the garnish specified. Strain the stock, remove surplus fat, boil down the sauce to thicken it, pass through a strainer, and pour over the tongue.

Garnishes for braised tongue: bourguignonne; bruxelloise; cévenole; chipolata sausages; braised chicory; buttered spinach purée; fermière; flamande; jardinière; macédoine; milanaise, nivernaise, noodles (or other pasta with an Italian sauce); purées of fresh or dried vegetables; various green vegetables braised or dressed with butter; risotto.

The sauce is made with white wine, red wine or Madeira.

Beef or ox tongue à la diable. LANGUE DE BOEUF À LA DIABLE – Cut braised or poached cold tongue crossways into rather thick slices. Spread with mustard, dip in melted butter and breadcrumbs and sprinkle with melted butter. Grill under gentle heat, browning on both sides. Serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Braised beef or ox tongue with various sauces. LANGUE DE BOEUF BRAISÉE – Braise the tongue and serve with one of the following sauces: Mushroom; Chasseur; Lyonnaise; Madeira (or other wine sauces); Piquante; Poivrée; Tomato sauce, etc. (see SAUCE).

Beef or ox tongue au gratin. LANGUE DE BOEUF AU GRATIN – Cut braised cold tongue into slices, not too thin. Arrange them in a circle on a buttered dish, alternating with rows of thin slices of lean boiled ham. Put cooked mushrooms on the tongue. Pour over Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE) to which has been added the juices in which the tongue was cooked. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter and brown under a grill or in the oven.

Pickled (scarlet) beef or ox tongue. LANGUE DE BOEUF À L'ÉCARLATE – Soak the trimmed tongue for several hours in cold water, drain and dry. Prick it all over and rub thoroughly with a mixture of salt and saltpetre (sodium nitrate).

Put the tongue into a wooden or earthenware container. Cover with the pickling brine described below, and allow to cool. Put on a wooden lid, pressing down well, and leave in the brine for six days in the summer and eight days in the winter.

Pickling brine for ox tongue. Pour into a large saucepan 5 litres (4½ quarts, 5½ quarts) water, 2¼ kg. (5 lb., 6¾ cups) sea salt (coarse salt), 150 g. (5 oz.) saltpetre, 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) brown sugar, 1 sprig of thyme, 1 bay leaf, 12 juniper berries and 12 peppercorns.

Boil for a few minutes. Allow to cool completely before pouring the liquid over the tongue.

Method of cooking ox tongue. After pickling the tongue, drain it, and soak in cold water for several hours to free from salt. Boil it in water without any seasoning or condiments from 2 to 3 hours, depending on size.

Tripe. GRAS-DOUBLE – The best part of beef or ox stomachs. It is sold fresh, pickled, uncooked and cooked. If uncooked, it requires 3 to 3½ hours of cooking in a salt water court-bouillon (q.v.). Pickled tripe requires 1 to 1½ hours of cooking in salted water.

Tripe en blanquette. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF EN BLANQUETTE – Brown lightly 2 large tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) chopped onion with 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon flour and add 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) stock. Mix, and boil for a few minutes.

Add to this sauce 750 g. (1½ lb., 3½ cups) cooked tripe cut into pieces. Season with salt and pepper, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and cook, uncovered, for 1½ hours.

Before serving, bind with 2 egg yolks mixed with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) cold water. Blend well, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) fresh butter, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and several drops of lemon juice. To serve, heap high on a serving plate.

Tripe à la bourgeoise. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF À LA BOURGEOISE – Brown lightly 12 small onions in 50 g. (2 oz.,

Cold beef tongue

$\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon flour, brown slightly, and moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) stock. Mix and boil for a few minutes.

Put in a saucepan 750 g. ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) cooked tripe cut into pieces. Season, add a bouquet garni (q.v.), and boil fast. Add 24 small new carrots, lightly blanched, and the same number of small half-cooked onions. Cover the saucepan and cook for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours. When served, sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Tripe à la fermière. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF À LA FERMIÈRE – Brown lightly 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onion and 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) young diced carrots in 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour, allow to colour slightly, add 6 dl. (1 pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) stock and boil for a few minutes.

Add cooked tripe seasoned with salt and pepper. Cover and cook  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours. Ten minutes before serving, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) sliced mushrooms fried in butter.

Fried tripe in breadcrumbs. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF, FRIT PANÉ – Cut cooked tripe into little pieces, season with salt and pepper, dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in fat or oil.

As soon as the tripe turns golden and becomes crisp, drain, and serve with Diable, Piquante, Rémoulade, Tartare, Tomato or any other spiced sauce (see SAUCE).

Grilled tripe à l'espagnole. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF GRILLÉ À L'ESPAGNOLE – Cut 750 g. ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) cooked and well-drained tripe into pieces. Marinate for 1 hour in 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) oil, 1 teaspoon lemon juice, 1 teaspoon salt, 3 to 4 peppercorns and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley.

Drain the pieces, cover with breadcrumbs and grill under gentle heat.

Arrange the tripe in a crown, alternating with rows of halved tomatoes fried in oil. Put onions sliced in rounds and fried in oil in the centre.

Tripe à la lyonnaise. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF À LA LYONNAISE – Cook and drain the tripe and cut into thin strips. Fry in sizzling butter or lard. Season, and add 4 large tablespoons (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onion fried in butter or lard. Mix and cook together until the tripe is browned. When serving add a dash of vinegar heated in the frying pan, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Tripe à la mode de Caen. TRIPES À LA MODE DE CAEN – In Paris and several other big cities in France one can find Tripes à la mode de Caen, cooked and ready to serve and frequently of excellent quality, as these dishes are prepared in large quantities by first-rate specialists.

But this dish is very easy to make. As tripe is usually sold cleaned, washed and blanched, all that remains is to stew it slowly in a marmite or casserole, with aromatics and moistening. The cooking takes a long time, about 10 to 12 hours in a slow oven.

Tripe will be better and will stay whiter after cooking if it is prepared in a special marmite, with a very small opening, used principally in Normandy. One can, however, cook the tripe in an ordinary casserole or in an earthenware fireproof dish. What is of the greatest importance in the cooking is to make sure that it is done in a hermetically sealed utensil, in a moderate but sustained heat. Seal, before putting on the lid, with a strip of flour-and-water paste. This paste is not edible; its purpose consists entirely of forming a protective coating under which the tripe, cooking without bubbling, remains very white. The paste is prepared by kneading some ordinary flour with hot water.

Ingredients. The basic ingredients of Tripe à la mode de Caen include ox mesentery, composed of the honeycomb or reticulum, the psalterium or manplies, rennet or reed and the belly. To these should be added a gelatinous substance provided by the feet and fatty matter, which is to form a protective layer above the liquid. This is fat taken off beef cut in slices.

The net weight of the basic ingredients should be 2 kg. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  lb.), and the following ingredients are then added:

1 whole ox or calf's foot, 500 g. (18 oz.) beef fat, 5 medium onions, 5 medium carrots, 300 g. (11 oz.) leeks, a bouquet garni (with the accent on thyme and bay leaf), 4 cloves garlic, 15 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 2 teaspoons) salt, 1 teaspoon pepper, a pinch of allspice.

In principle, the liquid used should be cider, strengthened with a few spoonfuls of Calvados or other spirits with a cider base. But, as it often happens that tripe prepared with cider turns dark, it is best to use plain water.

The amount of liquid should be sufficient for the tripe to be completely submerged. The quantity, therefore, will depend on the type of utensil used.

Method. Line the bottom of the marmite or casserole with onions and carrots cut into pieces. On top of these put the ox foot, boned and cut into pieces, and its bone, split into two lengthways. Add the tripe, cut into 6 cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$ -inch) square pieces. Insert the garlic, bouquet garni (q.v.) and the leeks, tied in a bunch, among the pieces of tripe. Season with salt, freshly ground pepper and spices. Cover the whole with beef fat cut into slices and flattened, and pour in enough water to cover.

Put the paste lid, rolled out rather thick, on the casserole, so as to seal the top hermetically. Cook in the oven until the paste is well set. Cover, and leave in a slow oven for about 10 hours.

Remove the paste lid. Take out the layer of fat. Drain the tripe, remove the vegetables, bouquet garni, bunch of leeks and all the bones. Put the tripe into a serving dish; strain the gravy, skim off surplus fat, and pour the gravy over the tripe.

Keep hot in a bain-marie until ready to serve.

Tripe à la polonaise I. TRIPES DE BOEUF À LA POLONAISE – Blanch (see BLANCHING) the tripe, drain, allow to cool and put into boiling water to cook for 4 or 5 hours, with a garnish of vegetables as for Pot-au-feu (see SOUPS AND BROTHS). Drain the tripe and cut into slices.

Prepare a julienne (q.v.) of celery, parsley root or parsnips and carrots, and boil in strained tripe stock until the vegetables are done. Add the tripe to the vegetables. Season with salt and pepper and add a little powdered sweet marjoram. Blend in some Kneaded butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Bring to the boil. Serve in a flat dish.

Tripe à la polonaise II. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF À LA POLONAISE – Fry the cooked tripe, cut in thin strips, in butter until it is brown. Arrange in a dish and sprinkle with chopped hard-boiled egg yolks and parsley. Dress with a dash of vinegar or lemon juice and pour on the butter from the pan, in which 50 g. (2 oz., 1 cup) breadcrumbs have been browned.

Tripe à la portugaise. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF À LA PORTUGAISE – Cut 750 g. ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cups) tripe, previously cooked and drained, into pieces. Simmer with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Tomato fondue (see FONDUE), for 20 minutes with a lid on.

Arrange on a dish, sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Tripe à la poulette I. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF À LA POULETTE – 'Cut the tripe into pieces  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (1 inch) square; keep hot in a double boiler or bain-marie with a little butter and meat jelly. Make some light Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) adding some lightly fried blanched chopped parsley. Mix half of it with the tripe; add the juice of 1 lemon. Heat in a dish, and cover with the rest of the allemande, adding 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) peeled mushrooms.' (From Carême and Plumerey.)

Tripe à la poulette II. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF À LA POULETTE

Preparation of tripe à la mode de Caen (Robert Carrier)

– Cut cooked and drained tripe into small pieces and simmer for a few minutes in 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Poulette sauce (see SAUCE). Add 12 lightly cooked mushrooms and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Heat in a serving dish.

Tripe à la provençale. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF À LA PROVENÇALE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Tripe en blanquette, using shredded bacon fat or pork fat instead of butter. After binding the sauce with egg yolk, add a few leaves of basil pounded with bacon fat or pork fat.

Tripe sautéed in butter. GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF SAUTÉ AU BEURRE – Cut cooked tripe into square or rectangular pieces. Season with salt and pepper, sprinkle with flour, and fry in butter until golden brown.

Place on a serving dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley and a little vinegar or lemon juice. Heat the butter remaining in the pan until sizzling and pour over the tripe.

LAMB or MUTTON OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS. ABATS D'AGNEAU, DE MOUTON:

Animelles (U.S. fry) – Culinary term for the testicles of male animals, in particular those of lambs and sheep. In the past animelles were very much in vogue in France, Spain and Italy.

This is a delicate piece of offal (variety meats) and there are many recipes for preparing it, some of which are given below.

Before preparing them, scald, skin and soak the animelles in cold water for 2 to 3 hours.

Animelles (U.S. fry) in cream sauce. ANIMELLES À LA CRÈME – Cut in thin slices. Season with salt and pepper. Cook in butter. Add a few tablespoons Cream sauce (see SAUCE) and simmer gently. Before serving add a little cream and some fresh butter. Mix well.

Prepared in this manner, the animelles are mostly used as a garnish for patties, pies and vol-au-vent dishes. Mushrooms and truffles can be added to them.

Fricassée of animelles (U.S. fry). ANIMELLES EN FRICASSÉE – Slice the animelles into escalopes and cook in Court-bouillon XII (see COURT-BOUILLON). Drain, put into a shallow pan with cooked, sliced mushrooms (or left whole, if they are small). Add Poulette sauce (see SAUCE). Simmer gently without allowing to boil. Before serving, add some fresh butter.

Fried animelles (Plumerey's recipe). ANIMELLES DE MOUTONS FRITES – 'Choose 3 fresh sheep's (mutton) animelles, remove the skin and cut each into 8 pieces of uniform size. Put into an earthenware bowl with salt, pepper, 2 teaspoons tarragon vinegar, 2 teaspoons olive oil, a little thyme,  $\frac{1}{2}$  bay leaf, 1 sliced onion and a few sprigs of parsley. Cover the bowl. After one hour they should give out their liquid. Drain, put back into the bowl with the rest of the ingredients, and sprinkle with the juice of half a lemon. Before serving, drain on a cloth, pressing lightly; dredge with flour and fry until golden. Arrange in a heap on a napkin and garnish with fried parsley.'

Animelles (U.S. fry) fried in batter. ANIMELLES FRITES – Cut the animelles into broad, thin slices. Marinate for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

When required, dip them into light batter (see BATTERS FOR FRYING). Fry, and garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Fried animelles (U.S. fry) with mushrooms. ANIMELLES SAUTÉES AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Scald, skin and thoroughly soak the animelles, then slice and dry.

Sauté on a brisk flame in sizzling butter and finish off as described in the recipe for Calves' kidneys sautéed with mushrooms (see below).

Animelles (U.S. fry) à la vinaigrette. ANIMELLES À LA VINAIGRETTE – Cook the animelles in a white court-bouillon as for Calf's head (see below). Serve with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE).

Sheep's (lambs') brains. CERVELLE DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU – All methods of preparation given for ox (beef) and calves' brains can be applied to sheep's and lambs' brains.

The brains must be first soaked, the membranes covering them removed, and the brains cooked in Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON).

Sheep's (lambs') brains fried in batter. CERVELLE DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, EN FRITOT – Like Calves' brains fried in batter (see below).

Sheep's (lambs') brains à la bordelaise. CERVELLE DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA BORDELAISE – Cut the brains, cooked in Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON) into slices. Dredge with flour and brown lightly in clarified butter. Arrange in a crown, alternating with rows of oval-shaped croûtons of bread fried in butter. Add a few tablespoons of Bordelaise sauce with red wine (see SAUCE).

Sheep's (lambs') brains à l'indienne. CERVELLE DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À L'INDIENNE – Like Calves' brains à l'indienne (see below).

Sheep's (lambs') brains with red wine. CERVELLE DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, AU VIN ROUGE – Like Calves' brains with red wine, or à la bourguignonne (see below).

Sheep's head. TÊTE DE MOUTON – Only the tongue and brain of the sheep are used in cookery, though sheep's head can be prepared in the same way as lamb's head (see LAMB).

Sheep's (lambs') kidneys à l'anglaise. ROGNONS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À L'ANGLAISE – Remove the skin of the kidneys and slit on the bulging side. Open without separating the two halves completely. Put on a skewer to keep the kidney open (2 pieces of kidney per skewer). Season with salt and pepper, brush with melted butter, dip in breadcrumbs and grill. Garnish with grilled rashers of bacon, boiled potatoes and watercress. Put a pat of Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), the size of a walnut, on each kidney.

Kidneys à l'anglaise can also be prepared without being dipped in butter and breadcrumbs.

Sheep's (lambs') kidneys Carvalho. ROGNONS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, CARVALHO – Remove the skin and cut in two lengthways. Season and sauté them briskly in sizzling butter.

Arrange the halved kidneys in a crown on a dish, placing them on croûtons of the same shape, fried in butter. Put on each half of a kidney 2 thin slices of truffle and 1 mushroom cap fried in butter.

Lace the pan juices with Madeira, dilute with Demi-glacé (see SAUCE), add butter, strain, and pour over the kidneys.

Sheep's (lambs') kidneys au gratin. ROGNONS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, AU GRATIN – Sauté the halved kidneys, seasoned with salt and pepper, in butter over a brisk flame, just to stiffen them.

Arrange them, bulging side up, on sausage stuffing or forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) mixed with a third of its weight in dry duxelles (q.v.) piped in a circle on a buttered dish. Press them slightly into the forcemeat. Put 1 cooked mushroom on each half kidney and surround with forcemeat studded with slices of uncooked mushrooms. Pour over Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter and brown in a very hot oven.

Remove from the oven, squeeze a few drops of lemon juice over and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sheep's (lambs') kidneys sautéed with mushrooms or with various wines. ROGNONS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, SAUTÉ AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Like Calves' kidneys sautéed with mushrooms and Calves' kidneys sautéed with various wines (see below).

Sheep's (lambs') kidneys on skewers. BROCHETTES DE ROGNONS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU – Thread on skewers sheep's kidneys cut into small slices, square pieces of lightly fried bacon, and sliced mushrooms tossed in butter (see below, Calves' kidneys on skewers).

Sheep's (lambs') kidneys Turbigo. ROGNONS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, TURBIGO – Divide the kidneys in halves and fry briskly in butter. Arrange in a circle on a dish. Put in the middle peeled mushrooms fried in the butter in which the kidneys were cooked. Between each half of kidney put 2 chipolata or small link sausages, grilled or fried in butter, and on each of the halves place 1 mushroom cap fried in butter.

Kidneys on skewers. How to open kidneys and how to skewer them

Add white wine to the pan juices with tomato-flavoured Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), blend, and pour over the dish.

Sheep's (lambs') kidneys au vert-pré. ROGNONS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, AU VERT-PRÉ – Prepare as for Sheep's kidneys on skewers. Arrange on a dish and garnish with potato straws and watercress. Place on the kidneys a pat of Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Lamb's liver. FOIE D'AGNEAU – Lamb's liver is rarely prepared by itself. It forms a part of the animal's pluck, which is used for ragoûts.

The liver can be cooked on skewers as Calf's liver on skewers (see below), or it can be fried in butter like Calf's liver à l'anglaise (see below).

Lamb's pluck à l'anglaise. FRESSURE D'AGNEAU À L'ANGLAISE – Slice the lamb's liver, heart, spleen and lungs (the last two having previously been blanched for 10 minutes in salted water).

Slice the lamb's sweetbread. Season with salt and pepper and dredge all the above ingredients in flour. Fry in a shallow pan in clarified butter. Drain and arrange on a dish. Put 1 tablespoon flour into the pan in which the pluck was fried and cook for a few moments to brown lightly; add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira, a few tablespoons of veal stock and a few drops of Harvey sauce (English spice sauce). Pour this sauce over the pluck.

Lambs' tongues. LANGUES D'AGNEAU – These are usually braised. They can also be cooked in white court-bouillon (q.v.) like Calf's tongue (see below) and treated in the same way.

Serve with a garnish of vegetables, dressed with butter or braised; as a ragoût, with mushrooms, with chipolata or link sausages, with young carrots, à la bouguignonne, etc. The tongue can also be prepared grilled à la diable, fried in butter, in buttered papers (as rib chops of veal) à la Sainte-Menehould (as pig's trotters, see below), in crêpinettes (q.v.) etc.

Lambs' sweetbreads. RIS D'AGNEAU – Most of the recipes given for Calves' sweetbreads can be used for lambs' sweetbreads.

Soak the sweetbreads and put them into a pan. Moisten with a few tablespoons white stock. Add 1 teaspoon butter and a few drops of lemon juice. Cover and simmer for 25 minutes. Leave to cool in the stock (strained) in which they were cooked, and proceed as indicated in the selected recipe.

Lambs' sweetbreads are used as a garnish for vol-au-vent, patty shells, raised pies, timbales, various decorative borders, etc.

They can also be served fried with Cream, Poulette, Curry or Hungarian sauce (see SAUCE), on skewers, in scallop shells, in batter, as cromesquis or croquettes, with pilaf, etc.

They are also used as garnish for eggs, and for small entrée dishes of meat, chicken, etc.

(For these dishes, see Calves' sweetbreads below.)

Hot pâté of lambs' sweetbreads à l'ancienne. PÂTE CHAUD DE RIS D'AGNEAU – Line the sides and bottom of a buttered pâté mould with Lining paste (see DOUGH).

Cover the inside of the baking dish with a thick layer of Force meat à la crème (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS).

On this put a layer of lambs' sweetbreads half-cooked in butter, slices of mushrooms lightly fried in butter, and thick slices of truffles. Cover with another layer of forcemeat, another layer of sweetbreads, mushrooms and truffles, and finish with a layer of forcemeat.

Cover the pâté with a piece of rolled-out pastry and seal the edges. Make an opening in the pastry lid to allow steam to escape. Decorate the top with small pastry decorations and brush with beaten egg. Bake in a moderate oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour, depending on the thickness of the pastry.

Put the pâté on a dish. Through the opening in the top pour in several tablespoons Allemande sauce (see SAUCE), flavoured with truffles.

Lambs' sweetbreads pilaf. PILAF DE RIS D'AGNEAU – Prepare like Chicken liver pilaf (see PILAF) replacing the latter by lambs' sweetbreads cooked in butter which have been previously soaked in cold water and blanched.

Vol-au-vent of lambs' sweetbreads with truffles and mushrooms. VOL-AU-VENT DE RIS D'AGNEAU AUX TRUFFES ET CHAMPIGNONS – Prepare the vol-au-vent case (see VOL-AU-VENT).

Fill with a ragoût of lambs' sweetbreads braised in court-bouillon (q.v.), together with sliced truffles and mushrooms in very hot Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Ragoûts of lambs' sweetbreads intended for filling vol-au-vent cases or similar dishes can be cooked either in a white or brown stock.

In addition to truffles and mushrooms, these ragoûts can be supplemented with various ingredients such as quenelles, cocks' combs and kidneys, brains in large dice, sliced artichoke hearts, etc. The lambs' sweetbreads must, of course, be the predominating ingredient.

Lambs' sweetbreads Villeroi on skewers (Larousse)

Sheep's (lambs') tongues. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU – These can be prepared in various ways. First soak in cold water and scald for skinning.

Braised sheep's (lambs') tongues with various garnishes. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, BRAISÉES – Braise in a very little stock. Arrange on a dish and surround with a suitable garnish. Pour the braising stock, boiled down and strained, over the dish.

All garnishes indicated for Braised shoulder or rib of mutton (see MUTTON, GARNISHES), are suitable.

Sheep's (lambs') tongues en crépinettes. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, EN CRÉPINETTES – Braise the tongues and leave to cool in their stock. Cut them in half, enclose each half in Fine pork stuffing (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) with truffles; wrap in a piece of pork caul.

Baste the crépinettes with melted butter. Dip in breadcrumbs, and grill slowly. Serve with Périgieux sauce (see SAUCE).

Devilled sheep's (lambs') tongues. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA DIABLE – Braise the tongues and leave to cool in their stock. Cut them in half and spread each half with mustard seasoned with a touch of cayenne pepper. Baste with butter. Dip in breadcrumbs, pour butter over them and grill slowly. Serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Fritot of sheep's (lambs') tongues. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, EN FRITOT – Braise the tongues (or poach them in very little liquid). Leave to cool in their stock. Drain. Cut into thin slices, and steep them for 1 hour in a marinade of oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

Dip in light batter and deep-fry in boiling fat. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Sheep's (lambs') tongues au gratin. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, AU GRATIN – Braise the tongues and cut them in half lengthwise. Put them in an ovenware dish masked with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Decorate each half tongue with a cooked mushroom. Cover with Mornay sauce, dust with breadcrumbs, and pour on melted butter; brown slowly. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sheep's (lambs') tongues à la hongroise. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA HONGROISE – Half-cook the tongues in clear soup. Drain; skin them. Cook 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onions slowly. Put the tongues on top. Season with salt and paprika, cover and stew. Moisten with 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) white wine. Boil down.

Moisten with a rather thin Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Cover and cook. Pour sauce over tongues in a deep dish.

Sheep's (lambs') tongues à l'italienne. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À L'ITALIENNE – Braise and simmer in Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Pickled sheep's (lambs') tongues. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À L'ÉCARLATE – Wash the tongues, and put them in brine, as for Pickled ox tongue, for 3 or 4 days. Cook in the same way as ox tongue.

These tongues can be served hot with any garnish (especially with purée of lentils or chestnuts), or with green or red cabbage, in which the tongues should be simmered. They can be served cold, like ox tongue, after having been coloured with carmine or caramel.

Sheep's (lambs') tongues à la poulette. LANGUES DE MOUTON À LA POULETTE – Cook the tongues in white stock. Drain and slice. Proceed as indicated for Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la poulette (see below).

Skewered sheep's (lambs') tongues. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, EN BROCHETTES – Braise the tongues and leave to cool. Slice and thread the pieces on skewers. In between each piece put a slice of mushroom tossed in butter and a square piece of bacon, lightly browned.

Baste with butter and coat with breadcrumbs. Pour butter over them and grill slowly.

Serve with Piquante sauce made with the braising stock of the tongues, or with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Sheep's (lambs') tongues à la vinaigrette. LANGUES DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA VINAIGRETTE – Cook in a white stock, as for Calf's head. Drain and skin. Garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE), capers, onions and chopped parsley.

Sheep's (lambs') trotters. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU – Sheep's or lambs' trotters, which can be bought in the shops already blanched, must be boned, singed and the little tufts of hair between the cleavage in the hoof removed.

Cook in a light white court-bouillon (q.v.) and proceed as described in the given recipe.

Sheep's (lambs') trotters en blanquette. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, EN BLANQUETTES – This is the same as Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la poulette (see below) to which, in addition to the mushrooms, small onions cooked in a veal or chicken consommé are added.

Sheep's (lambs') trotters in crépinettes à la périgourdine. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, EN CRÉPINETTES À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Braise the trotters and allow to cool in their braising stock and drain. Put half each trotter between two layers of finely minced truffled forcemeat. Wrap in pieces of pig's caul or paper-thin slices of salt pork. Brush with melted butter, dip in breadcrumbs and grill under a gentle flame. Serve with the pan juices in which the trotters were braised, boiled down with 1 wine glass of Madeira, strained, and with a few diced truffles added.

Croquettes of sheep's (lambs') trotters. CROQUETTES DE PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU – These are prepared with a salpicon (q.v.) of sheep's trotters mixed with mushrooms and truffles, and bound with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) like ordinary croquettes. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

Fried sheep's (lambs') trotters. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, FRITS – Cook halved sheep's trotters in white court-bouillon (q.v.), drain and dry. Marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

When needed, dip into batter and deep-fry in sizzling fat. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Fried sheep's (lambs') trotters à l'ancienne. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, FRITS À L'ANCIENNE – Cook the trotters in white court-bouillon (q.v.), or braise them. Drain, dry, split, and cover each half with a layer of finely pounded forcemeat or stuffing (q.v.) mixed with chopped truffles. Put the halves together, sandwiching tightly. Wrap in a piece of pig's caul or a paper-thin sheet of salt pork. Leave to marinate. When required, dip in batter and fry. Serve with Périgieux sauce (see SAUCE).

Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la hongroise. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA HONGROISE – Prepare like Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la poulette (see below), with finely chopped onion, slightly browned in butter, and seasoned with paprika.

Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la poulette. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA POULETTE – Cook 250 g. (9 oz., 3 cups) sliced mushrooms. Bone 12 trotters, split in half, and cook in white court-bouillon (q.v.). Put into a shallow pan with the cooked mushrooms. Add 4 tablespoons (½ cup) white stock and the same amount of mushroom stock (see STOCK). Boil down almost entirely. Add 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) and 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) cream. Simmer for 5 to 6 minutes.

Bind the sauce with a liaison of 3 or 4 egg yolks mixed with 3 or 4 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  or  $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) cream. Simmer the trotters but do not boil. Add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, a dash of lemon juice and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Mix well.

Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la rouennaise I. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA ROUENNAISE – Blanch the trotters whole and braise them in a good strong stock. Drain, and remove all bones. Fill the inside with sausage meat mixed with 1 lightly browned chopped onion, chopped parsley and the stock left over from the braising, boiled down and strained.

Dip the trotters in egg and breadcrumbs. Just before serving, deep-fry in sizzling fat. Garnish with fried parsley.

Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la rouennaise II. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA ROUENNAISE – Braise the trotters and divide in halves. Sandwich them between two layers of stuffing or forcemeat prepared as described in the preceding recipe. Wrap in pieces of pig's caul or paper-thin slices of salt pork. Brush with melted butter, roll in breadcrumbs and grill under a low flame.

Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la vinaigrette. PIEDS DE MOUTON, D'AGNEAU, À LA VINAIGRETTE – Cook the trotters in a white court-bouillon (q.v.). Drain, and bone them completely. Season while hot with oil, vinegar, salt, pepper and finely chopped herbs.

This salad (which is served as an hors-d'œuvre) is generally flavoured with chopped spring onions.

PORK OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS. ABATS DE PORC –

Pig's bladder. VESSIE DE PORC – This part of the animal, after careful washing, is blown up and dried, and then used as a casing for big sausages, and for wrapping lard. Pig's bladder is also used in the kitchen for wrapping ducks and other poultry prepared en chemise (see DUCK).

Pigs' brains. CERVELLE DE PORC – Pigs' brains can be prepared in any way suitable for Calves' brains.

Smoked pig's cheek (bath chap). JOUE DE PORC FUMÉE – This part of the animal is much prized in England. Smoked pigs' cheeks (bath chaps) are boiled in water and eaten cold, like ham.

Pigs' ears. OREILLES DE PORC – Pigs' ears are mainly used in the preparation of various pork butchery products, chiefly for brawn or head cheese.

They can also be served separately, as a small entrée. Boil in a court-bouillon (q.v.) as for Pigs' feet (see below), or braise.

Boiled pigs' ears. OREILLES DE PORC BOUILLIES – Singe the ears, clean the inside thoroughly and boil them in salted water, allowing  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt per litre ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) with carrots, 1 onion studded with a clove and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Simmer gently for about 50 minutes. Drain the ears and prepare as indicated in individual recipes.

Having been boiled in this manner, pigs' ears can be treated in various ways, coated with batter and fried in deep fat, à la lyonnaise (cut into coarse julienne strips and fried in butter with sliced onions), à la vinaigrette (see below, Calves' head), etc.

Braised pigs' ears with various garnishes. OREILLES DE PORC BRAISÉES – Singe 4 pigs' ears and clean the inside thoroughly. Blanch for 5 minutes in boiling water. Drain and cut each in half lengthways.

Lay them flat in a buttered sauté pan on a foundation of bacon rinds and sliced onions and carrots. Put a bouquet garni (q.v.) in the middle of the dish. Cover and cook on top of the stove. Moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) white wine, boil down completely, add 4 dl. ( $\frac{2}{3}$  pint, scant 2 cups) thickened brown veal stock and finish cooking in the oven, with a lid on, for 50 minutes.

Drain the ears, arrange on a serving dish and garnish as indicated in the recipe. Boil down the braising liquor, strain it and pour over the ears.

Pigs' ears au gratin. OREILLES DE PORC AU GRATIN – Braise the ears and cut in two lengthways. Put them into a buttered oven-proof dish. Surround with sliced mushrooms. Cover with grain sauce (made of Duxelles mixture (q.v.) and the liquor left from braising the ears). Sprinkle with grated breadcrumbs and melted butter. Brown the top slowly in the oven. Before serving squeeze a few drops of lemon juice over the ears and sprinkle them with chopped parsley.

Grilled pigs' ears. OREILLES DE PORC GRILLÉES – Boil or braise the ears and cut in two lengthways. Coat with melted butter and breadcrumbs. Sprinkle with melted butter and grill gently. Serve with a well-spiced sauce.

Grilled pigs' ears are generally accompanied by mashed potatoes, served separately.

Grilled pigs' ears Sainte-Menehould. OREILLES DE PORC GRILLÉES SAINTE-MENEHOULD – Boil the pigs' ears in a spiced court-bouillon (q.v.), like pigs' feet. Drain and cool under a press. Cut in two, coat with melted butter and breadcrumbs and cook either under the grill or in the oven.

Pigs' ears à la hongroise. OREILLES DE PORC À LA HONGROISE – Boil the pig's ears as described above and cut into uniform pieces. Melt some butter in a sauté pan, soften in it (for 2 ears) 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) diced onions, season with salt and paprika, and put in the pig's ears. Cook, covered, for 10 minutes. Add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) mushrooms cut in large dice and tossed in butter. Moisten with 4 dl. ( $\frac{2}{3}$  pint, scant 2 cups) Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

Cook with a lid on for 14 minutes. Before serving, add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter.

Stuffed pigs' ears. OREILLES DE PORC FARCIES – Prepare like Calves' ears Villeroi (see below).

Pigs' feet (trotters). PIEDS DE PORC – Tie the pig's feet two by two, boil in stock prepared like a meat stock, and add carrots, onions and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Drain, straighten by placing between two thin boards tied with string, and cool under a press.

When cold, cut each trotter in two lengthways, brush with butter or lard, and grill gently. Pigs' feet are usually accompanied by mashed potatoes served separately.

Pigs' feet can be braised. They are cooked in this way when they are intended for preparing a salpicon (q.v.) or when they are used as an element of various garnishes.

They can also be prepared in any way suitable for Calves' feet.

Pigs' feet Sainte-Menehould. PIEDS DE PORC SAINTE-MENEHOULD – This is a special way of cooking pigs' feet to obtain a particular softening of the bones so that they can be easily crunched.

Cook the feet very slowly for a long period. Brush them with melted butter and coat with white breadcrumbs. Sprinkle with melted butter or lard and cook in the oven until golden. Serve with mashed potatoes.

Truffled pigs' feet I. PIEDS DE PORC TRUFFÉS – Cook the pigs' feet (either boil or braise them) and bone completely. Cut the flesh into large dice. Mix with Fine pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) to which some diced or chopped truffles have been added. Season with salt, pepper and spices, and add a dash of brandy.

Divide into 100-g. (4-oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cupful) parts and shape them into crêpinettes (q.v.), pointed at one end. Put 2 or 3 fine truffle slices on each crêpinette and wrap in a piece of pig's caul. Brush with melted butter, coat with breadcrumbs and grill gently. Serve with mashed potatoes.

Truffled pigs' feet II. PIEDS DE PORC TRUFFÉS – Braise the pigs' feet in Madeira-flavoured stock. Leave in the braising liquor until cold, then drain and bone. Cut half the flesh into as many pieces as there are feet to be served. Chop the rest, mix with Fine truffled forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) and add the braising liquor, boiled down and strained.

Pork intestine. INTESTIN DE PORC – The small intestine, known in French charcuterie trade as menus or menuises, is used for making various kinds of sausages and black puddings. The caecum, which is also called sac or poche in French, is used for making andouilles and other sausages.

The colon, which is also called chaudin, and the rectum, which is known under the names of rosette, boyau gras or fuseau, is used for the same purposes.

Pig's kidney. ROGNON DE PORC – Prepare in the same way as Calf's kidney.

Pig's lights (lungs). MOU DE PORC (POUMON DE PORC) – The pig's lights, or lungs, are not very substantial. They acquire a little nutritive value from the garnish and sauces which accompany them.

They are used by pork butchers in making pork pâtés de foie, and in cookery for making stews in the same way as Lamb's or Calf's pluck.

Blanquette of pig's lights. MOU DE PORC EN BLANQUETTE – Cut the lights into pieces, season and cook as described in the recipe for Tripe en blanquette.

Ragoût of pig's lights. MOU DE PORC EN RAGOÛT – Beat the lungs to expel all air from them and cut into 40 to 50-g. (2-oz.) pieces.

Season with salt and pepper and fry in butter or lard, stirring frequently so that all the pieces get well browned. Sprinkle with flour and let this colour slightly in the oven. Moisten with white stock, add a little crushed garlic and a bouquet garni (q.v.).

Cook in the oven 1 to 1½ hours. Drain and trim the pieces, put into another casserole with the garnish indicated. Strain the sauce over the lights, cover, and cook in the oven 20 to 30 minutes.

Pig's lights à la bonne femme. MOU DE PORC À LA BONNE FEMME – Cut 1 kg. (2½ lb.) lights into pieces, season with salt and pepper, and fry in butter or lard.

Sprinkle in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour, moisten with 1½ litres (2½ pints, 3¼ pints) white stock or water, and add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and a crushed clove of garlic. Bring to the boil, and cook in the oven for 1½ hours.

Drain and trim the pieces, put into another casserole with 12 small, glazed onions, 125 g. (4½ oz., 7 slices) bacon, lightly fried, and 400 g. (14 oz., 2½ cups) potatoes, quartered or cut to look like large olives. Cook in the oven 25 to 30 minutes.

Pig's lights en civet, or in red wine. MOU DE PORC EN CIVET (AU VIN ROUGE) – Proceed as described in the recipe for Pig's lights à la bonne femme. Moisten with 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) red wine and ½ litre (scant pint, 2¼ cups) white stock. Add small glazed onions, 125 g. (4½ oz., 7 slices) diced and fried bacon, and 125 g. (4½ oz., 2½ cups) raw mushrooms, sliced or cut into quarters. Cook in the oven for 25 minutes. Thicken with 2 dl. (⅓ pint, scant cup) pig's blood.

Pig's lights à la ménagère. MOU DE PORC À LA MÉNAGÈRE – Fry the lights in butter or lard. When half-cooked, add 2 big onions and 2 carrots cut into quarters.

Moisten with 2 dl. (⅓ pint, scant cup) white wine, boil down, add 1 crushed garlic clove, a bouquet garni (q.v.), and 1½ litres (2½ pints, 3¼ pints) white stock or water. Cook in the oven for 1 hour.

Add 4 or 5 potatoes (500 g., 18 oz., 3 cups), cut into quarters, and leave to cook in the oven for 30 minutes.

Pig's lights à la provençale. MOU DE PORC À LA PROVENÇALE – Cut the lights as described above and fry in oil. Add 2 crushed garlic cloves and a big bouquet garni consisting of thyme, bay leaf, parsley and basil.

Dilute with 2 dl. (⅓ pint, scant cup) white wine and boil down. Moisten with 2 dl. (⅓ pint, scant cup) thickened veal stock and 8 dl. (generous 1½ pints, 1¾ pints) light Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Cook in the oven for 1½ hours.

Drain the pieces, trim them and put into another casserole with 250 g. (9 oz., scant 1½ cups) black olives. Strain the sauce over them and cook in the oven for 25 minutes. When serving, sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Fresh tomatoes, peeled, seeded and coarsely chopped, can be used instead of tomato sauce.

Pig's liver. FOIE DE PORC – Pig's liver is mainly used as a forcemeat ingredient for various charcuterie, such as pork brawn and gayettes (q.v.). It can also be served hot cooked in various ways. All the recipes given for Calf's liver (see below) are applicable to it.

Pig's liver gayettes (Provençale cookery). GAYETTES DE FOIE DE PORC – Cut 500 g. (18 oz.) pig's liver and the same amount (4½ cups) fresh fat bacon (or pig intestine fat) into very small dice. Add 2 cloves finely pounded garlic. Season with 3 teaspoons (1 tablespoon) salt, ½ teaspoon freshly ground pepper and a little spice. Mix.

Divide this forcemeat into 100-g. (4-oz.) parts. Wrap each in a piece of pig's caul (or fat pork), well softened in water. Secure with string.

Put the gayettes into a greased pan. Sprinkle with a few tablespoons of lard. Cook in the oven 25 to 30 minutes. The gayettes are generally served cold as an hors-d'œuvre.

Pig's snout. GROIN DE PORC – This part of the animal is mainly used for preparing brawn. It can also be cooked like Pigs' ears or Pigs' feet (trotters), allowed to cool and grilled like trotters.

Pig's spleen. RATE DE PORC – This part of the viscera is rather mediocre in taste. It is mainly used in charcuterie for making sausages.

The spleen, together with the lungs and the heart, can be made into a stew.

Pig's stomach. ESTOMAC DE PORC – The hog's stomach or paunch is used only for making sausages, after it has been washed thoroughly and cooked for a long time.

Pigs' tails. QUEUES DE PORC – These are usually grilled, as Pigs' feet (trotters).

Singe and clean the tails. Cook them as described in the recipe for Pigs' ears. Cool under a press to straighten them. Coat with melted butter and breadcrumbs and grill gently. Serve with mashed potatoes.

Stuffed, braised pigs' tails with various garnishes. QUEUES DE PORC FARCIES, BRAISÉES – Bone the pigs' tails completely in such a way as to obtain long bags, taking care not to tear the skin. Stuff with fine pork or other forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS), truffled if desired. Secure with string and braise in very little liquid.

Drain, put on a serving dish and surround with the garnish indicated. Boil down the braising liquor, strain, and pour over the tails.

All the garnishes recommended for sautéed, pot-roasted or braised meat served in small portions are applicable (see GARNISHES).

Stuffed, grilled pigs' tails. QUEUES DE PORC FARCIES, GRILLÉES – Stuff the tails and braise as described above, or cook them in stock as indicated for Pigs' ears. Cool under a press.

Brush with melted butter, coat with grated breadcrumbs and grill gently. Serve with mashed potatoes.

Pig's tongue. LANGUE DE PORC – Pig's tongue can be prepared in any way suitable for Calf's tongue (see below). After pickling in brine it can be prepared as Ox tongue à l'écarlate.

Pig's tongue in jelly

Pig's tongue is also used as an ingredient for potted heads (head cheese) and head brawn.

VEAL OFFAL OR VARIETY MEATS. ABATS DE VEAU –

Veal amourette. AMOURETTE DE VEAU – This is calf's spinal marrow. Calf's amourette is principally used; that of oxen (beef) more rarely.

This substance has a very great similarity to brains. It must be soaked in cold water and all membranes covering it removed before preparing it.

After careful washing, boil it in court-bouillon (q.v.), then follow any of the recipes given for Calves' brains (see below).

The amourette, cut into little pieces and cooked in court-bouillon, can be used as a garnish for pie dishes, raised pies, vol-au-vent and other similar dishes. It can also be served as hors-d'œuvre, with oil and vinegar dressing, or with mayonnaise.

Calves' brains. CERVELLE DE VEAU – 500 g. (18 oz.) calves' brains serves 4 people. Soak the brains in cold water for 1 hour. Remove the skin and any traces of blood. Unless otherwise specified in a particular recipe, simmer them (do not boil) in Court-bouillon III (see COURT-BOUILLON), to which 1 tablespoon of vinegar has been added, for 15 to 20 minutes. Drain, plunge in very cold water, and allow to cool. Drain and dry. Follow succeeding recipes for final preparation.

Calves' brains à l'allemande. CERVELLE DE VEAU À L'ALLEMANDE – Cook the brains in court-bouillon as above and drain. Cut into 3 or 4 uniform slices and dip in flour. Sauté the slices in butter until browned. Arrange on croûtons of bread fried in butter, and cover with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' brains à la bourguignonne. CERVELLE DE VEAU À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Calves' brains à l'allemande but use Bourguignonne sauce instead of Allemande (see SAUCE).

A Bourguignonne garnish can also be added (see GARNISHES).

Calves' brains in browned butter I. CERVELLE DE VEAU AU BEURRE NOIR – Cook the brains in court-bouillon (q.v.), drain and cut into slices. Arrange them on a dish, season, and sprinkle with 3 to 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter, browned in a shallow pan. Add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, and a dash of vinegar heated in the same pan after the butter has been poured off.

Calves' brains in browned butter II. CERVELLE DE VEAU AU BEURRE NOIR – Season and flour slices of brains. Fry them lightly in butter, arrange on a dish, and finish off as described above.

Calves' brains in noisette butter. CERVELLE DE VEAU AU BEURRE NOISETTE – Season and flour slices of brains, brown lightly in butter, arrange on a dish, sprinkle with chopped parsley, add a dash of lemon juice, and pour over a few tablespoons browned Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Fried calves' brains à l'anglaise. CERVELLE DE VEAU FRITE À L'ANGLAISE – Cut cooked brains in slices and marinate for 25 minutes in 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) oil mixed with lemon juice, salt, pepper and chopped parsley.

Dip the slices in beaten egg and breadcrumbs, fry in very hot fat, drain, and arrange on a plate with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' brains fried in batter. CERVELLE DE VEAU EN FRITOT – Boil 500 g. (18 oz.) calves' brains in court-bouillon, cool and cut in squares. Soak for 25 minutes in a mixture of oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Dip the pieces in Frying batter VI (see BATTERS FOR FRYING) and deep-fry in sizzling fat. Drain, dry, season with fine salt. Arrange on a dish in the shape of a pyramid and garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Fried calves' brains à la provençale. CERVELLE DE VEAU SAUTÉE À LA PROVENÇALE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Calves' brains à l'italienne (see below), but instead of using Italian sauce, put some Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) in the middle of the dish.

Garnish with black olives and sprinkle with chopped tarragon.

Fried calves' brains à la romaine. CERVELLE DE VEAU FRITE À LA ROMAINE – Prepare the brains as described in the recipe for Calves' brains à l'anglaise.

Arrange in a circle, put some leaf spinach cooked in butter in the middle, place 1 rolled anchovy on each slice of brains, and sprinkle with a few tablespoons of Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Calves' brains au gratin. CERVELLE DE VEAU AU GRATIN – Cook slices of calves' brains in court-bouillon (q.v.), drain, coat with a few tablespoons Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE) and place in a fireproof dish. Put a slice of cooked mushroom on each.

Cover with duxelles sauce, sprinkle with white breadcrumbs and melted butter, and brown in a slow oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and add a dash of lemon juice.

Calves' brains à la hongroise. CERVELLE DE VEAU À LA HONGROISE – Cut 1 pair of cooked brains into slices. Season with paprika, sprinkle with flour and fry lightly in butter. Arrange in a crown on croûtons of bread fried in butter.

Put a mixture of diced mushrooms, hard-boiled eggs and truffles, all tossed in butter, in the middle. Top each slice with a small sliver of ham heated in butter. Pour some Paprika sauce (see SAUCE, Hungarian sauce) over the middle of the dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Calves' brains à l'indienne. CERVELLE DE VEAU À L'INDIENNE – Cut cooked brains in slices and fry lightly in butter. Arrange in a crown with some Rice à l'indienne (see RICE) and cover with Curry sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' brains à l'italienne. CERVELLE DE VEAU À L'ITALIENNE – Cut cooked brains in slices, season, sprinkle with flour, and fry lightly in oil, or oil and butter in equal proportions. Arrange in a circle and cover with Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' brains in jelly. CERVELLE DE VEAU À LA GELÉE – Soak 500 g. (18 oz.) calves' brains in salted water for 5 minutes. Skin them, and cook with 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) jellied meat stock. Boil for 5 minutes, then leave to cool in the pan.

Drain the brains, divide in halves, dry, put into a dish and pour over the pan juices, clarified and strained through a napkin. Put on ice to set.

Cold jellied calves' brains. CERVELLE DE VEAU EN CHAUD-FROID – Cook 500 g. (18 oz.) calves' brains as described in the recipe for Calves' brains in jelly. Leave to cool in the liquid in which they were boiled. As soon as they are quite cold, drain, divide in halves, dry without damaging them, and coat them with White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE).

Cold jellied calves' brains à la parisienne. CERVELLE DE VEAU EN CHAUD-FROID À LA PARISIENNE – Prepare the brains as described in the preceding recipe and garnish with Parisian salad (see SALAD).

Calves' brains loaf à l'ancienne. PAIN DE CERVELLE DE VEAU À L'ANCIENNE – Cook 500 g. (18 oz.) calves' brains in butter. Add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Frangipane panada (see PANADA) and pound in a mortar.

Season with salt, pepper and ground nutmeg and add two eggs, pounding well to achieve a smooth mixture.

Pass through a fine sieve, blend with a spoon, and put into a buttered mould. Cook in a pan of hot water, or in a bain-marie 25 to 30 minutes in the oven. Leave for 5 minutes before turning out.

Put the loaf on a dish and surround with mushrooms cooked in Court-bouillon IX (see COURT-BOUILLON). Pour over 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) Allemande sauce (see SAUCE), and decorate with 12 slivers of truffles.

Calves' brains en matelote. CERVELLE DE VEAU EN MATELOTE – Boil 500 g. (18 oz.) calves' brains in 8 dl. (generous  $1\frac{1}{3}$  pints,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints) Court-bouillon with red wine (XIV) (see COURT-BOUILLON). Drain, cut in thick slices and put into a shallow pan with 24 small glazed onions and 24 small mushrooms fried in butter.

Boil down the court-bouillon by half, blend in 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Kneaded butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), strain, and pour over the brains.

Simmer for a few moments without boiling. Garnish with heart-shaped croûtons of bread fried in butter.

Calves' brains à la poulette. CERVELLE DE VEAU À LA POULETTE – Cut the cooked brains into thick slices and cook for a few moments, without allowing to boil, in Poulette sauce (see SAUCE). Heap in a shallow platter.

Brain stuffing or forcemeat. FARCE DE CERVELLE – Cook a brain in a court-bouillon (q.v.). Drain, and rub through a fine sieve. Heat the purée in a double saucepan. According to the recipe used, add a little butter, cream, Béchamel or Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

This stuffing is used to fill small vol-au-vent, tarts or tartlets, barquettes, etc.

Calves' ears braised à la mirepoix. OREILLE DE VEAU BRAISÉES À LA MIREPOIX – Blanch four calves' ears for 8 minutes. Cool them in cold water, drain, trim, dry and thoroughly clean the inside.

Put into a saucepan, cover with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) mirepoix (q.v.), add a bouquet garni (q.v.), season with salt and pepper, add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine and cook to thicken.

Add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) slightly thickened brown veal stock and cook in the oven with a lid on for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours.

Drain the ears, remove the skin which covers the thin part of the inside and the outside with the aid of a spoon. Beat this part flat and slit it.

Arrange the ears on croûtons of bread fried in butter. Strain pan juices, remove surplus fat, and pour over dish.

Braised calves' ears Mount-Bry. OREILLES DE VEAU BRAISÉES MONT-BRY – Cook the ears as described in the recipe for Calves' ears braised à la mirepoix.

Drain them, put each on a little Anna potato cake (see POTATOES), and garnish with 4 lettuce hearts braised in the juice. Strain the pan juices, remove surplus fat, pour over the ears and serve.

Fried calves' ears I. OREILLES DE VEAU FRITES – Cook the ears as described in the recipe for Calves' ears braised à la mirepoix, drain, cool, divide into uniform pieces, dip in beaten egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry in sizzling fat.

Arrange in a pyramid, decorate with fried parsley and serve with the pan juices, strained and finished off as Diable or Piquante sauce (see SAUCE).

Fried calves' ears II. OREILLES DE VEAU FRITES – Cut the ears into strips, leave to soak in batter and finish off as described above.

Fried calves' ears III. OREILLES DE VEAU EN FRITOT – Cook the ears in a flour-and-water stock. Drain and wipe them. Cut each into 8 or 10 pieces of regular shape and size. Marinate for 30 minutes with oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Dip in a light batter and fry in smoking hot deep fat. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Grilled calves' ears à la diable. OREILLES DE VEAU GRILLÉES À LA DIABLE – Cut the braised ears in two lengthways, put them under a press for a few moments, spread with mustard, sprinkle with melted butter, dust with white breadcrumbs and cook on both sides under a gentle grill. Serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' ears à la hongroise. OREILLES DE VEAU À LA HONGROISE – Cook the ears in a flour-and-water court-bouillon (q.v.), cut them into uniform pieces and put them into a sauté pan in which 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) finely diced onions (for every 2 ears), seasoned with salt and paprika, have been cooked in butter. Stew the ears for 10 minutes. Add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{3}$  cup) mushrooms cut into large dice and lightly cooked in butter. Stir in 4 dl. ( $\frac{2}{3}$  pint, scant 2 cups) thin Velouté or Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Cook, covered, for about 15 minutes. Add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter.

Calves' ears à l'indienne. OREILLES DE VEAU À L'INDIENNE – Cook in flour-and-water court-bouillon (q.v.). Cut into squares and treat like Calves' feet à l'indienne (see below).

Calves' ears à l'italienne. OREILLES DE VEAU À L'ITALIENNE – 'Prepare and cook the calves' ears as described in the recipe for Calves' ears braised à la mirepoix, but instead of slitting them, cut the tendons to round off the end, and dress the inside with a mixture of truffles, mushrooms and calf's tongue cut up very small, and bound with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) thick Financière sauce (see SAUCE). Bring the whole to the boil and serve with an Italian sauce.' (From Carême and Plumerey.)

Calves' ears en tortue. OREILLES DE VEAU EN TORTUE – Cook the ears as described in the recipe for Calves' ears braised à la mirepoix but replacing the white wine by Madeira.

Drain, arrange on fried croûtons, and surround with the garnish en tortue (see GARNISHES). Strain the pan juices, skim off fat, and finish as described for Tortue sauce (see SAUCE). Pour over the dish and serve.

Calves' ears stuffed en tortue. OREILLES DE VEAU FARCIES EN TORTUE – Soak the ears and part cook in a flour-and-water court-bouillon as for Calf's head (see below).

Stuff them with a forcemeat composed of one half Fine pork forcemeat and one half Veal forcemeat (see FORCE-MEATS or STUFFINGS) with the addition of diced truffles, the whole bound with eggs.

Finish cooking the ears in a Madeira-flavoured braising stock. Finish off as for Calf's head en tortue (see below).

Calves' ears Villeroi. OREILLES DE VEAU VILLEROI – Cook

the ears as described in the recipe for Calves' ears braised à la mirepoix and drain.

Trim, fill the inside with a finely pounded Chicken forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS), dip in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE), then in breadcrumbs, and fry.

Arrange on a plate with fried parsley and serve with Tomato or Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' feet (Nicolas)

Calves' feet. PIEDS DE VEAU – Soak the feet in cold water, bone and blanch them, cook in a court-bouillon as for Calf's head (see below).

Cut into pieces, marinate for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper, dip in a light batter and deep-fry in sizzling fat.

All the recipes given for Calf's head can be used for Calves' feet.

Calves' feet à l'indienne. PIEDS DE VEAU À L'INDIENNE – Cook as for Calves' feet and serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE), the feet covered with Curry sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' feet à l'italienne. PIEDS DE VEAU À L'ITALIENNE – Cut cooked calves' feet into uniform pieces and put into Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' feet with tartare sauce. PIEDS DE VEAU À LA TARTARE – Cut into uniform pieces, dip in egg and breadcrumbs, deep-fry and serve with Tartare sauce (see SAUCE, Cold sauces).

Calves' feet à la vinaigrette. PIEDS DE VEAU À LA VINAIGRETTE – Prepare like Calf's head in oil (see below).

Calf's head. TÊTE DE VEAU – Calf's head should be boned and soaked for a long time in cold water, then blanched, cooled, and cut into pieces, or – depending on the method of preparation – it can be left whole. Then it is cooked in a White court-bouillon (see below).

When calf's head is being cooked à l'anglaise it does not have to be boned. After a long soaking and blanching, it is cooked in the white court-bouillon. It should always be served with the tongue cut in slices, and the brain, cooked separately in white court-bouillon and sliced. The brain can also be pounded and blended with a cold sauce.

White court-bouillon for calf's head. Mix flour with cold water, using 1 heaped tablespoon per litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water, until smooth. Pass this mixture through a fine strainer. Pour into a saucepan, big enough to take the head, either whole or divided in halves, or cut into pieces. Season with 1 teaspoon salt and add 1 tablespoon vinegar per litre (1½ pints, generous quart) water. Bring to the boil. Add 1 large onion studded with two cloves, and a bouquet garni consisting of parsley, thyme and a bay leaf. When this stock is boiling, put in the calf's head wrapped in a fine muslin cloth.

Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous 2 cups) beef (or veal) fat, chopped and soaked in cold water. This fat, upon melting, will form a protective layer over the calf's head and will prevent it from going black.

Calf's head à l'anglaise. TÊTE DE VEAU À L'ANGLAISE – Cook the calf's head in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head), whole or split in half, but without boning.

Arrange the head on a dish and serve with a piece of boiled bacon and Parsley sauce (see SAUCE).

Calf's head à la bonne femme. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA BONNE FEMME – Boil the calf's head in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head) cut into uniform pieces and simmer gently in a Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) with pieces of bacon, lightly browned in butter, glazed mushrooms, olives and small onions. Heap on a dish.

Calf's head Caillou. TÊTE DE VEAU CAILLOU – For 6 persons, cook half a blanched calf's head, cut into 6 pieces, and half the calf's tongue in a large saucepan. The head should only be three-quarters cooked, the final cooking taking place in the sauce.

Fry 1 large chopped onion in 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) butter without allowing it to brown, adding 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) lean smoked ham cut into little pieces. Sprinkle in 4 tablespoons (½ cup) flour, brown lightly, blend with 5 dl. (scant pint, 2¼ cups) stock. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Tomato sauce (see SAUCE), a bouquet garni (q.v.) consisting of 2 sprigs parsley, 1 small clove of garlic, 1 sprig of thyme, ¼ bay leaf and 1 stalk of celery. Mix well and cook for 20 minutes.

Put the calf's head and the tongue, cut into 6 slices, into a sauté pan, add 48 peeled chestnuts, half-cooked in consommé, 48 large, stoned olives, and 12 mushrooms, skinned and washed with the stalks removed. Add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) Madeira. Simmer for 10 minutes. Cover with the strained sauce and cook under a lid for 35 minutes.

Arrange the calf's head and the chestnuts on a large shallow dish. Garnish with little escalopes of brains dipped in slightly beaten egg and breadcrumbs and fried in butter, and with heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter.

Calf's head in crépinettes. TÊTE DE VEAU EN CRÉPINETTES – Cut 500 g. (18 oz.) of calf's head cooked in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head) into pieces. Add to this ½ its weight in diced mushrooms lightly fried in butter, and 4 tablespoons diced truffles. Blend with Madeira sauce (see SAUCE) based on truffle essence and boiled down. Add some diced calf's tongue and brain. Allow to cool.

Divide this mixture into parts of 50 g. (2 oz.) each. Enclose each of these in 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) finely-minced Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS). Roll each into the shape of a flat sausage, and wrap in a piece of caul, cut paper-thin, moistened with cold water. Smear with melted butter, roll in white breadcrumbs, sprinkle with melted butter and grill under a gentle flame. Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE) or with any other sauce recommended for grilled meats.

Calf's head à la financière. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA FINANCIÈRE – Cut the head, boiled in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head) and well drained, into 2-inch pieces. Stew in Madeira. Arrange in a dish. Cover with Financière garnish (see GARNISHES), to which pieces of sliced or diced calf's tongue, and brain sliced into escalopes, have been added.

Fried calf's head. TÊTE DE VEAU FRITE – Cut the head into square pieces. Marinate for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and chopped parsley. Dip the pieces into a light batter (see BATTER) and deep-fry in sizzling fat.

Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) or any other sauce recommended for calf's head.

Calf's head fried in batter. TÊTE DE VEAU EN FRITOT – This is the same recipe as that for Fried calf's head.

Fried calf's head à la piémontaise. TÊTE DE VEAU FRITE À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Cook the calf's head in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head) and cut in small square pieces. Slice the tongue and the brain. Marinate for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and chopped parsley.

Dip in a light batter (see BATTERS FOR FRYING) and deep-fry in sizzling fat.

Drain on a cloth, season with finely ground salt. Arrange in a heap on a dish, surrounded by a border of Risotto à la piémontaise (see RICE). Pour a few tablespoons of a not too thick Tomato sauce (see SAUCE) over the risotto.

Calf's head Godard. TÊTE DE VEAU GODARD – This is prepared like Calf's head à la financière.

In the olden days, calf's head Godard used to be served whole and almost always stuffed. (See below, Stuffed calf's head à l'ancienne.)

Calf's head with Gribiche sauce. TÊTE DE VEAU SAUCE GRIBICHE – Cook the calf's head and the tongue in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head) and cut into uniform pieces. Drain. Garnish with escalopes of tongue, and slices of brain cooked separately in court-bouillon with fresh parsley. Serve with Gribiche sauce (see SAUCE, Cold sauces).

Calf's head à l'italienne. TÊTE DE VEAU À L'ITALIENNE – This is cooked calf's head cut into square pieces and put into Italian sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Calf's head à la lyonnaise. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA LYONNAISE – Cook the calf's head in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head), cut into pieces and put them into an ovenproof dish lined with a layer of thinly sliced onions lightly fried in butter and mixed with chopped parsley. Cover with Lyonnaise sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter. Brown in the oven.

Calf's head à l'occitane (Languedoc cookery). TÊTE DE VEAU À L'OCCITANE – Cut half a well-soaked calf's head into 8 uniform pieces and cook in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head). In the same court-bouillon cook half a calf's tongue. Poach the brain separately in Court-bouillon V (see COURT-BOUILLON). Put 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) chopped onion, lightly fried in butter, into a shallow fireproof dish and add 1 garlic clove towards the end of cooking. Place the dish in a pan of boiling water and put in the pieces of calf's head and the sliced tongue and brain. Garnish with black olives, 2 peeled, deseeded tomatoes cut into little pieces and tossed in oil, and 2 sliced hard-boiled eggs. Season with salt and pepper. Put 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter divided into tiny dabs, 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) oil, juice of  $\frac{1}{2}$  lemon and 1 teaspoon chopped parsley on the calf's head. Heat in a pan of water, keeping the dish covered. Before serving, baste the head well with the sauce.

Calf's head in oil. TÊTE DE VEAU À L'HUILE – Serve with slices of tongue and brain, garnished with fresh parsley and Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE).

Calf's head with olives. TÊTE DE VEAU AUX OLIVES – Cut the head into pieces. Put into a shallow pan with some Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) or rich meat stock laced with Madeira. Add stoned and blanched olives. Simmer slowly.

Calf's head à la portugaise. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA PORTUGAISE – Cut the boiled calf's head and tongue into square pieces. Cook gently in a not too thick Tomato fondue (see FONDUE).

Put the sliced calf's brain on top. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Calf's head à la poulette. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA POULETTE –

Boil in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head) and cut into little slices. Prepare as described in the recipe for Sheep's trotters à la poulette.

Calf's head à la ravigote. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA RAVIGOTE – Cook the calf's head in court-bouillon (see above). Drain and cut into square pieces. Cover with Ravigote sauce (see SAUCE) and garnish with slices of brain.

Hot calf's head with various cold sauces. TÊTE DE VEAU CHAUDE – Arrange the cooked head on a dish with slices of tongue and brain. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with various cold sauces, such as: Aioli, Gribiche, Mayonnaise, Ravigote (or Vinaigrette), Rémoulade, Tartare, Vincent (see SAUCE, Cold sauces).

Hot calf's head with various hot sauces. TÊTE DE VEAU CHAUDE – Cook the calf's head in a white court-bouillon (see above) and drain; arrange on a dish with slices of tongue and brain, garnish with fried parsley, and serve with sauces such as: Caper, Fines herbes, Hungarian, Ravigote (see SAUCE, Compound white sauces); Charcutière, Diable, Fines herbes, Piquante, Robert (see SAUCE, Compound brown sauces).

Stuffed calf's head. TÊTE DE VEAU FARCIE – Cook the calf's head in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head), divide in half or cut into pieces. Cut the lean parts into 6-cm. (2- to 3-inch) slices.

Arrange these inside the head with a stuffing made of chopped minced veal, panada (q.v.) and cream, and a mixture of chopped dried mushrooms, chopped hard-boiled eggs and chopped parsley. Press this forcemeat into a dome shape. Put the pieces of head, stuffed side up, into a buttered ovenproof dish, with several tablespoons of white stock. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter. Put the dish in a pan half-filled with hot water, and brown in a slow oven.

Serve with a well-spiced sauce, such as Piquante, Poivrade, Tartare, Ravigote or Béarnaise (see SAUCE).

Calf's head can also be served with one of the garnishes which usually go with braised calf's head, Financière, Godard, Tortue, etc. (see GARNISHES).

Stuffed calf's head à l'ancienne. TÊTE DE VEAU FARCIE À L'ANCIENNE – Boil a boned calf's head in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head) until three-quarters done. Drain and dry the head. Remove the ears. Spread the head, skin side down, on a damp, wrung-out napkin, stretched taut on the table. Remove some of the lean flesh inside the head, cover the hole made in the skin by the removal of the ears with a thick slice of bacon. Season with salt, pepper and all-spice. Fill with a Veal forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) made of minced veal, panada and cream, adding a mixture made of the lean flesh taken out of the head, trimmed and diced, the tongue, and some truffles.

Enclose this stuffing in the skin and sew up the opening. Wrap in the napkin and mould the head into its original shape. Secure with string.

Brown pieces of bacon rinds, carrots and sliced onions in butter and put the calf's head in the pan, surrounded by pieces of knuckle browned in butter. Add a large bouquet garni (q.v.). Simmer, covered, on the top of the stove, for 15 minutes. Add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Madeira and boil down. Add 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) thickened veal stock. Put the ears into the saucepan, wrapped in a piece of muslin to enable them to be taken out easily. Bring to the boil. Finish cooking in a slow oven with a lid on. Before the cooking is complete, remove the ears, which consist of more delicate flesh and are, therefore, cooked sooner.

Drain the head. Unwrap it and arrange on a large, long dish. Fix the ears in their place by means of small skewers.

Surround the head either with Financière or Godard garnish (see GARNISHES) arranged in bunches.

Add sliced calf's brain, cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.). Strain the pan juices, remove surplus fat, boil down and pour over the calf's head.

Calf's head à la Tertillière. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA TERTILLIÈRE – Cook the head in a white court-bouillon (see Calf's head), drain, cut into pieces and put into a shallow pan with 150 g. (5 oz., generous cup) pickled tongue, 150 g. (5 oz., scant 2 cups) mushrooms, 6 small truffles, all coarsely shredded, and  $3\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) Madeira sauce (see SAUCE) with truffle essence. Cook gently for 30 minutes. Add 1 teaspoon finely shredded, blanched and drained lemon peel.

Garnish with halves of hard-boiled eggs and small slices of calf's brain.

Calf's head en tortue. TÊTE DE VEAU EN TORTUE – In the old days, a large entrée demanded a certain number of garnishes. Nowadays, this dish is served in a timbale and the various garnishes are put in a mixed ragoût over it.

This garnish is made of the following ingredients: quenelles of minced veal (see FORCEMEAT or STUFFINGS, Quenelle forcemeat); cocks' combs and kidneys, cooked mushrooms, stuffed poached olives, slivers of truffles and escalopes of calf's tongue. To this ragoût, stewed with Madeira and blended with Tortue sauce (see SAUCE), add gherkins, cut in uniform pieces. Arrange the head on a dish, dress with the garnishes and Tortue sauce, decorate with fried eggs, slices of calf's brain cooked in court-bouillon (q.v.), dressed crayfish, also cooked in court-bouillon, and heart-shaped fried croûtons.

Pieces of calf's head, after having been slowly cooked in Tortue sauce, can also be arranged on croûtons of bread fried in butter, with the garnishes disposed around.

Calf's head can also be served whole, stuffed and cooked in braising stock spiced with Turtle herbs (see HERBS).

Calf's head à la toulousaine. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA TOULOUSAINNE – Cut the cooked head into square pieces. Fill a dish with pieces of tongue and brain and add Garnish à la toulousaine (see GARNISHES). Heat, cover with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) based on mushroom essence. Garnish with slivers of truffle.

The head can also be served, cut in round pieces, on circular croûtons fried in butter, with the garnish laid out in separate groups. Pour over Allemande sauce.

Calf's head à la vinaigrette. TÊTE DE VEAU À LA VINAIGRETTE – Prepared like Calf's head in oil.

Calf's heart à l'anglaise I. COEUR DE VEAU À L'ANGLAISE – Cut the calf's heart into slices about 2 cm ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) thick. Remove the little clot of blood which forms in the centre between the compartments. Season with salt and pepper, brush with melted butter, roll in freshly grated breadcrumbs and grill under a gentle flame. Arrange in a dish alternating with grilled slices of bacon. Garnish with boiled potatoes. Dot the slices of heart with dabs of half-melted Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Calf's heart à l'anglaise II. COEUR DE VEAU À L'ANGLAISE – Cut into slices and fry in butter as described in the recipe for Calf's liver à l'anglaise I (see below).

Casserole of calf's heart. COEUR DE VEAU EN CASSEROLE – Season the heart with salt and pepper and put into an earthenware casserole in which 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter have been heated. Cook in a moderate oven from 30 to 35 minutes, basting frequently with the juice.

Baste with a few tablespoons thickened veal stock. Serve in the casserole in which it was cooked.

Casserole of calf's heart à la bonne femme. COEUR DE VEAU EN CASSEROLE À LA BONNE FEMME – Brown the calf's heart in sizzling butter in an earthenware fireproof casserole as described above. Add very small potatoes, small glazed onions and lean rashers of bacon, fried in butter. Cook all the ingredients together. Finish off as described in the preceding recipe.

Casserole of calf's heart can be garnished with various vegetables, some of which may be cooked with the heart, or added to the casserole; others may be added after the heart is cooked.

Roast calf's heart. COEUR DE VEAU RÔTI – Season calf's heart with salt and pepper, sprinkle with olive oil and a dash of lemon juice. Leave to soak for 30 minutes in this seasoning. Wrap in a sheet of pork fat or in a piece of pig's caul. Roast on a spit before a brisk fire for 35 minutes or bake  $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 hours in the oven. Serve with the diluted pan juices poured over.

Sautéed calf's heart. COEUR DE VEAU SAUTÉ – Cut the heart into thin small slices. Season with salt and pepper. Toss quickly in sizzling butter and finish cooking as described in the recipe for Calf's kidney à la bordelaise (see below).

Sautéed calf's heart can be prepared with a Mushroom sauce, Chasseur sauce, Madeira or other wine sauce (see SAUCE).

An alternative, after having tossed it in butter, is to add Rice pilaf (see PILAF) or risotto (see RICE).

Stuffed calf's heart with various vegetables. COEUR DE VEAU FARCI AVEC LÉGUMES – Open the heart without separating the halves completely. Remove the clot of blood which forms in the middle. Season with salt and pepper and fill with finely minced Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS), or other stuffing. Wrap it in a sheet of salt pork cut paper thin, in a piece of caul, or in thin slices of bacon. Secure with string. Put into a casserole, sprinkle with melted butter, season, and cook in a slow oven for about 1 hour.

Arrange the heart on a dish and garnish with the vegetables indicated. Dilute the pan juices with dry white wine, blend in thickened veal stock, boil down, add butter, pour over the heart and serve.

Calves' kidneys. ROGNONS DE VEAU – When a calf's kidney is cut into slices or escalopes for frying or grilling cut off all fat and remove membranes. If it is to be cooked whole, in a casserole or otherwise, it is trimmed less drastically, so as to leave a light coating of fat around it.

Calves' kidneys à la Bercy. ROGNONS DE VEAU À LA BERCY – Cut the kidneys across into slices 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) thick. Brush them with melted butter, season and dip in breadcrumbs. Grill under a brisk flame. Serve with Bercy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Calves' kidneys à la bordelaise. ROGNONS DE VEAU À LA BORDELAISE – Skin the kidneys and cut them open without dividing the halves completely. Put two skewers through each kidney to keep the shape. Season, spread with butter, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and grill under a brisk flame, cooking the open side of the kidney first.

Arrange on a dish, garnish with slivers of marrow poached in salted water and drained. Pour a border of Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE) around the kidneys.

Casserole of calves' kidneys. ROGNONS DE VEAU EN CASSEROLE – Take some of the fat off the kidneys. Season, and cook them whole, in an earthenware casserole in which 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) butter have been heated. Baste with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) thickened veal stock. Serve in the casserole.

Casserole of calves' kidneys à la bonne femme. ROGNONS DE VEAU EN CASSEROLE À LA BONNE FEMME – Cook 50 g. (2 oz., 3 slices) diced bacon and 4 small onions in butter in a casserole. Remove these from the casserole and in the same butter toss a whole kidney, with the fat partly taken off, just to stiffen it. Add the diced bacon and onions, and surround the kidney with a dozen new potatoes, or old potatoes cut down to the size of olives, three-quarters cooked in butter.

Season with salt and pepper. Cook in the oven, uncovered. Baste with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) veal stock. Serve in the casserole.

Sometimes mushrooms lightly tossed in butter are added to the garnish of the kidney.

Grilled calves' kidneys. ROGNONS DE VEAU GRILLÉS – Split the kidney lengthways without completely dividing it into halves. Put 2 metal skewers through it to keep it open. Season, brush over with melted butter and cook under a grill. Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (separately or on the kidney), Bercy butter, or any other sauce specially recommended for grills. (See BUTTER, Compound butters; SAUCE.)

Calves' kidneys à la liégeoise. ROGNONS DE VEAU À LA LIÉGEOISE – Cook the kidneys as described in the recipe for Casserole of calves' kidneys. Add to the casserole 4 crushed juniper berries, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) gin which has been set ablaze, and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons (2 tablespoons) thickened veal stock. Serve as it is.

Calves' kidneys with pilaf. ROGNONS DE VEAU EN PILAF – Prepared like Calf's liver with pilaf (see below).

Calves' kidneys sautéed à la bordelaise. ROGNONS DE VEAU SAUTÉS À LA BORDELAISE – Skin the kidney and cut into small slices. Season with salt and pepper. Sauté briskly in sizzling butter, remove the kidney and keep hot.

Add 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine to the butter. Put in 1 tablespoon finely chopped shallots. Boil down; add  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) thickened brown veal stock, and the pan juices left over from frying the kidney. Boil down to the desired consistency. Put the kidney into the sauce with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) diced beef marrow, poached and well drained. Mix, and serve in a dish sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Calves' kidneys sautéed with mushrooms. ROGNONS DE VEAU SAUTÉS AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Cut the kidney into small slices, season with salt and pepper and sauté briskly in sizzling butter. Remove the slices and keep hot.

Fry 4 sliced mushrooms in the same butter. Remove them and add to the kidney.

Pour 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira into a saucepan, add  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) thickened brown veal stock or Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) and the juices left over from the kidney. Boil down by a good third.

Put the kidneys and the mushrooms into this sauce, which should be quite thick. Add 1 tablespoon butter. Shake the pan to mix well. Heap on a shallow dish.

Sautéed calves' kidneys with various wines. ROGNONS SAUTÉS AU VIN – Prepare as described above (with or without mushrooms) and replace Madeira by Chablis, Sauternes, Graves or another white wine or a red wine: Burgundy, Bordeaux, Côtes du Rhône, Alsatian wine, Rhine wine, etc.

Calves' kidneys on skewers. ROGNONS DE VEAU EN BROCHETTES – Skin the kidneys and cut into uniform pieces. Season with salt and pepper. Put on metal skewers, alternating with pieces of bacon, lightly fried in butter. Dip in breadcrumbs and grill under a brisk flame. Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter, Bercy butter or a special sauce recommended for grills (see BUTTER, Compound butters; SAUCE).

Calf's liver à l'anglaise. FOIE DE VEAU À L'ANGLAISE – Cut the calf's liver into thin slices, season with salt and pepper, dredge lightly with flour and fry very quickly in sizzling butter. Brown on both sides. Arrange on a dish with thin rashers of bacon, fried in butter in the same pan as the liver.

Serve with potatoes cut down to the same size, boiled in salted water and well drained, or with steamed potatoes.

Sprinkle with chopped parsley and a few drops of lemon juice, and pour over it the butter in which the liver was cooked.

Calf's liver à l'anglaise can also be prepared by grilling the liver and the bacon, garnishing the dish with boiled potatoes and dabbing with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Calf's liver Bercy. FOIE DE VEAU BERCY – Slice, season, dredge with flour and grill. Serve with Bercy butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Calf's liver à la bordelaise. FOIE DE VEAU À LA BORDELAISE – Slice, season, dredge with flour and fry in butter. Arrange on a dish in alternate rows with slices of ham fried in butter. Serve with Bordelaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Calf's liver à la bourgeoise. FOIE DE VEAU À LA BOURGEOISE – Lard the liver with thick strips of bacon fat  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. square ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch square) and 5 to  $7\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (2 to 3 inches) long, seasoned with pepper, spices and chopped parsley. Sprinkle with brandy. Secure with string. Braise like Top rump à la bourgeoise (see BEEF).

Calf's liver à la bouguignonne. FOIE DE VEAU À LA BOURGUIGNONNE – Proceed using sliced calf's liver as described in the recipe for Entrecôte à la bourguignonne (see BEEF).

Calf's liver à la créole (Créole cookery). FOIE DE VEAU À LA CRÉOLE – Cut the liver in slices and lard with small pieces of larding bacon. Leave to marinate in a few drops of oil. Dust lightly with flour. Brown on both sides in fat and leave in the corner of the pan. In the same pan, fry lightly 1 teaspoon finely chopped onion, and add the same quantity chopped parsley, breadcrumbs and salt. Blend a little Tomato purée (see SAUCE, Brown basic sauces) with 1 tablespoon white wine and add to the pan. Remove the slices of liver, and put on each a little of the mixture in the pan. Heat a dish, put a knob of butter at the bottom, and fill with the slices of liver. Pour over the sauce, which should be thick.

Calf's liver à l'espagnole. FOIE DE VEAU À L'ESPAGNOLE – Cut in slices, season, dredge with flour and fry in butter. Arrange on a bed of Tomato fondue à la Niçoise (see FONDUE). Garnish with fried onion rings and fried parsley.

Calf's liver à l'italienne. FOIE DE VEAU À L'ITALIENNE – Cut into thin slices, season with salt and pepper, and fry briskly in sizzling butter. Serve with Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Calf's liver à la lyonnaise. FOIE DE VEAU À LA LYONNAISE – Cut into thin strips. Season, dredge with flour, fry briskly in butter, or butter and oil mixed. Fry lightly sliced onion in butter and put on top of the liver. Add a few tablespoons rich veal stock or meat jelly. Sprinkle with a dash of vinegar heated in the same pan and with chopped parsley.

Calf's liver with pilaf. FOIE DE VEAU EN PILAF – Cut the liver into pieces, season and dredge with flour. Fry briskly in butter. Serve in a dish with Rice pilaf (see PILAF). Sprinkle with a little veal stock, flavoured with Tomato purée (see SAUCE, Brown basic sauces) and boiled down to thicken it.

Calf's liver à la provençale. FOIE DE VEAU À LA PROVENÇALE – Cut in slices and proceed as given in the recipe for Calves' brains à la provençale.

Roast calf's liver. FOIE DE VEAU RÔTI – Lard the liver with lardons of bacon fat  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) wide and 5 cm. (2 inches) long. Season with pepper, spices and chopped parsley, and sprinkle with brandy. Wrap in a caul or thin sheet of salt pork, previously soaked in cold water, and tie with string.

Cook on a spit or roast in the oven (see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking time for roasts). Dilute the pan juices with white wine or clear veal stock, pour over the liver and serve.

Calf's liver on skewers. FOIE DE VEAU EN BROCHETTES – Cut the liver into pieces  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches) square and  $\frac{1}{2}$  to 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. Fry these quickly in butter to stiffen them. Put them on metal skewers, alternating with rows of lean bacon cut to the same size and lightly fried. Brush with melted butter and dip in breadcrumbs. Grill, and serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), or serve with one of the sauces specially recommended for grills, such as Diable, Piquante, Bordelaise (see SAUCE).

Mushrooms, cut into thick slices and lightly tossed in butter, can also be added to the liver.

Calf's liver soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE FOIE DE VEAU – Pound 500 g. (18 oz.) braised calf's liver in a mortar or purée in electric blender with 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) very thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Bind with 3 egg yolks and  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) double cream. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Rub through a sieve with a wooden spoon. Add 3 very stiffly beaten egg whites.

Pour into a buttered soufflé dish and bake in the oven (see SOUFFLÉ).

Calves' lungs à la bourgeoise. MOU DE VEAU À LA BOURGEOISE – Calves' lungs can be prepared à la bourgeoise (see GARNISHES). See below, Stewed calves' lungs for method.

Calves' lungs à la poulette. MOU DE VEAU À LA POULETTE – Cut in small pieces, simmer in butter in covered pan and finish cooking as described in the recipe for Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la poulette.

Stewed calves' lungs. CIVET DE MOU DE VEAU – Cut the lungs into 50 g. (2 oz.) pieces. Season with salt and pepper. Brown in butter.

When the pieces are brown, sprinkle in 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) flour. Allow the flour to cook for a few moments, stirring it. Add enough red wine (undiluted red wine or half wine and half stock) to cover the lungs. Add a good bouquet garni (q.v.) and 1 crushed clove of garlic and mix. Cook in a moderate oven with a lid on for  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours.

Remove the pieces of lung, put them into a shallow pan with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) lean diced bacon, blanched and fried in butter, 250 g. (9 oz., 3 cups) mushrooms, sliced if they are big, whole if small, 24 small fried onions. Strain the pan juices and pour over. Continue to cook in the oven for 30 minutes.

Garnish with heart-shaped croûtons of bread fried in butter.

Calf's mesentery. FRAISE DE VEAU – The fold of peritoneum which attaches part of the intestinal canal to the posterior wall of the abdomen. It is not sold in the U.S.A.

Fried calf's mesentery. FRAISE DE VEAU FRITE – Drain the mesentery cooked in the special court-bouillon given for Calf's head (see above). Dry, cut in square pieces, season the pieces, dip in lightly beaten egg and breadcrumbs and deep-fry in sizzling fat.

Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with a spiced sauce such as Diable, Piquante, etc. (see SAUCE).

Calf's mesentery à la hongroise. FRAISE DE VEAU À LA HONGROISE – Cut the mesentery into uniform pieces, fry briskly for a few minutes in butter, sprinkling them with a good pinch of paprika.

Serve with Hungarian sauce (see SAUCE).

Calf's mesentery à l'indienne. FRAISE DE VEAU À L'INDIENNE – Cut the mesentery into uniform slices, put them for a few moments into Curry sauce (see SAUCE). Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Calf's mesentery à la lyonnaise. FRAISE DE VEAU À LA LYONNAISE – Cook the mesentery as described above, cut it into thin strips and proceed as described in the recipe for Tripe à la lyonnaise (see above).

Calf's mesentery à la poulette. FRAISE DE VEAU À LA POULETTE – Cook the mesentery as above, cut into uniform pieces and proceed as described in the recipe for Tripe à la poulette (see above).

Calves' sweetbreads. RIS DE VEAU – Soak the sweetbreads in cold water until they become white. Cover with salted cold water in a saucepan, and bring slowly to the boil, stirring frequently with a wooden spoon. At the first sign of boiling, cool under running water.

Drain the sweetbreads, trim, put between two cloths under a board with a weight on top.

With a larding needle insert into the sweetbreads strips of bacon, stud with pieces of truffle, tongue, ham; or leave them as they are, according to the use for which they are intended. Cook according to the recipe chosen.

Calves' sweetbreads à l'anversoise. RIS DE VEAU À L'ANVERSOISE – Braise in white stock, serve with Anversoise garnish (see GARNISHES) and the pan juices, with veal stock added and boiled down to the desired consistency.

Attareaux of calves' sweetbreads – See ATTEREAUX.

Calves' sweetbreads à la banquière. RIS DE VEAU À LA BANQUIÈRE – Braise in white stock (see below). Serve with Banquière garnish (see GARNISHES).

Calves' sweetbreads braised in brown stock. RIS DE VEAU BRAISÉS À BRUN – Put the calves' sweetbreads, prepared as described above, into a shallow pan with butter, in which 1 tablespoon diced salt pork or bacon rinds have been browned. Add thinly sliced onions and carrots. Season, and add a bouquet garni (q.v.).

Cook gently in the covered pan, add a few tablespoons white wine, boil down to a glazed condition, and add a few tablespoons brown veal stock.

Finish cooking as described in the recipe for Calves' sweetbreads braised in white stock but glaze for a little longer.

Serve and garnish as indicated in the chosen recipe.

The liquid used for moistening sweetbreads should be very thick.

Calves' sweetbreads braised in white stock. RIS DE VEAU BRAISÉS À BLANC – Put the blanched, cooled and pressed sweetbreads (larded, studded or left plain, according to recipe) into a shallow pan in which some bacon rinds have been browned in butter, with finely sliced carrots and onions. Season and add a small bouquet garni (q.v.).

Stew under a lid on a gentle fire. Add a few tablespoons white stock. Bring to the boil, cover, cook in the oven from 35 to 45 minutes, basting frequently with the juices.

As soon as the sweetbreads are cooked, glaze them very lightly (if the recipe calls for such glazing) by exposing them for a few minutes, uncovered, to the heat of the oven, and basting them with the fat of the pan juices. Remove the sweetbreads, strain the pan juices. Serve and garnish as indicated in the recipe.

Calves' sweetbreads Clamart. RIS DE VEAU CLAMART – Braise in brown stock. Serve with Clamart garnish (or with green peas and butter) and the pan juices poured over (see GARNISHES).

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads à l'ancienne. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU À L'ANCIENNE – Cut the sweetbreads into thick slices and braise in white stock as in recipe above. Arrange on the inner edge of a large puff pastry shell. Fill the centre with a ragoût of cock's combs and cock's kidneys, truffles and mushrooms, blended with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) made with chicken stock boiled down with cream and flavoured with Madeira. Put a sliver of truffle on each escalope.

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads in breadcrumbs. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU PANÉES – Cut the escalopes as described above. Dip in lightly beaten egg and breadcrumbs.

Fry them in clarified butter (see CLARIFICATION). Serve with garnish and sauce recommended in the recipe.

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads à l'ancienne

The escalopes can be coated with mushrooms, ham, chopped parsley, truffles, grated Parmesan, mirepoix (q.v.), etc. (See GARNISHES; SAUCE.)

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads in butter. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU AU BEURRE – Blanch and cool under a press. Cut the sweetbreads into 3 or 4 escalopes each, depending on thickness. Season, dredge with flour and sauté in butter. Serve with the garnish and sauce recommended in the recipe (see GARNISHES, SAUCE).

Fried escalopes of calves' sweetbreads in allemande sauce. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU SAUTÉES À L'ALLEMANDE – Fry in butter, arrange on fried croûtons, and serve with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE).

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads au gratin. ESCALOPES DE

RIS DE VEAU AU GRATIN – Braise and slice the sweetbreads, arrange in a circle on a buttered dish, surround with sliced mushrooms, cover with Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with breadcrumbs and brown the top.

When ready to serve, sprinkle with a little lemon juice and chopped parsley.

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads à l'italienne. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU À L'ITALIENNE – Fry escalopes of braised sweetbreads in oil. Pour over Italian sauce (see SAUCE).

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads à la maréchale. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU À LA MARÉCHALE – Dip in beaten egg and breadcrumbs and fry in butter. Garnish with slivers of truffles and cooked asparagus tips dressed with butter. Sprinkle with the butter left in the pan in which the escalopes were cooked.

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads à la milanaise. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU À LA MILANAISE – Coat with a mixture of grated cheese and breadcrumbs, and finish off as described in the recipe for Veal chops à la milanaise (see VEAL).

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads Rossini. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU ROSSINI – Fry in butter, and complete as described in the recipe for Tournedos Rossini (see BEEF).

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads Saint-Germain. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU SAINT-GERMAIN – Cut a sweetbread which has been soaked, blanched and cooled under a press into four escalopes. Season with salt and pepper, dredge with flour and fry in butter.

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads served in a pastry case (Robert Carrier)

Arrange each on a little cake of Anna potatoes (see POTATOES). Top with a trickle of very thick Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) and in the centre of the sauce put a small teaspoon meat jelly. Add a little butter to the boiled-down pan juices, and spoon around the escalopes.

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads can be grilled instead of being fried in butter.

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads with truffles

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads with truffles. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU AUX TRUFFES – Cook the escalopes in butter. Arrange on croûtons of bread fried in butter and put on each escalope 3 or 4 slivers of truffle heated in butter. Garnish the middle of the dish with Noisette potatoes (see POTATOES). Add Madeira and veal stock to the pan juices, boil down, and pour over the escalopes.

Escalopes of calves' sweetbreads Villeroi. ESCALOPES DE RIS DE VEAU VILLEROI – Braise and slice the sweetbreads, coat with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE), dip in breadcrumbs and fry.

Arrange in a ring on a dish, and garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Périgueux or Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Calves' sweetbreads à la fermière. RIS DE VEAU FERMIÈRE – Braise in brown stock (see above). When half-cooked add Fermière garnish (see GARNISHES). Finish cooking together and serve with its own juices.

Calves' sweetbreads à la financière. RIS DE VEAU À LA FINANCIÈRE – Stud the sweetbreads with pieces of truffle and Pickled (scarlet) beef or ox tongue (see above). Braise in brown stock, serve with Financière garnish and Financière sauce with the pan juices added (see GARNISHES; SAUCE).

This is usually served either on fried croûtons or in a pie crust.

Grilled calves' sweetbreads. RIS DE VEAU GRILLÉS – Rinse, blanch, cool and press the sweetbreads. Brush with melted butter, season and grill under a moderate flame. Serve and garnish as indicated in the recipe.

If the sweetbreads are too big, divide them horizontally in halves before grilling them.

Grilled calves' sweetbreads with various garnishes. RIS DE VEAU GRILLÉ – Garnish with braised or buttered vegetables, purées of green or dried vegetables (the purées are usually served separately), fried mushrooms, grilled or sautéed tomatoes, spinach, braised chicory, noodles, risotto, etc. (see GARNISHES).

According to the garnish chosen, serve with Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters), or one of the sauces specially recommended for grills: Diable, Italian, Marrow, Piquant, Robert, etc. (see SAUCE).

Calves' sweetbreads à la japonaise. RIS DE VEAU À LA JAPONAISE – Braise in brown stock as in above recipe. Serve with the boiled-down pan juices and garnish with Chinese artichokes (see GARNISHES).

Calves' sweetbreads à la jardinière. RIS DE VEAU À LA JARDINIÈRE – Braise in brown stock as in above recipe; serve with Jardinière garnish (see GARNISHES) and the pan juices boiled down.

Calves' sweetbreads à la macédoine. RIS DE VEAU À LA MACÉDOINE – Braise in brown stock, as described above. Serve with garnish à la macédoine (see GARNISHES).

Calves' sweetbreads à la Nantua I. RIS DE VEAU À LA NANTUA – Braise in white stock, without larding (see above). Scoop about two-thirds out of the top part. Fill with Crayfish tail ragout à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH), substituting, if necessary, 2 small lobsters for the crayfish. Garnish the main part of the sweetbreads with this mixture.

Cover with Allemande sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with breadcrumbs, glaze lightly in the oven. Arrange on croûtons, garnish with very small patty shells filled with the crayfish garnish and slivers of truffles. Serve with Suprême sauce, to which Crayfish butter is added. (See SAUCE; BUTTER, Compound butters.)

Calves' sweetbreads à la Nantua II. RIS DE VEAU À LA NANTUA – Braise in white stock (see above). Garnish with crayfish tails, shrimps or pieces of lobster meat and slivers of truffle. Cover with Suprême sauce with the boiled-down pan juices, to which Crayfish butter has been added. (See SAUCE; BUTTER, Compound butters.)

Calves' sweetbreads à la périgourdine. RIS DE VEAU À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Braise in brown stock (see above). Garnish with truffles cut in thin slices or diced. Serve with Madeira sauce (see SAUCE) made with boiled-down pan juices.

Poached calves' sweetbreads. RIS DE VEAU POCHÉS – Prepare the sweetbreads as described at the beginning of this section and put into a saucepan. Cover with white stock. Bring to the boil, remove scum and simmer gently 35 to 40 minutes, depending on size. Drain the sweetbreads and strain the stock.

Serve and garnish as described in the recipe used.

Calves' sweetbreads poêlé. RIS DE VEAU POÊLÉS – Prepare the sweetbreads as described above. Heat 1 generous tablespoon butter in a shallow frying pan, put in the sweetbreads, season, and cook covered on gentle heat 35 to 40 minutes.

Garnish, and serve as described in the particular recipe.

Calves' sweetbreads princesse. RIS DE VEAU PRINCESSE – Poach or braise in white stock (see above). Serve with Princess garnish (see GARNISHES) and white Allemande sauce (see SAUCE) made with the boiled-down pan juices.

Calves' sweetbreads with various purées. RIS DE VEAU AUX PURÉES – Braise in brown stock (see above). Serve with purée of any of the following vegetables: artichokes, asparagus, aubergines, carrots, mushrooms, cucumbers, kidney beans, French beans, lentils, onions, green peas, soubise.

Calves' sweetbreads Régence. RIS DE VEAU RÉGENCE – Stud with slivers of truffle. Braise in white stock (see above). Serve with Régence garnish and Allemande sauce made with the concentrated pan juices (see GARNISHES, SAUCE).

Roast calves' sweetbreads. RIS DE VEAU RÔTIS – Prepare sweetbreads as described above. Lard them with strips of fat bacon, or leave plain. Season, wrap in a sheet of salt pork or in a piece of caul, and put on a spit.

Cook over brisk heat for 35 minutes. Serve and garnish as described in the particular recipe.

Soufflé of calves' sweetbreads. RIS DE VEAU SOUFFLÉ – Braise sweetbreads in white stock (see above) and hollow out. Prepare the scooped-out pieces as a soufflé (q.v.) and fill the hollowed-out parts with it. Bake in a slow oven 12 to 15 minutes. Arrange on a croûton. Serve with the garnish and sauce recommended in the recipe.

Calves' sweetbreads Talleyrand. RIS DE VEAU TALLEYRAND – Stud with truffles, braise in brown stock as described above, serve with Talleyrand sauce (see SAUCE) made with the boiled-down pan juices.

Calves' sweetbreads Toulouse or Toulousaine. RIS DE VEAU TOULOUSE, TOULOUSAINE – Poach or braise in white stock (see above). Serve with Toulouse garnish and Allemande sauce made with the boiled-down pan juices (see GARNISHES; SAUCE).

Calves' sweetbreads with various vegetables. RIS DE VEAU AUX LÉGUMES – Braise in brown stock (see above), and garnish with various buttered or braised vegetables: young carrots, mushrooms, celery, cèpes, chicory, cucumbers, endives, young beans, shoots of young hops, kidney beans, French beans, lettuce, sweet corn, morels, glazed onions, green peas and the boiled-down pan juices.

Calf's tongue. LANGUE DE VEAU – All the methods of preparation given for beef or ox tongue: braised, with various garnishes, grilled, à la diable, fried, with Italian sauce, etc., can be used for cooking calf's tongue.

Calf's tongue, cooked in a special court-bouillon (see recipe for cooking Calf's head), is always served with calf's head.

POULTRY OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS – See also GIBLETS.

Chicken livers. FOIES DE VOLAILLE – These are prepared skewered, in a pilaf or risotto, sautéed with various garnishes, etc. They are also used as garnishes themselves, and as an ingredient of various forcemeats, particularly of À gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS).

Chicken livers on skewers à l'indienne. BROCHETTES DE FOIES DE POULET À L'INDIENNE – Cut the trimmed livers into 3 or 4 pieces. Season with salt and pepper and fry in sizzling butter. Thread them on metal skewers in rows, alternating with blanched bacon cut in thick square pieces and slices of mushrooms, both lightly tossed in butter.

Dip the threaded skewers in the butter left in the pan, and roll in freshly grated breadcrumbs. Grill on a brisk fire. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE) and a Curry sauce (see SAUCE).

Duck livers. FOIES DE CANETON – These are prepared in the same way as those of other poultry: on skewers, in a pilaf, as a risotto, sautéed with various garnishes. They are also used as an ingredient in forcemeats, especially for À gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS).

OFFICIAL PASTILLES. PÂTES OFFICIALES – Substances of a firm consistency (small aromatic confections, usually hard gums or jelly jujubes), which do not stick to the fingers and are composed of gum and sugar dissolved in water, with aromatic flavourings or medicaments. They are transparent if they have been moulded and brought to the right consistency by a slow process of evaporation and dried in a drying oven, and opaque if they have been evaporated in a very high temperature and stirred with a wooden spoon. 'Sugared pastilles' are covered with a light coating of crystallised sugar, which increases their keeping quality.

OGNONNADE or OIGNONADE – Stew containing a large proportion of onions. The term also applies to finely chopped onion, melted in butter or cooked in white wine.

OIL. HUILE – Fat which is liquid at normal temperatures. There are animal and vegetable oils but vegetable oils are more common. Oil does not mix with water but can be emulsified. It is soluble in alcohol, ether, benzene, etc.

In industry, oils are divided into two categories: siccative or quick-drying oils (which thicken but do not turn rancid when exposed to the air), and non-siccative oils, which tend to turn rancid when exposed to the air, but do not thicken.

Oil in dietetics. HUILE EN DIÉTÉTIQUE – Dieticians and gastronomes both agree that vegetable oils are the best of all food fats, provided that they have not been adulterated in the process of manufacture.

The ideal oil is unrefined oil. It is made from carefully selected grain, nuts or fruit, which are husked, shelled or stoned as the case may be.

The fruits and almonds are then pressed in a hydraulic press, ideally, that is, in a cold press. Other types of presses can raise the temperature of the product to between 60° and 90°C. (140° and 194°F.).

The oil thus obtained is guaranteed 'virgin' oil. It is considered the best from a culinary point of view and is the only one which is authorised to be labelled 'guaranteed virgin oil'. The addition of 'guaranteed first cold-press extraction' indicates that no solvents have been used in its manufacture.

This does not mean that the use of refined oils is discouraged, nor that they are harmful. In fact, some oils are not edible unless they are refined. Such is the case with maize, soya and peanut oils. Even though refined, their quality is indisputable. Certainly their vitamin content may be slightly reduced, but they retain many other valuable properties. Corn oil, for example, is anticholesterol; soya oil is excellent for diabetics, since it is rich in albuminoids and deficient in carbohydrates. Nevertheless, gourmets prefer to cook with unrefined olive oil; just as the diet-conscious prefer unrefined sunflower, sesame or even pumpkin oil.

Virgin olive oil is undoubtedly the best of all food fats. It should be used frequently and preferably in its raw state (for seasoning, salads, etc.), bearing in mind, however, that the daily intake of fat ought not to exceed 50 g. (1½ oz.) for a sedentary adult; 65 g. (2¼ oz.) for a labourer or very active individual.

Oil of sweet and bitter almonds. HUILE D'AMANDES DOUCES ET AMÈRES – Extracted from almonds put in linen bags and subjected to pressure. This oil is used in confectionery.

Cotton-seed oil. HUILE DE COTON – Extracted from cotton seed. Now that this oil can be purified and rendered colourless, it is used in cookery, chiefly as an ingredient of vegetable cooking fats or oleomargarine.

Groundnut oil (peanut oil). HUILE D'ARACHIDES – A clear, non-siccative oil extracted from peanuts. It is tasteless and odourless, and used as a table oil by people who prefer an oil entirely without taste.

Olive oil. HUILE D'OLIVE – The oil par excellence, since etymologically the word 'oil' is derived from 'olive'. There are different grades of olive oil.

Pure oil is extracted cold from the finest fresh olives, which are simply crushed. This oil has a distinctive flavour, is greenish in colour and keeps fresh for a long time.

Second grade oil is extracted by pressure under heat. It is white in colour and becomes rancid more quickly when exposed to the air.

Third grade oil (lubricating oil) is extracted from windfalls or fermented or preserved olives. It is often treated with sulphate of carbon, and then neutralised and rendered odourless. This oil is intended only for industrial use, but is all too often used for adulteration.

Connoisseurs distinguish between the various 'vintages' of olive oil, and hold the oil of Provence in particularly high esteem.

Palm oil. HUILE DE PALME – This oil is solid at normal

Pounding olives to extract olive oil (after Stradanus) temperatures. It is used in cooking by Africans. In the West, it is chiefly used in the manufacture of soap.

Poppy-seed oil. HUILE D'OILLETTE – Extracted from the seeds of the black, white or purple poppy. A quick-drying oil, which is used a great deal as a table oil in northern France and in Paris because of its lack of taste. It is called huile blanche in France.

Sesame oil. HUILE DE SÉSAME – Extracted from the seeds of the sesame plant, grown in warm climates. It has a rich nutty flavour and is non-siccative. It is a staple food in India and the Orient and is growing increasingly popular in the Western world in preparing confectionery and baked foods.

Shellfish oil. HUILE DE CRUSTACES – Pound finely in a mortar the trimmings and shells of shellfish of which the flesh has been used for some other purpose. While pounding, add olive oil, equivalent in weight to the shells. Pound thoroughly with the pestle so as to obtain a smooth mixture. Rub the first through a fine sieve and then strain through coarse muslin.

This mixture is used to season mayonnaise and other cold sauces, as a seasoning in shellfish and fish salads, and in the preparation of cold hors-d'œuvre.

Walnut oil. HUILE DE NOIX – A quick-drying oil. The pure oil extracted cold from dried walnuts is used in cookery. It has a very pronounced nutty flavour, well liked by some people but disliked by those who are unaccustomed to it. Walnut oil extracted under heat is not edible.

OILLE – In the olden days the name oille was applied to a kind of potée made of various meats and vegetables.

The word, according to some authorities, comes from the Spanish olla, but it probably derives from oule, which in the south-west of France is used to describe an earthenware pot in which this dish is prepared.

There are three kinds of oilles. The first is an old French soup which, in the days of Louis XIII, was called grand-ouille and which is the ouille-en-pot mentioned in the letters of Madame de Maintenon.

The second is olla-podrida, a complicated dish of foreign origin. Spanish ambassadors served this dish as a part of diplomatic representation and official ceremonial. Protocol decreed that this soup be served for a dinner given for a Spanish grandee.

The third is oille-moderne à la française.

Here is the method of preparing this oille, according to an old recipe:

'Take a plump chicken and 2 big pigeons. Trim and clean them and stuff with a forcemeat composed of crustless bread soaked in stock, blended with 8 egg yolks, 1 white onion baked on hot coals, and 3 chopped artichoke hearts, the whole seasoned with a few leaves of chervil and a pinch of grated nutmeg. Sew up the 3 birds to keep in the forcemeat, and truss them, to prevent deformation during cooking. Take an earthenware pot, put into it 6 or 8 pounds of beef cut into thin slices, 1 veal knuckle cut into 4 pieces, 3 onions, 1 parsnip, 2 carrots, 2 turnips, 2 white leeks tied with 2 stalks of purslane, orach and Swiss chard. On this foundation put the stuffed birds. First heat on a very hot fire, then place the pot on a moderate heat. Remove scum and leave to simmer gently. After 5 hours' cooking, cut crusts of bread, toast them lightly, put into dish, moisten with stock, and simmer. Arrange the chicken and the pigeons but none of the other meat on the toasted bread, untruss the 3 birds, strain the stock to remove fat, and pour over the oille.'

OISEAUX SANS TÊTE – Name given in some regions to stuffed fillets of various meats, particularly beef.

Oiseaux sans tête 'Loose vinken' (Belgian cookery) – Beat slices of beef until very thin. Season, put a little sausage meat, or, if preferred, a small piece of lean blanched bacon, in the middle, roll up the slices and tie with string.

Fry these in butter or lard, with sliced onions. When they are browned on all sides, sprinkle with flour, moisten either with beer or stock in sufficient quantity just to cover the rolls. Cook gently, covered, and serve in the same dish.

Okra

OKRA or LADIES' FINGERS. GOMBO, GOMBAUT – Plant of the mallow family, very prolific in South America and southern United States, West Africa and India where it is cultivated and eaten as a vegetable.

There are a number of different species, most of them edible. In most cases it is the pods which are eaten, but one species, from New Guinea, has sorrel-like leaves which are eaten like sorrel.

The best-known variety with edible pods is known as okra or gumbo, or in the Near East and in France as bamia. Another variety, commonly called the royal marshmallow, whose flowers are like those of the hollyhock, bears a juicy fruit called nafé in France; it is used in the preparation of a poultice for the chest.

Okra, or ladies' fingers, are eaten fresh when they are young with tender seeds. They can also be dried and kept for a long time. They look like haricot (white) beans and should be steeped in warm water before use.

However they are to be prepared, okra should always be slightly blanched first in salt water.

Okra braised with bacon. GOMBOS BRAISÉS AU GRAS – Chop onions and cook in butter until very tender. Put them in a shallow buttered saucepan lined with slices of blanched lean bacon. Blanch and drain the okra and lay them on the onions. Cook as described in the recipe for Okra in butter.

Arrange slices of bacon in a ring on the dish in which they are to be served. Place the okra in the middle.

Okra in butter. GOMBOS AU BEURRE – Blanch and drain the okra. Put them in a buttered frying pan. Season with salt and pepper and add a few tablespoons consommé or water. Cover, and cook slowly. This is used as a garnish for eggs cooked in various ways, for braised fish, individual servings of meat, or poultry. If okra is to be served with meat or poultry, the pan juices should be added just before the end of cooking. Okra in butter may also be served as a separate vegetable.

Okra in cream. GOMBOS À LA CRÈME – Cook the okra as for Okra in butter. When they are ready, cover with a Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Let them simmer for a few minutes. Serve in a deep dish.

Okra à la Créole. GOMBOS À LA CRÉOLE – Prepare the okra as for Okra in tomato sauce, seasoning them with saffron. Serve in a dish with a border of rice, cooked with meat stock.

Fried okra. GOMBOS EN FRITOTS – Blanch the okra. Drain and dry them with a cloth. Soak them for half an hour in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Dip in frying batter (see BATTERS FOR FRYING) and deep-fry. Garnish with fried parsley and lemon.

Okra in tomato sauce. GOMBOS À LA TOMATE – Brown the okra lightly in a frying pan in which 1 large onion, chopped fine, has been slowly cooked in oil until tender. Add 1 kg. (2½ lb.) okra, and 4 peeled, seeded and coarsely chopped tomatoes. Season. Add a clove of garlic. Cover and cook slowly for 45 minutes.

Okra à la turque. GOMBOS À LA TURQUE – Use dried okra, which is called bamia. These are usually to be found in oriental food stores.

Each pod is the size of a haricot (white) bean. Steep them for at least 12 hours in cold water. Drain them. Brown 100 g. (4 oz.) lean diced mutton and 1 medium-sized chopped onion. Add 1 kg. (2½ lb.) okra and brown lightly. Moisten with a few tablespoons clear soup or water. Season. Add a pinch of cayenne pepper. Cover and cook slowly.

Olive branch with fruits

OLIVE – Native of eastern Mediterranean countries, but now grown throughout the Mediterranean regions, as well as in tropical and sub-tropical areas. It has been cultivated for hundreds of years and is recorded as grown in Egypt in the seventeenth century B.C. Olives are also grown in South Australia. They were introduced into Mexico and California in the seventeenth century by Jesuit missionaries and are now very abundant there.

The fruit is grown primarily for its oil; the Latin term (olea) applies exclusively to olive oil (see OIL).

The olives, which are hard-stoned berries, are used as condiment, seasoning and hors-d'œuvre in two forms:

Gathering olives at St Jean de Fos, Hérault
(French Government Tourist Office)

Green olives. Picked unripe, treated with hot, weak alkali (potassium or ash solution), which removes their bitter taste, and then pickled in spiced brine.

Black olives. Picked ripe, washed in several waters, put into boiling brine without the alkali treatment, then dried and pickled in oil.

The species of olives known in French as picholines are cultivated specially for the table. They are large, of elongated form and reddish-black colour.

Olives with anchovy butter. OLIVES AUX BEURRE D'ANCHOIS – Wash and dry 5 salted anchovy fillets. Pound in a mortar and add 60 g. (2½ oz., 5 tablespoons) butter. Mix, season with pepper, and rub through a sieve. Stuff stoned olives with this mixture through a paper forcing bag.

Olives for garnish – Stone the olives with a special utensil or a knife, or buy stoned olives. Blanch them, drain and rinse in cold water. Put in to simmer with the dish for which the garnish is intended.

Stuffed olives for garnish – Stone big olives, blanch for 3 minutes, rinse in cold water and drain.

Stuff with Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) mixed with finest herbes or chopped truffles, depending on the nature of the dish.

OLIVET CHEESE – See CHEESE.

OLLA-PODRIDA – Spanish soup in a grand style, somewhat similar to the hochepot flamand.

The French translation of the word is pot-pourri. This term, in the olden days, was used to describe not a soup, but a stew made of various meats.

The word olla-podrida is rarely used nowadays to describe this national soup, which is also called puchero or cocido.

The following recipe for an olla-podrida is intended for twenty guests.

Ingredients. 2 kg. (4½ lb.) beef (brisket or forequarter flank), 500 g. (18 oz.) shoulder of mutton, 500 g. (18 oz.) breast of mutton, 500 g. (18 oz.) uncooked ham, 500 g. (18 oz.) salt pork, 2 each pig's ears, feet and tails, 1 plump chicken, 2 partridges (when in season), 6 chorizos (Spanish sausages).

Vegetables: 4 medium-large carrots, 8 big leeks (white only), 2 big onions, 1 cabbage, 2 heads of lettuce, 8 potatoes, 500 g. (18 oz.) chick-peas (garbanzos), well soaked; garlic, salt, pepper and a large bouquet garni (q.v.).

Method. Put all the meat, except the chicken, partridge and chorizos, into a pit pot. Cover with plenty of cold water. Season with salt, making allowances for the salt content of some of the meats. Bring to the boil, remove scum, and add crushed garlic and a bouquet garni. Put in the chick-peas, previously well soaked in cold water. Cook for 2 hours. Add the chicken and partridges (lightly browned) together with the chorizos; cook for 30 minutes. Add the various vegetables roughly sliced, except the potatoes, which, similarly sliced, should be put into the soup only 35 minutes before serving.

Simmer gently for 2 hours. As cooking progresses, take out the meats which are done; some being more tender than others will require less time.

Arrange all the meats and the vegetables on a big dish and serve the soup in a soup tureen.

OLORON – See CHEESE.

OMELETTES – See EGGS.

OMNIBUS – In restaurant terminology (Paris restaurants particularly) this name is applied to the commis, or chef's assistant or waiter, whose work consists of passing on the orders to the kitchen and fetching the food from there. Omnibus is a kind of apprentice.

ONAGER. ONAGRE – Wild ass which in Persia is considered highly prized game. This is the wild ass of the Bible.

ONION. OIGNON – Biennial plant, native of Asia and Palestine, which has been cultivated from earliest times. This vegetable of the Liliaceae family was so greatly prized in Egypt that it was worshipped.

The bulb has many concentric coats. It contains a strong and acrid sulphuretted essence, which causes watering of the eyes and rubefaction of the skin, but disappears in the cooking process. Its taste is pungent.

Raw onion is rather indigestible and should be eaten in moderation.

Chopped onion. OIGNONS HACHÉS – Peel the onion, cut in half; cut each half into very thin slices without separating them from the root, and make 5 to 6 horizontal cuts through the whole thickness of the onion.

Now cut the onion again vertically. You will thus have minute dice which will need very little chopping to obtain finely chopped onion.

If prepared in advance, it should be tied in a corner of a cloth and placed under a cold water tap to 'revive' it. Then squeeze the onion in the cloth to drain it well, and spread it in a saucer.

Proceed in the same way if very white chopped onion is required as an accompaniment for calf's head, or any dish à la vinaigrette.

Fried onions. OIGNONS FRITS – Cut medium-sized onions into round slices about ¼ cm. (½ inch) thick. Shake out the slices into rings. Season with salt, dredge with flour and fry in smoking hot oil. Drain the onions, dry on a cloth and sprinkle with salt.

Fried onions are used as a garnish, particularly for Entrecôte à la tyrolienne (see BEEF) and Chicken sauté à la bordelaise (see CHICKEN).

Onions fried in batter. OIGNONS EN FRITOT – Cut the onions into round slices, as described above. Shake out the slices into rings. Season with salt and pepper and sprinkle with oil and lemon juice. Leave to marinate in this seasoning for 30 minutes. Shake dry.

Dip the onion rings into light batter and fry. Onions fried in this way are used as a garnish.

Glazed onions. OIGNONS GLACÉS – White: Skin button onions. Put them into a shallow pan with enough white stock almost to cover them. Add butter, allowing 125 g. (4 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) per litre (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, generous quart) of liquid. Season and simmer with a lid on. Turn the onions in their liquor, boiled down to a glaze – so that they can be coated with this glaze all over.

Brown: Heat some butter in a shallow pan and put in the onions. Season with salt and a pinch of castor sugar. Cook, covered, on a moderate heat, in such a way as to allow the onions to cook and acquire their colour at the same time.

Glazed onions for garnish. OIGNONS GLACÉS (POUR GARNITURES) – See GARNISHES.

Onions à la grecque (Hors-d'œuvre). OIGNONS À LA GRECQUE – Skin small uniform-sized onions. Blanch them, dip in cold water and drain. Cook in a court-bouillon as indicated for Artichokes à la grecque (see HORS-D'ŒUVRE). Leave to cool in the court-bouillon.

Onions à l'orientale (Hors-d'œuvre). OIGNONS À L'ORIENTALE – Blanch medium-sized onions thoroughly in salted water and remove three-quarters of the insides.

Stuff with a composition of chopped onion (using the scooped-out parts), half its weight of rice cooked in stock, Tomato fondue (see FONDUE) cooked with oil and flavoured with garlic, and sweet pimentos, stewed in butter and chopped. Season with saffron. Put the stuffed onions into an oiled dish, sprinkle with oil, bake slowly in the oven, and leave to get cold before serving.

Onion purée or soubise – See PURÉE, Onion soubise.

Onion soup. SOUPE À L'OIGNON – See various recipes for the preparation of this soup in the section SOUPS AND BROTHS.

Preparing stuffed onions (Claire)

Stuffed onions. OIGNONS FARCIS – Peel medium-sized onions, taking care not to damage the first white layer. Cut transversely, at the stalk end, at about three-quarters of their height. Blanch thoroughly in salted water, plunge into cold water and drain.

Remove the inside, leaving a thickness all round of two layers of onion skins. Chop the scooped-out part finely and mix with some pork, veal, beef or mutton forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS).

Stuff the onions with this mixture, put them into a buttered sauté pan, moisten with a few tablespoons slightly thickened brown veal stock, bring to the boil with a lid on the pan and finish cooking in the oven, basting frequently, to glaze the onions. A few moments before removing from the oven, sprinkle the surface with toasted or fresh breadcrumbs, and brown the top.

This method is applied mainly to sweet Spanish onions.

They may be served separately, as a vegetable, but are principally used as a garnish.

Stuffed onions à la catalane. OIGNONS FARCIS À LA CATALANE – Prepare the onions as described above. Stuff them with a mixture of chopped onion, rice cooked in meat stock, sweet pimentos, stewed in oil and chopped, and hard boiled eggs – the whole well blended, seasoned and spiced. Put the stuffed onions into a well-oiled, oven-proof dish. Pour in enough stock to cover the onions halfway and cook gently in the oven. A few moments before removing from the oven, sprinkle with white breadcrumbs and brown the top.

Stuffed onions à la duxelles, called à la parisienne. OIGNONS FARCIS À LA DUXELLES (À LA PARISIENNE) – Prepare the onions as described above. Stuff with a mixture of chopped onions, Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE) and chopped, lean, cooked ham. Braise in the usual manner.

Stuffed onions à l'italienne. OIGNONS FARCIS À L'ITALIENNE – Prepare the onions as described above. Stuff them with a risotto, mixed with chopped onions and chopped cooked lean ham. Braise in the usual manner. A few moments before removing from the oven, sprinkle with grated Parmesan and brown the top.

ONOPORDON – Genus of coarse thistle-like herbs of the Compositae family; also called Onopordum. One species is a wild artichoke, which grows on hillsides and roadsides.

The leaf receptacles of this plant are eaten as cultivated artichokes. The stalks are also eaten as cardoons and the roots as salsify.

ONOS. APHIE – Fish caught in the Mediterranean which is also called rockling.

Some doctors maintain that the flesh of the rockling is very indigestible. This was not so in the opinion of the ancients who, justly, greatly appreciated this fish for its very nourishing flesh. It is prepared like whiting.

OPHIDIUM. DONZELLE – Small Mediterranean fish similar to the eel. It is sometimes known in France as demoiselle and girelle (potter's wheel). This fish is used as an ingredient of bouillabaisse (q.v.).

OPOSSUM – Marsupial, reaching the size of a hare, which abounds in certain regions of North America. The flesh is edible and resembles that of rabbit.

ORACH or ORACHE. ARROCHE – Common name of several species of plants frequently cultivated in gardens, among them a type called mountain spinach, the leaves of which are eaten, cooked like spinach. In U.S.A. this is called French spinach or sea purslane.

ORANGE. Fruit of the orange tree.

The orange tree (Citrus sinensis) is an elegant tree with pleasantly scented blossom and sweet, aromatic fruit. It originated in China and Cochin-China.

The Greeks and the Romans did not know the sweet orange, but they did perhaps know the bitter orange (Citrus aurantium). The Sanscrit name of this was nagruna, from which the Italian words naranzi and d'aranzi, the Latin terms (of the Middle Ages) of arantium, arangium, and later, aurantium – which produced the French word orange – were all derived.

The crusaders brought bitter oranges from Palestine into Italy. The Arabs introduced them into Spain and the south of France, as well as into East Africa. Nice has been trading in bitter oranges since 1332.

A historic orange tree, planted in 1422, by Eléonore de Castille, the wife of Charles III, the King of Navarre, came into the possession of the Constable of Bourbon, was confiscated with all his possessions in 1552 and later graced first the gardens of Fontainebleau, under the name of Lord High Constable, then the gardens of Versailles. It died in 1858.

The sweet orange tree is classified as a native of China and the Chinese consider oranges wild fruit. Vasco de Gama brought a root of this tree to Portugal and it is from this tree, preserved in Lisbon at the home of Count de Saint-Laurent, that all the oranges of Portugal, Spain, Provence, etc., have come.

The orange tree is cultivated in all sub-tropical countries (Mediterranean Basin, North America, South America, South Africa). The production of oranges exceeds that of all other fruits.

Orange blossom and leaves. FLEURS, FEUILLES D'ORANGER – The flowers and the leaves of orange trees, particularly those of the bitter orange which are more strongly scented, are used as an infusion.

The essential oil of orange flowers is called neroli; that of the bitter orange essence de petit-grain. It is used for perfuming creams, custards, pancake batter, etc.

Orange flower water is used as an antidote for cardio-spasms, palpitations and chronic diarrhoea (1 to 3 drops on a lump of sugar several times daily).

Orange flower water. EAU DE FLEUR D'ORANGER – Orange flower water has a subtle fragrance and is used in pastry-making and confectionery.

Orange flower water is manufactured industrially.

Orangeade – Very refreshing beverage made by adding the juice of one or several oranges to sweetened water.

To improve the taste of the orangeade, a little curaçao, brandy, rum or some other spirit can be added.

This beverage should be served as cold as possible, preferably iced.

Orangeat – French name for finely chopped, candied orange peel.

Orange cake. GÂTEAU À L'ORANGE – Cake made of Genoese pastry mixture, flavoured with orange. It is usually called orangine (q.v.).

Candied orange peel. ÉCORCE D'ORANGE CONFITE – Candied orange peel is used in pastry-making and confectionery. It is prepared in the following manner.

Scrape the orange rind with a spoon to remove all the white pith lining it on the inside, blanch, and put into syrup. Leave in the syrup for 24 hours. On the following day drain, cook the syrup to 102°C. (215°F.), or until it threads from the spoon, and put in the rind. This constitutes façon in confectionery terms. Repeat this operation several times, bringing the sugar to the desired degree of crystallisation at the last boiling.

Orange compote. COMPOTE D'ORANGES – Divide the oranges into segments, remove skin and pips and put into a bowl. Pour over them boiling syrup flavoured with orange peel. Cover the bowl. Leave to steep in the juice in a cold place. Serve in a fruit dish.

Orange cream. CRÈME À L'ORANGE – Custard cream flavoured with orange peel (see CREAMS).

Orange fritters. BEIGNETS D'ORANGES – Prepare like all fruit fritters, using orange segments. (See FRITTERS, Sweet (dessert) fritters.)

Glacé orange segments. QUARTIERS D'ORANGE GLACÉS – Remove all the white pith, taking care not to damage the thin skin in which the pulp is contained. Put the orange segments in the oven for a few moments to dry.

Spike them on a cocktail stick or a needle and dip them, one by one, into sugar cooked to crack degree (see SUGAR). Leave them to cool on a wire mesh or a metal sieve. Put each segment into a little frilly paper case.

Orange salad (Claire)

It is of orange segments prepared in this manner that orange croquebouches (q.v.) are made. They are also used for decorating sweet dishes.

Orange granité. GRANITÉS GLACÉS À L'ORANGE – This is served like sherbet. (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES Granités.)

Orange ice and iced mousse. GLACÉ ET MOUSSE GLACÉE À L'ORANGE – Orange ice is made of sugar syrup flavoured with orange, in the same way as all other water ices. (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.) This ice is set in special forms, or served in glasses, or en rocher. It can also be served in scooped-out orange peel.

Orange iced mousse is prepared using orange-flavoured mousse (bombe) mixture and set in iced biscuit moulds. The mousse is often served under the name of Biscuit glacé à l'orange. It is also used as an ingredient of mixed ice bombes (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

Orange jelly. GELÉE À L'ORANGE – Jelly served as a sweet course (not to be confused with Orange jelly preserve, see JAMS AND JELLIES) which is set in special moulds or served in cups of orange peel.

Orange jelly is prepared as all other fruit jellies (see JELLY) and is usually flavoured with a few drops of Curaçao.

Orange jelly (preserve). GELÉE D'ORANGE – This is made of the juice of sweet oranges in the usual way (see JAMS AND JELLIES).

Orange liqueur – See LIQUEUR.

Orange marmalade. MARMELADE D'ORANGES – As described in recipes for other fruit marmalades (see MARMALADE).

Bitter (Seville) orange marmalade. CONFITURE (MARMELADE) DE BIGARADES – Prepare like Orange marmalade (see MARMALADE), using bitter oranges.

Orange pudding. POUDING À L'ORANGE – See PUDDINGS, Lemon, Tangerine or Orange soufflé pudding.

Orange salad. SALADE D'ORANGE – The word 'salad' is incorrectly used in this case, as no salt enters into the preparation of the dish. But it has become common usage to call the dish by this name.

Peel the oranges and remove all the pith covering them. Cut into round slices  $\frac{1}{4}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) thick and remove all pips. Arrange the slices in a fruit dish, sprinkle with castor sugar and a little Curaçao or any other liqueur such as rum, brandy or kirsch, and serve.

Bitter (Seville) orange salad. SALADE DE BIGARADES – This is served as a sweet course. Prepare, using bitter oranges, as Orange salad.

Orange soufflé. SOUFFLÉ À L'ORANGE – Using orange-flavoured soufflé mixture, prepare like any other cream soufflé (see SOUFFLÉS).

Striped oranges. ORANGES RUBANÉES – Choose big oranges and scoop out the pulp, taking care not to damage the skins. Using this pulp make a clear orange jelly. Prepare a Bavaois mixture (see BAVARIAN CREAM), keeping it as white as possible, to contrast with the red of the orange jelly.

Fill the orange-peel cups with these two compositions, putting them in alternate, well-marked layers. Do not pour any jelly or bavaois mixture into the orange skins until the previous layer is completely set. This result is achieved if the orange-peel cups are placed in a pan filled with crushed ice. Chill.

Cut each orange-peel cup into quarters and serve in a fruit dish.

Oranges in syrup (Turkish cookery). ORANGES AU SIROP – Remove the yellow part of the peel of Jaffa oranges. Remove the pith and shred the peel into thin, long julienne strips. Poach the oranges in thick, slightly caramelised syrup. Leave them in this until the syrup thickens once more.

Towards the end of cooking, put in the shredded rind.

Orange wine. VIN D'ORANGE – The word 'wine' is incorrectly applied to this beverage, which, however, is excellent and very refreshing.

Choose very ripe oranges, peel them and cut into transverse slices. Press them to extract all the juice.

For every 4 litres (3½ quarts, 4½ quarts) of this juice add 1 kg. (2½ lb.) sugar. Bottle, cork, tie with string and leave to ferment.

ORANGE MILK AGARIC. ORANGE – Common name for a mushroom of the amanita genus (see MUSHROOMS).

ORANGINE – Genoese pastry, flavoured with candied orange peel, cut transversely into three layers, sandwiched with French pastry cream (see CREAM) and iced with Fondant icing (see ICING).

Cut a Genoese cake (q.v.), flavoured with candied orange peel and baked in a flan ring with high sides, into three layers. Cover each with an orange-flavoured French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Reshape the cake. Ice with orange-flavoured Fondant icing (see ICING). Decorate with candied orange peel.

This gâteau can also be made by putting Genoese cakes, each baked in a flan ring in layer cake tins of different dimensions, one on top of another, sandwiching with orange-flavoured French pastry cream.

OREILLER DE LA BELLE AURORE (The Pillow of Belle Aurore) – In his book, la Table au pays de Brillat-Savarin, Lucien Tendret gives a recipe for this grandiose game pie, which, he says, was one of Brillat-Savarin's favourite dishes.

'At midday', wrote Tendret, 'we would sit at table, drink Côte-Grêle wine, from Brillat-Savarin's vineyard, and eat the traditional pie, square shaped and for that reason called l'Oreiller de la Belle Aurore after Brillat-Savarin's mother, Claudine-Aurore Récamier.'

Lucien Tendret's recipe for this pie was modified by Philéas Gilbert, and it is from this version that we quote below:

'In a pie in which game is the principal element the flavour of game meat must be the predominating flavour.'

'Choose a plump, tender pheasant, bone it, having first cut off the drumsticks; season with a good pinch of Spiced salt (see SALT) and put into an earthenware casserole with 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) fine Champagne brandy and the same amount of Madeira.

'Remove all sinews from a big fat goose liver, and stud it generously with quarters of fresh, peeled truffles. Season with spiced salt and put it with the pheasant. Leave to marinate for one hour, turning both the pheasant and the liver from time to time.

'Cut into big dice 350 g. (¾ lb.) wild rabbit meat, the flesh from the drumsticks, 150 g. (5 oz.) fillet of pork, 150 g. (5 oz.) round of veal and 400 g. (14 oz.) fresh fat bacon. Pound each of these ingredients separately, then put them all into the mortar, with 200 g. (7 oz.) raw goose liver and 45 g. (1½ oz., 3 tablespoons) spiced salt. Continue to pound until all the ingredients have blended into a homogeneous mixture, adding, little by little, 2 eggs beaten as for an omelette. Rub this forcemeat through a sieve into a bowl; add 100 g. (4 oz., 2 cups) finely chopped truffles and keep in a cool place. When ready to use, add the marinated pheasant and goose liver to the forcemeat.

'Bone two woodcocks. Sauté in butter 100 g. (4 oz.) chicken livers, as well as the livers of the pheasant and the woodcocks, which should be fried lightly, enough to stiffen them. Add 1 teaspoon chopped shallot, a pinch of spiced salt and 20 g. (1 scant oz., scant cup) fresh mushroom parings. Put on the fire for 2 minutes and dilute with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Madeira.

'Pound these livers in a mortar, then the woodcock meat. Combine the two ingredients, add 100 g. (4 oz.) raw goose liver, 50 g. (2 oz., 3 slices) finely shredded bacon, the trail of woodcocks, a pinch of spiced salt, 1 fresh, peeled truffle, and continue to pound in a mortar until the mixture is perfectly smooth. Rub through a sieve and keep by.

'Using 600 g. (1½ lb., 5 cups) sieved flour, 12 g. (2 scant teaspoons) salt, 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) water and 30 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, prepare semi-puff pastry, allowing 5½ turns. Roll out two-thirds of the pastry into 31-cm.-square (12-inch-square) sheets. Line the middle of this rolled-out piece of pastry with thin bacon rashers leaving a border of pastry of about 13 cm. (5 inches). Spread half of the first forcemeat on the bacon rashers in an even layer.

'Spread the pheasant on the table skin downwards, cover with half the woodcock forcemeat, put the goose liver on top and cover with the rest of the forcemeat. Bring the edges of the pheasant's skin and flesh together, so as to enclose the liver and to form a kind of slightly flattened galantine. Place this on the layer of forcemeat spread on the pastry. Cover completely with the other half of the forcemeat and on top of that lay a few thin rashers of bacon.

'Sprinkle with a pinch of spiced salt, add a small pinch of crushed bay leaf and a little powdered dry thyme.

'Roll out the rest of the pastry into a sheet a little thinner than the first piece. Pinch up the edges of the first piece of pastry all round the filling. Cover with the second piece of pastry and seal up the edges. Trim away surplus pastry, crimp the edges and decorate the sides with fancy pastry shapes, crescents, circles, lozenges, which are made to adhere by moistening the pastry slightly. Decorate the top with pastry leaves.

'Put 3 scallop-edged pieces of pastry, each of a different size, one on top of the other in the middle of the pie, and make a hole in the centre to allow steam to escape during cooking.

'Brush the pie with beaten egg. Surround it with a piece of buttered greaseproof paper fastened with string, all round; this can be removed after the pie has been in the oven for three-quarters of an hour.

'Put into a hot oven, keeping a regular heat. Allow from 30 to 32 minutes per kg. (15 to 16 minutes per pound).

'When cooked and the pastry is no more than warm, pour 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) game liquid aspic jelly through the hole in the top.

'This pie should be prepared at least 24 hours in advance.' (Philéas Gilbert.)

ORGEAT – Beverage made from an emulsion of almonds with sugar. In the past this was made from a barley decoction.

Orgeat syrup. SIROP D'ORGEAT – Beverage prepared in the olden days from a barley emulsion to which an almond decoction was added. This syrup is nowadays made only from almonds.

Ingredients. 1 kg. (2½ lb.) almonds including 30 to 40 bitter almonds, 1½ kg. (2½ lb., 5½ cups) sugar, ½ litre (1½ pints, 1½ pints) water or milk and 3 teaspoons tartaric acid (cream of Tartar).

Method. Scald the almonds for a few moments in boiling water to loosen the skin, blanch, wash and pound them into a fine paste. Squeeze out the oil, reduce the rest to a powder, mix with enough water to make it into a liquid paste, and leave to stand for 24 hours. Add the rest of the water and dissolve the tartaric acid in the emulsion.

Filter through paper. Dissolve the sugar, either cold or on a low heat, and add to the emulsion.

ORIENTALE (À L') – Term applied to the preparation of various ingredients (fish, eggs, vegetables) cooked with tomatoes, flavoured with garlic and sometimes spiced with saffron.

ORIGAN (Wild Marjoram) – Aromatic herb, possessing a pungent smell and slightly bitter taste, somewhat similar to sweet marjoram.

It is used to flavour Italian pizza.

ORLÉANAIS – This ancient province of France can be classed among the gastronomical centres of the country, by virtue of the succulent game pâtés made there.

The gastronomical resources of Orléanais are great and all the produce – agricultural and livestock – is of the highest quality.

In Perche, cattle are raised, producing meat of excellent quality. The region specialises in raising very big sheep, which are perhaps less delicate than the smaller ones raised in Sologne.

In Beauce excellent poultry is found. The best comes from Romorantin, Selles-sur-Cher, Montargis and Dreux.

Sologne produces fine game, and Sologne winged game is considered the best in France.

Loire fish (carp, pike, shad) is known for its delicate flavour, and is used in the preparation of delicious matelotes. Loire salmon is a highly prized fish, and crayfish abound in the waterways of this region.

Val-de-Loire is extremely fertile. The produce of its admirable market gardens and orchards are in great demand, especially Vendôme asparagus.

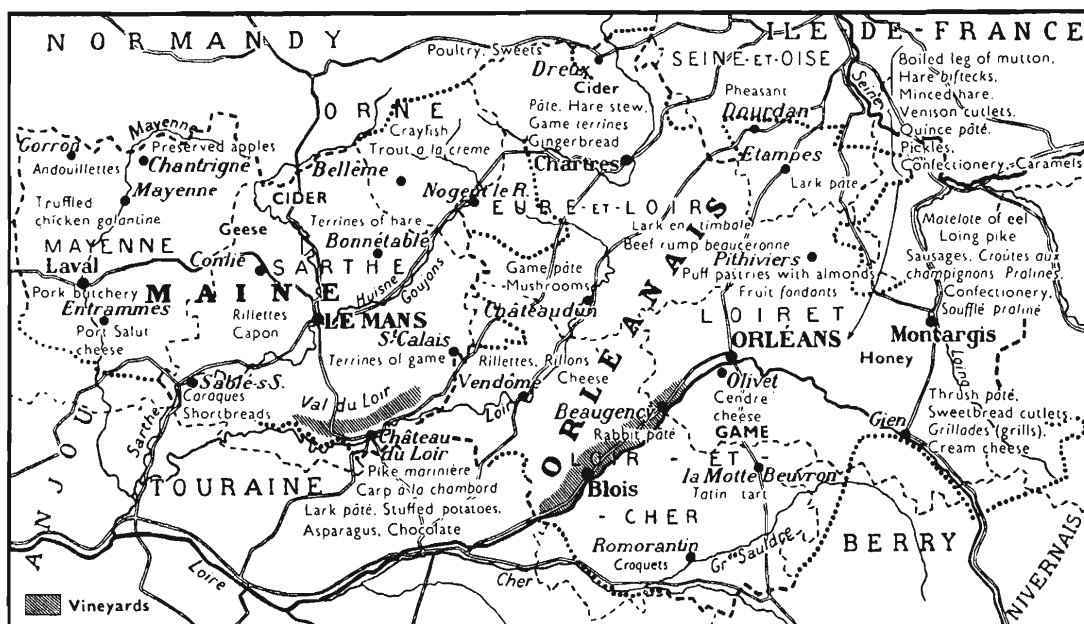

Beauce wheat produces one of the best quality flours to be found in France. At Boynes, near Pithiviers, saffron is grown. Among the food products of this region are wine vinegar, made of pure wine, which has for centuries been produced at Orléans.

Culinary specialities – Among the culinary specialities of this region is the celebrated Pithiviers lark pâté, made for 200 years to an old recipe in the shop of master-pastrycook Gringoire. There is the whole range of succulent pies made for centuries in this region.

There are many other excellent specialities, of which the following are the best known: Blois and Vendôme rillettes (potted mince); the succulent Jargeau andouilles and various other local pork products; pike à la marinère; pike in saffron (Gâtinais-grown saffron); baked carp; matelote of eel; braised beef à la beauceronne; boiled leg of Sologne mutton; calf's mesentery à la blaisoise; young rabbit à la solognote; terrine of hare; stuffed potatoes; stuffed cabbage; croûte aux champignons de Montargis.

Orléanais can be justly proud of its puff pastries with almonds, known as Pithiviers almond cakes; the 'demoiselles Tatin' tart, made in Lamotte-Beuvron; Beaugency fruit pâtés; crisp biscuit from Sully, Montoire and Romorantin; Orléans quince marmalade and a natural product, Gâtinais honey.

Wines – Orléanais and Maine have no great wines, only pleasant regional varieties much valued by gourmets. Among the A.O.C. (Appellation d'Origine Contrôlée) wines are the excellent white Jasnières wine and the white, red and

Gastronomic map of Orléanais

ONLY (À LA)

rosé wines of the Coteaux du Loir. V.D.Q.S. (Vins D'Qualité Supérieure) wines are found in all three colours: Côtes de Gen or Coteaux du Giennois, and the Orléanais wines, including the delicious pale red Gris Meunier. All these wines are drunk young and chilled.

ONLY (À LA) – Method of preparation applied mostly to fish. The fish is filleted, the fillets skinned, dipped into a light batter, fried in deep fat and accompanied by tomato sauce. (See WHITING, Whiting Only.)

ORMER. ORMEAU, ORMIER – Shellfish which are usually eaten raw or in soup as they are so small. Ormers should be beaten before being cooked.

ORTOLAN or GARDEN BUNTING – This small bird enjoys a high reputation as a table delicacy. Ortolans are found in central and southern Europe. They are plentiful in the south of France, particularly in Landes, a region which specialises in fattening them, and also in Spain, Italy and Greece.

They can be prepared in any way suitable for Garden warblers or Larks.

Gastronomes say that the only way to cook this bird is to roast it in the oven or on the spit, and insist that it should not be cooked in anything but its own fat.

Ortolans à la Brissac (Plumerey's recipe) – 'Cut a desalted ham pope's eye, from the part where the lean merges with the fat, into little squares. Thread the ortolans on thin skewers alternating with pieces of ham. Put them on a spit, back to back. Cook before a clear, lively fire, basting continuously with clarified butter.

'When nearly cooked, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and do not baste any more, to allow the birds to colour well. Take off the skewers, arrange on a dish and add small croûtons of bread to the ham. Peel 2 small baskets of mushrooms, slice them and sauté in a glass of Aix oil until they acquire a pale golden colour. Add sliced truffles and drain off all the oil. Add a piece of concentrated meat jelly about the size of a walnut, 1 tablespoon Espagno le demi-glace (see SAUCE) and a dash of lemon juice. Pour in the middle of the ortolans and serve.'

Ortolans à la Carême – 'Stuff the ortolans, boned through the back, with a little foie gras (q.v.) encrusted with a piece of truffle. Wrap each one in a piece of muslin and tie with string at both ends. Plung them into boiling port and poach for 5 minutes. Drain and unwrap.

'Arrange each in a tartlet case, baked blind and filled with a salpicon (q.v.) of lambs' sweetbreads, truffles and mushrooms, bound with chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) boiled down with the port and a little cream.'

Ortolans in cases à la royale. ORTOLANS EN CAISSE À LA ROYALE – Bone the ortolans through the back. Stuff each one with a piece of foie gras (q.v.), encrusted with a slice of truffle, seasoned with spiced salt and sprinkled with brandy.

Reshape the ortolans. Brown them quickly in butter. Put each into a frilly paper case or individual oven-proof dishes on 1 tablespoon truffles shredded into julienne (q.v.) strips. Sprinkle with melted butter, cook in the oven for 5 or 6 minutes and serve.

Cold ortolans. ORTOLANS FROIDS – All the methods of preparation given for quails, thrushes and larks are applicable to ortolans. Ortolans, however, whether served hot or cold, should be prepared in the simplest manner and roasted.

Ortolans à la landaise – This recipe was supplied by Felix Campagné, Hôtel de France, at Pau.

'Arrange the ortolans in rows in a dripping pan and stand it in a big open fireplace before a great log fire. They cook in their own melting fat.

Salt and spice them with one turn of the pepper mill.'

Ortolans à la périgourdine – Heat 2 tablespoons (3 table-spoons) butter in an earthenware casserole and put in 6 trussed ortolans. Brown them quickly in the sizzling butter. Cover with 12 thick slices of truffles. Season with salt and pepper. Cover the casserole and cook in the oven for about 8 minutes, basting the birds with 1 generous tablespoon Armagnac which has been set alight. Serve in the same casserole.

Ortolans à la provençale (Carême's recipe) – 'Twenty ortolans would be enough for an entrée. Cut 24 thick, oval-shaped croûtons. Hollow out on one side, put 1 ortolan on each croûton, then place in a sauté pan in which you have put some best olive oil, spiced with a pounded  $\frac{1}{2}$  clove of garlic. Heat the oil with the croûtons and the ortolans, then place in the oven.

'As soon as the croûtons begin to colour lightly, remove the pan from heat, drain them on a cloth to wipe off the oil, and arrange on a dish. Prepare a truffle ragoût (q.v.) and Parisian sauce (see SAUCE, Cold sauces), add to it anchovy butter made from two de-salted anchovy filets, put in 1 tablespoon cold olive oil and the juice of  $\frac{1}{2}$  lemon, pour this in the middle of the dish containing the ortolans, and serve.'

Roast ortolans. ORTOLANS RÔTIS – Truss the ortolans and wrap in vine leaves. Pack them in rows, fairly tightly, in a pan moistened with a little salted water. Roast in a very hot oven for about 5 minutes. Arrange each on a croûton fried in butter. Serve with lemon halves.

Cooked in this way, the birds don't lose their fat, which is greatly enjoyed by gastronomes.

Ortolans on skewers. BROCHETTE D'ORTOLANS – Wrap the trussed ortolans in thin rashers of fat bacon. Thread on skewers, 4 birds to a skewer, separated from each other by little croûtons, cut to look like cocks' combs and lightly fried in butter. Put the skewers into a roasting pan in which a little butter has been heated. Cook briskly in a hot oven for about 5 minutes.

Arrange the skewers on a long dish. Garnish with watercress and quarters of lemon. Pour the pan juices over the birds.

ORVAL or CLARY. SAUGE SCLARÉE, ORVALE – Variety of sage used in the manufacture of Turin Vermouth.

OSTRICH. AUTRUCHE – The flesh of this bird, forbidden to the Jews and the Moslems, was much valued by the Romans. The second Apicius dedicated a special sauce to it.

An ostrich, on the average, gives about 30 kg. (66 lb.) meat and 20 kg. (44 lb.) fat. But only the wings are sufficiently tender to be edible. Its eggs, on the other hand, are excellent.

OTTER. LOUTRE DE RIVIÈRE – Carnivorous water mammal. Its flesh, which is oily and leathery, has a very unpleasant taste.

OUBLIE (Wafer) – Furetières defines the oublie as a 'thin round wafer cooked between two irons'. According to him, him, the word oublie is a corruption of oblaye, derived from oblata, which used to define non-consecrated Eucharist host. It was called oblée or oublie.

The most famous of these wafers were made in Lyons, and it is in this town that they were first rolled into a cone. In Paris they were flat and insipid.

These wafers, made out of any pastry remnants, were once left to bakery boys – it was their profit. On winter evenings they would offer them to passers-by and sell them from door to door; they sold 7 or 8 at a time. This was called 'une main d'oublies' (a handful of wafers).

The wafer vendors cast dice with their clients for their wares. Towards the middle of the eighteenth century these vendors were called 'marchands de plaisir', because their cry was 'Voilà le plaisir'.

Here is a recipe for making the wafers.

Oublies à la parisienne (Parisian wafers) – Ingredients. 250 g. (9 oz., 2 cups) sieved cake flour, 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup, firmly packed) castor sugar, 2 eggs, 65 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) melted butter, 7 dl. (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints) milk, flavouring, orange-blossom water, lemon rind.

Method. Blend the flour, sugar, eggs and flavouring in a bowl. When the mixture has been worked into a smooth paste, add the milk, little by little, then the melted butter and, last of all, the grated lemon rind.

Heat the wafer irons and grease them evenly. Pour in 1 tablespoon of the mixture and cook on a very lively heat, turning the irons. Take out the cooked wafer, roll it into a cone round a conical piece of wood, or leave it flat.

OUILLAT or TOURRI (Béarn cookery) – 'Put 1 chopped onion to cook in fat or olive oil in an earthenware casserole. When the onion colours, add some crushed garlic and cook. Pour in hot water. Add a bouquet of thyme and parsley, season with pepper and salt, simmer for 30 minutes, then strain on to slices of bread.

'Water in which French beans, dried peas, broad beans and asparagus were cooked is sometimes used for this purpose. An egg and a dash of vinegar can be added at the moment of straining into the soup tureen. Grated Gruyère cheese can be substituted for egg. When in season, tomatoes, peeled and sliced, are put to cook with the onion.' (Simin Palay.)

OUKA (Russian cookery). OUKA DE LOTTE À L'OSEILLE – This soup is made by cooking squares of burbot in a fish stock made from perch, siguis and ierchis, then adding a julienne of parsley roots and celery (previously softened in butter). Simmer for a few minutes. A chiffonade (q.v.) of blanched, drained sorrel and the burbot's liver (previously cooked separately) is added just before serving.

Modern electric oven
(Brigaud. Phot. Photothèque E.D.F.)

OVEN. FOUR – Enclosed space which can be brought to a high temperature and into which dishes are put to cook. Cooking in the oven has been known for a very long time. The baker's oven is still today constructed almost in the same way as in ancient times (see BAKERY). A pastry oven is a little smaller and has certain special characteristics (see PÂTISSERIE). The oven for cooking is usually part of the whole cooking range or stove, though separate ovens are also sometimes used. The great progress which has been made in our time in the construction of ovens consists mainly in the use of metals, insulating materials, and double walls, which are a great economy and assure perfect regularity of heat. Further advances are the use of other combustibles than wood, such as gas, oil, steam and electricity for baker's and pastry-cooks' ovens. The most modern and practical kitchen stoves are those heated by gas or electricity. Infra-red grills and electronic ovens are another innovation.

OVERLAP. IMBRIQUER – Overlapping is sometimes used for decorative effect in the garnishing of dishes. For instance, little strips of truffle can be laid one against the other and set in jelly to decorate certain cold dishes. The effect is reminiscent of tiling.

OX. BOEUF – See also BEEF, OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Ox belly (tripe). GRAS-DOUBLE DE BOEUF – This part of the offal comes from the animal's paunch. It is generally sold cooked and can be prepared in various ways.

For all recipes for preparing ox belly, see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Ox brain. CERVELLE DE BOEUF – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Ox cheeks. JOUES DE BOEUF – Boned and trimmed ox cheeks are used for preparing pot-au-feu.

Ox cheeks can be braised or made into stews. They can also be prepared like Pickled tongue (see OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS).

Ox heart, Ox muzzle, Ox palate, Ox tail. COEUR, MUSEAU, PALAIS, QUEUE DE BOEUF – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Oxtail soup – See SOUPS AND BROTHS.

Ox (beef) tongue. LANGUE DE BOEUF – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Ox tripe. TRIPES DE BOEUF – This term applies equally to the ox belly and the tripe itself. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

OXFORD SAUCE (English cookery) – Sauce served with cold venison. The ingredients are redcurrant jelly, port, chopped shallot, grated orange and lemon rind, orange and lemon juice, mustard and powdered ginger.

OXYMEL – Syrup made from a mixture of honey and vinegar. It is obtained by cooking 1 part vinegar with 4 parts honey.

OYSTER. HUÎTRE – Bivalve mollusc usually eaten raw.

The oyster has been known to man from the earliest times, though there is no positive evidence that the Egyptians and Assyrians ate this delicious mollusc. It seems to have been unknown to the Jews. The Celts gathered oysters and fed on them abundantly. The Greeks prized oysters highly and knew how to prepare them in a number of ways. They were especially fond of Hellespont (Dardanelles) oysters. The people of Greece used oyster shells for casting their votes. The voter inscribed his choice with a sharp point on the white mother-of-pearl of the shell. The Romans were great lovers of oysters, and prized those gathered in the Lucrine Lake, as well as the oysters of Brindisi, Taranto and Circeo. It is said that they seasoned their oysters with garum (q.v.).

In France, up to the beginning of the nineteenth century, it was thought that the coastal oyster beds were inexhaustible; the Ordinance of 1681, enacted to protect mussels, left the oyster fisheries free from control. However, by 1754 it became necessary to prohibit the gathering of oysters between 1st April and 31st October each year. Similar measures had to be taken in Brittany.

In spite of these precautions, the devastations of the natural oyster beds continued in all coastal areas, until in 1840 it became necessary to call in a naval vessel at Arcachon to guard the oyster beds in the bay. But the beds, once depleted, could not be replenished by 'spontaneous generation'. The Administration of Fisheries realised that new oysters would have to be brought to the depleted beds.

Coste, the true father of the oyster industry, went to Lake Fusaro and studied the methods by which the Italians maintained a supply of excellent oysters. The man-made oyster beds of Tarento consisted of stakes tied together with ropes from which were suspended traps in the form of small faggots. The stakes and faggots were encrusted with oysters of every size. The saleable oysters were put on the market. The smaller ones were put into osier baskets to attain full growth.

On his return to France, Coste succeeded in stocking the Bay of Saint-Brieuc with oysters collected at Cancale on the English Channel and Tréguier, Côte de Nord. He replenished the Thau pool and the Bays of Toulon and Brest with British oysters. The Concarneau reserve came into being, and finally model beds were built up at Arcachon in the Cès, at Crastorbe and then at Lahillon.

The American Indians ate large quantities of oysters. Oyster fisheries and farming represent a large industry in North America today.

Nutritive value of oysters – Raw oysters contain vitamins, phosphorus salts, chalk, iron, copper and manganese in a readily assimilable form. They also contain a very high proportion of iodine and are sometimes eaten to combat anaemia. Green American oysters (different from the Marenne oyster) have been used in the treatment of anaemia with results equal to those obtained from calves' liver. Oysters contain appreciable amounts of Vitamins A, B<sub>1</sub>, B<sub>2</sub>, and C.

The risk of infectious diseases being spread through the water contained in oysters is small, provided they are bought from a conscientious supplier who has made it his business to know where they come from.

Improved methods and conditions of transport have put an end to the prejudice of avoiding oysters in 'the months without an R'. Nowadays, oysters may be safely consumed all the year round. However, since the 'months without an R' correspond to the oysters' period of reproduction, oyster farmers prefer not to deplete the beds at this time. It is better, therefore, to eat the oysters on their own home ground rather than to rely on finding them elsewhere.

Various types of oyster – There are two main types: the wild oyster, which has a very pronounced sea-water flavour, and the cultivated oyster. In the cultivation of oysters, seed-oysters are affixed to tiles and reared in areas some way out to sea. When they have reached a certain size, they are transferred to the fattening beds which are always situated at the mouth of a river, the mixture of fresh and sea water being essential to induce over-growth of the liver in which the fattening consists.

The green Marenne oysters owe their colouring to the algae and microscopic diatoma which live in the fattening pools in which they are embedded.

This colouring was an accidental discovery. During the siege of La Rochelle, some oysters were thrown into the old salt marshes. When they were fished out again, everyone was astonished at their green colour. After a good deal of hesitation, it was decided that they should be tasted and it was noticed that, far from being spoiled, they had acquired a more delicate flavour.

The name Portuguese oyster is given to a sub-variety of oyster whose proper name is gryphacea. Since it has become customary to bed and treat them like the Marenne oysters, their flavour has improved noticeably, though they are still not comparable with genuine oysters.

Oysters can be prepared in a great many different ways. They can be served as hot or cold hors-d'œuvre. They can be used in the preparation of elegant and elaborate garnishes, and excellent soups and sauces can be made from them.

OYSTERS AS COLD HORS-D'ŒUVRE. HORS-D'ŒUVRE FROIDS – Oysters must not be opened until just before serving, and are best served very cold. It is therefore ad-visible whenever possible to lay them as soon as they are opened on a bed of crushed ice. Eaten in this way, with the midday or evening meal, the oyster provides a nourishing and delicious hors-d'œuvre. Its dressing is usually simple, consisting of lemon juice or shallot vinegar with coarsely ground pepper.

Slices of buttered brown or white bread are usually served with fresh oysters.

Oysters à l'andalouse. HUÎTRES À L'ANDALOUSE – Poach 24 oysters in their own liquor. Drain them and dry in a cloth. Remove the beards and leave them to cool.

Decorate each with a little sliver of truffle, making them stick with jelly, then spoon over some half-set jelly and leave till they are quite cold.

Choose 12 deep halves of oyster shells as regular in shape as possible. Wash them thoroughly, and fill them with Tomato mousse (see TOMATO, Cold tomato mousse), doming it a little. Put 2 oysters on each shell. Mask with half-set jelly and leave to set.

Arrange the oysters in a bed of crushed ice on a dish.

Oysters in barquettes. HUÎTRES EN BARQUETTES – Poach the oysters, drain and remove the beards. Mask them with glazing mayonnaise (see SAUCE). Decorate with truffles and the roe of a spiny lobster (crayfish). Mask with jelly.

Set them in pairs in little barquettes baked blind. Garnish with Russian salad (see SALAD) a vegetable mousse or other hors-d'œuvre filling. Garnish with green curly parsley.

Oysters with caviare. HUÎTRES AU CAVIAR – Bake blind tartlet shells, using Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Fill each with 1 tablespoon fresh caviare. Place on top a single shelled oyster. Garnish with fresh parsley and serve with lemon.

The tartlets must be filled at the last moment, and the oysters opened and shelled just as they are about to be served. Oysters and caviare can also be served in well-washed oyster shells.

The gastronome's oyster. HUÎTRES DU GASTRONOME – Poach the oysters and drain them. Remove the beards and leave to cool. Coat them with a Chaud-froid sauce à la hongroise based on vegetable stock (see SAUCE). Cover with jelly.

Cook tiny artichoke hearts in a white court-bouillon (q.v.). Steep them in oil and lemon juice. Just before serving, fill these with a salad of crayfish tails and diced truffles dressed with gelatine-strengthened mayonnaise. Put an oyster on top of each one.

Arrange the artichoke hearts on a dish and garnish with chopped jelly.

Marinated oysters. HUÎTRES MARINÉES – Shell the oysters.

Put them in a marinade of white wine, oil and lemon juice, well seasoned with herbs and prepared in advance.

Bring to the boil and remove them at once from the stove. Pour the stock and oysters into a bowl. Leave until they are quite cold. Serve them in hors-d'œuvre dishes with the marinade.

OYSTERS AS HOT HORS-D'ŒUVRE. HORS-D'ŒUVRE CHAUDS – There are a great many recipes for cooked oysters, the best known of which are given in this section.

However oysters are to be prepared, they must always first be poached in their own liquor.

To poach oysters. Open the oysters. Prise them away from the shells without tearing the flesh. Put them in a pan, with their own liquor strained through muslin. Bring to the boil. As soon as the liquid begins to bubble, remove the pan from the stove.

Cooked oysters are often served in the deep halves of their shells. If they are to be glazed or sprinkled with cheese and browned, the shells must be embedded in a layer of salt spread on a baking sheet, to keep them upright.

Glazing and browning must be accomplished very quickly, to prevent the oysters from becoming tough.

Oysters à l'américaine I. HUÎTRES À L'AMÉRICAIN – Put the oysters in the deep halves of their shells. Lay them on a baking sheet lined with cooking salt. Squeeze a few drops of lemon juice on each oyster and season with a touch of cayenne pepper.

Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs. Pour over them melted butter seasoned with lemon, salt and pepper. Brown in a very hot oven. Garnish with fresh parsley.

Oysters à l'américaine II. HUÎTRES À L'AMÉRICAIN – Put Oysters à la florentine (Robert Carrier)

the oysters back in the deep halves of their shells. Cover with American sauce (see SAUCE, Compound white sauces) with the concentrated liquor of the oysters added. Garnish with fresh parsley.

Attereaux of oysters – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.

Oyster barquettes à l'américaine. BARQUETTES D'HUÎTRES

À L'AMÉRICAIN – Bake barquettes blind. Fill each with 1 tablespoon American sauce (see SAUCE). Place on top 2 or 3 poached, drained and trimmed oysters. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs, and season with a touch of cayenne pepper.

Oyster barquettes à la Nantua. BARQUETTES D'HUÎTRES À LA NANTUA – Fill cooked barquettes with 1 tablespoon of ragoût of Crayfish tails à la Nantua (see RAGOÛT). Put 2 poached oysters on top of each. Coat with Nantua sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated cheese, and brown quickly in the oven.

Oyster barquettes à la normande. BARQUETTES D'HUÎTRES À LA NORMANDE – Fill barquettes with a salpicon (q.v.) of crayfish tails, mussels and mushrooms blended in a Normande sauce (see SAUCE). Put 2 poached oysters on top of each. Mask with Normande sauce. Put a strip of truffle on top of each barquette.

Oyster bouchées. BOUCHÉES AUX HUÎTRES – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Patties with oysters.

Oyster coquilles – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Scallop shells of oysters.

Oysters à la crème. HUÎTRES GRATINÉES À LA CRÈME – Detach the oysters from the shell, remove beards, and put 1 tablespoon cream in each shell with the oyster. Sprinkle with a little melted butter and Parmesan cheese and grill under a fairly high flame.

Oyster croquettes – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Croquettes.

Deville oysters – See below, Grilled oysters.

Oysters à la florentine. HUÎTRES À LA FLORENTINE – Fill the deep halves of the oyster shells with a layer of spinach cooked in butter. Put an oyster on top of each. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with cheese and brown in the oven.

Fried oysters. HUÎTRES FRITES – Poach, drain and remove the beards from the oysters. Dip in milk and flour them, shaking off any excess flour. Deep-fry in boiling fat. Drain and dry on a cloth. Season with fine salt. Garnish with lemon and fried parsley.

Fried oysters Colbert. HUÎTRES FRITES COLBERT – Poach, drain and remove the beards of the oysters. Dip them in egg and breadcrumbs and fry them. Garnish with lemon and fried parsley. Serve with Maitre d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Oyster fritot – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Fritot.

Oyster fritters à la normande. BEIGNETS D'HUÎTRES À LA NORMANDE – Poach the oysters and leave them to cool in their own liquor. Drain and wipe them with a cloth. Dip them one by one in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE) adding chopped truffles and vegetables. Dip them in batter (see BATTERS FOR FRYING) and deep-fry in very hot fat until the fritters have swelled to their full extent and are a golden colour.

Drain them on a cloth. Season with dry fine salt.

Oysters for garnishing. HUÎTRES POUR GARNITURES – Shell the oysters and poach them in their own liquor.

Remove the pan from the heat as soon as the liquor begins to boil. Drain and trim the oysters and proceed according to the recipe used.

If the oysters are not to be used at once, keep them hot in their own strained liquor. Care must be taken to see that they do not boil. The oyster liquor is strained and added to the sauce.

Oysters au gratin I. HUÎTRES AU GRATIN – Fill the deep halves of oyster shells with a layer of duxelles (q.v.). Put an oyster on each shell and a mushroom on top of each oyster. Cover with Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE), with the oyster liquor added. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs. Pour on melted butter seasoned with salt and pepper and a few drops of lemon. Brown in a very hot oven. After they have been taken out of the oven, squeeze a few drops of lemon juice over them. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and garnish with fresh parsley.

Oysters au gratin II. HUÎTRES AU GRATIN – Proceed as for Oysters à l'américaine I.

Grilled oysters, also called devilled oysters. HUÎTRES GRILLÉES, À LA DIABLE – Poach, drain and remove the beards of the oysters. Thread them on little metal skewers.

Pour melted butter, seasoned with lemon, salt and pepper, over the oysters. Dip them in fine breadcrumbs seasoned with a little cayenne pepper. Grill under a low flame. Serve in the same way as Oysters on skewers (see below). Serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Oysters à la Mornay. HUÎTRES À LA MORNAY – Line the deep halves of the oyster shells with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE). Put an oyster on top of each. Cover with the same sauce. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan, pour on melted butter and brown in a very hot oven. Garnish with fresh parsley.

Oysters à la polonaise. HUÎTRES À LA POLONAISE – Put the oysters back in the deep halves of their shells. Sprinkle with chopped yolks of hard-boiled egg and chopped parsley and warm in the oven. Just before serving, pour 1 tablespoon browned butter with fried breadcrumbs over each oyster.

Oysters on skewers. BROCHETTES D'HUÎTRES – Thread poached oysters on little metal skewers with slices of cooked mushroom in between. Pour melted butter seasoned with lemon juice and pepper over them. Dip them in fine breadcrumbs and grill under a low heat.

When serving, surround with a border of fluted half-slices of lemon and garnish with parsley.

Sprinkle with melted Maitre d'hôtel butter, or with one of the sauces especially suitable for grilled fish (see BUTTER, Compound butters; SAUCE).

Oyster soufflés. HUÎTRES SOUFFLÉES – Pound 12 raw oysters in a mortar. Mix in, little by little, the white of 1 raw egg.

Rub through a sieve. Put the mixture in a bowl and stir it on ice. Add 30 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) Fine pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS) and about 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) thick fresh cream.

Put 2 teaspoons of the mixture in each oyster shell. Put a poached and drained oyster on top of this forcemeat and cover with a layer of soufflé mixture. Smooth, doming it slightly.

Bake in the oven for 6 to 8 minutes.

Oyster soup. SOUPE AUX HUÎTRES – Shell 24 oysters and put them in a pan. Pour over their strained liquor. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine.

Bring to the boil, then turn the flame very low. Skim. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) cream, 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) crushed biscuit crackers, and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter cut into tiny fragments. Season. Spice with a touch of cayenne pepper. Mix. Pour the soup into a tureen and serve with crushed crackers.

Oysters Villeroi. BROCHETTES D'HUÎTRES VILLEROI – Poach and drain the oysters. Cover them with Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE). Thread them on little metal skewers and fry them just before serving. Drain and garnish with parsley.

OYSTER CATCHER. HUÎTRIER – A wader, sometimes called sea-magpie. The flesh of the young bird is quite delicate. It is prepared in the same way as plover.

OYSTER PLANT – See SALSIFY.

PACARET – This word, which is a variation of Pascarete, is used to define wine of the Jerez district of Spain. The name of the wine is derived from the name of the small town of Paxarete or Pajarete in the Jerez sherry-producing district. The grapes gathered there yield very sweet juice, which is treated with brandy to prevent it fermenting, and results in the Paxarete or Pajarete liqueur wine. This used to be much in vogue in England in the eighteenth century.

PAËLLA – Spanish rice dish which has gained international fame. Different regions of Spain vary the paëlla according to the local produce. Vegetables, meat, chicken and sausage, characterise the paëllas of interior Spain; Valencia and Barcelona specialise in combining sea foods with chicken and vegetables in the rice base. The name of the dish comes from the iron frying pan with two handles, the paëlla, in which the rice is cooked and served.

The following is a Valencian paëlla: Heat 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) oil in a deep iron frying pan with 2 cloves of garlic, finely chopped. Add 2 chopped onions, and 2 diced sweet red peppers. Add to this 1 small chicken cut in small pieces, and 225 g. (8 oz.) pork, ham or beefsteak cut in small dice. Brown the meat and add 4 peeled and quartered small tomatoes. Stir in 675 g. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) rice and cook gently for 5 minutes. Cover with well-seasoned stock to which a pinch of saffron has been added. Add 175 g. (6 oz.) shelled peas, 175 g. (6 oz.) fresh kidney beans and several artichoke hearts. Cook 10 minutes more and then add 450 g. (1 lb.) cod, whiting or hake cut in small pieces, 1 lobster or crayfish, also cut in small pieces, 225 g. (8 oz.) shrimps or prawns, 6 dl. (1 pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) thoroughly washed mussels or small clams. Boil hard for 5 minutes and simmer for 15 more, adding more stock as necessary. The rice should be moist but not soupy. When the rice is cooked, place the paëlla in the oven for a few minutes. Chopped parsley is added before serving. Small inkfish or squid and garlic sausages may also be added to the above ingredients. The inkfish are usually fried in the oil before adding the rice, and the garlic added after the meat has been browned.

PAILLARD – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

PAILLASSE – French name for a charcoal fire which was used in kitchens of long ago to prepare dishes which needed prolonged cooking, especially braised meat.

Meat was also grilled on glowing embers in a bucket-shaped brick brazier.

The term paillasse is also used to describe the layer of glowing charcoal embers spread out on the grill.

PAINS – French term for dishes, served cold or hot, made of a forcemeat placed in a special mould and poached in a bain-marie, in the case of a dish being served hot; and set in a mould, lined with aspic jelly and chilled when served cold.

This type of entrée has been replaced by mousses, which are also prepared hot or cold. The various ingredients used for the forcemeats are, as indicated in individual recipes, liver (foie gras), game meat (winged and ground game), poultry, vegetables, as well as fish and shellfish. For recipes see LOAVES.

PALADRU – See CHEESE.

PALAIS-ROYAL (Café du) – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

PALATE OF OX. PALAIS DE BOEUF – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Ox palate.

PALE ALE – Light English beer.

PALETS DE DAMES – Little dry petit fours (fancy biscuits).

Into a hot bowl put 250 g. (9 oz., 1 generous cup) fine sugar, and 6 eggs. Stir well with a wooden spoon. When the mixture is frothy add 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, still stirring.

Put on a buttered baking sheet, lightly sprinkled with flour. Bake in a hot oven. Glaze with water icing (confectioners' frosting).

Palets de dames (which are sometimes written palais) can be flavoured with vanilla, lemon or orange rind or any other flavouring.

PALETTE KNIFE. AMASETTE – Small utensil used in pastry-making for picking up dough.

PALMAE. PALMER – Name of a large family of trees, of which the fruit (dates), the nuts (coconut), the terminal shoots (cabbage palm), the pith or interior of the stem (sago), and the sap (palm wine) are used in cookery.

Palm hearts. COEURS DE PALMER – The hearts or tender shoots of palms are cooked like asparagus. Peel the stalks completely and boil in salted water. Serve hot with various white sauces or cold à la vinaigrette.

Palm hearts can also be prepared in various other ways: à la crème, stewed in butter, in gravy, au gratin, with Parmesan cheese, à la polonaise, and in general in any way suitable for asparagus (q.v.) or cardoon (q.v.).

PALM OIL. HUILE DE PALME – See OIL.

PALMIER (Pâtisserie) – Paris speciality, prepared in the following way.

How to fold the pastry to make palmiers (Larousse)

How to cut and shape palmiers (A l'Alsacienne. Phot. Larousse)

Roll out puff pastry 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick on a table sprinkled with icing sugar instead of flour. Cut into strips 30 cm. (12 inches) wide. Bring the two ends of these strips together towards the centre and fold in two, lengthways.

Leave to settle for a few moments, then cut them across into pieces 6 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick.

Put these on a baking sheet, placing them at a little distance from each other. Bake in a hot oven.

PALM NUT. NOIX DE PALME – Fruit of the elaeis of New Guinea, varying from the size of a hazel nut to that of a walnut. Palm oil is extracted from these nuts.

PALOURDE – Name given to a kind of squash (vegetable marrow) in some parts of France.

PALUS – Vineyards planted on the alluvial tracts of land in the Bordeaux region and on the estates bordering the banks of the Garonne, Dordogne and Gironde.

PANADA. PANADE – This name applies to two different preparations: one a kind of soup, made of bread, stock, milk or water and butter; the other a paste of flour, bread, toast (biscottes) or various starches, used for binding meat or fish forcemeats.

Bread panada. PANADE AU PAIN – Soak 250 g. (9 oz.) white crustless bread in 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) boiled milk until the milk is absorbed. Blend the mixture, stirring all the time, as described in the recipe for Flour panada (see below).

Leave until quite cold, as for flour panada.

Uses. For fish forcemeats.

Flour panada for forcemeat. PANADE POUR FARCE À LA FARINE – Pour 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) water into a saucepan, add 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon salt. Pour in 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) sieved flour. Mix well on the heat, stirring with a wooden spoon. Cook until the mixture thickens, leaving the sides of the pan clean.

Put into a buttered dish, spread in an even layer, cover with a piece of buttered paper and leave until quite cold.

Uses. For all quenelle forcemeats.

Frangipane panada. PANADE À LA FRANGIPANE – Mix 125 g. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  oz., generous cup) sieved flour and 4 egg yolks in a pan, stirring with a wooden spoon. Add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) melted butter,  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon salt, pepper and a pinch of grated nutmeg.

Stirring all the time, dilute the mixture with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) boiling milk, poured in little by little. Cook for 5 or 6 minutes, beating vigorously with a whisk.

Leave until cold, as above.

Uses. For chicken and fish forcemeats.

Potato panada. PANADE À LA POMME DE TERRE – Season 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) milk with  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon salt, a pinch of pepper and a touch of grated nutmeg. Boil until it has been reduced by one-sixth, then add 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter and 250 g. (9 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) thinly slice boiled potatoes. Cook gently for 15 minutes. Blend well to obtain a smooth mixture.

Use this panada, while it is still warm, for white meat quenelles.

Rice panada. PANADE AU RIZ – Cook 200 g. (7 oz., 1 cup) Italian rice in 6 dl. (1 pint,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cups) white stock to which 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter have been added, allowing about 50 minutes' cooking time in the oven. Blend well to obtain a smooth mixture.

Leave until cold, as described in the recipe for Flour panada.

Uses. For various forcemeats.

PANCAKES – See CRÊPES.

PANCHO-VILA (Chilean cookery) – Small white haricot beans sautéed with onion and garlic, then bound with tomato sauce. The mixture is spooned into individual ramekins, topped with a poached egg, sprinkled with Parmesan cheese, and glazed.

PANETIÈRE – Small sideboard dresser, usually carved with lattice work, in which, in some regions of France, bread is kept.

PANETIÈRE – Method of preparation applied to various articles (lambs' sweetbreads, chicken livers, cocks' combs and kidneys, etc.), or to small birds. After cooking they are placed in croustades (q.v.), and baked golden in the oven.

PANETONE (Italian cake) – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 125 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) brown sugar, 3 eggs and 4 egg yolks, 25 g. (1 oz.) dried or compressed yeast, 3 teaspoons salt, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) fine sugar, 25 g. (1 oz., 3 tablespoons) sultanas, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) candied citron peel cut in small dice.

Method. Spread the flour in a circle on the table, make a well in the middle and put in the salt, eggs, sugar, in a little warm water, 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) butter (just softened), and yeast. Mix these ingredients, adding a few tablespoons warm water, little by little. Then incorporate the flour, a little at a time. When the moistening is complete, stir the dough vigorously until it becomes elastic and does not stick to the hands.

Spread it in a layer and sprinkle with castor (fine) sugar. Add 2 egg yolks and the rest of the butter softened to a paste. Scatter sultanas and candied citron peel on top and blend in all the ingredients, kneading the dough for a few minutes. Roll into a ball, put in a buttered and floured baking tin, and stand in a warm place to allow the dough to ferment until little air bubbles appear on the surface. Dilute the 2 remaining egg yolks with a few teaspoons of water, and mix with a pinch of flour and the same amount of icing (confectioner's) sugar.

Brush the top liberally with this mixture. Mark the top with a crossways incision and sprinkle with sugar. Bake in the oven in moderate heat.

PANICUM, PANIC – Old Latin name for one of the millets. Panicum miliaceum is milled into flour in Italy, and used to prepare a kind of meal, with milk or stock.

PANIER – Wickerwork basket with a handle. In cookery and pastry-making various substances are fashioned to look like wickerwork baskets.

Potato paniers. PANIERS EN POMMES DE TERRE – These baskets, used for arranging various fried objects, are made from potatoes cut in thin ribbons and fried in deep fat.

Pulled sugar paniers. PANIERS EN SUCRE TIRÉ – These baskets are used for arranging petits fours, especially iced petits fours. Bombes, mousses and iced cakes are also served in them.

They are often extremely decorative pieces, carried out by pastry-cooks and confectioners who are artists in this work.

PANNEQUETS – Pancakes spread with cream, jam, marmalade or any other mixture, then rolled or folded in four, sprinkled with icing sugar or crushed macaroons, and glazed in the oven or under a grill. (For the preparation of pancake batter, see CRÊPE.)

These pancakes can also be spread with savoury mixtures, especially cream cheese. They are served as a hot hors-d'œuvre or as a small entrée. (See also HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

SAVOURY PANNEQUETS FOR HORS-D'ŒUVRE AND SOUP. PANNEQUETS DE HORS-D'ŒUVRE:

Anchovy pannequets. PANNEQUETS AUX ANCHOIS – Spread the pancakes made of unsweetened batter with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) mixed with Anchovy purée (see PURÉE) and desalted anchovy fillets cut in large dice. Fold the pancakes in four. Put into a buttered, ovenproof dish, sprinkle with breadcrumbs fried in butter and drained, and put in a very hot oven or under a grill for a few moments.

Pannequets with crayfish, called à la Nantua. PANNEQUETS AUX ÉCREVISSES, À LA NANTUA – As Pannequets with shrimps (see below), using Nantua sauce (see SAUCE) and diced crayfish tails.

These pancakes can be sprinkled with grated Parmesan, instead of fried breadcrumbs, and browned in the oven or under a grill.

Pannequets Mornay – Spread the pancakes with a salpicon (q.v.) of ham and mushroom bound with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Roll them. Arrange on a buttered fireproof dish, cover with a thin layer of Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter, and brown the top.

Pannequets à la reine – Spread the pancakes with Chicken purée (see PURÉE) mixed with diced truffles. Roll the pancakes and cut each roll into 2 lozenges. Cover each with 1 tablespoon chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) cooked with cream. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and brown the top.

Pannequets with shrimps, or other shellfish. PANNEQUETS AUX CREVETTES – Prepare as Anchovy pannequets, spreading the pancakes with shrimp or other shellfish purée mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of the chopped tails of the shellfish.

Pannequets with soft roes. PANNEQUETS AUX LAITANCES – Spread the pancakes with a salpicon (q.v.) of soft roes and mushrooms bound with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE), based on a fish stock and cooked with cream. Roll the pancakes, sprinkle with grated Parmesan and melted butter, and brown the top.

Pannequets for soup garnish. PANNEQUETS (GARNITURES DE POTAGE) – Make some very thin pancakes (see CRÊPE). Fill each with a basic forcemeat or add dry diced mushrooms (duxelles), chopped truffles, or cooked diced vegetables (mirepoix). Cover with another pancake. Cut rounds with a fluted cutter. Add to boiling clear soup.

Pannequets la Varenne – Spread the pancakes with duxelles (q.v.) mixed with a fine salpicon (q.v.) of ham, bound with a thick Velouté sauce (see SAUCE). Sprinkle with grated Parmesan and brown the top.

SWEET PANNEQUETS. PANNEQUETS D'ENTREMETS:

Pannequets with apples – See APPLE, Crêpes stuffed with apples.

Apricot pannequets. PANNEQUETS AUX ABRICOTS – Spread the pancakes with a mixture composed of diced apricots bound with French pastry cream (see CREAMS) and mixed with the blanched, chopped apricot kernels, sprinkled with kirsch. Roll up the pancakes, cut each into 2 lozenges, put on a baking sheet, sprinkle with icing sugar, glaze in a very hot oven and serve.

Pannequets à la cévenole – Spread the pancakes with Chestnut purée (see CHESTNUTS) mixed with fresh double cream and flavoured with kirsch. Finish off as described above.

Pannequets à la créole – Spread the pancakes with a salpicon (q.v.) of pineapple bound with rum-flavoured French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Finish off as described above.

Pannequet with various fruit. PANNEQUETS AUX FRUITS DIVERS – Prepare using salpicon (q.v.) of fruit (bananas, cherries, strawberries, peaches, pears, apples, etc., cooked in syrup) bound with French pastry cream or Frangipane (see CREAMS). Finish off as described above.

Jam pannequets. PANNEQUETS AUX CONFITURES – Spread the pancakes with jam. Roll or fold in four and finish off as described above.

Pannequets with pineapple – See PINEAPPLE.

Pannequets au praliné – Spread the pancakes with an almond or hazelnut praline bound with French pastry cream (see CREAMS), flavoured with kirsch or other liqueur. Roll up the pancakes, cut each roll into 2 lozenges, put on a baking sheet, sprinkle with finely crushed macaroons (q.v.) and glaze.

PANOUFLE – Term for the under part of the top of sirloin.

PANTIN (petit) – Small oval or rectangular-shaped patty, usually filled with a fine pork forcemeat, which may be truffled.

PANTLER. PANETIER – Officer in charge of the pantry and master dispenser of the bread.

The Lord Pantler (le grand panetier) was the officer of the French royal household who had jurisdiction over all the bakers of the capital and all the officers of the pantry (Royal and common). Under Louis XIV his function consisted of 'placing the King's knife and fork on ceremonial occasions,

Arms of the Lord Pantler assisted by esquire-trenchants, and to taste the dishes set before the King.'

In England in the Middle Ages the pantler had to put the salt cellar and the knives on the table. The pantler's office was amalgamated with the office of master dispenser of the bread, and was allowed as hereditary to the Beauchamps of Elmley, afterwards Earls of Warwick.

In France the pantler had under his command 24 gentlemen servants each quarter (with a token surety of 700 pounds in 1661). His coat of arms bore the insignia of his office – the nef (a vessel-shaped gold or silver receptacle in which the King's salt cellar, cutlery, etc. were kept) and the cadenas.

PANURE – French culinary term for the coating of bread-crumbs adhering to some substance either by means of melted butter or beaten egg.

It should be a fine golden colour and slightly crusty after frying in deep fat or butter.

PAPAYA or PAWPAW. PAPAYER – Tree found extensively in the Malay Archipelago, India, Cochin-China, Réunion Island, Tahiti, Senegal, Gabon, Guinea and Martinique. Its fruit is sweet and easily digestible because of its enzyme content.

PAPILLOTE – Term which applies to paper frills used for putting on end bones of lamb, mutton, and veal cutlets, suprêmes of chicken, cutlet-shaped croquettes, etc.

It is also used to describe small joints, principally chop end of veal, which, after preliminary cooking, are enclosed in a sheet of oiled white paper cut in the shape of a heart and put in the oven, where the paper swells under the action of heat. (See VEAL, Veal chops en papillotes.)

It once described sweets wrapped in gold or silver paper. These used to be very popular but are no longer in vogue. They were pulled like crackers and there was a piece of paper inside with the inscription of a poem or motto.

PAPRIKA – Hungarian name for sweet pepper. Powder made from this pepper is red in colour, has a slightly pungent taste and is used as a condiment. It is also used as seasoning for goulasch, the Hungarian national dish.

PARADISE NUTS. MANIGUETTE, GRAINE DE PARADIS – Aromatic and acrid condiment much used in former times. Nowadays, it is sometimes used to adulterate pepper.

PARASOL MUSHROOM. COULEMELLE – Edible mushroom with a ring but without a volva. The best of all, but the most fragile, in the opinion of the connoisseurs.

PARFAIT – The term parfait once applied only to an iced sweet based on a coffee cream. It is now applied to an ice made of a single flavour mousse (bombe) mixture set in plain moulds. (See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.)

On the menu one can describe light ices made of variously flavoured mixtures as parfaits.

PARFAIT-AMOUR – Liqueur flavoured with grated citron peel, coriander and cinnamon. Also called citron liqueur.

PARIS (Café de) – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

PARIS-BREST (Pâtisserie) – Name of a Paris speciality, a pastry made of chou paste, forced through a forcing bag in the form of a crown, sprinkled with grated or chopped almonds.

After baking, the pastry is slit open and filled with Praline butter cream (see CREAMS, Butter creams).

PARISIEN GÂTEAU – This gâteau used to be called polonais.

Paris-Brest
(Maison Desmeuzes. Phot. Larousse)

Prepare a fine sponge mixture with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar, 65 g. (2½ oz., 10 tablespoons) sieved flour, 65 g. (2½ oz., 10 tablespoons) cornflour (cornstarch), 7 egg yolks, 7 stiffly beaten egg whites, a pinch of salt, and vanilla or lemon peel, using the method described under DOUGH, Fine sponge cake batter.

Butter a round tin with a hole in the middle, sprinkle with sugar and cornflour and fill up to three-quarters with the cake mixture. Bake in a slow oven for 40 minutes.

Lift the cake out of the tin and leave to cool on a wire tray or a sieve. Cut into layers 1 cm. (½ inch) thick. Spread each layer with a coating of Frangipane pastry cream (see CREAMS) and sandwich together, reshaping the cake. Put a piece of sponge cake on the bottom of the hollow part and fill the centre with a salpicon (q.v.) of crystallised fruit bound with frangipane or very thick apricot jam. Cover with another piece of sponge cake. Coat the top and the sides with diluted apricot jam and cover with Italian meringue (see MIXTURES, Italian meringue mixture). Pipe meringue decorations on top. Sprinkle with icing sugar. Bake in a slow oven, to make the meringue golden. Serve with kirsch-flavoured apricot jam.

This gâteau can also be made by sandwiching several layers of sponge cake, spread with frangipane cream and sprinkled with diced crystallised fruit. The gâteau is then covered with Italian meringue and baked golden in the oven.

PARISIENNE (À LA) – Name of a garnish, the elements of which vary, but should always include Potatoes à la parisienne (see POTATOES).

This garnish is served with meat and poultry.

PARMENTIER (Antoine-Auguste) – Economist and agromist, born in 1737, died in 1817, who wrote numerous works on food and to whom we owe the popularisation of potatoes, scorned as food in France before his time.

PARMENTIER – Method of preparing various dishes, which always include potatoes in one form or another. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Purée of potato soup Parmentier; BEEF, Boiled beef sautéed Parmentier, Miroton Parmentier; CHICKEN, Chicken Parmentier.)

PARMENTIÈRE – Name sometimes given to potato.

PARMESAN – Italian cheese made in the Parma region. See also CHEESE.

Parmesan straws. PAILLETES AU PARMESAN – Give 10 turns to puff pastry. Work it on a table sprinkled with very finely grated Parmesan; add a little cayenne pepper.

As soon as all the cheese has been absorbed by the paste, roll it out into strips 13 to 15 cm. (5 to 6 inches) long. Cut these into small sticks ½ cm. (¼ inch) wide. Put these on a buttered baking tray and cook in a very hot oven. Serve piping hot.

PARMESANE (À LA)

Cheshire and Gruyère cheese straws are prepared in the same way as Parmesan straws. In France Parmesan straws are also called Paillettes dorées. Cheese straws are often served as a garnish for clear soups.

PARMESANE (À LA) – Term applied to a great many preparations which invariably include Parmesan cheese, usually grated.

PARR. TOCAN – Name for very young salmon, less than one year old.

PARSLEY. PERSIL – Hardy biennial plant used as a flavouring in cookery.

There are four edible varieties of parsley: common parsley, curly-leaved parsley, Neapolitan or celery-leaved parsley and Hamburg or turnip-rooted parsley, the fleshy roots of which are eaten like celeriac.

In cookery parsley is used in several forms: in sprigs, mixed with other aromatic plants, especially thyme and bay leaf (see BOUQUET GARNI); chopped or rough-chopped, in which case it is added to the dish at the end of cooking; sometimes sprinkled on the dish ready for serving; en pluches, i.e. picked off leaf by leaf, blanched in salted boiling water, drained and added to the dishes at the end of cooking, or fried quickly in butter and poured over dishes served with browned butter; and fried in deep fat until crisp and used as a garnish for fried dishes.

Fresh parsley, picked over and washed, is also used for garnishing cold dishes. Parsley roots are used as a condiment.

Chopped parsley. Pick over, wash and dry the parsley. Put together in a tight bunch; cut it first, then chop as quickly as possible, either with a kitchen knife or with a multiple-blade chopping knife.

When parsley is not to be used immediately after chopping, to keep it fresh for several hours, tie it in a corner of a cloth and leave it under a running tap. Dry it well by twisting the cloth. Pour into a small receptacle.

Fried parsley. Wash the parsley well, dry it and pick off in little sprigs. Put it in a wire basket, and plunge into a pan of sizzling fat. Keep in the fat for a few moments; dry on a cloth.

Parsley en pluches. Wash the parsley and pick off leaf by leaf, then blanch or fry, as required.

Rough-chopped parsley. Pick over and wash the parsley and chop it coarsely.

PARSNIP, PANAI – Root used as condiment, particularly for flavouring stocks. It can also be served as a vegetable.

Parsnips are prepared in any way suitable for carrots (q.v.) and kohlrabi (q.v.).

PARTRIDGE. PERDREAU, PERDRIX – Name covering several genera of the game bird family Phasianidae, all of which are edible.

The partridge is rather indigestible and can become toxic if hung. Sufferers from hepatitis, rheumatism, gout and dyspepsia are advised not to eat it.

The name 'partridge' applies to both sexes of adult birds after the hunting season opens. As the saying goes:

'On the feast day of Saint Rémi (1st. October)

All partridges have the same gender.'

Partridges were introduced into France in the fifteenth century by René, King of Naples, who brought several pairs from the island of Scio for breeding in Provence.

The principal species found in France is the common or grey partridge, brownish grey in colour, speckled with white on the back, ash coloured on the breast. The male has a brown spot.

Red-legged partridge is bigger than the common species; it is brownish, slightly darker on the back, with a grey breast, red below, and with a pure white neck and red bill and legs. It is found mainly in the South of France.

Rock partridge

The rock partridge and the snow partridge or lagopus are also found in France.

The American partridge can now be obtained frozen in France.

Ballottine of partridge with various garnishes. BALLOTTINE DE PERDREAU – Bone the partridge and stuff with foie gras, truffles and game forcemeat, as described in the recipe for Ballottine of pheasant (see PHEASANT).

Wrap in a piece of muslin and tie with string. Cook for 45 minutes in a little Madeira-flavoured braising liquor, made from the bones and scraps pared off the partridge, a veal knuckle and the usual aromatic vegetables.

Drain the ballottine, unwrap and glaze in the oven. Arrange on a serving dish and surround with the garnish recommended. Boil down the braising liquor, strain and pour over the ballottine.

Ballottines of partridges can be served with all the garnishes recommended for roasted or braised pheasant, woodcock and other winged game.

Jellied ballottine of partridge. BALLOTTINE DE PERDREAU À LA GELÉE – Prepare like Ballottine of partridge. Cook the ballottine in Madeira-flavoured liquid game jelly.

When cooked, drain and cool under a light press. Arrange in a terrine or glass dish. Clarify the jelly in the usual way (see ASPIC, Clarification of aspic jelly) and pour over the ballottine.

Partridges with cabbage. PERDRIX AUX CHOUX – Cook half a big cabbage, 1 piece of lean bacon, 1 uncooked sausage, 2 big carrots and the usual aromatics in a casserole.

Lard the breasts of 2 partridges and put them in the casserole. After about 30 minutes, remove the bacon and sausage and continue cooking the partridges and cabbage for a further 1½ hours.

Arrange the partridges on the cabbage in a deep dish or timbale. Garnish with rectangles of the bacon, and the sausage and carrots cut in slices. Baste with a few tablespoons of good stock.

The partridges can also be served in a buttered timbale lined with the pieces of bacon and sliced carrot and sausage, garnished with a layer of cabbage. Put the partridges on top, cover with the rest of the cabbage, and heat in the oven for 5 minutes.

Turn out the timbale onto a dish and pour over a few tablespoons of Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) based on a game fumet (q.v.), or brown veal stock.

The same method of preparation can be applied to pheasant, hazel grouse or guinea fowl.

Casserole of partridge (or partridge en cocotte). PERDREAU EN CASSEROLE, EN COCOTTE - Prepare like Casserole of pheasant (see PHEASANT) making allowances for cooking time according to the size of the partridge.

Partridge à la catalane, en pistache (Languedoc cookery). PERDREAU À LA CATALANE, EN PISTACHE - Stuff the partridge with a forcemeat made of its chopped liver, freshly grated breadcrumbs, chopped lean ham, parsley and garlic, bound with an egg. Truss the bird, bard it, season, and put in an earthenware casserole in which 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter or goose fat has been heated. When the partridge acquires a golden colour, remove it from the casserole. Put 1 large tablespoon diced raw ham into the casserole. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour and cook for a few moments. Moisten with  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (3 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) dry white wine and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) stock. Add 1 tablespoon tomato purée, a bouquet garni of parsley, thyme, bay leaf and a small piece of orange peel. Cook for 10 minutes. Remove the ham and the bouquet garni and strain the sauce. Return the partridge to the casserole, add the ham and bouquet garni, and pour in the sauce. Bring to the boil, cover, and simmer for 10 minutes. Add 12 cloves of garlic, previously boiled in salted water and drained. Finish cooking together, simmering gently, for 35 minutes. Remove the bouquet garni and serve the partridge in the casserole.

In western Languedoc this sauce is usually thickened with breadcrumbs.

Partridge in chambertin. PERDREAU AU CHAMBERTIN - Stuff the partridge, and prepare as described in the recipe for Woodcock au chambertin (see WOODCOCK).

Partridge à la champenoise. PERDREAU À LA CHAMPENOISE - Stuff the partridge with foie gras cut in large dice, seasoned and sprinkled with 1 tablespoon brandy. Truss as for an entrée and pot roast in butter. When three-quarters done, add 8 peeled mushroom caps and finish cooking together. Drain the partridge, untruss, and arrange on a croûton fried in butter and spread with a layer of À gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS). Dilute the pan juices with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) champagne, add some fresh cream, simmer until the sauce thickens, blend in some butter, strain, add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) fresh truffles shredded into a fine julienne (q.v.) and lightly tossed in butter, and pour over the partridge.

Chartreuse of partridge. CHARTREUSE DE PERDRIX - Pluck, draw and singe 2 partridges. Truss them and lard the breast with thin lardoons of bacon fat. Brush them with butter, season, and brown on all sides in a hot oven for 7 or 8 minutes.

Put some bacon rinds and sliced carrots and onions on the bottom of a deep casserole. Add a layer of blanched, well-drained and seasoned cabbage.

Place the partridges on the cabbage. Add 200 g. (7 oz.) lean scalded bacon, 1 small uncooked sausage, 1 medium-sized carrot cut into quarters, 1 onion studded with a clove, and a bouquet garni (q.v.). Cover the ingredients with another layer of cabbage and moisten with the pan juices diluted with 8 dl. (scant  $1\frac{1}{2}$  pints, scant 2 pints) stock.

Bring to the boil on the stove, then put in the oven and cook with a lid on from  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours to 2 hours, depending on how tender the birds are. Before the cooking is complete, remove the bacon and sausage, to avoid their being overcooked.

Preparation of the chartreuse. Chartreuse of partridge (or any other game) is a variation of partridge with cabbage, differing mainly in its more decorative and elaborate arrangement, which requires great attention to detail. In addition to the lean bacon and sausage cooked with the cabbage, add the following ingredients, which should be prepared separately while the partridges are cooking: 2 young turnips, cut with a small vegetable tube into sticks  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches) long, cooked in stock, 3 carrots, cut and cooked in a similar way, 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) French beans cooked in salted water, drained and dressed with butter, 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) fresh garden peas, cooked in salted water and well drained, and 75 g. (3 oz., 6 tablespoons) Quenelle forcemeat II (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS).

Remove the partridge, untruss and cut into quarters. Drain the cabbage. Remove the vegetables, bouquet garni and bacon rinds and keep all these ingredients hot.

Butter a big charlotte mould and decorate it with little turnip and carrot sticks, placing them in rows, separated from each other by a row of peas.

Cover these vegetables with a thin layer of Quenelle forcemeat II (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS), to solidify the vegetable garnish. Line the mould with well-drained and pressed-out cabbage.

Place the pieces of partridge, and the lean bacon trimmed and cut into small rectangles, on the cabbage. Cover with the rest of the pressed cabbage. Cover the whole with a layer of forcemeat and smooth the forcemeat evenly.

Put the filled mould into a pan half-filled with boiling water. Cook in a slow oven for about 40 minutes. Let the chartreuse stand for 5 minutes before turning it out. Garnish the top with a skinned sausage, cut in slices and arranged in a circle.

Chartreuse of partridge poult. PERDREAU EN CHARTREUSE - Young partridges, which are roasted, jointed and arranged in a mould or a timbale, on a foundation of braised cabbage, cooked with old partridges to give them more flavour. See Chartreuse of partridge above.

Chaud-froid of partridge. CHAUD-FROID DE PERDREAU - Roast the partridge in the oven, allow to cool and joint. Skin the pieces and trim them. Cover with Brown chaud-froid sauce based on concentrated game stock (see SAUCE). Decorate with pieces of truffle, hard-boiled egg whites and pickled tongue, and glaze with jelly.

Arrange in a dish on a foundation of well-set jelly. Cover completely with semi-liquid jelly flavoured with Madeira or other liqueur wine. Chill well on ice.

The chaud-froid of partridge can also be served on a buttered croûton, as described in the recipe for Chaud-froid of chicken (see CHICKEN), and garnished with chopped jelly.

Partridge à la chipolata. PERDREAU À LA CHIPOLATA - Truss the partridge as for an entrée and cook in a casserole. When it is nearly cooked, untruss and replace in the casserole. Add Chipolata garnish (see GARNISHES) and simmer gently.

After being cooked the partridge can also be placed on a croûton fried in butter, and surrounded with chipolata garnish. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira and concentrated game stock and pour over the partridge.

Partridge à la crapaudine. PERDREAU À LA CRAPAUDINE - Prepare as Pigeon à la crapaudine (see PIGEON).

Serve with Diable sauce to which some game fumet (q.v.) has been added, or with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Partridge à la crème. PERDREAU À LA CRÈME - Prepare as Pheasant en cocotte with cream (see PHEASANT), making allowances for cooking time, depending on size of bird.

Crépinette of partridge Brillat-Savarin. PERDREAU EN CRÉPINE BRILLAT-SAVARIN - Split the partridge along the back, as for grilled chicken. Remove all the small bones. Flatten slightly and season with salt and spices. Fry the partridge quickly in butter to stiffen the flesh.

Coat on both sides with foie gras forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS, Forcemeat for pâté de foie gras) mixed with truffles, and wrap in a piece of pig's caul or pounded fat pork. Arrange on a foundation of Lentil purée (see PURÉE). Simmer a few tablespoons of game fumet (q.v.) with Madeira, strain, add a little butter and pour around the dish.

Crêpinette of partridge à la périgourdine. PERDREAU EN CRÊPINE À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Truss the partridge as for an entrée, slit open the back and remove the small bones, leaving only the drumsticks and the bones of the pinions. Flatten the partridge slightly, season with salt and pepper, and fry it quickly in butter to stiffen the flesh.

Put the bird on a layer of Fine pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of foie gras and truffles, and enlivened with 1 tablespoon flaming brandy. Spread on a piece of pig's caul or pounded pork fat big enough to enclose the partridge and forcemeat. Put a layer of forcemeat over the partridge and cover it well. Wrap the whole in the piece of pig's caul.

Brush with melted butter, dip in freshly ground bread-crumbs and cook on a low grill until both sides are golden. Arrange in a dish, and surround with a ragoût of truffles and mushrooms in Madeira-flavoured game fumet (q.v.).

Jellied partridge en daube. PERDREAU EN DAUBE À LA GELÉE – See PHEASANT, Daube of pheasant in jelly.

Estouffade of partridge. PERDREAU EN ESTOUFFADE – Truss the partridge as for an entrée, season it, brush with butter and roast until golden in the oven. Put into an oval-shaped earthenware cocotte (q.v.), on a foundation of a mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables, well softened in butter. Cover the partridge with a layer of the same mirepoix. Sprinkle with melted butter and add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flaming brandy. Put the lid on and seal it with flour-and-water paste. Cook in a hot oven for 25 to 30 minutes. Serve in the cocotte.

Estouffade of partridge à la cévenole. PERDREAU EN ESTOUFFADE À LA CÉVENOLE – Stuff the partridge with Fine pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) mixed with one-third of its weight of a forcemeat à gratin (see FORCEMEATS) 1 tablespoon chopped truffles. Truss as for an entrée. Season with salt and pepper and brown quickly in butter, to stiffen it. Untruss, put into an earthenware casserole, surround with a garnish of 12 chestnuts three-quarters cooked in concentrated veal stock, 6 mushrooms tossed in butter and 6 scalded lardoons (q.v.) of breast of pork, fried in butter. Moisten with 4 tablespoons (5 tablespoons) concentrated game stock or concentrated brown veal stock flavoured with Madeira. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon flaming brandy. Put the lid on the casserole and seal it with flour-and-water paste. Cook in a hot oven from 40 to 45 minutes. Serve in the casserole.

Partridge à la financière. PERDREAU À LA FINANCIÈRE – Cook the partridge in butter in an earthenware cocotte. When it is nearly cooked, untruss it and put it back in the cocotte and garnish à la financière (see GARNISHES) bound with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) Madeira-flavoured game stock.

Finish cooking in a slow oven. Serve in the same cocotte.

Instead of cooking and serving the partridge in a cocotte, it can be pot-roasted in butter, placed on a croûton fried in butter and spread with an à gratin forcemeat (q.v.), and surrounded with the various elements of financière garnish disposed in separate groups.

Partridge à la forestière. PERDREAU À LA FORESTIÈRE – Stuff the partridge with forcemeat à gratin (see FORCEMEATS). Truss it as for an entrée and fry it in butter, to stiffen it. Take out of the casserole and put 1 teaspoon of chopped shallot into the casserole. Replace the partridge and surround it with 150 g. (5 oz.) sliced mushrooms, 12 lean lardoons scalded and tossed in butter, and 4 to 6 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) diced potato, tossed in butter. Finish cooking together in the oven with a lid on.

When the partridge is cooked, untruss it, baste with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) of game fumet (q.v.) and serve in the casserole.

Galantine of partridge. GALANTINE DE PERDREAU – Bone the partridge and prepare as described in the recipe for Balloitine of pheasant (see PHEASANT).

Grilled partridge à la diable. PERDREAU GRILLÉ À LA DIABLE – Split the partridge down th the back, open it out and flatten slightly. Brush with melted butter, season with salt and pepper, and cook under a moderate grill, 4 minutes each side. Brush with melted butter and dip in freshly grated bread-crumbs.

Put the partridge back under the grill and finish grilling gently, basting frequently with melted butter.

To serve, decorate with watercress and a lemon quarter at each end. Garnish the edges of the dish with fluted-edged half-slices of lemon, and thin slices of gherkins. Serve with Diable sauce (see SAUCE).

Grilled partridges can also be served with Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Partridge à la mirepoix. PERDREAU À LA MIREPOIX – Stuff the partridge with A gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), mixed with diced truffles. Truss it as for an entrée. Fry quickly in butter to stiffen it. Remove trussing and cover with a fine mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables, gently cooked in butter and mixed with a little Madeira. Wrap the partridge in a piece of pig's caul or pork fat. Cook it in very little Madeira-flavoured braising stock.

Drain the partridge, unwrap and arrange on a croûton fried in butter, spread with more forcemeat and browned under a grill. Add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Madeira and 1 tablespoon flaming brandy to the braising liquor; boil down, strain, and pour over the partridge.

Partridge à la moldave (Moldavian style). PERDREAU À LA MOLDAVE – Split open the partridge, flatten it, season, dip in egg and black breadcrumbs mixed with a little powdered coriander. Sauté in clarified butter until both sides are golden.

Arrange on a cake made of baked potato pulp mixed with a brunoise (q.v.) of carrot, celery and mushrooms. Bind this mixture with yolks of egg, shape it into a pancake, dredge with flour and fry in butter.

Pour a ring of concentrated veal stock around the partridge. Squeeze a few drops of lemon juice on the bird and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Partridge Monselet. PERDREAU MONSELET – Stuff the partridge with foie gras and truffles cut in large dice. Truss it, season, and cook in butter in an earthenware cocotte. When half-cooked, add 2 artichoke hearts, sliced and tossed in butter, and 1 medium-sized truffle, cut in thick slices. Moisten with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) game fumet (q.v.) and 1 tablespoon flaming brandy. Cover the cocotte and leave in the oven for 3 minutes. Serve in the cocotte.

Partridge mousses and mousselines. MOUSSES, MOUSSELINES DE PERDREAU – Using boned partridge prepare like Cold quail mousse (see QUAIL).

Partridge à la normande. PERDREAU À LA NORMANDE – Truss the partridge as for an entrée and brown it in butter. Put into an earthenware casserole on a foundation of peeled, sliced cooking apples, tossed in butter. Surround the partridge with similar slices. Moisten with fresh cream. Cook in a hot oven under a lid.

Serve in the casserole.

Cold partridge pâté. PÂTÉ FROID DE PERDREAU – Prepare like Pheasant pâté (see PHEASANT).

Hot partridge pâté. PÂTÉ CHAUD DE PERDREAU – Using boned partridges, forcemeat à gratin, foie gras and truffles, prepare like Hot woodcock pâté (see WOODCOCK).

Partridge à la Périgueux. PERDREAU À LA PÉRIGUEUX – Stuff the partridge with truffles as described below in the recipe for Truffled partridge (roast). Cook it gently in butter in an earthenware casserole. When three-quarters cooked, add 20 thick slices of truffles, seasoned with salt, pepper and a pinch of spices. Sprinkle with 1½ dl. (¼ pint, ¾ cup) Madeira-flavoured game fumet (q.v.) and 1 tablespoons flaming brandy. Serve in the casserole.

Roast partridge. PERDREAU RÔTI – Cover the partridge with a vine leaf, then with a thin rasher of bacon enclosing the breast completely, and tie with string.

Roast the bird in the oven (see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking time for roasts).

Untruss, arrange the partridge on a croûton of bread fried in butter or in the fat collected in the dripping pan, spread with a layer of À gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and brown lightly on top.

Garnish with watercress and half a lemon. Serve with the pan juices left from cooking the bird.

Salmis of partridge. SALMIS DE PERDREAU – Using roast partridge, underdone and cut into joints, prepare as Salmis of woodcock (see WOODCOCK).

Partridge sautéed with truffles. PERDREAU SAUTÉ AUX TRUFFES – Choose a plump partridge and cut up into joints, as in the case of Sautéed chicken (see CHICKEN). Season with salt and pepper and sauté briskly in butter. Remove the joints, and arrange them on a croûton, fried in butter, spread with a forcemeat à gratin (see FORCEMEATS) and browned on top.

Toss 12 thick slices of truffles quickly in butter and season with salt and pepper. Cook the truffles very lightly, taking care not to let them dry up. Put them on the partridge. Dilute the pan juices with Madeira, add a few tablespoons brown Game stock (see STOCK), boil down, blend in a little butter, strain, and pour over the partridge.

Partridge soufflé. SOUFFLÉ DE PERDREAU – Old partridges are prepared in this way. The soufflé mixture is made from partridge meat in the same manner as Woodcock soufflé (see WOODCOCK).

Partridge à la Souvarof. PERDREAU À LA SOUVAROF – Stuff the partridge with foie gras and truffles cut in large dice, seasoned with salt and pepper and sprinkled with a dash of brandy. Truss as for an entrée. Brown quickly in butter, to stiffen it. Put into an oval-shaped earthenware cocotte. Surround with 3 truffles cut in large pieces, or whole truffles, peeled and seasoned.

Moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant ½ cup) Madeira-flavoured game fumet (q.v.), to which the pan juices, diluted with Madeira, have been added. Sprinkle with a dash of brandy.

Cover the cocotte with its lid and seal with flour-and-water paste. Cook the partridge in a hot oven for 40 minutes. Serve in the cocotte.

Stuffed partridge in aspic. PERDREAU FARCIS À LA GELÉE – Slit the partridges along the back, bone, open them out and season with diced spiced salt. Stuff each with truffled Game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), placing in the middle a piece of foie gras, encrusted with 1 peeled truffle, seasoned with spiced salt and sprinkled with brandy.

Reshape the partridges. Truss them, wrap each one in a thin slice of bacon fat or a piece of pig's caul. Cook in a little Madeira-flavoured aspic jelly (see JELLY, Game jelly stock) made from the scraps trimmed off the birds, a veal knuckle and fresh bacon rinds.

When the partridges are cooked, drain them, unwrap, untruss and dry on a cloth. Put into an oval-shaped terrine and leave until cold. Then cover completely with the jelly, clarified in the usual manner (see ASPIC, Clarification of aspic jelly).

Chill thoroughly before serving.

Stuffed partridges in aspic (tinned or canned). PERDREAU FARCIS À LA GELÉE – Partly bone the partridges. Stuff them with a big piece of raw fat goose liver, encrusted with one or two medium-sized truffles which have been peeled, seasoned with spiced salt and sprinkled with brandy, and enclosed in a layer of truffled Fine pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Truss the partridges as for an entrée, wrap each in a thin rasher of bacon fat or a piece of pig's caul. Put them into a sauté pan on a foundation of chopped bacon rinds, carrots and onions and the giblets of the birds, all lightly tossed in butter. Moisten with Madeira or any other liqueur wine. Cook gently, with the lid on, for 10 minutes. Moisten with good strong jelly prepared from calves' feet and fresh bacon rinds (but no gelatine). Cook in the oven for 30 to 35 minutes.

Drain the partridges, remove barding and trussing string, and dry the birds on a cloth. Put each into a tin-plated can, breast downwards, and leave to cool. When quite cold, cover them with the jelly in which they were cooked, clarified in the usual manner (see ASPIC, Clarification of aspic jelly). Leave until quite cold. Solder the tins (cans). Boil them in water for 45 minutes, making sure that during this operation boiling does not cease for a single moment.

Take the tins out of the water, put them on the table in such a way that the partridges are breast downwards. Cool. Mark the tin on the top to make sure it is breast side up when you open it.

Terrine of partridge. TERRINE DE PERDREAU – Prepared like Potted pheasant (see PHEASANT).

Timbale of partridge. TIMBALE DE PERDREAU – Prepared like Timbale of woodcock (see WOODCOCK).

Truffled partridge (roast). PERDREAU TRUFFÉ (RÔTI) – Partly bone a plump partridge, opening it on the back, near the neck (the bird having been cleaned from the front). Through this opening stuff it with 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) pork fat studded with pieces of truffle, and 75 g. (3 oz.) truffles cut in quarters. Truss the partridge and wrap it in a thin slice of bacon fat. Roast in a slow oven (see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts).

Serve either with the diluted pan juices or with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE) to which the diluted pan juices have been added.

The truffling of game or poultry should be done at least 24 hours in advance. This will render the flesh more flavour-some. When the bird is being cooked on a spit, cover it completely with a piece of buttered greaseproof paper; remove a few minutes before taking the bird off the spit, so as to brown it.

Truffled partridge, like all other truffled winged game, can also be cooked in a casserole or a cocotte.

Partridge à la vigneronne. PERDREAU À LA VIGNERONNE – Truss the partridge as for an entrée and cook it in butter in a casserole or a cocotte. Untruss it, and put into the casserole 24 peeled and seeded grapes. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ¼ cup) game fumet (q.v.) and 1 tablespoon flaming brandy. Simmer with a lid on for 5 minutes. Serve in the casserole in which it was cooked.

PASKHA (Russian cookery) – This dish used to be an essential part of the Easter table in Russia.

Press out any excess moisture from 2 kg. (4½ lb.) cream (U.S. cottage) cheese, blend with 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) sour cream, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 1 teaspoon salt, 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) vanilla flavoured sugar, 2 tablespoons (3 table-spoons) finely grated lemon rind, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped almonds and 5 tablespoons (6 tablespoons) seedless raisins. When the mixture is very smooth, place in a muslin-lined receptacle (traditionally pyramid shaped) which will allow the mixture to drain. Put a weight on top and leave in a cool place.

PASSARELLE

Turn out on a dessert dish and decorate with sultanas, chopped pistachio nuts or crystallised fruit.

PASSARELLE – Dried Muscatel grapes, prepared in the Frontignan region as well as in Smyrna and Damascus.

The process of turning these grapes into raisins is called passerillage or passarillage.

Passe-Crassane pears (Wide World)

PASSE-CRASSANE – Variety of very fragrant winter pear.

PASSE-POMME – Name given to three varieties of apple which ripen in August: white, red and Jerusalem.

PASSE-TOUT-GRAIN or PASSE-TOUS-GRAINS – Name of a red Burgundy wine made partly from black Pinot grapes and partly from Gamay grapes (the proportion of Pinot being at least one third).

PASSION FRUIT. BARBADINE – Edible fruit of the passion-flower tree or giant granadilla, used as a dessert.

PASTA – See ITALIAN PASTA, MACARONI, NOODLES, RAVIOLI, SPAGHETTI.

PASTA FROLLA – Italian name for a very delicate sweet pastry similar to Savarin pastry (see DOUGH, Savarin dough).

PASTEURISATION – Process of heating a liquid up to a temperature between 70° and 80°C. (158° and 176°F.), then cooling quickly. Pasteurisation arrests development of certain bacteria and increases the duration for which the product can be kept, without assuring complete sterilisation. Unfortunately, pasteurisation often removes valuable nutrients.

PASTILLAGE – Paste which was much in demand in the past for decorating big pastry and confectionery creations, as well as pillars and ornaments used for dressing big cakes. This paste was made from icing sugar, powdered starch, gum tragacanth and water. Pastillage is not much used nowadays.

PASTILLE – Small round confection made from dissolved sugar and water, poured hot, drop by drop, onto a cold marble slab. The sugar is usually flavoured with various aromatic flavourings. Pastilles are manufactured almost entirely in factories.

General rules for making pastilles. 1. Choose very white, well grained and odourless sugar. Pound it into powder, sift through a horsehair sieve, and remove the finest part by means of a silk sieve. This powder, being too fine, has the drawback of making the pastilles too heavy and compact, and less shiny.

2. Dilute the sugar with aromatic essence and a quantity of water. Use a small silver pan, if possible, as it will not communicate any unpleasant taste to the mixture.

3. Watch the sugar carefully while it is on the heat, stirring from time to time when the mixture begins to simmer.

4. Make sure that the mixture is not too liquid for pouring. Should that be the case, take the mixture off the heat and stir with a wooden spoon until it acquires the desired consistency.

5. Make sure that the flavourings used, which are juices pressed out from various kinds of fruit, are fresh.

Coffee pastilles. PASTILLES AU CAFÉ – Prepare 1½ kg. (3 lb.) finest quality sugar as described above. Bring 25 g. (1 oz., ½ cup) ground coffee to the boil several times in ½ litre (scant pint, 2½ cups) water. Pour through a straining bag in which a piece of gelatine has been put, to make the grounds settle.

When the liquid is cold, strain and use for diluting the sugar, then proceed to pour the pastilles.

Jasmine pastilles. PASTILLES AU JASMIN – Pound and sift 1½ kg. (4 lb.) sugar, put it into a china bowl and dilute with 50 g. (2 oz.) jasmine essence, adding water until it forms a paste. Roll, and make into pastilles.

Mignonette, jonquil and tuberose pastilles are made in a similar manner, using the same quantity of the essence of these flowers per pound of sugar.

Orange-blossom pastilles. PASTILLES À LA FLEUR D'ORANGER – Pound 1½ kg. (4 lb.) white superfine sugar in a marble mortar. Sift it through a horsehair or silk sieve to extract the finest part, which can be kept for other uses.

Put the rest of the sugar into a china bowl and add double orange-blossom water, stirring with a wooden spoon. Pour a little water on at a time and stir continuously until the paste is quite firm. If too much water has been added, and the paste has become too liquid, thicken it with a little powdered sugar (some of which should be kept in reserve for such an emergency).

To test whether the composition has reached the desired degree, take a little of it on a wooden spoon, hold it up, and if it becomes detached it is just right.

Put 100 g. (4 oz.) of this paste into a small pan with a long spout. Heat on the stove until it becomes liquid, stirring with the wooden spoon. Remove from the heat when the paste is just about to boil. Stirring it a few more times, begin to pour onto tin-plated metal sheets in the following manner:

Hold the pan with your left hand and, tipping the spout very gently, pour the paste with the aid of a knitting needle fixed in a small piece of wood, held in your right hand. Move the saucepan and the needle in such a way as to make the paste drop on the metal sheet in the shape of little buttons (which are called pastilles).

There are special droppers for shaping boiled sugar drops.

Take care to space the pastilles properly when pouring them, and to pour the same quantity of paste for all of them. Leave for 1 hour, take the pastilles off the metal sheets, put them on a paper-covered sieve, and leave in a warm place for a day. Longer than that would diminish the aroma.

Rose pastilles. PASTILLES À LA ROSE – ‘Pound 1½ kg. (4 lb.) best sugar in a marble mortar, sift through a horse-hair sieve into a bowl, dilute with attar of roses until it forms a fairly thick paste, and drop from the pan with the aid of a knitting needle as described above.’ (Le Confiseur moderne, 1821.)

PASTIS (Béarn cake) – ‘Mix 12 eggs with 1 tablespoon orange blossom water, 1 small glass of brandy, 400 g. (14 oz., 1½ cups) fine sugar, a little milk and 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) melted butter and whisk vigorously.

‘Add a little baker’s yeast and stir, adding flour until the paste is sufficiently thick.

‘Blend the dough well, roll into a loaf in the bowl, sprinkle with flour, cover with a cloth and leave, near the fire, until next day.

‘Put the dough into a buttered tin and bake in a hot oven.’ (Simin Palay: La Cuisine en Béarn.)

There is an Armagnac pastry delicacy also called by this name.

PASTIS – Popular name for an aniseed apéritif enjoyed in the south of France. There are several varieties.

Pastis has taken the place of absinth (called ‘la verte’), the popular pre-1914 drink, now prohibited. There is an Order called Anysietiers du Roy.

PASTRY. PÂTE – See also DOUGH.

Pastry dough for hot or cold pies. PÂTE ORDINAIRE – Ingredients. 1 kg. (2½ lb.) sifted flour, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 2 whole eggs, 1 tablespoon salt, about 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) water. The quantity of water may vary depending on the quality of flour used. The better the quality of flour, the more water it can absorb.

Method. Spread the flour in a circle on the board and put the salt, water, eggs and butter in the middle. Mix in the usual manner and knead the paste to make it smooth and homogeneous. Roll into a ball, wrap in a cloth and keep in a cool place until required for use.

Pie pastry, like all pastry, should be prepared at least 12 hours before it is to be used. A well-rested pastry (and the pastry made according to this recipe can rest up to 24 hours) is easier to work and takes on less colour during baking.

Common brioche dough. PÂTE À BRIOCHE COMMUNE – Some small pies, especially those made in the shape of oval or rectangular patties or turnovers, are shaped by hand, without a mould, and are made of unsweetened common brioche dough or short pastry. Recipes for both these will be found in the section entitled DOUGH.

Lard pastry dough. PÂTE AU SAINDOUX – Ingredients. 1 kg. (2½ lb.) sifted flour, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) warm, melted lard, 2 whole eggs, 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) warm water and 1 tablespoon salt.

Method. Prepare in the same manner as ordinary pastry dough (see above). Use for big cold pies.

Puff pastry shells. CROÛTES DE BOUCHÉES FEUILLETÉES – Prepare with puff pastry rolled out six times, and leave to rest. Roll out 8 mm. (⅓ inch) thick. Cut out pastry rounds about 6 cm. (2½ inches) in diameter.

Put these onto a wet baking sheet, turning them over. Using a round cutter, 3 cm (1½ inches) across, dipped in hot water, mark out the lids of the pieces of pastry, and mark the edges with a knife.

Cook in a hot oven. When baked take out of the oven and remove the lids. Fill them with whatever preparation is indicated.

Raised pastry case cooked blind. CROÛTE DE GRANDE TIMBALE CUITE À BLANC – Butter the interior of a charlotte mould and decorate the sides with pieces of noodle paste (see NOODLES).

Roll some short pastry into a round about 20 cm. (8 inches) in diameter. Sprinkle lightly with flour and fold in half.

Draw the points of this half-circle together in such a way as to form a dome. Roll it out once 8 mm. (⅓ inch) thick. Press into the mould, without disturbing the noodle paste decorations.

Line with a fine buttered paper and fill it up with dried raw beans. Put a dome-shaped piece of paper on top of the dry filling, and a thin sheet of pastry on top of this, joining the edges together by gently pressing with the fingers. Make the rim of the pie by pinching this border with pastry pincers both inside and out. Moisten with water the part forming the lid, and put leaves and roses cut from a thin sheet of pastry on it.

Put on top of the lid 3 or 4 small circles of pastry. Stick these together and make an opening in the middle to allow for the escape of steam during cooking. Brush the outside of the pie with egg and cook in the oven at moderate heat for 30 to 35 minutes.

When the pastry is cooked, take off the lid. Remove the paper and provisional filling; brush the interior with egg and dry off in a warm place. Fill it with whatever preparation is indicated.

Raised pies, or timbales, cooked blind in this way, are used for a number of mixed entrées. They can be filled after cooking with various ragoûts or with macaroni arranged in layers alternating with a ragoût composed of various ingredients combined with a white or brown sauce.

Pastry sticks – See ALLUMETTES, STRAWS.

PASTRY CREAM, FRENCH. CRÈME PÂTISSÈRE – Custard made of eggs, sugar, flour, milk and flavouring, which is used in pastry-making as filling for various cakes, such as choux, éclairs, batons de Jacob. (See CREAMS.) This preparation is also known as confectioner’s custard.

PASTRY CRIMPER or PINCER. PINCE – Tool used for pinching the edges of pies, tarts, etc.

PASTRY CUTTER. COUPE PÂTE – Instrument used to cut sheets of pastry into round or oval shapes. They are either plain or fluted, and can be bought in various sizes.

PASTRY WHEEL. GAUFREUSE – Small pastry tool of hardwood, used in place of metal pastry pincers to crimp the edges of tarts and pastries.

PASTRIES, BASES FOR. FONDS DE PÂTISSERIE – Many

Pastry crimper

French sweets (desserts), gâteaux and petits fours are based on one of the following mixtures.

Fonds de Berrichons – 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar, 250 g. (9 oz., scant 2 cups) dried blanched almonds, 10 egg whites, stiffly beaten.

Pound the almonds and add with the sugar to the egg whites. Bake in a slow oven on greased, floured trays.

Fonds brésiliens – Pound 250 grams (9 oz., generous cup) sugar with 250 grams (9 oz., scant 2 cups) unblanched almonds and blend with 3 egg whites and 50 g. (2 oz., 3 tablespoons) honey. Add to this mixture 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) cocoa powder and 7 egg whites, stiffly beaten. Bake in a slow oven on greased, floured trays.

Fonds napolitains – 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter, 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) flour, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar, 250 g. (9 oz., generous 2 cups) ground almonds, 3 egg yolks.

Knead the butter and flour, then add the sugar and the egg yolks. Mix without kneading and roll out. Cut or shape as required and bake in a moderate oven.

Fonds noix or noisette – 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar 250 g. (9 oz.) walnuts or hazelnuts, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 125 g. (4½ oz., 1 cup) cornflour or arrowroot, 30 egg yolks, 24 egg whites, stiffly beaten.

Pound the nuts and the sugar, then work together with the egg yolks and butter. Add the cornflour or arrowroot and the egg whites. Bake in a slow oven on greased floured trays.

Fonds perlés – Fold 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar and 250 g. (9 oz., generous 2 cups) ground almonds into 12 egg whites, stiffly beaten. Butter and flour a baking tray. Rinse a cake ring with hot water. Place it on the baking tray and fill with the mixture. Dust with icing sugar. Unmould the mixture onto the tray and dust again with sugar. Bake in a slow oven.

If preferred, the cake may be dusted with sugar only after the cake ring has been removed.

Fonds progrès – 125 g. (4½ oz., scant cup) unblanched almonds, 125 g. (4½ oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) hazelnuts, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar, 10 egg whites, stiffly beaten.

Toast the almonds and hazelnuts in the oven. Pound them and blend with the sugar and egg whites. Bake in a slow oven on greased, floured trays.

Fonds réserve – Pound 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) fresh blanched almonds and add with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar to 2 egg whites. Whip 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) sugar and 12 egg yolks over hot water. Add the first mixture to this along with 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) flour, 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) cornflour or arrowroot and 10 egg whites, stiffly beaten. Pour thinly onto greased, floured baking trays and bake in a slow oven.

Fonds sablés – 250 g. (9 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) flour, 125 g. (4½ oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar, 125 g. (4½ oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 175 g. (6 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) ground almonds, 2 eggs, vanilla.

Knead the butter and flour, then blend all ingredients together without further kneading. Set aside in a cool place. Cut into shapes and bake in a moderate oven.

This is excellent for lining moulds for iced sweets.

Fonds succés – Pound 250 g. (9 oz., scant 2 cups) dried, blanched almonds with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar. Blend with 12 egg whites, stiffly beaten. Bake in a slow oven on greased, floured trays.

Pâte – Pâte is a general term used for pastry doughs, bread doughs, sweet pastes and batters. For recipes, see DOUGH and PASTRY.

PÂTÉ – This word is used in three ways in French: pâté, pâté en terrine and pâté en croûte. In France the word pâté on its own should, strictly speaking, only be applied to a dish consisting of a pastry case filled with meat, fish, vegetables or fruit, which is baked in the oven and served hot or cold. The best English translation of this word is 'pie', although many of these dishes are much richer and more elaborate than the sort of pie usually eaten in England or the U.S.A., and are often prepared in moulds rather than pie dishes. A selection of such recipes will be found under PIE.

Pâté en terrine is a meat, game or fish preparation put into a dish (terrine) lined with bacon, cooked in the oven and always served cold. The correct French abbreviation of this is terrine but in common usage the French also call it pâté. The English and Americans have adopted both names but as the strictly correct and less confusing term is terrine, instructions on the preparation of such dishes are given under TERRINE.

Pâté en croûte (see below) is a rich meat, game or fish mixture cooked in a pastry crust and always served cold.

Amiens duck pâté. PÂTÉ DE CANARD D'AMIENS – There are two kinds of pâté made in Amiens: one with boned duck, the other with unboned duck.

The duck pâté is made without a mould; it is shaped by hand. Here is a recipe for a pâté of unboned duck as it was made in Amiens towards the middle of the last century.

The pastry. Use 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) lard, 1 tablespoon olive oil, 1 whole egg,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons fine salt and about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons (2 tablespoons) water.

'Spread the flour on a board in a circle, make a well in the middle and put in the salt. Break in the egg and dissolve the salt in it. Add olive oil. Knead the lard if it is hard, and mix it with the liquid part of the ingredients in the middle of the flour. Rub the lard mixture and flour together without moistening. When the paste is well mixed, spread it on a marble slab and sprinkle with cold water. Keep it on the firm side. Roll together into one lump and leave to rest in a cool place for at least 2 hours before using.

The duck. 'Only young ducklings which take very little cooking time should be used for these pâtés.

'The duck having been killed, plucked, cleaned out and singed, remove carefully any innards which may have been left in. Cut off the pinions a little below the first joint from the shoulder.

'Cut off the feet at the joint. Season the duck with spiced salt, inside and outside. Cut up a scalded breast of bacon (streaky), and fry it in a little fat on a low fire. Remove it and fry the duck on low heat, browning it on all sides. Drain, and leave to cool before making the pâté.

The forcemeat. A gratin forcemeat is always used for this pâté, composed either of calf or duck liver. The duck's liver will be added to this forcemeat.

'Use 500 g. (18 oz.) calf or chicken livers, 150 g. (5 oz., 1 cup) shredded fat bacon, 1 medium-sized onion, 2 teaspoons spiced salt, a few fragments of thyme and bay leaf and 2 chopped shallots.

'Render down the fat bacon on a low fire and fry in this fat the livers, trimmed and cut in large dice. Add the onion and shallots and season with spiced salt, thyme and bay leaf. Cover and leave for a minute or two at the side of the stove. Remove and leave to get cold, then pound in the mortar and rub the forcemeat through a fine sieve.

The pâté. 'When the pastry, the forcemeat and the duck are ready, proceed to make the pâté.

'Divide the pastry into two equal parts. Using half, roll it out into an oval-shaped piece 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. This piece of pastry should be a little longer and wider than the duck. Put it in a baking tin, slightly moistened with a little cold water to make the paste adhere. Spread the middle with a quarter of the forcemeat, place the duck in the forcemeat and season with spiced salt and a little cayenne pepper. Cover the duck with the rest of the forcemeat, enclosing it completely.

'Put another oval-shaped piece of pastry over the duck, seal the edges, crimp up the sides and decorate the top with dough cut out in fancy shapes. Make a hole in the centre to allow for steam.

'Brush the pastry crust with beaten egg. Bake in a hot oven for 1½ to 1½ hours, depending on size.' (M. Dumont-Lespine's recipe.)

Rouen duckling pâté. PÂTÉ DE CANETON ROUENNAIS – Shape by hand as Lark pâté (see below), or in a mould as Woodcock pâté (see below), using boned duckling stuffed with A gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), foie gras and truffles.

Pâté of foie gras with truffles. PÂTÉ DE FOIE GRAS AUX TRUFFES – The forcemeat. Pound finely in a mortar (for a pâté for 10 persons) 375 g. (13 oz.) lean pork, 475 g. (1 lb.) fresh bacon and 150 g. (5 oz.) raw goose liver parings. Season this forcemeat with 4 teaspoons Spiced salt (see SALT) and rub through a sieve.

The foie gras. Stud a big, pared goose liver (or 2 small livers) generously with pieces of truffle, seasoned with spiced salt. Marinate this liver in brandy and Madeira and season with spiced salt.

The pâté. Following the instructions given under PIE, line a round or a hinged mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) made with butter or lard. Coat the sides and bottom of the mould with a layer of the forcemeat, to which 1 tablespoon brandy and liquor left from marinating the liver have been added. Put the liver in the middle of the mould. Cover with a layer of forcemeat, piling it up in a dome. Place on top 1 rasher of bacon and a small bay leaf.

Cover with a piece of rolled-out pastry, seal and crimp the edges. Decorate the top with pieces of pastry cut out in fancy shapes. Make a hole in the centre. Cut several pastry rings with a fluted-edged pastry-cutter, and place them on top of one another round the hole. Brush with beaten egg.

Bake in a moderate oven, allowing 30 minutes per kg. (15 minutes per lb.). Leave the pâté to cool in the mould. When it is just warm, pour into the pâté through the hole on top, warm lard if it is to be kept for some time; or some Madeira-flavoured aspic jelly (see ASPIC).

The pâtés are cut in different ways, according to their shapes. Those made in round moulds are served in slices, cut from top to bottom. Bigger pâtés are served in scallop shells, as follows: Remove the pastry lid, scrape off the surface fat layer and ladle out the pâté with a big spoon dipped into hot water. Scoop up enough pâté to fill a shell. Put the filled shells on a plate.

Arrange the empty pâté crust on a dish, placing the pastry lid on it upside down. Garnish the lid with a layer of chopped jelly. Dispose the scallop shells of foie gras on it, piling them up in a heap.

Rectangular-shaped pâtés, the type most commonly found in shops, are cut in slices, which are then halved and arranged, overlapping slightly, on a long dish.

Lark pâté en pantin. PÂTÉ D'ALOUETTES EN PANTIN – Bone the larks completely and stuff with A gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) studded with a piece of truffle. Wrap each lark in 1 thin rasher of bacon.

Roll out a rectangular piece of Lining paste (see DOUGH), put on top 1 thin bacon rasher, spread with a layer of forcemeat (truffled, if desired) and lay the larks on top of that. Cover the larks with a layer of forcemeat topped with 1 rasher of fat bacon.

Thin down the edges of the rolled-out piece of pastry with a rolling-pin, bring the edges together and seal them. Put the pâté upside down on a baking tray. Make one or two holes to allow steam to escape during baking, brush with beaten egg and bake in a moderate oven.

Leave the pâté to get cold. Pour into it through the holes in the top some game aspic jelly (see ASPIC, Game jelly stock) or, if the pâté is not to be eaten at once, some melted butter.

Pithiviers lark pâté. PÂTÉ D'ALOUETTES – For this pâté the larks can be boned or left whole, according to taste.

Stuff each with a little A gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), one large cube of foie gras and a medium-sized truffle. Season the larks with spiced salt, wrap in thin bacon rashers and lay them out side by side on a piece of pastry spread with a thin layer of forcemeat. Cover the larks with the same forcemeat and finish making the pâté. Leave to rest for a night and bake on the following day. When the pâté is cold, pour into it some aspic jelly (see ASPIC).

To serve, cut the pâté into rectangular pieces in such a way as to make sure that each piece contains a whole lark. Discard the crust surrounding the sides of the pâté and serve only the top and bottom crust.

Partridge pâté. PÂTÉ DE PERDREAU – Prepare in an oval or rectangular mould like Woodcock pâté (see below).

Pheasant pâté. PÂTÉ DE FAISAN – Using boned and stuffed pheasant, prepare like Woodcock pâté (see below).

This pâté can also be made using a boned pheasant, cut into thin slices. The pâté is lined with the slices alternating with rows of slivers of foie gras and truffles, the whole sealed down with Game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Pâtés made from various kinds of poultry. PÂTÉS DE VOLAILLES – These pâtés can be made from chicken, turkey, pigeon, or guinea fowl, boned, stuffed with an appropriate forcemeat, foie gras and truffles, or with the flesh of the appropriate bird cut in thin slices, with foie gras, truffles and forcemeat. Shape by hand or bake in oval or rectangular moulds lined with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH).

Woodcock pâté. PÂTÉ DE BÉCASSES – Bone the woodcocks and stuff with A gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) mixed with the chopped trail of the birds, pieces of foie gras and truffles. Reshape the woodcocks. Wedge them tightly against one another in an oval mould lined with pastry and bacon rashers and coated with Game forcemeat (see FORCEMEAT). Cover with a layer of forcemeat, place 1 rasher of bacon on top. Cover with pastry, seal and crimp the edges, and decorate the top with pieces of pastry cut in fancy shapes. Make a hole in the centre, brush with beaten egg and bake in a moderate oven.

PATELLA

When the pâté is quite cold, pour some aspic jelly (see ASPIC) based on a game fumet (q.v.) into it.

PATELLA. PATELLE – Name applied to various gastropod molluscs. They are univalve, edible and known also by the name of limpets. They are eaten raw, like clams.

PATIENCE DOCK. PATIENCE -- Name of various plants of the Rumex genus, among them herb patience, which has a bitter root, used in making depurative and anti-scorbutic decoctions. The leaves and petioles of the alpine dock, known also as monk's rhubarb, are eaten in the Alps, the Pyrenees and in the Auvergne; they are put in soups and cooked as a vegetable. Rhubarb sorrel, which was already known as a pot herb in the times of antiquity, is mentioned by Horace.

PÂTISSERIE – Name for various preparations made of pastry, generally baked in the oven. The term also applies to the art of the pastry-cook, as well as to the place where pastries are made and sold.

The Greeks made pastry. Bourdeau, in his Histoire de l'Alimentation, even attributes the invention of plum pudding to the Greeks.

In the Middle Ages in France the pastry-cooks were called oubleyeurs, after oublie, wafer cooked in irons or gaufre moulds, which was their main product.

In 1268, Etienne Boileau in his Livre des Métiers laid down rules and statutes, and fixed the duration of the apprenticeship, wages, and fines incurred for an infraction of the statutes. The preamble stated: 'Whoever wishes to become an oubleyeur in the city of Paris may do so freely and openly, provided he knows the trade, has the wherewithal and keeps to the usages and customs of the trade.'

These statutes were modified from century to century, embodying ever more restrictive clauses. The terms and conditions for obtaining the Master's certificate became more and more in favour of the Treasury and the King.

Rabelais in his Pantagruel (Book 4, Chapter 59) enumerates some of the pastries which were in great vogue at the time, such as big puff pastry gâteaux, carves, casse-museaux (small cream buns), brides à veaux, caillebottes (curd cakes), poupelins ('baby dolls'), macaroons, quince pies, 20 kinds of tarts, 16 kinds of tourtes (q.v.), etc.

As the years went by, numerous disagreements arose between the pastry-cooks, the bakers and the pork butchers, all accusing the others of trespassing on each other's trades. In the seventeenth century the bakers added the sale of small cakes to their trade. The pastry-cooks protested, started a court case and the Lieutenant-General of Police issued an order forbidding the master bakers to encroach on the trade of the pastry-cooks. Later, another dispute arose in connection with Twelfth Night cakes, which the bakers were in the habit of offering to clients who brought their bread to be baked in their ovens. They were forbidden to do so, but nevertheless continued to bake and offer these cakes. In 1794, however, the Twelfth Night cakes aroused the wrath of the revolutionaries, who seemed to see monarchist tendencies in this custom, and they ordered the practice to cease.

But no decree could eradicate a time-honoured tradition. The pastry-cooks got round the order by substituting Liberty cakes for Twelfth Night cakes, complete with Phrygian cap traced on the cake.

The main dispute between the pastry-cooks and the pork butchers, ending in a long court case, arose in connection with a ham pie. This was a ham, cooked as usual and enclosed in pastry. The pork butchers maintained that as the crust did not adhere to the ham it could not be considered a pie. Only raw ingredients enclosed in pastry and cooked at the same time as the pastry could be considered as pies. The pork butchers won their case.

From the beginning of the nineteenth century French pastry-making made great strides forward with Carême, the creator of large display pieces and of numerous elements of what is called 'pâtisserie de main'. He perfected the existing cakes and created new ones, such as the croquembouche, mille-feuille, sultanes, decorated with pulled sugar, etc. This was also the epoch of great pâtisseries, such as Rouget, Leblanc, Jacquet, Félix and Lesage, the specialist of display pieces. Later, towards 1844, came the Julien dynasty, founders of cake shops in the Bourse, Favart and boulevard des Italiens, prolific creators to whom we owe such cakes as trois-frères, savarin, gorenflot, régent, richelieu and Paris-pâté. Along with them, the cake shops of Seugnot, Bourbonneux,

A pastry-cook's shop in the eighteenth century, from Diderot's Encyclopédie. Victuals can be seen hanging from the ceiling; there is also the butcher's block (No. 8), which shows how much pastry-cooks competed with the pork butchers Quillet, Chiboust, Frascati, Petit vied with each other. These houses specialised in the creation of numerous cakes, such as bourdaloue, saint-honoré, napolitain, châteaubriand, cussy, ambrosie (or Genoese cake) and many others.

Little Russian patties (Claire)

Twelfth Night cake – A decorated cake which used to be eaten on the Feast of the Epiphany (6 January). Usually a bean (or, in later years, a silver coin) was baked in the cake. The person getting this at the Twelfth Night feast was accepted as King for the occasion.

PÂTISSIÈRE (Noix) – Culinary term for the chump end of the loin of veal, which is situated in the fillet. It is sometimes called round of veal.

PATRONNET – French name for a pastry-cook's young apprentice.

PATTIES, PETITS PÂTÉS – Small hot patties. PETITS PÂTÉS CHAUDS – As their name indicates, small hot patties are the diminutive versions of big hot entrée pies and pâtés. They are served as hors-d'œuvre and as small entrées.

'Small patties,' said Carême, 'are perfect only when eaten straight out of the oven. If they are allowed to get cold and are then reheated, they lose some of their quality.'

In days gone by patties used to be sold in the streets of Paris to the accompaniment of the cry: 'Piping hot! Piping hot!'

Some bakers and caterers still sell a patty filled with sausage meat or a salpicon (q.v.) of pork, known as friands.

In the section devoted to hot hors-d'œuvre (q.v.), various recipes for the preparation of patties will be found.

Little Russian patties. PETITS PÂTÉS À LA Russe – These are served as an accompaniment to soup, and are made of Puff pastry or common Brioche dough (see DOUGH). They are filled with various mixtures, especially various fish forcemeats, principally salmon.

PAUCHOUSE – See POCHOUSE.

PAUILLAC – Commune of the département of Gironde where the famous Pauillac milk-fed lambs are raised. (See LAMB.)

PAUNCH (Belly). ESTOMAC – See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

PAUPIETTES – Thin slices of beef or other meat stuffed with some forcemeat, rolled into paupiettes (the shape of big corks) wrapped in a thin rasher of bacon and braised in very little liquid. Paupiettes are served with a vegetable garnish. (See BEEF, Paupiettes of beef.)

Paupiettes can also be made from fillets of fish. (See SOLE, Paupiettes of sole.)

Paupiettes of lamb à la créole. PAUPIETTES D'AGNEAU À LA CRÉOLE – Cut some lamb taken from the leg or the shoulder into escalopes, flatten them well and spread with a Fine pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) mixed with chopped onion, fried in butter, with half its weight of sweet pimentos cut in very small dice.

Roll the escalopes into paupiettes and tie them with string. Put into a sauté pan in which 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion has been softened in butter. Brown the paupiettes with the onion. Add 2 peeled, seeded and chopped tomatoes. Season with salt and pepper and add a bouquet garni (q.v.), a pinch of garlic and a small piece of lemon rind. Cook in the oven, uncovered, for 45 minutes.

Drain the paupiettes. Arrange them on a dish. Garnish the middle of the dish with Rice à la créole (see RICE). Boil down the pan juices, strain, and pour over the paupiettes.

PAVÉ – Term describing a cold dish composed of some kind of a mixture, frequently a mousse, set in a special square or rectangular mould, coated with jelly and decorated with truffles, etc.

The name pavé also applies to certain square cakes, made of Genoese or sponge layers, sandwiched with a butter cream, and to spice cake.

Pavé of chicken à l'écarlate. PAVÉ DE VOLAILLE À L'ÉCARLATE – Coat a square mould with clear chicken aspic jelly flavoured with Madeira. Line the mould with circlets of pickled tongue, thin slices of chicken breast and round slivers of truffles, alternating the colours. Spoon a little aspic jelly over.

Fill the mould with alternate layers of chicken mousse and pickled tongue mousse, both mousses bound with aspic jelly. Put slivers of truffles between each layer. Cover with a layer of chicken aspic jelly and chill on ice. Turn out the pavé onto a dish and surround with slices of pickled tongue, decorated with slivers of truffle and glazed with jelly. Garnish with chopped jelly.

Pavé of foie gras à la king. PAVÉ DU ROI, AU FOIE GRAS – This pavé is composed of a fat goose liver, generously studded with truffles, enclosed in Fine lining paste (see DOUGH), rolled out in a circle and shaped into a crescent. Decorate with fleurs-de-lys cut out of pastry. It is a foie gras pie made by hand instead of being baked in a mould.

When the pie is cold pour in some port-flavoured jelly (q.v.).

Pavé of foie gras with truffles (cold). PAVÉ DE FOIE GRAS AUX TRUFFES – Line a mould with jelly (q.v.) flavoured with sherry (or other liqueur wine), decorate with slivers of truffles and fill with Foie gras mousse (see FOIE GRAS) and slices of foie gras and truffles, putting them into the mould in alternate layers. Cover with a layer of jelly. Chill on ice. Turn out onto a serving dish and garnish with chopped jelly.

Pavé of pheasant or other game à la Saint-Hubert. PAVÉ DE FAISAN À LA SAINT-HUBERT – Make in a square or rectangular mould, using pheasant or other game mousse, slices of the appropriate game and slivers of truffles, prepared as described in the recipe for Pavé of foie gras with truffles.

Pavé of salmon à la Nantua. PAVÉ DE SAUMON À LA NANTUA – Coat a square mould with fish aspic jelly (see JELLY, Fish jelly stock), decorate with crayfish tails dipped in Chaud-froid sauce à la Nantua (see SAUCE), and slivers of truffles, and fill with salmon mousse (see FISH, Fish mousse) bound with aspic jelly.

Cover the mousse with a layer of jelly and chill on ice. Turn out onto a dish. Garnish with little barquettes baked blind and filled with more crayfish tails, covered with the sauce and glazed with jelly. Put chopped jelly between each tartlet.

Pavés of soles or other fish. PAVÉS DE SOLES – Prepare as Pavé of salmon using sole mousse (see FISH, Fish mousse), fillets of sole, cooked in white wine and well drained, and slivers of truffles.

These pavés are decorated with truffles, slices of hard-boiled egg yolks, blanched tarragon or chervil leaves, lobster coral, etc.

They can be garnished, in addition to fillets of soles and truffles, with slices of lobster or spiny lobster, crayfish tails, well-dried, poached oysters, and glazed with aspic jelly (q.v.).

SWEET PAVÉS. PAVÉS D'ENTREMETS:

Chocolate pavé. PAVÉ AU CHOCOLAT – Sandwich Genoese or chocolate sponge layers together with chocolate Butter cream (see CREAMS). Trim the sandwich, giving it a square shape. Ice with Chocolate icing (see ICING).

As in the case of all cakes filled with butter cream, the pavés should be put in the ice box to allow the cream to set.

Coffee pavé. PAVÉ AU MOKA – Prepare as Chocolate pavé, using coffee Butter cream (see CREAMS) and Coffee icing (see ICING).

Fruit pavé. PAVÉ AUX FRUITS – Spread Genoese sponge layers with vanilla-flavoured Butter cream (see CREAMS), putting a layer of various fruit, cooked in syrup, well drained and chopped into a salpicon (q.v.), on the cream. Sandwich the layers of cake, pressing down to make them adhere. Trim the cake to give it an even, square shape. Ice with kirsch-flavoured Fondant icing (see ICING). Decorate with crystallised fruit, angelica lozenges and almonds.

Hazelnut pavé. PAVÉ AUX NOISETTES – Prepare as Chocolate pavé, using burnt hazelnut Butter cream (see CREAMS) and kirsch-flavoured icing.

Praline pavé. PAVÉ AU PRALINE – Prepare as Chocolate pavé, using burnt almond butter cream and kirsch-flavoured icing.

Small rice pavés à la cévenole. PETITS PAVÉS DE RIZ À LA CÉVENOLE – Prepare the pavés as described in the recipe for Small rice pavés with fruit (see below), using a purée of marrons glacés or vanilla-flavoured Chestnut purée (see CHESTNUTS). Deep-fry and arrange in a pyramid.

Small rice pavés à la créole. PETITS PAVÉS DE RIZ À LA CRÉOLE – Spread the pavés, prepared as described below, with a salpicon (q.v.) of pineapple cooked in syrup, cut in very small dice and bound with stewed apricots. Deep-fry and arrange in a pyramid.

Small rice pavés with fruit. PETITS PAVÉS DE RIZ AUX FRUITS – Cook 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sweetened rice. Spread it on a buttered pan in a layer 1 cm ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. Cover the surface with a little butter to prevent a crust forming, and leave to cool.

Turn out the rice and cut into an even number of rectangular pieces, 4 cm. (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  inches) wide and about 6 cm. (2 $\frac{1}{2}$  inches) long. Spread half of these rectangles on one side with a layer of stewed fruit: apricots, chestnuts, peaches, apples, or any other. Cover the remaining rectangles with rice, then dip in egg and breadcrumbs, and shape the pieces into straight-sided pavés.

Deep-fry in smoking hot fat, drain, arrange in a pyramid on a dish and serve with a fruit sauce, flavoured with kirsch or any other liqueur.

Small rice pavés à la normande. PETITS PAVÉS DE RIZ À LA NORMANDE – Spread the pavés, prepared as described above, with stewed apples. Fry and arrange in a pyramid.

Small rice pavés Pompadour. PETITS PAVÉS DE RIZ POMPADOUR – Spread the pavés, prepared as described above, with a salpicon (q.v.) of crystallised fruit, cut in very small dice and bound with a few tablespoons of rum-flavoured French pastry cream (see CREAMS). Fry and arrange in a pyramid.

Small semolina pavés. PETITS PAVÉS DE SEMOULE – Prepare like Small rice pavés, using sweetened, cooked semolina.

Pavés can be endlessly varied by spreading with various jams, stewed fruit and salpicons (q.v.), as well as variously flavoured French pastry cream (see CREAMS).

PAVÉ DE MOYAUX – See CHEESE.

PAVIE – Firm-fleshed peach, similar to a clingstone, with the pulp adhering to the stone.

PAYSANNE (À LA) – Method of preparing butcher's meat and poultry, usually braised and accompanied by a garnish of carrots, turnips, onions and celery sliced and lightly cooked in butter, pieces of scalded and fried lean bacon, and potatoes cut down to a uniform small size.

Fresh peas (Claire)

PEA. POIS – Plant thought by some to have originated in western Asia and been derived from the wild pea. According to whether the pod is tender or parchment-lined, peas are classified as edible-podded (also called sugar peas) or as shelling peas. They can be either tall or dwarf. The most esteemed French varieties, which are eaten 'green', before they reach complete maturity, when they are still petits pois (small peas), are pois de Clamart and pois Michaux. The late varieties are preserved by means of drying. Whole dried peas, of greyish yellow colour, are preferred in France to split peas, which are of a greyish green colour.

Cultivated by the Hebrews, Persians, Greeks and later the Romans, peas are now found throughout most of the world. This vegetable is very rich in nitrogen and mucilage, contains a strong proportion of oxalic acid and has a pleasant taste recalling that of chestnuts.

Shelled peas are very nutritious, rich in protein, but hard to digest. The peas should be well cooked, and if possible, served mixed with other vegetables in stews, purées or soups.

The best of the 'mange-tout' variety (the edible-podded pea) are Corne de béliet and Caroubey.

Shelling peas or 'petit pois' are divided into two categories depending upon whether the pea is round or wrinkled. Some of the best known round varieties are: large-podded Express, Express Alaska, Petit Provençal. The wrinkled varieties include: Téléphone, Merveille d'Amérique, Centurion, Progrès de Laxton, etc.

FRESH GARDEN PEAS. POIS FRAIS –

Boiled peas. PETITS POIS À L'ANGLAISE – Cook the peas in boiling salted water as quickly as possible, keeping the saucepan uncovered.

Drain and dry off by tossing them in a saucepan on the stove. Serve with fresh butter.

Peas à la bonne femme. PETITS POIS À LA BONNE FEMME – Melt some butter in a saucepan and in it brown lightly 12 small onions (new, when in season) and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) diced, scalded lean bacon. Remove the onions and bacon from the pan.

Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour to the butter and cook for a few minutes, stirring with a wooden spoon. Dilute with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white stock. Boil for 5 minutes. Put 1 litre (1 $\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) fresh garden peas into this sauce, add the onions, bacon and a bouquet garni (q.v.), and simmer with a lid on.

Peas in butter. PETITS POIS AU BEURRE – Cook the peas in salted boiling water. Drain them and dry off by tossing in a saucepan on brisk heat. Season with a pinch of castor (fine) sugar. Dress with fresh butter cut in tiny pieces, allowing 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter per litre (1 $\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) shelled garden peas.

Peas à la crème. PETITS POIS À LA CRÈME – Boil the peas in water, drain, and toss in a pan on heat for a few moments to dry off. Cover with boiling fresh cream. Simmer until the liquid is boiled down by half and season with salt and a pinch of sugar. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) fresh cream, blend well, and serve in a timbale.

Peas with fennel. PETITS POIS AU FENOUIL – Boil the peas in salted water with a good bunch of fresh fennel tied with a string. Drain, dress with butter and add 1 tablespoon chopped fennel. Serve in a timbale.

Peas à la fermière. PETITS POIS À LA FERMIÈRE – Cook 500 g. (18 oz.) small new carrots with 12 small onions, as described in the recipe for Glazed carrots (see CARROTS). When the carrots are half-cooked add to the pan 8 dl. (scant 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints, scant 2 pints) freshly shelled garden peas, 1 head of lettuce shredded into a coarse julienne (q.v.) and a bouquet garni composed of parsley and chervil. Season with salt and sugar. Moisten with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) water. Simmer with the lid on. Add butter before serving.

Peas à la française. PETITS POIS À LA FRANÇAISE – Put into a large saucepan 1 litre (1 $\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) fresh garden peas, 1 lettuce heart shredded into a chiffonnade (q.v.), 12 small onions (new, if in season), a bouquet garni composed of parsley and chervil, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt and 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) sugar. Mix well.

Add 3 to 4 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) cold water. Bring to the boil then simmer gently with the lid on. When the peas are cooked, remove the bouquet garni, take the pan off the stove and add 3 or 4 teaspoons fresh butter. Mix and serve in a timbale.

Peas with ham (Languedoc cookery). PETITS POIS AU JAMBON – Cut 1 medium-sized onion into quarters and brown with 100 g. (4 oz.) lean, raw (not smoked) ham in butter. Add 1 litre (1 $\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) garden peas to the pan. Toss them lightly in the butter, sprinkle in 1 tablespoon flour and cook for a few minutes. Moisten with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) water, season with salt and sugar, add a small bouquet garni (q.v.) and simmer, covered, from 45 to 50 minutes. Remove the bouquet garni and serve in a timbale.

Peas with lettuce. PETITS POIS AUX LAITUES – Prepare as Peas à la française, using tied lettuce heads and omitting the small onions.

When the peas are cooked, drain the lettuces and cut into quarters. Put these on the peas. Finish off with fresh butter and serve in a timbale.

Peas with mint. PETITS POIS À LA MENTHE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Peas with fennel, substituting fresh mint for the fennel. Serve the peas in a timbale, dress with butter and put scalded mint leaves on top.

Peas à la paysanne. PETITS POIS À LA PAYSANNE – Prepare, using big fresh garden peas, like Peas à la française, with coarsely shredded lettuce and onions cut in quarters. When the peas are cooked, mix with kneaded butter, allowing 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter and 10 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 2 tablespoons) flour per litre (1 $\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) of peas.

Peas à la paysanne are often called à la bonne femme.

Purée of fresh garden peas, called Saint-Germain. PURÉE DE POIS FRAIS, DITE SAINT-GERMAIN – Cook large peas as described in the recipe for Peas à la française, drain, and rub through a fine sieve.

Heat this purée and add the liquor left from cooking the peas, boiled down and strained. Blend in fresh butter, allowing 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) per litre (1 $\frac{1}{4}$  pints, generous quart) of purée.

This purée can also be made using peas boiled in salted water and well drained.

DRIED PEAS. POIS SECS – Three kinds of dried peas are used in the kitchen: split peas, yellow peas and chick-peas.

Yellow peas are used only in some parts of eastern France as a purée. This is often served in Germany as an accompaniment to sauerkraut. Yellow peas can also be cooked in the same manner as dried white beans.

Chick-peas, dried whole, come from a plant of the family Leguminosae, which in France is also called pois chiche or pois cornu.

Split peas are more commonly used in France, served mainly as a purée.

To cook split peas. Soak the split peas in water to soften them.

Put them into a saucepan and cover with water, allowing 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  litres (2 $\frac{3}{4}$  pints, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$  pints) water per 500 g. (18 oz.) split peas. Add 1 ham knuckle and a coarse mirepoix (q.v.) composed of 1 carrot, 1 medium-sized onion and 75 g. (3 oz., scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) scalded lean bacon – all these ingredients cut in large dice and softened in butter. Add a bouquet garni of parsley, thyme, bay leaf and the green part of 3 leeks. Season, bring to the boil and simmer gently with the lid on for about 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  hours. A few leaves of lettuce can also be added as a garnish.

Split pea purée. PURÉE DE POIS CASSÉS – Cook the split peas as described above and rub through a sieve. Heat the purée, stirring with a wooden spoon. Dilute with a few tablespoons of the liquid left over from cooking the peas, strained through a fine strainer. Take off the heat and, just before serving, add butter.

If this purée is served as a vegetable or garnish, a few tablespoons of fresh cream can be added to it.

Split pea soup or purée aux croûtons. POTAGE DE POIS CASSÉS – Soup made of split peas, cooked as described above and rubbed through a sieve. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Purée of split pea soup.)

EDIBLE-PODDED or SUGAR PEAS. POIS MANGE-TOUT, PRINCESSES – These are peas the pods of which have no parchment lining; they can therefore be eaten seed, pod and all.

Top and tail the pods and break in 2 or 3 pieces. Cook them in any way recommended above for fresh garden peas.

PEACH. PÊCHE – The peach is the fruit of the peach tree, one of the Rosaceae family. It is said to have originated in Persia and is one of the best and most attractive of French fruits.

Peaches can be divided into two main categories: white-fleshed peaches, of which the best known are (in order of maturity): Madeleine Pouyet; May Flower; Amuden; Charles Ingouf; Charles Roux; and yellow-fleshed peaches often wrongly called 'apricot peaches'. Yellow-fleshed peaches generally mature later than the white-fleshed variety and are less aromatic. However, they are larger, stand up much better to transport, are more pleasant to the eye, being more attractively coloured, and make good preserving fruits. Moreover, they grow more rapidly than their white-fleshed counterparts. The principal varieties of yellow-fleshed counterparts. The principal varieties of white-fleshed peaches are: Dixired, Red Haven, Fair Haven, Hale Haven, Southland, Elberta and J. H. Hale. The last two are particularly late maturing fruits and less tasty than the others.

Peaches (painting by W. Volker)

Almost half of French peach production takes place in the Rhône Valley. There is also extensive peach cultivation in the Garonne Valley, Bouches-du-Rhône, Gard, Roussillon and in the Fréjus region. The season lasts from 10 June to 10 September.

Peaches are eaten raw as a dessert fruit, or cooked, and in the latter form they enter into the making of a vast number of sweets and pastries, and are used in a great many confectionery preparations. Various excellent beverages are also made from peaches; highly flavoured brandies and liqueurs are distilled from them.

The following can be classed among the best varieties of French peaches: Amsdem, a round fruit, slightly flattened, of medium size, with red flush and mottling, and greenish-white, juicy flesh of good flavour; Early Croncels, a big ovoid fruit, amber coloured with purplish flush, with a delicate flesh and pleasant flavour; Felignies (end of August) medium-sized fruit, yellow with crimson flush, creamy white flesh of very good flavour; Victoria, round medium-sized fruit, yellow with crimson flush, white melting flesh tinted next stone, very good; Hale's early, medium-sized fruit, slightly flattened, flushed and mottled, very juicy flesh of good flavour; France, big round fruit with very downy skin, yellow and crimson in colour, with white flesh, slightly tinted next stone, very good; Grosse mignonne, very big almost round fruit, skin flushed with purple, white juicy flesh, very melting and sweet; Reine des vergers, big slightly elongated fruit, crimson-purplish flush, white flesh, slightly pink next stone, melting and sweet; Admirable yellow or Apricot peach, a round fruit, with orange tinted yellow skin, very good white juicy flesh; Venus's breast, big round fruit with a nipple on the top, crimson flush, rather fine, semi-melting flesh, quite good in flavour.

Peaches Bourdaloue. PÊCHES BOURDALOUE – Halve the peaches, peel and poach in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain and dry them. Arrange in a flan case, baked blind, on a foundation of Frangipane cream (see CREAMS), not too thick and mixed with crushed macaroons. Cover the peaches with a layer of the same cream. Sprinkle with crushed macaroons and a little melted butter and glaze quickly in the oven.

This dessert can be made without covering the peaches with frangipane cream. They should be decorated with crystallised cherries, lozenges of angelica and halved almonds. The flan case can be filled with sweetened semolina, bound with eggs and butter and flavoured with kirsch.

A salpicon (q.v.) of crystallised fruit, steeped in some liqueur, can be added to either of the above compositions.

Peaches in brandy. PÊCHES À L'EAU-DE-VIE – Prepare like Apricot confits in brandy (see APRICOT).

Chilled peaches with raspberries. PÊCHES RAFRAÎCHIES AUX FRAMBOISES – Poach choice peaches in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Chill on ice. Just before serving arrange in a fruit dish, cover with a purée of fresh raspberries diluted with a little of the syrup in which the peaches were cooked, boiled down and laced with a few drops of kirsch. Scatter fresh raspberries on top.

Peaches Colbert. PÊCHES COLBERT – Using halved peaches, poached in vanilla-flavoured syrup, prepare like Colbert apricots (see APRICOT).

Compote of peaches. COMPOTE DE PÊCHES – Plunge the peaches into boiling water for a moment then peel immediately. Poach them, whole or halved, in vanilla-flavoured 18° syrup (see SUGAR).

Serve hot or cold.

Peaches Condé. PÊCHES CONDÉ – Poach halved peaches in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Prepare like Apricots condé (see APRICOT).

Peach coupe – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Peach croûte. CROÛTE AUX PÊCHES – Cook halved or quartered peaches in vanilla-flavoured syrup, drain and prepare as described in the recipe for Apricot croûte (see APRICOT).

Crystallised peaches. PÊCHES CONFITES – Prepare like Crystallised apricots (see APRICOT).

Peach flambé Brillat-Savarin. PÊCHES FLAMBÉES BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Prepare as many little savarins (q.v.) (crown-shaped) as you have halves of big peaches.

Arrange the savarins, soaked in syrup, in a circle on an ovenproof dish. Put into each savarin 1 tablespoon very thick French pastry cream (see CREAMS), mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of crystallised fruit, steeped in kirsch or maraschino.

Poach the halved and peeled peaches in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain and dry them. Arrange on the savarins. Sprinkle with crushed macaroons and a little melted butter. Brown lightly in the oven. Before serving, sprinkle with kirsch and set alight. Serve with apricot sauce, made by diluting apricot jam with the syrup in which the peaches were cooked, heating it and straining.

Peach flambé au kirsch. PÊCHES FLAMBÉES AU KIRSCH – Peel the peaches and poach them in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain, and arrange in a dessert dish. Pour over a few tablespoons of the syrup in which they were cooked, thickened with arrowroot. Sprinkle with heated kirsch, Armagnac, brandy, Calvados, rum, and set alight.

Instead of serving all the peaches together in one dish, they can be arranged in individual cassolletes.

Peach flan

Peach flan or tart. FLAN, TARTE AUX PÊCHES – Prepare as described in the recipe for Apricot tart (flan) (see TART) using halved or quartered peaches.

Peach fritters – See FRITTERS.

Peaches in Frontignan. PÊCHES AU FRONTIGNAN – Peel the peaches and cook in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain, and arrange in a dessert dish. Boil down the syrup by two-thirds, add several tablespoons of Frontignan wine, and pour over the peaches. Serve hot or cold.

Peach ice – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Peaches à l'impératrice. PÊCHES À L'IMPÉRATRICE – Peel the peaches, halve and poach in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain and dry. Arrange them in a dish filled up to two-thirds with Rice à l'impératrice (see RICE), chilled in a refrigerator. Cover the peaches with a layer of raspberry or strawberry jelly.

Peach jam – See JAMS AND JELLIES.

Penelope peaches. PÊCHES PÉNÉLOPE – Poach the peaches in syrup, strongly flavoured with vanilla. Leave to cool in the syrup.

Prepare an iced strawberry mousse (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES, Iced mousses or mousselines) using a 35° syrup, (see SUGAR) mixed with an equal quantity of strawberry pulp and twice its volume of Chantilly cream (see CREAMS) whisked very stiffly. Fill individual moulds with this mousse, seal hermetically, and chill for 2 hours. Before serving, turn out the strawberry mousse into fruit dishes. Arrange the peaches, drained, dried and chilled in a refrigerator, on the mousse.

Garnish the middle with fresh chilled strawberries. Cover with a film of sugar cooked to pearl degree. Serve with zabaglione (q.v.) flavoured with parfait-amour (q.v.) liqueur.

Peach pulp (raw). PULPE DE PÊCHES (CRUE) – Peel and rub the flesh of the peaches through a fine sieve. Add a third of its weight in castor sugar. Mix well. Flavour with liqueur.

This pulp is used for covering chilled fruit, as a compote, and for certain cold sweets, such as charlottes, fruit moulds, puddings, etc.

Peaches à la Madame Récamier. PÊCHES MADAME RÉCAMIER – René de Beauvoir gave the following recipe for this dish in Monde Illustré (May 1857), dictated by Chevrier, the illustrious maître d'hôtel of the early nineteenth century:

'Madame Récamier,' says Chevrier, 'had lost all interest in food and we could see her fading away. No one dared disobey the doctor's orders for her – a diet. Very well, I said to myself, she likes peaches – I'll serve her some in my own way.

'And I put one, the best I could find, to cook in a bain-marie (q.v.). I smothered it with exquisite sugar syrup, poured some cream over it – and there it was.'

Peaches with rice and meringue. PÊCHES MERINGUÉES AU RIZ – Proceed as described in the recipe for Apricots with rice and meringue (see APRICOT), using halved peaches, poached in vanilla-flavoured syrup.

Ring (border) of peaches à la Chantilly (Cold sweet or dessert). BORDURE DE PÊCHES À LA CHANTILLY – Bake a Vanilla custard (see CUSTARD) in a ring mould. Leave until cold and turn out onto a dish. Halve 6 peaches, poach in vanilla-flavoured syrup, drain, dry and arrange in the middle of the ring.

Cover the peaches with vanilla-flavoured whipped cream, piling it up in a dome. Decorate with crystallised cherries and halved pistachio nuts.

Peach soufflé. SOUFFLÉ AUX PÊCHES – Use peach purée, mixed with sugar syrup cooked to crack degree (see SUGAR) then with egg whites whisked into a stiff froth. Prepare as indicated in the recipe for fruit soufflés. (See SOUFFLES, Fruit base mixtures.)

Peach soufflés can also be made using a cream composition, mixed with peach pulp and pieces of peaches cooked in vanilla-flavoured syrup, well drained and whole.

Peaches Sultana. PÊCHES SULTANE – Poach whole or halved peaches in vanilla-flavoured syrup and leave until cold.

Drain them and arrange in a timbale or dessert dish on a foundation of Pistachio-nut ice cream (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES). Cover with syrup flavoured with attar of roses. Pour on a film of sugar cooked to pearl degree (see SUGAR).

Peaches in red wine à la bordelaise. PÊCHES AU VIN ROUGE, DITES À LA BORDELAISE – Halve and peel 4 peaches. Sprinkle with sugar and leave to stand for 1 hour. Boil 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) Bordeaux wine with 8 lumps of sugar and a small piece of cinnamon bark, in a copper pan. Poach the halved peaches in the wine. When they are cooked, drain and arrange in a glass dish. Boil down the syrup, pour over the peaches and leave to get cold.

Serve with slices of brioche, sprinkled with sugar and glazed in a hot oven.

PEACOCK. PAON – This magnificent bird was once esteemed by gastronomes as a rarity. Today it is still greatly admired for its ornamental qualities but has lost its gastronomical value.

In the Middle Ages it held pride of place at great state banquets. Its cooking needed all the skill of an experienced master-cook. The bird was skinned carefully, the skin was treated and dressed, the tail spread in a fan, the head with its crest wrapped in a piece of linen, constantly moistened with water during roasting. The feet and the beak were gilded, and the bird, dressed in full feather, was carried to the table in a solemn procession. At great feasts it was served either buried under flowers or with flames shooting out of its beak (this effect being achieved by putting a piece of cotton dipped in spirit, or a piece of camphor, in its beak).

The bird was set before the master of the house or the most distinguished guest present. Only the noblest present had the right to carve it, and only if he could do it with such skill as to allow each guest, however many there might be at table, to have a piece.

This operation was accomplished amid the praise and approval of the company, acknowledging the knight-trenchant's skill. He, fired with enthusiasm, would rise and with his hand on the dish, take an oath vowing to be worthy of the eulogies, either by being the first to raise his standard on a town which was about to be besieged, or by leading a lance attack upon the enemy.

Then each knight, receiving his piece, would make his own vow to the peacock, and failure to carry it out would be a blot on his escutcheon.

For culinary preparation of peacock, see PHEASANT.

Peanut plant with pods buried in the earth

PEANUT. ARACHIDE – Plant originating from America which is cultivated in all hot countries. Its pods, which bury themselves in the earth to mature the seeds, produce nuts which are eaten either raw or roasted. They are also known under the names of earthnuts, groundnut and monkey-nut. The nutrition value of the peanut is considerable.

Peanut oil and peanut butter are made from this nut. The latter can be eaten in sandwiches or on pieces of toast, accompanied by lettuce leaves, cream, chervil and tarragon, or on gingerbread, with jam or jelly.

Peanut oil – See OIL, Groundnut oil.

Peanut paste. PÂTE D'ARACHIDE – Prepare using blanched peanuts in the same way as Almond paste (see ALMOND).

PEAR. POIRE – Fruit of the pear tree of the family Rosaceae which does not seem to have been known in the distant past. It was cultivated by the Romans, and Pliny mentions 38 varieties of it, whilst Virgil only mentions three. Today, a whole volume would be required to enumerate them.

They are classified as follows: early varieties, usually sold in summer as they ripen; mid-season varieties, picked at the end of August or beginning of September and consumed in autumn; and late varieties, which are refrigerated and eaten in winter and early spring.

Among the early varieties are the Doyenné de juillet, Beurré Giffard, both of these in season from the beginning of July. Docteur Guyot, the earliest of the wide range of cultivated varieties appears next. The tasty Williams's or Bon Chrétien (Bartlett in U.S.A.) is sold throughout France from mid August to early October. It is a knobbly pear, yellow in colour, often tinged with pink. It has delicate, slightly musk-flavoured flesh.

The best known of the mid-season varieties are: Louise-Bonne, a large pear, red in colour, fading to yellow, with very delicate flesh; Alexandrine Douillard; Beurré Hardy, a russet pear streaked with dark red; Belle Epine du Mas. Other lesser known varieties are also popular: Beurré Clairgeau, for example, Beurré Diel, de Curé, and Beurré d'Arenberg, etc.

The best known of the late varieties are, first, the most esteemed of all, the Doyenné du comice, pale green shaded with darker green and red. It has an excellent flavour and is marketed from the end of October to the end of December.

Then there is Passe-Crassane, big, round, with flattened extremities, a musky flavour but rather gritty flesh. It refrigerates successfully and is marketed from Christmas to Easter.

French pears and some imported Italian pears keep the French market supplied from July to April. For the remainder of the year, there are pears from the southern hemisphere (Argentina, Australia, South Africa) mostly Beurré d'Anjou, and Packam's Triumph.

The pears of Provence and of the Rhône Valley account for half the bulk of French production. They are mostly early varieties (Docteur Guyot and Williams's). The Paris region, Loire Valley and Anjou grow mainly autumn and winter varieties (Beurré Hardy, Doyenné du comice and Passe-Crassane).

Cooking pears generally have rather crisp flesh, sometimes rather gritty and often tart. They are in season from December to May and should only be eaten cooked.

Perry pears are used in the making of perry or pear cider.

Dessert pears, among the best of dessert fruits, are usually eaten raw but may be cooked and used as a filling or garnish for tarts, flans, pies, iced mousses, charlottes, etc.

With only 2 per cent acid content, the pear is suitable for the most fragile digestions, provided it is well masticated. Its flesh contains a large number of mineral salts (notably manganese); its sugar is assimilable even by diabetics.

Excellent preserves are also made of dessert pears. They can be crystallised like any other fruit, whole or quartered. They are then partly dried in the oven and flattened on one side – these dried pears can be found in the shops and are called poires tapées in France.

Baked pears, also called poires en douillon and poires cartouches. POIRES EN RABOTTE – Peel and core the pears, half-cook in butter and wrap each in a piece of Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Put on top of each a circlet cut out of the same pastry. Brush with beaten egg and bake in a hot oven for 25 minutes, or longer, if the pears are large.

The douillons or baked pears can also be prepared without peeling. Half-cook them in the oven before enclosing in pastry.

Pears Bourdaloue. POIRES BOURDALOUE – Cut the pears in half if they are of medium size, or in quarters if they are large. Trim and poach in vanilla-flavoured syrup.

Put them in a flan case, filled with Frangipane cream (see CREAMS) and proceed as described in the recipe for Peaches Bourdaloue (see PEACH).

Beurré Clairgeau pears (Wide World)

Pears à l'impératrice (Robert Carrier)

Pears Brillat-Savarin. POIRES BRILLAT-SAVARIN – Poach 8 pear halves in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain them, dry, and arrange in a circle on a Genoese cake (q.v.) cut into two layers and sandwiched together with thick, rum-flavoured stewed pear mixture. Decorate with crystallised cherries and lozenges of angelica. Heat in the oven. Pour over some rum-flavoured, thinned-down apricot pulp. Serve with rum-flavoured Custard cream (see CREAMS) thickened with arrowroot.

Cardinal pears. POIRES CARDINAL – Poach the pears in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Leave them to cool, drain, and arrange in a fruit dish or in a timbale. Cover with kirsch-flavoured, sweetened raspberry purée, and sprinkle with chopped almonds.

Pear charlotte. CHARLOTTE DE POIRES – Using stewed pears, prepare as described in the recipe for Apple charlotte (see CHARLOTTE).

Pear compote. COMPOTE DE POIRES – Using whole pears if they are small, halved or quartered if they are large, prepare as described in the recipe for Peach compote (see COMPOTE).

Pears Condé

Pears Condé. POIRES CONDÉ – Using pears cooked in syrup, prepare like Condé apricots (see APRICOT).

Pear crôûtes. CROUTES AUX POIRES – Using halved or quartered pears poached in vanilla-flavoured syrup, prepare as described in the recipe for Apricot crôte (see APRICOT).

Pear flambé au kirsch. POIRES FLAMBÉES AU KIRSCH – Using whole or halved pears cooked in vanilla-flavoured syrup, prepare like Peach flambée au kirsch (see PEACH).

Pear fritters – See FRITTERS.

Pears Hélène. POIRES HÉLÈNE – Poach the pears in vanilla-flavoured syrup and arrange on vanilla-flavoured ice. Serve with hot Chocolate sauce (see SAUCE).

Pear ice and Iced mousse – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Iced pears Mourier. POIRES GLACÉES MOURIER – Peel Crassane pears to as uniform a size as possible and poach in syrup strongly flavoured with vanilla. Drain and chill on ice.

Arrange in a meringue flan case filling the middle with kirsch-flavoured Iced pear mousse (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES). Pipe whipped cream over the mousse through a forcing bag and decorate with glacé cherries, angelica lozenges and almonds.

Pears à l'impératrice. POIRES À L'IMPÉRATRICE – Using whole or halved pears, poach in vanilla-flavoured syrup and proceed as described in the recipe for Peaches à l'impératrice (see PEACH).

Pear Melba – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Pears with rice and meringue. POIRES MERINGUÉES AU RIZ – Proceed as described in the recipe for Apricots with rice and

Pear flan à la crème
(Café de Paris)
Phot. Larousse

meringue (see APRICOT), using halved or quartered pears poached in vanilla-flavoured syrup.

Ring (border) of pears Chantilly. BORDURE DE POIRES CHANTILLY – These cold sweets are made using quartered pears, cooked in syrup like Border of peaches à la Chantilly (see PEACH).

Pears with semolina. POIRES À LA SEMOULE GRATINÉES – Peel the pears, cut into quarters and cook in a light vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain and arrange in a circle in a buttered oven-proof dish on a thick layer of semolina, cooked as described in the recipe for Semolina pudding (see SEMOLINA).

Sprinkle with crushed macaroons and melted butter. Brown the top in a slow oven and serve in the same dish.

Pear soufflé. SOUFFLÉ AUX POIRES – Prepare like a cream soufflé (see SOUFFLÉ) using a cream composition mixed with pear pulp and a salpicon (q.v.) of crystallised pears, steeped in kirsch.

Pear tarts. FLANS, TARTES AUX POIRES – Prepare like any fruit flan or tart using sliced or quartered pears (see TART).

Timbale of pears d'Arenberg. TIMBALE DE POIRES D'AREMBERG – Butter a charlotte mould and line it with slightly firm Brioche dough (see DOUGH). Fill the mould with quarters of pears, half-cooked in vanilla-flavoured syrup, putting them in rows alternating with stewed apricots.

Cover with a piece of rolled-out brioche dough, sealing the edges. Make a small hole in the middle to allow steam to escape. Bake in a hot oven for about 45 minutes. Turn out on to a serving dish and pour over kirsch-flavoured Apricot sauce (see SAUCE).

PEARL. PERLE – Pearl-like. Hulled and polished barley is called pearl barley (see BARLEY).

A degree of the boiling of sugar is also called pearl degree (see SUGAR).

PEC – French word used only in the expression hareng pec, i.e. freshly salted herring, barrelled without being smoked.

PECCARY. PÉCARI – Species of South American wild pig. Its flesh is much prized but sometimes has a musky flavour. Peccary is prepared like young wild boar (q.v.).

PECTEN. PEIGNE – Genus of bivalve molluscs of the family Pectinidae with rounded shells, divided into grooves radiating from the middle of the hinge, the most important species being the scallop.

In many respects scallops can be compared to oysters, but, while oysters are stationary, stuck to the rocks, scallops are mobile, rising and whirling on the surface of the water.

Pilgrims to the shrine of Saint James at Santiago de Compostela always wore the 'palmer's cockle' (Pecten jacobaeus) on their shoulder, having gathered them on the seashore. Thus this mollusc first acquired in French the name of peigne Saint-Jacques and later became merely Saint-Jacques. (See SCALLOP, Scallop Saint-Jacques.)

PECTIN. PECTINE – Mucilaginous substance occurring as a constituent in certain fruits (quince, apples, oranges, lemons,

Pediments for cold dishes, after Carême etc.) and vegetables (split peas, lentils, etc.) which causes their pulp, when boiled with sugar in the presence of sufficient acid, to set as a jelly. The skin and pips of these fruits contain a great deal of pectin and should, therefore, be used in the preparation of jellies.

PEDIMENTS. SOCLES – Ornamental pediments once played a great part in the serving of cold dishes, important sweet dishes, etc.

In modern practice their use has been abandoned.

PEEL. ÉCALURE – Name given to the outer skin, whether hard or soft, of some fruit and vegetables.

PEELING. ÉPLUCHAGE – The action of removing the skin of fruit or vegetables. Not all vegetables are peeled. Strip green vegetables, such as sorrel, spinach and watercress, discarding all faded leaves. Other vegetables such as peas are shelled.

The process of preparing French beans and runner beans for the pot is known as stringing. When they are young they are simply topped and tailed.

PÉGOT – Sticky coating which covers Roquefort cheese.

PELAMIS (BONITO). PÉLAMIDE – Katsuwonus pelamis, a species of fish related to the tunny. It differs from the latter by its more elongated body, a longer and more pointed muzzle and a big jaw.

The prototype of the species of the common pelamis is the Sardinian pelamis or red-backed bonito. This fish, which reaches a length of 68 cm. (27 inches), is silvery with light blue tints on the back. It is found in the Mediterranean and in the Atlantic and can be prepared in any way suitable for tunny (q.v.).

PÉLARDON DE RUOMS – See CHEESE.

PELICAN – Large web-footed water fowl, with a large naked pouch or gular sac, which hangs from the long bill, serving as a temporary storage place for fish. They live mainly in freshwater lakes and lagoons, but there are a few marine species, like the Chilean and the Brown pelicans.

Their flesh is oily and tough but is, nevertheless, eaten in some countries.

PEL'MENI (Russian cookery). PELLMÈNES SIBÉRIENS – A kind of ravioli with a filling of beef, or a mixture of beef and pork. The pel'meni are generally served in soup or they can be served boiled with a dollop of sour cream. The Siberians like a mustard and vinegar dressing with the dish.

PELURES – French culinary term for usable parings, such as truffle or mushroom parings.

PEMMICAN – North American Indian cake of dried and pounded meat mixed with melted fat, a food product famous since the early expeditions to North America. It is no longer in demand.

Pemmican could be kept for a long time, did not deteriorate, and took up little space.

It was first made from the meat of bison (wild ox, now almost completely extinct), or from venison. The rump of the animal was cut into thin slices, dried in the sun and pounded finely. This meat powder was then mixed with melted fat in the proportion of two parts meat to one part fat, and enclosed in bags made from the animal's skin. It was eaten raw, or boiled in water.

Two pounds of pemmican were enough for the daily ration of a working man.

PÉNIDE – French term for sugar cooked with a decoction of barley, then poured on an oiled marble slab and twisted, like a cord, with oiled hands. This manipulation renders the sugar opaque, unlike barley sugar, which is left transparent.

PENNYROYAL. POULIOT – A kind of wild mint with a strong, pungent flavour, sometimes used as a condiment in cookery.

PEPPER. POIVRE – Fruit of the pepper plant, a genus of vine-like shrubs, a native of the Indian Archipelago. It is extensively cultivated throughout the whole of tropical Asia and equatorial America.

Pepper was one of the first spices to be introduced into Europe. It was used by Hippocrates in his prescriptions.

There are two kinds of pepper in commerce: black pepper, with a greenish-black wrinkled surface, and white pepper, which is the same seed freed from the skin and the fleshy part of the fruit. It is less pungent and less aromatic than black pepper. The berries are picked before they are ripe.

Ground pepper rapidly loses its flavour and aroma; it is therefore advisable always to grind it as and when required. A pepper mill is used for this purpose. With this one avoids possible substitutes and adulterations.

Pepper is a much-used condiment, entering into almost all culinary preparations. It is a strong stimulant, and its over-use should be avoided.

Red pepper or pimento. PIMENT – Capsicum frutescens has many varieties and is a native of America. It is now cultivated in most warm parts of the world. Dried and ground it becomes, according to the variety, cayenne pepper, chilli powder, paprika and red pepper.

All these peppers are used mainly as condiments.

Red pepper (pimento) paste (Créole cookery). PÂTE DE

Branch of pepper shrub

PIMENTS – This can be bought in delicatessen shops ready for use, but it can also be made at home.

Seed and pound long, strong red peppers with a little onion, ginger and salt in a mortar. Put this thick paste into a jar and cover it with best oil. Close with a well-fitting lid. Leave to macerate. This paste will keep indefinitely, as long as there is a protective layer of oil on top.

Sweet peppers. PIMENTS DOUX – The big sweet peppers or pimentos, which are cultivated in Spain, Italy, the South of France and in the United States, are used in cookery and are served, red or green, as hors-d'œuvre, as a vegetable and as a salad.

Sweet peppers fried in batter. PIMENTS DOUX EN FRITOT – Choose small-sized peppers, put them under a grill for a few moments to loosen the skin, peel and remove seeds. Stuff them with a salpicon (q.v.) of onions and mushrooms, softened in butter and bound with a little Tomato sauce (see SAUCE), mixed with some chopped garlic and parsley. Leave to macerate for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper.

A few minutes before serving, dip the peppers one by one in a light batter (see BATTER) and fry in smoking hot deep fat, drain on a cloth, season with fine dry salt and arrange in a heap on a dish. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with tomato sauce.

Sweet peppers au gratin. PIMENTS DOUX GRATINÉS – Seed and peel the peppers, and cook in butter. Line the bottom of an ovenproof dish with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), mixed with a good tablespoon of chopped onion softened in butter. Put in the peppers, cover with Mornay sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter and brown in a slow oven.

Sweet peppers or pimentos with black olives (Créole cookery). PIMENTS, PIMENTOS DOUX AUX OLIVES NOIRES – Put 4 big green peppers under a grill to make peeling easier. Remove seeds, shred the pimentos into fine julienne (q.v.) strips and season with a few tablespoons of Vinaigrette sauce (see SAUCE).

Arrange this julienne as a border in an hors-d'œuvre dish and fill the middle with small black olives, marinated in oil.

Section of pepper

Sweet peppers à l'orientale. PIMENTS DOUX À L'ORIENTALE – Peel and seed the peppers, and cut into large dice. Put into a casserole and for 500 g. (18 oz.) peppers add 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion which has been softened in oil without allowing it to colour. Add a pinch of garlic. Moisten with 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ⅔ cup) stock and simmer gently for 35 minutes.

Sweet peppers à la petite russe (Russian cookery) PIMENTS DOUX À LA PETITE RUSSIE – Cut 24 green sweet peppers open at the stalk end and remove the seeds. Parboil slightly and stuff with a forcemeat prepared in the following manner:

Chop coarsely 2 handfuls of sorrel leaves, 4 peeled and seeded tomatoes, 3 sweet Spanish onions, 3 green peppers and 1 stalk of fennel. Put these into a saucepan in which a little olive oil has been heated. At the first sign of boiling drain in a sieve to remove excess liquid. Fill the peppers with this forcemeat mixed with a little rice, parboiled in salted water and drained.

Put the peppers into an oiled sauté pan, packing them in fairly tightly. Moisten with tomato purée, which should not be too thick. Add the juice of 2 lemons and 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) olive oil. Cook for 25 minutes. Transfer to a deep dish and leave until cold.

These peppers are served as hors-d'œuvre, which in Russia are called zakuski.

Sweet peppers à la piémontaise. PIMENTS DOUX À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Seed and peel the peppers, and cook in stock for 15 minutes. Butter an ovenproof dish and put in the peppers in rows, with alternating rows of cheese risotto (see RICE, Risotto à la piémontaise). Finish with a layer of peppers. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and melted butter and brown gently in the oven.

Sweet pepper purée – See PURÉE.

Ragoût of sweet peppers à l'espagnole. RAGOÛT DE PIMENTS DOUX À L'ESPAGNOLE – Seed and peel 6 peppers, cut into quarters and put into a sauté pan in which 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) finely sliced onion has been softened in oil. Season with salt and red pepper. Add 1 clove of pounded garlic, sprinkle in 1 tablespoon flour and moisten with 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) stock and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) tomato purée. Simmer gently for 35 minutes. Serve in a vegetable dish or timbale. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sweet pepper salad à la créole. SALADE DE PIMENTS DOUX À LA CRÉOLE – Mixture of sweet peppers and boiled rice, seasoned with oil, vinegar, salt and paprika. (See SALAD, Sweet pimento salad à la créole.)

Stuffed sweet peppers à la turque (Scarnati)

Sweet peppers à la turque. PIMENTS DOUX FARCIS À LA TURQUE – Peel the peppers, open them at the stalk end and

Silver perch

River perch

remove seeds. Parboil for 5 minutes and stuff with a forcemeat composed of two-thirds cooked, chopped mutton and one-third rice, boiled in stock, seasoned with salt and pepper, flavoured with a little garlic and bound with 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) tomato purée.

Put the peppers into a sauté pan on a foundation of chopped onions lightly fried in oil. Moisten with a few tablespoons light Tomato sauce (see SAUCE). Bring to the boil on the stove, then cook in the oven with a lid on from 30 to 35 minutes. Serve in a timbale with the pan juices poured over.

Sweet peppers à la vinaigrette. PIMENTS DOUX À LA VINAIGRETTE – Choose small-sized peppers and cut them into quarters or slices. Arrange in an hors-d'œuvre dish. Season with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and chervil.

Sweet peppers prepared as an hors-d'œuvre may be garnished with finely sliced young onions, tomatoes cut in small pieces, chopped hard-boiled eggs and other ingredients normally used as hors-d'œuvre garnish.

PERCH. PERCHE – Genus of freshwater fish.

The common or river perch is considered in France one of the best freshwater fishes. It can be recognised by its closely spaced dorsal fins, with hard spines in the first, its scalloped scales sticking closely to the skin, and its bright colours, greenish above, golden yellow below, with 6 transverse brown bars. River perch reach a length of 35 cm. (14 inches) and attain a weight of almost 2 kg. (4 pounds). Its flesh is delicate and easily digestible.

The young of the species, called perchettes, are generally fried in deep fat; the medium-sized perch are prepared à la meunière and the large can be stuffed and prepared like shad (q.v.).

The name of perch is also given to other species of spiny-finned freshwater fish, such as silver perch, black bass, perch-trout, etc.

The silver perch, which originated in North America is now quite common in French rivers and is also found in lakes.

Black bass, also of North American origin, has been acclimatised in French waters for some years past. Its flesh is white, delicate and has few bones. In flavour it resembles river trout a little and can be prepared in any way suitable for this fish (see TROUT).

The American perch-trout, also now acclimatised in French waters, is prepared like river trout.

'Bass' is derived from 'barse', an old English name for the perch.

PERCOLATOR. PERCOLATEUR – Big coffee pot with a filter used for making black coffee in big quantities (see COFFEE).

PERDRIX – Term for old partridges.

These can be used only for preparing game forcemeats and purées. When they are not too tough, they can also be used for galantines, terrines, pâtés, game stocks and fumets.

If they are not too old and their flesh is not too dry, they can also be stewed with cabbage or used for Chartreuse of partridge (see PARTRIDGE). Tender old partridges can be prepared in any way suitable for young partridge.

PÉRIGOURDINE (À LA) – All dishes prepared à la périgourdine include a garnish of truffles, to which foie gras (q.v.) is sometimes added.

PERIWINKLE. BIGORNEAU – See WINKLE.

PERLOT – Name used in Manche for a small oyster.

PERRY. POIRÉ – Fermented beverage, made in the same way as cider, using pear juice.

The most famous perry is made in Normandy, from Coq pears.

PERSICO, PERSICOT – Liqueur made from brandy, almonds, peach stones, sugar and spices.

PERSILLADE – Term for chopped parsley, often mixed with varying quantities of chopped garlic, added to certain dishes at the end of cooking. The term also applies to left-over meat, fried in butter, cooking fat or oil and sprinkled with persillade. Thus we have the household expression persillade de boeuf, which means sautéed beef with chopped parsley.

PERSILLÉ – French term used to describe beef that is flecked with fat. Such persillage is only present in top-quality beef.

Persillé is also used to describe certain greenish-veined cheeses.

PERSILLER – Term which means to sprinkle a dish with chopped parsley.

PERSIMMON

PERSIMMON, KAKI – Fruit of a tree of Japanese origin. It has been cultivated for centuries in Japan and China, and is cultivated commercially in France, Italy, Spain and other Mediterranean countries and, in the U.S.A., in the South and in California. It is rather like a tomato in appearance. As it ripens, it turns from yellow to red. It is a soft, sweet fruit, quite pleasant in taste.

Iced persimmon à la créole. KAKIS GLACÉS À LA CRÉOLE – Cut a hole in the fruit round the stalk. Scoop out the pulp without breaking the skin. Sprinkle kirsch or some other liqueur inside the scooped-out fruit. Leave to steep for 1 hour in a cool place.

Rub the pulp through a fine sieve, add to Pineapple ice (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES) and fill the scooped-out fruit with the mixture.

Persimmon à l'impératrice. KAKIS À L'IMPÉRATRICE – Steep the scooped-out fruit in liqueur, as in the previous recipe. Dice the pulp finely and mix it with Rice à l'impératrice (see RICE). Fill with this mixture.

Persimmon jam. CONFITURE DE KAKIS – Made from very ripe fruit in the same way as Apricot jam (see JAMS AND JELLIES).

Persimmon with kirsch. KAKIS AU KIRSCH – Taking ripe persimmons, cut a hole in each. Sprinkle with sugar and pour kirsch into them. Serve on a bed of ice shavings.

Stewed persimmon. COMPOTE DE KAKIS – Made from very ripe fruit, in the same way as stewed apricots (q.v.).

PESTLE, PILON – Wood, metal or porcelain instrument used for pounding in a mortar.

PETERAM – Sheep's tripe as prepared in Luchon.

PETITE MARMITE – The petite marmite is one of the best specialities of Paris restaurants. This method of serving consommé in the earthenware receptacle in which it was cooked was invented in Paris some 80 years ago, and the vogue for petite marmite soup spread to the restaurants of the old world and the new.

The petite marmite contains all the ingredients which go to make up this dish, i.e. lean pieces of meat, oxtail, poultry, marrow bones and stock-pot vegetables, with the addition of little cabbage balls. The soup is usually served with small pieces of toast spread with bone marrow, rusks sprinkled with stockpot fat and dried in the oven, or thin slices of French bread dried in the oven and sprinkled with grated cheese.

For the method of preparation of the petite marmite, see SOUPS AND BROTHS, Clear soups.

PETIT MAURE – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

PETITS FOURS (Pâtisserie) – Name adopted for many kinds of small fancy cakes and biscuits.

The name, according to Carême, comes from the fact that they are usually baked in a slow oven, after the big cakes have come out and the temperature of the oven has gone down.

There are two kinds of petits fours. The first includes all the little fancy biscuits (cookies), tuiles, palets de dames, macaroons, shortbreads, etc. The second covers the iced petits fours, usually small Genoese cake fancies dipped into Fondant icing.

There are other petits fours which belong more in the realm of confectionery than pastry-making, such as candied fruit sold in the shops in France under the name of fruits déguisés, as well as marzipan fruits, moulded in different shapes and coloured.

PETITS-PIEDS – French menu term used to describe all the small birds, such as blackbirds, thrushes, ortolans, larks, etc.

PETITS POIS – Term for fresh garden peas.

PETS-DE-NONNE – See FRITTERS, Soufflé fritters.

PFANNKUCHEN (Austrian cookery). FAN-KOUKE – Roll out Brioche dough (see DOUGH)  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick. Cut rounds with a pastry cutter, about 6 to 8 cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 inches) in diameter. In the middle of these put 1 tablespoon rather thick apricot purée. Moisten the edges with water, cover with rounds of the same size, and press the edges firmly together.

Put the pfannkuchen on a floured cloth and leave in a warm place to rise. Fry them, drain, and immerse in hot rum syrup.

PFLAUMENKUCHEN (German cookery) – Plum tart made in the German way. (See TART, Fruit tart à l'allemande.)

PHEASANT. FAISAN – Phasianus is the Latin name of this succulent bird, which the ancients called the bird of Phasis, the river of Colchide which separated Europe from Asia. This bird of Phasis, originally a native of the Caspian region, has multiplied in game preserves in Europe, without losing anything of its distinctive flavour, which is essentially that of a wild bird.

Brillat-Savarin, who prized it very highly, tells us in his Variétés that 'the pheasant is an enigma to which only experts have the key, and they alone can savour it in all its excellence.

Petits fours (Claire)

Iced petits fours (Larousse)

Cock (left) and hen (right) pheasant
(J. Boyer)

'Eaten at precisely the right moment, its flesh is tender, sublime and highly flavoured, for it has at once something of the flavour of poultry and of venison.

'This ideal moment is when the pheasant begins to decompose. Then its aroma develops in an oily essence which requires a little fermentation to reach perfection, like the aroma of coffee which manifests itself only through roasting.'

Experiment has proved that birds preserved in their feathers have much more aroma than those left stripped for a long time, either because exposure to the air robs them of some of their aroma, or because (in the case of unplucked birds) some of the oil in the feathers is absorbed into the flesh and gives it added flavour.

The common pheasant is now found all over Europe, as far away as Siberia. Various breeds have sprung from the original Phasianus species. Among them the following provide the best eating: the common pheasant, the golden pheasant and the silver pheasant. The common pheasant, almost alone, is used for the table. The other breeds are rather for ornament.

True connoisseurs of this savoury bird prefer the hen pheasant to the cock. The distinctive features of the cock pheasant are the shape of its tail, which is longer than its whole body, and its neck feathers, which are iridescent and shot with blue and green. The hen has a short tail, and its plumage is much less brilliant in colouring than that of the cock.

A yearling pheasant can be distinguished from an old bird by the first wing-tip feather, which is pointed in a young bird and rounded in an old one. When the upper part of the pheasant's beak is pliable to the touch, one can be certain that it is a yearling bird.

HOT PHEASANT DISHES. FAISANS CHAUDS –

Pheasant à l'alsacienne. FAISAN À L'ALSACIENNE – Name given to pheasant with sauerkraut, prepared as indicated in the recipe below.

Pheasant à l'américaine. FAISAN À L'AMÉRICAINNE – Slit a pheasant along the back. Open and flatten gently. Season with salt and pepper. Sauté quickly in butter on both sides. Coat both sides with freshly made breadcrumbs seasoned with a touch of cayenne pepper. Grill the pheasant slowly. Cover with slices of grilled bacon and garnish with grilled tomatoes and mushrooms, bunches of watercress and potato crisps. Serve with Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Pheasant à la bohémienne. FAISAN À LA BOHÉMIENNE – Slit along the front. Draw the pheasant and remove the breast-bone. Stuff with a small cold foie gras (q.v.) studded with truffles, seasoned with salt and paprika and cooked for 15 minutes in Madeira.

Truss the bird, with the legs pressed tightly against the breast. Cook in a casserole in butter for about 45 minutes. Just before serving, pour 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) blazing brandy over the pheasant, and a few tablespoons of game essence. Serve in the cooking dish.

Pheasant with cabbage. FAISAN AUX CHOUX – Proceed as for Partridge with cabbage (see PARTRIDGE).

Casserole of pheasant. FAISAN EN CASSEROLE, EN COCOTTE – Truss the pheasant with the legs pressed tightly against the breast. Cook in butter in an earthenware casserole. When it is cooked, pour a little brandy and 2 to 3 tablespoons (3 tablespoons to scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) game stock over it.

Casserole of pheasant with mushrooms. FAISAN EN CASSEROLE AUX CHAMPIGNONS – Prepare the pheasant as for Casserole of pheasant. When it is half-cooked, add 12 mushrooms without the stalks. Finish cooking all together. Finish as for Casserole of pheasant.

Pheasant en chartreuse. FAISAN EN CHARTREUSE – Brown a pheasant in the oven and proceed as indicated for Chartreuse of partridge (see PARTRIDGE).

Pheasant en cocotte. FAISAN EN COCOTTE – Another name for Casserole of pheasant, for which the recipe is given above. In former times this dish was garnished with large mushrooms and potatoes trimmed into small pear shapes, cooked with the pheasant.

With or without this garnish, proceed as for Casserole of pheasant.

The term en cocotte indicates the method of pot-roasting in a fireproof earthenware dish (cocotte). Pheasant en cocotte can be served with various garnishes but in this case it is desirable to indicate the garnish by the name of the dish (see GARNISHES).

Pheasant en cocotte with cream. FAISAN EN COCOTTE À LA CRÈME – Truss the pheasant with the legs pressed against the breast. Cook in butter until three-parts cooked. Pour on  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) fresh cream. Finish cooking, basting the pheasant frequently with the cream. Just before serving, add a squeeze of lemon juice.

Soured cream may be used for this dish.

Pheasant croquettes. CROQUETTES DE FAISAN – Proceed as for Chicken croquettes (see CHICKEN), using a salpicon (q.v.) of pheasant, truffles and mushrooms blended in white or brown sauce (see SAUCE).

Pheasant cutlets. CÔTELETTES DE FAISAN – These are made with the breast of the bird, cut off before cooking, as for Chicken côtelettes (see CHICKEN). All recipes and garnishes for these are suitable for pheasant cutlets.

Small cuts are often called suprêmes.

Pheasant à la géorgienne (Russian cookery). FAISAN À LA GÉORGIENNE – Truss the pheasant en entrée, with the legs pressed against the breast. Bard it.

Put it in a casserole with 30 shelled and skinned walnuts.

PHEASANT

Moisten with the juice of 3 oranges and 750 g. (1½ lb.) grapes squeezed and strained, 1 glass of malmsey and the same amount of a very strong infusion of green tea. Add 3 tablespoons (scant ½ cup) butter. Season with salt and pepper. Cover the pheasant and cook in this mixture for about 45 minutes. Drain. Untruss and remove barding. Brown it, and put it on a dish surrounded with fresh walnuts. Pour on the cooking stock, boiled down with a few tablespoons of brown stock added or game essence, and strained.

Grilled pheasant. FAISAN GRILLÉ – This method is generally used for very young pheasant. Slit the bird along the back. Open and flatten gently. Season with salt and pepper. Coat with butter, and dip in breadcrumbs; grill slowly, as for Grilled chicken diable (see CHICKEN).

Grilled pheasant is served with devilled sauce (see SAUCE, Diable sauce or Périgueux sauce).

Pheasant à la languedocienne. FAISAN À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Joint a pheasant. Season with salt and pepper. Make a mirepoix (q.v.) of carrots, onions, celery and lean raw ham seasoned with salt, pepper, powdered thyme and bay leaf. Cook slowly until very tender. Put the pheasant in the pan with this mirepoix. Brown and sprinkle with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour. Cook the flour until it is golden in colour. Moisten with 3 dl. (½ pint, 1¼ cups) red wine and mix well. Add a few tablespoons clear stock and a small bouquet garni (q.v.). Cover, and cook for 35 minutes.

Drain the pheasant. Put it in an ovenware dish with 8 small mushrooms and 12 thick strips of truffle. Pour on 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy. Moisten with the strained sauce and add butter. Put the lid on the dish, seal the edges with flour-and-water paste. Stand in water and cook in the oven for 35 minutes. Serve in the baking dish.

Pheasant à la normande. FAISAN À LA NORMANDE – Brown the pheasant in butter and put it in an ovenware dish or casserole lined with a layer of peeled, sliced sweet apples lightly browned in butter. Surround the pheasant with apples prepared in the same way. Cook in a slow oven. Just before serving, pour fresh cream and a little Calvados over it.

Pheasant à la périgieux. FAISAN À LA PÉRIGUEUX – Truffled pheasant, pot-roasted instead of roasted. It is served on a slice of bread fried in butter and surrounded by large forcemeat balls made from Game forcemeat with truffles (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS). Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE) with the cooking stock added to it.

Hot pheasant pie – See PIE, Game pies.

Pheasant pie with truffles. TOURTE DE FAISAN AUX TRUFFES – Proceed, using pheasant, as indicated for Woodcock pie with truffles (see WOODCOCK).

Pheasant purée. PURÉE DE FAISAN – Purée made from pot-roasted pheasant or pheasant scraps. It is used for filling small vol-au-vent, barquettes, or tartlets. Proceed as indicated for Purée of woodcock (see WOODCOCK).

Roast pheasant. FAISAN RÔTI – Truss and bard the breast with a large slice of pork fat. Tie the fat with string. Baste the pheasant with melted butter. Season. Roast in a hot oven for about 30 minutes. If the pheasant is roasted on the spit, allow a few minutes longer for cooking.

Untruss the pheasant and put it on a slice of fried bread, spread with à gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) if desired. (The stuffing should be made with the chopped liver of the pheasant.) Garnish with watercress and lemon. Serve the cooking stock, diluted, with it.

Pheasant à la Sainte-Alliance. FAISAN À LA SAINT-ALLIANCE – 'Take a pheasant, hung until it is perfect to eat. Pluck it and interlard it carefully with the freshest and firmest pork fat you can find.

'Take 2 woodcocks. Bone and draw them and make 2 piles, one of the meat, the other of the entrails and livers.

'With the meat, make a stuffing by chopping it with steamed beef bone-marrow, a little grated pork fat, pepper, salt, finest herbes (q.v.), and a quantity of good truffles enough to stuff the pheasant completely.

'Take care to put in the stuffing in such a way that none falls out. This is sometimes difficult when the bird is rather old. There are various ways of achieving this end. One is to cut a slice of bread and tie it to the bird with string, so as to seal its breast.

'Cut a slice of bread which overlaps the laid-out pheasant from neck to tail by 5 cm. (2 inches). Next take the liver and entrails of the woodcock. Pound in a mortar with 2 large truffles, 1 anchovy, a little grated pork fat and a piece of good fresh butter.

'Toast the bread and spread this paste evenly on it. Put it under the pheasant, prepared as indicated above, so that the bread will be thoroughly impregnated with the roasting juice. When the pheasant is cooked, serve it, elegantly couched, on the slice of bread. Surround with Seville oranges.' (Brillat-Savarin, Physiologie du goût.)

Salmis of pheasant. SALMIS DE FAISAN – Roast the pheasant in the oven or on the spit until it is three-quarters cooked. Joint it. Trim the pieces and skin them. Put them in a buttered pan. Cover with 150 g. (5 oz., 1½ cups) mushrooms tossed in butter (whole if they are small, sliced if they are large) and 150 g. (5 oz., 1½ cups) shredded truffles. Pour on 4 tablespoons (½ cup) Espagnole sauce, based on concentrated game stock (see SAUCE). Keep hot, but do not boil.

Chop the carcase and the trimmings. Brown them slightly in a pan in which 4 tablespoons (½ cup) mirepoix (q.v.) has been cooked. Moisten with the cooking stock of the pheasant, diluted with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) white wine. Boil down. Moisten with 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE) based on concentrated game stock. Cook for 15 minutes. Strain the sauce through a fine strainer, pressing with the back of a spoon so as to extract all the juice from the meat and vegetables. Strain this sauce once more through muslin. Boil down. Add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) blazing brandy and 4 tablespoons (½ cup) butter. Mix and pour over the pheasant. Heat, but do not boil.

Drain the pheasant and arrange the joints in a pyramid on a slice of bread fried in butter, spread with à gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and brown in the oven. Put the mushrooms and truffles on top. Pour the sauce, piping hot, over the dish.

Instead of serving the salmis on a slice of bread it may be put in a deep dish or a shallow bowl. Pour the sauce over it and garnish with slices of fried bread cut into heart shapes and spread with à gratin game forcemeat.

Salmis of pheasant in red wine. SALMIS DE FAISAN AU VIN ROUGE. Proceed as indicated above, moistening with red instead of white wine.

Sautéed pheasant. FAISAN SAUTÉ, SAUTÉ DE FAISAN – Pheasant is seldom prepared in this way. A tender young pheasant can, however, be sautéed.

Joint the bird, season with salt and pepper, and sauté slowly in butter, taking care not to dry it.

Pour over it the cooking stock diluted with white wine or any other wine, according to the recipe, flavoured with a little concentrated game or veal stock, with butter added.

Pheasant à la Souvarov. FAISAN À LA SOUVAROV – Stuff the pheasant with a coarse salpicon (q.v.) of foie gras and truffles seasoned with salt, pepper and spice, and with brandy poured over it.

Truss the bird with the legs pressed against the breast. Bard it and cook in butter until three-quarters cooked. Untruss and untie the barding. Put it in an earthenware dish with 12 medium-sized truffles, tossed in butter. Moisten with the cooking stock diluted with Madeira. Add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) Demi-glace sauce based on concentrated game stock with a little brandy (see SAUCE).

Cover the dish and seal with flour-and-water paste. Finish cooking in the oven for 15 to 18 minutes.

Suprêmes of pheasant. SUPRÊMES DE FAISAN – Cut off the wings and breasts of the pheasant before cooking (these are the suprêmes). Poach them or sauté them in butter, and serve with various sauces and garnishes.

All recipes for suprêmes of chicken (see CHICKEN) are suitable for suprêmes of pheasant.

Truffled pheasant. FAISAN TRUFFÉ – Pheasant is truffled in the same way as young turkey (see TURKEY).

For a medium-sized truffled pheasant use 350 g. (12 oz.) fresh pork suet and 250 g. (9 oz.) truffles. Cook for 50 to 55 minutes in a medium oven, or for 55 minutes to an hour on the spit.

The bird must be truffled at least 24 hours before cooking.

COLD PHEASANT DISHES. FAISANS FROIDS.

Pheasant aspic à l'ancienne. ASPIC DE FAISAN À L'ANCIENNE – Truss a pheasant with the legs pressed against the breast. Pot-roast in butter, keeping the meat slightly pinkish in colour. Cut off the breasts. Separate the mignon filets (underpart of breast meat) from the suprêmes. Cut each suprême in 3 thin aiguillettes (q.v.).

Spread one side of these aiguillettes thickly with pheasant purée made from the legs and some foie gras (q.v.), blended with a little concentrated game stock, flavoured with a little liqueur brandy, with  $\frac{1}{3}$  its weight of whipped cream added. Dome the purée slightly on top of the aiguillettes of pheasant. Cover them with White chaud-froid sauce based on game stock (see SAUCE).

Put a strip of truffle dipped in jelly on top of each. Glaze with game jelly (see JELLY, Game jelly stock). Line an aspic mould with jelly and put in the aiguillettes. Decorate with slices cut from the mignon filets and with strips of truffle.

Fill the mould with clear game jelly. Leave to set in a refrigerator or cooler. Turn out the aspic straight on to a dish or on to a slice of bread cut to the size of the mould and buttered.

Surround the aspic with chopped jelly and a border of rounds of jelly shaped with a pastry-cutter.

Ballottine of pheasant in jelly (Carême's recipe). BALLOTTINE DE FAISAN À LA GELÉE – 'Take a Strasbourg foie gras. Soak in cold water and blanch. Cut each half into 4 filets and trim.

'Pound 2 of these filets in a mortar with the trimmings and the meat of a red partridge with an equal weight of pork fat. Season the mixture very well. Add 2 egg yolks and fines herbes tossed in butter. Pound the lot thoroughly.' (By 'fines herbes', Carême means cultivated mushrooms.)

'Rub the stuffing through a quenelle sieve. Carefully bone a well-hung, fat pheasant. Lay it on a cloth and season very well. Lay on top of it half the the stuffing, and then 3 filets of foie gras, interspersing these with halved truffles. Add as much Spiced salt (see SALT) as required. Cover the whole with half the remaining stuffing.

'Lay on top the rest of the foie gras and the halves of truffle. Season and cover with the rest of the stuffing. Fold the pheasant into shape. Wrap in a cloth. Tie and cook in jelly stock flavoured with Madeira, to which have been added the bones and trimmings of the pheasant and partridge.

'Leave the ballottine to cool under a light weight. Glaze with jelly in the usual way.'

Chaud-froid of pheasant. FAISAN EN CHAUD-FROID – Truss a pheasant with the legs pressed against the breast. Cook in butter, taking care that the meat remains pinkish. Joint the bird, skin the pieces and trim them.

Coat with Chaud-froid sauce, brown (see SAUCE) prepared in the usual way, with game stock flavoured with essence of truffles. Decorate the pieces of pheasant with truffles cut into fancy shapes, the whites of hard-boiled eggs and other decorative motifs, dipped into half-set jelly (see JELLY, Game jelly stock) before they are put on the bird. Glaze the joints with jelly. Chill in a refrigerator.

Line a dish with buttered sandwich bread. Arrange the pheasant on it, with the legs on the platform of bread and the breast and wings on top. Surround with chopped jelly (use a spoon for this; if the jelly is piped it may be discoloured). Make a border of rounds of jelly, cut out with a pastry cutter. As with all chauds-froids of poultry or winged game the pheasant en chaud-froid can be served in a glass bowl or deep silver dish, and coated with clear jelly.

Daube of pheasant in jelly. FAISAN EN DAUBE À LA GELÉE – Slit a pheasant along the back and bone it. Season inside and stuff with a forcemeat made of lean veal, À gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and foie gras with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) game essence and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) brandy added. Season well and bind with 1 or 2 egg yolks. Spread the stuffing evenly on the pheasant and put in the middle half a raw foie gras studded with 4 large raw quarters of truffle. Season with spiced salt and pour on a little brandy. Fold the pheasant into shape. Truss with the legs pressed against the breast. Bard with a thin slice of pork fat and pot-roast in Madeira for 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Drain the pheasant. Untruss and remove the pork fat. Put it in an earthenware dish. Moisten with the cooking stock with 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) jelly added (game jelly for preference).

Leave to cool thoroughly for at least 12 hours. Before serving skim off the film of fat on the surface of the jelly.

Galantine of pheasant in jelly. GALANTINE DE FAISAN À LA GELÉE – Proceed as for Ballottine of pheasant in jelly.

Chaud-froid of pheasant
(French Government Tourist Office)

Pheasant pâté (Debilloy. Phot. Larousse)

Pheasant loaf à l'ancienne – See LOAVES, Winged game loaf.

Pheasant pâté. PÂTE DE FAISAN – Bone a large pheasant. Cut the wings and breasts into thin slices, and steep in brandy. With the rest of the meat prepare a stuffing, flavour with a little brandy and bind with an egg. Line an oval pâté mould with a hinged lid with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH), and cover with thin slices of pork fat.

Put a layer of stuffing at the bottom of the mould. On this arrange slices of breast alternating with thin slices of foie gras and quartered truffles. Cover these with a layer of stuffing and continue to fill the mould in this way to within  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) of the rim, ending with a layer of stuffing. On top of this last layer, put  $\frac{1}{2}$  bay leaf. Fold the overlapping ends of the pork fat inward. Cover the pâté with an oval layer of rolled-out pastry and press down at the edges. Pink the edges with pastry pincers to form a coxcomb design. Make a hole in the middle of the pâté for the escape of steam. Decorate the top with pastry motifs. Brush the top of the pâté with egg and bake in a moderate oven for  $1\frac{1}{4}$  hours, or longer if the pâté is large.

Leave to cool without turning out. When it is cold, pour in half-set jelly (see JELLY, Game jelly stock).

Pheasant pâtés (like all cold pâtés) must be prepared at least 24 hours before using.

In addition to those listed above, other ingredients may be used, such as thin slices of lean cooked ham or pickled tongue, thin slices of fresh pork fat, etc.

Another way of preparing the pâté is to dice coarsely the slices of pheasant and other whole ingredients and mix them with the stuffing.

Potted pheasant. TERRINE DE FAISAN – Made with the same ingredients as those indicated for Pheasant pâté: thin slices of breast of pheasant, foie gras, truffles, game stuffing.

Fill a bowl lined with thin slices of pork fat and the ingredients in alternate layers. On top of the last layer of stuffing put a thin slice of pork fat. Cover the bowl, sealing the edges with flour-and-water paste. Stand in water and cook in the oven for 1 to  $1\frac{3}{4}$  hours, according to the size of the bowl. Leave the mixture to cool under a light weight.

Turn it out next day. Dry it with a cloth. Line the bowl with a layer of lard  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick, and leave to set. Put the mixture on top. Pour on cool lard to cover and seal the edges with lard.

Thus encased in fat, the potted pheasant will keep for several days. If it is to be eaten at once, concentrated game jelly may be used instead of lard.

Preserved pheasant with foie gras and jelly. CONSERVE DE

FAISAN AU FOIE GRAS À LA GELÉE – Prepare the pheasant as indicated for Daube of pheasant in jelly.

Drain, untruss and remove barding. Dry well in a cloth. Put it in a tin just large enough to take it whole. Cover with clear jelly made from the cooking stock and clarified (see ASPIC, Clarification of aspic jelly), flavoured with Madeira or some other heavy wine. Solder the tin. Mark the lid with a touch of solder. Put it in a pan with enough water to cover. Boil steadily for  $1\frac{1}{4}$  hours. Take the tin out of the pan and put it upside down on a table so that the breast of the pheasant is glazed with jelly. Leave to get cold.

Pheasant Prince Orloff in jelly. FAISAN PRINCE ORLOFF À LA GELÉE – Bone a pheasant, leaving the bones in the wing tips and lower part of the leg. Season the bird inside, and stuff with a forcemeat made of the boned meat of another pheasant, trimmed and minced, with an equal quantity of chopped pork fat and  $\frac{1}{4}$  its volume of cooked foie gras coarsely diced, and diced truffles. Season the mixture well and flavour with 1 tablespoon brandy.

Fold the pheasant into shape and sew it up. Baste with melted butter. Wrap in a cloth and tie with string. Put the pheasant in a braising pan lined with fresh pork skin and sliced carrots and onions tossed in butter. Moisten with game stock, made separately from the bones and trimmings of the two pheasants. Cover, and cook slowly for 15 minutes.

Drain the pheasant. Unwrap it, then wrap it again after washing the cloth in hot water and wringing it out. Tie and leave until it is quite cold, unwrap it and dry it well in a cloth. Coat it completely with White chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE) made with the cooking stock. Decorate the breast of the bird with truffles, and the whites of hard-boiled egg and jelly flavoured with Madeira. Serve on a slice of sandwich bread, cut to the size of the pheasant and spread with melted butter. Surround with 8 truffles, cooked in Madeira, scooped out and filled with Foie gras purée (see PURÉE). Separate the truffles with 1 tablespoon chopped jelly, and make a border of jelly cut into triangles.

Pheasant with sauerkraut or à l'alsacienne. FAISAN À LA CHOUROUTE, À L'ALSACIENNE – Truss the pheasant with the legs pressed tightly against the breast. Cook in butter, keeping the meat pinkish inside. Put in a braising pan in which sauerkraut has been cooked, flavoured with Essence of game (see ESSENCE) and goose fat. Garnish with fat bacon and saveloy. Cook in the oven for 25 minutes.

Put the pheasant on a bed of sauerkraut, surround with the saveloy and the fat bacon cut in rectangles.

PHOSPHORUS. PHOSPHORE – Phosphorus is a chemical element which is a constituent of animal tissues, including the brain, and forms a major part of bone material. In combination with albumen (nuclein) or the fats (lecithin), it enters into the composition of the muscles, the glands and the nerve tissues.

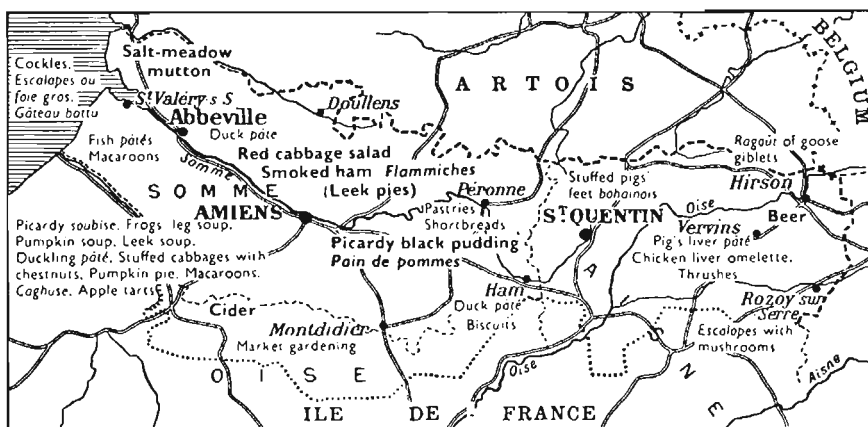

The food we eat contains too great a proportion of phosphorus substances, much of which is eliminated. The substance which is easiest to assimilate is vegetable phosphorus matter.

PHYSALIS PERUVIANA – Botanical name for Cape gooseberry. See also STRAWBERRY TOMATO.

PICARDAN – Variety of Languedoc vine plant, producing Muscat wines.

PICARDY. PICARDIE – This region of France, according to some authorities, is the least favoured from the gastronomical point of view.

Leek flan, or flamque, enjoys great popularity in Picardy and in the Champagne region, though it is not a dish of transcendent quality.

Gastronomic map of Picardy

There are many other culinary specialties in the Picardy region, for example, the duck pâtés of Amiens and Abbeville.

The market gardens of the region produce very good vegetables, most of which are exported to England.

Cattle raised for food in the Picardy pastures produce meat of the first quality. The Baie-de-Somme salt meadow sheep are famous. Picardy pork is excellent and is made into charcuterie.

Although the coast of Picardy does not stretch very far, sea fish and shellfish are found in great abundance. Cockles, which are called hérons locally, are found in prodigious quantities in the Baie de la Somme. Excellent fish is found in the River Somme.

This region abounds in birds of passage: wild duck, teal and garganey, and sometimes bustards, or wild geese. Thrushes, too, are found in Picardy in great numbers.

Excellent cheeses are made in Picardy: those of Maroilles, usually called Marolles, and those of Mouchelet are well known.

Cider is the local drink, but beer is also popular.

Culinary specialties – Andouilles, andouillettes, various small sausages, black puddings, smoked ham, etc.

Tripe soup, which is made as an ordinary pot-au-feu using pork offal and parings, muzzle, ears, liver, heart, spleen, etc.; pumpkin soup; frogs' legs soup; leek soup; flamiques or flamiches, a kind of country flan made of leeks, onions and marrows; various fish pâtés; Amiens and Abbeville duck pâté; caqhuse, a fresh piece of braised pork; potato flan, potato pie.

Among the sweet and confectionery specialties of Picardy are apple tart; Péronne shortbreads; vitalons, a kind of quenelle made of batter and poached in sweetened, aromatised milk; gâteau battu; plum tart, taliburs aux pommes, similar to Normandy douillon; bissale, made of buttered bread dough; and the Amiens, Abbeville and Ham macaroons and biscuits.

PICAREL – French name for small Mediterranean fish, which is prepared like anchovy.

PICAUT – The turkey is called by this name in Normandy.

PICCALILLI – A pickle, originally East Indian, of chopped vegetables in vinegar, mustard and spices. This product is found in the shops ready for use.

PICHOLINE – French name for big green table olives.

PICKEREL. BROCHETON – Young pike. It can be prepared in any manner given for large pike (see PIKE), and is used mainly for matelotes (q.v.) and freshwater fish stews.

PICKLED. À L'ÉCARLATE – Pork or beef are pickled by steeping in brine with saltpetre added, and then boiled.

The addition of saltpetre to the brine causes the meat to turn red and is known in France as pork or beef à l'écarlate (scarlet meat).

PICKLES – Gherkins, cucumbers and various vegetables pickled in vinegar and spices. This product is found in the shops ready for use, and is often bottled in the home.

PICNIC. PIQUE-NIQUE – Meal taken in the open, or a meal to which each participant contributes a dish.

PICODON DE DIEULEFIT – See CHEESE.

PICQUEPOUL or PICPOUILLE – Variety of vine plant grown in Gers, from which Armagnac is distilled.

PIED-DE-MOUTON – Common name in France for an excellent edible fungus.

PIE. PÂTÉ – Dish consisting of a pastry crust with various kinds of filling.

Some of the recipes given below are for rich pies (pâtés) made in moulds rather than pie dishes. General instructions for doing this are as follows:

Lining the mould. Choose a hinged mould, round, oval or rectangular, depending on the nature of the pie in question, and butter it carefully.

Take three-quarters of the pastry (prepared in advance and well rested). Roll into a ball, roll out, and fold in the shape of a calotte (flattened dome). Roll out this calotte, unfold and repeat the same process, rolling it in the opposite direction to a thickness of  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch). Unfold the calotte of pastry and put it in a mould placed on a metal baking sheet. Press the pastry down round the sides of the tin, taking care to see that it is pressed evenly all the way to the bottom and rises about 2 cm. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  inch) above the edge of the tin, to form a rim which will later be sealed with a pastry lid.

Filling the pie. Line the bottom and the walls of the pie with very thin rashers of bacon.

Put a thin layer of the prescribed forcemeat over the bacon. Smooth this carefully, to ensure that it is even all over. Fill the pie with thin slices of veal browned in butter, diced or sliced poultry or game meat, fresh pork prepared in the same manner as the veal, ham, etc. Alternate with bacon cut in thin slivers, or truffles peeled and steeped in brandy with spiced salt and cut into pieces.

This filling should be put into the pie in layers sealed down with a small quantity of the forcemeat. Cover the last layer of forcemeat with a thin rasher of bacon.

Sealing the pastry. Roll the remainder of the pastry into a piece of the same diameter as the opening of the mould. Moisten the edges of the rim with water, put the rolled-out pastry lid on top and seal the edges, pressing lightly. Crimp the edges with a pastry crimper.

Decorate the top with pieces of dough cut in fancy shapes, and brush with beaten egg. Make a hole in the middle. Butter a piece of thin cardboard, roll it into a tube and place in the hole. (This chimney provides an outlet for steam during cooking.) Brush the top with beaten egg once again.

Baking the pie. Bake the pie in a hot oven, allowing 35 to 40 minutes per kg. (18 to 20 minutes per lb.). When cooked, leave until completely cold. Pour a few tablespoons of melted butter or warm lard through the 'chimney' to fill up any gaps in the forcemeat. If the pie is intended for immediate consumption, pour into it some meat, chicken or semi-liquid game jelly, depending on the nature of the pie.

Do not turn out until the butter or the jelly are cold, and sufficiently solidified. Keep in a cool place until ready to serve.

The above method of preparation for meat, poultry or game pies is also applicable to fish or shellfish pies.

FISH AND SHELLFISH PIES. PÂTES DE POISSONS, DE CRUSTACÉS -

Eel pie. PÂTE D'ANGUILLE - Cut boned eel fillets into thin slices about 6 cm. (2½ inches) long. Stud them with truffles or desalted anchovy fillets. Marinate for 2 hours in white wine, brandy, oil, salt, pepper and dried finest herbes (chopped parsley, tarragon and chives).

Fry the fillets briskly in butter and sprinkle with chopped shallots. Line a mould with pastry dough and line the sides and the bottom with a layer of Pike forcemeat or other fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) mixed with diced truffles.

Fill the pie with the eel, alternating with layers of pike forcemeat, and pour the marinating liquor over the top. Cover with another layer of forcemeat, sprinkle with melted butter, and put on a pastry lid. Decorate the top of the pie with pieces of pastry cut in fancy shapes. Make a hole in the middle to allow steam to escape.

Bake in a moderate oven for 1½ to 2 hours, depending on the size of the pie. Pour in a few tablespoons of Demi-glace or Velouté sauce, based on fish stock (see SAUCE) through the opening in the top.

Diced mushrooms tossed in butter and sprinkled with chopped finest herbes (q.v.) can be put into the forcemeat.

Eel pie can be garnished inside with shelled crayfish tails, in which case Crayfish sauce (see SAUCE) is poured in at the end. The pie can also be filled simply with the fish, each layer of the eel slices being covered with a layer of truffle slivers.

Eel pie to be served cold is prepared in the same manner. When it is cold, pour a few tablespoons of fish aspic jelly (see ASPIC, Aspic of fish) made from the bones and parings of eel into it, or, if the pie has to be kept for some time, a few tablespoons of melted, almost cold butter.

Lamprey pie à la bordelaise. PÂTE DE LAMPROIE À LA BORDELAISE - Prepare as Eel pie using fillets of lamprey and Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) mixed with chopped parsley and chives. Put a layer of the white part of leeks, sliced and lightly cooked in butter, and a layer of truffle slivers, between each layer of lamprey fillets.

Salmon pie. PÂTE DE SAUMON - Line a mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Prepare as Eel pie, using slices of salmon, Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), truffles, and other garnishes.

Salmon pie en pantin. PÂTE DE SAUMON EN PANTIN - Prepare with slices of salmon, Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), truffles, and other garnishes, arranged in layers on a sheet of Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) rolled out into an oval shape.

Cover with pastry, seal and crimp the edges. Decorate the top with pieces of pastry cut in fancy shapes. Brush with beaten egg, make a hole in the middle to allow steam to escape, and bake in a slow oven.

This pie can be made of Brioche dough (see DOUGH). It can also be made as a turnover.

Salmon pie à la russe I. PÂTE DE SAUMON À LA Russe - 'I shall give you the details of this hot pie as I have seen it made in the house of the Russian Ambassador (Prince Kurakin), by his Russian cook,' writes Carême.

'Having cut a small fillet of salmon into slices, season with finest herbes (q.v.), salt salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Dredge a small Strasbourg foie gras, cut in slices, in the same seasoning and herbs. Chop 12 hard-boiled egg yolks. Line the pie mould as usual for a hot pie, garnish the sides and bottom with rice cooked in good chicken stock (the rice, as well as the rest of the garnish, should be cold). Put in a layer of salmon slices, sprinkle with chopped yolks, cover with slices of foie gras, and follow up with a sprinkling of yolks. Repeat the process again with the same filling of salmon and foie gras. Pour over butter flavoured with finest herbes in which the foie gras and the salmon have been tossed. Cover the rest with a layer of rice and finish making the pie as usual. Bake it for 1½ hours and serve at once.

'The Russian cook put no sauce in, but a good concentrated Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE) will give more taste and will render this strange ragoût more delicate.' (Traité des entrées chaudes de pâtisseries, by Carême.)

Salmon pie à la russe II - See COULIBIAC.

Sole pie. PÂTE DE SOLES - Prepare as Eel pie in an oval or rectangular mould, lined with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH), using fillets of sole, Fish forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), truffle and other garnish.

This pie can be made by filling it with rolled fillets of sole, stuffed with truffled fish forcemeat.

Spiny lobster and other shellfish pie. PÂTE DE LANGOUSTE - Prepare as Eel pie replacing the eel by slices of the shellfish. The forcemeat used for this pie should have some compound butter, flavoured and coloured with the appropriate shellfish, added to it (see BUTTER).

Turbot pie. PÂTE DE TURBOT - Prepare as Eel pie, in an oval or rectangular mould, replacing the eel by fillets of turbot.

Proceeding as described in the recipe for Eel pie and other recipes, pies can be made of all kinds of fish, such as brill, pike, cod, carp, sturgeon, eel-pout, whiting, grayling, salmon, trout, etc.

All these pies can be served cold.

GAME PIES. PÂTES DE GIBIER.

Blackbird pie. PÂTE DE MERLES - Prepare as described in the recipe for Thrust pie below.

Hare pie. PÂTE DE LIÈVRE - Prepare as Rabbit pie below, using sliced hare meat, Game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and truffles.

Lark pie I. PÂTE DE MAUVIETTES - Using boned larks, foie gras or à gratin forcemeat and truffles, prepare as Quail pie.

Lark pie II or Dijon roussotte. PÂTE D'ALOUETTES, DIJONNAIS ROUSSOTTE - For 6 persons take 18 larks, 350 g. (12 oz.) fresh pork fillet, 100 g. (4 oz.) fat pork, 100 g. (4 oz.) cooked ham.

Bone the larks, leaving only the leg bones (keeping all the trail) and marinate them for 2 days in brandy, Madeira, salt, pepper and spices.

Cut the pork fillet and fat pork into large dice and brown lightly over a high flame. Leave until quite cold, then pound in a mortar, incorporating the cooked ham, 5 or 6 good truffles and the larks' trail, lightly fried in butter. Taste, add seasoning if necessary, and rub through a fine sieve.

Reshape the larks, stuffing with a little of this forcemeat, a piece of truffle and a piece of foie gras.

Line a mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Cover with very thin rashers of bacon, spread a little forcemeat on the bottom and put in the larks, placing them in rows and interspersing each row with a thin layer of forcemeat. Put on a pastry lid (without making any hole in the centre, as for other pies). Scatter 2 or 3 pieces of fresh butter on the top and bake in a slow oven for about 1½ hours. Turn out and serve as it is.

The pie can be served cold. In this case, alternate the larks with good pieces of truffled foie gras. When the pie is cold, pour in some game aspic jelly (see JELLY, Game jelly stock).

The larks can be replaced by thrushes, quails, etc. This pie is also known as Pâté Racouchot.

Pheasant pie. PÂTE DE FAISAN – Prepare, using jointed roast pheasant, kept very underdone, as described in the recipe for Woodcock pie.

Quail pie with truffles. PÂTE DE CAILLES AUX TRUFFES – Line a low round mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) and coat the sides and the bottom with A gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Stuff the quails with foie gras and truffles, roll into little ballottines and half-cook in Madeira-flavoured braising stock. Arrange the quails in a circle. Fill the middle of the mould with truffles lightly tossed in butter. Cover with a pastry lid and finish making the pie in the usual manner. Bake in a moderate oven for about 1 hour.

Before serving, pour in a few tablespoons of Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) having added to it the liquor left from braising the quails.

This type of pie is usually made in shallow moulds; it is really a croustade (q.v.) more than a pie and is usually described on the menus as croustade of quails.

Rabbit pie with truffles. PÂTE DE LAPEREAU AUX TRUFFES – Slice the fillets of 2 young rabbits and brown them briskly in butter without actually cooking them. Using the shoulder flesh and boned legs, prepare a fine forcemeat and add to it half its weight of Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Line an oval or round mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) and spread the sides and the bottom with a layer of the forcemeat.

Fill the pie with slices of rabbit meat putting them in rows, covering each row with slivers of truffles, lightly tossed in butter, and a layer of the forcemeat.

Cover with a pastry lid and finish making the pie in the usual way. Bake in a moderate oven for 1 to 1½ hours, depending on the size.

Thrush or blackbird pie. PÂTE DE GRIVES, DE MERLES – Prepare, using boned and stuffed thrushes and blackbirds, as described in the recipe for Lark pie or Woodcock pie.

Thrush pie à l'ardennaise. PÂTE DE GRIVES À L'ARDEENNAISE – Bone the thrushes and stuff with juniper-flavoured A gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Arrange like Quail pie, but without the truffles. Put a piece of lean bacon, lightly fried in butter, between each thrush.

Just before serving pour into the pie a few tablespoons of concentrated game stock, made from the carcasses and parings of thrushes, flavoured with juniper berries.

Thrush pie à la cévenole. PÂTE DE GRIVES À LA CÉVENOLE – Prepare as Quail pie, using boned thrushes stuffed with A gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Garnish the pie with half-cooked braised chestnuts and lean rashers of bacon, scalded and lightly fried.

Pour in a few tablespoons of Madeira-flavoured game fumet (q.v.).

Woodcock pie with truffles. PÂTE DE BÉCASSES AUX TRUFFES – Line a pie mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Coat the sides and bottom with a layer of A gratin game forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), mixed with the livers and the trail of the birds, rubbed through a sieve.

Put into the pie the breasts of 2 woodcocks, roasted and kept very underdone. Bone the legs, pound the flesh in a mortar and add to the forcemeat. Cover the breasts with thick slices of truffles lightly tossed in butter, and over these spread a layer of forcemeat. Cover the pie with pastry and bake in the oven for about 1 hour.

This pie can also be made of boned woodcock stuffed with foie gras and truffles.

Pies of wood-pigeon, partridge and other game. PÂTE DE PALOMBE, PERDREAU – Using the meat of the game chosen, prepare as pheasant or woodcock pie.

MEAT PIES. PÂTÉS DE VIANDES DIVERSES.

Beef pie à la parisienne. PÂTE DE BOEUF À LA PARISIENNE – Line a pie mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Coat the bottom and the sides with Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) made of a mixture of beef and veal – half-and-half. Marinate for 1 hour thin slices of fillet of beef in white wine and brandy with finer herbes (q.v.) and chopped shallots, seasoned with salt, pepper and spices. Fry the slices quickly in butter until they are half-cooked, and leave to get cold.

Put the slices into the pie in layers, scattering sliced mushrooms, fried in butter, on each layer. Add a layer of forcemeat, sprinkle with melted butter, cover with pastry and finish the pie. Bake in a slow oven from 1 to 1½ hours.

Before serving, pour in a few tablespoons of Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), boiled down with the marinating liquor.

Beefsteak pie – See BEEF.

Beefsteak and kidney pie – See BEEF.

Calves' sweetbreads pie à l'ancienne. PÂTE DE RIS DE VEAU À L'ANCIENNE – Line a low pie dish with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Coat the bottom and sides with a layer of Quenelle forcemeat II (see FORCEMEATS) mixed with chopped truffles. Put in a layer of truffles and mushrooms, sliced and lightly fried in butter. On top of this add 2 calf sweetbreads, half-braised in a court-bouillon (q.v.). Cover with truffles and mushrooms. Sprinkle with melted butter. Put on a pastry lid and finish the pie. Bake in a moderate oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour, depending on its size.

Before serving, pour in a few tablespoons of Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) cooked with cream.

This pie can also be filled with calves' sweetbreads sliced and lightly fried in butter.

Lamb pie à la périgourdine I. PÂTE D'AGNEAU À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Line a pie mould with pastry. Cover the sides with finely pounded Veal and pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

Fill the dish with alternate rows of lambs' sweetbreads half-cooked in butter, slices of foie gras and slivers of truffles, lightly fried in butter, ending with a layer of forcemeat. Cover with a piece of pastry. Bake for 45 minutes to 1 hour. Pour in a few tablespoons of Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Lamb pie à la périgourdine II. PÂTE D'AGNEAU À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Prepare as in previous recipe, but replace lambs' sweetbreads by little escalopes of loin or fillets of lamb, briskly fried in butter for just long enough to stiffen them.

Lamb sweetbreads pie. PÂTE CHAUD DE RIS D'AGNEAU – Prepare as Calves' sweetbreads pie, using lambs' sweetbreads, blanched and lightly fried in butter.

Anglo-French mutton pie (Carême's recipe). PÂTE DE MOUTON ANGLO-FRANÇAIS – 'Having trimmed the fillets of 4 loins of mutton, cut and trim into slices and season on both sides with salt, coarsely ground pepper and nutmeg. Then warm slightly 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) Isigny butter, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) parsley, twice the amount of mushrooms and the same quantity of truffles, all finely chopped, and a blanching and chopped shallot.

Line the pie dish with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH), dip the fillets into the butter aux fines herbes and, one by one, put them in the pie dish, arranging them in a circle. Fill the middle with cooked white mushrooms, sliced truffles or artichoke hearts, or some escalopes of lambs' or calves' sweetbreads. Sprinkle the rest of the butter aux fines herbes on top.

Finish making the pie and put in a lively oven. Bake for 1½ hours. When ready to serve, remove any fat, cover with mutton demi-glace (see SAUCE, Demi-glace sauce) blended with mushroom or truffle essence, and add the juice of 1 lemon.

Or you can remove surplus fat from the hot pie and pour over a good Espagnole sauce with mushrooms, truffles, artichoke hearts and lambs' sweetbreads, or Tomato sauce (see SAUCE).

Mutton pie (English cookery). PÂTÉ DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – This pie is made with mutton in the same way as Beefsteak pie (see BEEF).

Small mutton pies or mutton patties. PETITS PÂTÉS DE MOUTON À L'ANGLAISE – Line deep tartlet tins with Ordinary lining paste (see DOUGH). Fill with diced mutton, half fat half lean. Season with salt and pepper and sprinkle with chopped fines herbes (q.v.).

Cover with lids of Puff pastry (see DOUGH), sealing the edges. Brush the tops with beaten egg and make a small hole in the middle of each pie. Bake in a moderate oven for 40 minutes. Pour into each patty 1 tablespoon Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

These patties are eaten hot or cold.

Pork pie – See PORK.

Pork pie à la hongroise. PÂTÉ DE PORC À LA HONGROISE – Line a pie mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH). Coat the sides and the bottom with Quenelle forcemeat II (see FORCEMEATS) spiced with chopped chives and seasoned with paprika.

Line the bottom of the pie with a thick layer of diced onions and mushrooms, cooked gently in butter, seasoned with salt and paprika and bound with a few tablespoons of Velouté sauce (see SAUCE).

On this garnish put thin slices of pork, previously marinated and browned quickly in butter. Cover with a layer of forcemeat, put on a pastry lid and finish the pie. Bake in a slow oven for 1 or 1½ hours.

Just before serving, pour in a few tablespoons of Hungarian sauce (see SAUCE).

This type of pie is usually served as a croustade (q.v.).

Fillet of veal pie. PÂTÉ DE FILET DE VEAU – Proceed as for Beef pie à la parisienne, using slices of veal and Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS).

POULTRY PIES. PÂTÉS DE VOLAILLES.

Chicken pie I. PÂTÉ DE POULET À L'ANGLAISE – Joint a medium-sized chicken. Sprinkle the pieces with finely chopped shallots, onion, mushrooms and parsley, and season with salt and pepper.

Line a pie dish with thin, seasoned slices of veal.

Put in the joints, first the legs, then the wings and breast. Cover with 150 g. (5 oz.) bacon cut into thin rashers. Add 4 halved yolks of hard-boiled eggs. Pour in chicken stock to cover the ingredients up to three-quarters.

Wet the edges of the pie dish and press on a band of pastry. Brush this over with a little water and cover with a lid of Puff pastry (see DOUGH). Press the edges well together, and scallop the sides. Make a hole in the middle of the lid and brush with beaten egg. Bake in a moderate oven for 1½ hours.

When the pie is cooked, pour in a few tablespoons of concentrated chicken stock.

Chicken pie II. PÂTÉ DE POULARDE EN PANTIN – This pie is shaped by hand using a boned fowl, stuffed with a fine foie gras forcemeat; or slices of chicken and truffle rolled into ballotines, half cooked in chicken stock, and left to get cold.

Put the chicken, covered with bacon rashers, on an oval-shaped piece of pastry. Cover with pastry and seal the edges. Decorate the top of the pie with pastry cut out in fancy shapes. Brush with beaten egg, make a hole to allow steam to escape. Bake in a moderate oven for 1½ to 2 hours depending on the size of the pie.

Just before serving pour in a few tablespoons brown chicken stock flavoured with truffle fumet (q.v.) or chicken Velouté sauce cooked with cream (see SAUCE).

The sauce can be served separately.

Chicken pie III. PÂTÉ DE POULARDE – Prepare the pie in a mould, following the general instructions given for the preparation of such pies.

Fill with slices of fillets of fowl fried in butter; Poultry or Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), truffles and other garnish. Cover the pie, decorate the top, brush with beaten egg and bake in a moderate oven. Serve hot or cold.

Rouen duckling pie à la rouennaise. PÂTÉ DE CANETON DE ROUEN À LA ROUENNAISE – Roast a plump Rouen duckling keeping it very underdone. Cut the breast into slices. Skin the legs, remove the bones, pound the flesh in a mortar and rub it through a sieve. Add to it three times its weight of À gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) and some diced truffles. Add the blood, pressed out of the duckling's carcase, to the forcemeat. Season well and add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) Calvados which has been set alight.

Choose an oval-shaped mould (either a hinged mould or one with low sides), and line it with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH) mixed with truffles shredded into a fine julienne (q.v.). Coat the sides and bottom with a layer of Poultry or Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Fill the pie with slices of duckling, alternating with layers of the truffled forcemeat à gratin and sliced mushrooms and truffles, lightly tossed in butter. Finish with a layer of poultry forcemeat, cover with a piece of rolled-out pastry and finish making the pie in the usual manner.

Bake in a moderate oven for 1 to 1½ hours, depending on the size, then pour in a few tablespoons of Rouennaise sauce (see SAUCE).

Foie gras and truffle pie. PÂTÉ DE FOIE GRAS AUX TRUFFES – This type of pie is usually made by filling a pie crust baked blind, lined with a layer of Foie gras purée (see PUREE) or À gratin forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), with a whole foie gras cooked in liqueur wine. Garnish with sliced truffles fried lightly in butter, and a few tablespoons of sauce, flavoured with liqueur wine and mixed with the concentrated liquor left from cooking the liver.

Foie gras pie can also be prepared as Chicken pie. The liver is half-cooked with port, placed in a mould lined with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH), coated with a layer of forcemeat, covered with a lid of pastry, and finished as described in the general instructions on making pies.

After baking, a few tablespoons of Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) cooked with truffle fumet (q.v.) are poured into the pie.

Guinea fowl pie. PÂTÉ DE PINTADE – Prepare as Chicken pie, using a boned guinea fowl, stuffed with foie gras and truffles.

This pie can also be prepared using cooked and jointed guinea fowl.

Pigeon pie. PÂTÉ DE PIGEON À L'ANGLAISE – Line the bottom and sides of a pie dish with thin rashers of smoked bacon.

Sprinkle with finely chopped shallots and put in the pigeons, cut each in 4 pieces, seasoned with salt and pepper and sprinkled with chopped parsley. Add  $\frac{1}{2}$  hard-boiled egg yolk for each pigeon.

Pour in some light brown stock to about half-way. Wet the edges of the pie dish and put a border of pastry around them. Brush with a little water and cover with a lid of puff pastry. Press the edges well together, make a hole in the centre and brush over with beaten egg. Bake in a moderate oven for 1½ hours.

Pour a few tablespoons of stock into the pie.

Pigeon pie à la languedocienne. PÂTE DE PIGEON À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Proceed as described for Pigeon pie with mushrooms and truffles (see below), replacing the last two ingredients by a garnish of salsify, cooked in a court-bouillon (q.v.), cut into little sticks and fried in butter; stoned and blanched olives; button mushrooms; sliced chicken livers sautéed in butter; and cut up, scaled and fried lean bacon.

Before serving put a few tablespoons of concentrated brown veal stock into the pie.

Pigeon pie with mushrooms and truffles. PÂTE DE PIGEON AUX CHAMPIGNONS ET AUX TRUFFES – Line a shallow mould with Fine lining paste (see DOUGH).

Coat the sides and bottom with truffled Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Put the truffles and mushrooms, sliced and lightly tossed in butter, in the pie dish. Add 2 pigeons, each cut in 4 pieces and browned in butter. Cover with truffles and mushrooms. Sprinkle with melted butter. Cover with pastry, finish making the pie in the usual manner and bake in the oven for about 1 hour.

Pour in a few tablespoons of chicken Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) cooked with cream and flavoured with Madeira or any other wine.

Hot pies made of various kinds of poultry. PÂTÉS CHAUDS DE VOLAILLES – These pies can be made of turkeys and geese etc., by following the recipes given for Chicken pie.

The birds are used whole, boned and stuffed, or sliced.

COLD PIES. PÂTÉS FROIDS –

Various fish pies (cold). PÂTÉS DE POISSONS – These pies are made in the same way as those which are to be served hot. They can be shaped by hand or made in moulds lined with fine lining paste.

Ham pie. PÂTE DE JAMBON – This is made in an oval-shaped mould, like Veal and ham pie (see below). Use forcemeat indicated in that recipe, mixed with chopped lean ham; or Panada forcemeat with butter (see FORCEMEATS), also mixed with chopped ham and slices of raw ham. When the pie is cold, pour into it some Madeira-flavoured aspic jelly (see ASPIC). The use of truffles in this pie is optional.

Veal and ham pie. PÂTE DE VEAU ET JAMBON – Ingredients. 300 g. (11 oz.) lean veal, 300 g. (11 oz.) lean pork, 200 g. (7 oz.) ham, 500 g. (18 oz., generous 2 cups) fine Veal and pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), 200 g. (7 oz.) fat bacon, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) Madeira and 3 to 4 teaspoons Spiced salt (see SALT).

Method. Remove all sinews from the veal taken from the chump end of loin, and cut into strips about 10 cm. (4 inches) long. Prepare the pork and the ham in a similar manner and put all these meats into a bowl. Season with spiced salt. Sprinkle with Madeira and leave to steep for several hours.

Sprinkle with a small quantity of fines herbes (q.v.) and chopped shallots.

Line the mould (round, oval or rectangular in shape) with Lining paste (see DOUGH), prepared in advance and left to rest for some time. Cover with thin rashers of fat bacon and coat with a layer of fine Veal and pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Fill the pie with veal, pork and ham in alternate rows, sealing them down with a thin layer of forcemeat. Add truffles cut in quarters. Finish off with a thick layer of forcemeat.

Roll out the rest of the pastry into a circle of the same diameter as the opening of the mould. Put it over the pie and seal and crimp the edges.

Brush the top with beaten egg and decorate with pieces of pastry cut in fancy shapes.

Make a hole in the middle. Roll a piece of buttered cardboard and put it into the hole, to hasten the cooking process and to prevent the pie walls from subsiding.

Brush with beaten egg once again. Bake the pie in the oven for about 1½ hours at moderate heat.

Leave the pie until it is completely cold. Pour into it some melted butter or lard to seal any gaps. When this is solidified, turn out the pie. If it is to be eaten immediately, pour in a few tablespoons of aspic jelly (see ASPIC).

SWEET PIES. PÂTÉS D'ENTREMENTS –

Apple pie à l'anglaise. PÂTE DE POMMES À L'ANGLAISE – Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sifted flour, 350 g. (12 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) butter, 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) fine sugar, 2 egg yolks, 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) water and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt.

Put the flour in a circle on the board, make a well in the middle, put into it the salt and sugar and dissolve these in the water. Add the yolks. Mix the pastry without kneading too much. Roll into a ball and leave to stand in a cool place for 2 hours.

Cut the apples into quarters, remove core, peel and cut into thick slices. Put into a pie dish, piling them up into a dome. Sprinkle with sugar mixed with a little powdered cinnamon.

Wet the edges of the pie dish and put a border of pastry around them. Brush this over with a little water and cover with the pastry, rolled out to form a lid, pressing the edges well together. Scallop the sides, decorate with fancy pieces of pastry, brush with beaten egg and bake in a slow oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Mince pies. GÂTEAUX DE NOËL – These pies are especially popular in England. They are, wrote A. Suzanne, 'the cakes which, with the traditional plum pudding, are pre-eminent among the dishes of the copious Christmas dinner.'

Fill small deep tartlets made of pie crust or flaky pastry with mincemeat. Cover with thin flaky pastry with a hole pricked in the middle. Brush with egg, bake in a hot oven, and serve hot. Here is a French recipe for mince pies:

Mincemeat. Prepare and leave to soak for 6 to 8 days the following ingredients:

100 g. (4 oz.) finely chopped fillet of beef, 50 g. (2 oz.) pickled tongue very finely diced, 50 g. (2 oz.) chopped fat bacon, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) sultanas, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) currants, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) blanched and chopped almonds, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) brown sugar, a pinch of mixed spices, the grated rind and juice of a lemon. Mix these ingredients together, adding half a glass of brandy.

Special pie crust. 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) sieved flour, 100 g. (4 oz.) beef suet, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 1 egg,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) water. Knead all these ingredients into a rather firm dough. Leave it to stand, then roll it out and fold it into three. Repeat this operation twice more. Divide the dough into small pieces and line deep buttered tartlet tins with the pieces, making sure the dough is evenly spread. Fill each tartlet with mincemeat and cover with a pastry lid. The pies should be sealed at the edges with pastry pincers. Brush the tops of the pies with milk and sprinkle lightly with brown sugar. Cook in a hot oven.

PIÈCES MONTÉES. – In old-fashioned culinary practice much use was made of decorative pieces, which were often made of inedible ingredients. They were frequently monumental affairs and now only survive to a small extent in pastry-making.

PIED-DE-CHEVAL – Variety of large oysters, not greatly esteemed in Europe.

PIÉMONTAISE (À LA) – Garnish served with meat and poultry. It is composed of timbales of risotto, mixed with blanched, shredded truffles, served in a mound with the meat or poultry.

PIERRY – Name of a vineyard on the Épernay slope, producing grapes from which excellent champagne is made.

PIG. COCHON – See PORK.

Wood pigeons

PIGEON, SQUAB – PIGEONNEAU – Granivorous bird of which there are many domestic and wild species. The principal of these are rock pigeons or carrier pigeons, from which the domesticated varieties evolved, the ringdove or wood pigeon whose flesh is much esteemed by gastronomes, and turtledove or passenger pigeon.

The word pigeon rarely figures on the French menu. Pigeonneau (squab) is used instead. This applies to a young, tender bird, which can be prepared in many different ways.

Unlike other birds, pigeon's liver contains no gall, and it is customary to leave the liver inside the bird when dressing it. Pigeon is drawn and prepared for cooking like all other domesticated birds. It should be barded before being roasted on a spit or cooked in a casserole or a cocotte.

Casserole of pigeon or pigeon en cocotte. PIGEONNEAU EN CASSEROLE, EN COCOTTE – Prepare like Casserole of chicken or Chicken en cocotte (see CHICKEN).

Pigeon à la catalan (Catalan style) or en pistache. PIGEONNEAU À LA CATALANE, EN PISTACHE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Partridge à la catalane (see PARTRIDGE).

Cold pigeons. PIGEONS FROIDS – Pigeons and squabs can be prepared in any way suitable for poultry, particularly for spring chickens and grain-fed poulets. (See CHICKEN.)

Cold pigeons can be prepared as ballotines, en chaud-froid, en daube à la gelée, galantines, mousses or mousselines, loaves, pies and terrines.

Compote of pigeon I. PIGEONNEAU EN COMPOTE – Brown the pigeon in butter and drain. Dilute the pan juices with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, boil down by two-thirds, add 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE) and strain.

Put the pigeon back in the casserole with 12 small glazed onions, 12 mushrooms and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) fat bacon cut in dice, scalded and fried. Cover with the sauce, bring to the boil, cover the casserole and cook in the oven from 25 to 30 minutes.

Arrange the pigeon on a serving dish, surround with garnish and pour the sauce over it.

Compote of pigeon II. PIGEONNEAU EN COMPOTE – Fry scalded fat bacon, in 1 tablespoon butter. Add blanched onions and mushrooms. Fry together, then drain all the garnish.

Brown the pigeon in the same fat and remove it. Put 1 tablespoon flour into a casserole, moisten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) white wine, boil down, add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white stock and boil down by one-third.

Put the pigeon and its garnish back in the casserole, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and cook with a lid on for 25 to 30 minutes.

Pigeon à la crapaudine. PIGEONNEAU À LA CRAPAUDINE – Split the pigeon horizontally, from the tip of the breast to the wings. Open it, flatten slightly, spread with melted butter and season with salt and pepper. Grill slowly until both sides are golden.

Arrange the pigeon on a dish and decorate the border with a row of gherkins cut in slices. Serve with Diabla sauce (see SAUCE).

Pigeon à la diable. PIGEONNEAU À LA DIABLE – Prepare as described in the recipe for Grilled chicken à la diable (see CHICKEN).

Fried pigeon. PIGEONNEAU EN FRITOT – Prepare like Chicken fritot (see CHICKEN).

Grilled pigeon à la Saint-Germain. PIGEONNEAU GRILLÉ À LA SAINT-GERMAIN – Split the pigeon open, remove most of the bones, flatten slightly, season with salt and pepper, spread with melted butter, cover on both sides with freshly grated breadcrumbs, sprinkle with butter, and grill slowly.

Arrange the pigeon on a dish. Put some rather thick Béarnaise sauce (see SAUCE) on both sides and garnish with Potatoes à la parisienne (see POTATOES). Boil down a few tablespoons of veal stock, add butter and pour round the pigeon.

Pigeon à la Maître-Jacques (old recipe). PIGEONNEAU À LA MAÎTRE-JACQUES – 'Bone 2 pigeons completely. Season with salt, pepper and spices and stuff with the following forcemeat: 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onion softened in butter, 100 g. (4 oz., 4 cups) dried duxelles (parings and stalks of chopped mushrooms), 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped parsley, the chopped livers of the pigeons, 1 egg, 1 tablespoon of brandy, salt and pepper, 150 g. (5 oz.) Fine pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Roll the pigeons into ballotines (q.v.) and wrap each in a very thin, large escalope of veal seasoned with salt, pepper and spices. Tie the pigeons as ballotines.

Put into a casserole on a foundation of bacon rinds, carrots and onions chopped and fried in butter. Simmer on the stove with a lid on for 15 minutes. Moisten with 1 glass Madeira, boil down and add a few tablespoons of thickened brown veal stock in sufficient quantity to cover the pigeons. Cook in the oven for 30 minutes. Drain the ballotines and remove the string. Put them into an earthenware cocotte. Add 500 g. (18 oz., 6 cups) sliced mushrooms, tossed in butter, and 20 thick slices of truffles. Strain the braising liquor, boil down, add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) flaming brandy, and pour over the pigeons. Seal the lid of the cocotte with flour-and-water paste. Cook in the oven for 40 minutes and serve in the cocotte.

Pigeon à la minute. PIGEONNEAU À LA MINUTE – Split the pigeon in half and remove all small bones. Flatten slightly, and fry quickly in sizzling butter. When the pigeon is almost cooked, add 1 tablespoon chopped onion lightly fried in butter. Finish cooking together.

Arrange the pigeon on a dish. Dilute the pan juices with a dash of brandy, add a little dissolved meat jelly and  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon chopped parsley, and pour over the pigeon.

Pigeon mousse and mousselines. MOUSSE, MOUSSELINES DE PIGEONNEAU – Prepare like Chicken mousse and mousselines (see CHICKEN).

Pigeon with olives. PIGEONNEAU AUX OLIVES – Prepare like Duckling with olives (see DUCK).

Pigeon en papillote. PIGEONNEAU EN PAPILOTTE – Split the pigeon in half lengthways, partially bone the halves, season with salt and pepper, and fry in butter to stiffen them. Wrap each half in buttered greaseproof paper cut in the shape of a heart, spread with Duxelles sauce (see SAUCE) and lined with a slice of ham, as described in the recipe for Veal chops en papillote (see VEAL). Close the papillote securely and cook in the oven.

Pigeon pie with mushrooms and truffles – See PIE, Poultry pies.

Pigeon with peas I. PIGEONNEAU AUX PETITS POIS – Fry 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) diced and blanched fat bacon and 12 small onions in butter. When done remove these ingredients from the sauté pan.

In the same butter brown a pigeon trussed as for an entrée. Remove the pigeon. Dilute the pan juices with white wine and thickened veal stock. Replace the pigeon in the sauté pan and add  $4\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (generous  $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, 2 cups) peas, a bouquet garni (q.v.), the onions and lardoons. Season and finish cooking together.

Pigeon with peas II. PIGEONNEAU AUX PETITS POIS – Truss the pigeon as for an entrée and brown in butter. Prepare Peas à la française (see PEAS) and put the pigeon into the same casserole. Moisten with the diluted pan juices and an equal amount of water. Finish cooking together.

Pigeon à la Richelieu. PIGEONNEAU À LA RICHELIEU – Split the pigeon down the back and open it out. Remove most of the bones from the inside. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter until both sides are golden. Arrange on a serving dish, garnish with slivers of truffle and put on top some softened Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Roast pigeon. PIGEONNEAU RÔTI – Truss and bard the pigeon, season on the inside and roast (see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking time for roasts).

Garnish with watercress. Serve with the diluted pan juices.

Salmis of pigeon. PIGEONNEAU EN SALMIS – Proceed as described in the recipe for Salmis of woodcock (see WOODCOCK).

Pigeon stewed with blood, also called pigeon stew with blood (old recipe). PIGEONNEAU ÉTUVÉ AU SANG, DIT AUSSI ÉTUVÉE DE PIGEON AU SANG – 'Bleed two pigeons keeping all the blood and adding  $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon vinegar to prevent it from coagulating.

'Pluck, draw, singe and split the pigeons in half. Season with salt and pepper and brown in a casserole with 1 tablespoon grated bacon fat. Remove and keep hot in the oven.

Put 24 small onions and 100 g. (4 oz., 6 slices) blanched lean bacon, cut in large lardoons into the casserole.

'Fry a pale golden colour and sprinkle in 1 tablespoon flour. Cook for a moment, then moisten with 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) good red wine and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) stock or water. Season, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and a little chopped garlic. Put the pigeons into this stock and simmer for 45 minutes. Two minutes before serving, thicken with the blood kept for this purpose.

Garnish with 8 croûtons of home-made bread fried in butter and pour the stock over the pigeons.'

Pigeon Villeroi. PIGEONNEAU VILLEROI – Split the pigeon in half lengthways. Remove most of the bones and flatten the pigeon halves slightly. Season and cook in butter, or braise. Leave to get cold under a press.

Dip in Villeroi sauce (see SAUCE), dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry. Garnish with fried parsley. Serve with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE).

Pike

PIKE. BROCHET – Freshwater fish with a long body, large flat jaw, mouth stretching to the eyes and armed with numerous strong teeth. The back is slightly flattened and dark green, the belly white; the sides have golden glints and the fins are reddish. Pike likes fresh water, whether fast flowing or calm, where it devours enormous quantities of fish. Its white, firm flesh is greatly esteemed. Pike milt and roe are slightly toxic, especially during the spawning season (February to April). In U.S.A. the best-known species of pike are common pike, muskelunge and pickerels.

Pike au beurre blanc. BROCHET AU BEURRE BLANC – In Anjou, as well as in the Nantes region, there are numerous recipes for preparing beurre blanc served with pike and Loire shad. Here are some local recipes for this dish:

First recipe. Prepare a court-bouillon (q.v.) and boil for 30 minutes. Put in the pike. As soon as boiling is again established, draw the fish kettle to the edge of the stove and leave to poach for 25 to 30 minutes.

Boil down some vinegar. Add to it 2 or 3 chopped shallots, a pinch of salt and a little freshly ground pepper (one turn of the mill). Boil down by half and remove from the heat.

Soften a piece of butter on a plate and incorporate it, little by little, in the vinegar, beating vigorously with a whisk. The sauce will become frothy without being liquid and acquire the whiteness which is its feature.

Drain the pike, arrange it on a hot dish and pour the beurre blanc over it, adding a little freshly chopped parsley.

Second recipe. Cook a 750 g. ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb) pike in a little court-bouillon made of white wine, water, and the usual vegetables, seasoning and aromatics. When the fish is cooked, drain, arrange on a hot dish and cover with beurre blanc prepared in the following manner: put 1 chopped shallot and a pinch of salt into a saucepan, moisten with 2 tablespoons (3 table-spoons) water and 1 tablespoon vinegar, and boil down by two-thirds.

Remove the pan from the heat and add to it 150 to 200 g. (about 6 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) fresh butter, stirring all the time. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Third recipe. For 8 persons allow a 2 kg ( $4\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) pike. Clean it thoroughly, cut off the fins and tail, wash carefully in several waters, dry, sprinkle with fine salt and leave for 15 minutes. Wash again, put into a fish kettle surrounded with fresh parsley, 2 sliced onions, 2 quartered shallots, 2 cloves garlic, 8 to 10 chives, or the green of 1 leek, a branch of fresh thyme, 1 small bay leaf, a few slices of carrot, some fine salt and ground pepper. Sprinkle with sprigs of parsley, pour in enough white wine to cover and leave to marinate for 1 hour.

About 45 minutes before serving put the fish kettle on brisk heat. At the first sign of the surface beginning to 'shiver' or ripple gently, draw aside and keep near boiling point.

Separately, put 1 tablespoon chopped shallot into a saucepan, add a pinch of freshly ground pepper and 1 glass best quality white wine vinegar (not just any commercial vinegar with a rough taste). Boil down gently by three-quarters. Take 1 kg. (2 lb.) best fresh butter, and chop it into small pieces.

Strain the vinegar. Put it into a strong copper pan with 1 tablespoon shallots, very finely chopped and lightly squeezed with the flat of the knife. Add a few pieces of butter and put over a high flame. Stir all the time with a wooden spoon, and little by little add  $\frac{3}{4}$  of the butter. As soon as the light white mousse is formed, remove from the heat but do not stop stirring. Add the rest of the butter, stir until it has been absorbed and keep hot without allowing the sauce to boil. Season to taste. The sauce should be creamy.

To serve, drain the pike as soon as it is cooked, wipe it on a cloth, put on a long, deep, very hot dish. Cut the skin deftly along the backbone, slip the point of the knife under the incision, quickly remove the main bone in one movement, holding the head with the left hand. Reshape the fish, stir the beurre blanc a couple of times just to make sure the shallots are well mixed, spread over the pike and serve.

Fourth recipe. Prepare a court-bouillon made of water, 1 large onion, 1 sliced carrot, 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) vinegar, salt, peppercorns, a sprig of parsley, thyme and a bay leaf. Allow to cook for 20 minutes.

Put a 2-kg. ( $4\frac{1}{2}$ -lb.) pike, carefully scaled, cleaned and washed, into this composition. Keep on a low heat with the water just simmering for 20 or 25 minutes.

Meanwhile, put 2 medium-sized chopped shallots, 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) vinegar, some salt and freshly ground pepper into a flat-bottomed saucepan. (When adding salt, bear in mind that the butter may be salted.) Add a piece of butter cut in large dice.

Put the sauce on brisk heat and keep stirring with a wooden spoon until the surface whitens slightly. Remove the saucepan from the fire and continue to stir.

When ready to serve, drain the fish, dry on a cloth, put on a long hot dish (white china for preference), cover the pike with beurre blanc, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve very hot. (Recipe from Phare de la Loire.)

Fifth recipe. Le beurre blanc de ma tante. Scale a pike and clean it out: one slit under the gills, otherwise no cuts at all, as the pike must remain intact.

Cook the fish in a fish kettle in court-bouillon made of white wine, water and a sprinkling of vinegar, with a sprig of thyme, bay leaf, parsley, carrot cut in very thin slices, onion, a clove of garlic, black peppercorns and coarse salt.

When the court-bouillon is ready put it on lively heat. When you see it boiling and when it begins to diffuse a delicious aroma, put in the pike.

The cooking must not take longer than 15 minutes. If a fork penetrates the flesh easily the pike is cooked to a turn.

Remove the fish kettle from the heat without uncovering, so that the pike becomes completely saturated with the court-bouillon.

The sauce is the most delicate part of the operation. Put into a saucepan 1 tablespoon chopped shallot, 1 pinch ground pepper, 1 tablespoon flour and some butter – 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) will be sufficient for a  $1\frac{1}{2}$ -kg. (3-lb.) pike. Add 1 tablespoon vinegar. Put the sauce to heat, stirring from time to time with a wooden spoon. When the butter melts, the liaison is achieved by adding a ladleful of previously prepared court-bouillon. Leave to simmer.

To serve, take the pike out of the fish kettle and put it on a long dish. Pour over some of the sauce, very hot. Mix the remainder with 3 or 4 tablespoons well-beaten fresh cream, and put it around the fish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and finely grated lemon rind.

Pike au bleu. BROCHET AU BLEU – This method is mainly used for small pike.

Put the pike into a court-bouillon prepared as described in the recipe for Blue trout (see TROUT).

Drain the fish, arrange on a napkin and garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with boiled potatoes and melted butter or one of the other sauces specially recommended for poached fish.

Braised fillets of pike with various sauces and garnishes.

FILETS DE BROCHET BRAISÉS – Cut the fillets from a large uncooked pike. Trim them and remove bones and skin. Cut the fillets into slices of uniform size. Cook them in a very little concentrated fish stock. Drain, dry, arrange on a serving dish, surround with the garnish recommended, and pour over a sauce that goes with the garnish, adding to it the liquor in which the fish was cooked, greatly concentrated.

Note. All the sauces and garnishes recommended for brill (q.v.), sole (q.v.) and young turbot (q.v.) are suitable for fillets of pike.

Pike cutlets I. CÔTELETTES DE BROCHET – Using Pike forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) shape in small buttered moulds having the form of cutlets, and poach. Arrange them on a serving dish, placing them either straight on the dish, on heart-shaped croûtons, or on a puff pastry foundation. Serve with the garnish and sauce indicated in the recipe. All the sauces and garnishes recommended for Poached fillets of sole (see SOLE) are applicable to these cutlets.

Pike cutlets II. CÔTELETTES DE BROCHET – Prepare a croquette mixture, using a salpicon (q.v.) of cooked pike as the main ingredient, with truffles and mushrooms added. These cutlets, which are really a variety of croquettes (q.v.), are deep-fried like croquettes.

Pike mousse – See FISH, Fish mousse.

Pike mousselines. MOUSSELINES DE BROCHET – These are made of Mousseline forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) poached in small dariole moulds.

Pike quenelles en croustade

Pike quenelles. QUENELLES DE BROCHET – Prepare 300 g. (11 oz.) bread panada, using 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) milk and 250 g. (9 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) soft breadcrumbs or a flour panada using 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) hot water, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter and 150 g. (5 oz.,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) flour well in advance, so that it is cold when needed for use.

Pound finely 500 g. (18 oz.) pike flesh, carefully boned and skinned, with 2 teaspoons salt, a pinch of pepper and a little grated nutmeg.

Remove the fish and leave on a plate. Pound the panada until it is reduced to a completely smooth pulp, put the fish back into the mortar with 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) butter and continue to pound well. Add, one at a time, 2 whole eggs and 4 yolks and rub through a sieve.

Transfer the resulting forcemeat into a bowl, stir with a wooden spoon to blend well. To test the seasoning and the texture of the forcemeat, take a piece the size of a hazelnut and drop it into salted water to poach.

There are special moulds for these quenelles and all that has to be done is to butter them and fill with forcemeat. When no such moulds are available, shape the quenelles in a large spoon and put them in rows into a buttered sauté pan. Or pipe through a forcing bag and cut off in 3½-cm. (1½-inch) lengths. Allow 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) forcemeat for each quenelle. Cover the quenelles with salted boiling water, allowing 1½ teaspoons salt per litre (1½ pints, generous quart). Cover, and poach on the edge of the burner for 10 minutes, keeping the water just simmering. Make sure that the poaching is complete just at the right time, so that the quenelles are ready when needed for serving, or only a few minutes before.

Drain them on a cloth, arrange in a crown on a dish and serve with the sauce and garnish indicated in the recipe.

The use of an electric blender can greatly facilitate this process.

Pike quenelles à la crème. QUENELLES DE BROCHET À LA CRÈME – Pipe the quenelles through a forcing bag with a plain nozzle, or mould them with a large spoon, and drop them into a buttered sauté pan. Poach in boiling salted water 10 minutes, simmering so gently that the boiling is imperceptible.

Drain the quenelles and dry on a cloth. Place each on a croûton fried in butter. Pour boiling Cream sauce over (see SAUCE).

Pike quenelles à la florentine. QUENELLES DE BROCHET À LA FLORENTINE – Poach in salted water, drain and dry. Arrange in an oven-proof dish on a bed of spinach leaves cooked in butter and seasoned with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg.

Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with grated cheese, pour over some melted butter and brown quickly in the oven.

Pike quenelles à la lyonnaise

Pike quenelles à la lyonnaise. QUENELLES DE BROCHET À LA LYONNAISE – These are made of Pike forcemeat à la lyonnaise (see FORCEMEATS), moulded with a spoon or shaped by hand and poached in salted water.

Drain and put them into a sauté pan containing thin Espagnole sauce (see SAUCE). For 12 quenelles of medium size add 36 cooked mushrooms, 36 stoned, blanched olives, and 24 thick slices of truffles.

Simmer for 10 minutes with a lid on without turning the quenelles, which should swell.

Arrange in a pyramid or in a flan crust baked blind.

Quenelles of pike mousseline – See QUENELLES.

Quenelles of pike princesse – See QUENELLES.

Roast pike à la mode de Bugey. BROCHET RÔTI À LA MODE DE BUGEY – Stuff a pike with a forcemeat made of whiting mixed with diced truffles bound with Cream sauce (see SAUCE) and finished off with Crayfish butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Put the pike on a spit, brush with melted butter, season with salt and pepper, and roast before a lively fire. When nearly cooked, baste with fresh cream.

Arrange on a dish and surround with little barquettes, some filled with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH) and others with Truffles à la crème (see TRUFFLE). Add some fresh cream to the pan juices, boil down, strain, and pour over the fish.

The same recipe can be used for salmon, salmon trout and char.

PIKE-PERCH. SANDRE – Type of fish of the Percidae family found mostly in the watercourses of central and eastern Europe. In France it is found only in the Doubs and the Saône. Its flesh is white, flaky and very delicate in taste. All the cooking methods given for perch are applicable to the pike-perch.

PILAF, PILAU or PILAW – Method of preparing rice which originated in the East.

Rice prepared in this manner may be served without any garnish, but some ingredients are usually added to it, such as shrimps, chicken livers, lobster or various other shellfish, lambs' or sheep's sweetbreads, kidney, poultry, meat, etc.

Rice pilaf or pilaw. RIZ PILAF – Heat 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) butter, without allowing to colour. Add 500 g. (18 oz.) Patna rice.

Stir over the heat until all the grains are lightly cooked, then add 1 litre (1½ pints, generous quart) pot-au-feu broth or white stock. Season, cook in the oven, covered, and without disturbing, for 18 to 20 minutes.

When the rice is cooked, mix with it 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter cut into small pieces.

Rice pilaf (Turkish cookery). RIZ PILAF – Soak the rice for an hour or two in strongly salted water, drain, and cook for a few minutes in plenty of butter without colouring it.

Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and pour in twice its volume of liquid. Cook, covered, until little holes form on the surface of the rice.

It is sometimes mixed with cooked chick-peas, currants and pine kernels.

Chicken liver pilaf. PILAF DE FOIES DE VOLAILLE – Put the rice into a buttered mould. Fill the middle with chicken livers, sliced and sautéed in butter. Finish as described in the recipe for Shrimp pilaf (see SHRIMP). Turn out the pilaf on to a dish and pour round it a few tablespoons Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), adding to it the butter in which the chicken livers were cooked.

Foie gras pilaf. PILAF DE FOIE GRAS – Arrange the rice on a dish in a circle. Fill the middle with slices of foie gras sautéed in butter. Pour over them the pan juices diluted with Madeira and moistened with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE).

Truffle slivers, sautéed in butter, can be added.

Pilaf with mussels. PILAF DE MOULES – Cook the mussels as indicated for Mussels à la poulette (see MUSSEL). Shell them. Moisten with a few tablespoons of their cooking sauce. Pile them inside a border of Rice pilaf. Pour a few tablespoons of Poulette sauce (see SAUCE) round the border.

Mutton pilaf I. PILAF DE MOUTON – There are various ways of preparing this dish.

Sauté in butter 500 g. (18 oz.) lean coarsely diced mutton. Season with salt and pepper. Drain and keep hot.

Pour 1½ dl. (¾ pint, ¾ cup) white wine into the frying pan. Heat and stir. Add 2 dl. (¼ pint, scant cup) Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), or thickened veal stock, or brown stock made from the bones and trimmings of the mutton, and 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) tomato purée. Bring to the boil. Put the mutton into this sauce. Heat but do not boil.

Butter a deep dish or basin and line it with Rice pilaf. Put aside most of the mutton sauce and pour the meat, with a little of the sauce, into the dish. Cover with rice. Unmould onto a platter. Pour the remaining sauce around the edge.

Mutton prepared as indicated above can also be served in a border of pilaf rice. This is made by filling a buttered turban (ring) mould with rice, pressing down well before turning out. Pour the sauce over the dish.

Another method is to bone the mutton and cut it into pieces. Braise in a very little tomato-flavoured stock. Serve in a border of rice pilaf as indicated above.

Mutton pilaf II (Turkish cookery). PILAF DE MOUTON – Make a ragout (q.v.) of mutton, flavouring it strongly with tomatoes and spicing with a little ginger (or, if preferred, with saffron) and a touch of garlic.

When the mutton is almost cooked, drain it. Put it in another saucepan with peeled sweet peppers, coarsely diced. Add parboiled rice. Moisten with the strained cooking stock. Finish cooking all together. Serve in a bowl or deep round dish.

Sheep's (lamb's) kidney pilaf. PILAF DE ROGNONS DE MOUTON – This is made with kidneys cut in slices. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Calf's liver with pilaf.)

Veal pilaf. PILAF DE VEAU – Prepare with fillet (U.S. sirloin) of veal cut into small square pieces and sautéed in butter, in the same way as Mutton pilaf.

PILCHARD – Small fish of the Clupeidae family, sold mainly tinned (canned) in spiced oil like sardines.

PILOT-FISH. FANFRE – Fish somewhat similar to mackerel. It is cooked in the same way. The pilot-fish is quite tasty, but indigestible.

PIMENTO – See PEPPER.

PINCER – Culinary term which describes the operation of browning certain substances in fat. It is applicable mainly to meat and vegetables before adding stock or any other liquid to them.

Pincer also applies to the operation of pinching up the edges of pies, tarts, etc.

PINCH. PINCÉE – The term 'pinch' frequently occurs in this book and corresponds to about 5 g. (1 scant teaspoon) in the case of salt and about 2 g. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon) in the case of pepper or mixed spices.

The term, however, is used only in application to quick seasoning. Seasoning for dishes requiring prolonged cooking must be expressed in more precise quantities.

PINEAPPLE. ANANAS – Herbaceous hardy perennial plant, rather similar to aloes in the structure of its leaves, although they are less thick than those of aloes. The flowers, bluish in colour, produce an ovoid globular fruit, yellowish in colour when ripe.

The pineapple is a native of America. It has, however, naturalised admirably in Asia and Africa, where it is generally cultivated.

Pineapple contains a strong proportion of sugar (more than 15 per cent), citric and malic acids and a ferment called bromeline very close to pepsin and papain (vegetable pepsin). It is a ferment which can be dissolved in proteinic substances and which acts very energetically on albumin contained in egg white, in meat and in milk, which it first curdles.

This ferment appears to be destroyed by heating and it is not present in sterilised, tinned pineapple. Pineapple contains a large quantity of Vitamins A and B.

When it is quite ripe this fruit has a very pleasant smell. Its firm, melting flesh, of a clear yellow colour, contains an abundance of fragrant juice in which the flavours of apple, strawberry and peach seem to mingle all at once.

Pineapple is eaten as it is, as a dessert, or is used for preparing various sweet dishes, ices, sherbets, jams, cakes and refreshing drinks. A kind of wine is made from fermented pineapple juice. When distilled, this produces a very pleasant liqueur.

When they are of good quality, tinned pineapples, preserved in syrup, can replace fresh ones, but they do not equal them in fragrance and delicacy of flavour.

Duck with pineapple (Chinese cookery). CANARD À L'ANANAS – Remove the bones from a small duck. Cut the flesh into strips and sauté these in fat along with garlic and chopped onions. Blend a little flour with the juice of a tin of pineapple and pour into the pan. To this add 1 tablespoon tomato purée, salt and pepper, a pinch of sugar. Simmer for 30 minutes.

Cut the pineapple slices into small pieces. Add them to the duck along with a handful of French beans. Simmer for 15 minutes. Just before serving add 1 tablespoon soya sauce.

Pineapple à la bavaroise. ANANAS À LA BAVAROISE – Hollow out and prepare a large pineapple as described in the recipe for Iced pineapple (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

Fill it with a pineapple-flavoured Bavarian cream (q.v.) with grated pineapple, steeped in kirsch, added to it.

Pineapple Bourdaloue. ANANAS BOURDALOUE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Apricots Bourdaloue (see APRICOTS), replacing the halved apricots by half slices of pineapple.

Dust with crushed macaroons, sprinkle with melted butter and glaze in the oven.

Pineapple compote. COMPOTE D'ANANAS – Peel a ripe, sound pineapple. Remove the eyes, which penetrate a little into the flesh beneath the rind.

Divide the pineapple in halves lengthways, remove the hard core and cut each half into regular slices. Cook in a light syrup, plain or flavoured with vanilla. Arrange in a fruit dish, and sprinkle with its syrup laced with kirsch or rum. Serve cold.

The pineapple can also be cooked whole, according to various recipes. Remove the core with the aid of a special corer and cut into slices.

Pineapple Condé. ANANAS CONDÉ – Arrange half slices of fresh pineapple cooked in syrup, or tinned pineapple, in a shallow oven-proof dish, three-quarters filled with Dessert rice (see RICE).

Decorate with halved glacé cherries and lozenges of angelica.

Heat in a moderate oven and serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) laced with kirsch, either poured over or served separately.

Alternatively, arrange the half slices on a border of dessert rice prepared as described in the recipe for Apricots condé (see APRICOT).

Pineapple fritters. BEIGNETS D'ANANAS – Cut a fresh or tinned pineapple into slices. Dust with sugar, sprinkle with kirsch or rum, and leave to steep for 30 minutes.

Proceed as described in recipes for Fresh fruit fritters (see FRITTERS).

Pineapple fritters à la Carême. BEIGNETS D'ANANAS À LA CARÊME – Slice the pineapple and leave to steep as described in the preceding recipe.

Dry the slices, coat them with a thin layer of very thick apricot jam and stick them together in pairs. Dip into a light batter (see BATTERS FOR FRYING) and fry in deep fat.

Pineapple ice cream. GLACE À L'ANANAS – Add to  $\frac{1}{2}$  litre (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) syrup, prepared as described for fruit ices,  $\frac{1}{2}$  fresh shredded or grated pineapple. Leave to steep for 2 hours. Pass this mixture through a sieve and flavour it with kirsch. Measure it with a syrup gauge and rectify until it registers from 18° to 20°.

Chill in a freezer (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES). Serve in wine glasses, goblets or sundae glasses.

Iced pineapple – See ICE CREAMS AND ICES.

Pineapple with vanilla ice cream. COUPES GLACÉES À L'ANANAS À LA VANILLE – Fill dessert glasses with vanilla ice cream and diced pineapple steeped in kirsch.

Decorate with pineapple cut in lozenges, and sprinkle with kirsch.

Pineapple à l'impératrice. ANANAS À L'IMPÉRATRICE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Apricots à l'impératrice (see APRICOT), replacing the latter by half slices of pineapple cooked in syrup. Or prepare the pineapple as described for Iced pineapple (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

Fill the rind with Rice à l'impératrice (see RICE), and diced pineapple steeped in kirsch.

Leave to set in a cold place, or on ice, and serve like iced pineapple.

Pineapple manqué. MANQUÉ À L'ANANAS – Add diced crystallised pineapple to a manqué (q.v.) mixture. Bake and turn out. Ice with Fondant icing (see ICING) flavoured with pineapple. Decorate the top with pieces of crystallised pineapple.

Pineapple pancakes (crêpes). CRÊPES FOURRÉES, PANNEQUETS À L'ANANAS – Prepare pannequets (q.v.). Coat them with thick apricot jam, with pineapple cooked in syrup and cut into minute dice added to it. Roll up the pancakes.

Glaze in the oven as described in the recipe for Apricot pannequets (see PANNEQUETS).

Or coat the pancakes with French pastry cream (see CREAMS) with a grated pineapple added to it and finish as indicated above.

Pineapple à la piémontaise. ANANAS À LA PIÉMONTAISE – Proceed as described in the recipe for Pineapple Condé, replacing dessert rice by a layer of polenta (q.v.) bound with egg and flavoured with vanilla.

Or arrange the half slices of pineapple, cooked in syrup, on crescent-shaped polenta croquettes.

Pineapple with rice. ANANAS AU RIZ – Proceed as described for Apricots with rice (see APRICOT), replacing the halved apricots by half slices of pineapple in syrup.

Pineapple with rice and meringue. ANANAS MERINGUE AU RIZ – Proceed as described in the recipe for Apricots with rice and meringue (see APRICOT) using slices of pineapple poached in vanilla-flavoured syrup.

Pineapple sauce – See SAUCE.

Pineapple savarin. SAVARIN À L'ANANAS – Prepare a savarin (q.v.). Saturate it with syrup and flavour with kirsch or rum. Arrange it in a dish and garnish with half slices of pineapple cooked in syrup, or fill the middle with diced pineapple cooked in syrup. Serve hot or cold.

Pineapple surprise. ANANAS EN SURPRISE – Scoop out and prepare a large pineapple as described in the recipe for Iced pineapple (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

Fill it with a macédoine (q.v.) composed of the scooped-out pineapple pulp cut in thin slices, fresh blanched almonds and all kinds of fruit, previously steeped in kirsch and castor sugar.

Put the pineapple upright in a dish filled with crushed ice and leave to chill for 2 hours before serving.

Serve like Iced pineapple.

Pineapple tart. CROÛTE À L'ANANAS – Proceed as described in the recipe for Fruit croûtes (see CROÛTES) using, instead of mixed fruit, only pineapple cut in half slices for the border and in large dice for the interior.

Decorate with cherries and angelica and finish off as described in that recipe.

Pineapple tart à la royale. CROÛTE À L'ANANAS À LA ROYALE – Arrange a border of half slices of pineapple and slices of savarin (q.v.). Fill the middle with thick French pastry cream (see CREAMS) mixed with a grated pineapple flavoured with kirsch. Sprinkle with crushed macaroons. Decorate with crystallised fruit.

Pineapple tourte – See TOURTE, Apricot tourte.

Pork with pineapple. PORC À L'ANANAS – Brown some diced smoked bacon in a frying pan, then add a piece of pork chine. Brown. Remove the meat and place in a casserole. Sprinkle with thyme, bay leaf, cloves and 1 cup pineapple juice. Bake for 2 hours in a moderate oven, basting frequently. Serve with Rice à la créole (see RICE).

PINÉE – French word for first quality dried cod.

PINE SEED (Nut). PIGNON – Kernels of pine cones, which in taste resemble almonds and have various uses in cookery and confectionery.

This nut is known as pignoli in cookery.

PINION or POULTRY WING. AILERON – The terminal segment of a bird's wing, also called wing tip.

The pinions of large birds, which are classed as giblets, can be made into a great number of dishes (see GIBLETS).

The word 'pinion' also means the bones which support the fin rays of fish.

The recipes which follow are intended for pinions of turkeys or turkey-poults, but they are also suitable for preparing pinions of other big poultry.

Pinions of turkey à l'anglaise. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU À L'ANGLAISE – See GIBLETS, Turkey giblets à l'anglaise.

Pinions of turkey à la bourgeoise. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU À LA BOURGEOISE – See GIBLETS, Turkey giblets à la bourgeoise.

Turkey pinion broth. POT-AU-FEU AUX AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU – This is prepared like ordinary broth with stuffed turkey pinions. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Pot-au-feu.)

Pinions of turkey chasseur. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU CHASSEUR – Cut the pinions in 2 pieces. Season with salt and pepper, fry them in butter, and finish cooking as described in the recipe for Sautéed chicken chasseur (see CHICKEN).

Consommé with pinions I. CONSOMMÉ AUX AILERONS – Prepare a chicken consommé (see SOUPS, Clear soups). Bone and stuff the pinions with a Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Put the pinions into the consommé to cook. Pass the consommé through a muslin cloth and serve with trimmed pinions.

Rice cooked in consommé is sometimes added to this soup.

Consommé with pinions II. CONSOMMÉ AUX AILERONS – Prepare meat stock. Trim 6 pinions, put in a muslin bag and cook in the stock. Strain the stock and serve with the pinions, removing all the little bones which have come loose during cooking.

Serve with bread cut into small pieces and dried in the oven. Carrots and leeks, cooked in stock and cut into pieces are sometimes added to this soup.

Fricassée of turkey pinions. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU EN FRICASSÉE – Cook the pinions, stuffed as described in (I) above, until two-thirds done, in chicken or veal stock. Put them into a sauté pan with small onions and mushrooms half-cooked in chicken or veal stock. Moisten with Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) made from the stock in which the pinions were cooked. Finish cooking together, simmering gently. Bind the sauce with egg yolks and cream, as described in the recipe for Fricassée of chicken à la berrichonne (see FRICASSÉE).

Turkey pinions à la niçoise. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU À LA NIÇOISE – Season the pinions with salt and pepper. Fry briskly in a mixture of butter and oil. Remove when golden. Into the same pan put (for 6 pinions) 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onion. Fry lightly, add 3 peeled, seeded, chopped tomatoes, and a little grated garlic. Cook for 5 minutes, put the pinions back in the pan, add a bouquet garni (q.v.), moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{3}{8}$  cup) dry white wine, season, bring to the boil, cover, and simmer for 20 minutes. Add 24 black olives and the same number of small button mushrooms. Finish cooking, simmering gently for 15 minutes. Sprinkle with chopped tarragon.

Turkey pinions en tortue. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU EN TORTUE – Bone 12 turkey pinions in such a way as to shape them into pockets. Stuff with a Quenelle forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Sew up the opening. Fry thinly sliced carrots and onions in bacon fat and add the pinions. Season with salt and a little allspice. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.), sprinkle with melted butter and put the pan on brisk heat. Brown both sides of the pinions lightly. Moisten with 1 glass Madeira. Leave to boil down completely. Add a few tablespoons thickened brown veal stock and braise in a slow oven, uncovered.

Remove the pinions with a perforated spoon, and put into another pan with Tortue garnish (see GARNISHES). Add Tortue sauce (see SAUCE) to the braising pan juices, boil down, strain, and pour over the pinions. Leave to simmer for a few minutes. Arrange the pinions on a serving dish with the garnish around them. Add supplementary garnish: gherkins cut in small uniform pieces, fried yolks of egg, dressed crayfish, heart-shaped croûtons fried in butter. Pour the sauce over the pinions.

Stuffed turkey pinions in aspic jelly. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU FARCIS À LA GELÉE – Stuff the pinions with a finely pounded Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS), adding diced truffles or a forcemeat made of minced pork, foie gras and truffles. Wrap each pinion in a piece of muslin and secure with string. Cook in a stock made from Madeira-flavoured meat jelly or a rich broth flavoured with Madeira. Drain, cook, and put in a dish. Clarify the liquid jelly in which they were cooked and pour over the pinions. (See JELLY, Meat jelly stock.)

Stuffed braised pinions of turkey. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU FARCIS, BRAISÉS – Singe and pluck 6 turkey pinions. Bone them carefully, so as not to damage the skin. Stuff them with forcemeat: finely pounded pork forcemeat, chicken forcemeat, quenelle forcemeat, or any other (see FORCEMEATS or STUFFINGS). Wrap each one in a thin rasher (slice) of bacon and secure with thread.

Melt some butter in a sauté pan, and in it brown bacon rinds, 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) onion and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) carrot, cut in thin slices. Arrange the pinions on these. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.), and season with salt and pepper. Simmer under a lid on top of the stove for 15 minutes.

Moisten with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) dry white wine or Madeira, according to recipe, boil down, and add 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) brown chicken or veal stock. Bring to the boil. Cook in the oven, covered, for 40 minutes. Remove the pinions, unwrap them and glaze in a hot oven. Arrange them on a dish and pour over them the pan juices in which they were braised, with the fat skimmed off, boiled down and strained.

The pinions can be completed with various garnishes.

Stuffed turkey pinions in chaud-froid sauce. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU FARCIS EN CHAUD-FROID – Cook the stuffed pinions in liquid aspic jelly laced with Madeira. Leave to cool in the stock. Drain and dry well.

Cover with white or brown Chaud-froid sauce (see SAUCE), depending on the nature of the dish. Glaze the pinions with a jelly. Garnish with chopped jelly.

Pinions in chaud-froid sauce can be decorated with truffles, tongue à l'écarlate, hard-boiled egg white, etc., croûtons of bread spread with butter. Place them in a glass dish and cover with jelly.

Stuffed turkey pinions with chipolata sausages. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU FARCIS CHIPOLATA – Prepare like Turkey giblets with chipolata sausages (see GIBLETS).

Stuffed turkey pinions à la fermière. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU FARCIS À LA FERMIÈRE – Stuff the pinions with a finely pounded forcemeat of chopped onions cooked in butter until transparent, mixed with chopped parsley. Braise the pinions until half done and put in an earthenware casserole. Cover them with garnish à la fermière (carrots, turnips, celery and onions, sliced and lightly fried in butter). Remove fat from the pan juices, boil down, strain, and pour over the ingredients in the casserole. Finish cooking in the oven with a lid on.

Stuffed turkey pinions fried in batter. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU FARCIS EN FRITOT – Stuff and cook the pinions as described above. Strain the stock in which they were cooked and leave them to cool in it.

Drain and marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice, salt, pepper and chopped parsley. Dip them in a light batter (see BATTERS FOR FRYING) and deep-dry in sizzling fat.

Drain, dry, season with dry fine salt. Garnish with fried parsley and quarters of lemon. Serve with tomato or other sauce.

Stuffed turkey pinions à la périgourdine. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU FARCIS À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – Stuff the pinions with foie gras and diced truffles, to which a little Pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) can be added. Season with salt, pepper and spices, and sprinkle with brandy.

Wrap in rashers of bacon. Braise in stock laced with Madeira. When three-quarters cooked, remove, unwrap, put in an earthenware dish with 200 g. (7 oz., 2 cups) quartered truffles for 6 pinions. Skim the fat off the stock, boil down, strain, and pour the stock over the pinions. Cook in the oven for 15 minutes.

Stuffed turkey pinions Sainte-Menehould. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU SAINTE-MENEHOULD – Stuff the pinions as described above and braise in white wine or in clear veal stock. Drain and cool under a press.

Brush with butter, dip in toasted or grated breadcrumbs, sprinkle with melted butter and grill on a low heat until both sides are golden.

Serve either with Diable sauce or with Sainte-Menehould sauce (see SAUCE) made from the stock in which the pinions were braised.

Grilled pinions Sainte-Menehould can be served with various vegetables, cooked in water and dressed with butter, or with purées of vegetables. Serve with mustard.

Stuffed turkey pinions à la Soubise. AILERONS DE DINDONNEAU FARCIS À LA SOUBISE – Stuff and braise the pinions as described above. Drain and glaze. Arrange on a dish and sprinkle with the boiled-down pan juices. Serve with Onion soubise (see PURÉE).

PINOT – Variety of grapes of which the black is used exclusively for making red Burgundy wines. In Champagne the white Pinot is used.

PINTAIL (Duck), PILET – Variety of wild duck. Prepare like wild duck or spoonbill or shoveller duck (see DUCK).

PIPERADE – Basque dish. Cooked tomatoes and peppers to which eggs are added, one by one, to obtain a fluffy purée. To this is added Bayonne ham.

PIPIT – Small edible bird which can be prepared in the same way as lark (q.v.).

PIPKIN. HUGUENOTE – Old-fashioned cooking pot with or without little feet.

PIQUEPOULT – Wine made in the Gers département, from which Armagnacs are distilled.

PIQUETTE – Wine of second or third pressing obtained by flooding husks of grapes with unsweetened warm water. It is a light, refreshing drink which does not travel, and is used either for home consumption or for distilling purposes. Common usage has also extended the word to mean 'medicocré wine'.

PIROGHI or PIROZHKI. PIROGUI – In Russian the name piroghi means pies large enough to be cut into portions. Pirozhki, meaning little pies, are small enough to be eaten out of the hand.

Carrot pirozhki. PIROGUI AUX CAROTTES – Roll some puff pastry about 6 or 7 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick and cut into circles 10 cm. (4 inches) in diameter.

Shred the carrots into a brunoise (q.v.), cook in butter, mix with chopped hard-boiled eggs, parsley and chives, bind with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and put 1 tablespoon of this mixture on each circle of pastry.

Moisten the edges of the pastry and seal, enclosing the filling and giving the pirozhki an oval shape. Put them on a baking sheet, brush with beaten egg and bake for 18 minutes in a hot oven.

Caucasian pirozhki. PIROGUI CAUCASIENS – Spread a thin layer of cheese-flavoured Chou pastry (see CHOU) on a baking sheet. Bake in the oven. Put the pastry on a table, divide into 2 parts and sandwich them together, having first coated them with a light layer of thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), to which some grated cheese and cooked sliced mushrooms have been added.

Cut into rectangles 6 cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches) long and 3 cm. ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  inches) wide.

Cover these with cheese-flavoured Béchamel sauce, and coat with breadcrumbs. Fry in smoking hot deep fat and drain.

Cream cheese pirozhki. PIROGUI AU FROMAGE – Butter dariole moulds and line them with unsweetened Common brioche dough (see BRIOCHE). Fill with cream cheese, cover with a circle of the same dough and seal the edges. Leave to rise in a warm place for 30 minutes. Bake in a hot oven from 20 to 25 minutes.

Fish pirozhki. PIROGUI AU POISSON – Proceed as described in the recipe for Game pirozhki (see below), replacing the game meat by chopped cooked white fish.

Game pirozhki. PIROGUI AU GIBIER – Prepare Puff pastry (see DOUGH), roll it out  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick and cut into circles about 7 to 8 cm. (3 inches) in diameter.

Put 1 tablespoon game hash (q.v.), mixed with chopped hard-boiled eggs, cooked buckwheat or rice cooked in meat stock, on each circle. Moisten the edges of the pastry, and cover with another circle of the same size and thickness. Brush with beaten egg, and bake in a hot oven from 18 to 20 minutes.

Moscow pirozhki. PIROGUI À LA MOSCOVITE – Roll out unsweetened Common brioche dough (see BRIOCHE) into oval pieces about 6 cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches) wide and 10 cm. (4 inches) long. Put on each a piece of filling, the size of a walnut, prepared in the following manner.

Chop and mix 100 g. (4 oz.) white flaked fish, 75 g. (3 oz.) cooked visiga (dry spinal cord of the sturgeon) and 2 hard-boiled eggs. Season.

Moisten the edges of the dough slightly and enclose the filling by bringing the edges together and sealing them. Keep in a warm place to rise for 25 minutes. Bake in a hot oven for 20 minutes.

Polish pirozhki. PIROGUI POLONAIS – Roll out puff pastry 6 to 7 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick and cut into oval-shaped pieces about 6 cm. ( $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches) wide and 10 cm. (4 inches) long.

Put the following filling on each, in pieces the size of a walnut.

Sauté gently 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) chopped onion in butter, add 250 g. (9 oz.) veal udder and 250 g. (9 oz.) lean veal, cut in small dice and also fried in butter. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg and leave to cool before using.

Seal as described in the recipe for Moscow pirozhki, and bake in a hot oven for 20 minutes.

Pirozhki with truffles. PIROGUI AUX TRUFFES – Cut cooked truffles into thick round slices. Cover with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE) and leave until cold.

Sandwich these between two blini (q.v.) circlelets cut out with a pastry cutter, and press down well to seal the edges. Dip in beaten egg, roll in breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter.

Pirozhki with various vegetable fillings. PIROGUI AUX LÉGUMES – Proceed as described in the recipe for Carrot pirozhki, replacing carrots by a salpicon (q.v.) of various vegetables cooked in butter and bound with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE).

The filling of vegetable pirozhki may be supplemented by buckwheat or rice cooked in stock or water.

Visiga pirozhki. PIROGUI AU VÉSIGA – Roll out puff pastry  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick and cut into circlelets 10 cm. (4 inches) in diameter. Put on each some of the following mixture:

Cook 100 g. (4 oz.) visiga (dry spinal cord of the sturgeon) in white stock, 4 parsley roots and 1 stalk of celery. Drain the visiga, chop it, as well as the parsley roots and celery, add 2 chopped hard-boiled eggs and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Bind with 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE). Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg and leave to get cold before using.

Moisten the edges of the pastry, fold in the shape of a turnover, seal well, brush with beaten egg, and bake in a hot oven from 18 to 20 minutes.

PISSALADIÈRE – Flan made mainly in the Nice region, filled with onions, anchovy fillets and black olives.

PISTACHE (EN) – Term used in the south-western part of France, mainly in the Catalan country, to describe a special method of preparing leg of mutton. Its only garnish consists of cloves of garlic. (See MUTTON, Pistache of mutton.)

Pigeons and partridges can also be prepared en pistache.

PISTACHIO. PISTACHE – Seed of the Pistacia vera, a deciduous tree, native of the Levant, which, it is said, was brought to Rome by Vitellius. It yields an edible nut, about the size of an olive, brown-reddish in colour, with a thin husk, inside which a ligneous membrane is found. This is easily separated into 2 pieces and contains a very pale almond enclosed in a reddish skin.

Pistachio nuts have a sweet and pleasant flavour and are used as flavouring in cookery, charcuterie, pastry-making and confectionery.

This is the name given to a Comminges mutton ragoût garnished with haricot beans. Here is the recipe given by M. Jean Peyrafitte of the hotel 'Poste et Golf' at Luchon:

'Soak 500 g. (18 oz.) white Tarbes haricot beans for 12 hours, changing the water twice. Cook the beans in an earthenware casserole with a bouquet garni, some whole carrots, garlic, 1 onion stuck with 2 or more cloves, a good hock of home-cured ham and 150 g. (5 oz.) fresh pork rinds.

PISTOU

‘Sauté a piece of mutton (shoulder preferably). When this is three-quarters cooked, drain it and add the haricot beans. Simmer over a low heat until the mutton is cooked. Check the seasoning and serve in the casserole.’

PISTOU (Italian cookery) – This soup, the recipe for which is given in the section headed SOUPS AND BROTHS, is made of various vegetables and thick vermicelli. Its main characteristic is that pounded garlic with basil and grilled tomatoes mixed with oil are used.

Pistou actually means pounded basil. Its meaning has been extended to include soups incorporating the latter.

PITHIVIERS GÂTEAU – This gâteau is a speciality of Pithiviers. It is made of Puff pastry (see DOUGH) and almond paste, which can be prepared from the following ingredients: 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) blanched almonds, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) fine sugar, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter, 3 eggs and ½ dl. (3 tablespoons, scant ¼ cup) rum.

Pound the almonds in a mortar, adding 1 egg. When they are reduced to a fine paste, put into a bowl, add castor sugar and butter, and blend the mixture, stirring with a wooden spoon until very smooth. Add 2 eggs, one by one, and flavour with rum. Roll out half the puff pastry into a round piece 20 cm (8 inches) in diameter and 2 mm (⅛ inch) thick. Turn the pastry and put on a moistened metal sheet.

Spread this with the almond paste, leaving about 2 cm (¾ inch) of the edge uncovered. Roll out the rest of the pastry into a circle of the same diameter as that forming the bottom of the gâteau. To seal, moisten the bottom piece of pastry around the edges and cover with the second piece, taking care to turn it. Press well all round to seal the edges properly, brush with beaten egg and leave for 5 minutes. With the point of a knife mark the top with faint lines in the shape of a rosette and bake in the oven from 25 to 30 minutes. Two minutes before taking it out of the oven, sprinkle the gâteau with very fine sugar and glaze in the hottest part of the oven.

PITHIVIERS AU FOIN – See CHEESE.

PLAFOND – French word for tinned copper metal baking sheets, which were used in the olden days for browning small pieces of meat.

PLAICE. CARRELET, PLIE FRANCHE – Seawater fish which is flat, diamond-shaped with rounded angles. The two eyes are set on the left side of the head. The left side is brownish with rounded or oval spots, red or orange. Plaice have 5 or 6 bony tubercles well marked between the eyes. The reverse side is white.

This fish, though of medium quality, is quite good, provided it is perfectly fresh.

Boiled plaice with various sauces. CARRELET BOUILLI – Only large plaice are used in this way, cooked whole, or cut into slices. Cook them in a court-bouillon of water, milk, salt, and lemon slices, in the same way as for brill (q.v.).

Drain the plaice and garnish with fresh parsley. Serve with boiled potatoes in a dish and with one of the sauces which are normally served with boiled fish.

Plaice à la bonne femme. CARRELET À LA BONNE FEMME – Proceed as for Brill à la bonne femme (see BRILL).

Plaice Dugléré. CARRELET DUGLÉRÉ – Cut a large plaice into slices and cook in the same way as for Bass Dugléré (see BASS).

Chef's lore maintains that it was for plaice that Dugléré (then chef of the one-time Café Anglais) invented this method of preparation, which in actual practice is used for bass, brill and chicken-turbot.

Fried plaice. CARRELET FRIT – Use only small plaice and cook in the same manner as Fried brill (see BRILL).

Plaice à l'indienne. CARRELET À L'INDIENNE – Cut a large plaice into slices. Season with salt and pepper and put them in a pan on a base of chopped onions softened in butter and seasoned with curry powder.

Stew the plaice with the lid on. Sprinkle it with curry powder, pour over it 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine for 750 g. (1½ lb.) fish. Boil down the liquor, and cover with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), not too thick. Cook for a further 15 minutes on a low heat.

Place the slices in a dish, cover them with the boiled-down sauce to which butter has been added, flavoured with a little lemon juice. Serve with Rice à l'indienne (see RICE).

Plaice à la niçoise. CARRELET À LA NIÇOISE – Make some light incisions in the plaice. Season with salt and pepper. Brush it with oil and grill under a gentle heat.

Put it on a serving dish on a layer of tomatoes softened in butter, seasoned with garlic and chopped tarragon. Lay a grid of anchovies on top of the fish, and sprinkle with capers. Surround it with green olives which have been stoned and blanched, or unstoned black olives. Sprinkle with chopped basil.

As well as the methods indicated above, see also those given for BRILL; TURBOT; SOLE.

PLAISIR – French word for a small wafer or oublie, rolled into a cone (see OUBLIE.)

PLANTAIN TREE. FIGUIER D'ADAM – A type of banana tree (see BANANA).

PLASTRON – Ventral part of the shell of turtles. This part, as well as the dorsal one, after being taken out of the horny plate or shell, is used for making turtle soup.

PLATE. ASSIETTE – Small table utensil, mostly of porcelain or china nowadays, of various materials in the past. The centre of the plate is called the 'well' and the border, which forms the band around the hollow part, is called the 'rim'. This band is also sometimes referred to as the 'shoulder'.

The Greeks had two types of plates: the first, tryps, were quite large and could serve as a dish; the other, tryblion, was smaller.

The Romans had plates in pottery, glass, silver and gold. The common people used wooden bowls.

In the Middle Ages, the individual plate disappeared. It was replaced by a round slice of bread which was called a trencher. After the meal this bread was distributed to the poor.

At the end of the fifteenth century everybody wanted to have silver plates and dishes. Juvenal des Ursin sorrowfully protested against this abuse.

In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries plates became magnificent works of art, in which gold, enamel and even precious stones were combined. There exist today wonderful plates which were made by the enamellers of Limoges. Plants, shells and animals can be seen worked in relief on the plates of Bernard Palissy.

Although the greater part of the plates in precious metals and enamels are of the same size as present-day plates – about 20 cm. (8 inches) in diameter – they were rather show pieces than table utensils in daily use. Plates manufactured at Sèvres come very near to the art of bygone days.

The faïence of Moustiers, remarkable for its decorative qualities and the purity of its enamel, was for a long time attributed to the factories of Rouen.

At the end of the seventeenth century Pierre Clerissy, coming from a family of potters, created in Moustiers a pottery industry, which, according to Davillier, 'must have brought him a fortune, and to his town a century of prosperity'. His nephew, who succeeded him in 1728 and bore the same name, was elevated by Louis XV in 1743 and took the title of Seigneur de Trevans. He was appointed secretary of the king's chancellery in 1847 by the Parliament of Provence, when he joined forces with Joseph Fouque, a skilled artist, and handed over his factory to him. The factory by now employed 28 painters and remained the first and most important of all those soon to be established by his competitors at Moustiers and in several neighbouring localities. Its products enjoyed a well-merited reputation, which they maintained for a long time, for Abbé Delaporte, in his Voyageur français, published in Paris in 1788, speaks of it in these terms:

'There is in the little town of Moustiers a factory of faïence which is considered the best and finest in the kingdom.'

Other factories in the south of France included those at Marseille. Some of these, notably those of Savy, produced remarkable pieces, decorated with landscapes and still life, painted with great perfection.

The decoration of plates offers a great variety of subjects and curiosities. The décor of Italian plates, or majolica, is very varied. At the beginning, the ornaments were mixed with figures, then scenes reproduced from the works of great masters began to take precedence, often taking up the whole surface. Finally, the central motive was framed with so-called grotesque ornaments. At Nevers, Italian influence is felt; later we find white decorations on Persian blue background. Still later comes the Chinese style. Nevers also produced popular china plates, particularly so-called 'patronymic' plates, bearing the name of the person for whom they were destined as wedding presents, with a figure of his or her patron saint painted on it; plates bearing professional emblems and plates made during the revolutionary period, with mottos and symbols.

Historical events have often been represented on popular plates. The conquest of Algeria, depicting military scenes, such as the award of the croix d'honneur; the consuls of Damascus congratulating Abd el-Kader on his intervention on the side of the Lebanese Maronites massacred by the Turks; the Syrian Maronites welcoming French troops, and episodes from the 1914 War. Puzzle pictures and Béranger songs also decorated popular plates.

Rouen plates have had several styles of decoration: the lambrequin design, composed of symmetrical patterns, repeated or alternating, and converging towards the centre of Decoration of plates is in fact a very active branch of art, even in modern times.

PLATINE – French name for a small low baking pan.

PLEUROTUS – Genus of fungi, some species of which are edible and excellent.

PLOMBIÈRE (Ice) – Iced sweets (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

Golden plover
(W. E. Higham)

PLOVER. PLUVIER – Genus of wading birds of which there are several species: the great plover is about the size of a lapwing or peewit and, like them, haunts marshlands and water meadows near the sea. The golden plover is the size of a turtle dove and its plumage is speckled with yellow.

Plovers are considered excellent game and some gastronomes insist that they should be cooked undrawn. This tradition is an old one: in the sixteenth century, according to Lucien Tendret, only three kinds of birds (larks, turtle doves and plovers) were roasted without 'breaking into them'.

Plover can be prepared in any way suitable for woodcock (q.v.).

PLUCHES – French name for the leaves of certain plants, such as chervil and parsley. These leaves are generally used raw, chervil leaves being put into some soups. In some cases the leaves are blanched in boiling water.

PLUCK. ISSUES – The lights, heart and entrails of slaughtered animals. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Lamb's pluck à l'anglaise).

The French word issues is wrongly used for the giblets of poultry. The expression issues de table was used formerly to describe the last tit-bits served at the end of a great banquet. These included sweets, sugared almonds, crystallised fruit, and other delicacies which went with the sweet. Sometimes these were not served at the table but in a room next to the dining-room.

PLUM. PRUNE – Fruit of the plum tree, of the family Rosaceae. It is cultivated everywhere in Europe. There is an infinite variety of plum trees in France which all produce sweet-tasting fruit. Among the best of these are the greengage (reine-claude) which ripens at the end of July and whose flesh is very sweet and well flavoured; the golden greengage (reine-claude dorée) which ripens towards the end of August; the mirabelle, a small round plum, yellow in colour streaked with red, the flesh very well flavoured, which is fully ripened at the end of August; violet, black, and white damsons; the Saint Catherine; the early yellow; the quetsche (the fruit from which the famous liqueur is made and which is also used for compotes, jams and in pâtisserie) which matures during the month of August; the ente or Agen plum, medium-sized fruit, pinkish violet in colour which ripens in September (usually sold as prunes).

All these varieties of plums are eaten as fresh fruit. They may also be used to make compotes, jams and a large number of pastry desserts. The plum is an excellent dessert fruit.

Plums Bourdaloue. PRUNES BOURDALOUE – Large greengages are used in this way. Proceed as for Apricots Bourdaloue (see APRICOT).

Plums in brandy. PRUNES À L'EAU-DE-VIE – Wipe some greengages and prick them 2 or 3 times with a big needle. Weigh the fruit. Make a syrup of sugar in the ratio of 250 g. (9 oz., 1 generous cup) sugar and 3 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) water to each kg. (2 lb.) fruit, and cook to 105°C. (220°F.).

When this syrup is ready, immerse the plums in it. Let them boil twice before touching with the skimmer.

Drain and put them in a jar. Let the syrup cool completely. Add to it a quantity of good quality brandy equal to the quantity of syrup. Strain the liquid through muslin and fill the jar with it. Cork and secure firmly. Leave to soak well before using.

POACHING

Candied plums. PRUNES CONFITES – Prepared as for Candied apricots (see APRICOT).

Compote of plums – See COMPOTE, Plum compote.

Plums Condé. PRUNES CONDÉ – Large greengages are used for this recipe. Proceed as for Apricots Condé (see APRICOT).

Plums flambé Lorraine. PRUNES FLAMBÉES À LA LORRAINE – Cook lightly in a vanilla syrup some stoned mirabelle plums. Drain, and put them in ovenware dishes. Pour over a little syrup bound with arrowroot. Sprinkle with hot Quetsche. Set alight when serving.

Plum fritters – See FRITTERS.

Plum fritters à l'agenaise – See FRITTERS.

Ice and iced mousse of plums. GLACE, MOUSSE GLACÉE AUX PRUNES – Follow the same procedure as for Apricot ice or Iced mousse (see ICE CREAMS AND ICES).

Plum jam. CONFITURE DE PRUNES – Allow 350 g. (12 oz., 1½ cups) sugar for 500 g. (18 oz.) stoned fruit. Proceed as for Apricot jam (see JAMS AND JELLIES).

Plum soufflé Lorraine. SOUFFLÉ AUX PRUNES À LA LORRAINE – Prepare a purée of 200 g. (7 oz.) mirabelle plums and mix it with 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar cooked to a heavy syrup. Add 5 egg whites beaten to a very stiff foam and then diced preserved plums, soaked in plum brandy. To cook, proceed as for sweet soufflés (see SOUFFLÉ).

Alsation plum tart – See TART, Fruit tart à l'alsacienne.

POACHING. POCHAGE – Method of cooking meat, poultry, fish, etc., in a clear spiced and flavoured stock, or in water. (See CULINARY METHODS.)

Poached eggs. OEUFS POCHÉS – The eggs selected must be small and very fresh (see EGGS, Poached eggs).

POCHARD. AYTHYA – Species of duck known as pochard, pockard or poker (the female of which is known as dunbird).

A fully-grown male pochard has a bright red head and neck; the back and breast partly a dull black, partly ash-grey with thin black stripes. The sides are similarly striped; the lower region of the abdomen is black, the bill is dark blue, the culmen and the tip are black, the tarsus and the scutes blueish and the eyes orange-red. The plumage of the female of the species, even in the spring, is less brilliant.

This species frequently nests in the marshy plains of Holland, Northern Germany and Belgium and crosses France twice a year during winter migrations. They are then keenly pursued by sportsmen for the succulence and the distinctive taste of their flesh, which is greatly prized by connoisseurs.

All the methods of preparation given for wild duck can be applied to pochard (see DUCK).

POCHOUSE – The pochouse (also written pauchose) is a matelote (q.v.) made of all kinds of freshwater fish, with eel predominating, which should be cooked with white wine and thickened with Kneaded butter (see BUTTER), as with Matelote à la meunière (see MATELOTE).

Cut the fish into uniform chunks and put into a buttered sauté pan on a foundation of onions and carrots cut in slices. Season and put on a big bouquet garni (q.v.) containing 1 clove of garlic in the middle. Pour in enough dry white wine to cover the fish. Bring to the boil, then cover and simmer from 20 to 25 minutes.

Drain the pieces of fish. Put them into another sauté pan with diced bacon, mushrooms and small onions. Thicken the liquor in which the fish was cooked with kneaded butter. Strain and pour over the fish. Simmer for a few moments. Just before serving add a few tablespoons fresh cream.

The word comes from the fisherman's 'poche', the game bag he fills with the various fish that go to make up this freshwater bouillabaisse. The dish is a speciality of Verdun-sur-le-Doubs (where there is a confrerie dedicated to it). The true pochouse never contains larding fat and must contain burbot.

Pochouse de Verdun-sur-le-Doubs – Made with fish of different kinds: eel, pike, carp, barbel, chub and bream.

Cut them up and place in a tinned copper cauldron. Pour in 1 glass white Burgundy wine, covering the fish.

For a pochouse requiring about 2 kg. (4 to 5 lb.) of fish, you will need a fair amount of garlic, 100 g. (4 oz.) bacon cut into lardoons, thyme, bay leaf, enough salt and a good pinch of pepper. Grill the bacon.

Knead 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) fresh butter mixed with flour, for thickening the sauce. Cook for 30 to 45 minutes. At first boil fast, then simmer for 12 minutes, after the butter has been added.

To serve, take the chunks out one by one, put them on a dish on a foundation of croûtons of bread fried in butter and rubbed with garlic. Strain the sauce over the fish.

Take care not to stir the chunks of fish during cooking; just shake the pan.

Avoid cooking the hard roes of pike, barbel and chub.

POD. COSSE – Vessel enclosing certain leguminous seeds: pea pod, bean pod, etc.

POÊLAGE – Method of cooking applied to various substances, which are cooked à l'étuvée, that is, in a covered pan with butter or other fat. (See CULINARY METHODS, Pot-roasting.)

Poêle (pan) for crêpes, fish and ordinary frying
(Larousse)

POÊLON – An earthenware utensil or a pan made of copper or some other metal, with a long handle. Such aluminium or copper pans are used for cooking sugar.

POGNE DE ROMANS – Cake which is a kind of sweet brioche and is prepared in the following manner: sift 500 g. (18 oz., 4½ cups) flour and spread it on the table in a circle. In the middle of this circle put 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 tablespoon orange blossom water, or ½ teaspoon orange extract, 25 g. (1 oz.) yeast, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) softened butter and 4 eggs. Mix all the ingredients well, working the dough vigorously to give it body. Add 2 more eggs, one by one and, finally, still kneading the dough, incorporate 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) castor (fine) sugar little by little. Put this dough into a small bowl sprinkled with flour, cover, and keep in a warm place from 10 to 12 hours.

Turn out the dough on to a board and pummel it to arrest fermentation. Divide into 2 parts, mould into balls, shape the top (as in the case of ordinary brioche). Put the cakes into buttered baking tins, leave the dough to rise for another 30 minutes in a warm place, brush with beaten egg and bake in a moderate oven (the pogne can be eaten hot or cold). It can be served with redcurrant jelly.

POISSONNIER – Chef of an important restaurant who is in charge of all fish dishes, with the exception of fried or grilled fish, which are the domain of the rôtisseur or the grillardin. Poissonnier also means fishmonger.

POITOU – The Poitou gastronomic folklore extends to several départements (Vendée, Vienne, Deux-Sèvres, Maine-et-Loire). The culinary specialities are in fact local dishes, as they are everywhere, varying in detail according to tastes in different places.

The cattle raised in Parthenay and Bressuire provide excellent meat, mutton is of good quality and the pork, owing to the good pig food, is of excellent flavour.

Poultry farming produces a whole range of birds: turkeys, capons, table fowl, guinea fowl, and in the cantons of Chef-Boutonne and Sauzé-Vaussay ducks are raised for the production of foie gras. Civray pâte de foie gras is famous; confits de canard are also made here.

Ground game is of high repute, as well as winged game (partridges, woodcock, snipe, quail, rail and field-ducks) and waterfowl abounds here.

Coastal parts of Vendée abound in excellent fish. Almost every kind of shellfish is found there. The Portuguese oysters of Tranche and Groin-du-Cou, the mussels from the Aiguillon mussel farms and the spiny lobsters of the island of Yeu are greatly prized. The rivers provide a great variety of freshwater fish, the brooks and streams furnish crayfish and the marshes abound in eels and frogs.

The land of Poitou is fertile and produces an abundance of onions, artichokes, garden peas, Marac haricot beans, Niort cauliflowers and Vendée green cabbages.

The wooded district north-west of Poitou produces choice chestnuts and Vienne equally good walnuts.

Among the cheeses made in this district are La Mothe Saint-Héraye, Saint-Loup, Goat cheese, Vienne chabichou, etc. Local butter, Charente, is good.

Culinary specialities – Among the typical local dishes is potée à la tête de porc, which furnishes both a soup and the main course; the pig's head is cut into pieces and eaten sprinkled with sea salt and a dash of vinegar. Among the fish dishes are: grilled eels from Saint-Trojan; bouillette, a matelote of eel in red wine, with prunes added to the garnish; chaudrée, a fish stew, its main feature being the variety of the fish used; the cotriade, a kind of bouillabaisse, which is not specifically a Vendée dish but is made all along the coast, particularly in the canton of Noirmoutier. Frogs' legs à la luconnaise are first soaked for 1 hour in vinegar-flavoured water, then drained, dried, dredged with flour, fried in noisette butter and served with fried cloves of garlic.

Among meat dishes, is the Vendée fressure; it is the pluck, including the pig's lungs, liver, heart and spleen, chopped and mixed with congealed pig's blood. The whole is then cooked with chopped fat bacon, slowly, for a long time. It is usually eaten cold.

Pâté de Paques, or Easter pie, is long, crescent shaped and filled with balls of hashed meat, hard-boiled eggs, and slices of pork, chicken or rabbit, sautéed in butter and left to get cold. The Vendée pie is made of fillets of wild rabbit and force meat of the flesh mixed with an equal quantity of pork, half cooked and chopped. Easter loaf or galette piquante is made of bread dough mixed with butter, sugar, eggs and orange-blossom water, and shaped into a cob.

Vegetable dishes include the chouée, which is green cabbage boiled in salted water, drained and pressed, with plenty of butter added to it; mogettes, French beans cooked in the ordinary way and dressed with butter and cream; the far (or farci), which is composed of different vegetables, such as Swiss chard leaves, spinach, leeks, and cabbage, first cooked in salted water, then drained, pressed, chopped and stewed for a long time with pork fat, onion and diced bacon. Beaten eggs and cream are added to the mixture.

Notable sweets and pastries include the tourteau fromagé, cream cheese or goat cheese reduced to a fine paste, to which is added a quarter its weight of flour, fine sugar, butter, egg yolks, whites beaten into a stiff froth, and flavourings. It is then put into a mould, allowed to ferment, and baked in the oven. The fouée ('faggot'), a circlet of bread dough covered with cream, melted butter or oil, which used to be baked in a blazing oven; bottereaux de Langon, a kind of oreillettes deep-fried in oil; and plum pies. The following are among noted local products: Montmorillon macaroons and biscuits; Lusignan melusines and macaroons; Parthenay biscuits; Châtelleraut caramels; Niort angelica.

Gastronomic map of Poitou

POIVRADE

Wines – Poitou offers a selection of excellent non-vintage local wines. The angelica liqueur of Niort is very well known.

POIVRADE. Method of preparing certain meats, mainly ground game. (See SAUCE, Pepper or poivrade sauce).

The name also applies to small young artichokes which are eaten à la croque-au-sel (with salt as the only accompaniment).

POIVRON – French common name for red pepper or paprika.

POLAND – See INTERNATIONAL COOKERY.

POLENTA – Piedmont form of maize (corn) meal porridge. It is made of maize flour dried in the open and not in the oven, as for gaudes (hasty puddings). It can also be made of chestnut flour, as is done in Corsica.

Polenta is used as a garnish for garden warblers and other similar small birds; this is a traditional north Italian dish and was a great favourite of Napoleon I.

To cook polenta. Bring 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) water to the boil, add salt, allowing 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons per litre. Sprinkle in 250 g. (9 oz.) maize flour gradually, stirring with a wooden spoon. Cook from 25 to 30 minutes. Add, for the above quantity of polenta, about 65 g. (2 $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 5 tablespoons) butter and 75 g. (3 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) grated Parmesan cheese.

Spread the polenta on a moistened baking tray in an even layer. When cold, cut into square or lozenge-shaped pieces. Fry these pieces golden brown in butter. Arrange on a dish and sprinkle with grated cheese and Noisette butter (see BUTTER).

Polenta can be used as a garnish for various meat and fish dishes.

Polenta fritters – See FRITTERS.

Thrushes or other small birds with polenta. GRIVES À LA POLENTA – Prepare polenta with cheese as described above. Pour it into a buttered oven-proof dish, spreading it in a layer 3 cm. (1 $\frac{1}{2}$  inches) thick.

With the aid of a spoon dipped in water indent as many 'nests' as there are thrushes (or other birds). Sprinkle with grated cheese. Half roast the birds in the oven and put one in each little cavity. Sprinkle with a little melted butter and finish cooking in the oven. Dilute the pan juices with white wine and pour round the dish.

POLONAISE (À LA) – Method of preparing certain dishes. (See ASPARAGUS, CAULIFLOWER.)

POLYPODIUM. POLYPODE – A species of edible ferns. See FERN.

POLYPORUS. POLYPORE – A very big species of fungi (reaching a weight of up to 40 pounds), growing generally at the foot of old oak trees and on the ground. These giant mushrooms are edible but the flesh is rather tough. They are found mainly in Germany, Hungary, Italy and more rarely, in France.

POMEGRANATE. GRENADE – Fruit of the common pomegranate tree which is believed to be of North African origin. It is used widely in France.

Pomegranates can be eaten raw like other fruit, but generally it is the juice only which is used. From this juice the popular grenadine syrup is made. Pomegranates are also used in the preparation of ices and jellies. A type of alcoholic drink is also made from this fruit.

POMEROL – Appellation contrôlée vineyard of the Gironde situated in the commune of the same name on the right bank of the Dordogne. Production is limited to vigorous, aromatic red wines of outstanding quality and excellent bouquet.

POMFRET. BRÈME DE MER – Fish (Brama brama) which is also known as Ray's bream and sea bream, and is found in the North Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Pomfret is also the name of flat fish found in the Indian Ocean.

POMMARD – This wine, which is produced in the little commune of Côte-d'Or (Côte de Beaune), is classed among the finest growths of Burgundy wines.

POMME DE PIN – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

POMPE or GIBASSIER (Provence cake) – Traditional cake eaten in Provence at the gros soupe on Christmas Eve. It is also called gibassier ('gibbous'), because of the lumps on its surface.

The gros soupe is the meal which precedes the midnight mass. As the fast entails abstinence from meat, the meal invariably consists of Lenten dishes, such as cod en rayte or en brandade and cardoons in cream.

The dessert is by no means the least attraction of this traditional meal and consists mainly of locally manufactured nougat, dates, and – above all – the pompe or gibassier, another local product, the whole washed down liberally with the customary mulled wine.

'Here is the recipe for this cake:

Ingredients. 500 g. (18 oz.) bread dough leaven, 500 g. (18 oz., 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  cups) brown sugar, 2 kg. (4 $\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) flour, 6 eggs, 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) best oil and finely grated rind of 1 lemon and 1 orange.

Method. Spread the flour on a board in a circle, make a well in the middle and put into it the leaven with the brown sugar, oil and half the eggs. Mix well, incorporating the flour little by little. Knead the dough well and add the rest of the eggs one by one. This dough should be quite soft.

'Leave to rise for about 6 hours in a warm temperature, then beat it out, divide into pieces of about 200 g. (7 oz.), shape into crowns and put on boards sprinkled with fine bran.

'Keep in a warm place, as the dough takes a long time to rise.

'Bake in a lively oven. When ready, take out of the oven and moisten the surface of each cake with a cloth dipped in a mixture of water and orange-blossom water.' (A. Caillat.)

POMPONNETTES – Small preparations served as hors-d'œuvre. (See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Hot hors-d'œuvre.)

PONT-L'ÉVÊQUE – See CHEESE.

PONT-NEUF (Pâtisserie) – Line buttered tartlet tins with Puff pastry (see DOUGH). Fill with Frangipane cream (see CREAM) mixed with crushed macaroons. Put 2 thin strips of puff pastry criss-cross fashion on each tartlet. Bake in a moderate oven. When ready, remove from oven and sprinkle with fine sugar.

POPE. GREMILLE – Fish of the perch family, sometimes called ruff. It is a freshwater fish found in most of the rivers of

Pope

France, especially in the Seine and the Moselle. The pike-perches of middle western U.S.A. are very similar.

The flesh is quite delicate. All the recipes for perch may be used in the preparation of this fish (see PERCH). It is used especially in fish stews (matelotes).

POPPY. COQUELICOT – Common plant in cornfields, the petals of which are used to dye certain liquids. The leaves, in spite of being slightly narcotic, are sometimes used as a vegetable like spinach.

The white poppy is cultivated principally for the extraction of poppy seed oil. The aromatic seeds were used in pastry-making in times of antiquity (they were known to the Egyptians earlier than 1500 B.C.), and are still used in many regions for sprinkling cakes and bread.

PORCELAIN. PORCELAINE – Fine earthenware. It owes its name to the cowrie, or porcelain shell, which in old French was called pourcelline or pourcellaine and in Italian and Latin porcellana or porcellina.

There are two kinds of porcelain: hard-paste or Chinese porcelain and soft-paste or French porcelain.

Hard-paste porcelain dates back to the Han period, 206 B.C. The best period was during the reign of Ch'eng Hua, 1465–1488 (Ming dynasty). From China the industry spread to Japan in the sixteenth century.

For a long time Chinese and Japanese porcelain aroused the admiration of connoisseurs and the envy of European potters.

Soft-paste porcelain does not owe its name to the degree of hardness of the actual paste but to its weak resistance to high temperature and to the softness of its glaze, easily scratched by steel. Its discovery is probably due to a Rouen earthenware maker by the name of Poterat.

A century earlier, however, in 1585, a first attempt, soon to be abandoned, was made in Florence. At the end of the seventeenth century the first pottery works producing soft-paste porcelain was established at Saint-Cloud. In the eighteenth century rival establishments sprang up in Paris, Lille, Chantilly and, finally, under the patronage of Madame de Pompadour and Louis XV, at Vincennes, which in 1753 became the Royal pottery works. In 1756 it was transferred to Sèvres where it is active to this day.

This small workshop, in which Orry and Fuloy were able to establish themselves, thanks to the patronage of Madame de Pompadour, produced far better results than were achieved before that in France or abroad, in spite of the competition set up by Meissen in Saxony, where hard-paste porcelain has been made since 1709, following the discovery of kaolin clay deposits in the region. The problem of manufacturing porcelain similar to that made in China and Japan, which had for so long occupied the minds of potters, was solved, and that period saw the rise of numerous potteries in Germany. Potteries were also established in Austria, Holland, Denmark, Russia, Switzerland and Italy. In 1776, kaolin deposits were found in France, first at Alençon, then at Saint-Yrieux, near Limoges. It was then that Sèvres began to modify its production and potteries were opened all over France, in Limoges, Paris, and other places.

The pottery industry was neglected for a time but now beautiful porcelain is once again in favour. The Sèvres porcelain factory, with its workshops and laboratories, has made important improvements in the manufacturing process and the decoration of the porcelain.

PORCHERONS (AUX) – See RESTAURANTS OF BYGONE DAYS.

PORCUPINE. PORC-ÉPIC – Animal whose rather fat flesh is good to eat, especially when young.

PORK. PORC – Domestic pachyderm which is not usually referred to by this name until after slaughter. The male is called a boar, the female a sow, the castrated animal is called fig or stag and the young animal is called piglet, porker or sucking pig.

Pork is fat and firm and has more red meat than white. It only acquires this colour when the animal is killed by complete bleeding. It is lacking in albuminoids (16 per cent only) and is particularly indigestible because it contains such a high proportion of fats. For this reason pork is taboo for sufferers of hepatitis and is not recommended for persons with intestinal troubles or poor digestions.

There are three principal breeds of pig which have produced the many species which exist in Europe: the Asiatic, Neapolitan and Celtic.

The Asiatic breed, with small straight, pointed ears, has been used for cross-breeding, as it produced bacon of soft and inferior quality.

The Neapolitan breed, with pointed, horizontally placed ears, without cross-breeding and living in the open, has retained its purity of strain.

The Celtic breed, with long, wide, lop ears, which formerly inhabited Gaul and the British Isles, has, as a result of cross-breeding, undergone various changes in various regions of France. Today there is a great variety of species, including the following: Alsace, Anjou, Bayonne, Bresse, Brittany, Bugey, Champagne, Charolais, Craon, Corsican, Landes, Lauragaise, Limousin, Lorraine, Manche, Marche, Nevers, Normandy, Périgord, Picardy, Rouergue, Vendée, etc.

Among the different breeds, five can be singled out:

The Normandy breed, with a lean body and saddle-back, which gives superior quality flesh; Craon or Anjou breed, raised in the Loire basin; Lorraine breed, raised mainly in the départements of Muerthe and Moselle, greatly prized for the quality of its flesh and bacon; the Périgord breed, which produces pigs with a very highly developed sense of smell, used for finding truffles; the Bresse breed, black pigs with a white band encircling the middle of the body.

Among the English cross-breeds, all of which have been introduced into France, is the Yorkshire, white or yellowish skinned pigs, which produce the famous hams. Other principal breeds of British pig include: Large White Ulster, Large Black, Tamworth, Wessex Saddle-back, Berkshire, Gloucester Old Spots, Lincoln Curly-coated, Cumberland, Essex.

Pork is eaten either fresh or cured. Its flesh lends itself particularly to salting, smoking and many other processes of pork butchery.

Pork andouilles and andouillettes (sausages). ANDOUILLES, ANDOUILLETTES DE PORC – Big pork sausages made of the large intestine and the stomach of the pig, cut into strips and mixed with lardons of pork fat. These sausages are salted and can be kept for a long time.

The most famous andouilles are those made in Vire and in Brittany. They are eaten as hors-d'œuvre, cut into thin slices like saveloys and other sausage.

They can also be served hot. For this they should first be boiled in slightly salted water, left to cool, then grilled and served with mashed potatoes or other vegetable.

The best andouillettes come from Troyes, Nancy, Tours, Strasbourg, Lyons, Cambrai, Caen and Paris.

All these varieties of andouillettes are grilled and served with mashed potatoes or other vegetables. Before being put under the grill, the andouillettes should be cut slightly and brushed with melted butter.

They can also be fried in butter or lard.

Home-made andouilles. ANDOUILLES DE MÉNAGE – Soak pig's intestines in cold water and wash well. Drain, dry on a cloth, cut into thin strips and put into a bowl with half their weight of lean bacon, cut into very small pieces. Add 1 glass white wine and chopped onion, shallot and parsley. Season with salt, pepper and spices, mix well and leave to marinate in this seasoning for several hours. Fill the pig's intestines with this mixture.

Cook and finish off as described in the recipe for Nancy andouilles.

Nancy andouilles. ANDOUILLES DE NANCY – Soak 750 g. (1½ lb.) pork belly and 750 g. (1½ lb.) calf's mesentery in cold water. Wash them carefully and cook in salted water for 2 hours. Drain, rinse in cold water, dry on a cloth and cut into very small pieces.

Put into a bowl, season with salt, pepper and spices, moisten with 2 dl. (¼ pint, scant cup) white wine and add 100 g. (4 oz., 2 cups) chopped mushrooms lightly fried in butter with chopped onion, shallot and parsley. Chopped truffles can also be added.

Fill pig's intestines, thoroughly soaked and washed, with this mixture. Form the andouilles by twisting the intestine at intervals of 15 to 20 cm. (6 to 8 inches). Prick the andouilles with a big needle and plunge them into a pan of boiling water. Season with salt, and add sliced onions and carrots, 2 cloves garlic and a good bouquet garni (q.v.).

As soon as boiling is established, draw the pan to the side of the stove, cover, and simmer very gently for 2 hours.

Take the pan off the stove and leave the andouilles in the liquid in which they were cooked until almost quite cold.

Drain, put in a shallow baking pan, cover with a board, put a weight on top and leave in a cool place until quite cold.

To serve, slash the andouilles with a few very light incisions, grill and serve with mashed potatoes.

Fine pork andouillettes. ANDOUILLETES FINES DE PORC – Cook a calf's mesentery, cut into big square pieces, and half its weight of lean bacon, similarly cut, in 1 litre (1¾ pints, generous quart) meat stock, to which 1 onion studded with a clove and a good bouquet garni (q.v.) have been added. Season and bring to the boil. Cover with a lid and simmer very gently for about 2 hours.

English cuts of pork

American cuts of pork

Drain the meats and chop coarsely, put into a bowl, and add 100 g. (4 oz., 2 cups) chopped mushrooms, lightly fried with chopped onions, shallots and parsley, and bound with a few tablespoons concentrated stock.

Add 6 raw egg yolks and mix all the ingredients well. Stuff this mixture into pig's intestines which have been well soaked and washed, and tie the andouillettes into 10-cm. (4-in.) pieces. Cook and finish off as described in the preceding recipes.

Pig's blood. SANG DE PORC – This is almost solely used for making black puddings. It can also be used for clarifying jellies, and as an element of liaison for red wine sauces of the civet type.

Breast of pork. POITRINE DE PORC – This part of the animal is used fresh for making ragoûts. It can also be boned and grilled, after some of the fat has been removed.

In its salted or smoked state it provides bacon.

Carbonades of pork. CARBONADES DE PORC – The word carbonades, which in the past applied to all meat cooked on a grill ('sur des charbons ardents', i.e. on glowing coals) today only applies to thin slices of pork cut from the neck end, as well as lean parts of top of rump, which are grilled on hot coals.

The term carbonades also applies to thin slices of pork braised like Carbonades of beef à la flamande (see BEEF).

Grilled carbonades of pork, which are generally dipped in butter and breadcrumbs before cooking, and sautéed carbonades, can be served with all the garnishes recommended for veal or pork chops.

Chine of pork. ÉCHINE DE PORC – Cut taken from the back of the animal, which includes part of the backbone and surrounding flesh. In some regions of France it is also called échinée and épinée. The term is principally used to describe that part of the chine next to the neck.

All the methods of preparation given for loin and fillet of pork are suitable for chine. This cut is also used for making stews.

After cutting it into slices, it can be grilled or sautéed in the same way as pork chops. All methods of preparing chops can be applied to chine. Prepared in this way and grilled they are usually called carbonades.

PORK

French cuts of pork

Chine of pork can be half or fully salted and in this form used as an ingredient of potées and estouffades. This cut is not marketed in the U.S.A.

Pork chops à l'alsacienne. CÔTES DE PORC À L'ALSACIENNE – Season the chops and sauté them in butter or lard, or braise them. Arrange them in a turban on a dish. Fill the middle with sauerkraut (q.v.) piled up into a dome, and top with poached Strasbourg sausages. Garnish the dish with boiled potatoes. Pour over the chops some of the diluted pan juices, or, if the chops are braised, some of the strained braising liquor.

Pork chops à l'ardennaise. CÔTES DE PORC À L'ARDENNAISE – Sauté the chops in butter or lard. Arrange in a turban on a dish. Put in potatoes sautéed in butter and mixed with diced, fried bacon, and chopped onion lightly fried in butter.

Dilute the pan juices with white wine, add a few crushed juniper berries, moisten with Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE), strain, and pour over the chops.

Pork chops à la bayonnaise. CÔTES DE PORC À LA BAYONNAISE – Insert slivers of garlic into the meaty part of the chops. Season with salt, pepper, powdered thyme and bay leaf, sprinkle with oil and a dash of vinegar. Leave them to marinate in this seasoning for 1 hour. Sauté briskly in lard in an earthenware dish. When the chops are browned on both sides, surround with new potatoes tossed in lard, and sliced cèpes or mushrooms sautéed in oil. Finish cooking everything together in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Braised pork chops with various garnishes. CÔTES DE PORC BRAISÉES – Cut the chops a little on the thick side. Braise and garnish them in the same way as Veal chops (see VEAL).

Pork chops charcutière. CÔTES DE PORC CHARCUTIÈRE – This dish, which is found ready for use in pork butchers' shops, is prepared in restaurants as follows:

Flatten the chops slightly, season, coat with melted butter, dip in breadcrumbs and grill gently. Arrange in a crown, fill the middle of the dish with mashed potatoes and serve with Charcutière sauce (see SAUCE) to which shredded gherkins are added.

Pork chops charcutière are fried in lard and simmered in charcutière sauce to which some sliced gherkins have been added.

Fried pork chops with garnish. CÔTES DE PORC SAUTÉES GARNIES – Trim and lightly flatten 4 loin pork chops. Season with salt and pepper and cook in a sauté pan in which 1 tablespoon butter or lard has been heated.

Cook the chops on a lively heat. Brown well on both sides. When they are cooked, remove from the pan, surround with the garnish indicated in the recipe and pour the pan juices over, diluted as indicated in the recipe and strained through a fine sieve or strainer.

Pork chops à la gasconne. CÔTES DE PORC À LA GASCONNE – Marinate the pork chops as described in the recipe for Pork chops à la bayonnaise. Fry them quickly in butter or goose fat, to stiffen them.

Put 6 peeled and slightly blanched cloves of garlic for each chop into the pan. Cover and finish cooking on low heat. When the chops are nearly cooked, add 8 stoned and blanched olives per chop. Arrange the chops in a crown and put the garnish in the middle of the dish. Dilute the pan juices with  $\frac{1}{2}$  glass white wine, add a few tablespoons thickened veal stock, boil for a few moments, and pour over the chops. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Grilled pork chops. CÔTES DE PORC GRILLÉES – Season loin

Grilled pork chops garnished with apple rings chops with salt and pepper, brush them with melted butter, oil or lard and cook under a moderate grill.

Arrange on a dish and garnish with watercress.

Grilled pork chops are served plain, or with a garnish of vegetables, most often with mashed potatoes.

Pork chops à la milanaise. CÔTES DE PORC À LA MILANAISE – Beat loin pork chops flat, season with salt and pepper, coat with egg and breadcrumbs and proceed as described in the recipe for Veal chops à la milanaise (see VEAL).

Pork chops Pilleverjus. CÔTES DE PORC PILLEVERJUS – Flatten slightly and trim loin chops. Season them with salt and pepper.

Pork chops charcutière (Robert Carrier)

PORK

Fry in lard. When both sides are well browned, put into the pan (for 4 chops) 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) finely chopped onion, three-quarters cooked. Add a bouquet garni (q.v.), cover the pan and cook on low heat for 35 minutes.

Shred a young cabbage heart into a julienne (q.v.) and cook covered, in butter or lard, as slowly as possible. As soon as the cabbage is done, moisten it with cream and simmer for a few moments, stirring all the time.

Arrange the chops on a foundation of the cabbage julienne. Garnish with boiled potatoes.

Dilute the pan juices with 1 good tablespoon vinegar, add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) stock and pour over the chops.

Pork chops with Robert sauce. CÔTES DE PORC SAUCE ROBERT – Season and grill the chops. Serve with Robert sauce (see SAUCE) and mashed potatoes.

Or: Sauté the chops in butter or lard. When they are half-cooked, put into the sauté pan (for 4 chops) 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) finely chopped white onions.

Drain the chops and arrange them on a dish. Dilute the pan juices with 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) white wine. Boil down almost completely. Add 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) Demi-glace sauce (see SAUCE). Boil for 5 minutes. Remove from the heat, add a pinch of sugar and 1 good teaspoon mustard to the sauce, mix, and pour over the chops.

In a home kitchen, dilute the pan juices with white wine, add some meat stock, boil for a few minutes, bind with 1 tablespoon butter kneaded with flour, and add 1 or 2 tablespoons tomato purée.

Alternatively, proceed as follows:

Cook the chops and remove them from the pan. Into the same butter put 1 or 2 tablespoons flour, mix, and lightly cook. Moisten with white wine and stock, blend well, and cook for a few minutes.

Pork chops à la vosgienne. CÔTES DE PORC À LA VOSGIENNE – Sauté the chops in lard or butter. When half done add 1 tablespoon chopped onion lightly fried in butter (1 tablespoon per chop). Finish cooking together on gentle heat.

Arrange the chops in a crown. Fill the middle of the dish with stoned mirabelles (plums), cooked without sugar.

Dilute the pan juices with vinegar and white wine, add some concentrated veal stock and pour over the chops.

Pork crépinettes. CRÉPINETTES DE PORC – Crépinettes or small flat sausages are made of Fine pork forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS) mixed with chopped finest herbes and flavoured with brandy.

The forcemeat is divided into 90 or 100 g. ( $3\frac{1}{2}$  to 4-oz.) pieces, each of which is wrapped in a piece of pig's caul, previously soaked in cold water, and moulded into a rectangular shape.

The crépinettes are coated with butter and freshly sifted breadcrumbs, sprinkled with melted butter and grilled gently.

Grilled crépinettes are usually served with mashed potatoes but they can also be served with various vegetables dressed with butter.

Cinderella pork crépinettes. CRÉPINETTES DE PORC CENDRILLON – These crépinettes are made of fine truffled pork forcemeat. Put 1 good tablespoon salpicon (q.v.) of pig's feet, mixed with truffles and mushrooms cut into dice and bound with greatly concentrated veal stock, in the middle of each crépinette.

Cinderella crépinettes are grilled and served with Périgueux sauce (see SAUCE) and mashed potatoes.

Pork fat. LARD – The adipose tissue of the pig. In French, the term lard, which is sometimes used of fat of animals other than pig, usually means fresh raw pork fat. The French equivalent of the English term 'lard' is saindoux.

Fillet (U.S. Tenderloin) of pork. FILET DE PORC – The fillet (tenderloin) of pork is the part of the animal from the first ribs to the leg. It is the part which in the case of veal or mutton is called saddle.

The pig's back, or saddle, is generally cut in half, lengthways. The fillet of pork can be prepared in any way suitable for the loin. Escalopes and noisettes, as well as filets mignons, are cut from boned filets of pork, and prepared in any way suitable for chops. Roast or pot-roasted fillet of pork is often referred to in French as longe.

Pork fricadelles. FRICADELLES DE PORC – Prepare, using pork meat, in the same way as Fricadelles of beef (see BEEF).

Pork gelatine. COLLE DE COUENNES – Soak 3 kg. (6 $\frac{1}{2}$  lb.) fresh pork skins in cold water. Put them in a casserole, cover with water, bring to the boil and drain. Put under the cold tap, scrape and wash them; put them back in the casserole, cover with water. Boil, skim and simmer for 6 or 8 hours, skimming often.

Pass the contents of the pan through a strainer into a basin. Leave to cool. When it is cold and has set, remove all fat from the surface and rub the gelatine with a cloth dipped in boiling water, so as to remove every trace of fat.

Add this gelatine to the prepared stock (see JELLY).

Ham. JAMBON – See HAM.

Hand of pork. JAMBONNEAU – Cook in the same way as ham (see HAM, Salted and smoked ham) until the flesh comes away from the bones. Reshape it by wrapping tightly in a cloth, leave to cool in the liquid it was cooked in, grease slightly and roll in breadcrumbs.

Pork hash. HACHIS DE PORC – Prepare like Beef hash (see BEEF), using left-over pieces of pork.

Potted head (brawn or head cheese). HURE DE PORC – This is generally sold in pork butchers' shops ready for the table. It used to be made in the country.

Potted head (brawn or head cheese) à la pistache (old recipe). HURE À LA PISTACHE – Clean and scrape a pig's head, remove the tongue, brains and all the fat part of the throat and cut off the ears. Steep the head, ears and tongue and 2 calves' tongues in brine for 3 or 4 days. Drain. Wrap the head in a cloth and put into a braising pan, together with the ears, also wrapped, and cook gently in the usual manner (see CULINARY METHODS, Braising of meat) for 4 or 5 hours. Add the tongues 2 hours later. Take off the best piece of skin and spread it on a napkin. Cut the fleshy part of the head into long strips, rejecting all pieces tinged with blood.

Sprinkle this meat with four spices (q.v.) and chopped shallots. Lay out these strips, mixing the various meats as well as possible. Scatter a few pistachio nuts here and there. Fold the skin over these pieces, wrap tightly in a napkin, tying it securely with string. Put back to cook. Bring the braising liquid to the boil, then simmer. One hour later, drain, remove string, and put the contents of the napkin into a brawn mould, with a weight on top. Press down well, leave until quite cold.

Potted head (brawn or head cheese) with truffles. HURE DE on either side small Paris potted heads, whole and cut (Charcuterie Chêdeville.

Phot. Larousse)

PORC AUX TRUFFES – As above, adding raw truffles cut into strips.

Leg of pork (ham). JAMBON – French and imported hams are listed under the entry entitled HAM. Leg of pork can be eaten fresh, salted or smoked.

Braised fresh leg of pork. JAMBON DE PORC FRAIS BRAISÉ – This joint is cooked as described under CULINARY METHODS, Pot-roasting, allowing 20 to 25 minutes cooking time per 500 g. (per pound) plus 20 minutes.

Fresh braised leg of pork can be accompanied by any of the garnishes recommended for braised meat. The braising liquor is boiled down, and the surplus fat removed. Strain and pour over the leg.

A few hours before putting fresh leg of pork to braise, season it with salt flavour flavoured with powdered thyme and bay leaf.

Roast leg of pork. JAMBON DE PORC FRAIS RÔTI – Trim the leg of pork, removing the bone up to the knuckle, and skin it. A few hours before roasting the leg cover it with salt. Wipe and roast in the oven, or on a spit (see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking times for roasts). Serve the leg with the pan juices diluted with white wine or Madeira. Any of the garnishes recommended for roast meat can be used.

Stuffed pig's leg or Zampino (Italian cookery). JAMBE DE PORC FARCIE, ZAMPINO – Soak the leg in cold water for 3 hours and scrape the skin thoroughly. Prick in a few places with a trussing needle. Wrap in a fine cloth and tie at both ends and in the middle. Put it into a braising pan and cover with cold water. Bring to the boil, then simmer for 3 hours.

The zampino is served hot, with potato or lentil purée. It can also be served cold, cut in slices like sausage.

Pig's liver. FOIE DE PORC – All recipes for calf's liver are suitable for pig's liver, though it is mainly used as an ingredient in stuffings. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.)

Pig's liver with mustard. FOIE DE PORC À LA MOUTARDE – Lard a pig's liver and daub it generously with mustard. Sprinkle with parsley and chopped garlic and bake in a covered casserole with butter. Three-quarters of an hour in a gentle oven should be enough.

Remove the liver and place on a warm serving plate. Slice it. Dilute the juices in the casserole with 1 tablespoon mustard and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) vinegar. Pour this concentrated sauce over the sliced liver.

Serve Potato galettes (see GALETTE) as an accompaniment.

(Recipe of Madame Simone Nouyrigat, of the Pierre Traiteur restaurant.)

Loin of pork. CARRÉ DE PORC – This cut can be roasted or pot-roasted. It is usually accompanied by its own juices, suitably diluted, and most often with a garnish of potatoes, especially mashed potatoes, or a purée of dried vegetables, or fresh braised vegetables (celery, chicory, endive, lettuce, etc.).

It is advisable before roasting or pot-roasting a loin of pork, as well as all other pork joints cooked in the same way, to season it several hours before cooking with salt mixed with powdered thyme and bay leaf. Seasoned thus in advance, the flavour of fresh pork is rendered more delicious.

Loin of pork à l'alsacienne. CARRÉ DE PORC À L'ALSACIENNE – Season the loin of pork in advance and cook in the oven until three-quarters done.

Roast leg of pork

Zampino (stuffed pig's leg) (Larousse)

Finish cooking with sauerkraut (q.v.) prepared separately in the usual manner and with a garnish of lean smoked bacon, Strasbourg sausages.

Drain the loin. Arrange on a large oval-shaped dish. Garnish at the two ends with sauerkraut, surround with sausages and bacon cut in rectangles, and serve with boiled potatoes.

Loin of pork à l'alsacienne can also be made by roasting or pot-roasting the loin and serving it surrounded with sauerkraut. Pour over the pan juices left over from roasting.

Loin of pork à la bonne femme. CARRÉ DE PORC À LA BONNE FEMME – Season the loin of pork in advance and put it into an earthenware dish in which several tablespoons of butter or lard have been heated.

Roast the loin in the oven until half done, browning well. Put into the roasting pan, for a loin weighing about 1 kg. (2½ lb.), 500 g. (18 oz., 3 cups) potatoes cut to look like large olives or into quarters, and 24 small onions, fried in butter or lard. Season the garnish, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and finish cooking together in the oven, basting frequently. Take out of the oven, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve in the same dish in which it was cooked.

Loin of pork à la boulangère. CARRÉ DE PORC À LA BOULANGÈRE – Trim the loin of pork and proceed as described in the recipe for Shoulder of lamb à la boulangère (see LAMB).

Loin of pork with green cabbage, or with Brussels sprouts. CARRÉ DE PORC AUX CHOUX VERTS, AUX CHOUX DE BRUXELLES – Roast or pot-roast the loin. Arrange it on a serving dish. Surround with a garnish of Braised green cabbage (see CABBAGE), or Brussels sprouts boiled in water, drained, and tossed in the fat in which the loin was cooked. Pour over the pan juices left from roasting the loin.

Loin of pork with red cabbage. CARRÉ DE PORC AUX CHOUX ROUGES – Roast or pot-roast the loin of pork as described above. Arrange it on a serving dish. Surround with red cabbage braised separately.

Loin of pork à la chipolata. CARRÉ DE PORC À LA CHIPOLATA – Season the loin of pork in advance and pot-roast it. Arrange it on a serving dish. Surround with chipolaya garnish, composed of braised chestnuts, small glazed onions, chipolata sausages and glazed carrots. Pour over the pan juices left from cooking the loin.

Cold loin of pork. CARRÉ DE PORC FROID – This is generally served with a green salad, potato salad, or red cabbage salad, accompanied by Mayonnaise sauce (see SAUCE) and pickled gherkins.

Loin of pork à la limousine. CARRÉ DE PORC À LA LIMOUSINE – Roast or pot-roast the loin. Garnish with Red cabbage à la limousine, braised with mashed chestnuts (see CABBAGE).

Pour over the pan juices left from roasting the loin.

Roast loin of pork. CARRÉ DE PORC RÔTI – Trim and season the loin in advance. Roast it in the oven, or on a spit (see CULINARY METHODS, Average cooking time for roasts).

Arrange on a serving dish. Garnish with watercress. Serve with the pan juices, suitably diluted.

It is customary in certain parts of France to serve roast loin of pork with unsweetened apple purée.

Roast loin of pork à la languedocienne. CARRÉ DE PORC RÔTI À LA LANGUEDOCIENNE – Twelve hours before roasting the loin, insert into it some pieces of garlic cut into little strips. Season it with salt and spices and sprinkle with oil. Leave to marinate in this seasoning. Roast in the oven or on a spit. Serve with its own juices.

Roast loin of pork à la provençale. CARRÉ DE PORC À LA PROVENÇALE – Twelve hours before roasting the loin insert into it some sage leaves. Season with salt and powdered thyme and bay leaf. Cover with crushed cloves of garlic and pour over a few tablespoons olive oil.

Roast loin of pork

Roast the loin in the oven, putting the garlic cloves into the roasting pan. Arrange on a serving dish and pour over the pan juices.

Roast loin of pork with various sauces and garnishes. CARRÉ DE PORC RÔTI – Roast the loin in the oven. Arrange on a serving dish. Surround with the garnish indicated (or dish up the garnish separately in a timbale) and serve with the sauce recommended.

All the garnishes which are suitable for meat courses (lamb, beef, mutton, veal) can be served with loin of pork (see GARNISHES). It can also be served with various sauces, such as Charcutière, Mustard, Piquante, Robert, Tomato, etc. (see SAUCE).

Roast loin of pork à la soissonnaise. CARRÉ DE PORC RÔTI À LA SOISSONNAISE – Trim the loin of pork, season, and roast it in an earthenware dish, cooking it until it is three-quarters done. Add some kidney beans, cooked separately (see BEANS, Fresh red beans).

Finish cooking in the oven, basting frequently. Serve in the same dish.

Loin of pork with sauerkraut – See Loin of pork à l'alsacienne.

Pork offal or variety meats. ABATS DE PORC – The major parts of pork offal are used as ingredients for various

Roast loin of pork garnished with orange products known in U.S.A. as variety meats or cold cuts and in England as preparations or pork butchery: brawn (U.S. head cheese), sausages, etc.

The feet (trotters), brains, liver, kidneys and the head – especially the ears – can be prepared as independent dishes by following the instructions given in the recipes for veal and mutton offal or variety meats. All recipes for preparing pig's ears and trotters will be found under OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS.

Pork pie

Hot pork pie. PÂTÉ CHAUD DE PORC À L'ANGLAISE – Line the sides and bottom of a pie dish with thin slices of raw ham. Put into this dish, in alternate layers, 500 g. (18 oz.) slices of fresh pork, seasoned with salt, pepper and powdered thyme and bay leaf, and sprinkled with dried duxelles (q.v.) mixture; also chopped parsley and sage, 500 g. (18 oz., 3 cups) raw potatoes cut in thin slices and 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion.

Moisten with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) water, cover with a lid of Lining paste or Puff pastry (see DOUGH), as described in the recipe for Beefsteak pie (see BEEF). Brush the top with beaten egg, crimp up the edges and bake in a moderate oven for about 2 hours.

Piglet. PORCELET – Name applied to a young pig up to the age of two months. In culinary parlance it is called sucking or suckling pig.

Suckling pig, whether stuffed or not, is usually roasted on a spit. It is best to roast it in such a way as to make the skin golden and crisp. Cooking time for a medium-sized suckling pig varies between  $1\frac{1}{2}$  and 2 hours. If the animal is stuffed, the cooking time should be increased by 15 minutes for each 500 g. (1 lb.) of stuffing.

Suckling pig can also be braised, or boiled – as is done in Russia – in which case it can be served either hot or cold, in aspic.

Black pudding (U.S. blood pudding). BOUDIN – Large sausage made of pig's blood and suet enclosed in an intestine.

According to some historians, black pudding, as we know it today, is one of the few Assyrian dishes which have come down to us still greatly resembling those made by the pork butchers of Tyre, who, it is said, excelled in this type of preparation.

The preparation of black puddings has greatly improved in the course of the centuries and those made today are superior to those of our grandparents' time.

Black pudding is the traditional French dish served at supper after Christmas midnight mass. Large quantities of both black and white puddings are eaten at this meal. The Christmas dinner generally includes many other traditional dishes, such as truffled turkey, goose stuffed with chestnuts, and foie gras with truffles, served in a terrine, in jelly or in a pie crust.

Achille Ozanne, cook and poet, wrote of black puddings:

*'Préparez des oignons, hachés menus, menus,
Qu'avec autant de lard sur un feu doux l'on passe,
Les tournant tant, qu'ils soient d'un blond devenu,
Et que leur doux arôme envahisse l'espace . . .

Est d'avance fermé, et dès qu'ils sont remplis,

Egouttez-les après vingt minutes d'attente.'*

'Chop the onions, finely, finely,
Toss them in an equal amount of fat on a low fire,
Stirring them, until they are a beautiful golden colour,
And their fragrance pervades all round . . .
Blend them with blood then season well with Salt, pepper, nutmeg and the spices;
A glass of brandy and then you stuff the mixture
Into the pig's intestine, one end of which Has previously been sealed. As soon as this is filled,
Tie up the other end and into simmering water
Plunge the black pudding! Once this is done,
You give them twenty minutes, and drain.'

Black puddings can be made using blood of animals other than pig, but any addition to pig's blood, or even its complete substitution by the blood of ox, calf or sheep, produces black puddings of mediocre quality.

Black puddings can be made from the blood of various fowls, rabbits, and wild animals such as deer, wild boar, etc., but these puddings can only be made if the blood of these animals can be obtained, and they must therefore be blooded, as is done with the domestic pig.

In France the name boudin also applies to various preparations made from poultry and game, which are really no more than quenelles.

A great variety of black and white puddings are made in France. Each region has its special boudin. Among the best known are the black and white puddings of Nancy, Metz, Strasbourg, Lyons, Dijon, Rouen, Pau, Albi, Toulouse, Auvergne, Limousin, Roussillon, Berry, Brittany, Flanders and, last but not least, those made in Paris.

Black pudding and white pudding (U.S. blood sausage and white sausage). BOUDIN DE PORC – These pork sausages are generally found in the shops ready for use. They can be grilled or cooked in the oven, as well as fried in butter or lard.

The black pudding is made of pig's blood and fat.

The white pudding is a sausage made of white pork meat and fat.

Black puddings (U.S. blood sausage). BOUDINS NOIRS DE PORC – Into a large bowl put 1 kg. (2½ lb.) fresh hog's fat cut in large dice and half-melted, 400 g. (14 oz., 3½ cups) chopped onion, fried lightly in lard without allowing it to colour, 6 teaspoons salt, a good pinch of freshly ground pepper and a good pinch of spices. Add 8 dl. (scant 1½ pints, scant 2 pints) pig's blood and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  pint, scant cup) fresh cream.

Mix all these ingredients. Fill pig's intestines with the mixture, without stuffing them too much, as the mixture swells during cooking. Tie the black puddings into the desired lengths, or leave whole, as the case may be.

Lay them out on a wicker tray and plunge this tray into a big pan of boiling water. Draw the pan to the side of the burner and poach the black puddings at a temperature of 95°C. (203°F.) for about 20 minutes. As they rise to the surface, prick them with a pin to let our air, otherwise, when heated, the casings may burst.

Drain the puddings. Leave them to get cold on the wicker tray, covered with a cloth to prevent their drying up too much.

Make a few shallow incisions on both sides and grill very gently on moderate heat. Serve with mashed potatoes.

Black puddings (U.S. blood sausage) à l'anglaise. BOUDINS NOIRS À L'ANGLAISE – Prepare as ordinary black puddings, adding to the mixture 500 g. (18 oz.) rice well cooked in stock, or an equal quantity of pearl barley, also cooked in stock. Season with plenty of spices.

Grill like ordinary black puddings.

Black puddings (U.S. blood sausage) à la flamande. BOUDINS À LA FLAMANDE – Use mixture similar to that for ordinary black puddings, adding to it 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) brown sugar, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cup) currants and the same amount of sultanas, washed, allowed to swell in warm water, and drained well.

These black puddings are grilled in the usual way and served with sweetened apple purée.

Black puddings (U.S. blood sausages) with apples, called à la normande. BOUDINS NOIRS AUX POMMES, DITS À LA NORMANDE – Cut the black puddings into uniform little chunks and sauté in butter in a frying pan. When they are lightly browned, add peeled, sliced cooking apples, cooked in butter, allowing 500 g. (18 oz.) apples per 1 kg. (2½ lb.) black puddings.

Sauté the apples and the black puddings for a few moments. Serve in a deep dish.

White puddings (U.S. sausage). BOUDINS BLANCS DE PORC – Chop finely together 500 g. (18 oz.) lean pork and 800 g. (1½ lb.) fresh pork fat.

Pound this mixture in a mortar, adding to it 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, and an equal quantity of raw fat goose liver.

Rub this mixture through a sieve, put into a bowl and stir with a wooden spoon. Add, one by one, 4 whole eggs, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) chopped onion fried lightly in butter without allowing it to colour, and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{3}$  pint, scant cup) fresh cream. Season with 5 teaspoons salt, a good pinch of white pepper and a pinch of spices. Mix well.

Fill pigs' intestines (casings) with this mixture and poach as described in the recipe for black puddings.

Grilled white puddings (sausage). BOUDINS BLANCS GRILLÉS – When the white puddings are quite cold, prick them (do not make incisions with a knife) on both sides, wrap each in a piece of buttered greaseproof paper and cook gently under a grill. Serve with mashed potatoes.

Bacon rinds and pork skin. COUENNE DE PORC – Bacon rinds and pork skin are used in a great number of culinary preparations, mainly as an element of garnish for braised meats and, along with calves' feet, as the gelatinous element in preparing jellies.

Pork skin, boiled in well-spiced stock, can also be prepared as ballottines or roulades, which are served cold.

Salt pork. PETIT SALÉ DE PORC – This term covers various joints of pork pickled in brine. Forequarter flank, cutlets, ears, knuckles, pig's snout, etc., can be treated in this way.

Wash the pork in plenty of water, then put into brine and leave from 3 to 6 days, depending on the season. These cuts are boiled in water and served hot, with potato salad.

The term petit salé applies to salt chine of pork, which is boiled and served with various vegetables, most frequently with boiled or braised cabbage or mashed potatoes.

This cut is also used as an ingredient for potée.

Boiled salt pork à l'anglaise. PORC SALÉ BOUILLI À L'ANGLAISE – Boil a piece of salt pork (shoulder or breast) in water with the usual vegetables and 6 parsnips. Arrange on a dish and surround with the vegetable garnish. Serve with pease pudding, which is prepared in the following manner:

Blend together in a bowl 500 g. (18 oz., 2 cups) rather thick purée of split peas, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter, 3 whole eggs, salt, pepper and grated nutmeg.

Put this purée into a buttered pudding basin and cook in the oven in a bain-marie.

The mixture can be put in a scalded, buttered and floured cloth, tied and cooked with the pork.

Purée of yellow split peas can be served with boiled salt pork à l'anglaise instead of pease pudding.

Pork sausages. SAUCISSES DE PORC – Pork sausages, whether they be long or flat, are made of sausage meat, which can include various ingredients.

Sausages which are not made of pork, as well as sausages of foreign origin (Cambridge sausages, Frankfurt sausages, etc.) are dealt with under SAUSAGE.

Sausage meat. Chop separately equal quantities of lean pork, having removed all sinews, and fresh pork fat. Pound this forcemeat in a mortar to varying degrees of fineness, depending on the type of sausage for which they are intended. Season with Spiced salt (see SALT), allowing about 4 to 5 teaspoons salt per kg. (2 teaspoons per lb.).

Or: Use half fat, half lean pork, remove all sinews, and chop finely. Season with salt as above.

Or: Chop lean beef and neck end of pork in equal proportions.

Making sausages. When the forcemeat is ready, stuff pigs' intestines with it, using a special utensil. To facilitate this operation, incorporate a little cold water or 2 whole eggs per kg. (1 whole egg per lb.) of meat in the forcemeat while mixing it.

Truffled sausage meat. Prepare as above, adding 150 g. (5 oz.,  $\frac{2}{3}$  cups) fresh truffles, cut in small dice, to the forcemeat.

Truffled sausages are mostly made of forcemeat to which truffle parings have been added.

Sausages with red or green cabbage. SAUCISSES AUX CHOUX ROUGES, CHOUX VERTS – Grill the sausages, or poach them in white wine. Arrange them on a bed of braised green cabbage, or red cabbage prepared as described in the recipe for Red cabbage à la flamande (see CABBAGE).

If the sausages are poached, add the liquor in which they are cooked to the cabbage braising liquid.

Sausages à la catalane. SAUCISSES À LA CATALANE – Fry in lard 1 kg. (2½ lb.) of big sausage twisted into a coil. When it is well browned, remove from the pan.

Put 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) flour into the same fat and colour lightly. Moisten with white wine and meat stock, add 1 tablespoon tomato purée, and mix well. Cook for 10 minutes and strain.

Put the sausage back into the pan. Add 2 to 4 blanched cloves of garlic and a bouquet garni (q.v.), to which a small piece of bitter orange rind has been added. Pour the sauce over the sausage. Cover and simmer gently for 30 minutes.

The sauce can be thickened with white breadcrumbs instead of flour.

Chipolata sausages. SAUCISSES CHIPOLATAS – Sausages made in very small-sized casings. These are divided into pieces from 4 to 5 cm. (1½ to 2 inches) long.

They are used as a garnish for various dishes and can be grilled, fried in butter or poached in white wine.

Country sausages 1. SAUCISSES DE CAMPAGNE – Stuff pigs' intestines with a forcemeat composed of 2 parts lean beef and 1 part lean fresh bacon, seasoned with 6 teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon pepper,  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon pounded pimento, a pinch of saltpetre and 1 clove of garlic, per kg. (2½ lb.) forcemeat. Make the sausages from 10 to 12 cm. (4 to 5 inches) long.

When they are ready, dry them on the top part of the oven. Poach in boiling water or stock from 10 to 12 minutes.

This type of sausage is used mainly as an element of garnish for potées.

Country sausages II. SAUCISSES DE CAMPAGNE – Use forcemeat composed of 2 parts lean pork and 1 part firm bacon fat, seasoned as above, flavoured with savory, coriander, marjoram, thyme and bay leaf, and moistened with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) red wine per kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.).

Stuff small ox intestines with this forcemeat. Join the sausages two by two and dry on the top part of the oven.

These sausages are poached in water or cooked in potées.

Pig's liver sausage. SAUCISSES DE FOIE DE PORC – Use forcemeat composed of 3 parts pork (fat and lean) and 1 part pig's liver, previously parboiled and seasoned with Spiced salt (see SALT), allowing from 4 teaspoons per kg. (2 teaspoons per lb.), and mixed with 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) pig's blood. Stuff in beef intestine casings.

Divide into lengths of 10 to 12 cm. (4 to 5 inches). Poach in water like black puddings.

Pig's liver sausage is also grilled like black pudding.

Shoulder of pork. ÉPAULE DE PORC – Fresh shoulder of pork is used in the same way as chine. Bone and roll the shoulder, then roast, pot-roast or braise it. Serve with all the garnishes suitable for Loin of pork. The shoulder can also be cut into pieces and made into stews. Salted shoulder of pork is used as an ingredient for potées.

Boned, salted and smoked shoulder of pork is prepared like leg.

Cold pork slices. ÉMINCÉS DE PORC – Use left-over pork cut into thin slices, as described in the recipe for Sliced beef (see BEEF).

This dish is usually served with Charcutière or Robert sauce (see SAUCE) and accompanied by mashed potatoes or a purée of any other starchy vegetable.

Pork stew. RAGOÛT DE PORC – Pork is seldom cooked as a stew. The cuts most suitable for this method of preparation are the shoulder, chine and breast. Care should be taken to remove all surplus fat.

Suckling pig, suckling pig. PORCELET – See Piglet.

Stuffed suckling pig à l'occitane. PORCELET ÉTOFFÉ À L'OCCITANE – Clean out the suckling pig through a short incision on the belly. Bone it, leaving only the leg bones. Season inside with salt and spices, sprinkle with brandy, and leave to marinate for a few hours.

Stuff it with the following mixture:

Cut the pig's liver and an equal quantity of calf's liver into small slices. Season and brown briskly in sizzling butter, to stiffen them. Drain, and put in a dish.

In the same butter, quickly brown the heart and the kidneys of the suckling pig, cut into small slices, and 150 g. (5 oz.) lambs' sweetbreads, soaked, parboiled, rinsed in cold water and sliced.

Drain all these ingredients and put together with the liver.

Add 3 tablespoons (scant  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter to the same pan and lightly fry 200 g. (7 oz., scant 2 cups) finely chopped onion without allowing it to colour. When the onion is well softened, add 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped shallots and 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) dried duxelles (q.v.). Fry for a few moments, and add a pinch of pounded garlic. Moisten with dry white wine, boil down, and add 4 dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$  pint, scant 2 cups) rich veal broth.

Bring to the boil, add 150 g. (5 oz.) fresh bacon rinds, cooked and cut in small pieces, and stoned and blanched green olives. Cook for a few minutes. Put the above ingredients into this sauce. Heat, without allowing the sauce to boil, stir, and leave this ragoût to cool.

Mix it with sausage meat, bind with eggs, season well, add chopped parsley and a dash of brandy and blend.

Stuff the suckling pig the day before it is to be cooked and leave in a marinade of oil, brandy, sliced carrots and onions, parsley, thyme, bay leaf, crushed cloves of garlic and spices.

Truss and skewer the suckling pig and sew up the opening. Put it into a long braising pan on a foundation of bacon rinds, and the carrots and onions used for the marinade. Add fresh sliced carrots and onions. Sprinkle with lard, cover, and cook gently on the top of the stove until the vegetables begin to brown.

Moisten with 3 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  cups) dry white wine. Boil down this liquid. Add a few tablespoons thickened brown veal stock and a good bouquet garni (q.v.). Cook in the oven. When done, the skin of the suckling pig should be golden and crisp.

Drain the piglet, untruss, and put on a serving dish. Garnish all round with small pork crepinettes (see above) aux fines herbes and small black puddings fried in butter. Add the onions and carrots from the braising pan. Pour over the strained braising liquor. Serve with a purée made of mashed celeriac and potatoes in equal proportions.

Instead of braising the piglet with slices of onions and carrots, it can be garnished with medium-sized whole onions and carrots cut down to a uniform size, disposing them around the dish along with black pudding and crépinettes.

The stuffing should be of an adequate consistency (which is achieved by binding it with egg) to ensure that when the suckling pig is cut, it does not spill out but remains intact, together with the cut slice.

PORKER. GORET – Name given to a piglet which, having reached the age of six months, is no longer a suckling pig.

PORPOISE. MARSOUIN – The smallest of the puffing cetaceans, valuable mainly for the oil extracted from it. The porpoise is edible, though oily. In former times it was sold in Paris during Lent. It is prepared in various ways and eaten in Scotland, Iceland and Newfoundland.

Porridge (Claire)

PORRIDGE (English cookery). BOUILLIE D'AVOINE – A popular food, made of specially treated oatmeal and water. Porridge is greatly appreciated in Scotland, Ireland and throughout England. Here is the recipe:

Boil 1 litre ( $1\frac{3}{4}$  pints, generous quart) water with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt. As soon as boiling is established, pour 300 g. (11 oz., scant 2 cups) oatmeal into it in a steady rain. Stir all the time, until the porridge acquires the desired consistency.

Leave to simmer for 20 minutes, stirring from time to time. Serve with cold milk or cream. Each person at table is left to season porridge to his or her taste.

Porridge or hasty-pudding. BOUILLIE – Bring salt water to the boil in a pan. Pour in maize flour (corn meal, or a mixture of maize and wheaten flour) to obtain a fairly thick mixture. Cook on moderate heat, stirring frequently with a wooden spoon, until the mixture is very thick. Add a few tablespoons pork fat. Mix well.

While it is still hot, pour this porridge on to a coarse linen cloth and spread it out in a layer about 2½ cm. (1 inch) thick. Leave to cool. When it is quite cold, cut it into squares or rectangles, and proceed as indicated in the selected recipe.

Arrowroot porridge. BOUILLIE À L'ARROWROOT – See ARROWROOT.

Buckwheat porridge. BOUILLIE DE SARRASIN – See KASHA.

Maize porridge or las pous (Périgord cookery). BOUILLIE DE MAÏS DITE LAS POUS – This bouillie or porridge, which in Périgord is also called rimotes, is somewhat similar to the gaudes of Franche-Comté and also to polenta, as it is made in Italy, Corsica and Provence.

The bouillie is eaten instead of bread with certain dishes, such as salt pork with cabbage and jugged hare, and is also served as a soup. It is prepared like polenta (q.v.).

It can also be eaten as a sweet course. For this, when the maize is cooked, pour it into a baking pan or some other shallow receptacle, spread it in an even layer, and allow to cool. Cut into uniform pieces, dip in flour and fry in lard or butter. Arrange on a dish and sprinkle with sugar.

Béarn millas. MILLAS DU BÉARN – The porridge, which in this region is also called paste, pastel, gaudines and yerbilhou, is prepared in the same way as broye (q.v.).

Périgord millas or las pous. MILLAS PÉRIGOURDIN, LAS POUS – Proceed in the usual way with a mixture of equal quantities of maize (corn meal) and wheaten flour.

If the porridge is too thick it can be made lighter with a little hot milk. It can be made more delicate by the addition of a little fresh butter just before the porridge is ready.

Dr. Bircher-Benner's muesli. BOUILLIE CRUE DU DOCTEUR BIRCHER-BENNER – This is not strictly speaking a porridge, because it is not boiled, but its consistency is so mushy that it has the appearance of porridge.

Attaching great importance to the nutritive value of raw food, Dr. Bircher-Benner prescribed this mixture as a breakfast and supper dish. At lunch time he allowed various cooked foods and even meat, in addition to raw vegetables and fruit served as an hors-d'œuvre.

The muesli is prepared overnight. Soak 2 or 3 tablespoons rolled oats in cold water for 12 hours. On the following morning, drain and mix with condensed milk, raw grated unpeeled apples, or with any other fruit in season, sometimes with grated carrots. Add honey and lemon juice.

PORRINGER. ÉCUELLE – Bowl made of wood, earthenware or metal to hold an individual portion of food. In the Middle Ages it was usual for two people to share a porringer, hence the French expression: 'Manger à la même écuelle' (which means, roughly, to live in one another's pocket).

PORT. PORTO – A great wine, of international renown, grown in the valley of Douro in Portugal, east of the town of Oporto. This wine matures splendidly and reaches its plenitude when it is between 25 and 30 years old. The types of port wines usually consumed are the result of blendings of several different vintage years. However, connoisseurs naturally prefer 'vintage' port with a millésime, that is a single specified vintage year. Port is drunk as an apéritif in France, but the English custom of drinking it after the meal is often adopted where old vintage port is concerned. Port has its part to play in the composition of various dishes, such as eel matelote (See MATELOTE, Matelote à la canotière), calves' sweetbreads (see OFFAL), zabaglione and, of course, cocktails (port flip, etc.).

PORTER – English beer, very strong and dark, almost black.

PORT-SALUT – See CHEESE.

PORTUGAISE – Tomato fondue made with butter or oil and flavoured with onion, garlic and parsley. (See FONDUE, Tomato fondue).

PORTUGUESE OYSTER. GRYPHÉE – Type of mollusc (see OYSTERS).

POSSET – Hot drink made of milk and white wine or beer.

POT-AU-FEU – An essentially French method of cooking a broth which provides at one time soup, meat and vegetables (see SOUPS AND BROTHS).

POTASH. POTASSE – Oxide of potassium. Alkaline substance which plays an important rôle in nutrition.

POTASSIUM NITRATE – See SALTPETRE.

POTATOES. POMMES DE TERRE – Tuber-bearing plants, native of South America, introduced into France, as an ornamental plant, towards 1540.

The potato was brought from Quito in South America, first into Spain, where it was cultivated in Galicia, and later from North America into England.

In 1563 Sir John Hawkins is said to have introduced the potato into England, but its cultivation was neglected there and it was reintroduced in 1586 by Sir Francis Drake. Sir Walter Raleigh grew potatoes in Ireland.

In 1593, Gaspard Bauhon praised it and engaged several farmers around Lyons and the Vosges region to grow it, but in 1630 the Parliament of Besançon, from fear of leprosy, forbade the cultivation of potato.

The potato must have been introduced into Lorraine in 1665, for on the 28th June, 1715, the Court of Nancy issued a decree exacting a tithe, which was only payable after 50 years of cultivation.

In 1597, the botanist Gérard, who received some potatoes direct from Virginia, gave the following description of this crop: 'These tubers are a nourishing as well as a pleasant dish, equal in wholesomeness and salubrity to the batata (sweet potato), whether they be baked in hot ashes, or boiled and eaten with oil, vinegar or pepper, or prepared in any other way by the hands of an able cook.'

In 1619 potato figures among the foods to be served at the Royal table in England. It did not, however, become an article of import until 1662.

In Scotland it has been cultivated since 1683 – and in open fields, for the first time, by Thomas Prentice in 1728.

It was introduced into the Low Countries in 1588 by Clusius, who got it from Gérard.

The English introduced it into Flanders during the wars against Louis XIV.

In France the potato was still considered suspect in 1771; it was said to be unfit for human consumption and dangerous, because of its weakening properties. It was Parmentier who rehabilitated it. In 1771, in a thesis, he listed it among the vegetables which could be used in times of food shortage along with horse chestnuts, acorns, and the roots of bryony, iris, gladioli and couch grass. In 1773 he published his work entitled Chemical examination of potato, wheat and rice and began his research into the panification of potato flour.

In 1787, during a period of scarcity, he obtained the concession of 50 arpents (old French measure roughly equivalent to an acre) of poor land in the Sablon plain. The cultivation proved successful, contrary to all expectations, and a short while later Parmentier was able to offer King Louis XVI a bouquet of potato flowers, which set a fashion for this plant.

We know the way in which he aroused the cupidity of the Parisians: the field was closely guarded during the day by soldiers of the Garde Française, but was left unsupervised during the night.

Parmentier had his precursors – and he never denied this: Turgot acclimatised potatoes in the Limousin; Lavoisier, on the advice of Parmentier, cultivated them in his lands in Fréchines, in Vendôme; La Rochefoucauld-Liancourt in Beauvais, Chalaire in the Boulogne region in 1763; Dottu, the great agriculturist of Villers-Bretonneux, in Picardy from 1766.

Denigration gave place to a period of enthusiasm and a craze for the potato flower, which was used as a decorative design for plates. After its popularisation, thanks to Parmentier, the potato became one of the staple foods at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

The potato is an energy food, 100 calories per 100 g. (4 oz.), rich in carbohydrates (20 to 25 per cent), lacking in albuminoids. It contains a few mineral salts (potassium mostly) Vitamins B and C, and a very small amount of iodine. Its starch is one of the most assimilable of all and for this reason it can be included in the diet of diabetics. There are only traces of fats and calcium.

Some label the potato solanaceous, in other words of the same family as tobacco, henbane and belladonna. In fact the infinitesimal amount of solanum detectable in potatoes is found just under the skin and is therefore discarded with it. Yellowy-fleshed potatoes are considered the best, since white-fleshed potatoes are usually demineralized. Some people find potatoes hard to digest, especially mashed potatoes, often due to insufficient mastication and salivary impregnation. Potatoes ought to be thoroughly masticated.

Weight for weight, the potato contains two and a half times less carbohydrates than bread, which makes it a highly desirable food in diets for diabetics, as 40 g. (1½ oz.) bread can be replaced by 100 g. (4 oz.) potato. It is rich in potassium and constitutes a highly alkaline food.

To avoid the loss of mineral salts, and in particular of potassium salts, it should not be boiled in too much water (or at least the water in which it is boiled should be kept for soup). This loss is decreased by cooking in fat, such as butter, lard or oil. The best method of cooking potato to preserve the maximum of its mineral elements and taste is to bake it in the ashes or in the oven. The taste is incomparably better and makes it possible to eat potatoes without salt, should this be necessary.

The potato plays a very important part throughout Europe as an article of food.

In certain Central European countries the potato plays a greater part than in Western Europe, often taking the place of bread.

Among the numerous French-cultivated varieties of potatoes are: Bintje, B.F.15, Belle de Fontenay, Eerstelingen or Sterling, Royal Kidney, Viola, Ratte or Quenelle de Lyon (the best variety of all, perhaps, from a culinary point of view), Roseval, Saucisse, Rosa, etc.

Black potato, or rather purple potato, called Négresse in French, is a gastronomical curiosity.

Potatoes à l'anglaise. POMMES DE TERRE À L'ANGLAISE – Peel the potatoes down to as uniform a size as possible and either boil them in salted water or steam them. Potatoes à l'anglaise are used as a garnish for boiled fish and some meat dishes.

Anna potatoes, also called potato cake with butter. POMMES

DE TERRE ANNA, GALETTE DE POMMES DE TERRE AU BEURRE – Peel long yellow potatoes, trim them to shape into big uniform-sized cylinders. Slice them thinly, wash and dry. Put them into a straight-sided dish with a lid, with plenty of clarified butter. Arrange the potato slices in uniform overlapping layers. Fill the dish with rows of potato slices, season each layer and sprinkle with clarified butter. Cover the dish, start cooking on the stove, then put into a very hot oven and cook from 30 to 35 minutes.

When three-quarters cooked, turn the potato cake upside down to colour the other side. Drain off the butter and arrange on a dish.

Anna potatoes for garnish. POMMES DE TERRE ANNA – Proceed as described in the previous recipe, piling the potatoes into well-buttered, tinned-copper dariole moulds and using slices of potato of the same diameter as the mould used.

Cook in the oven. Turn out and use as indicated in the recipe.

Anna potatoes (home method). POMMES DE TERRE ANNA – Peel the potatoes as uniformly as possible, slice them thinly, wash, dry and season.

Sauté them in the butter until they are completely impregnated. Shape into a big cake, pressing them with the back of a fork. Brown on one side on moderate heat, and turn it and brown the other side.

Annette potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE ANNETTE – Cut the potatoes into thin julienne (q.v.) strips, wash, dry, season and fill a well-buttered casserole with them. Bake in the oven as described in the recipe for Anna potatoes.

This dish, which is a variation of Anna potatoes, can also be cooked in a frying pan like a pancake.

Potatoes cooked in the ashes. POMMES DE TERRE SOUS LA CENDRE – Wash big long potatoes. Dry them and bake in hot ashes with glowing embers on top.

Wipe the potatoes and serve with fresh butter.

Potatoes baked in the oven. POMMES DE TERRE AU FOUR – Wash the potatoes, dry them and bake in a hot oven. Serve with fresh butter.

Potatoes with bacon. POMMES DE TERRE AU LARD – Fry 100 g.

Potatoes as garnish:
duchess, parisienne, croquettes, straw potatoes

POTATOES

(4 oz.) diced and blanched bacon in a sauté pan in 1 tablespoon butter, lard, or goose fat. Add 10 small onions.

Remove the bacon and the onions. Put 1 tablespoon flour into the pan, allow it to colour slightly. Moisten with  $3\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups) stock or water, season, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and bring to the boil.

Put 500 to 600 g. (18 to 21 oz., 3 to 3½ cups) potatoes, cut to look like olives (or into quarters), the bacon and the onions, into this sauce. Bring to the boil, cover the pan, and cook in a slow oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Potatoes with basil. POMMES DE TERRE AU BASILIC – Cook the potatoes, cut down to a uniform size, in butter, keeping the pan covered. When ready, sprinkle with coarsely chopped fresh basil, allowing 1 good tablespoon for 500 g. (generous lb.) potatoes.

Potatoes à la basquaise. POMMES DE TERRE À LA BASQUAISE – Choose long potatoes and hollow them out lengthways. Parboil for 5 minutes, drain and dry. Stuff them, with garlic-flavoured Tomato fondue (see FONDUE), mixed with a salpicon (q.v.) of sweet pimentos cooked in butter (or oil), chopped Bayonne ham and chopped parsley.

Butter a deep à gratin dish, put the potatoes into it, season, sprinkle with melted butter (or oil), heat on the stove, and finish cooking in a slow oven.

When the potatoes are done, scatter some breadcrumbs on top, sprinkle with butter and brown. Pour on a few tablespoons thickened brown veal stock.

Potatoes à la berrichonne. POMMES DE TERRE À LA BERRICHONNE – Peel 500 g. (18 oz.) potatoes, cutting them down to a uniform size to look like large olives, as for Potatoes in butter (see below). Put them into a sauté pan in which 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) chopped onion and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) diced and scalded bacon have been fried together in 1 tablespoon butter. Brown lightly, pour in enough stock to cover the potatoes, season, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and cook with a lid on.

Serve in a vegetable dish, sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Black potatoes, also called nègresses or pommes de Madagascar. POMMES DE TERRE NOIRES, DITES NÈGRESSES, POMMES DE MADAGASCAR – This variety of potato is remarkable only for its colour, which after cooking is not really black, but a dark purple. They are used mainly as an element of mixed salads and cold hors-d'œuvre. They can be prepared in most of the ways suitable for ordinary potatoes.

Boiled potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE BOUILLIES – Wash the potatoes, put them into a saucepan, cover with water, season with coarse salt and cook.

Drain the potatoes, peel them and use as indicated in the recipe: creamed; lyonnaise, maître d'hôtel, in salad, sautéed, etc.

Potato borders. BORDURES DE POMMES DE TERRE – These borders are made of Duchess potato (see below), piped through a forcing-bag around the edges of dishes, brushed with beaten egg, and browned lightly in the oven.

Potato borders can also be made by moulding duchess potato mixture by hand.

Potatoes à la boulangère (garnish). POMMES DE TERRE À LA BOULANGÈRE – These potatoes are usually cooked round a joint of meat baked in the oven, as described in the recipe for Shoulder of lamb à la boulangère (see LAMB).

They can also be cooked separately, in a baking pan, in the oven.

Potatoes in butter (garnish). POMMES DE TERRE AU BEURRE – Cut the potatoes to look like large olives, or if new potatoes are used, peel them.

Wash, drain, put into a sauté pan in which some butter has been heated, season with salt, and sauté to impregnate them with scalding butter.

Cook in the oven or on the stove until the potatoes acquire a golden colour. Shake the pan from time to time during cooking. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Potato cakes. GALETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE – These can be prepared in several ways.

1. Using Duchess potato (see below), shaped into round or oval cakes, brush with beaten egg and cook in the oven until golden.

2. Prepare the potato cakes as above. Dredge them in flour and fry until pale golden in clarified butter.

3. Make small or large potato cakes, as described in the recipe for Anna potatoes but making them thinner.

Finish off as indicated in individual recipes, putting different ingredients between each layer of potatoes, such as: brunoise (q.v.) or mirepoix (q.v.) of vegetables, sliced mushrooms, spinach cooked in butter, chopped ham, various vegetables thinly sliced and cooked in butter, truffles, etc.

These potato cakes can be made big or small, depending on the final use for which they are intended. When small, they are used as a garnish, or as foundations for escalopes, medallions, noisettes, tournedos, etc.

Little potato cakes (Carême's recipe). PETITS PAINS DE POMMES DE TERRE – 'Bake 12 peeled kidney potatoes in the ashes. Remove all the reddish parts and use only the white flesh. Weigh out 350 g. (12 oz.) of this and pound with 100 g. (4 oz.) Isigny butter. When the mixture becomes smooth, add to it 100 g. (4 oz.) castor (fine) sugar, 50 g. (2 oz.) sieved flour, 2 egg yolks and a grain of salt. Pound everything together into a perfectly smooth paste. Take it out of the mortar, put on a lightly floured board, roll, and cut into 4 parts. Roll each part, making it twice its original length, then cut into little balls the size of walnuts, giving them the shape of boats. Place them on a buttered baking sheet. Brush with beaten egg and bake in a moderate oven.'

Château potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE CHÂTEAU – (See above, Potatoes in butter.)

Château potatoes are a traditional garnish for grilled chateaubriand steak.

Chatouillard potatoes. POMMES FRITES CHATOULLARD – Cut the potatoes into ribbons, peeling them off spiral-fashion, 3 mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) thick (see CHATOULLARD).

Cook like Soufflé potatoes (see below). Drain, season, and arrange around grilled meat.

Potatoes copeaux. POMMES FRITES COPEAUX – Like Chatouillard potatoes but cut into irregular ribbons.

Crainquebille potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE CRAINQUEBILLE – Put some big, long, peeled potatoes into a sauté pan on a foundation of chopped onion fried in butter. Pour in enough stock to cover the potatoes half-way.

Season with salt and pepper, add a bouquet garni (q.v.) with 1 clove of garlic added to it, place on each potato 1 slice seeded tomato and sprinkle with melted butter. Bring to the boil on the stove, then cook in the oven. A few moments before taking out of the oven, sprinkle with white breadcrumbs and brown the top.

Potatoes à la Crécy, also called à la Vichy. POMMES DE TERRE À LA CRÉCY, À LA VICHY – Prepare like Anna potatoes, putting a layer of Carrots à la Vichy (see CARROTS) between each layer of potato.

Potatoes à la crème. POMMES DE TERRE À LA CRÈME – Boil the potatoes in water, peel them when cooked, cut into thick slices and put into a sauté pan. Cover with boiling milk or boiling fresh cream. Cook briskly until the liquid is reduced. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Add a few tablespoons fresh cream.

Potato curly crisps (U.S. chips). POMMES FRITES COLLERETTES – Like Fried potatoes (potato crisps) (see below), but cut with a fluted cutter.

Potato croquettes
(Larousse)

Potato croquettes. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE – Divide Duchess potato (see below) into small (40- to 50-g., 1½- to 2-oz.) pieces. Mould into the shape of corks or other shapes, rolling them in flour. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in very hot deep fat. Use as indicated in the recipe.

Potato croquettes Chevreuse. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE CHEVREUSE – As above, adding chopped chervil to the duchess potato mixture.

Potato croquettes à la lyonnaise. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA LYONNAISE – As above, adding chopped onion lightly fried in butter and chopped parsley to the duchess potato mixture.

Potato croquettes à la parmesane. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA PARMESANE – As above, adding grated Parmesan cheese to the duchess potato mixture.

Potato croquettes à la périgourdine. CROQUETTES DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA PÉRIGOURDINE – As above, adding chopped truffles to the duchess potato mixture.

Potato croustades (hors-d'œuvre or entrée). CROUSTADES DE POMMES DE TERRE –

1. Roll out Duchess potato (see below) to a thickness of 2½ cm. (1 inch) and with a pastry-cutter cut out circles 5 or 6 cm. (about 2½ inches) in diameter.

Dip in egg and breadcrumbs. Mark the middle in each circle with a smaller pastry-cutter, pressing in to penetrate only one-third of the circle's thickness.

Fry in very hot deep fat. Drain on a cloth, remove the small circle forming the lid and hollow out the croustades without breaking them. Fill as indicated in the recipe.

These croustades are used as hot hors-d'œuvre or as a garnish for meat, poultry and fish.

2. Line some well-buttered, fluted, brioche tins with duchess potato mixture. Put in a layer of purée.

Brush the inside of the croustades with beaten egg and cook golden in the oven. Turn carefully out of the tins, brush the outside with beaten egg and put in the oven for a few moments. Fill as indicated in the recipe. The same uses as above.

3. Mould duchess potato mixture on a round, buttered dish in such a way as to obtain a croustade deep enough to contain the filling indicated.

Decorate the edges by piping some mixture through a forcing bag. Fill as indicated in the recipe.

These croustades can be made large or small depending on the final use for which they are intended. They are used as a foundation for meat, poultry, fish, etc., served in small pieces and accompanied by a sauce.

4. Shred the potatoes into julienne strips (as described in the recipe for Annette potatoes) and line a well-buttered dish with them.

In the middle of the potatoes put a cast iron form (rather like a layer-cake tin), buttered on the outside.

Press hard on this to make the potatoes go up the sides of the dish and form a lining layer ¼ inch thick. Fill the inner mould with deep-frying fat. Cook in the oven like Annette potatoes.

When it is cooked, remove the inner mould, press down the potatoes with a fork and brown the inside part lightly.

Turn out carefully on to a dish and fill as indicated in the recipe.

They can be made without the inside mould, by pressing the potatoes, when half cooked, against the sides of the dish.

Dauphine potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE DAUPHINE – Mix Duchess potatoes (see below) with one-third their weight of unsweetened common Chou paste (see DOUGH). Leave until cold. Divide into 40- or 50-g. (about 1½-oz.) pieces. Shape into balls, roll in flour and fry in very hot deep fat.

Drain, dry, sprinkle with salt and arrange in a heap on a plate or in a potato nest. Or use as a garnish, as indicated in the recipe.

These potatoes can be moulded into different shapes. They can also be dipped in egg and breadcrumbs before deep-frying.

Potatoes à la dauphinoise
(Claire)

Potatoes à la dauphinoise, also called Gratin de pommes à la dauphinoise. POMMES DE TERRE DAUPHINOISE – Slice 500 g. (18 oz.) potatoes very finely, put them in a bowl and moisten with 3 dl. (½ pint, 1½ cups) boiled milk with a beaten egg added to it.

Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Add 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) grated Gruyère cheese and mix. Put into an earthenware dish, buttered and rubbed with garlic.

Sprinkle with grated Gruyère cheese, scatter 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter in tiny pieces over the top, wipe the edges of the dish carefully and bake in a slow oven for 45 minutes.

Duchess potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE DUCHESSE – Cut 500 g. (18 oz.) peeled potatoes into thick slices or quarters. Boil them briskly in salted water. Drain, put in the oven for a few moments to evaporate excessive moisture, and rub through a sieve.

Put the purée into a saucepan, dry off for a few moments, turning with a wooden spoon. Add 50 g. (2 oz.) butter, season with salt, pepper and a little grated nutmeg, bind with a whole egg and 2 yolks and mix. Spread the purée on a buttered metal sheet, leave until cold, and shape as indicated in the recipe.

When this mixture is intended for borders to be piped through a forcing-bag, it is used while still hot. It is then not so thick as when it is intended for croquettes, or to be served as duchess potatoes proper.

Duchess potatoes for garnish. POMMES DE TERRE DUCHESSE –

POTATOES

These potatoes are prepared from Potato purée described below, moulded by hand into various shapes, or forced through a bag on to a buttered baking sheet.

As soon as the purée has been piped through, brush with beaten egg and put in the oven to brown. Use as indicated in the recipe.

Potatoes with fennel. POMMES DE TERRE AU FENOUIL – Like Potatoes with basil replacing the basil by fresh chopped fennel.

Potato fondantes. POMMES DE TERRE FONDANTES – Cut the potatoes to uniform size to look like small eggs. Put them into a buttered sauté pan, cover and cook gently on the top of the stove. Turn them carefully, one at a time, once during cooking. They should be golden on the outside and very soft inside when cooked.

They can also be prepared as follows:

Cook the potatoes, cut as described, in lard. When they are done, drain off the lard and replace it by butter.

Sliced potatoes should be dried in a cloth before frying (Clairé)

Fried potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE FRITES – This is the most popular form of potatoes eaten, also the least digestible. If the frying is carried out correctly, at the right temperature, the potatoes should be crisp, very pleasant to the taste and easier to digest; if badly done, the potatoes are impregnated with fat and become indigestible.

They are immersed in deep cooking fat or oil, at a temperature of 180°C. (356°F.), when the fat is beginning to smoke. This temperature falls at once to 160°C. (320°F.) then to 150°C. (302°F.) when fresh cold potatoes are put in so the fat must be reheated each time. The potatoes should acquire a golden colour.

If cut very finely (straw potatoes), and immersed in special fat heated to 190°C. (374°F.), in five minutes' cooking time the temperature of the fat will fall to only 177°C. (350°F.).

Under the entry DEEP-FRYING all instructions relative to the clarification of the fat in which the potatoes are cooked are given, as well as all information dealing with utensils, pans, etc., which are used for deep-frying.

Fried potatoes, or potato crisps (U.S. chips). POMMES FRITES CHIP, EN LIARDS – Cut the potatoes into the shape of corks then into very thin slices. Soak in cold water for 10 minutes. Drain, dry on a cloth and fry in very hot deep fat. Drain and season.

These potatoes are often used as an accompaniment to roast game à l'anglaise.

Fried potatoes pont-neuf. POMMES FRITES PONT-NEUF – Cut the potatoes into pieces 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick and 6 to 7 cm. (about 2½ inches) long. Fry in boiling fat.

Potato fritters: scallops garnished with duchess potatoes

Potato fritters – See FRITTERS.

Gastronome potatoes, also called potatoes à la Cussy (Plumerey's recipe). POMMES DE TERRE GASTRONOME, POMMES DE TERRE CUSSY – 'Take big yellow potatoes, cut off the two ends, and cut them with a special cutter (called in French, a colonne) into cork-shaped chunks, about 2½ cm. (1 inch) in diameter. Cut them into slices 5 mm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) thick, putting them into water as you cut them. Dry on a cloth to absorb all water.

'Put them into a big pan with 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) hot clarified butter, so that they cook gently, colouring without sticking to the pan or drying up. In the meantime, slice 6 or 8 truffles, toss them in butter with 1 tablespoon of Madeira and a piece of chicken jelly the size of a walnut. When the potatoes are cooked and acquire a fine golden colour, remove them from the fire, add the truffles and the juice of  $\frac{1}{2}$  lemon and serve piping hot.

'We owe this side dish to the late Monsieur de Cussy, a fine gourmet and former administrator of Napoleon's palace.'

This method of preparing potatoes is somewhat similar to the one called 'à la scarlandaise'.

Potatoes Georgette. POMMES DE TERRE GEORGETTE – These are principally served as a hot hors-d'œuvre. Choose medium-sized potatoes, bake in the oven and cut a circle on one side'

Through this opening scoop out three-quarters of the pulp. While still hot fill them with Crayfish tail ragoût à la Nantua (see CRAYFISH).

Heat the potatoes in the oven and serve.

Grilled potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE GRILLEES – Choose big, long potatoes and cut them lengthways into slices 1½ cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick. Parboil them in salted boiling water for 4 minutes. Drain and dry on a cloth. Brush with oil or melted butter. Cook under a low grill. Arrange on a dish and top with half-melted Maître d'hôtel butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters).

Hashed browned potatoes (American cookery). POMMES DE TERRE HACHÉES BRUNES À L'AMÉRICAINÉ – Boil the potatoes in salted water, drain well and chop up.

Fry them in butter in a frying pan, browning well. Season with salt and pepper. Give them the shape of a turnover and allow to colour.

Chopped onions fried in butter are sometimes added to this dish.

Potatoes à la hongroise. POMMES DE TERRE À LA HONGROISE – Soften 75 g. (3 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) chopped onions in butter in a sauté pan. Season with  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon paprika. Add 1 peeled, seeded and chopped tomato, and 500 g. (18 oz.) long potatoes cut into thick round slices. Season with salt. Moisten with meat stock in sufficient quantity to cover the potatoes. Bake in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Potatoes à la landaise. POMMES DE TERRE À LA LANDAISE – Fry 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) diced onions and 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) diced Bayonne ham, in goose fat or lard. When the onions and the ham are browned, add 500 g. (18 oz.) potatoes cut in large dice. Season with salt and pepper. Cook with a lid on, stirring from time to time. Add 1 tablespoon chopped garlic and parsley.

Potato loaves. PAINS DE POMMES DE TERRE – Bake big floury potatoes in the oven and scoop out the pulp with a spoon. Rub this through a sieve as quickly as possible. Put the purée thus obtained into a saucepan with butter, allowing 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter per 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) purée. Add salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Stir on the fire for a few moments to dry off excessive moisture, then remove from heat and add 1 whole egg and 4 yolks. Mix well. Divide into 50-g. (2-oz.) pieces, and mould them into small boat-shaped cakes slit in the middle. Put on a baking sheet, brush with beaten egg and cook in a very hot oven until golden.

Potatoes Lorette. POMMES DE TERRE LORETTE – Divide Dauphine potato (see above) into small (about 50-g., 2-oz.) parts, shape into crescents and fry in deep fat.

Potatoes à la lyonnaise. POMMES DE TERRE À LA LYONNAISE – Prepare as described in the recipe for Sautéed potatoes (see below). When three-quarters cooked, add 4 tablespoons ( $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sliced onions fried in butter.

Finish cooking together, shaking the pan frequently to mix well. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Macaire potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE MACAIRE – Bake big potatoes in the oven. Halve them and scoop out the pulp with a fork. Mash this pulp with several tablespoons butter, allowing 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter per 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) pulp. Season with salt and pepper.

Put the pulp into a frying pan in which some butter has been heated. Spread in a flat cake. Fry until golden on both sides.

Maire potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE MAIRE – The same as Potatoes à la crème.

Potatoes à la maître d'hôtel. POMMES DE TERRE À LA MAÎTRE D'HÔTEL – Boil the potatoes in salted water. Peel and slice them. Put them into a sauté pan and cover with boiling milk. Add 2 or 3 tablespoons butter, season, and cook until the liquid is boiled down.

Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Potato matches (U.S. potato sticks). POMMES FRITES ALLUMETTES – Cut the potatoes into little sticks  $\frac{1}{2}$  cm. ( $\frac{1}{4}$  inch) wide and 6 or 7 cm. (2 $\frac{1}{2}$  inches) long. Fry in very hot deep fat in order to obtain crisp golden potatoes.

Drain, dry and season with fine, dry salt.

Potatoes with mint. POMMES DE TERRE À LA MENTHE – Boil new potatoes with a sprig of mint. Serve in a vegetable dish and put a green mint leaf on each potato.

Potatoes Mont-Dore. POMMES DE TERRE MONT-DORE – Prepare creamy mashed potatoes mixed with grated cheese, heap in a dome in a buttered fireproof dish, sprinkle with grated cheese, pour on some melted butter and brown.

Potatoes mousseline. POMMES DE TERRE MOUSSELINE – Bake the potatoes, remove pulp and rub it through a sieve. Stir the pulp in a pan on heat, adding to it, for 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) pulp, 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) butter and 4 egg yolks. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Remove from heat and add 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) whipped cream. Pile in a dome in a buttered fireproof dish, sprinkle with melted butter and brown quickly in the oven.

This purée can also be put into a flan case made of Lining paste (see DOUGH).

Potatoes au naturel

Potatoes nature or au naturel. POMMES DE TERRE NATURE, AU NATUREL – One or other of these names is often given to boiled potatoes (see above, Potatoes à l'anglaise).

Potato nests. NIDS DE POMMES DE TERRE – Shred the potato into fine julienne (q.v.) strips, as described in the recipe for Straw potatoes (see below). Wash, dry and use them for lining special moulds or wire baskets.

Press the potatoes well against the sides of the wire baskets. Trim away any overlapping parts, close the baskets and plunge them into very hot deep fat.

Take out of the pan, drain and season.

Noisette potatoes (garnish). POMMES DE TERRE NOISETTE – Scoop out with a vegetable scoop pieces of potato the size and Spoons for scooping out potatoes and for shaping potato noisettes (Larousse) shape of hazelnuts. Fry them in butter, season, and cook until golden all over.

POTATOES

Potatoes à la normande. POMMES DE TERRE À LA NORMANDE – Cut 500 g. (18 oz.) potatoes into thin slices. Wash and dry them, season with salt and freshly ground pepper, and put into a buttered sauté pan in layers, alternating with the shredded white part of 2 big leeks and 1 heaped tablespoon chopped parsley.

Add a bouquet garni (q.v.) and enough white veal stock, meat stock or water – if the dish is intended to be served as Lenten fare – to cover the potatoes. Scatter 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) butter in tiny dabs.

Bring to the boil, cover, and cook in the oven.

Potato pancakes. CRÊPES DE POMMES DE TERRE – Peel, wash and dry the potatoes, put them through a mincer. Dab the pulp obtained with a cloth, put it into a bowl, season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg, and add, for 500 g. (18 oz.) potatoes, 2 eggs beaten with 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) milk and 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters). Add cheese if desired.

Make the pancakes in the usual manner, keeping them a little thicker than for sweet pancakes.

Potatoes à la parisienne

Potatoes à la parisienne (garnish). POMMES DE TERRE À LA PARISIENNE – Like Noisette potatoes, but smaller in size. As soon as the potatoes are cooked, toss them in greatly concentrated veal stock or dissolved meat jelly. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Parmentier potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE PARMENTIER – Cut potatoes into pieces about 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) square. Cook them in butter. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

These potatoes are more often cooked with the meat with which they are served.

Parsley potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE PERSILLÉES – Boil the potatoes, drain well and add melted butter and chopped parsley. Potatoes with bacon the recipe for which is given above, are often served under this name.

Potatoes à la paysanne. POMMES DE TERRE À LA PAYSANNE – Cut the potatoes into very thin round slices. Put them into a buttered sauté pan in alternate layers with chopped sorrel cooked in butter mixed with pounded chervil and a pinch of grated garlic. Season with salt and pepper, add meat stock (or water, if the dish is to be served as Lenten fare). Scatter tiny dabs of butter over and cook in the oven.

Potato purée. PURÉE DE POMMES DE TERRE – Cut potatoes into thick slices or quarters and cook them in fast-boiling salted water.

Drain, put in the oven for a few moments to evaporate surplus moisture and rub through a sieve, pressing down with a wooden masher. Put the purée into a pan set on the stove and blend in about 175 g. (6 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) butter per kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) purée. Add a few tablespoons of boiling milk, stir vigorously with a wooden spoon and serve.

The purée should not be allowed to boil after the butter has been added to it.

Potato purée à la crème. PURÉE DE POMMES DE TERRE À LA CRÈME – As above, replacing milk by fresh cream.

Potato purée au gratin. PURÉE DE POMMES DE TERRE AU GRATIN – Prepare the purée as described above. Add grated cheese and put into a buttered fireproof dish; smooth the surface, working it into a slight dome shape. Sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter and brown the top.

Potato purée soup. POTAGE PURÉE DE POMMES DE TERRE – See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Purée of potato soup Parmentier.

Potato quenelles à l'alsacienne, called floutes (Alsatian cookery). QUENELLES DE POMMES DE TERRE À L'ALSACIENNE, DITES FLOUTES – Prepare 500 g. (18 oz.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) very fine potato purée. Add 2 whole eggs and 75 g. (3 oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) unsifted flour in order to obtain a fairly firm paste. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg.

Shape into balls, roll to look like corks, or mould with a soup spoon. Drop the quenelles one by one into a pan of salted boiling water. Poach for 8 to 10 minutes. Drain and put into a buttered dish. Pour over some piping hot Noisette butter (see BUTTER, Compound butters) in which a handful of fine, freshly grated breadcrumbs have been lightly fried.

Potato quenelles with Parmesan cheese. QUENELLES DE POMMES DE TERRE AU PARMESAN – Prepare the quenelles as described above. After poaching, put them into a dish, buttered and sprinkled with grated Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle with more grated Parmesan, spoon over some melted butter, and brown the top in a very hot oven.

Rissolé potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE RISSOLÉES – Another name for Sautéed potatoes (see below).

Roast potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE RÔTIES – Peel big, long potatoes, and put them into a sauté pan in which some butter or lard has been heated. Season with salt. Cook in the oven, basting frequently, until golden all over.

Potatoes Saint-Flour. POMMES DE TERRE SAINT-FLOUR – Line the bottom of a deep fireproof dish with a layer of green cabbage braised in fat and cooked slightly crisp. Over the cabbage put a layer of potatoes cut in thick slices, mixed with lean diced bacon, scalded and fried. Season with salt and pepper. Moisten with stock, flavoured with a little crushed garlic. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Cook in a slow oven.

Potato salad – See SALAD.

Potatoes à la sarladaise. POMMES DE TERRE À LA SARLADAISE – Prepare like Anna potatoes putting the potatoes into a deep dish in layers, alternating with rows of thinly sliced truffles.

Sautéed potatoes I. POMMES DE TERRE SAUTÉES – Slice boiled, peeled, potatoes. Season, and fry in butter until golden, shaking the pan frequently to ensure even browning. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed potatoes II. POMMES DE TERRE SAUTÉES À CRU – Cut 500 g. (18 oz.) uncooked Dutch potatoes into very thin slices, wash, dry on a cloth and season.

Cook in butter in a frying pan. Shake the pan frequently to ensure even cooking and to give all the potatoes a golden colour.

Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sautéed potatoes à la provençale. POMMES DE TERRE SAUTÉES À LA PROVENÇALE – Use either raw or boiled potatoes and Potatoes, roast, noisette, saute, mashed, boiled, fried prepare like Sautéed potatoes I or II. Add 1 good tablespoon chopped parsley and garlic.

These potatoes can also be cooked in oil instead of butter.

Potatoes à la savoyarde. POMMES DE TERRE À LA SAVOYARDE – Prepare like Potatoes à la dauphinoise, replacing the milk by white stock.

Potato soufflé – See SOUFFLÉ.

Soufflé potatoes (or puffed potatoes). POMMES DE TERRE SOUFFLÉES – Choose uniform-sized potatoes. Peel, trim and cut them lengthways into slices, 3 mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) thick. Wash and dry on a cloth.

Plunge into not too hot deep fat, which should be heated gradually. Cook the potatoes until they begin to rise to the surface. Drain in a frying basket.

Just before serving, plunge them into a second pan of very hot deep fat. Drain the potatoes, which should be well puffed up, spread them on a cloth and sprinkle with salt.

This method of cooking potatoes was discovered by accident. It is claimed that the discovery took place at Pecq in 1837, when the train had great difficulty in clambering up the final slope. The proprietor of the restaurant in which the Company was giving lunch to its guests had prepared some fried potatoes for the appointed time and let them get cold, and then, taken by surprise by the unexpected arrival of the party, only had time to plunge them into boiling fat quickly and, to his amazement, saw them puff up.

The famous analytical chemist Chevreul, who was informed of this phenomenon, studied it experimentally and established the conditions under which it occurred and could be reproduced at will.

It is perhaps the only time that a train being late had happy consequences!

Soufflé potatoes require double cooking and fat which can be brought to a very high temperature without burning, which is best achieved with beef suet. The potatoes should first be plunged into fat at a temperature of 180°C. (356°F.) contained in a big pan (which reduces the degree of cooling); this temperature is reduced to 135°C. (275°F.) in 2 minutes. After 7 minutes – the time needed for cooking through slices

3 mm. ( $\frac{1}{8}$  inch) thick – the temperature is lowered to 120°C. (248°F.). The potatoes are then cooked and soft. They are taken out, the heat is increased and the potatoes are reimmersed, a few at a time, in hot fat which should register at least 190°C. (374°F.) to ensure puffing up. At this temperature the surface of the slices is transformed into a waterproof skin, which will swell as a result of the volatilisation of the water contained inside.

Steamed potatoes. POMMES DE TERRE À LA VAPEUR – Steam the potatoes in a special steamer as described in the recipe for Potatoes à l'anglaise.

Potatoes in stock. POMMES DE TERRE AU JUS – Cut the potatoes into quarters and put into a sauté pan with butter. Pour in enough clear brown veal stock to cover. Season, cover, and cook in the oven.

Straw potatoes. POMMES FRITES PAILLE – Cut the potatoes into very thin julienne (q.v.) sticks. Wash and dry on a cloth. Fry in hot, deep fat. Drain in a frying basket. Just before serving, plunge into smoking hot fat.

Stuffed potatoes I. POMMES DE TERRE FARCIES – Bake long potatoes in the oven and scoop out two-thirds of the pulp. Rub through a sieve and mix with ingredients such as duxelles (q.v.), fines herbes (q.v.), grated cheese, chopped ham, mirepoix (q.v.), chopped onion softened in butter, or various chopped meats, etc. Season well, add butter and fill the potato skins with the mixture.

Sprinkle with grated cheese or breadcrumbs, pour on a little melted butter and brown the top.

Or: Peel some very big potatoes. Cut them to look like cylinders, slice off the ends to make them all the same height, say about 6 to 7 cm. (2½ inches).

How to empty
a potato ready for stuffing

Hollow them out with a vegetable scoop, to form a cavity capable of containing about 50 g. (2 oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) forcemeat. Blanch in fast-boiling salted water, drain, dry, arrange in a well-buttered sauté pan and season. Stuff with the filling indicated, either through a forcing-bag or with a spoon. Smooth the top layer of the filling into a dome shape.

Moisten the potatoes with meat stock without covering them. Bring to the boil on the stove, cover the pan, and cook in a slow oven from 35 to 40 minutes. Remove the potatoes carefully, arrange them in a fireproof dish, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter and brown the top in the oven. Boil down the pan juices, skim off any surplus fat, strain, and pour over the potatoes.

Stuffed potatoes II. POMMES DE TERRE FOURRÉES – Bake medium-sized, uniform-shaped potatoes. Cut a circular opening on one side and keep the cut-out pieces to use as lids. Scoop out three-quarters of the pulp, taking care not to damage the skin. Stuff the potatoes with the filling indicated. Sprinkle the top with breadcrumbs or grated cheese and brown the top, or simply replace the cut-out circles as lids.

Serve on a folded napkin.

If the stuffed potatoes are to be browned later, it is better to cut them in half, lengthways, instead of hollowing them out through a circular opening.

Stuffed potatoes à la cancalaise. POMMES DE TERRE À LA CANCELAISE – Prepare like Stuffed potatoes I, using a filling of poached oysters, mushrooms, and White wine sauce (see SAUCE).

Stuffed potatoes à la cantalienne. POMMES DE TERRE À LA CANTALIENNE – Scoop pulp out of the potato, mash and mix with two-thirds of its weight of braised, chopped cabbage.

Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown the top.

Stuffed potatoes à la chasseur (Hunter style). POMMES DE TERRE CHASSEUR – Cook potatoes as above and stuff with sliced chicken livers and mushrooms, sautéed in butter, and Chasseur sauce (see SAUCE).

Stuffed potato with cheese

Stuffed potatoes with cheese. POMMES DE TERRE AU FROMAGE, GRATINÉES. Cook potatoes as above, and stuff with the mashed pulp, seasoned, and with butter added to it.

Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown the top.

Stuffed potatoes à la duxelles. POMMES DE TERRE FARCIES À LA DUXELLES – Prepare like Potatoes stuffed with sausage meat (see below) and stuff with a duxelles (q.v.) mixture.

Stuffed potatoes fermière. POMMES DE TERRE FERMIERE – Fill with the pulp scooped out of the potatoes, mashed and mixed with two-thirds of its weight of chopped stock-pot vegetables. Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown the top.

Stuffed potatoes à la florentine. POMMES DE TERRE À LA FLORENTINE – Fill with spinach cooked in butter. Cover with Mornay sauce (see SAUCE), sprinkle with grated cheese and brown the top.

Stuffed potatoes à la hongroise. POMMES DE TERRE À LA HONGROISE – Fill with the pulp scooped out of the potatoes, mashed with a fork, mixed with one-third of its weight of chopped onion gently fried in butter and seasoned with paprika.

Stuffed potatoes Maintenon. POMMES DE TERRE MAINTENON – Fill with a salpicon (q.v.) of breast of chicken, pickled tongue, truffles and mushrooms bound with soubise (q.v.).

Sprinkle with grated cheese mixed with breadcrumbs and brown the top.

Stuffed potatoes à la ménagère. POMMES DE TERRE FARCIES À LA MÉNAGÈRE – Prepare like Potatoes stuffed with sausage meat (see below) and stuff with chopped meat left-overs.

The chopped meat, beef or mutton, can be mixed with one-third of its weight of fine forcemeat or sausage meat.

Stuffed potatoes princesse. POMMES DE TERRE PRINCESSE – Fill with asparagus tips with Cream sauce (see SAUCE). Cover the potatoes with slivers of truffles.

Stuffed potatoes à la provençale. POMMES DE TERRE À LA PROVENÇALE – Fill with a salpicon (q.v.) of marinated tunny (tuna fish) and hard-boiled eggs, bound with Tomato fondue (see TOMATO). Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and brown the top.

Potatoes stuffed with sausage meat. POMMES DE TERRE FARCIES CHARCUTIÈRE – Prepare as described in the second method of the recipe for Stuffed potatoes I. Fill with sausage meat stuffing, mixed with chopped parsley and, if desired, chopped onions lightly fried in butter.

These potatoes can also be stuffed with sausage meat mixed with the pulp of cooked potatoes, as described in the first method of the same recipe.

Stuffed potatoes soubise. POMMES DE TERRE SOUBISE – Fill with thick Onion soubise (see PURÉE) with cream.

Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and brown the top.

Stuffed potatoes à la Vichy. POMMES DE TERRE À LA VICHY – Fill with Carrots à la Vichy (see CARROTS).

Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and brown the top.

Stuffed potatoes Yorkshire style. POMMES DE TERRE À LA YORKAISE – Bake the potatoes in the oven and fill with chopped York ham and mushrooms bound with Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), mixed with chopped onion lightly fried in butter and seasoned with a little paprika.

Potato subrics. SUBRICS DE POMMES DE TERRE – Cut the potatoes into small dice, parboil in salted water for 2 minutes, drain dry, and cook lightly in butter in a covered pan.

Remove from the heat and bind with thick Béchamel sauce (see SAUCE), allowing 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) sauce per 500 g. (18 oz., 2¼ cups) potatoes. Add 3 yolks and 1 whole egg to the mixture. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg and mix.

Heat some clarified butter in a frying pan and drop the mixture 1 tablespoon at a time into the hot butter, taking care to allow space for the subrics to spread during cooking, and to prevent their sticking to each other.

Turn the subrics with a palette knife to make both sides golden. Serve with Cream sauce (see SAUCE).

Potatoes à la toulousaine. POMMES DE TERRE À LA TOULOUSAINE – Cut the potatoes into quarters and brown them lightly in a mixture of ¾ goose fat and ¼ oil in a sauté pan.

Season, sprinkle with flour, add 1 tablespoon chopped garlic and parsley. Pour in enough stock or water to cover the potatoes. Stir, bring to the boil, cover, and cook in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Potatoes à la Vichy. POMMES DE TERRE À LA VICHY – Name sometimes given to Potatoes à la Crècy.

Potatoes Voisin. POMMES DE TERRE VOISIN – Prepare like Anna potatoes sprinkling each layer of potatoes with grated cheese.

Potatoes Yvette. POMMES DE TERRE YVETTE – Name under which Annette potatoes are sometimes served.

POTÉE – All preparations cooked in an earthenware pot. In particular the word describes soup made with pork and vegetables, mostly cabbage and potatoes, of which cabbage soup is the most characteristic.

Potée Lorraine – Line the bottom of an earthenware vessel with pieces of pork skin or bacon rind. Place on top some fresh pork fat, a knuckle of ham or bladebone of pork, carrots, turnips, bunches of leeks and a whole blanched cabbage. Barely cover with cold water. Cook for 3 hours. Thirty minutes before taking it from the fire, put in a large, well-pricked sausage. Serve with boiled potatoes.

POT-ROASTING. POËLAGE – Method of slow cooking by steam. A casserole with a tightly fitting lid is used. The food is cooked in butter or fat and flavoured with vegetables which have been cooked slowly in butter until very tender.

Pot-roasted meat, poultry or fish must be basted frequently during cooking. When it is ready, take it out of the casserole. Serve on a dish, or, where appropriate, in a cocotte (q.v.). Remove most of the cooking fat.

Dilute the juices in the casserole with wine or stock as indicated in the recipe. Boil for a few seconds. Strain and pour over the dish.

Pot-roasting à la Matignon. POËLAGE À LA MATIGNON – Brown lightly in butter the meat or fish to be pot-roasted. Cover with a thick layer of Matignon (q.v.) or fondue (q.v.) of root vegetables. Wrap in buttered greaseproof paper and cook in the oven in a braising pan, or on the spit. After cooking, unwrap, place on a dish, surround with the appropriate garnishes and pour on the stock.

Braising à la Matignon can also be carried out by lining the braising pan with the fondue of root vegetables and placing the meat, fish or poultry, liberally basted with butter, on top.

POTTED CHAR (English cookery) – Fish conserve formerly held in great esteem in England, where it was eaten at breakfast.

Cook the char in a prepared vegetable stock and let them cool in the liquid. Remove all skin and bones and arrange the fillets of fish, well drained, in shallow earthenware pots. Cover with clarified butter and set in the oven for 15 minutes. Allow to get quite cold. Add a few more tablespoons clarified butter, if necessary, so that the fish is completely covered.

Potted char, kept in a cool place, will keep for 2 weeks.

In U.S.A., char is the name given to certain types of red-fleshed trout. Trout may be used in this recipe.

POUILLARD – Name given to a young partridge. It is prepared in the same way as a fully grown partridge.

POULE-AU-POT – Pot-au-feu prepared with beef and a stuffed chicken. (See SOUPS AND BROTHS, Pot-au-feu à la béarnaise.)

POULETTE (À LA) – Method of preparing a diversity of ingredients, notably offal or variety meats. Previously cooked, these are moistened with a Velouté sauce (see SAUCE) bound with egg yolks and cream, and are usually garnished with little onions and mushrooms. (See OFFAL or VARIETY MEATS, Sheep's (lambs') trotters à la poulette; MUSHROOMS, Mushrooms à la poulette.)

POULIGNY-SAINT-PIERRE – See CHEESE.

POULTRY. VOLAILLE – See CHICKEN.

POUPELIN – Gâteau made by cooking Chou paste (see DOUGH) in a plain mould. Three-quarters of the pastry spills outside the mould during cooking. Cool and fill the crust with Chantilly cream (see CREAMS), fruit mousse or ice cream.

POUPETON – Method of preparing certain butcher's meats, which are rolled one inside the other into a meat roll. These pieces are generally braised.

POUSSIN – See CHICKEN, Spring chicken.

POUSSOIR – Small machine used in charcuterie (pork butchery), with which the minced meats are pressed into the gut to make sausages. Air is prevented from entering the gut, an essential condition of perfect sausage making.

Mushrooms à la poulette (Robert Carrier)

POUTARGUE, BOUTARGUE

POUTARGUE, BOUTARGUE – See HORS-D'ŒUVRE, Cold hors-d'œuvre.

POUTINE – Tiny undeveloped fish (larvae or post-larvae or 'fry') of various kinds, mainly the early stages of sardines and anchovies. They are treated in the same way as nonats (q.v.).

PRAIRE – Popular name in France for the clam, a bivalve mollusc, most often eaten raw like oysters but which may also be cooked like mussels.

This shellfish is found on the sandy Atlantic coasts of France and also in the Mediterranean. It is known, as coque rayée in the bays of Cancale and St. Malo, and as rigadelle the length of the Atlantic Coast from St. Brieuc to Lannion.

PRALINE. PRALIN – A preparation used by pastry-cooks, made in the following way:

Ingredients. 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) almonds, 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar,  $\frac{1}{2}$  vanilla pod.

Method. Put the sugar and vanilla in a copper pan and melt over a good heat until it is brown. Remove the vanilla pod. Add the almonds, previously browned in the oven. Mix. Pour into a greased baking tin, cool, then pound in a mortar as finely as possible.

Gâteau 'praliné'

PRALINÉ. PRALINÉ – Cake made with layers of Genoese cake separated by a layer of praline butter cream, covered with a layer of same cream, sprinkled with chopped almonds.

Praline butter cream is made by adding 200 g. (7 oz., 1 cup) powdered praline to 1 kg. (2 $\frac{1}{4}$  lb., 4 $\frac{1}{2}$  cups) Butter cream (see CREAMS).

PRALINE (Confectionery) – Very delicate sweet, an almond covered with a coating of cooked sugar, variously flavoured and coloured.

The history of this confection goes back to the reign of Louis XIII. At this period, the maréchal duc de Choiseul-Praslin divided his time between the battlefield and the boudoirs of famous women. He had already established quite a reputation for himself through his ingenuity and wit when one day he surpassed himself: he offered some sweets along with his proposals. These were such a novelty at the time that people had never tasted anything like them. His friends besieged the marshal for the recipe, pleading with him at the same time to part with some more. When they asked what the delicacies were called, the duc de Praslin was unable to put a name to them. 'I leave it to you,' he said 'to christen them.' A voice rang out in the company, 'Prasline', pronouncing for the first time a name that was to become famous throughout the world.

The head of maréchal de Praslin's household later settled in Montargis where he founded the Maison de la Prasline, which later became the Confiserie du Roy.

PRALINER – To add praline to a custard, ice cream mixture or mousse.

PRATELLE – Variety of mushroom, large and pinkish, cultivated in beds.

PREIGNAC – White wine which comes from a district of the same name in the Gironde.

PRÉ-SALÉ – See SALT MEADOW.

PRESENT – Dutch cheese, also known under the name of Edammer Kaas.

PRESENTATION OF DISHES. DRESSAGE DES PLATS – To present a dish is to arrange food on a serving dish in accordance with certain accepted rules, e.g., a joint of meat surrounded by its appropriate garnish.

In former times the presentation of dishes was somewhat elaborate. There are many fine drawings of these masterpieces of culinary architecture in the works of Carême.

The presentation of dishes is now as simple as possible. Cold dishes are generally served on a layer of jelly straight on the dish surrounded by a suitable garnish or jelly motifs. Or in glass or crystal bowls, completely covered with very clear jelly.

Aspics, mousses, moulds and other moulded dishes are sometimes set on a slice of sandwich bread cut to the shape of their base and surrounded with a border of jelly, but they are more commonly served straight on the dish, decorated with jelly, or in a glass bowl.

Fish is generally served surrounded by the appropriate garnish interspersed with sprigs of curly parsley, or, where appropriate, skinned, trimmed and masked with jelly and decorated with whatever jelly is indicated in the recipe.

This simplification in the serving of cold dishes, especially sweets (desserts), was recommended by Carême himself, who urged the use of crystal bowls.

In the 'introductory discourse' to the Cuisinier parisien, Carême says that, for the presentation of these dishes he had furnished manufacturers with 'several models of bowls for sweets, some of which should be presented in crystal containers.' He advised the cooks of his own day to 'stand jelly sweets on ice to set', which is now current practice.

'In general', wrote Carême, 'I would wish to see these new bowls carried out in future in handsome silverware. They would do honour to the goldsmiths and silversmiths of France.'

PRESENTOIR – Dish on which a tureen, vegetable dish, etc. rests.

PRESERVATION OF FOOD. CONSERVE – The art of preserving food is extremely ancient, but it is only since the mid nineteenth century that it has moved out of the empirical realm into the scientific.

Since the earliest times man has tried to guard against famine by preserving foods during their season of abundance; in particular, meat obtained by hunting.

The only means of preserving food in prehistoric times was by drying. This method is still employed today, particularly in Switzerland, where beef is preserved (Bindenfleisch) in the Grisons, being dried solely in the strong pure air.

But once man knew how to use fire to cook meat, he very soon used it for curing it. This was the first scientific method of preserving. Having noticed the effect that fire had on meat, an effect which altered its substance, made it more tasty and easier to masticate, the possibility dawned on primitive man of delaying its decomposition by smoking it. This method of preserving, assisted by a preliminary salting, is still used today, and it is in this manner that all hams and smoked meats are prepared and preserved.

Freezing played a part in preserving meat in those remote days. There was also salting, but only in regions near the sea where rock salt was found.

Fruit and vegetables were first preserved by drying in the sun or by the fire. Later, recourse was made to the system of enveloping food substances in fat. Although rather imperfect, this procedure is still used today to preserve, for a limited period, meat which has first been cooked in fat, put in stoneware pots and covered entirely with fat. Once congealed it makes an almost completely airtight cover.

The basic ways of preserving food, i.e., canning and bottling, freezing, salting and dehydrating are still in use, but modern methods have revolutionised the processes. The preservation of food in the home as well as in the factory is very important.

CANNING AND BOTTLING. CONSERVATION EN BOITE – The process of hermetically sealing food for future use was invented in 1795 by a Frenchman, Nicholas Appert. In 1810 a patent was taken out in England for Appert's method and from there it quickly spread to America, where lobsters and salmon were the first foods preserved in this way. In 1823 Thomas Kensett, an American, invented the tin can for packing food, including meat, poultry, fish, vegetables and fruit. Glass containers, earthenware jars and tin cans are now used in commercial and home canning and bottling.

This method of preservation is basically a process whereby the action of moulds, yeasts and bacteria that spoil fresh food is stopped by subjecting them to high heat long enough to stop the action. Most vegetables as well as poultry, meat and fish must be processed in pressure canners under a 4½-kg. (10-lb.) pressure at 115°C. (240°F.). Most fruits and tomatoes are processed in a boiling water bath. Several varieties of containers are used; all are equipped with covers or seals and directions to make the containers airtight. With the advent of freezers, home canning of poultry, meat and fish is now rare, but canning and bottling of vegetables and fruit is still quite common.

CURING. SALAISON – The curing of meat is an ancient practice. Cato the Censor gives a recipe for the salting of ham which goes back to 200 B.C. In England, by the fourteenth century, it was indeed a sign of poverty to be without bacon. Until the middle of the nineteenth century bacon and ham could only be cured in the winter. When a method of cooling curing cellars with ice was introduced, curing began to be carried out all the year round. Mechanical refrigeration, introduced in Britain in 1877, was the beginning of the modern curing industry, which revolutionised the whole approach.

The success of home curing largely depends on the extent to which unspecialised premises can be adapted for the purpose. The ideal curing room should have a temperature of between 3° and 10°C. (38° and 50°F.), a free circulation of fresh cool air and a means of darkening, as light has a bad effect on the fat of the meat. Most cellars are even in temperature and are suitable provided they are not too damp.

For drying the best room is one which keeps a temperature of about 15°C. (60°F.), preferably with a current of air. The ceiling of a large kitchen not too near the fire, or of a passage leading from the kitchen, is good for this purpose. Rooms in which there is a hot water tank may be used, if the meat is not placed too near the source of heat.

For storage the essentials are absence of light and steady though not necessarily low temperature. (Most attics are too hot in summer and subject to variations in temperature, which lead to condensation on the surface of the bacon or ham and in time produce slime and other evils. Cellars are often too damp and lack adequate air circulation.) A good larder or unheated ground floor room facing north is best.

The equipment for home curing need not be elaborate but should include a boning knife, a carving knife, scales for weighing meat, a large basin or tub for brining head and trotters, a curing trough, shelf or floor, depending on the type of cure, and a thermometer.

For dry salting a stone or brick floor or slate shelf will be needed. If a 'box' cure is contemplated, a strong box with pieces of wood and weights; for pickle curing, tubs or barrels are suitable. It must be remembered that the meat will float in the pickle and boards with weights (large clean stones will do) must be provided as a cover.

For a combination of dry and pickle cures, a stone or lead trough is ideal, preferably with a plug hole for drawing off the liquor, but wooden troughs and basins may be used.

When the meat is being dried, meat hooks and strong twine will be needed and, for storage, greaseproof paper and clean muslin or calico.

Curing ingredients – The preservation of meat consists partly of drying the meat and partly of impregnating it with a sufficiently high concentration of salt and saltpetre (sometimes sugar as well).

Salt is the really essential ingredient in curing. Saltpetre is not a substance required for human nutrition and, except in small concentrations, could be regarded as an irritant or a weak poison, like many other preservatives. Common salt, differs in being a necessary ingredient of the human diet, yet in high concentrations it can become an irritant or even a poison. Sugar has none of the objectionable qualities of the other preservatives and is supposed to help keep the meat soft by counteracting the hardening effects of saltpetre.

Curing ingredients also include vinegar (mostly acetic acid), pepper (the essential oil probably has a preservative effect), beer, wines and spirits (alcohol being a preserving agent) and wood smoke in which are found formaldehyde, alcohols, tars, creosote, etc.

Fruits, berries, spices, etc., have practically no preservative effect, apart from some of the acids or essential oils contained in them, and their main function is to add flavour to the cured product.

Cleansing – The first operation in treating a fresh cut is to cleanse it by dipping it for a short time in a strong brine. This has several advantages; it is rapid and allows the full cure to be carried out at once. It provides the wet salt surface which starts the penetration of salt into the meat without the laborious process of rubbing. This brine can be watered down after cleansing and used for the light pickling of small cuts or offal (variety meats).

The brine is prepared by dissolving 6 kg. (13 lb.) salt and 100 g. (4 oz.) saltpetre in 23 litres (5 gallons, 6¼ gallons) boiling water. Mix thoroughly, strain through a cloth and cool to 10°C. (50°F.) or even lower before using.

The loin should be immersed for 10 minutes, until clean. The ham will require longer, about 1 hour, and while in the brine the large veins should be squeezed from the hock end to the fillet end. After cleansing, place the cut skin-side upwards to drain, but do not allow to dry.

Pickling – Dilute above quantity of brine by adding it to 7 litres (6 quarts, 7½ quarts) water. Stir well and use as a pickling brine for head, trotters, tongue, etc.

Salting – Weigh the meat and allow one-tenth of its weight of salt. The amount of saltpetre required is one-fortieth of the weight of salt.

Owing to the small amount of saltpetre the mixing should be very thorough. To ensure this, use dry, sieved salt. Divide it into three equal parts and add to each the appropriate amount of crushed and sieved saltpetre. Mix each pile of salt and saltpetre thoroughly and sift the mixture, but do not mix the three piles of curing mixture, as one will be used for rubbing in, one for sprinkling and the last for sprinkling at the time of rebedding.

Drain the cleansing brine from the cut and, using one-third of the curing mixture, rub thoroughly first on the skin side, forcing some of it down the shank of the ham, then rub the flesh side lightly.

Prepare a bed of salt about 5 cm. (2 inches) thick and press down the cut into it, skin side down. Sprinkle lightly with the second third of the curing mixture. Cover the cut entirely with  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 5 cm. (1 to 2 inches) salt, taking care to pack the salt tightly at the sides. (The meat tends to shrink and draw away from the salt, causing the surface to become dry and the salting uneven.)

After five days, break the pack, remove any discoloured salt and repack the cut, sprinkling as before with the remainder of the curing mixture.

Different cuts should be kept in salt for varying periods, depending on their thickness. Ham is usually kept in salt 6 to 7 days per  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cm. (1 inch) of thickness. In the case of several cuts being cured, care should be taken to repack the salt after each removal of meat.

Washing and maturation – Remove meat from the salt bed, wash the surface in cold water, or leave the ham or bacon in the room where it has been salted for a further period of 2 to 4 weeks, to enable the salt and saltpetre to go on penetrating, until enough curing mixture has been absorbed to prevent the growth of undesirable bacteria. During this period the maturation begins and continues through the subsequent operations of drying, smoking and storage. After this preliminary maturation, wash off excess salt from the surface of the meat, soaking it in a little cold water overnight, if necessary.

Drying – Hang the meat in a warm place with a temperature of about 15°C. (60°F.), not exceeding 21°C. (70°F.). As the drying proceeds, a white surface layer of crystalline salt appears, but if the washing has been thorough, this is not excessive. Where it is difficult to obtain dry storage conditions it is particularly important to remove this surface salt, as it attracts moisture.

Smoking – This should be considered as an alternative method of drying. In addition, however, smoking introduces preservatives and flavouring substances into the meat. Smoking should be carried out at a temperature below 32°C. (90°F.), otherwise the fat will melt, and it is essential to ensure that sufficient moisture has been removed from the bacon or ham.

Storage – This should be, as far as possible, in the dark, at a temperature of about 15°C. (60°F.), but it does no harm to store at lower temperatures provided variations are avoided. Should the temperature of the meat surface at any time be below the dewpoint, a film of moisture will be deposited and the value of the drying process will be partly lost.

If bacon and hams can be kept under dry conditions, they may be hung up without any covering. Added protection is supplied by wrapping the meat in paper or cloth and surrounding with some substance which will take up moisture from the air, such as kiln-dried salt (so long as it does not come into actual contact with the meat), slaked lime, charcoal, wood ashes, malt culms, dried oat hulls or oat meal (provided it is free from mites). Cured meat may be stored by hanging up in clean linen or calico bags, lime-washing the bags two or three times. (With acknowledgement to the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Part of this article is taken from Bulletin No. 127 of the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries.)

DEHYDRATION. DESSICCATION – Evaporation of water from foods is another time-honoured technique which has a modern development, but except in time of war, when dehydrated foods are used extensively because of the small shipping space they take, foods processed by canning or freezing are more acceptable, both for reasons of flavour and of keeping qualities. Comparatively few dehydrated foods are sold extensively. Exceptions to this are dried fruits (raisins, prunes, apricots, peaches, pears, etc.), milk (dried to a soluble powder which is used for reconstituted milk in liquid form and for cake and bread 'mixes') and potatoes. Dried whole eggs can be successfully used and egg whites can be dried and used for meringues and icings.

FREEZING. SURGÉLATION – Frozen foods when properly processed resemble the fresh variety more closely than foods preserved by any other method, although no preserved food can claim equality with absolutely fresh food. Freezing in ice is an ancient practice, but the modern method of quick freezing plays a major role in gastronomy in both commercial and domestic areas. To have complete success, food must be used when at its peak, packaged so as to exclude all air and frozen as quickly and thoroughly as possible. Such food is stored at  $-18^{\circ}\text{C}$ . (0°F.).

Home freezers are used for storage of commercially frozen products, produce of the garden, orchard or farm, meat, fish, breads, pies, cakes and ice creams, dairy products and pre-cooked meat and vegetable dishes. Well planned use of a home freezer is a great boon to the modern housewife. Most frozen foods should be consumed within one year of being processed. Some foods do not retain their good quality so long. The following should not be stored in a freezer longer than four months: ham; bacon; duck; goose; rich fish like salmon; offal (variety meats) or sausage.

Meat – Properly aged and trimmed cuts of meat are packed in heavy 'freezer' paper. Pork should be used within about 4 months but other meats (beef, veal and lamb) may be kept a year. If the package is neither heavy nor tight enough, 'freezer burn' will develop.

Poultry and game – Chicken, ducks, wild game and rabbits to be cooked whole should be cleaned and trussed before freezing. Giblets are wrapped in freezer paper and stored in the body cavity. Small birds may be cut up (jointed) and wrapped in small packages.

Fish – Fish should be chilled, cleaned and washed before freezing. Small fish are frozen whole; large fish are cut into steaks or filleted. It is important to freeze fish as soon as possible after it is caught.

Vegetables – Some vegetables freeze more successfully than others. All vegetables must be blanched in boiling water or steam before freezing. Following is a representative list of vegetables with instructions for home processing and freezing. The vegetables are packed in airtight plastic containers.

PRESS. PRESSE – Culinary implement serving to extract by pressure fruit juice, or the juice from the carcase of a fowl or of a piece of cooked meat.

According to their use (juice press, lemon squeezer, etc.) these presses take various forms.

PRESS. FOULER – Pressing a purée or some other substance through a strainer with a wooden spoon.

PRESSURE COOKER – A pressure cooker is made in sizes ranging from 1 quart to several gallons' capacity and is used for cooking meats, poultry, fish, vegetables, fruits, soups, puddings, etc., at a fraction of the time of the conventional

HOME FREEZING OF VEGETABLES

Vegetable	Preparation	Blanching time in boiling water	Processing
Asparagus	Select young, tender stalks. Sort according to thickness of stalk. Wash and discard tough sections. Leave in lengths to fit package or cut into pieces.	Small stalks, 2 minutes; medium, 3 minutes; large, 4 minutes.	Blanch, cool, drain and pack. When packing spears alternate tips and stem ends.
Beans, Broad, Lima, Kidney	Select well-filled pods. Beans should be ripe but not starchy or mealy. Shell, wash and sort according to size.	Small, 2 minutes; medium, 3 minutes; large, 4 minutes.	Blanch, cool and drain. Pack into containers, seal and freeze.
Beans, French, Runner	Select young, tender beans. Wash, cut off stem and tips. Leave whole, slice or cut into pieces.	3 minutes.	Blanch, cool and drain. Pack, seal and freeze.
Beetroot	Select beetroots not more than 7½ cm. (3 inches) across. Wash and sort according to size. Trim tops, leaving 1 cm. (½ inch) of stems. Cook in boiling water until tender – small beets 30 to 35 minutes, medium size 45 to 50 minutes. Cool, peel, cut into slices or cubes.	—	Pack, seal and freeze.
Broccoli	Select tight, compact, dark-green heads with tender stalks. Wash and trim. To remove insects, soak for 30 minutes in a solution made of 4 teaspoons salt to 4½ litres (4 quarts, 5 quarts) cold water. Split into sprigs.	3 minutes.	Blanch, cool and drain. Pack leaving no headspace. Seal and freeze.
Cabbage	Wash well and shred.	2 minutes.	Blanch, cool thoroughly and drain well. Pack, seal and freeze.
Carrots	Select tender carrots. Remove tops, wash and peel. Leave small carrots whole. Cut others into small cubes, thin slices or strips.	Whole carrots (small), 5 minutes; cubes, slices or strips, 2 minutes.	Blanch, cool and drain. Pack, seal and freeze.
Cauliflower	Select firm, tender, snow-white heads. Break into sprigs. Wash well. If necessary to remove insects, soak for 30 minutes in a solution made of 4 teaspoons salt to 4½ litres (4 quarts, 5 quarts) cold water. Drain.	3 minutes.	Blanch, cool and drain. Pack leaving no headspace. Seal and freeze.

PRESERVATION OF FOOD

Vegetable	Preparation	Blanching time in boiling water	Processing
Corn-on-the-cob	Trim off leaves and remove silks. Wash, and sort according to size.	Small ears, 4 minutes; medium, 7 minutes; large, 9 minutes.	Blanch, cool thoroughly and drain. Pack ears in containers or wrap in moisture-vapour-resistant material. Seal and freeze.
Mushrooms	Wash and trim. Soak 5 minutes in 4dl. ( $\frac{3}{4}$ pint, 2 cups) water with 1 teaspoon lemon juice.	Steam 3 minutes for small or sliced mushrooms, 5 minutes for large whole ones.	Cool, pack, seal and freeze.
Okra	Select young tender green pods. Wash thoroughly. Cut off stems.	Small pods 3 minutes; large pods 4 minutes.	Blanch, cool and drain. Leave whole or slice crosswise. Pack, seal and freeze.
Peas	Select plump, firm pods with sweet, tender peas. Shell and sort out tough or immature peas.	1½ minutes.	Blanch, cool and drain. Pack, seal and freeze.
Peppers	Peppers frozen without heating are best for use in uncooked foods. Blanched peppers are easier to pack and good for use in cooking. Select firm, crisp, thick-walled peppers. Wash, cut in half, cut out stems and remove seeds. If desired, cut in strips or rings.	Halves, 3 minutes; slices, 2 minutes.	Blanch, cool and drain. Pack, leaving 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$ inch) headspace. Seal and freeze. Unblanched peppers – pack leaving no headspace. Store for 3 months only.
Tomatoes	Wash, sort and trim, and cut up the tomatoes. Simmer for 5 to 10 minutes. Press through a sieve. If desired, add 1 teaspoon salt to each generous litre (2 pints, 2½ pints) of juice for seasoning.	—	Fill containers, leaving 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$ inch) headspace. Seal and freeze. Whole unblanched tomatoes can be stored for 3 months.

Fruits – Some fruits such as apples, apricots and peaches darken when frozen. To prevent this the fruit is packed in a sugar syrup and a little ascorbic acid (Vitamin C) is added. Following is a representative list of fruits that can be frozen. A 40 per cent syrup contains 300 g. (11 oz., 1½ cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water. A 50 per cent syrup contains 450 g. (1 lb., 2 cups) sugar to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water. A 60 per cent syrup contains 700 g. (1 lb. 9 oz., 3 cups) to 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) water.

HOME FREEZING OF FRUIT

Fruit	Preparation	Processing
Apples	Select crisp, firm apples. Wash, peel and core. Slice medium apples into twelfths, larger sizes into sixteenths. Blanch 1 minute. Use 40 per cent syrup. For a better quality product add ½ teaspoon ascorbic acid to each generous litre (2 pints, 2½ pints) syrup.	Pack well and cover with syrup. Leave headspace, seal and freeze.
Apple sauce	Select full-flavoured apples. Wash, peel if desired, core and slice. Add a little water. Cook until tender. Cool and strain or liquidise. Sweeten to taste.	Pack into containers, leave headspace, seal and freeze.

Fruit	Preparation	Processing
Apricots	Select firm, ripe, uniformly-coloured fruit. Sort, wash, halve and stone. Peel and slice if desired. If not peeled, heat in boiling water $\frac{1}{2}$ minute to keep skins from toughening during freezing. Cool and drain. Use 40 per cent syrup. To keep from darkening, add $\frac{3}{4}$ teaspoon ascorbic acid to each generous litre (2 pints, $2\frac{1}{2}$ pints) syrup. Can also be frozen crushed or puréed. Use fully ripe fruit. For crushed apricots, heat in boiling water $\frac{1}{2}$ minute, cool and peel. Stone and crush. For purée, stone, quarter and press through a sieve or liquidise; or heat apricots in small amounts of water and press through sieve or liquidise. With each generous litre (2 pints, $2\frac{1}{2}$ pints) prepared apricots mix 225 g. (8 oz., 1 cup) sugar. Add $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon ascorbic acid dissolved in 1 dl. (6 tablespoons, scant $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) water to fruit before adding sugar.	Pack, cover with syrup, leave headspace. Seal and freeze.
Berries	Select firm, fully ripe juicy berries. Sort, wash and drain well. Do not wash raspberries or strawberries unless necessary.	Pack berries into containers and cover with 40 or 50 per cent syrup, depending on sweetness of fruit. Leave headspace. Seal and freeze. Can also be open frozen and then packed with or without sugar.
Cherries	Select bright red, tree-ripened cherries. Stem, sort and wash. Drain.	Pack cherries into containers and cover with cold 60 per cent syrup. Or open freeze and then pack mixed with sugar in the proportion of a quarter the weight of fruit.
Peaches and nectarines	Select firm, ripe, well-coloured fruit. Wash, stone (pit) and peel. Cut into halves, quarters or slices. Cover with 40 per cent syrup. To prevent darkening, add $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon ascorbic acid for each generous litre (2 pints, $2\frac{1}{2}$ pints) syrup.	Seal and freeze.
Plums and prunes	Select firm, ripe fruit. Wash, cut in halves or in quarters and stone. Pack cut fruit into containers. Cover fruit with cold 40 or 50 per cent syrup depending on tartness of fruit. For improved quality, add $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon ascorbic acid to each generous litre (2 pints, $2\frac{1}{2}$ pints) syrup.	Leave headspace. Seal and freeze. Can be frozen as cooked purée.
Rhubarb	Select firm, tender, well-coloured stalks with good flavour and few fibres. Wash, trim and cut into $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 cm. (1 to 2 inch) pieces or in lengths to fit the package. Blanching in boiling water for 1 minute and cooling promptly helps retain colour and flavour.	Pack either raw or blanched rhubarb into containers, and cover with cold 40 per cent syrup. Leave headspace. Seal and freeze. Can be frozen without syrup.

cooking methods. A pressure cooker is also used for canning. The food is cooked under pressures ranging from  $3\frac{3}{4}$  pounds to 20 pounds but most often under 15 pounds. All air is expelled under steam before capping the vent and building up the pressure. Heat within the pressure cooker can reach 250°F thus causing food to be cooked more quickly.

PRÊTRE – Small sea fish about the size of a smelt, 10 to 18 cm. (4 to 7 inches) long, with a silvery star-shaped mark on its sides. Its flesh is delicate.

PRETZEL, BRETZEL – German and Alsatian savoury biscuit, baked in the shape of a loose knot, hard, sprinkled with salt and cumin seeds. Pretzels are served with beer.

Prepare separately the paste and the liquid for cooking the pretzels.

Paste. Allow  $2\frac{1}{2}$  dl. (scant  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, generous cup) water for 500 g. (18 oz.,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cups) flour, 25 g. (1 oz.) yeast,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoons salt and 4 teaspoons caraway seed. Make a stiff paste and knead it well. Leave to rise for 30 minutes in a warm place, covered with a cloth.

Liquid. 5 dl. (scant pint,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cups) water, 2 teaspoons bicarbonate soda,  $1\frac{1}{4}$  teaspoons carbonate of ammonia.

Making pretzels, and the finished article

Shape the paste into pretzels and plunge them into the boiling liquid. They will fall to the bottom of the pan. When they rise to the surface, dry, put them on a baking sheet, sprinkle with coarse sea salt, brush with beaten egg, sprinkle with cumin seeds, and bake in the oven.

Prickly pear

PRICKLY PEAR. FIGUIER DE BARBARIE – Cactus with edible fruit, which is generally eaten raw but can be stewed.

PRIMEUR – Fruit, vegetable or any other foodstuff obtained before the normal season of its maturity.

PRINCESSE (À LA) – Name for various preparations in cookery and pastry-making.

The garnish known as princesse, composed of green asparagus tips and truffles, is chiefly used to accompany Suprêmes of chicken (see CHICKEN).

PRINTANIER. PRINTANIER, PRINTANIÈRE – A mixture of vegetables, scooped out in the shape of little balls with a special vegetable baller, or cut into dice or lozenges, cooked separately in water and dressed with butter.

The term à la printanière is applied to various dishes, but mainly to meat entrées garnished with early or mixed vegetables.

Preparing profiteroles
(Maison Desmeuzes. Phot. Larousse)

PROFITEROLE (Pâtisserie) – Little balls of Chou paste (see DOUGH) piped through a forcing-bag.

After cooking, they are filled with various substances; game or other purée, cheese mixtures, etc.; or with sweet custards, jams, etc.

Profiteroles, filled with vanilla custard and iced with caramelised syrup, are used for making croquembouches (q.v.) and gateaux Saint-Honoré (q.v.).

Profiteroles with a savoury filling are used to garnish soup.

Profiteroles are forced through a forcing bag with a round nozzle on to a baking tin. They are brushed with egg and baked in a moderate oven.

Garnish the profiteroles with French pastry cream (see CREAMS) or sweetened whipped cream. Arrange in a pyramid on a dessert platter and pour Chocolate sauce over (see SAUCE).

Profiteroles

PROVENÇALE (À LA) – Describes certain preparations characterised by the use of tomato and garlic mixed, and sometimes of garlic alone.

PROVENCE, COMTÉ DE NICE – Garlic is the base of Cheeses: Strong cheese of Mont-Ventoux; goats' milk cheese of the Alpilles, the Maures and the Esterel; sheep's milk cheese of Banon, Brousse, Valdebleou.

Pastry and specialties: Gibassier, fougasse, and pompe gâteaux (this last particularly for Réveillon, the Christmas morning feast); bugnes of Arles, biscuits and calissons of Aix, and praline flowers from Grasse.

Wines – Provence, birthplace of the French wine, offers a wide variety of wines: generous, full-bodied reds; dry, aromatic white wines (fitting accompaniment to bouillabaisse, fish soups, sea food, grilled crustaceans and fish). The best known are those of Cassis (Bouches-du-Rhône), Bandol (Var), Palette (Bouches-du-Rhône) and Bellet (Alpes-Maritimes). The wines of the Côtes de Provence and Côteaux d'Aix are in the V.D.Q.S. category.

Since the département of Vaucluse is now part of Provence, we must include the wines of the left bank of the Côtes du Rhône méridionales. Most important of all are the splendid Châteauneuf-du-Pape wines, strong, glowing reds and an excellent dry white wine. Then there are the four communes of Vinsobres, Cairanne, Gigondas and Vacqueyras, the natural sweet wine of Rasteau and the muscat wine of Beaufort-de-Venise.

PRUNE. PRUNEAU – Red or purple plum, dried in the sun or in the oven, after which treatment it will keep for a long time in a perfect state. Most plums can be dried, but particularly the Ente, or Agen, the Large Damson of Tours, the Catherine and the Imperial.

The Perdrigon, when it has been peeled, stoned, dried in the sun and flattened, is commercially known under the name of Pistole. The same plum, unpeeled, unstoned, scalded, then dried in the shade, is called a Brignole or Pruneau fleuri.

In France the most renowned prunes are those of Agen and of Touraine.

Californian prunes are good. Their flesh, however, is less delicate than that of French prunes.

Prunes are most often cooked in a compote. Cooked and stoned prunes are used for the preparation of various sweets, such as cakes, puddings, soufflés, tarts, etc.

The prune is very nutritious and excellent for athletes, children and expectant mothers. It is also a laxative.

Puyrémas, Vaucluse (French Government Tourist Office)

Prunes should preferably be eaten raw having been previously soaked for 24 hours in cold water. Cut lengthwise to remove the stone. They are usually served for breakfast.

Compote of prunes (stewed prunes). COMPOTE DE PRUNEAUX – Soak the prunes in cold water. When they have swollen sufficiently, drain and put them in a saucepan and cover with cold water. Add 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar for 500 g. (18 oz.) fruit. Flavour with lemon or orange rind, vanilla or cinnamon.

Cook gently for about 1 hour.

Compote of prunes with red or white wine. COMPOTE DE PRUNES AU VIN ROUGE, BLANC – The same as above, substituting red or white wine for water.

PUANT MACÉRÉ – See CHEESE.

PUCHERO (Spanish cookery) – Stew made of different kinds of meat and vegetables.

PUDDING. POUDING – Name given to numerous dishes, both sweet and savoury, served hot or cold, which are made up in many different ways.

SAVOURY PUDDINGS. POUDINGS D'ENTRÉES –

Beefsteak pudding (English cookery) Mix 1 kg. ( $2\frac{1}{4}$  lb.,  $8\frac{3}{4}$  cups) sieved flour with 600 g. ( $1\frac{1}{4}$  lb., 4 cups) suet (having first removed the skin and strings from the suet and shredded it finely), a good pinch of salt and about 2 dl. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pint, scant cup) water. The mixture should be a smooth and soft dough.

Using two-thirds of the pastry, line a buttered pudding basin or a round-bottomed mould. Arrange in layers  $1\frac{1}{2}$  kg. ( $3\frac{1}{4}$  lb.) beef, cut in slices about 1 cm. ( $\frac{1}{2}$  inch) thick, season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg and sprinkle with chopped onion and parsley. Moisten with water in sufficient quantity to cover the meat. Roll out the rest of the pastry, cover the pudding and seal the edges.

Tie a scalded, floured cloth over the top, not forgetting to make a pleat in the cloth. Cook in a pan of boiling water, for 3 hours if fillet of beef is used, for 4 hours if the meat is taken from some other part of the animal. Keep the water boiling constantly, adding more if necessary.

Beefsteak and kidney pudding (English cookery) – This is made like Beefsteak pudding, using slices of beef and beef kidney.

Beefsteak and oyster pudding (English cookery) – Prepare in the same way as Beefsteak pudding, adding uncooked oysters to the filling.

Chicken puddings à la Richelieu. BOUDINS DE VOLAILLE À LA RICHELIEU – Line small, well-buttered moulds with fine Chicken forcemeat (see FORCEMEATS). Fill with a salpicon (q.v.) of breast of chicken, truffles and mushrooms, blended with very thick Allemande sauce (see SAUCE). Cover with another layer of chicken forcemeat, which should be smoothed over with the blade of a knife dipped in cold water. Place the moulds in a pan of hot water and poach in the oven. Turn out of the moulds, dry, dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter until light golden.

Arrange the puddings in a circle on a dish, packing them fairly tightly. Garnish the middle of the dish with fried parsley. Serve with Périgueux or Suprême sauce (see SAUCE) with diced truffles added to it.

Chicken puddings can also be prepared in the following manner: roll the chicken forcemeat, which should be of a fairly firm consistency, into little cylinders. Poach them. Slit open on one side, stuff with the salpicon indicated, and close the opening. Dip in egg and breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter.

Game pudding (stuffed). BOUDINS DE GIBIERS – Prepare, using various game forcemeats and suitable salpicons (q.v.), as described in the recipe for Chicken puddings à la Richelieu.

Mutton pudding (English cookery). POUDING DE MOUTON – Proceed as for Beefsteak pudding using mutton instead of beef.

SWEET (DESSERT) PUDDINGS. POUDINGS D'ENTREMETS –

English almond pudding. POUDING AUX AMANDES À L'ANGLAISE – Cream together 125 g. (4½ oz., generous ½ cup) butter and 150 g. (5 oz., ¾ cup) sugar in a basin. Add 250 g. (9 oz., generous 2 cups) almonds, blanched and chopped finely. Season with a pinch of salt. Add 1 teaspoon orange-flower water or ½ teaspoon orange extract, 2 whole eggs and 2 yolks and 4 tablespoons (½ cup) thick, fresh cream. Blend well.

Pour into a pudding basin. Cook in a bain-marie in a slow oven, and serve in the same dish.

American pudding. POUDING À L'AMÉRICAIN – Put in a basin 75 g. (3 oz., 1½ cups) breadcrumbs, 100 g. (4 oz., 1 cup) unsifted flour, 100 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) brown sugar and 75 g. (3 oz.) chopped beef marrow. Add 100 g. (4 oz., scant cup) crystallised fruits cut in dice and a little finely shredded orange and lemon peel.

Bind with 1 whole egg and 3 yolks. Add a little cinnamon and grated nutmeg and 1 small glass of rum or brandy. Mix well.

Pour the mixture into a buttered, floured mould. Cook in a bain-marie. Serve with rum-flavoured zabaglione (q.v.).

English apple pudding. POUDING DE POMMES À L'ANGLAISE – Line a pudding basin with suet pastry (see DOUGH, Dumpling dough), rolled out to 8 mm. (¼ inch) thick.

Fill with cut-up apples, adding sugar and a flavouring of grated lemon rind and powdered cinnamon. Put a flat piece of pastry on top of the pudding, joining it carefully at the edges. Wrap the basin in a cloth, tied very firmly, and put it into a saucepan of boiling water. Keep the water constantly boiling; cook for about 2 hours. Turn out onto a dish.

The pudding may be made in the same way with pears instead of apples.

Pudding mould

Biscuit pudding POUDING DE BISCUITS – Put into a saucepan 250 g. (9 oz) crumbled sponge finger biscuits and moisten with 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) boiling milk sweetened with 150 g. (5 oz., ¾ cup) sugar.

Stir this mixture over the heat, with a wooden spoon. Add 150 g. (5 oz., 1 cup) currants and diced crystallised fruits, soaked in kirsch. Add 3 egg yolks, 125 g. (4 oz., ½ cup) melted butter and 3 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Fill a mould which has been buttered and sprinkled with breadcrumbs with this mixture. Cook in the oven in a bain-marie. Serve with Apricot sauce (see SAUCE).

Brazilian pudding. POUDING BRÉSILIEN – Prepare the same mixture as for Tapioca pudding (see below). Put it into a plain mould coated with caramel. Poach in a bain-marie. Serve without sauce or any accompaniment.

French bread pudding. POUDING AU PAIN À LA FRANÇAISE – Soak 300 g. (11 oz., 5½ cups) breadcrumbs in 1 litre (1¼ pints, generous quart) boiled milk with vanilla and 250 g. (9 oz., generous cup) sugar. Sieve the mixture. Add 4 whole eggs and 6 yolks. Fold in 4 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Fill a mould sprinkled with fine breadcrumbs with this mixture. Cook in the oven in a bain-marie. Leave a few moments before turning it out of its mould. Serve with Custard sauce (see SAUCE), zabaglione (q.v.), or a fruit sauce, separately or poured over the pudding.

German bread pudding. POUDING AU PAIN À L'ALLEMANDE – Soak 300 g. (11 oz., 5½ cups) breadcrumbs in 1 litre (1¼ pints, generous quart) Rhine wine or Moselle, to which has been added 200 g. (7 oz., scant cup) brown sugar and a little cinnamon.

Sieve this mixture, add 4 whole eggs, 6 yolks and 150 g. (5 oz., generous ½ cup) melted butter, and 4 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Put the mixture in buttered moulds sprinkled with breadcrumbs. Cook in the oven in a bain-marie. Serve with fruit sauce flavoured with kirsch or any other liqueur.

German bread and fruit pudding. POUDING AU PAIN ET AUX FRUITS À L'ALLEMANDE – Put in a basin 150 g. (5 oz.) bread cut in small dice and fried in butter. Pour on this bread 2½ dl. (scant ½ pint, generous cup) boiled milk. Let it soak in well. Add 2 cooked apples cut in small dice, 50 g. (2 oz., ¼ cup) diced candied orange peel, 50 g. (2 oz., ½ cup) ground almonds and the same quantity of stoned raisins, put to swell in water and drained.

Add 75 g. (3 oz., generous ½ cup) sugar, a little grated lemon peel and 3 egg yolks. Mix all these ingredients well together and finally add to them 3 stiffly beaten egg whites. Fill a buttered pudding basin with this mixture. Cook in the oven in a bain-marie for 45 minutes. Let the pudding rest before turning it out of the mould on to a dish. Coat it with a white wine sauce made with 2 dl. (½ pint, scant cup) wine and 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) apricot jam.

Bread pudding with red wine. POUDING AU PAIN AU VIN ROUGE – Prepare in the same way as German bread pudding but replace the white wine by red wine.

Cabinet pudding. POUDING DE CABINET – Ingredients. 150 g. (5 oz.) sponge finger biscuits (lady fingers), 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) crystallised fruits cut into dice, 2 tablespoons (3 tablespoons) stoned and cleaned raisins, 6 dl. (1 pint, 2½ cups) mixture for baked Vanilla custard (see CUSTARD), 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) butter, 1 small glass kirsch, 1 small glass maraschino, 4 dl. (¾ pint, scant 2 cups) vanilla-flavoured Custard cream (see CREAMS).

Method. Butter a cylindrical mould and arrange in it alternate layers of the sponge fingers broken up and soaked in liqueur and the raisins, also soaked in liqueur. Fill up the mould with the baked custard mixture prepared in the usual way (see CUSTARD).

Put the mould in a pan two-thirds full of hot water and cook in the oven for 30 minutes. Let the pudding rest a little before turning it out of the mould. Serve with Custard cream (see CREAMS).

Cabinet puddings can be prepared with all sorts of flavours, and they can be served with zabaglione (q.v.) or different fruit sauces.

Chestnut soufflé pudding. POUDING SOUFFLÉ AUX MARRONS – Rub through a fine sieve 1 kg. (2¼ lb.) peeled chestnuts, cooked in a light vanilla-flavoured syrup and well drained.

Add to the purée, stirring with a wooden spoon, 150 g. (5

Ingredients for fruit pudding (Claire)

German bread and fruit pudding (Claire) oz.,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup) sugar and 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter. Dry out over heat. Remove from heat, add 8 egg yolks and fold in carefully 6 stiffly beaten egg whites. Cook in a bain-marie.

Serve with Custard cream (see CREAMS) flavoured with vanilla, or Apricot sauce (see SAUCE) flavoured with kirsch.

Chocolate pudding. POUDING AU CHOCOLAT – Soften in the oven 100 g. (4 oz.) semi-sweet chocolate. Work by hand in a cloth 150 g. (5 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) butter until very soft. Put it in a basin previously scalded with boiling water, and beat with a wooden spoon. When it is creamy in consistency add 75 g. (3 oz., generous  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) castor sugar and 25 g. (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) vanilla sugar; or 100 g. (4 oz.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup) sugar plus a few drops vanilla essence. Beat to a froth, then add 8 egg yolks, one by one, the chocolate beaten to a fine paste with a little of the butter and sugar mixture, 40 g. (1  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz., 6 tablespoons) sifted flour and 40 g. (1  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup) potato flour. Complete with 5 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Put this mixture in a buttered and floured mould of about 1  $\frac{1}{4}$  litres (2  $\frac{1}{4}$  pints, 2  $\frac{3}{4}$  pints) in capacity. Poach in a bain-marie for about 45 minutes. Let the pudding rest before turning it out of the mould onto a dish. Pour chocolate-flavoured Custard cream (see CREAMS) over it.

Clermont pudding (cold). POUDING CLERMONT – Add to a Bavarian cream (q.v.) flavoured with rum a quarter its volume of Chestnut purée (see CHESTNUTS), and for every litre (1  $\frac{1}{4}$  pint, generous quart) of the mixture 100 g. (4 oz.) broken-up marrons glacés. Put the mixture into a mould greased with sweet almond oil, and put on ice or in a deep-freeze to set. Serve in the mould, with a liqueur-flavoured fruit sauce.
